Black History/Our History: The Amazing Story of Ernie Green

Many of the assistant secretaries throughout the history of the U.S. Department of Labor are stars. But only one has had a movie made about him! Ernest Gideon Green was one of the "Little Rock Nine" — a group of African-American students who, in 1957, integrated Central High School in Arkansas. He was the first of the group to graduate from the school in 1958 and Martin Luther King attended the graduation with the Green family. He received his undergraduate and master's degree from Michigan State University and went on to work for the A. Phillip Randolph Education Fund. During the Carter administration (1977 to 1981), he served as an assistant secretary of labor for employment and training. He has been depicted in two made-for-television movies, portrayed by

Calvin Levels in the 1981 CBS movie Crisis at Central High and by Morris Chestnut in the 1993 Disney Channel movie The Earnest Green Story. In 1999, he and the other members of the "Little Rock Nine" were awarded the Congressional Gold Medal by President Bill Clinton.

Boosting the Minimum Wage for America's Workers

Acting Secretary of Labor Seth D. Harris hit the road this week for conversations outside the Beltway on what increasing the minimum wage would mean for America's workers. In his State of the Union address, President Obama called for raising the federal minimum wage in stages to $9 in 2015, and indexing it to inflation thereafter. Harris was in Philadelphia on Feb. 14 to discuss the president's plan with workers from the fast food and other service sectors. They shared their stories of sacrifice and hardship, and emphasized that no one who works full-time should have to raise a family in poverty. Harris spoke about how the president's plan will boost wages for about 15 million American workers. "For them," Harris said, "being rewarded an honest day's wage for an honest day's work will help them climb into the middle class."

Take Three: Raising the Minimum Wage

The president's plan to raise the federal minimum wage will benefit 15 million American workers, and have a positive effect on the economy. Still, there are some common myths about raising the minimum wage. We checked in with our Chief Economist Jennifer Hunt on the following three myths:

Myth: Raising the minimum wage reduces employment. False Minimum wage increases have little or no adverse effect on employment as shown in independent studies from economists across the country. Additionally, a recent letter by leading economists including Lawrence Katz, Richard Freeman, Joseph Stiglitz and Laura Tyson points out that "[i]n recent years there have been important developments in the academic literature on the effect of increases in the minimum wage on employment, with the weight of evidence now showing that increases in the minimum wage have had little or no negative effect on the employment of minimum wage workers, even during times of weakness in the labor market.

Myth: Only part-time workers are paid the minimum wage? False Fifty-three percent of all minimum wage earners are full-time workers.

Myth: Raising the minimum wage will negatively affect teen employment. False Eighty-nine percent of those earning the minimum notes, "Every story I hear reinforces my conviction that the president's proposal is the right thing to do — both for our economy and for our values of basic fairness."

The Next 20 Years of FMLA

Wrapping up a week of events commemorating the 20th Anniversary of the Family Medical Leave Act, the department co-hosted a White House roundtable on a recently released survey and the future of FMLA. Participants included work-life balance stakeholders and advocates for women, veterans, the disability community and nontraditional families, among others. Acting Secretary Harris was joined by Tina Tchen, executive director of the White House Council on Women and Girls; Jocelyn Frye, deputy assistant to the president and director of Policy and Special Projects for the First Lady; Acting Deputy Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division Mary Beth Maxwell, and Acting Director of the Women's Bureau Latifa Lyles. Demetra Nightingale, chief evaluation officer at the Department of Labor, presented highlights from the survey data.

Focus on Youth Employment

In response to global challenges facing young jobseekers, the U.S. Mission to the United Nations hosted a panel on Innovative Youth Employment Strategies for Decent Work on Feb. 7. Gerri Fiala, deputy assistant secretary of labor for employment and training, joined a panel of labor and employment specialists to discuss barriers to employment and potential solutions. Fiala advocated for employer training partnerships and department initiatives such as YouthBuild that prepare young workers to enter the labor market with the skills needed by employers. More than 100 employment specialists, academics and non-governmental organization representatives attended the event.

$1.3 Million in Minimum Wage Compensation Recovered

The world's largest independent provider of directory assistance and enhanced information services, kgb USA Inc., has been ordered to pay $1.3 million in minimum wage compensation to 14,568 of its current and former employees nationwide for Fair Labor Standards Act violations. A prior investigation by the Wage and Hour Division found the company misclassified employees as independent contractors, paid them a piece rate based on the number of text messages and inquiries they responded to, without regard to the number of hours they worked, and failed to record and maintain accurate records of employees' hours worked. The employees, located throughout the United States, were hired to respond to text messages from customers.

Focusing on California Residential Care Workers

Three California district offices of the Wage and Hour Division are conducting investigations of pay practices at residential care homes for the elderly and adults with disabilities. Investigators are looking at compliance with the Fair Labor Standards Act's minimum wage, overtime pay and record keeping requirements. The Sacramento District Office has identified significant concerns at the 70 homes inspected since the initiative began in October. Preliminary results indicate about 200 employees may be due more than $800,000. Violations include employers failing to count all hours as work time, including interruptions to personal time off, sleep time and meals; failing to pay employees for time spent in training and pre- and post-shift duties; and failing to include overtime pay when combining all work in a week at multiple establishments. Investigators from the West Covina (Southern California) and San Francisco district offices have begun conducting similar reviews, which will continue over the next few months.

Self Employment Gets A Boost in Rhode Island

Rhode Island became the first state in the nation to be awarded a federal grant to expand the state's Self Employment Assistance program. The program offers unemployed residents in the state a chance to create their own job by starting a business. The funding will allow the state to offer intensive businesses entrepreneurial training and access to resources to help launch their own businesses. "Rhode Island is taking an important step forward to help its unemployed residents create their own jobs and perhaps start hiring employees of their own," said Jane Oates, assistant secretary of labor for employment and training.

Oil and Gas Safety in Colorado

The DJ Basin Safety Council in Denver and the Occupational Safety and Health

Administration have signed an alliance to improve worker safety and health in the oil and gas industry in Colorado. "OSHA and the DJ Basin Safety Council will work together to provide resources and promote safety and health training throughout the oil and gas industry in Colorado, which will help employees identify and reduce or prevent exposure to hazardous conditions in their workplace," said Herb Gibson, OSHA's area director in Denver.

Supporting Communities

A number of cities around the country are taking steps to boost economic development by encouraging innovation and investments.

Beaverton, Oregon, is the latest city to host a "Revitalization Roundtable" to discuss ways the city can support local businesses, create entrepreneurial opportunities and attract new jobs. Jay Williams, director of the Office of Recovery for Auto Communities and Workers, joined a group of community, business and government leaders in Beaverton this week to learn what local leaders are doing to attract investment and talk about ways they can leverage federal resources to jump start their efforts. Williams toured priority revitalization areas in Beaverton, including the Beaverton Creek District, the Round, the downtown-Broadway Avenue corridor, and the Beaverton Manufacturing Enterprise Zone.

Bakken Basin Stand-Down

A month-long safety stand-down for oil and gas industry employers operating in the Bakken Basin kicked off on Feb. 14 in Minot, N.D. The event was jointly planned by the Montana-North Dakota Chapter of the National Service, Transmission, Exploration and Production Safety Network and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. Companies were asked to commit at least 30 minutes of their workday to discussions of their organization's goals to develop and sustain safe work practices. The stand-down was also webcast across several North Dakota cities and Sydney, Mont., making training resources and a safety inspection checklist available online to assist participants in their stand-down activities.

"A voluntary safety stand-down can be very helpful in focusing all workers on the importance of safe work practices," said Eric Brooks, OSHA's area director in Bismarck, who discussed the recent fatalities in the industry. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the fatality rate in the oil and gas industry is 28.8 per 100,000 workers, more than seven times higher than for all

At a dinner honoring German Minister of Labour and Social Affairs Ursula von der Leyen, acting Secretary of Labor Harris emphasized the importance of multinational partnership and economic development. In remarks at the German Ambassador's residence in Washington, D.C., on Feb. 13,

Harris praised German skills training initiatives and highlighted the department's Community College and Career Training grants, which seek to improve career training programs at U.S. post-secondary schools. Harris also emphasized the importance of collective bargaining in ensuring that workers receive their fair share of growth. "We must continue to invest wisely and effectively in skills development," he said. "But workers must also have more leverage so that our investment in their skills and employability assures them a bigger paycheck, a pension and a better life." Before the dinner Harris and von der Leyen held a bilateral discussion on the upcoming G20 labor and employment ministerial meeting and other issues.

Keeping an Eye on Savings

One of the biggest problems facing workers today is that they could easily outlive the money that they have saved for retirement. To help address this concern, the department is working on ways to encourage employers to offer lifetime income options in their retirement plans and to also provide workers with lifetime income illustrations as part of their account statements. Speaking about those initiatives recently to plan sponsors and service providers gathered by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Assistant Secretary for Employee Benefits Security Phyllis C. Borzi said the administration is committed to making it easier for plan sponsors to offer workers annuity-like payments as an option in 401(k) and other retirement accounts. She said the department will soon seek public comment on lifetime income illustrations, which, she said, would be a useful tool for workers to gauge the amount of money they might need in retirement and to adjust their savings habits and investment strategies accordingly.

Assisting Former Nuclear Workers

Nearly 190 people attended three town hall meetings in Oak Ridge, Tenn., on Feb. 13, to learn about medical benefits under the Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program. Staff from the Office of Workers' Compensation Programs discussed home health care services, the Privacy Act and how to provide better service for EEOICPA claimants. At an additional town hall meeting tailored for former National Laboratory (X-10) workers, 115 attendees were provided eligibility information about a new class of workers added to the Special Exposure Cohort of the EEOICPA. On Feb. 20, similar events will take place in Española, N.M., including two town hall meetings for former Los Alamos National Laboratory workers. Staff from Española's Travelling Resource Center and OWCP's Seattle Office will assist with claims. To date, more than $9 billion in compensation and medical benefits has been paid nationwide.

Championing Equal Pay

During a recent event to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Equal Pay Act, the Women's Bureau joined other federal agencies to share information on the impact of unequal pay on the lives and finances of women. Women's Bureau Program Analyst Deborah Pascal told the audience, "When women are not paid the same amount as men it affects the entire family, from the ability to put food on the table to educating their children, as well as negative cumulative effects on her lifetime earnings and retirement benefits." Other agencies participating in the Chicago Foundation for Women Equal Pay Roundtable included the department's Wage and Hour Division, Employee Benefits Security Administration, and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Connecticut STEM Program Leads to Health Care Job

A Connecticut program funded by the department and geared toward placing the unemployed in science careers has helped Walter Milestone land a job. Milestone was unemployed for several years and has relied on unemployment benefits at times. "I knew it would take me longer to find a job because I was older," the 60-year-old acknowledged. He received career counseling at a local American Job Center, and then enrolled in community college courses under the Science, Technology, Engineering and Math program. Going through STEM, he believed, would show prospective employers "that I was learning new things and trying to better myself."

Milestone graduated with an associate's degree in Networking Engineering and was hired as a production manager at a large health care company. The Connecticut STEM program has had a 68 percent success rate, said Eastern Connecticut Workforce Investment Board Executive Director John Beauregard. "Of the 1,117 unemployed people statewide that enrolled in STEM, 758 of them got jobs," Beauregard said. He added that more than half of the STEM program participants were over 50, a group particularly hard hit during the recession.

Bacardi Bottling Corp. has been cited by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration for 12 alleged safety violations following the death of a 21-year-old temporary worker on his first day on the job. In August 2012, Lawrence Daquan "Day" Davis was crushed by a palletizer machine at the company's Jacksonville, Fla., facility. Davis was cleaning glass from under the hoist of the palletizing machine when an employee restarted the machine. Bacardi had failed to train temporary employees on using locks and tags to prevent the accidental start-up of machines and also failed to ensure its employees used procedures to lock or tag out machines. "A worker's first day at work shouldn't be his last day on earth," said Assistant Secretary of Labor for Occupational Safety and Health Dr. David Michaels. "Employers are responsible for ensuring the safe conditions of all their employees, including those who are temporary."

Dentist Ordered to Pay Employees Who Raised Health Concerns

The department has secured a consent judgment ordering a Bath, Maine, dentist to pay $72,000 to two former employees and take other actions to resolve alleged violations of the anti-retaliation provisions of the Occupational Safety and Health Act. The department filed suit in September 2012 against Tammy L. Cook, doing business as Bath Family Dental, following a whistleblower investigation by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. According to the department's complaint, Cook fired one employee and placed the other on probation, leading to her resignation, after OSHA began an inspection in response to a complaint from an employee.

Wage Violations Found at North Carolina Restaurant

Los Tres Magueyes Inc. in Cary, N.C., has agreed to pay $145,636 in back wages to 13 employees following an investigation by the Wage and Hour Division that uncovered violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act. The investigation, conducted by the division's Raleigh District Office, found employees were not properly compensated for all hours worked. Investigators determined that servers were paid a direct wage of $3.15 per hour, but only for their first 40 hours of work per week and they were illegally required to contribute $200 per week from their tips toward a tip pool. Additionally, servers were not paid overtime compensation and the employer also failed to keep accurate records of hours worked, wages paid and proof of dates of birth for workers under the age of 18.

Ohio Electrical Workers Union Sued

The department has filed a lawsuit against the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 82 in Dayton, Ohio, to void the union's two elections in 2012 for the office of business manager. The complaint alleges that some candidates used union equipment to create campaign literature and send campaign-related Facebook messages to union members. It also alleges that a union vehicle was used to transport campaign materials. The suit seeks to force the union to conduct a new election under the Office of Labor-Management Standards supervision.

Employees Terminated for Refusing to Return Wages Earned

Diamond Tree Experts Inc. of Salt Lake City was sued by the department after an investigation by the Wage and Hour Division found that the company discriminated against employees for exercising their rights under law. A previous investigation by the division's Salt Lake City District Office found that the company paid straight-time for all hours worked rather than overtime compensation at time and one-half employees' regular rates of pay for hours worked over 40 in a workweek, as required by the Fair Labor Standards Act. Investigators found the company paid the back wages due in that investigation, but then required employees to return the funds to the company. When one of the employees refused to do so, the employees were terminated.

Jim Dunphy's Landscaping LLC in Edgewater Park Township, N.J., has paid $75,199 in back wages and $13,500 in civil penalties to 37 temporary guest workers on H-2B visas from Mexico. A Wage and Hour Division investigation found that the company violated the Fair Labor Standard Act when it failed to pay overtime by paying workers at straight-time rates, in cash, for hours worked beyond 40 per week. The employer also failed to pay the federal minimum wage by requiring the Mexican laborers to pay inbound and outbound transportation costs to and from Mexico, which reduced their wages below $7.25 per hour.
