Nine Millionaires and a Plumber

Martin Patrick Durkin had the shortest tenure of any U.S. Labor Secretary, serving less than eight months. A former president of the of the Plumbers and Pipefitters Union, he had also previously served as Director of Labor for the State of Illinois, where he worked closely with then-U.S. Labor Secretary Frances Perkins. Appointed by President Dwight D. Eisenhower, he was conspicuous on Ike's "Nine Millionaires and a Plumber" Cabinet. He also was a Democrat serving in a Republican administration. He pushed for revisions in the Taft-Hartley Act without success, which led to his resignation. He died two years after leaving office.

$500 Million to Boost Job Training Partnerships

During a visit Sept. 19 to St. Petersburg College in Clearwater, Fla., Secretary Solis announced $500 million in grant awards through the Trade Adjustment Assistance Community College to Career Training initiative. The grants will foster partnerships between community colleges and local employers to promote skills development and employment opportunities in fields such as advanced manufacturing, transportation and health care, as well as science, technology, engineering and math occupations. "These federal grants are part of the administration's ongoing commitment to strengthening American businesses by strengthening the American workforce," said Secretary Solis. St. Petersburg College, as part of a consortium of 11 other state colleges, was awarded $15 million to help address the critical shortage of skilled workers in the state's manufacturing industry. Altogether, a total of 54 TAACCCT grants covering nearly 300 community colleges across the country were awarded. This week's announcement is the second installment of a $2 billion, 4-year initiative supporting President Obama's broader goal to ensure that every American has at least one year of postsecondary education and the United States has the highest proportion of college graduates in the world by 2020.

New Citizens

It's Constitution Week and Secretary Solis kicked the observance off by delivering the keynote address at a U.S. naturalization ceremony on Sept. 15.

More than 400 immigrants from 76 different countries became American citizens. The service was one of seven naturalization ceremonies that have been held at Kenmore Middle School in Virginia within the last month. In all, about 3,000 people from Virginia and the District of Columbia became citizens. In front of several hundred friends and family members, Solis lauded the determination and hard work of our newest citizens, saying, "I know the journey has been long. But you've studied hard. You've worked hard. And you've taken a sacred oath. You already felt like Americans in your hearts and in your minds. And today, you are officially Americans."

$20.7 Million for States Through the Disability Employment Initiative

To improve education, training, and employment opportunities and outcomes for youth and adults with disabilities who are unemployed, underemployed and/or receiving Social Security disability benefits, the department awarded $20.7 million to seven states on Sept. 20. The awards were made through the Disability Employment Initiative, which is jointly funded and administered by the Employment and Training Administration and the Office of Disability Employment Policy. The funding is the third round under the initiative, which supports 16 state projects. The new grants are being awarded to Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Massachusetts,

Jobs in Baltimore

Secretary Solis teamed up with Rep. Elijah Cummings and Baltimore Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake at a jobs workshop for community groups held at the city's Eastside Career Center on Sept. 18. The audience of about 75 community leaders, faith leaders and job seekers learned how to set up job clubs from Ben Seigel, deputy director of the Center for Faith-based and Neighborhood Partnerships. They also learned about the resources available to job seekers through the city's One Stop Career Centers, both in person and online. In her role as America's jobs coach, Solis encouraged the audience to connect members of their communities to the department's job training and employment resources with a focus on key growth sectors, such as health care, STEM (science, technology, engineering and math) and manufacturing.

STEM for Women

Career opportunities in STEM as well as non-traditional "green" careers were the topics of roundtables hosted by the Women's Bureau last week in Cambridge and Worcester, Mass., on Sept. 13 and 14. The roundtables focused on barriers that women may face as they explore STEM and non-traditional green educational opportunities. Participants included representatives from women's organizations, businesses, state and federal government, academia and congressional offices. Women's Bureau Regional Administrator Jacqueline Cooke said, "Participants were energized and excited to learn about each other's programs." Cooke also chaired a roundtable in Augusta, Maine, on Sept. 10, where she led a discussion on securing sustainable jobs for returning women veterans and other topics.

Slight Decline in Fatal Work Injuries in 2011

New data show a small decrease in the number of fatal work injuries in the United States last year — from 4,690 in 2010 to 4,609 in 2011. In a statement, Secretary Solis said, "We will continue to collaborate with employers, workers, labor leaders, and safety and health professionals to ensure that every American who clocks in for a shift can make it home safe and sound at the end of the day." She added, "It's clear that we must maintain our commitment to ensuring our workplaces are safer and healthier for every American." The preliminary figures were released on Sept. 20 by the Bureau of Labor Statistics from the agency's annual Census of Fatal Occupational Injuries.

Solis, Sperling and Borzi Take Fee Disclosure Message Online

Secretary Solis wants workers and families to know they can avoid excessive fees that can take a bite out of retirement savings. Last week, she took her message online to an audience of more than 900 who logged in to learn more about how new 401(k) fee disclosures are giving workers the information needed to make better retirement decisions. "The Retirement Savings: Saving More for Tomorrow by Paying Less in 401(k) Fees Today" webinar featured opening remarks by Solis and Gene Sperling, director of the National Economic Council and assistant to the president for economic policy. Assistant Secretary of Labor for Employee Benefits Security Phyllis C. Borzi provided details on the new disclosures and answered questions. She also announced a new resource website designed as a quick reference for anyone trying to understand the new disclosures.

What happens when the government puts freely available safety data in the hands of innovators? "#CoolDotGov," said Seth Harris, deputy secretary of labor. Harris was one of several presenters during the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy's "Safety Datapalooza" on Sept. 14. The event brought together nearly 100 visionaries from the private, nonprofit, and academic sectors to highlight new tools available to citizens through the government gathered at the Ronald Reagan building in Washington, D.C., to discuss how to better encourage Latino youth to pursue careers in STEM. Secretary Solis kicked-off the daylong conference, which featured three panels. "I know STEM jobs are on your agenda today. They're on mine, too. They have been for quite some time," Solis said. "I remember telling my sisters to study science when we were growing up. I knew it was our future. I was the first in my family to go to college. But I made sure I wasn't the last. Today both of my sisters are engineers and I could not be more proud."

VRAP at Major Milestone

The Veteran Retraining Assistance Program this week surpassed its goal of approving 45,000 applications in Fiscal Year 2012. Under the VOW to Hire Heroes Act, which established VRAP in November 2011, the Department of Veterans Affairs, in cooperation with the Department of Labor, pays for up to 12 months of retraining assistance in "high demand" occupations for unemployed eligible veterans between the ages of 35 and 60. "Our veterans have provided so many services to this country," said Secretary Solis. "This program serves them by helping unemployed veterans receive the training they need to compete for good jobs." The program aims to retrain 99,000 veterans for high-demand jobs by the end of FY 2013 and VRAP continues to accept applications. Benefits for additional approved applications will be available beginning Oct. 1.

Supporting Women Veterans

Helping women veterans re-integrate into their communities after the traumas of war will require the involvement of active, informed community providers. The Women's Bureau participated in roundtables last week to educate businesses, community organizations and others on the principles for providing trauma-informed care and services to women veterans. The roundtables were held in Hartford and Middletown, Conn., in conjunction with the Connecticut Department of Mental Health and Addiction Services and the Hartford Vet Center of the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs. Angela Rizzolo of the Women's Bureau conducted a presentation at the Hartford event on the agency's publication, "Trauma-Informed Care for Women Veterans Experiencing Homelessness."

EBSA Hosts Webcast for Women Nearing Retirement

Planning for retirement is not easy, and women face particular challenges. Women live longer than men, and need to save more. They are also in and out of the workforce more often and thus less likely to save enough for retirement. But with the right information, everyone striving for a secure retirement can achieve one. Last week the Employee Benefits Security Administration hosted a webcast, "Taking the Mystery out of Retirement Planning — A Focus on Women and Retirement." Nearly 300 tuned in to learn how to make the most of retirement savings, and avoid common pitfalls in the retirement investment marketplace. EBSA was joined during the event by the Social Security Administration and the Women's Institute for a Secure Retirement.

TAP Redesign Responsive to Veterans

A redesign of the department's workshop to prepare transitioning military service members for civilian employment has resulted in a "well-received, well-tested curriculum that was developed to be responsive to customer input," Deputy Assistant Secretary of Labor for Veterans' Employment and Training Service John Moran told Congress on Sept. 20. At a House Veterans' Affairs Economic Opportunity Subcommittee hearing on the Transition Assistance Program, Moran said the new DOL Employment Workshop was tested during a three-month pilot program at 11 military installations. Feedback helped create a workshop geared towards heavy participant interaction, improvements in matching military skills to targeted civilian jobs, and increased use of social media in job searches and networking. Moran said the TAP redesign is in keeping with the department's "three P's" initiative: preparing veterans for civilian employment; providing them with resources and training to succeed, and protecting their job rights under the Uniformed Services Employment and Re-employment Rights Act.

Preparing a workforce for jobs available now is a hot topic. Assistant Secretary of Labor for Employment and Training Jane Oates joined SkillsUSA on Sept. 18 at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C., to honor their Champion of the Year, Nick Pinchuk, chairman and CEO of Snap-On. Pinchuk was honored for his commitment to working with local community colleges to develop a curriculum that trains students for jobs available today and in the future. Oates discussed the challenges and opportunities facing the American workforce and the need for partnership between government, education and industry. SkillsUSA, a nonprofit career and technical organization, serves teachers and high school and college students who are preparing for careers in trade, technical and skilled service occupations.

Refugee Resettlement

"Transforming Hope into a Brighter Future" was the 2012 theme for the Office of Refugee Resettlement's annual stakeholder consultation held Sept. 19-20 in Arlington, Va. Dr. Gabriela Lemus, senior advisor and director of the department's Office of Public Engagement, delivered opening remarks, highlighting YouthBuild grants, Job Corps training successes, and department programs that can help refugees who are joining the workforce. The Office of Refugee Resettlement, a part of the Health and Human Services Department, convenes state partners, federal agencies, community and faith-based organizations to share ideas and challenges.

Oil and Gas Industry Safety

In 2005, Texas City, Texas, became the site of one of the worst industrial disasters in recent years, when an explosion at a BP refinery killed 15 workers and injured 170 more. This week, representatives from the oil and gas industry and the regulatory agencies that oversee it convened there to exchange ideas about enhancing worker and environmental safety. The "Expert Forum on the Use of Performance-based Regulatory Models in the U.S. Oil and Gas Industry" brought together the Occupational Safety and Health Administration; the Department of Interior, Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement; the U.S. Coast Guard; the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Department of Transportation's Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration. Officials discussed the challenges and benefits of non-prescriptive, outcome-based approaches to reducing injuries and catastrophic events. Assistant Secretary of Labor for OSHA Dr. David Michaels delivered opening remarks and an overview of OSHA's Process Safety Management standard. "The all-too-frequent individual fatalities and serious injuries at oil and gas facilities should get promoted into management." Weldon is one of the first students to enroll at Clark College under VRAP, said Mike Gibson, the college's veterans affairs office director. The VOW to Hire Heroes Act, signed into law last November by the president, established VRAP. Under it, the Department of Veterans Affairs, in cooperation with the Department of Labor, pays for up to 12 months of a retraining assistance in a "high demand" occupation for unemployed eligible veterans between the ages of 35 and 60.

Department's Grant Helps Army Veteran and His Daughter

The assistance Army veteran Gene Eggleston got from a department grant program not only helped him but also benefited his daughter. Eggleston worked two jobs but had trouble making ends meet. The house his mother gave him fell into disrepair as he struggled to pay taxes and utility bills and was eventually vandalized as it sat unoccupied. Eggleston turned to Missouri's St. Patrick Center, which receives funding from the Veterans Workforce Investment Program, for help. They provided him with clothing and transportation for interviews, where he eventually landed a laborer's job with full benefits. He now has enough money to pay for his 13-year-old daughter's lessons as an aspiring gymnast. "When a vet falls, a child falls too," Eggleston said, looking back on being unemployed. The job-related assistance "gave me back my self-esteem to find a job," he said.
