FOREWORD

This year, we celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Civil Rights Act, signed into law by President Lyndon Johnson on July 2, 1964. The Civil Rights Act enshrined into law the basic principle upon which our country was founded – that all people are created equal. For the Freedom Riders who set out for the Deep South to challenge the status quo of Jim Crow laws, the Filipino and Mexican farmworkers who organized the Delano Grape Strike, and so many other civil rights activists, the struggle was about more than simply ending discrimination. It was about economic justice and fighting for equal access to good jobs and decent wages. It was about unlocking doors to the American Dream. It was about advancing the cause of labor rights. It marked a recognition that at the core of the struggle for equal opportunity was the promise of economic opportunity.

While there has been remarkable progress over the past half century, that struggle still continues— not only here in the United States but abroad. As Secretary of Labor, I am committed to ensuring that the United States is at the forefront of efforts to ensure that workers around the world are treated fairly and able to share in the benefits of the global economy. For many people, including those in minority communities of color, living within caste systems, subject to ethnic strife, and part of indigenous populations, the road to meaningful opportunity remains blocked.

In President Obama’s 2014 State of the Union address, he noted that “the best measure of opportunity is access to a good job.” Sadly, all too often, that opportunity is threatened or denied for adults and children around the globe. A new law in Bolivia now permits children as young as 10 to work. In Nigeria, Boko Haram’s opposition to female education led to the kidnapping of over 200 schoolgirls. And for 168 million child laborers around the world and 21 million adults and children who suffer as forced laborers, “opportunity” has meant carrying heavy loads and wielding machetes on farms; scavenging in garbage dumps and being exposed to electronic waste; climbing into mine shafts in search of diamonds and gold; enduring physical, emotional, and verbal abuse as domestic servants; fighting as child combatants in armed conflict; and being coerced, deceived, and trapped in jobs by unscrupulous labor recruiters and sex traffickers.

But we are making important progress. In June, delegates to the 103rd International Labor Conference in Geneva, Switzerland acknowledged their shared commitment to protect workers and promote opportunity by voting overwhelmingly to adopt a new Protocol and Recommendation on Forced Labor. The Protocol supplements existing ILO Convention 29 on Forced Labor and reaffirms the need for measures of prevention, protection, and remedies, including compensation, for victims of forced labor. These standards will help further galvanize those working to eradicate forced labor, including by children, around the world.

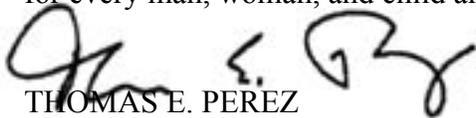

Through the U.S. Department of Labor’s Bureau of International Labor Affairs, I am releasing the 13th edition of the Department’s Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, as mandated by the Trade and Development Act of 2000 (TDA). This year's TDA report introduces a new streamlined format for presenting the status of the efforts of the 143 countries benefiting from U.S. trade preferences to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. We dedicate this report to Senator Tom Harkin of Iowa, who is retiring at the end of this term. Throughout his 40 years in the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate, Tom Harkin has been a fierce and tireless champion for equal opportunity for all Americans, fighting for access to a quality education, advancing the rights of individuals with disabilities, and so much more.

Senator Harkin also deserves our gratitude for leading efforts to protect workers' rights and eliminate the worst forms of child labor globally, from the carpet industries of South Asia to the cocoa farms of West Africa and the manufacturing sector in Latin America. In the words of Senator Harkin, the intent of these reports is "to bring countries to account, to shine a spotlight on their need to reform their national laws and to put in place social safety nets for those trapped in the worst forms of child labor. The aim is not punitive but rather to jumpstart individual and collective action."

Senator Harkin was inspired by young people like Iqbal Masih (1983-1995) and by those who brought attention to the cause like Robin Romano (1956-2013). Iqbal was a Pakistani child sold into slavery who became an outspoken advocate against child exploitation after his escape at age 10, only to be murdered two years later. Robin, whose legacy includes all the photos in this year's reports, captured the images of child laborers from around the world.

In signing the Civil Rights Act into law half a century ago, President Johnson called it "a challenge to all of us to go to work in our communities and our States, in our homes and in our hearts, to eliminate the last vestiges of injustice in our beloved country." As we continue our nation's journey toward true equal justice for all, let us also recommit ourselves to realizing Tom Harkin's vision—to end abusive labor practices and ensure basic dignity and real opportunity for every man, woman, and child around the globe.

Introduction: Report Guide

1.1 U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR'S MANDATE

The U.S. Department of Labor (USDOL) has prepared this 13th annual report on the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor in accordance with the Trade and Development Act of 2000 (TDA).⁽¹⁾ The TDA expanded country eligibility criteria for several preferential tariff programs to include the requirement that beneficiary countries implement their commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.⁽²⁾ The expanded country eligibility criteria apply to the following trade preference programs: the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program authorized under the Trade Act of 1974; the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA); the U.S.-Caribbean Basin Trade Partnership Act (CBTPA); and the Andean Trade Preference Act/Andean Trade Promotion and Drug Eradication Act (ATPA/ATPDEA).⁽²⁻⁵⁾

The TDA mandated the Secretary of Labor to report on each “beneficiary country’s implementation of its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.”⁽²⁾ ILAB carries out this responsibility on behalf of the Secretary.

1.2 REPORT OVERVIEW

This report is divided into five parts. Part 1 describes the method for compiling the report and a description of the features of each country profile, including country assessments to provide the President with clear indications of the Secretary of Labor’s findings on whether each beneficiary country has advanced efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Part 2 reviews highlights and gaps in government actions to address the worst forms of child labor as described in this year’s report, with an emphasis on progress by region. Part 3 provides an overview of the U.S. experience on child labor. Part 4 contains reference material for data on child labor and education that appear in the report and a glossary of terms used. Part 5 covers the individual profiles of the TDA beneficiary countries.

1.3 RESEARCH FOCUS

1.3.1 Country Coverage

This report covers 124 independent countries and 19 non-independent countries and territories designated as GSP beneficiaries and/or beneficiaries of trade preferences under the AGOA, CBTPA, and ATPA/ATPDEA. This includes former GSP recipients that have negotiated free trade agreements with the United States.⁽⁶⁾ Because the population of children is extremely small (less than 50) or non-existent in the British Indian Ocean Territory, Heard and McDonald Islands, and the Pitcairn Islands, the report does not contain a discussion of these non-independent countries and territories. Rather, the report presents information on the worst forms of child labor and efforts to eliminate this exploitation in the remaining 124 countries and 16 non-independent countries and territories. The regional breakdown of countries and non-independent countries and territories covered in the report is as follows: Sub-Saharan Africa: 47, Asia and the Pacific: 33, Europe and Eurasia: 22, Latin America and the Caribbean: 29, and the Middle East and North Africa: 12. Because the report focuses on government efforts, non-independent countries and territories are classified by the region of the country with which each non-independent country and territory is associated, as appropriate. Hereinafter, the use of “countries” in the report will also include territories.

1.3.2 Population Covered

In undertaking research on the “worst forms of child labor,” ILAB relied on the definition of a child provided in the TDA, which is the same definition contained in ILO C. 182. The TDA and ILO C. 182 define a “child” to be a person under the age of 18.

1.3.3 Reporting Period

The reporting period for this year's report is January 2013 to December 2013. In addition, important developments during the first quarter of 2014 (January 1 through March 31) were included in the report when information was available.

1.3.4 Type of Employment

The report focuses on the worst forms of child labor. The definition of the "worst forms of child labor" is found in the TDA and is the same as that included in ILO C. 182. It includes: (a) All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale or trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, or forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict; (b) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic purposes; (c) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs; and (d) work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.⁽²⁾ Similar to ILO C. 182, the TDA legislation states that the work described in subparagraph (d) should be "determined by the laws, regulations, or competent authority of the country involved."^(2, 7)

Hazardous Work

The work covered by subparagraph (d) is commonly referred to as "hazardous work." As noted above, individual governments determine the work activities and processes considered "hazardous" for children. ILO C. 182 requires governments to develop this list of activities after consultation with workers' and employers' organizations, taking into consideration international standards, in particular the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation (ILO R. 190).⁽⁷⁾

Finally, the ILO includes children's work on farms owned or operated by their families when considering the application of ILO C. 182 and ILO C. 138.⁽⁸⁻¹⁰⁾ Accordingly, this report reflects the ILO's broad vision on this issue and does not distinguish its analysis by the size or nature of farms in discussions of the worst forms of child labor in agriculture.⁽¹¹⁾

1.4 RESEARCH METHODS

1.4.1 Data Collection and Sources

Information was gathered for this report through desk research, U.S. embassy reporting, and limited field work. Information was also received from some foreign governments. Desk research consisted of an extensive review of mostly online materials, which included both primary and secondary sources. The sources included academic and independent researchers, media outlets, NGOs, international organizations, foreign governments, and U.S. Government agencies. Information was also collected from U.S. Government-funded technical assistance and field research projects.

Examples of sources used in this report are the latest editions available of country laws relevant to child labor, national-level child labor surveys, NGO reports on the nature of child labor in various countries, and UN reports, including direct requests and observations by the ILO Committee of Experts.⁽¹²⁾

USDOS and U.S. embassies and consulates abroad provided important information by gathering data from contacts, conducting site visits, and reviewing local media sources. A request for information from the public was published in the Federal Register, and a copy of the request was mailed to the Washington, DC-based foreign embassies of countries covered in the report.⁽¹³⁾ Data were also gathered through site visits to certain countries covered in the report, which included the collection of additional documents, as well as key informant interviews.

1.4.2 Analysis of Information

The existence of child labor, particularly in its worst forms, often involves violations of laws and regulations, including serious criminal violations in some egregious cases. Information on child labor may be intentionally suppressed. The victims of the worst forms of child labor may be too vulnerable or politically underrepresented or marginalized to claim their rights or even communicate their situations. These factors make information on the worst forms of child labor often difficult to obtain. Therefore, in order to compile a credible and comprehensive report, ILAB used the following criteria to assess information.

1. Nature of information. Whether the information about child labor and government efforts to combat it gathered from research, public submissions or other sources is relevant and probative, and covers “worst forms of child labor” and “government efforts” as used in this report. (See Glossary for definitions.) Specific evidence of government efforts was preferred where it was available.
2. Date of information. Whether the source information about child labor is no more than five years old. More current information was given priority, and ILAB used sources published during the reporting period to the extent possible. Information older than five years was generally not considered.

However, in the case of child labor statistics, certain factors contribute to less frequent generation of new data. Because government and other efforts to address exploitative child labor take time to have an impact on national level rates of child labor, children’s involvement in such activities does not change dramatically from year to year. Child labor surveys are carried out infrequently in part because the child labor picture does not change frequently (although there have been recent increases in the number of surveys carried out). In order to present an overall picture of children’s work in as many countries as possible, ILAB used statistics in some cases that are more than 10 years old (dating back to 2003) as of the writing of this report. For more information on statistics used in the report, see the Child Labor and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions section.

In addition, in cases in which previous editions of this report have asserted that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods, and in the absence of evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated, sources older than five years may be used. This practice makes the report’s information on such forms of child labor consistent with USDOL’s List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor as mandated by the (TVPR). Statements that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods will be removed when there is evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated.

3. Source of information. Whether the information, either from primary or secondary sources, is from a source whose methodology, prior publications, degree of familiarity and experience with international labor standards, and/or reputation for accuracy and objectivity warrants a determination that it is relevant and probative.
4. Extent of corroboration. Whether the information about the use of child labor is corroborated by other sources.

1.4.3 Limitations

While data on the worst forms of child labor and information about government efforts to provide remediation are improving, data are still insufficient to provide a complete understanding of the problem. A lack of information may create an impression that a country has less serious problems with the worst forms of child labor than it has in reality. At the same time, this dearth of information may create the impression that a government is doing less than it should, when in fact efforts to combat the worst forms exist but are simply unreported or unpublicized. Although countries with open and available information may sometimes appear to have larger problems relative to other countries, this may not be the case. In fact, countries that make information collection on child labor a priority are in a better position to eliminate the problem than those countries where such information is suppressed, because they can target their policies and programs at identified problem areas to achieve maximum impact.

Although information was requested from the public, including governments covered in the report, only 19 governments out of the 143 countries and non-independent countries and territories submitted information in response. In addition, lack of in-country data collection in a majority of countries and lack of access to other in-country sources of information may have also impacted the reporting.

Due to the inability to travel to each country covered in the report, ILAB relies on U.S. embassies and Internet research to gather primary and secondary sources of information. For countries where Internet access and technology is limited, there may be less information available online. Countries with more closed government processes and less civil society participation may also have less information readily available. When ILAB was unable to find information about the major topics of discussion, including the content of important laws or enforcement efforts, this was noted.

Most of ILAB's online research was conducted in English; however, some research was conducted in Spanish, French, and to a limited extent, Portuguese. Materials written in other languages were generally not reviewed.

Despite ILAB's best efforts to cover relevant topics as comprehensively as possible, the report cannot cover every salient issue that may affect children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor. For example, there are many factors that impact whether a household will send its child to school, to work, or to both. A lack of available information, however, limits the discussion of these issues for some countries. In these cases, we note that the profile's discussion is incomplete. Further, ILAB chose to limit its discussion of education to the issue of access because research on the relationship between child labor and quality of education is lacking.

The report excludes infrastructure projects, health programs, and related policies and programs, which support children's school attendance, because it is more difficult to assess their direct impact on child labor.(14, 15) The report also does not examine the impact that corruption may have on children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor, particularly as it relates to enforcement of laws covering the worst forms of child labor.

1.5 ORGANIZATION AND CONTENT OF COUNTRY PROFILES

ILAB organized country profiles to track the types of efforts outlined in the TDA Conference Committee report. In this report, the Conference Committee indicated the President should consider certain criteria when determining whether a country has met its obligation under the GSP program to implement its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Each country profile contains information regarding these criteria: an introductory paragraph that provides an assessment of government actions to advance efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor; six sections that describe the problem and different aspects of government efforts to address it; and a set of suggested actions.(16)

This year, ILAB introduced a new format for country profiles to make the report a more user-friendly document and a better policy tool for engagement. The new format displays key information in a more streamlined manner, using more tables and less text than in previous years. There are two main changes. First, information considered "static" or relatively unchanged from year to year (e.g., sectors in which children work, laws, enforcement agencies) is condensed into tables in each section, along with any updates on developments during the reporting period. Second, findings about gaps in government efforts are elaborated in a narrative following the table.

1.5.1 Country Overview

Each country profile begins with an overview for 2013 in a single paragraph, beginning with a statement identifying the assessment level assigned to the country for 2013. Countries are assessed as having made significant, moderate, minimal, or no advancement. In a limited number of cases, assessments are not provided because the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (under 50) or there is no evidence of worst forms of child labor and the countries appear to have an adequate preventive legal and enforcement framework. See Section 1.7 for a more detailed discussion on the criteria used to determine a country’s assessment.

Following the statement of assessment, the paragraph offers a summary of key findings in the country profile. The narrative includes any meaningful efforts taken by a government, defined as efforts in key areas in which the government advanced in implementing its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.⁽¹⁶⁾ The narrative also notes the most common or egregious forms of child labor found in the country and highlights areas in which key gaps in government efforts remain.

1.5.2 Section 1: Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of Child Labor

1.5.2.1 Content Overview

The first section of each country profile attempts to provide, to the extent information is available, a comprehensive picture of the worst forms of child labor in the country. The section begins with a review of available data on working children and school attendance, followed by a presentation of the most common sectors and activities in which children are engaged. It provides information about the nature and conditions of the work when such information is available.

1.5.2.2 Format

Table 1, Statistics on Children’s Work and Education, contains at least four variables: percent of working children, school attendance rate, percent of children combining work and school, and primary completion rate. The majority of country profiles have data for at least one of these variables. A smaller set of profiles contain data on children’s work by sector. The age and methodologies of the original surveys that provide the underlying data vary, and in some cases the surveys may not reflect the true magnitude of the child labor problem in a country. For some countries, data are unavailable from the sources used in this report. For more information on Table 1, including background on the institutions involved in data collection and analysis, see the section Children’s Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions.

Table 2, Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity, groups types of children’s work by sector, using categories established by the ILO and UCW for national child labor surveys (Agriculture, Industry, and Services) as well as a category intended to capture work understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3 (a) – (c) of ILO C. 182 (referred to by the report as “Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor”).¹ To the extent possible, sectors and specific activities performed by children are sorted into these categories according to International Standard Industrial Classification (ISIC) of all Economic Activities or International Standard Classification of Occupations (ISCO), which are internationally-accepted industry and occupational codes.⁽¹⁷⁾

Table 2 is footnoted to: 1) identify sectors or activities for which information is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown; 2) identify sectors or activities determined hazardous by national law or regulation as understood under Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182; and 3) provide the definition of “Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor” as previously described.

Following Table 2, the section may highlight additional sector-specific information in a brief narrative, such as geographic regions where child labor occurs or details on the nature of the work performed. In addition, the narrative may discuss any social, economic, or political issues that impact the prevalence of child labor, such as barriers to accessing education, or major socioeconomic shocks to the country that may inhibit the government’s ability to address child labor, such as a natural disaster or armed conflict.

1.5.3 Section 2: Legal Framework on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

1.5.3.1 Content Overview

The second section of each profile provides information on two criteria established in the TDA

¹ Such work is unacceptable for children under any circumstances and is strictly proscribed by the Convention.

Conference Committee report: “1) whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor” and “2) whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures.”(16) Accordingly, this section describes a country’s legal framework in regard to the worst forms of child labor and assesses the adequacy of that legal framework by comparing it, in general, to the standards called for in the TDA. Since the TDA uses the definition of the worst forms of child labor contained in ILO C. 182, this section focuses on comparing the country’s legal framework to the standards embodied in that Convention. In line with the ILO Committee of Experts, ILAB considered any law that could be used to prohibit the worst forms of child labor. ILAB also considered whether the country had ratified key international instruments related to child labor, including its worst forms.

In this section, ILAB observed whether laws were comprehensive in their prohibitions of all variations of a particular worst form. For example, in regard to commercial sexual exploitation of children, the report assesses whether countries prohibit recruitment, use, sale of, and benefiting from the proceeds of child prostitution.

It is important to note that ILAB focuses on legal protections against the worst forms of child labor regardless of whether or not a problem exists in a country. This is to ensure that legal frameworks also serve as preventive mechanisms. For example, even if a country does not have a problem with the use of children in illicit activities, if there are no laws that exist to prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, the report points out a gap when comparing laws on this issue against international standards.

With these general parameters in mind, most reports contain some combination of the following assessments. In regard to forced child labor, ILAB assessed whether a country’s laws comprehensively prohibited all manifestations of the problem of forced child labor, debt bondage, and/or child slavery. In regard to child trafficking, ILAB judged the adequacy of existing legal protections against international and domestic trafficking. In all cases in which countries maintain a military force, ILAB assessed whether the minimum age for compulsory military recruitment was 18. In countries where there is an ongoing armed conflict, ILAB also examined whether the law prohibits forced or voluntary recruitment of children by the armed forces as well as other armed groups.

On the issue of commercial sexual exploitation of children, ILAB examined whether laws prohibit the production, distribution/sale of, benefiting from, and possession of child pornography. Regarding illicit activities, ILAB assessed whether the law prohibits the use of a child in these activities, such as drug trafficking or forced begging.

Because the standards on minimum age for work in ILO C. 138 provide a foundation for protections against the worst forms of child labor, ILAB used the standards embodied in that convention to assess each country’s minimum age for admission to work and the age through which education is compulsory.(18) ILO C. 138 establishes that countries should set a minimum age for work of 15, or 14 for countries with less-developed economies. According to ILO C. 138, the minimum age for work shall not be less than the age of compulsory education. ILAB recognizes that the Convention calls upon member states to avoid the establishment of a minimum age for work lower than the compulsory school age. However, the opposite situation—in which the minimum age for compulsory schooling is lower than the minimum age for work—should also be avoided. It is possible that a low (or no) compulsory school age may encourage children below the legal age of employment to work since they are not required to attend school. Because such work is illegal, it may be more hidden from public view than other forms of work, thus increasing the possibility of exploitation through involvement in hazardous work or other worst forms of child labor. Therefore, the section notes when a country’s minimum age for compulsory education falls below the minimum age for employment. It also notes when free education or compulsory education laws are not adequately implemented.

1.5.3.2 Format

The section begins with Table 3, Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor. The conventions listed include ILO C. 138 and 182 and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution, and child pornography; and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (Palermo Protocol). A checkmark indicates the country’s ratification, acceptance, accession, or succession to the instrument, given that these actions have the same practical legal effect regarding the substantive obligations of the instruments as ratification.⁽¹⁹⁾ If other relevant international instruments (beyond those listed in Table 3) were ratified during the reporting period, this may be recognized in a short narrative following the table.

Table 4, Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor, lists a set of standards that should be established through national legislation in order to fully implement ILO C.182. These include the minimum ages for work and hazardous work; a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children; prohibitions of forced labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and using children in illicit activities; the minimum ages for voluntary and compulsory military service; and the compulsory education age. Table 4 also notes whether the government has a law on free basic education.

Table 4 is followed by a narrative describing any relevant laws the government enacted, or advanced to a significant step in the legislative process, during the reporting period. If the government failed to take action on an existing draft bill that would fill a gap in the legal framework related to child labor, this also may be noted. The narrative then assesses whether existing laws meet international standards and are sufficiently comprehensive to cover child labor issues that are present in the country.

1.5.4 Section 3: Enforcement of Laws on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

1.5.4.1 Content Overview

The third section of each profile describes the roles of government agencies in enforcing laws relevant to child labor, including its worst forms, and reports on enforcement efforts made during the reporting period. It addresses the third indicator for assessing a country's child labor efforts included in the TDA Conference Committee report: "3) whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor."⁽¹⁶⁾

ILAB identified two distinct concepts from the criteria to assess country efforts and, this year, evaluated them separately in Sections 3 and 4.

In this section, ILAB analyzed whether or to what degree the country had defined enforcement agency roles and had investigated and addressed complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor. Because ILO C. 182 discusses enforcement to a limited extent, other international standards and practices were also considered as general evaluating guidelines, including those from ILO Conventions 81 and 129 on Labour Inspection and Labour Inspection in Agriculture respectively. To the extent possible, ILAB assessed whether the country had:

- Established labor inspection systems;
- Employed a sufficient number of inspectors to enforce the country's child labor laws and regulations;
- Provided sufficient funding and resources to enforce child labor laws and regulations;
- Provided sufficient training to inspectors, including specialized training on child labor;
- Established processes for coordination and sharing of information on child labor among enforcement authorities;
- Created and implemented an effective mechanism for filing and responding expeditiously to complaints about child labor;
- Developed and implemented a labor inspection strategy that targeted areas in which child labor was believed most likely to occur and conducted inspections with sufficient frequency;
- Sanctioned child labor violations; and
- Published information on specific inspection results and fines or sanctions imposed for violation of child labor laws and regulations.

In most cases, ILAB did not have sufficient information to determine whether numbers of inspectors were sufficient in the country. Given the lack of information, ILAB was cautious in its assessment of the adequate number of inspectors. Only in cases in which the number of inspectors was extremely small relative to the population, the government acknowledged their own resource constraints, key international organizations concluded resource gaps existed, or several sources corroborated such a conclusion did ILAB make findings of insufficiency.(20)

Although ILO Conventions focus primarily on labor laws, the worst forms of child labor encompass activities such as child prostitution that are generally covered by criminal laws. Therefore, the report also assessed the same criteria in regard to criminal law enforcement.

1.5.4.2 Format

Section 3 begins with a broad statement about whether the government has established institutional mechanisms to enforce laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms. It then presents a table listing the agencies charged with enforcing such laws and identifies each agency's role. A narrative follows, with subsections on the two relevant types of enforcement efforts (labor law enforcement and criminal law enforcement). As available, details may be provided on the number of inspectors or investigators, funding and training levels, capacity, and the number of inspections or investigations during the reporting period. The narrative includes findings where ILAB has concluded a shortfall exists between international standards and government efforts.

1.5.5 Section 4: Coordination of Government Efforts on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

1.5.5.1 Content Overview

Section 4 provides information on institutions charged with coordinating overall efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms, in the country. ILAB derived this concept from the Conference Committee report's third criteria that references whether the country has "formal institutional mechanisms."

Although the Conference Committee report speaks only to whether such mechanisms are in place in regard to investigation and complaints of the worst forms of child labor, ILO C. 182, Article 5, states that "[e]ach Member shall, after consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, establish or designate appropriate mechanisms to monitor the implementation of the provisions giving effect to this Convention." ILAB applied this concept of monitoring to all provisions of the Convention, not just those directly related to enforcement of child labor laws. However, since the term "monitor" is often associated exclusively with enforcement activities, ILAB uses the term "coordinate" to describe this function.

1.5.5.2 Format

Section 4 is typically brief, beginning with a short statement as to whether the government has any coordinating mechanism focused on or related to combating child labor, followed by a table listing the relevant coordinating bodies, their composition (if known), and their respective mandates. A subsequent narrative details activities of the coordinating bod(ies) during the reporting period, if known, and may include findings on gaps in their efforts.

1.5.6 Section 5: Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

1.5.6.1 Content Overview

The fifth section of the profiles provides information on the fourth TDA Conference Committee report criterion: "whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor."(16) This section describes a country's policies and plans to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

ILAB used the framework provided in R. 190, Article 15(f), which illustrates measures that countries might take to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as "encouraging the development of policies by undertakings to promote the aims of the Convention."(21) In ILO C. 182 and in comments from the ILO Committee of Experts, the terms "programs" and "plans of action" are often used interchangeably. Indeed, it is difficult to distinguish in some cases between a policy, a plan, and a program. For purposes of the TDA, a policy on child labor is defined as a framework that lays out general principles that are intended to guide a government's actions on child labor. Although policies may call for the passage of new laws and the establishment of new programs, for purposes of the TDA, whether laws are adopted or programs are implemented is discussed in the Legal Framework for the Worst Forms of Child Labor section or Social Programs to Address Child Labor section, respectively.

Specifically, ILAB assessed whether governments had:

- Established specific child labor policies, any related development policies that explicitly incorporate the issue of child labor, or any related development policies that do not explicitly target child labor but that could impact the problem. (ILAB determined that, because so few governments distinguish between worst forms of child labor and child labor, in general, when establishing policies, any policy on child labor, whether targeted to worst forms of child labor or not, would be discussed.);
- Ensured that these policies included specific action plans, assigned responsibilities, established goals, and set timetables; and
- Implemented its established policies and plans.

1.5.6.2 Format

Section 5 begins with a statement indicating whether the government has established any policies related to child labor, including its worst forms. This is followed by a table listing the relevant policies, providing a description of each policy's objective and any developments in implementation that occurred during the reporting period. The table is footnoted to identify policies that were launched during the reporting period, as well as broader development or education policies that may have an impact on reducing or eliminating child labor but have not been evaluated to determine whether this is indeed the case. The narrative following the table is reserved for any findings as to whether existing policies sufficiently address child labor issues, including its worst forms, present in the country.

1.5.7 Section 6: Social Programs to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labor

1.5.7.1 Content Overview

This section responds to the Conference Committee report criterion that calls for a consideration of “whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.”(16) This section discusses only those programs implemented during the reporting period.

As in the section on policies, this section describes both programs focused on worst forms of child labor and on all forms of child labor, since countries often do not distinguish between the two in child labor programs. Also as in the policies section, this section discusses programs that focus on child labor specifically, as well as programs that address poverty, education, and other related matters that could have a beneficial impact on child labor.

ILAB generally considered the implementation of projects through international organizations to be government efforts because the projects can only be carried out with consent of the government and such efforts are sometimes considered part of national budgets.

ILAB applied standards embodied in Articles 6 and 7 of ILO C. 182 to assess country programs to combat child labor. ILO R. 190 was also used in determining the kinds of efforts governments might make, such as giving special attention to girls, providing training to employers and workers, and raising awareness. With this in mind, ILAB assessed whether governments had:

- Participated in any social programs to combat child labor, including programs aimed at directly preventing and withdrawing children from child labor;
- Implemented social programs with sufficient resources to combat the scope and magnitude of the child labor problem at issue;
- Targeted at-risk populations; and
- Implemented social programs successfully and sustainably.

1.5.7.2 Format

Section 6 opens with a statement as to whether the government funded and/or participated in social programs that include the goal of eliminating or reducing child labor, including its worst forms. As with the policy section, this section lists relevant programs, including larger development programs such as poverty strategies or education-focused initiatives that may have an impact on child labor (these are footnoted to clarify when the impact on child labor has not been studied). Footnotes also identify projects that are funded by the government and/or were launched during the reporting period. The table provides a description of each social program and its activities and accomplishments, to the extent known, during the reporting period. A narrative may follow with analysis of the extent to which these efforts were sufficient to address the scope of the problem and/or covered the key sectors in which children are known to work in the country.

1.5.8 Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The last section of each country profile is a set of suggested actions. These suggested actions serve as a roadmap of efforts that individual countries can follow to more fully address the worst forms of child labor. The year in which a suggested action was first provided is listed in the table followed by every year the action was included in the report and not addressed.

1.6 FRAMEWORK FOR COUNTRY ASSESSMENTS

1.6.1 Objective for Country Assessments

As discussed in Section 1.5.1, ILAB is using an assessment tool to clearly indicate and highlight the status of efforts by each country benefiting from U.S. trade preferences to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

1.6.2 Research Question Guiding Country Assessments

The research question that ILAB is asking in its assessment of an individual beneficiary country is: “To what extent did the beneficiary country advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period?”

1.6.3 Scope of Country Assessment

As discussed, the TDA Conference Committee report outlines the following six criteria the President is asked to consider in determining whether a country is implementing its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor:

1. whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor;
2. whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures;

3. whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor;
4. whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor;
5. whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor, and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor; and
6. whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.(16)

The country assessment tool is intended to inform the sixth criterion listed above: “whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.” In preparing the assessments, ILAB evaluated the first five criteria listed above, grouping them into the same five areas addressed in the individual country profiles: laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. The assessment is based on an analysis of the status of each country’s efforts in these five areas considered as a whole and compared to similar past efforts. Importantly, the assessment is not intended to reflect a determination of “whether a country has implemented its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.”(2) That determination is reserved for the President.

1.6.4 Method for Determining a Country Assessment

Each country profile presented in this report identifies a set of suggested actions for governments to take in order to advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The implementation—or lack of implementation— of these suggested actions establishes a baseline, or point of reference, from which to assess a country’s advancement. These actions, in combination with other efforts undertaken by a country, were considered when assessing the level of a country’s advancement during the current reporting period compared with the previous reporting period. The reporting period for this year’s report is January 2013 to December 2013. However, meaningful actions undertaken during the first quarter of 2014 (January – March) were also considered for this assessment.

Once a country’s efforts were identified, ILAB assessed (1) the significance of efforts—actions that could have a meaningful impact in eliminating the worst forms of child labor—undertaken during the reporting period, and (2) the extent to which these meaningful efforts addressed the first five TDA criteria, outlined above, during the reporting period. In addition, ILAB reviewed whether a government was complicit in the use of forced child labor, including the forcible recruitment of children for armed conflict.

To promote consistency and transparency and to operationalize those first five TDA criteria, each country’s efforts were analyzed according to a uniform set of guidance questions related to the five general areas of laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. These guidance questions are presented in Appendix II.

1.6.5 Country Assessment Categories

Each country received one of five possible assessments: Significant Advancement, Moderate Advancement, Minimal Advancement, No Advancement, or No Assessment.

1. Significant Advancement. Compared with the suggested actions reported in 2012, a country significantly advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor if it took suggested actions or made other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in all relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.
2. Moderate Advancement. Compared with the suggested actions reported in 2012, a country moderately advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor if it took suggested actions or made other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in some relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.

3. Minimal Advancement. There are two types of countries that could receive this assessment. The first type of country is one that, compared with the suggested actions reported in 2012, minimally advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor by taking suggested actions or making other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in a few relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.

The second type of country is one that, compared with the suggested actions reported in 2012, made some advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor, but also established a new law, regulation, or policy; upheld an existing law, regulation, or policy; or initiated or continued a practice during the reporting period that reverses or delays advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor.

4. No Advancement. There are two types of countries that could receive this assessment. The first type of country is one that, compared with the suggested actions reported in 2012, took no suggested actions and made no other meaningful efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period. This would include countries in which there is no evidence of a worst form of child labor problem and where the country has gaps in its legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

The second type of country is one that, in more than an isolated incident, was complicit in the use of forced child labor. Given the egregious nature of this form of exploitation, countries complicit in the use of forced child labor were considered to have made no advancement regardless of efforts in other areas.

5. No Assessment. This assessment is reserved for countries in which the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (under 50) or in which there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and where the country has a good legal and enforcement framework on child labor. Currently, only certain territories and non-independent countries fall into these categories.

This assessment is also given to a country when it is included in the report for the first time. In addition, in cases when a country receives a suggested action for the first time, a country is given this assessment.

It is important to note that these assessments track government actions and compare countries against their own prior efforts. The assessments do not take into account the impact of the government actions on the problem, or whether they have a documented effect in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. This type of analysis would require rigorous impact evaluations and assessments based on data from solid research designs, which is beyond the scope of this report.

Year in Review: “Every Child Counts: 168 Million Reasons to Eliminate Child Labor”

Every Child Counts—was the title of UNICEF’s 2014 report, State of the World’s Children in Numbers, which published global and national statistics to inform the international community and national governments about progress made in improving children’s lives and actions needed to help them claim their rights. Over the last 20 years, the world has witnessed great advances in children’s health and education, including the reduction of child mortality for 90 million children; improved physical growth for 37 percent of children through enhanced nutrition; and increased primary school enrollments in least developed countries from 53 percent in 1990 to 81 percent in 2011.(22) The ILO’s 2013 report on Marking Progress Against Child Labor also documents a positive downward trend in the prevalence of child labor globally (see Figure 1).

Note: in millions

Source: ILO-IPEC, Marking Progress Against Child Labour: Global Estimates and Trends 2000 - 2012. Geneva; 2013.

ILO estimates document that, from 2000 to 2012, child labor fell by 78 million or 30 percent, placing the most current estimate of child laborers at 168 million, of which 85 million are in hazardous work.(23) Behind these numbers are children wielding machetes to crack open cocoa pods; girls working as domestic servants in third-party homes doing laundry from dawn until dusk; and boys wading in puddles of mercury sifting for gold. The ILO also estimates at least 6 million children in forced labor, where they may be chained to looms to weave carpets, kidnapped to fight adult wars, mandated to leave school to pick cotton, or lured and sold to brothels by promises of a brighter future.

While the decline in child labor definitely signals a move in the right direction, it still means that 10 percent of the world’s children, or 168 million children, languish in situations that deprive them of their right to go to school without interference from work. It also means that the target of eliminating the worst forms of child labor by 2016, as embodied in international declarations to address child labor, such as the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 (Roadmap) and the Brasilia Declaration on Child Labor, will remain an elusive goal—at least for now.(24, 25) Nonetheless, actions to eradicate child labor, especially its worst forms, must move forward.

In moving forward towards the eradication of child labor, especially its worst forms, it is important that governments understand the underpinnings of abusive child labor and efforts required to eliminate it (see Table 1). The Roadmap provides a framework for accelerating progress by establishing priority areas, including: adopting and enforcing national legislation against child labor, including its worst forms; strengthening inspection and monitoring machinery and applying appropriate sanctions against perpetrators of child labor law violations; extending and improving free, compulsory quality education for all children, including vocational and technical education; and establishing and implementing social protection policies for vulnerable and socially excluded households, hard-to-reach children, and children with special needs.(24, 25)

The participants at the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010 and the Brasilia Global Child Labor Conference in 2013 acknowledged and reiterated that “governments have the leading role and the primary responsibility, in cooperation with employers’ and workers’ organizations, as well as NGOs and other civil society actors, in implementing measures to prevent and eliminate child labor, in particular its worst forms, and rescue children from it.” The numerous government efforts to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, documented in the country profiles in the 13th edition of the Finding of the Worst Forms of Child Labor include many of the actions required for the implementation of the Roadmap. For this “Year in Review,” we examine how these efforts compare globally and across regions.

2.1 Global Analysis of Government Efforts and Country Assessments

This section provides global trends in government efforts and country assessments, including changes in assessments among DOL’s 2011-2013 Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor reports.

2.1.1 Government Efforts

During this reporting period, 114 out of 143 governments covered in this report made at least one meaningful effort to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Fifty-seven governments made efforts in the areas of laws and regulations; 65 governments made efforts in the area of enforcement; 39 governments made efforts in the area of coordination; 58 countries made efforts in the area of government policies; and 77 countries made efforts in the area of social programs.

Establishing a clear, strong legal framework that conforms to international standards is critical for governments’ efforts to prevent and eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Therefore, this section gives special attention to the ratification of international standards and adoption of corresponding national legislation.

While policies and social programs can prevent children from being forced to work at an early age, legal minimum age requirements for work help protect children from early entry into the workforce. And while the majority of governments have established a minimum age for employment, there are several states that have yet to establish a minimum age for employment, and many more whose minimum age falls below international standards. ILO C.138 sets a minimum age for employment to be no less than 15 years, but allows a minimal legal working age of 14 for countries where economic and educational facilities are insufficiently developed. Nine governments have yet to establish a minimum age for work (Gibraltar, India, Montserrat, Niue, Norfolk Islands, Pakistan, St. Helena, Tokelau, and Tonga), and 5 governments still maintain an age that falls below the international standard for developing countries of 14 (Belize, Dominica, Nigeria, Solomon Islands, and Cook Islands). Similarly, 15 governments have yet to establish a minimum age for children involved in hazardous work (Algeria, Christmas Island, (Cocos (Keeling) Islands, Djibouti, Grenada, Montserrat, Niue, Norfolk Island, Seychelles, South Sudan, Turks and Caicos, Trinidad and Tobago, Tonga, Tokelau, and Vanuatu) as required by C. 182, while another fifteen governments maintain an age below the international standard of 18.

Although there is no international standard for a compulsory education age, not having one or setting it too low may encourage children below the legal age of employment to work since they are not required to attend school. While the majority of governments have established compulsory education ages, 15 governments have yet to do so, and 19 countries maintain ages below the international standard of 14.

Ratification of relevant international conventions signal governments’ commitment to having in place a solid legal framework that can help to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. To date, 114 countries that are covered in this report have ratified ILO C.138, including two which ratified during the reporting period (Maldives and Solomon Islands). In addition, 126 of the 143 governments in this report have ratified ILO C.182, two of which ratified during the reporting period (Maldives and Somalia). Twenty-seven governments have yet to ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, and 38 governments have yet to ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict.

Addressing gaps in countries' legal frameworks on child labor is a necessary but incomplete condition for meeting the global goals of eliminating the worst forms of child labor. A commitment among governments to combat child labor must be upheld not only in law but also in practice. As such, the country assessments in this report take into account the full spectrum of instruments a government must employ to effectively eliminate the worst forms of child labor: laws and regulations, enforcement mechanisms, coordination, government policies, and social programs.

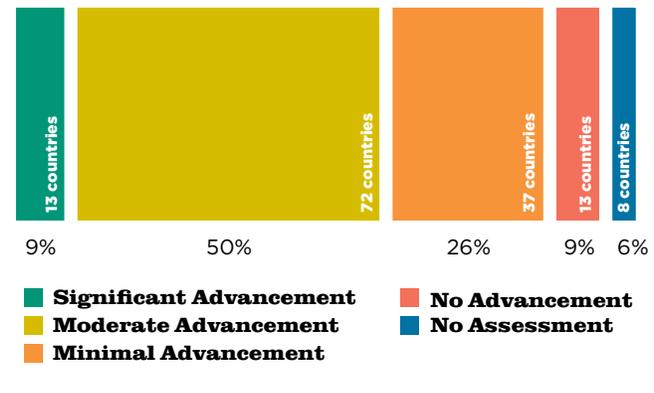

2.1.2 Country Assessments

Figure 2 provides a global breakdown of the country assessments in this report. Overall, more than half of the countries (59 percent) received an assessment of Moderate Advancement or higher, compared with 36 percent of countries that received an assessment of Minimal Advancement or lower. The other 6 percent of countries received a No Assessment. Out of the 143 countries covered in this report, 13 received an assessment of Significant Advancement, 72 received Moderate Advancement, 37 received Minimal Advancement, 13 received No Advancement, and 8 were not given an assessment.

Among the 13 countries that received No Advancement, 3 countries received this assessment as a result of government complicity in forced child labor. These countries included the Democratic Republic of Congo, Eritrea, and Uzbekistan. The other 10 countries received No Advancement because no meaningful actions were taken to advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

Two territories, Tokelau and Niue, were not given an assessment because it was the first year they received a suggested action in the report. Three territories and non-independent countries were not given an assessment because their child populations are either non-existent or extremely small (under 50) or because there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and the countries have good legal and enforcement frameworks on child labor.² For example, the British Indian Ocean Territory does not have a permanent civilian population, Heard and McDonald Islands is uninhabited, and the Pitcairn Islands has a population of less than 50 people.

The assessment results from 2013 indicate increased efforts to end the worst forms of child labor compared with the assessments from 2012 and 2011 (see Figure 3). Overall, there were more countries that received assessments of Significant or Moderate Advancement, fewer countries that received an assessment of Minimal Advancement, and the same number of countries that received an assessment of No Advancement. For example, 85 governments received higher assessments of Moderate and Significant Advancement, as opposed to 72 in 2012. Of the 13 governments that received an assessment of No Advancement, 6 of those had received the same assessment in 2012, 3 had received No Assessment in 2012, while the remaining 4 governments declined in assessment from Minimal and Moderate advancement in 2012 to No Advancement in 2013. These two countries and two territories were Vanuatu, Central African Republic, Norfolk Islands, and Cook Islands. The key challenges reside in spurring action among governments that are making No to Minimal Advancement and maintaining momentum among those that are making moderate to Significant Advancement.

² Appendix 1 at the back of the report lists the assessment levels of countries and territories covered in this report. This information is organized into two lists. The first list includes an alphabetical listing of countries by assessment and the second list organizes countries by assessment level.

2.2 REGIONAL ANALYSIS OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS AND COUNTRY ASSESSMENTS

This year’s report includes a regional analysis of country assessments and regional trends in government actions to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Figure 3 provides a regional breakdown of the country assessments. Every region had at least one of the 13 countries that received an assessment of Significant Advancement, with Latin America and the Caribbean having the most with 7 countries, followed by Sub-Saharan Africa with 3. The remaining part of this discussion reviews trends and gaps in efforts to eliminate child labor, including the worst forms, by region.

2.2.1 Asia and the Pacific

2013 Regional Outlook: Asia and the Pacific

Meaningful efforts:

- Improved legal frameworks, particularly related to trafficking in persons.
- New tracking systems to enhance enforcement.

Challenges and existing gaps:

- Lack of adequate legal protections, specifically for children in hazardous labor.
- Lack of or weak intra-governmental coordination.
- Lack of funding for labor inspections.

In the Asia and Pacific region, 77.8 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor or 9.3 percent of all children in the region.⁽²⁶⁾ In 2013, governments in Asia and the Pacific continued to make notable progress in combating the worst forms of child labor, particularly in the area of legislation on trafficking in persons, which is of particular concern in the region. The Philippines was the only country in the region to receive an assessment of Significant Advancement for making several meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Asia and the Pacific continue to engage in child labor, predominately in agriculture, in which child labor is prevalent in two-thirds of the countries.

In Central Asia, children are primarily found working in the cultivation of tobacco and cotton, while in Southeast Asia and South Asia, children often work as domestic servants. Among the Oceanic countries and territories, commercial sexual exploitation is a problem, while bonded labor and forced labor are issues of concern in South Asian countries. Despite governments' efforts to address child labor in these areas, significant shortcomings in legal protections exist that leave children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including the absence of national lists of hazardous work prohibited to children; lack of a minimum age for work or a minimum age of 18 for hazardous labor; and low compulsory education ages. Additionally, many countries have weak enforcement systems and do not make data regarding child labor violations, investigations, prosecutions, and convictions publically available.

During the year, several countries conducted or published surveys to better understand the prevalence of child labor. Cambodia and Mongolia both published national child labor surveys. Bangladesh and Kiribati conducted national child labor surveys, and the Philippines and Tonga implemented surveys in specific sectors in which child labor is known to occur.

In 2013, countries in Asia and the Pacific passed legislation or ratified international standards to protect children against the worst forms of child labor. Laws were strengthened to address trafficking in persons in Fiji, India, Kazakhstan, Maldives, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, and Thailand. Maldives ratified ILO Conventions 29, 105, 138, and 182, which cover forced labor, the minimum age for work, and worst forms of child labor. Solomon Islands also ratified ILO C. 138 on the Minimum Age for Work. Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Fiji, and the Philippines established or made amendments to lists of hazardous occupations prohibited to children.

Four countries initiated new tracking systems for enforcement of child labor laws. Fiji established a National Child Labor Database, and India launched the Criminal Tracking and Networking System, which connects all 15,000 police stations and enables police to better monitor trends in serious crimes, including trafficking. Sri Lanka launched the Labor Inspection System Application, a fully automated system in which authorized personnel can use a hand-held tablet to enter data during on-site inspections and track and monitor the status and disposition of cases. Afghanistan began installing an information management system to track the age of every member of the Afghan National Security Forces, in an effort to prevent the recruitment of underage children.

At least five countries in Asia and the Pacific also initiated social programs addressing child labor more broadly. Afghanistan began participating in a $2 million USDOL-funded project targeting child labor in the carpet sector, implemented by GoodWeave. Cambodia piloted a new cash scholarship transfer program through a mobile banking system to encourage children to remain in school. The Philippines implemented the Convergence Program Against Child Labor (2013–2016) to work with local governments in creating child labor-free communities. Sri Lanka also began a program to create a child labor-free zone in Ratnapura District which will serve as a model to be replicated in all 25 districts. Thailand, in cooperation with the Thai Frozen Foods Association and the ILO, created the Good Labor Practices program that promotes training and good practices for the prevention and elimination of forced and child labor and the general improvement of workplace conditions at all points in the shrimp and seafood processing supply chain.

Despite these efforts, significant obstacles to progress remain, particularly in the areas of legal protections related to minimum age, hazardous work, intra-government coordination, and enforcement. Pakistan, India, Tonga, and Norfolk Island have not established minimum ages for work. Pakistan, India, and Nepal, as well as six of the Oceanic Countries and Territories, have not established a minimum age for hazardous labor. The Maldives, Kiribati, Papua New Guinea, and Fiji have not adopted lists of hazardous work prohibited to children. Eleven countries in the region have compulsory education ages that are below the minimum age for work, which may make children more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Seven countries and six territories do not have a mechanism to coordinate actions on child labor, and a majority of those that do have a weak coordinating mechanism. Research was unable to find data regarding child labor violations, investigations, prosecutions, and/or convictions for Bangladesh, Cambodia, Fiji, Indonesia, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, the Kyrgyz Republic, Pakistan, Samoa, Solomon Islands, and Uzbekistan. In general, funding for child labor coordination and inspection is also limited throughout the region.

2013 Regional Outlook: Europe and Eurasia

Meaningful efforts:

- Increased data collection on child labor.
- Strengthened social protection systems for vulnerable children.
- Improved legal and policy frameworks to protect children from human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.

Challenges and existing gaps:

- Persistent gaps in laws protecting children from all worst forms of child labor.
- Challenges in enforcing child labor laws.
- Insufficient funding for social programs.

Regional statistics on child labor do not exist for Europe and Eurasia. However, during the year, governments made efforts to increase the availability of information about child labor. Albania became the first country in this region to receive an assessment of Significant Advancement for making several meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

In addition, countries expanded social protection systems, and strengthened legal frameworks. Despite these efforts, more actions are needed to address gaps in legal frameworks, enhance enforcement of laws, and design and fully fund targeted programs to assist children in the worst forms of child labor.

In 2013, three countries conducted research on child labor. Armenia and Georgia participated in projects with ILO-IPEC to conduct national child labor surveys, while Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) collaborated with Save the Children to carry out research on children involved in forced begging and street work. The Government of Albania also released data from its 2010 National Child Labor Survey.

During the reporting period, governments in the region also took steps to expand social protection systems, which may prevent children from involvement in the worst forms of child labor. Moldova adopted a law that calls for creation of a framework for identifying, evaluating, assisting, monitoring, and registering at-risk children and children separated from their parents, including those in child labor, and designated agencies to implement the framework. In Montenegro, the Government adopted the National Plan of Action for Children 2013-2017, which complements the Law on Social and Child Protection. This law promotes and protects children's rights in the areas of social services, child protection, health services, and education.

Across the region, laws are largely harmonized with international standards, and most countries have ratified international instruments relating to child labor. During the reporting period, several governments took steps to further improve their legal frameworks. Azerbaijan and BiH strengthened laws on trafficking, while Albania, Montenegro, Russia, and Ukraine enhanced their legal provisions against child pornography and other forms of commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Likewise, governments in the region implemented policies related to child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor. Armenia and Georgia adopted policies to combat trafficking. Azerbaijan adopted an action plan to address child labor, and Moldova extended the application of its child labor action plan from six to nine districts, where local public administrations developed local plans and created special teams to combat child labor. In BiH, the Government appointed a National Coordinator to oversee implementation of the country action plan under the regional Decade for Roma Inclusion initiative. Roma children throughout the region are discriminated against and particularly vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

Even with these positive efforts, gaps remained in the areas of legislation, enforcement, and the targeting and funding of social programs to combat child labor. While many countries' legal frameworks protect children from the worst forms of child labor, others contain provisions that fall short. BiH, Montenegro, and Serbia do not have comprehensive lists of hazardous work prohibited to children. In Russia and Ukraine, possession of child pornography is not criminalized. The laws of these two countries, as well as Serbia, also do not fully protect older children from certain kinds of commercial sexual exploitation.

Enforcement remained a challenge across the region. Gaps in resources and the lack of capacity of labor inspectorates detract from enforcement of child labor laws in Kosovo, Moldova, Serbia, and Ukraine. Georgia remained without a labor inspectorate to enforce any labor laws, and Armenia does not have a specific mechanism for registering child labor complaints.

Countries in the region also struggled to allocate funding for social programs that would decrease the need for families to send their children to work. Kosovo and Ukraine carried out programs to combat various forms of child labor, but these were underfunded. In Macedonia, the number of centers that provide services to vulnerable children is insufficient. Research found no evidence that Moldova contributes funding to its donor-supported child labor programs, which suggests they may not be sustainable. Research has also found limited evidence of government funding for social programs to specifically address child labor, other than human trafficking, in Azerbaijan. Russia did not fund or participate in any programs targeting child laborers.

2.2.3 Latin America and the Caribbean

2013 Regional Outlook: Latin America and the Caribbean

Meaningful efforts:

- Expanded social protection programs benefitting child laborers.
- Improved legal frameworks for child domestic workers.
- Increased funding for stronger labor law enforcement.

Challenges and existing gaps:

- Limited or weak labor inspection systems.
- Lack of programs targeting hard to reach populations, such as child domestic workers, and insufficient programs to reach children involved in agriculture and informal sector work.
- Insufficient attention to combatting the use of children in illicit activities, including gangs.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, 12.5 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor, or 8 percent of all children in the region.⁽²³⁾ Seven Latin American countries received a rating of Significant Advancement in 2013: Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, and Peru—a group that includes several countries with high rates of economic growth. But not all have benefitted equally from economic growth in Latin America and the Caribbean. Indigenous, and, in some countries, afro-descendant populations, have had disproportionately high rates of poverty and child labor. ^(27, 28) Child migrants were also particularly at risk of child labor and were overrepresented in exploitative sectors, such as domestic service.⁽²⁹⁾ In 2013, many governments made the link between social exclusion and child labor, and pioneered or expanded their social protection efforts to address these issues. However, children in the region continue to engage in work, particularly in dangerous forms of agriculture and domestic service. There are gaps in labor inspection systems and programs for hard to reach populations, such as child domestic workers and children involved in agriculture and informal work. More efforts are needed to reduce barriers to school attendance and combat the use of children in illicit activities.

In 2013, governments expanded social protection programs that directly benefit child laborers and at-risk children. Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, and Ecuador enrolled more beneficiaries into conditional cash transfer programs that specifically aim to keep children enrolled in school and prevent them from engaging in hazardous occupations. Honduras's conditional cash transfer program, Voucher 10,000, which specifically targets indigenous and afro-descendant populations, added the reduction of child labor to its objectives. Brazil expanded three of its flagship anti-poverty programs—Bolsa Família, Brasil Carinhoso, and Brasil sem Miséria--and restructured its National Program to Eliminate Child Labor to prioritize assistance to the municipalities with the highest rates of child labor. The Paraguayan Government expanded the health and education program, Programa Abrazo, into regions with a high prevalence of child trafficking for the purposes of labor or sexual exploitation. Haiti made strides in promoting school attendance, enrolling over one million children by providing additional cash transfers and education assistance to families. Suriname continued to expand education programs for vulnerable populations, including by opening after-school programs for low-income children in more schools.

In addition, there were several promising legal developments in 2013 that demonstrate a growing commitment among governments to address child labor among the most vulnerable. Paraguay, Guyana, and Colombia ratified ILO Convention 189 Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers, which commits these Governments to ensure domestic workers have the same protections as other workers and to prevent worker abuse and child labor in domestic service.⁽³⁰⁾ Argentina enacted the Special Code on Contracting Domestic Workers, which regulates the employment of domestic workers in private homes and includes many provisions to protect children, including prohibiting work in domestic service for children who have not finished their secondary education. During the year, Brazil approved similar legislation that extends labor protections to domestic workers. Other notable gains were made in the Caribbean, with both Dominica and Saint Lucia ratifying the Palermo Protocol. Saint Lucia additionally ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution, and Child Pornography and the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict.

In 2013, many governments allocated a greater share of resources to strengthen labor law enforcement. Ecuador increased its budget for labor inspections by 42 percent, Brazil by 13 percent, Guatemala by 16 percent, and El Salvador by 13 percent, though Panama's child labor inspections budget decreased by 35 percent. Labor inspectorates in Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, and Guatemala conducted more inspections than in the previous year, with both Chile and Guatemala increasing their inspections nearly threefold, although the quality of these inspections may vary. Another achievement was the provision of specialized training for law enforcement agencies to better address the worst forms of child labor. Sixteen of the 29 Latin American and Caribbean countries included in this report provided specialized training on child labor to labor inspectors in 2013, and 15 of 29 countries provided specialized training on child trafficking in 2013.

While these gains indicate progress toward the elimination of child labor, there are still systemic impediments to improvement. The increased resources that governments allocated toward labor law enforcement in 2013 were in response to an urgent need: over half of the Latin American and Caribbean countries covered in this report (15 out of 29 countries) had labor law enforcement agencies that devote insufficient resources or staff to child labor, and many other countries did not release enough publicly available information to determine the level of resources available to these agencies. In addition, nine countries have not enacted lists of hazardous occupations prohibited for children, including Argentina, Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Haiti, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, and Venezuela. In some countries, children turn to work because they face great barriers to receiving an education. For example, Brazilian, Colombian, and Haitian children cannot access primary or secondary schools in certain areas; Salvadoran children face gang violence in schools; Belizean children face school fees; and children in the Dominican Republic without required student identity documents have limited educational opportunities, which increases their vulnerability to labor exploitation.

Although governments expanded social protection programs that directly benefit child laborers and at-risk children, there are gaps in monitoring and evaluating such programs. Research showed that 23 of 29 countries had not evaluated the impact of social protection programs and policies on child labor and school attendance. Another frequent challenge was coordination among agencies at national and sub-national levels in implementing these programs or policies, with 13 countries found to have insufficient coordination mechanisms in place. Social programs may also be weak in targeting resources to the most vulnerable children. Thirteen countries in the region were found to have insufficient programs addressing the region's most common occupation for children: hazardous work in agriculture—work often undertaken by indigenous and afro-descendant children, particularly boys. Similarly, seven countries were found to have insufficient programs to address child domestic service, in which girls predominate. There were also insufficient efforts to address the use of children in illicit activities, including using children in gangs, particularly in border areas where children may be highly vulnerable to trafficking and labor exploitation by criminal elements.

2.2.4 Middle East and North Africa

2013 Regional Outlook: Middle-East and North Africa

Meaningful efforts:

- Strengthened legal and policy frameworks to reduce the worst forms of child labor and trafficking in persons.
- Expansion of social programs to address the root causes of child labor.

Challenges or existing gaps:

- Lack of adequate legal protections for children in hazardous labor.
- Lack of or weak intra-governmental coordination.
- Lack of research or current data on child labor.

In the Middle East and North Africa, 9.2 million children are engaged in child labor, which comprises 8 percent of all children in the region.⁽²³⁾ Tunisia became the first country in this region to receive an assessment of Significant Advancement for making several meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

In certain areas of the region, girls are more vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation through the traditional institution of temporary marriages. In Morocco, thousands of girls have left their family homes to work in larger cities as child domestic workers. In Lebanon and Tunisia, girls may have been forced into domestic service as a result of being trafficked from foreign countries. Children in Iraq, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and Yemen continue to be used by armed groups as child soldiers.^(31, 32) The ongoing conflict in Syria has caused more than two million Syrians, including many women and children, to seek refuge in neighboring countries in the region, including Jordan, Lebanon, and Iraq. Many of these children have ended up in situations of labor exploitation, working long hours in the informal and agricultural sectors.

Despite political instability, governments in the region made gains in addressing the worst forms of child labor through their adoption of legal and policy frameworks, including in basic education, and expansion of social programs. Tunisia and Egypt adopted new constitutions, significantly enhancing protections for children. Iraq and Yemen both made efforts against trafficking in persons by establishing new and improved anti-trafficking policies. In the West Bank and the Gaza Strip,³ the Palestinian Authority established a National Committee on Child Labor. Some countries updated policies to expand education to children. Lebanon, Jordan, and Iraq worked closely with international agencies to meet the education needs of Syrian refugee children. Morocco changed its policies to extend access to education to migrant children and Iraq established new standards in education to reduce school drop-outs. With the support of the European Union, Egypt initiated a $123 million Socio-Economic Development and Civil Society Support Program that included an $81.5 million component to combat child labor.

However, the region's economic and political instability, including a lack of decent employment opportunities for youth and adults, have made children more vulnerable to child labor, particularly in agriculture, and to the worst forms of child labor as a result of trafficking. Countries in the region still lack sufficient legal protections for children, particularly those engaged in hazardous labor, and lack or have weak intra-governmental coordination mechanisms to combat child labor. In addition, there is insufficient current research and data on child labor to inform governments' policies and programs. Jordan and Lebanon's laws do not sufficiently protect children working in the informal sectors, especially in street work. Morocco's parliament continues to stall on passing legislation to protect child domestic workers, and domestic workers are not sufficiently protected in Egypt. Morocco and the West Bank and the Gaza Strip lack the legal framework to protect children from human trafficking. Algeria and Oman have not yet established a list of hazardous work prohibited to children. In addition, countries like Bahrain and Oman have yet to put in place coordinating mechanisms to address child labor. Finally, countries such as Bahrain, Oman, Tunisia, and Algeria lack accurate, up-to-date data on the nature and prevalence of child labor. Lack of current data, along with the continued regional instability, impedes governments' abilities to sufficiently promote and effectively implement child labor elimination efforts.

2.2.5 Sub-Saharan Africa

2013 Regional Outlook: Sub-Saharan Africa

Meaningful efforts:

- Improved legal and policy frameworks.
- Improved availability of data on the worst forms of child labor.
- Establishment and continued implementation of conditional cash transfer programs.

Challenges and existing gaps:

- Limited adoption of hazardous work lists across the region.
- Significant barriers to access education, including costs, limited numbers of schools, and lack of universal birth registrations.
- Limited or weak labor inspection systems.
- Insufficient social programs to address child labor.
- Continued use of children in armed conflict.

As a region, sub-Saharan Africa is home to 30 percent of the world's child laborers and has the largest number of children working in hazardous conditions. An estimated 59 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor, or 21.4 percent of all children in the region.⁽³³⁾ During the year, Côte d'Ivoire, South Africa, and Uganda received an assessment of Significant Advancement for making several meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

During 2013, governments in sub-Saharan Africa made notable efforts to improve legal and policy frameworks related to child labor, increase the availability of data on the worst forms of child labor, and establish and continue implementation of cash transfer programs. However, children in the region continue to engage in dangerous forms of agriculture and domestic service. More needs to be done to prevent and eliminate child labor in sub-Saharan Africa, including by reducing barriers to education, improving legislation and enforcement, and implementing social programs.

During the year, legal frameworks were strengthened in several countries, including in Somalia through ratification of ILO C. 182, in Cameroon and Zimbabwe with ratification of the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict, and in Zimbabwe through ratification of the Palermo Protocol. In addition, Angola amended the Penal Code to criminalize trafficking in persons; South Africa amended the Basic Conditions of Employment Act to include protections for children working without a contract; Nigeria's Kano State prohibited children begging on the street; Uganda prohibited child pornography; and the Democratic of the Republic of the Congo issued two directives that provide protections to children affected by armed conflict. Additionally, four sub-Saharan governments launched or expanded efforts to improve access to basic education. The Government of Malawi made education compulsory; Namibia eliminated the requirement that parents contribute to primary school development funds; Swaziland extended free education through grade five; and Zambia eliminated examination fees for grades seven and nine.

Several governments also adopted or updated lists of hazardous work prohibited for children. These governments include Burundi, Sao Tome and Principe, Tanzania, and Madagascar. To strengthen enforcement of child labor laws, seven governments—in Nigeria, Djibouti, Côte d'Ivoire, Tanzania, Swaziland, Zambia, and Namibia—increased their number of labor inspectors. The Government of Ethiopia also developed a labor inspection guide, which includes child labor issues.

In 2013, the Governments of Liberia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Republic of Congo, Sierra Leone, Burundi, Togo, and Uganda took the important step of conducting child labor research and releasing child labor data. In addition, Nigeria, Rwanda, and Mozambique adopted national action plans to prevent and eliminate child labor, and the Government of Côte d'Ivoire provided partial funding for its national action plan. During the reporting period, Governments in Comoros, Mauritania and Liberia also established new national committees to coordinate efforts to eliminate child labor and the Government of Malawi held its first ever Child Labor National Steering Committee meeting.

To help combat poverty and increase school enrollment, some countries implemented cash-transfer programs for children. During the year, Lesotho fully funded its Children's Grants Program; Gambia continued to operate a conditional cash transfer program that provides services to more than 1,000 children rescued from forced begging; and Senegal launched a new conditional cash transfer program that requires beneficiaries to keep their children in school. In addition, a study on the Tanzania Social Action Fund Conditional Cash Transfer Program reported an increase in child school enrollment and a reduction in forced child migration and child labor. Other notable cash transfer programs include Kenya's National Safety Net Program for Results, Ghana's Livelihood Empowerment against Poverty, Nigeria's National Poverty Eradication Program, South Africa's Child Support Grants and the Old Age Pension, and Mauritius' Social Aid and Income Support Programs.

Many countries in sub-Saharan Africa are making progress monitoring child labor and promoting efforts to address child labor at the local level. For instance, Malawi, Côte d'Ivoire, and Ghana operated child labor monitoring systems that enable communities to monitor, report on, and coordinate services for children in exploitative labor. At the local level, the Sodo town administration in Ethiopia enacted a directive that requires community members to report instances of child labor to the ward administration and includes small fines for those found using child laborers.

Despite the gains made in addressing child labor during the year, there is still an urgent need for governments to improve child labor legal frameworks and enforcement of existing child labor laws. Twelve countries have not yet ratified the Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict; seven countries have not yet ratified the Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography; and eight countries have not yet ratified the Palermo Protocol. Additionally, over a third of countries in sub-Saharan Africa still do not have hazardous work lists, and in many countries, labor laws do not cover all the sectors where children work.

Although there has been some progress in improving school enrollment, more needs to be done in the region to remove barriers to basic education. For instance, eight countries lack a compulsory education age, four of which are in Southern Africa. Sixteen countries also have compulsory education ages below the minimum age for employment. Many children are at risk of entering the workforce at a young age due to school fees and related costs, the limited number of schools, and physical and sexual violence in schools, especially in West Africa. In addition, in many countries in sub-Saharan Africa, children are not registered at birth and therefore do not have birth certificates. The lack of birth registration may be a barrier to enroll in school, graduate, or access social services for children if governments require birth certificates.

In 2013, only half of the region's labor law enforcement agencies, and approximately three-fourths of its criminal law enforcement agencies, took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. Most countries' enforcement bodies did not collect statistics on child labor and lacked resources and personnel, impeding efforts to identify and sanction child labor violations. In addition, although nearly three-fourths of countries in sub-Saharan Africa have established monitoring and coordinating mechanisms to manage government-wide efforts to combat child labor, less than half of these mechanisms took action in 2013.

Only a third of countries in Central Africa have national policies or action plans to address child labor, and national social protection policies and programs exist in only half of the countries in the region. Without social safety nets, vulnerable families may continue to rely on child labor to cope with the effects of poverty and economic shocks. In addition, although many countries in sub-Saharan Africa have developed social programs to address the worst forms of child labor, none of them is sufficient to address the child labor problem.

The Democratic Republic of the Congo and Eritrea received an assessment of No Advancement as a result of government complicity in forced child labor. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, some elements of the Congolese National Army continued to abduct and forcibly recruit children for use in armed conflict and for labor and sexual exploitation. The Government of Eritrea required children to participate in a national program called Maetot, under which some children in grades nine through eleven engaged in agricultural, environmental, or hygiene-related public works projects for varying amounts of time during their annual summer holidays from school.

Children remain in Government armed forces in Somalia, and Government armed forces of South Sudan recruited and used children in combat. Rwanda and Mali also provided support to armed groups that used and recruited children for armed conflict. In the case of Rwanda, some children were forcibly recruited.

Although many countries in sub-Saharan Africa have implemented some of the suggested actions for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor from USDOL's report last year, there is still much to be done. There is a pressing need for governments to increase their efforts to effectively protect children from exploitation by establishing social protection policies and programs, ceasing the use of children in armed conflict, and making improvements in legislation, access to education, and enforcement of child labor laws.

2.3 CONCLUSION: REDUCING INEQUALITY AND ADVANCING OPPORTUNITY FOR CHILDREN

Every year since 2002, the ILO, and others who have committed to ending child labor, observe June 12 as a day of action to remind the world that child labor remains a serious problem. This year's World Day Against Child Labor was the first to highlight social protection as a tool for action: "Extend Social Protection. Combat Child Labor." Previous World Day events have shined a light on the sectors and conditions in which children work.

Making social protection the focus of World Day was meant to emphasize the importance of ILO Recommendation 202 Concerning National Floors of Social Protection and complement the ILO's recently released "World Social Protection Report 2014/15: Building economic recovery, inclusive development and social justice." At the center of both the the Recommendation and Report is an express call for government action, based on the fundamental understanding that children are in large part driven into the worst forms of child labor as a result of poverty and related economic shocks.(34-36)

Without social safety nets to help respond to such economic hardship, families that do not have sufficient means to meet their daily needs for survival and households that face unexpected, sudden losses of income, including due to death or illness in the family, droughts that yield higher food prices, or natural disasters, are more likely to resort to child labor.(37) The new ILO Report concludes that social protection programs, such as cash and in-kind transfers, housing assistance, food and nutrition initiatives, health and maternity benefits, public employment programs, disability and unemployment protection, and income security in old age, are important in alleviating economic vulnerabilities, reducing inequality, and breaking the cycle of poverty, all of which make children more vulnerable to child labor.(34)

The new ILO Report finds, however, that social protection coverage for more than 70 percent of the world's population is not adequate. In particular, in low-income countries with large populations, social protection schemes are insufficient to meet the needs of children and families; when child and family benefit programs do exist, only small groups of the population are covered. Governments, in general, are contracting public expenditures for social protections.(34) The ILO Report strongly asserts that, with significant reductions in number of child laborers over the past decade, the ultimate goal of elimination of child labor, and much work yet to be done to reach that goal, now is not the time to shrink investments in social protection.(34)

The promise of advancing opportunity for all must be matched with concrete commitments to give children the best environment to prosper. As the new ILO Report helps document, when children are given a better life, economies grow and nations prosper; robust social protection is thus a strategic investment in the present that helps create opportunities for a brighter future.(34)

Part 3 The U.S. Experience

The experience of USDOL teaches us in the United States that preventing exploitation of children in the worst forms of child labor requires ongoing effort and vigilance. USDOL is the sole federal agency that monitors child labor and enforces child labor laws. The most sweeping federal law that restricts the employment of child workers is the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), enforced by USDOL's Wage and Hour Division (WHD). In addition, the Occupational Safety and Health Act and related regulations, enforced by USDOL's Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), apply to all employees regardless of age. WHD and OSHA have an active referral process in place for cases involving children under age 18, and the enforcement staffs of the respective agencies have worked collaboratively on a number of investigations.

The FLSA sets a minimum age of 14 for most employment in non-hazardous, non-agricultural industries, but it limits the times of day and the number of hours that 14 and 15-year-olds may work and the tasks that they may perform. The FLSA establishes an 18-year minimum age for nonagricultural occupations that the Secretary of Labor declares to be particularly hazardous or detrimental to children's health or well-being. There are currently 17 Hazardous Occupation Orders (HOs), which include a partial or total ban on work for minors in the occupations or industries they cover. Despite these restrictions and limitations, in 2012, there were 10 fatal occupational injuries among children ages 16-17, and 19 fatal occupational injuries among children below age 16 in the United States.⁽³⁸⁾

WHD is committed to ensuring that the FLSA is strictly enforced. Every investigation carried out by WHD investigators includes looking for violations of the FLSA's child labor provisions. Complaints from the public about child labor, although not numerous, are given the highest priority within the agency. In Fiscal Year 2013, WHD concluded 704 cases where child labor violations were found. In 276 cases, violations of Hazardous Occupations orders were found, with 520 minors employed in violation of the HOs.

Children are permitted under the FLSA to work at a younger age in agriculture than in other sectors. For example, the FLSA allows child farm workers ages 14 and 15 and all children working on farms owned or operated by their parents, regardless of their age, to perform farm work.

Non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the ILO Committee of Experts have expressed concern about U.S. law on agricultural occupations permissible for children. In particular, a 2014 report from the NGO Human Rights Watch documents the exposure of children working in the U.S. tobacco industry to nicotine, toxic pesticides, and other dangers.⁽³⁹⁾

In the last three years, WHD has concluded over 250 cases involving tobacco growers, resulting in more than $380,000 in back wages for over 500 workers, and assessed $575,852 in civil money penalties. WHD found violations of labor laws in over 70 percent of these investigations. In every one of the investigations, WHD looked for child labor violations. In addition, to maximize the likelihood of finding child labor violations, investigations are generally conducted during the suckering and harvesting portion of the tobacco season, when minors are more likely to be present.

WHD conducts extensive outreach and education to worker and employer organizations in agriculture. At the national level, WHD works with organizations such as Farm Worker Justice and the National Center for Farm Worker Health. In North Carolina, WHD regularly communicates with employee organizations, such as the Farm Labor Organizing Committee, Telemon, Inc. (a U.S. Department of Labor National Farmworker Jobs Program grantee) and Western North Carolina Worker Center, to hear concerns and train staff so that they can provide effective referrals to WHD. In addition, WHD works closely with the Mexican Consulate in Raleigh to reach farm workers.

Based on feedback from the stakeholder community, WHD has developed new materials in English and Spanish to help agricultural employers and workers better understand their responsibilities and rights. A new video and a new booklet for employers provide simple and comprehensive information on the laws and requirements governing agricultural employment, covering topics including wages, housing, transportation and field sanitation.^(40, 41) WHD is also releasing a revised pocket card for agricultural workers that informs them of their rights and provides information on how to file a complaint with WHD if they believe these rights have been violated.⁽⁴²⁾

WHD is also reaching out to agricultural growers so that they understand their responsibilities and obligations under the law. For example, in the last year alone, WHD reached over 2,000 tobacco growers through outreach events. WHD has participated in several meetings of the Farm Labor Practices Group (FLPG), which brings together key stakeholders from industry (including farmers/growers, manufacturers and others who sell agricultural products to consumers), government and non-governmental organizations to engage in constructive dialogue about farm labor practices in North Carolina.

Through WHD's affiliation with the FLPG, WHD has developed relationships with members of the tobacco industry. Those relationships helped to secure an agreement with Phillip Morris International to independently distribute WHD's agriculture-related compliance assistance/outreach materials to all of their contracted tobacco growers in North Carolina, Kentucky, Virginia, South Carolina and Tennessee. Philip Morris International is scheduled to provide this information to their growers during their farm visits in the tobacco off-season.

In addition to WHD's outreach efforts in the agricultural sector, the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) produces Are You a Teen Worker? (available at <http://www.cdc.gov/niosh/docs/2012-130/pdfs/2012-130.pdf>) to educate children and young workers about their rights and other resources on child and young worker safety and health for a variety of audiences. (See <http://www.cdc.gov/niosh/topics/youth/>.) For example, NIOSH, in partnership with the National Children's Center for Rural and Agricultural Health and Safety, developed the North American Guidelines for Children's Agricultural Tasks (NAGCAT). The NAGCAT provides information on children's physical, mental, and psychosocial abilities in relation to the requirements of specific types of farm work and has been effective in reducing child agricultural injuries.⁽⁴³⁾ In addition, the Department of Education's Migrant Education Program works to ensure that migrant children who move from one state to another are not penalized by disparities among states in curriculum, graduation requirements, state academic content, or student academic achievement standards. The program provides services to migrant children such as remedial and compensatory instruction, bilingual and multicultural instruction, vocational instruction, career education services, counseling, testing, health services and preschool care.⁽⁴⁴⁾

Beyond agriculture, WHD's YouthRules! Website is an online child labor information portal targeting all teenaged workers with enhanced navigation, multimedia content, social media linkages, and a new "Young Worker Toolkit" of teen-friendly resources. The site has been reorganized to make useful information, like the hours teens can work and the jobs they can hold, easier to find. The site maintains links to compliance assistance materials for employers, parents, and educators. It also has links to important worker resources, including information on filing legal complaints, federal and state child labor laws, federal and state labor offices, and links to other USDOL and government-wide sites with information for children and young workers. A WHD toll-free helpline is also available (866-4US-WAGE or 487-9243) to provide information about child labor laws.

4.1 Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions

Approximately 120 country profiles in this report include a statistical table (Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education) with data on the percent of working children, school attendance rate, percent of children who combine school and work, and/or primary completion rate. For a smaller set of profiles, the percent of children who work by sector is provided in a chart in each profile.

This section provides definitions and describes the sources for these data. This section also discusses some of the strengths and weaknesses of these data. While in a few cases more current sources of data may be available than those used here, the report uses the most reliable, standardized sources available to date to allow for cross-country comparisons. Because reliable child labor surveys are not available for many countries, USDOL uses statistics in some cases that are more than 10 years old (data from 2000) as of the writing of this report. In the event that data did not exist from the sources described below, no other reliable and publicly available source of data exists for a country, or data exists but had not been analyzed to allow for cross-country comparisons, the report concludes that the statistics are "unavailable."

Working Children (Children in Employment)

Many of the statistical tables in the country profiles in this report present data on the percentage and number of children in employment (working children) in the country in question. Data presented in the current report may differ from data that were presented in previous reports because more updated data have become available.

Definition

Children in employment or working children are those engaged in any economic activity for at least one hour during the reference period. Economic activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production (principally the production of goods and services for own use). The work children perform may be in the formal or informal economy, inside or outside family settings, for pay or profit. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child's own household for an employer (paid or unpaid). This definition is in accordance with the Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labour (Resolution II) adopted by the 18th International Conference of Labour Statisticians (ICLS) in 2008 and the report, Marking Progress against Child Labour, published by the ILO in 2013.(23, 45)

Children in Employment versus Child Labor

This report presents statistics on working children rather than children involved in child labor. The definition of working children does not vary among countries. For this reason, statistics on working children are comparable across countries. In contrast, child labor statistics are based on national legislation, including, for example, the minimum age for work. The minimum age for work and other child labor standards vary from country to country. For that reason, child labor data are not comparable across countries.

Data Sources and Limitations

Data are from UCW project analysis of primarily four survey types: (1) ILO's SIMPOC surveys; (2) UNICEF's Multiple Indicator Cluster Surveys (MICS); (3) World Bank-sponsored surveys, including Living Standards Measurement Surveys (LSMS), Priority Surveys, and others; and (4) other types of survey instruments including Labor Force Surveys (LFS) and Demographic and Health Surveys (DHS).(46, 47) The first three survey programs are commonly recognized as being the primary sources for data on children's work and child labor and, therefore, generally received priority over all other available data sources.(48)

According to UCW researchers, typical surveys on children's work do not collect enough detailed information on children's activities to accurately measure economic activity.(49) This sentiment was echoed in December 2008 at the 18th ILO International Conference of Labor Statisticians. A resolution was adopted at the conference that provides guidelines for governments on collecting child labor data. Specifically, the guidance indicates that countries may choose to use a broad framework to measure children's work and child labor that encompasses unpaid household services or that countries may use a narrower definition of children's work that excludes such services, as long as the definition used is clearly specified.(50) This resolution is contributing to the collection of more comparable data on children's involvement in non-market activities.

In analyzing the data from the above-mentioned surveys, UCW attempted to apply a standard definition of children's work. Although UNICEF MICS and ILO SIMPOC reports, for example, each use a different definition of work (as of the writing of this report, MICS survey reports include household chores in their definition of work, while SIMPOC reports do not.), to the extent possible UCW applied a common definition of work to the micro-data described. To date, this has resulted in the individual analysis of more than 105 data sets. While every attempt was made to present a standardized child work statistic, there are differences across surveys that have the potential to affect the comparability of statistics across countries. Some of these differences are explained in greater detail here but in general include differing age groups, questionnaire content and wording, purpose of the survey, sample design, non-sampling errors, and year of data collection.

In general, data are presented for children ages 5-14, but some of the profiles present a work statistic for children ages 6-14, 7-14, or 10-14, depending on the age categories used in the original survey. The wording of work-related questions may also impact results. For example, the question on work in these surveys usually refers to work in the past 7 days; however, some surveys may refer to work activities in the past 12 months and are therefore likely to capture a higher proportion of working children than surveys with 7 day timeframes. The purpose of the survey—whether the survey is designed specifically to measure children's work and child labor (SIMPOC surveys) or to measure the impact of poverty reduction programs (World Bank's LSMS)—may affect estimates of children's work. In addition, sample design may impact survey results. For example, children's work is often geographically clustered, and SIMPOC surveys are designed to capture children's work in such geographic areas. As a result, estimates of working children based on SIMPOC data are typically higher when compared to estimates based on LSMS surveys, which do not use the same sample design.(51) The ILO and UCW continue to investigate the effects of these survey differences on estimates of children's work.

As noted, some country profiles also include the sector in which children reportedly work. For some surveys, sector of work was not reported by the entire sample of working children. Therefore, the distribution of children working by sector (i.e., agriculture, industry, and services) represents children with non-missing data for sector of work. For more information on the sectors of work reported in the chart, see section 1.5.2.2 of the Introduction.

Percent of Children Attending School

The percentage of children attending school is the share of all children within a specified age group that reported attending school. The UCW project data described above in the section "Working Children" are used to develop country-specific school attendance statistics. To be consistent with estimates of child work, the age group for which attendance statistics are calculated for children is generally ages 5-14 years. In some cases, however, different age categories are used, usually ranging from ages 6-14 years or 7-14 years.

Percent of Children Combining School and Work

The percentage of children who combine school and work is the share of all children within a specified age group reporting both working and attending school. The UCW project data described above in the section “Working Children” are used to develop country-specific statistics on children combining school and work. The age group for which these statistics are calculated is usually for children ages 7-14 years.

Primary Completion Rate

This report uses the “gross intake ratio in the last grade of primary” as a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades.

Unlike the other statistics presented in the country data tables, which are all based on UCW analysis as described above, the primary completion rate data is from the UNESCO Institute for Statistics. The data were downloaded on February 10, 2014, and are available at: <http://www.uis.unesco.org/Pages/default.aspx?SPSLanguage=EN>. For more information on this statistic, please see the UNESCO Institute for Statistics Glossary at <http://glossary.uis.unesco.org/glossary/en/home>.

4.2 Glossary of Terms

Basic Education

Basic education comprises both formal schooling (primary and sometimes lower secondary), as well as a wide variety of non-formal and informal public and private educational activities offered to meet the defined basic learning needs of groups of people of all ages.

Bonded Labor

Bonded labor or debt bondage is “the status or condition arising from a pledge by a debtor of his personal services or those of a person under his control as security for a debt if the value of those services as reasonably assessed is not applied towards the liquidation of the debt or the length and nature of those services are not respectively limited and defined,” as defined in the UN Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956).

Bonded labor typically occurs when a person who needs a loan and has no security to offer pledges his/her labor, or that of someone under his/her control, as a security for a loan. In some cases, the interest on the loan may be so high that it cannot be paid. In others, it may be deemed that the bonded individual’s work repays the interest on the loan but not the principal. Thus, the loan is inherited and perpetuated, and becomes an inter-generational debt.

Bonded labor is identified as one of the worst forms of child labor in ILO C. 182.

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor

For the purposes of this report, categorical worst forms of child labor refers to child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182. This category does not include the worst forms of child labor as defined under Article 3(d). See “ILO Convention 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor.”

Child Domestic Worker

Child domestic workers or domestics are children who work in third party private households under an employment relationship. Child domestic workers engage in a variety of tasks, including cleaning, cooking, gardening, collecting water, and caring for children and the elderly. Child domestic workers sometimes have live-in arrangements, whereby they live in their employer's household and work in exchange for room, board, and sometimes education. Child domestic workers are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including sexual, physical, and verbal abuse, in large part because they often depend on their employers for basic needs and work in locations hidden from public view.

Child Labor

Children in child labor are a subset of children in employment. It includes employment below the minimum age as established in national legislation (excluding permissible light work) and the worst forms of child labor, including hazardous unpaid household services. Child labor is thus a narrower concept than children in employment, as child labor excludes children who work only a few hours a week in permitted light work and those who are above the minimum age who engage in work not classified as a worst form of child labor.

Child Labor Elimination Projects

Since 1995, DOL has funded 278 projects in 94 countries. ILAB currently oversees over $225 million of active programming to combat exploitative child labor. To date, DOL-funded child labor elimination projects have rescued approximately 1.7 million children from exploitative child labor.

Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children

Based on the 1996 Declaration and Agenda for Action of the First World Congress against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC) is defined as “sexual abuse by the adult and remuneration in cash or kind to the child or third person or persons.” The remuneration dynamic distinguishes CSEC from the sexual abuse of a child where commercial gain is absent, although sexual exploitation is also abuse. CSEC includes—

- Prostitution in the streets or indoors, in such places as brothels, discotheques, massage parlors, bars, hotels, and restaurants, among others;
- Child sex tourism;
- The production, promotion, and distribution of pornography involving children;
- The use of children in sex shows (public or private).

ILO C. 182 prohibits the sale and trafficking of children and the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.

Compulsory Education

Compulsory education refers to the number of years or the age span during which children and youth are legally obliged to attend school.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Convention on the Rights of the Child spells out basic rights of children, such as the right to survival; to develop to the fullest; to protection from harmful influences, abuse, and exploitation; and to participate fully in family, cultural, and social life. The Convention protects children's rights by setting standards in health care, education and legal, civil, and social services. According to Article 32 of the Convention, children have the right "to be protected from economic exploitation and from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child's education, or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral, or social development."

Education for All

In 1990, delegates from more than 155 countries convened in Jomtien, Thailand, to create strategies for addressing the issues of education, literacy, and poverty reduction. Using the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a basis for their work, participants established a set of goals to provide all children, especially girls, with the right to an education and to improve adult literacy around the world. The result was the World Declaration on Education for All (EFA). This declaration called for countries, by the end of the decade, to meet the basic learning needs of all children and adults, provide universal access to education for all, create equity in education for women and other underserved groups, focus on actual learning acquisition, broaden the types of educational opportunities available to people, and create better learning environments for students.

In April 2000, delegates gathered again for the World Education Forum in Dakar, Senegal. After reviewing the data gathered, it was clear that much more progress would be needed to achieve EFA. These delegates, from 164 countries, adopted the Dakar Framework for Action and renewed and strengthened their commitment to the achievement of quality basic education for all by the year 2015. The World Education Forum adopted six major goals for education to be achieved within 15 years, including the attainment of Universal Primary Education and gender equality, improving literacy and educational quality, and increasing life-skills and early childhood education programs.

Forced Labor

Forced labor is defined in ILO Convention 29 as "all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the said person has not offered himself voluntarily." In practice, it is the enslavement of workers through the threat or use of coercion, and it is primarily found among the most economically vulnerable members of society.

Forced or compulsory labor is identified as one of the worst forms of child labor in ILO Convention 182.

Hazardous Work

Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182 provides a general definition of what is commonly referred to as “hazardous child labor:” “work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.” Under Article 4(1), the work referred to under Article 3(d) is to be determined by the laws, regulations, or competent authority of the country involved, and after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, taking into consideration relevant international standards.

ILO Convention 138: Minimum Age for Admission to Employment

ILO Convention 138 (ILO C. 138) was adopted in 1973 and serves as the principal ILO standard on child labor. Under Article 2(3) of ILO C. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, the minimum age of admission into employment or work in any occupation “shall not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling, and, in any case, shall not be less than fifteen.” Countries whose economy and educational facilities are insufficiently developed may initially specify a minimum legal working age of 14 when ratifying the convention. Additionally, under Article 7(1), “National laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work....” Countries that specify a minimum legal working age of 14 years may permit light work for persons ages 12-14 years.

ILO Convention 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor

ILO Convention 182 (ILO C. 182) was adopted in 1999. It commits ratifying nations to take immediate action to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Under Article 3 of the Convention, the worst forms of child labor comprise—

- (a) All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale and trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, and forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict;
- (b) The use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic purposes;
- (c) The use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs as defined in the relevant international treaties;
- (d) Work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.

Among other actions, ILO C. 182 requires ratifying nations to remove children from abusive child labor and provide them with rehabilitation, social reintegration, and access to free basic education and vocational training; consult with employer and worker organizations to create appropriate mechanisms to monitor implementation of the Convention; take into account the special vulnerability of girls; and provide assistance and/or cooperate with efforts of other members to implement the Convention.

ILO-IPEC: International Program on the Elimination of Child Labor

In 1992, ILO created IPEC to work toward the progressive elimination of child labor by strengthening national capacities to address child labor problems, and by creating a worldwide movement to combat it. Although ILO-IPEC aims to address all forms of child labor, its focus is on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.

Countries participating in ILO-IPEC usually sign a MOU outlining the development and implementation of ILO-IPEC activities and the efforts to be undertaken by governments to progressively eradicate child labor. ILO-IPEC National Program Steering Committees are then established with the participation of governments, industry and labor representatives, and experienced NGOs. ILO-IPEC provides technical assistance to governments, but most of the direct action programs for children are carried out by local NGOs and workers' and employers' organizations. ILO-IPEC activities include awareness raising about child labor problems; capacity building for government agencies and statistical organizations; advice and support for direct action projects to withdraw working children from the workplace; and assistance to governments in drawing up national policies and legislation.

ILO Recommendation 190: Worst Forms of Child Labor

ILO Recommendation 190 (ILO R. 190) supplements the provisions of ILO C. 182 and provides guidance to ratifying countries regarding its implementation. The Recommendation describes populations in need of specific attention regarding the worst forms of child labor, such as girls and children involved in hidden forms of work. It further provides guidelines to assist countries in determining the kinds of hazardous work that should be considered worst forms and thus prohibited to children. Finally, Recommendation 190 provides guidance regarding specific steps countries that have ratified ILO C. 182 should take in order to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as the collection and exchange of data on both the problem and best practices to address it; passage and enforcement of laws that penalize violations with criminal penalties; awareness raising about the problem; establishment of policies against the worst forms of child labor; and international cooperation through technical, legal, and other forms of assistance.

Informal Sector

While the concept of the informal sector was introduced into international usage in the 1970s, it was only in 1993 at the 15th International Conference of Labor Statisticians that an internationally-recognized definition for data collection was established, delineating the informal sector as unincorporated, small and/or unregistered enterprises, and the employees of those enterprises. An enterprise is unincorporated if no complete set of accounts are available that would permit a financial separation of the activities of the enterprise from that of its owner(s), and it produces marketable goods or services. The registration and size criteria are determined according to national circumstances and legislation, which provides a degree of flexibility in identifying the informal sector from country to country. However, all interpretations of this sector share the notion of enterprises whose activities are not covered or are insufficiently covered by law or whose activities are not covered by law in practice, meaning that the relevant law is not applied or enforced. Workers in such enterprises often lack the benefits of regular, stable, and protected employment. Because employers in the informal sector are generally not held accountable for complying with labor protections, including occupational safety measures, children who work in “hazardous” or “ultra-hazardous” informal settings likely face increased risk of injury. In addition, because businesses in the informal sector are not usually included in official statistics, children working in informal sector enterprises may not be counted in labor force activity rates.

Light Work

This report uses the definition of light work as established in ILO C. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment. Under Article 7(1) of the convention, “National laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work which is—(a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received.” Countries that have specified a minimum legal working age of 14 years may permit the employment or work of persons 12 to 14 years of age on light work as defined in Article 7(1).

Minimum Age of Work

The minimum age of work is the age at which a child can enter into work. ILO C. 138 states that the minimum age for admission to employment should not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling and should not be less than 15 years (14 for developing countries).

Non-formal Education

Any organized educational activity outside the established formal school system—whether operating separately or as an important feature of some broader activity—that is intended to serve identifiable learning objectives. Non-formal or transitional education programs can enable former child workers to “catch up” or be “mainstreamed” with their peers who began their schooling at the appropriate age.

Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper

A Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (PRSP) is a document written by the government of a developing country with the participation of civil society to serve as the basis for concessional lending from the World Bank and IMF, as well as debt relief under the World Bank’s Highly Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. A PRSP should measure poverty in the country, identify goals for reducing poverty, and create a spending and policy program for reaching those goals. A PRSP should also ensure that a country’s macroeconomic, structural, and social policies are consistent with the objectives of poverty reduction and social development. A new PRSP must be written every three years in order to continue receiving assistance from International Financial Institutions such as the World Bank.

Primary Education

Primary education, sometimes called elementary education, refers to school usually beginning at 5 or 7 years of age and covering about six years of full-time schooling. In countries with compulsory education laws, primary education generally constitutes the first (and sometimes only) cycle of compulsory education.

Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (Palermo Protocol)

The Palermo Protocol, as the protocol supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime is commonly known, covers trafficking of children, also delineated as a worst form under ILO C. 182, Article 3(a).

Ratification

Ratification is a serious undertaking by a State formally accepting the terms of an international agreement, thereby becoming legally bound to apply it. Other ways of becoming bound to an international agreement include acceptance, approval, accession, signature, or an exchange of notes.

In order to ratify an agreement, a country must, if necessary, adopt new laws and regulations or modify the existing legislation and practice to support the agreement, and formally deposit the instruments of ratification with the appropriate depositary. (In the case of ILO Conventions, ratifications must be registered with the Director-General of the ILO International Labor Office.)

For certain international agreements that require ratification, signing an agreement or enacting an agreement into domestic law by Congress, or a similar state organ, does not mean that the international agreement has been ratified. Signing an international agreement serves as a preliminary endorsement, albeit a formality, as signatories are not bound by the terms of the international agreement or in any way committed to proceed to the final step of ratification. However, a signatory is obliged to refrain from acts which would defeat the object and purpose of the international agreement, unless it makes its intention not to become a party to the international agreement clear. Similarly, appropriate state entities may signal approval of an international agreement, but that is only one of the requisite steps on the path toward official ratification. The final step requires that the instruments of ratification be submitted to the depositary.

In the case of ILO conventions, ILO procedures provide the option to ratify or not ratify a convention, but do not include the option to sign a convention as a preliminary endorsement. Generally, an ILO convention comes into force in a ratifying country 12 months after the government has deposited the requisite instrument of ratification. This grace period provides ILO members time to enact or modify legislation to comply with the convention before it comes into force.

Timebound Program

ILO C. 182 calls for timebound measures to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Timebound Programs were spearheaded by ILO-IPEC and are carried out by governments with support from the UN organization. The programs aim to prevent and eliminate all incidences of the worst forms of child labor in a country within a defined period.

Trafficking of Children

The Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children provides a commonly accepted definition of human trafficking. It states: “(a) ‘trafficking in persons’ shall mean the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring, or receipt of persons, by means of the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability, or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. Exploitation shall include, at a minimum, the exploitation of the prostitution of others or other forms of sexual exploitation, forced labor or services, slavery or practices similar to slavery, servitude or the removal of organs.” It goes on to state: “(c) the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of a child for the purpose of exploitation shall be considered ‘trafficking in persons’ even if this does not involve any of the means set forth in subparagraph (a) of this Article.”

The trafficking of children is identified as a worst form of child labor in ILO C. 182, Article 3(a).

Unpaid Household Services

For the purposes of this report, the term “unpaid household services” by children refers to the domestic and personal services performed by a child within the child’s own household under the following conditions: (a) for long hours; (b) in an unhealthy environment, including equipment or heavy loads; or (c) in dangerous locations.

Working Children (Children in Employment)

Children in employment or working children are those engaged in any economic activity for at least one hour during the reference period. Economic activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production (principally the production of goods and services for own use). The work children perform may be in the formal or informal economy, inside or outside family settings, for pay or profit. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child’s own household for an employer (paid or unpaid). This definition is in accordance with the Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labour (Resolution II) adopted by the 18th International Conference of Labour Statisticians (ICLS) in 2008 and the report, Marking Progress against Child Labour, published by the ILO in 2013.

Part 5 Country Profiles

Harvesting scallions, Mexicali, Mexico

In 2013, Afghanistan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Afghanistan announced the adoption of a list of 29 jobs/working conditions prohibited for children. The National Directorate of Security's (NDS) anti-trafficking in persons/smuggling unit hired 37 new personnel for provincial offices, almost doubling the personnel already in place. The Government's Ministry of Interior (MOI) and Ministry of Defense issued directives to prevent the recruitment and sexual abuse of children by the Afghan National Security Forces (ANSF) and began installing the Afghan Human Resources Information Management System (AHRIMS), which will include information on the age of every member of the ANSF. The Government also began participating in a project to combat child labor in the carpet sector. However, children in Afghanistan continue to engage in child labor, including in agriculture, and the worst forms of child labor in the forced production of bricks. Children also continued to be recruited and used for military purposes by non-state groups, as well as by state groups including the Afghan National Police (ANP) and the Afghan Local Police (ALP). The Government does not have a coordinating mechanism to address child labor, sufficient inspectors to enforce child labor laws, or programs to eliminate child labor in sectors where it is prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Afghanistan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and the worst forms of child labor in the forced production of bricks.(1, 2) Children continue to be recruited and used for military purposes by non-state groups, as well as by state groups.(3)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C 182.

Children are used for military purposes by both state and non-state groups.(1, 3, 23-28) During 2013, the UN verified the use of 97 children in armed conflict from across various regions of the country.(32) In three-fourths of the cases, non-state groups were involved in using children, while in the remaining one-fourth of cases, state groups were involved. Specifically, the UN verified the recruitment and use of 14 children by the ALP, 5 children by the ANP, and 1 child by the Afghan National Army (ANA).(32) The ANP and ALP continued to use children at checkpoints as messengers and tea boys.(3) The UN also verified that two boys recruited by the ALP directly took part in military operations.(33) Non-state-armed groups such as the Haqqani Network, Hezb-i-Islami, Tora Bora Military Front, Jamat Sunat al-Dawa Salafia, and the Taliban use children as soldiers; the Taliban and the Haqqani Network use children as suicide bombers and to plant improvised explosive devices.(1, 3, 11, 23, 34)

Armed groups, including the ANP, as well as other actors, also use children, especially boys, in commercial sexual exploitation, including bacha baazi (boy play). These boys are used as dancers dressed in female clothing and are often sexually exploited.(1, 23)

Afghanistan is a source, transit, and destination country for trafficking in persons. Trafficking within Afghanistan is more prevalent than transnational trafficking.(10) Children are trafficked transnationally to Pakistan, Iran, and Saudi Arabia for commercial sexual exploitation, forced begging, and drug smuggling. Boys are also trafficked to Pakistan for paramilitary training, and to Iran for forced labor in the agriculture and construction sectors.(10, 16) Girls are trafficked internationally to India for commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic service.(16) Girls from other countries are trafficked to Afghanistan for commercial sexual exploitation.(10, 29)

Afghanistan is plagued by insecurity and violence; this has led to grave abuses against children.(35, 36) According to a UN report, 124,354 civilians were displaced in 2013 due to armed conflict.(3) Reports note that children who are living in isolated, conflict-affected areas and others who are internally displaced by conflict are at risk of being recruited into non-state-armed groups. Reports also note that children—particularly girls in conflict areas—have limited access to basic social services like education.(3, 19, 35, 37)

The United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan verified that there were 73 incidents of violence targeting education facilities and personnel during 2013, including attacks on schools, teachers, staff, as well as students during the reporting period. These attacks resulted in the killing of at least 11 children and injuring 46 others.(3) In particular, some girls have been intentionally exposed to contaminated water and poisonous gas in schools in the North.(35) These conditions make it more difficult for children to attend school on a regular basis. The Ministry of Education reported the closure of 539 schools throughout the country, which prevented approximately 115,000 children from attending school.(38)

Research found no available current statistics on children's work and education in Afghanistan.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Afghanistan has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification

	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs translated the Palermo Protocol and submitted it to the Council of Ministers for legal processing. However, the Government has not yet ratified the Protocol.(39)

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

*No conscription or no standing military.

In February 2014, with support from the ILO, the Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, Martyrs and Disabled (MOLSAMD) announced a list of 29 jobs and/or working conditions prohibited to children, including mining, begging, agricultural production and processing of narcotics, working for more than 4 hours in the carpet sector, and bonded labor.(41, 42) The President's Office approved the list and authorized MOLSAMD to enforce its provisions. (46) According to the Labor Code, children between ages 15 and 18 may engage in light work up to 35 hours per week as long as it is not hazardous, but the Code does not specify what tasks are considered light work.

Afghanistan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

(35, 40) The Labor Code also does not ensure that protections apply equally to children working in the formal and informal sectors (40, 47). Furthermore, the Code does not prescribe penalties for child labor violations.(21, 40) The ILO and MOLSAMD have developed a revised version of the Labor Code, which would strengthen worker protection and provide penalties for child labor violations. The new law is currently under review at the Ministry of Justice and will eventually have to be approved by the Council of Ministers and Parliament.(48)

The Constitution prohibits forced labor; however, legislation implementing the forced labor protection has not been enacted. The 2009 Elimination of Violence Against Women Act protects females from forced prostitution but does not explicitly make mention of males.(45) The Penal Code does not appear to protect children comprehensively from commercial sexual exploitation. Although the Penal Code contains a general prohibition on delinquency, this term is undefined in the Code and the scope of the protection in practice is unclear.(49) The Decree of the President of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan Concerning the Enforcement of the Law on Combating Abduction and Human Trafficking/Smuggling specifically prohibits trafficking in persons, both domestically and internationally. The Decree prescribes stronger penalties for trafficking of children and women than trafficking of adult males. However, the Dari language does not distinguish between human trafficking and human smuggling, complicating enforcement and data collection efforts.(10)

The Government of Afghanistan, with support from the ILO, completed a Handbook on Islamic Labor Law Principles and International Labor Standards, including those related to child labor. The Handbook harmonizes Islamic law with international labor standards. Once the Handbook is published, the Government will use it to train labor inspectors.

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Interior (MOI) and Ministry of Defense issued directives to prevent the recruitment and sexual abuse of children by the ANSF.(50)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, Martyrs, and Disabled (MOLSAMD)	Enforce laws related to child labor, including hazardous child labor.(11)
Child Protection Action Network	Refer child labor cases to government agencies such as Ministry of Public Health and Women's Affairs, shelters, and various NGOs.(11)
Ministry of Interior (MOI)	Enforce laws related to forced child labor, child trafficking, and child sexual exploitation.(11, 13)
National Directorate of Security (NDS)	Identify human trafficking victims and refer them to MOI.(39)
Attorney General's Office (AGO)	Investigate and prosecute human trafficking and abduction cases.(39)
Ministry of Women's Affairs (MOWA)	Register abduction and human trafficking cases and provide support to child labor and trafficking victims.(11, 39)
Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission (AIHRC)	Raise awareness on human trafficking through monitoring of cases and advocacy on the issue.(39)

Law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, MOLSAMD employed 20 labor inspectors to cover the country's 34 provinces.(11) The number of labor inspectors is not sufficient to enforce Afghan laws on child labor.(11) Labor inspectors work in an advisory capacity only, and business owners have the right to refuse an inspector's visit.(11) Labor inspectors did not receive training on child labor during the reporting period. Additionally, the Government lacks a mechanism to monitor the informal sector for child labor.(21)

Labor inspectors made 140 general inspections and found 47 children working long hours amid poor conditions in six workplaces. MOLSAMD did not remove children from the workplaces or refer them to relevant social service providers.(11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Interior’s (MOI’s) anti-trafficking in persons/smuggling unit employed 20 officers, but they were not full-time staff and there was frequent turnover.(11) From March to December 2013, the MOI rescued 22 child trafficking victims.(11, 39) The MOI and NGO officials regard the number of officers as insufficient to address the problem.(11, 39) Additionally, there was no budget for field-based investigations during the reporting period, and officers assigned to field-based investigations were often sent to other locations to perform other duties.(10, 11, 21) Therefore it is unclear how the MOI investigates trafficking.(10, 11, 21) During the reporting period, the MOI’s Transnational Criminal Investigative Unit provided training to 20 of its members on trafficking issues. However, government officials and NGOs reported that anti-trafficking training efforts are inadequate.(11)

The MOI usually maintains paper records of criminal investigations, including the number of violations, prosecutions, and convictions and computerized records in Kabul, Balkh, and Herat.(11) However, these records do not specify whether the criminal investigation pertains to an alleged trafficker of adults or of children, and there is no disaggregated information available at the national level.(11)

The Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission (AIHRC) assigned a local controller to monitor the trafficking of children at the Spen Boldak border.(51) From January to September 2013, the NDS anti-trafficking in persons/smuggling unit hired 37 new personnel members for provincial offices, adding to the existing 50 personnel members already in place.(51)From January to September 2013, NDS investigated 731 cases of abduction and human trafficking and arrested 20 human traffickers. There is no information about whether the victims were children.(51) During this same time period, the Attorney General’s Office managed abduction and human trafficking cases against 103 children (88 boys and 15 girls) and the Ministry of Women’s Affairs received referrals for 55 cases of abduction and human trafficking. There is no information about whether any of these referral victims were children.(51)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to combat child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
High Commission for Combating Crimes of Abduction and Human Trafficking/Smuggling	Address trafficking in persons in general, including child trafficking. Composed of various government ministries, NDS, AGO, Afghan Independent Bar Association, and AIHRC.(10, 11, 16, 39)
Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Children and Armed Conflict	Coordinate efforts to eliminate the recruitment and use of child soldiers.(10) Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and monitored by the UN Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict, which is composed of UN and NGO members.(10, 34)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Afghanistan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Development Strategy	Outlines policies to achieve Afghanistan’s Millennium Development Goals. Includes the expansion of access to education, protection of children in conflict’s legal rights, and enhancement of the legal and policy framework for juvenile offenders and children in conflict. Also works to improve access to the formal legal system for women and children.(19, 52)

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Children at Risk (2004)	Creates a framework to support at-risk children and their families with new and existing social services; creates a strategic plan to build the capacity of child-based organizations into broader family- and community-based institutions; and guides donors in contributing toward comprehensive child protection system.(53)
National Strategy for Street Working Children (2010)	Guides and informs MOLSAMD and other relevant ministries, international organizations, and NGOs to provide effective and sustainable interventions like family- and community-based support systems for street children and their families in order to prevent and reduce the number of children working on the streets.(54)
Action Plan for the Prevention of Underage Recruitment	Aims to prevent the recruitment of minors into the ANA and ANP, including the ALP and the NDS.(55-57)
National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons	Creates a timeline for specific actions to be taken by members of the High Commission to address trafficking.(10)
National Education Strategic Plan (2010–2014)*	Establishes five overarching education goals, including providing access to quality education.(58)
National Social Protection Policy*	Sets policies to improve social protections, reform the pension program, and respond to disasters with the goals of supporting economic growth, enhancing security, reducing poverty, and improving social inclusion and equality.(59)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

In 2013, the Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Children and Armed Conflict and the UN Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict developed and agreed to a new Road Map Towards Full Compliance of the Action Plan of Underage Recruitment in the ANSF, which aims to expedite compliance with the Action Plan for the Prevention of Underage Recruitment. The Government of Afghanistan has yet to formally approve the Road Map for implementation.(33, 57)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Afghanistan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Social Protection Program	MOLSAMD program funded by European Commission that combats child labor through the provision of vocational training, family reintegration, schooling, and literacy training.(60, 61)
Project to Prevent Child Labor in Home-Based Carpet Production in Afghanistan†	USDOL-funded, 4-year, $2 million project implemented by GoodWeave. Aims to build market preferences for child labor-free Afghan carpets; contribute to evidence-based knowledge of child labor in the Afghanistan carpet sector; and increase public awareness and engagement on the issue of child labor in the Afghan carpet sector.(12)
Age Verification of new Afghan National Security Force Recruits‡	The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Ministry of Defense, MOI, NDS, with the support of UNICEF, operates Child Protection Units within the Afghan National Security Forces recruitment centers in order to screen out applicants who do not meet the minimum age requirement of 18 years.(23, 62) All recruits undergo an ID check, including a requirement that at least two community elders vouch that a recruit is 18 years old and is eligible to join the ANSF, in an effort to address the use of the fraudulent IDs sometimes presented by minors.(50)
Research on Occupational Safety and Health Hazards of Children in the Brick Kiln Sector	Research study on the occupational safety and health hazards of children in the brick kiln sectors. Completed in 2013, the study is being prepared for publication.(63)
Trafficking Shelters‡	International organization and NGO-operated shelters for trafficking victims that are overseen by MOLSAMD and MOI. Additionally, MOLSAMD registers victims and provides reintegration assistance. (10) From January to September 2013, four shelters provided services to 258 child trafficking victims. During the reporting period, MOLSAMD and MOWA, with support from IOM, agreed to establish a shelter for adults in order to separate children from adults.(39)
Juvenile Rehabilitation and Correction Centers*	Thirty-three government-operated centers that provide services to children in conflict with the law.(19, 48)

Program	Description
Safety Nets and Pensions Support Project*	An MOLSAMD-operated $7.5 million project that provides cash support on a case-by-case basis to poor families with children under the age of 5 years in three provinces and targets highly impoverished families, including children who are at risk of child labor.(11, 64) In 2013, an additional $12.5 million was invested in the project.(11, 64)
Protracted Relief and Recovery Operation*†	WFP-operated project that ensures food security and nutritional status for 3.7 million beneficiaries in 184 food insecure districts. Through this project, people affected by conflict, disaster or economic stress are assisted with food, vouchers, or cash; children receive targeted supplementary feeding; schools are supported to increase enrollment and attendance; and adults are provided with vocational training. During the reporting period, this project was extended by 3 years, with an additional investment of $496 million.(65)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Afghanistan.

In 2013, the ANP took steps under the Action Plan for the Prevention of Underage Recruitment to train 150 new staff members on age assessment procedures, launch an underage recruitment awareness campaign, investigate alleged cases of underage recruitment, and document cases of attempted enlistment by children. The MOI and the Ministry of Defense began installing the AHRIMS, which will include information on the age of every member of the ANSF.(50)

Although some prevention efforts are currently underway, research found no evidence that the Government supports programs to remove or rehabilitate children involved in armed conflict. There is also no evidence of programs designed to eliminate child labor in agriculture and forced child labor in the production of bricks.

Generally, trafficking shelters assist boys under age 16. Research found no evidence of shelters providing services for boys 16 to 18.(16) Reliable information on the number of underage girl trafficking victims being assisted with services is not available.(10, 16)

Albania

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Albania made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government released data from its 2010 National Child Labor Survey. The Government also amended the Criminal Code to criminalize possession of child pornography and increase penalties for other offenses against children. Albania trained labor inspectors, police officers, prosecutors, and judges on trafficking issues; identified through inspections 26 cases of child labor and 11 cases of child trafficking; and prosecuted four child labor cases, with one conviction. In addition, the Government funds and participates in a wide range of social programs aimed at improving social inclusion for marginalized groups, reducing school dropout rates, and supplementing the livelihoods of the most disadvantaged families. However, children in Albania continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in forced begging. The Government relies on NGOs to provide the bulk of services to children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

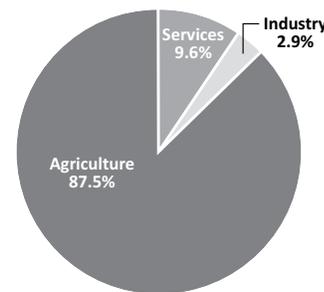

Children in Albania are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in forced begging. (1-6) During the reporting period, the Government supported the release of a National Child Labor Survey that was conducted by the National Institute of Statistics in 2010. The report provides information on the scope of the child labor situation in Albania. (7) Children, some as young as ages 4 and 5, are forced to beg. (5, 6, 8) Data from the National Child Labor Survey indicate that most child laborers work in agricultural. More girls (84.8 percent) than boys (78 percent) work as child laborers in agriculture. (7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Albania. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Albania is primarily a country of origin for children trafficked abroad to Greece, Macedonia, and Kosovo.(14, 16) In addition, children are trafficked within Albania to large cities, tourist sites, border points, and ports. Sources indicate that ethnic minority children from the Roma and Egyptian communities make up the majority of street children and trafficking victims.(2, 17) Traditionally, these communities have suffered from pervasive marginalization and discrimination, which contribute to their acute poverty and difficulty in accessing social services.(14, 18) In addition, marginalized groups such as the Roma often remain outside the Albanian education system due to a lack of civil registration or their families’ inability to forgo the lost income from the child leaving work.(14, 17)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Albania has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In 2013, the Government amended the criminal code to criminalize the possession of child pornography and stiffen punishment for other offenses against children.(4, 24) Children between the ages of 14 and 16 may be employed part-time during school holidays, provided that the employment does not harm their health and development.(3, 19, 25) However, Article 98 of the Labor Code fails to define what constitutes permissible school holiday work, or the number of hours or conditions that would render employment acceptable.(25) In addition, pursuant to exemptions created by Articles 5 and 6, the Labor Code does not cover children who perform “family jobs” or do not have an employment contract. This leaves children engaged in child labor who do not have an employment contract unprotected under the law.(19, 25)

During the reporting period, the Government drafted an amendment to the Labor Code which, if passed, would increase the minimum age for children to be employed during school holidays and in vocational training from 14 to 15. The Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth also drafted a Decisions of the Council of Ministers (DCM) that would require medical monitoring of child employees.(24)

Albania provides 13 years of free education, 9 of which are compulsory; however, the costs of school supplies and classroom resources are prohibitive for many families.(2)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs and Equal Opportunities (MLSA) – State Labor Inspectorate	Enforce labor laws, including child labor laws.(4, 12)
Ministry of Interior’s General Directorate of Police	Enforce all laws, including child labor and child trafficking laws.(4, 26)
Serious Crimes Prosecution Office	Has nationwide jurisdiction to prosecute cases involving trafficking.(4, 26)
Child Rights Units (CRUs)	Monitor the situation of high-risk children and families at the regional level, coordinate protection and referral activities at the local level, and identify and manage individual cases.(3, 4, 27, 28)
Child Protection Units (CPUs)	Identify children in danger at the municipal level and subsequently refer them to a safe environment, as defined by the State Social Services.(4, 12, 23)

Law enforcement agencies in Albania took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the State Labor Inspectorate had 115 inspectors.(24) Approximately 50 labor inspectors were trained on child labor laws and procedures for handling victims of trafficking.(4, 24) According to the Government, the Labor Inspectorate conducted 25 child labor inspections and cited 26 cases of child labor violations. The Government reported 26 children were removed or assisted as a result of the inspections, and no penalties were applied in any of the cases.(4) The law allows labor inspectors to determine whether to apply penalties for certain violations documented. Additionally, lack of funds for adequate office space and transportation, and training compromises the quality of inspections.(4)

Criminal Law Enforcement

During the reporting period, 37 prosecutors, judges, and police officers were trained on trafficking issues, and the State Police referred 11 cases involving the trafficking of children to prosecutors.(29) In 2013, the Government reported prosecuting four cases involving the worst forms of child labor and one conviction.(4) The Government also provided services to 43 children rescued from trafficking.(29) Nationwide, there are approximately 30 police investigators for child rights. However, the Ombudsman of the Albanian Government recommends that each of the approximately 70 police commissariats have several child rights investigators and believes the effectiveness of the CRUs and CPUs is low. (4) In addition, NGOs report inadequate funding for child protection at the regional and local level.(29, 30)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for the Protection of the Rights of Children (NCPRC)	Coordinate the protection of children's rights, including children involved in child labor.(12)
Office of the National Coordinator for the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings (NCAT)	Coordinate all anti-trafficking efforts in Albania, including 12 regional anti-trafficking committees.(26, 28, 29)
National Referral Mechanism (NRM)	Coordinate the identification, protection, referral, and rehabilitation of trafficking victims between government and civil society organizations.(3, 28) Chaired by the NCAT.(29)

In 2013, the NCAT restarted 12 regional anti-trafficking committees. The NCAT also provided training on identifying and providing referral services to victims of trafficking to the 12 regional anti-trafficking committees, government officials, and approximately 245 school teachers.(29) During the reporting period, the NRM met several times. A source indicates that cooperation between government agencies and civil society has increased during the reporting period.(29)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Albania has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Action Plan for Children 2012 to 2015*	Aims to strengthen institutional structures and monitor the implementation of children's rights at national and regional level. Promotes the drafting of policies for the protection and social involvement of children.(3, 24, 30, 31)
Albanian Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 (ARCL)	Outlines a plan to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Albania by 2016.(32) Includes the adoption and implementation of effective legislation and law enforcement to address the worst forms of child labor; the provision of free, quality education for all children; the provision of social protection to families and children in need; and the implementation of labor market policies that promote youth employment and the regulation and formalization of the informal economy.(32)
National Anti-trafficking Strategy 2011 to 2013	Designates responsible agencies and outlines anti-trafficking actions to be taken.(3, 4, 16)
National Strategy for Development and Integration 2007 to 2013 (NSDI)	Calls for enforcing compulsory education and creating vocational training opportunities for vulnerable children as a key strategy to prevent and reduce child labor, including the worst forms of child labor.(3, 4)

Albania

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Social Inclusion 2007 to 2013 (NSSI)*	Seeks to reduce poverty among Albania's vulnerable groups, including children and Roma communities.(33) Promotes an increase in formal labor market participation, the inclusion of policies that involve vulnerable children in education and training, and the formation of modern social protection systems.(12, 33) In 2013, Limited progress was made toward achieving the NSSI's goals, in part due to limited funds, poor coordination, and limited resources and inclusion of local governments.(18)
National Action Plan for the Decade of Roma Inclusion 2005 to 2015*	Strives to improve access to and the quality of social services for Roma communities.(4, 34)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Albania funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
UN Support to Social Inclusion†	UN program, works with several government ministries to improve implementation of social inclusion by developing informed policies and strengthening institutions.(35)
Albania-UN Program of Cooperation*	UN program builds on the piloted One UN Program 2007–2011 and coordinates 19 UN agencies to focus on four thematic areas with the Government and civil society: governance and rule of law, economy and environment, regional and local development, and inclusive social policy. Aims to increase civil society's role in development.(36)
Empowering Vulnerable Local Communities of Albania*	UN-supported program, addressed social exclusion issues in the Roma and Egyptian communities. Strengthened the Government's institutional capacities of employment centers and vocational training centers to increase access to the Roma and Egyptian communities; promoted primary education for Roma and Egyptian children who lack access to early learning.(37)
Zero Dropouts Program*	UNICEF-supported program, worked to reduce school dropout rates among the Roma and Egyptian communities. Program's Second Chance Project worked to reintegrate children who have dropped out of school.(4, 38)
National Emergency Transition Center†‡	NGO-supported Government transition center supports vulnerable, mostly Roma, families, including children at risk of street begging. To receive benefits, families must keep their children enrolled in school.(4)
National Reception Centre for Victims of Trafficking (NRC)‡	Government-funded program, operates a reception center that houses victims of trafficking identified in Albania.(16, 39) In 2013, the Ombudsman reported that the Government's NRC lacked adequate resources to provide reintegration services, including educational and vocational training.(29)
Child Allowance Program (Ndihma Ekonomike)*‡	Government-funded cash transfer program, provides a child allowance for families already benefiting from economic aid through Albania's Law on Social Assistance and Services.(4) Child allowance payments to eligible families are still deemed too low to significantly reduce the number of children living in poverty, and therefore are unlikely to have an impact on reducing child labor.(4)
Decent Work Country Program	ILO technical assistance project detailing the policies, strategies, and results required to realize progress toward the goal of decent work for all. Outcomes include strengthening the effectiveness and quality of labor inspection systems, enhancing the capacity of policy makers to address informal and vulnerable employment of young people, and ensuring that labor laws better adhere to international labor standards, including those on the worst forms of child labor.(40)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Albania.

Civil society organizations, rather than government organizations, generally provide social services for children engaged in the worst forms of child labor. These civil society organizations often lack well-trained staff and coordination with other protection services, especially at the local level.(4, 18, 30, 41)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, Algeria made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government's Intersectoral Commission Relative to the Prevention of and Fight against Child Labor met during the year and the Government continued to participate in a regional project to combat child domestic labor. However, children in Algeria continue to engage in child labor in street work and domestic service. The Government has yet to adopt the child protection law drafted in 2007, which includes a hazardous work list. Algerian law does not clearly establish 18 as the minimum age for hazardous work, and the law does not prohibit the use of children in illicit activities. Algeria does not make data on enforcement efforts publicly available, and programs for working children are limited.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Algeria engage in child labor, including in street work and domestic service.(1-4) The Government collects data on child labor, but does not make such data publicly available.(5) This lack of data makes an understanding of the child labor situation difficult. Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Algeria. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2014.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Activities unknown (3, 4, 8)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (4, 8, 9)
Services	Street work, including vending and collection of plastics (1-4)
	Domestic service (3, 4, 8)
	Work in small shops and mechanics shops* (10, 11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of trafficking* (12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Current evidence suggests that children, primarily sub-Saharan migrants, are trafficked into prostitution in bars and informal brothels in Tamanrasset and Algiers.(12, 13) Large-scale migration occurs at the Algerian border with Mali.(13) Algerian officials have indicated it is difficult to distinguish trafficking victims from regular migrants in this context.(13)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Algeria has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification

	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 15 of the Labor Code, Section 5 of the Commerce Code (14, 15)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No
List of Hazardous Occupations Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Penal Code (16, 17)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Penal Code (18)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 343 and 344 of the Penal Code (8, 17)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	19	Legislation title unknown (19, 20)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	17	Legislation title unknown (19, 20)

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of the Law No. 08-04 of January 27, 2008 (11)

Algeria does not have a clear minimum age for hazardous work or a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to all children.(14, 15) In 2007, the Ministry of Justice announced that it had drafted a child protection law that contained a hazardous work list; however, as of this reporting period, the Parliament has not yet adopted the legislation.(10, 15)

Research found no indication that Algerian law prohibits the use of a child in illegal activities. Moreover, the ILO Committee of Experts has also noted that there is no law in Algeria that prohibits use of a child in the production, sale, and trafficking of illegal drugs.(21)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare's Labor Inspection Directorate	Investigate labor violations, including involving child labor, and issue citations and fines for labor violations. Demand safety and health problems be addressed if workers' health and safety are at risk. (4, 11, 22, 23) Authorized to conduct regular inspections or special visits to investigate general labor conditions or a specific issue.(4, 23, 24)
Ministry of Interior's National and Border Police	Enforce criminal laws relating to child labor violations.(10)
Ministry of Defense's Gendarmerie Police Force	Enforce criminal laws relating to child labor violations. Operate in rural areas.(8, 10)
Ministry of Justice's Office of Criminal Affairs and Amnesty Procedures	Serve as lead agency in enforcement efforts with regard to trafficking in persons.(13)

Research found no evidence that law enforcement agencies took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

There are 27 Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare inspection offices throughout the country. Some cover one wilaya, or governorate, while others cover more than one. According to the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare, the Labor Inspectorate had more than 600 operational inspectors as of February 2014.(4, 11) There are more inspectors in urban than in rural areas, although past reports indicate higher levels of child labor in rural areas.(11, 17) The Government indicated that inspections were carried out during 2013, but has declined to make this information available.(4) In its most recent reporting, the ILO Committee of Experts has emphasized that the number of inspections conducted and the number of child labor violations found in recent years in Algeria is not known.(21)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Although there is only limited evidence to suggest a problem with worst forms of child labor covered by criminal laws in Algeria, the Government has noted it is difficult to determine whether there are trafficking victims in the country.(13) Proactive investigations could serve an important role in shedding light on this issue. The Government of Algeria, however, has not made information publicly available on the number of investigations pertaining to trafficking or other worst forms of child labor covered by criminal laws during 2013.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Intersectoral Commission Relative to the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor	Work to prevent and eliminate child labor.(4) Led by the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare with members from NGOs and the following ministries: Health; Interior; Justice; Youth and Sports; Employment and National Solidarity; Family and the Female Condition; National Education, Training and Professional Teaching; Communication and Culture; as well as Agriculture and Rural Development.(25)
Inter-Ministerial Coordinating Committee on Trafficking	Manage government efforts to address trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Directorate General for Political Affairs and International Security.(4, 13) Members are the Gendarmerie and the National Police as well as the Ministries of Justice; Health; Labor and Social Welfare; and Employment and National Solidarity.(13, 26)

In 2013, both the Intersectoral Commission and the Inter-Ministerial Coordinating Committee met monthly.(11) Although past reports indicate the Intersectoral Commission organized hundreds of open-door seminars on child labor and education programs and strengthened the labor inspection services, research found no evidence of such activities during 2013.(27)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Algeria has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
An Algeria Fit for Children (National Plan of Action for Children 2008–2015)*	Promotes child development and universal access to education.(3, 10, 15)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

As of June 2012, the Government had not met its timetable for reporting on the implementation of the National Plan of Action for Children. Moreover, the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child has raised concerns about insufficient funding and technical capacity to carry it out.(3, 18)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Algeria participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Combating child domestic labor in Africa and in the countries of the Mediterranean Union	$1.3 million, Government of France-funded, 3-year regional project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child domestic labor.(28)
Strengthening the Framework of the Arab Region to Prevent and Combat Human Trafficking	$650,000, EU-funded, 3-year regional project to strengthen the capacity of Algeria and other Arab governments to address human trafficking. Trained judges throughout Algeria on trafficking issues in 2013.(11, 29)

Despite Algeria's participation in regional efforts to combat child labor in domestic service and human trafficking, research found no evidence of other programs specifically targeting sectors in which children work, such as hazardous work in agriculture and construction as well as on the streets.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Algeria (Table 9).

Angola

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Angola made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed a new trafficking in persons (TIP) law protecting all children from commercial sexual exploitation and from being used in illicit activities, and amended the penal code to criminalize TIP crimes. It also carried out the first investigation of a child trafficking case in 4 years and continued to participate in various child protection programs. However, children in Angola continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and mining. The country lacks a specific age for compulsory education, which makes children under age 14 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school and are under the minimum legal age for work. Angola also lacks a mechanism to coordinate efforts to combat child labor, and there is little publicly available information on its efforts to enforce child labor law.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Angola engage in child labor in agriculture and in mining.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Angola.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	25.7 (694,458)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	65.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	22.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		54.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 2, 2001.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Work on tomato plantations,* production of rice* (3, 6-9)
	High-seas fishing,* animal herding* (2, 9, 10)
Industry	Artisanal diamond mining (1-3)
	Construction, brick making,* welding† (3, 8, 10, 11)
Services	Informal market vending, street work, car washing (2, 10, 12-14)
	Working as porters, shining shoes* (9)
	Domestic service (3, 10)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 10, 12, 13)
	Agriculture work as a result of human trafficking (2, 15)
	Domestic service as a result of human trafficking (2, 15)
	Drug trafficking, illicit activities, working as thieves in criminal gangs (8, 12, 16)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The Government has not conducted in-depth research on the worst forms of child labor; however, it collected general information on the prevalence of child labor in its 2008–2009 national well-being survey.(17) Angola has not used findings from this survey to develop any strategies to reduce child labor. There is no publicly available information suggesting that the Government has researched the impact of education policies on the prevalence of child labor.

On the country's streets engage in the commercial sexual exploitation, car washing, and the sale of goods.(2, 3, 10, 12) In Huambo, children work at informal markets lifting loads, cooking, and selling goods such as meat and alcoholic beverages.(14) There are reports that Chinese companies employ children in brick-making factories and in rice production.(6, 8)

To avoid import fees, children are forced to act as couriers in illegal, cross-border trade between Angola and Namibia.(1, 15)

Limited evidence suggests that Angolan children are trafficked to Brazil, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Namibia, South Africa, and to Europe—primarily Portugal—to work in a wide variety of jobs, including those in domestic service and agriculture.(9) Girls as young as 12 years old are trafficked from the Democratic Republic of Congo to Angola.(8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Angola has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12	Law No. 13 of 2001 (26)
Free Public Education	Yes		Law No. 13 of 2001 (26)

During the reporting period, the Government passed a new TIP Law 3/14, which protects all children less than 18 years old from commercial sexual exploitation, prostitution, and from being used in illicit activities.(23)

The Government’s list of hazardous work prohibits activities for minors including fireworks production, stone mining, animal slaughter, leather production, brick-making, paper-making, and pornography.(20, 27) Research did not uncover whether this hazardous work list sets forth all work prohibited to minors, or whether it amends existing prohibitions in the labor code.

In 2013, the Government also amended the penal code to criminalize TIP for sexual or labor purposes. The new law also penalizes employers or labor agents who confiscate workers’ identity documents, switch contracts without the workers’ consent, or withhold payment of salaries.(9) The penalty for sexual or labor trafficking, including acting as an agent of a trafficker, is 8 to 12 years in prison; custodial adults who allow children to engage in trafficking may be subject to 2 to 8 years in prison.(9)

In addition, the Constitution forbids the extradition of Angolan nationals, which may hamper regional efforts to prosecute Angolan nationals involved in international trafficking.(1, 28)

The law establishes that primary education is for 6 years, but does not set a specific start age.(26) The Government reported to the UNESCO Institute of Statistics that education is compulsory until age 12, though it is unclear how this age was determined, as there is no such provision in the law, and research found no official policy statements on the topic.(4) Ending compulsory education age at 12 years leaves children ages 12 to 14 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are under the minimum legal age for work.(22) A lack of school infrastructure and teaching materials deters children from attending school.(16) The Government cites the lack of human resources and schools as the main obstacles to providing education.(29) However, the Government also seeks to educate parents on the importance of education and is increasing the number of schools and teachers in the country.(3)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Ministry of Public Administration, Employment, and Social Security (MAPESS)	Enforce child labor laws and fine businesses that use child labor; cases requiring further investigation must be transferred to the Ministry of Interior and cases involving prosecution must be transferred to the Ministry of Justice.(3, 12, 22) Employ labor inspectors in all 18 provinces to carry out inspections and joint operations with tax authorities and social service providers.(3, 22, 30, 31)
National Children’s Institute (INAC)	Receive complaints related to child labor.(22)
The Courts for Minors	Enforce legislation that protects children from violence, child labor, and prostitution.(32)
Ministry of the Interior and its agencies, including the National Police, Border Police, and Immigration Service	Enforce criminal laws related to trafficking.(33)

Law enforcement agencies in Angola took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, Angola employed 187 labor inspectors; it plans to hire an additional 138 inspectors. In 2013, government agencies charged with the protection of children and families received $1.09 million; however, it is unclear what amount was provided for labor inspections.⁽⁹⁾ Inspectors, especially those outside of Luanda, lack necessary resources and sufficient training to carry out their work. In 2013, MAPESS and the ILO held a joint training for child labor enforcement.⁽⁹⁾ No information is available on how MAPESS conducts its own inspections or joint operations with tax authorities and social service providers.⁽⁹⁾

During the reporting period, MAPESS carried out inspections and fined companies for labor law violations; however no data is available on the number and nature of the inspections.⁽⁹⁾

No information is publically available on how the Courts for Minors enforce child protection legislation, including child labor and child prostitution.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In January 2013, the Angola government carried out the first trafficking investigation in more than 4 years. The case involved 54 children who were trafficked from the province of Huila to work on tomato farms in the southern province of Namibe.⁽⁸⁾ The INAC investigated the case and met with MAPESS and local farming associations.⁽⁸⁾ The 54 child-trafficking victims went to the Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration (MINARS) shelters before returning to their families.⁽⁸⁾

Another case involved teenagers from the province of Huila who were recruited by a Chinese construction company to work in the province of Zaire. The Police Criminal Investigation Unit (DNIC), in collaboration with the provincial arm of the National Institute for Children, rescued the victims and returned them to their families. The recruiter, a Chinese national, was arrested.⁽⁹⁾ In 2013, another group of 10 minors from Huila province were reunited with their families after being trafficked to Namibe province. A criminal investigation has been initiated, but no additional information is available.⁽⁹⁾

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration (MINARS) and the National Children's Institute (INAC)	Coordinate Government policies to protect the rights of children. ^(2, 22)
National Council of Children (CNAC)	Monitor the implementation of government policies to protect the rights of children through MINARS and INAC. Led by MINARS. Includes the INAC and 17 other ministries and civil society organizations. ^(2, 22)

The process for selecting civil society members of the CNAC lacks transparency, and the UN CRC has expressed concern over this.⁽²⁴⁾

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Angola has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
The Eleven Commitments for Angolan Children*	Outlines the main policies for protecting children's rights; goals include protecting children from exploitation and providing education to every child.(34, 35)
National Strategy to Prevent and Mitigate Violence Against Children*	Guides the Government's efforts to address violence against children.(24)
Plan of Action and Intervention against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children (NPAI SCEC)	Aims to protect and defend the rights of child victims of sexual and commercial exploitation, including the rehabilitation and social inclusion of the victims.(36)
Free birth registration and free identification cards*	Provides free birth registration for children under age 5 and free identification cards for children under age 11, thereby promoting their enrollment in school and their access to social services.(24, 37). Research indicates, as found by the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), that a lack of resources limits the Government's free birth registration policy, and there has not been significant progress on increasing birth registration.(24, 38)
The 2005 Angolan Poverty Reduction Strategy*	Serves as the main policy document that guides the Government's antipoverty actions. Supports the Millennium Development Goals and includes as its objectives poverty reduction, democratic governance, crisis prevention, and recovery, environmental protection, and sustainable development.(39)
National Education for All Plan*	Aims to achieve universal primary education by 2015.(2)
Community of Portuguese-Speaking Countries (CPLP)	Includes Angola and other members of the Community of Portuguese-Speaking Countries (Cabo Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, São Tomé and Príncipe). Approved four target areas where these countries will focus efforts to combat child labor: exchange of information and experiences, awareness-raising campaigns, use of statistical methodologies to collect child labor data, and technical cooperation and training.(40-43) During the reporting period, the Government participated in technical meetings with CPLP counterparts, and representatives of Government agencies participated in the child labor conference in Brazil. Angola helped produce and distribute a 30-minute documentary on the child labor situation in CPLP countries. Documentary aired in all five countries.(44)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

During the reporting period, Angola held the VI Annual National Child Forum with the theme “Protected Child, Stronger Nation”.(45)

In the past, education funding has been inadequate, as noted by the CRC and UNICEF.(24, 38)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Angola funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Mobile schools‡	Ministry of Education program that provides education in mobile schools to migrant children who work with their parents in herding cattle.(9) Programs exist in different provinces including Benguela and the diamond-producing provinces of Lunda Norte and Lunda Sul.(9) Some mobile schools also have kitchens, which facilitate in the Government's school meal program.(9, 45) Programs also include clinics in rural areas. In 2013, the first solar energy mobile school was opened in Luanda.(45, 46)
Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE) project	Jointly launched by the European Commission and the ILO to combat child labor through education in 12 African and the Caribbean countries and the Pacific group of states (ACP).(47) Collaborated in the production of a documentary on child labor scheduled to air on major television networks in Portuguese-speaking countries in 2013.(48)
Microcredit project‡	MAPESS program that provides cash assistance so their children are not forced to work.(9)
Free Professional Training‡*	MAPESS program that provides free professional training for youth.(9)

Program	Description
Education, Communications, and Art in Defense of Child and Adolescent Rights (ECOAR): the end of child labor!	ECOAR program for teacher training to help raise awareness of the causes and consequences of child labor. One of the main partners of the program is the National Union of Angolan Workers-Central Trade Union (UNTA-CS), which already trained 40 teachers in different schools in Luanda.(13)
System of Indicators for Angolan Children*‡	Government program, launched in 2008, which tracks the System of Indicators for Angolan Children.(24) The System has not been fully developed due to a lack of resources.(24)
Free meals for children*‡	Government program offering free meals for school children.(3, 22) One such program in Benguela, supported by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, NGOs, and the Government of Angola, is reported to have fed more than 220,000 school children. The Angolan Ministry of Education reports similar programs in the provinces of Lunda Norte and Lunda Sul.(3)
Child Protection Networks*‡	National Children's Institute (INAC) and Government partner with civil society organizations program to assist victims of trafficking through child protection networks at the local level.(22)
Schools for Africa Phase II Program*	UNICEF, the Nelson Mandela Foundation, and the Hamburg Society school program, which seeks to benefit 8 million children in 11 African countries by providing greater access to education. As of 2011, the program had reached more than 2,430,000 children in Angola.(49)
Children's shelters, including for child trafficking victims‡	Ministry of Family and Women's Promotion (MINFAMU) and the Organization of Angolan Women children's shelters. There are 51 children's shelters available for child trafficking victims.(8)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Angola.

During the reporting period, the Government hosted many activities to raise child labor awareness, including seminars, radio debates, and two child labor conferences.(9)

Although Angola has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Research did not identify programs that target children engaged in some of the worst forms of child labor, such as trafficking in agriculture, street work, domestic service, mining, and forced labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Argentina

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Argentina made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government enacted the Child Labor Law, which amends the Penal Code to penalize the economic exploitation of children with 1 to 4 years of prison. The Government also ratified the ILO Convention on Domestic Workers and enacted the Special Code on Contracting Domestic Workers, a law which prohibits children under the age of 16 from domestic work, and prohibits children between the ages of 16 and 18 from residing where they work. In addition, the Government continued to implement its National Plan to Combat Child Labor (2011-2015), and to administer social programs that expand educational opportunities for children. However, children in Argentina continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Argentina has not adopted a list of hazardous occupations that are prohibited to children, and appears to lack programs that target working children in all relevant sectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Argentina are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. (1-8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Argentina.

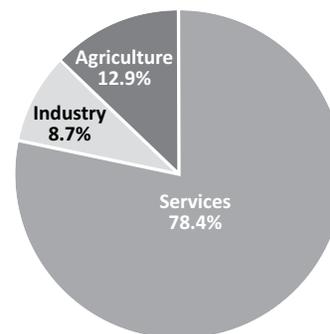

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	11.0 (366,235)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	97.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	12.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		109.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Encuesta sobre Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes Survey, 2004.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6, 7, 29, 30, 35, 36)
	Forced labor in the production of garments (37-39)
	Used in the production of pornography* (5)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children of Bolivian immigrants are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the transportation of goods, as well as in forced child labor in the production of garments.(3, 15, 18, 39) Reports also indicate that Paraguayan children are trafficked to Argentina for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation.(6, 36, 40)

In 2012, the Government of Argentina began incorporating a national child labor survey into the Permanent Survey of Households. However, the survey does not fully encompass rural areas, leaving the prevalence of child labor in agricultural activities unknown.(32, 41) Preliminary results of the 2012 survey, which were released in 2013, indicated a decrease in child labor. However, the full results have not been made publicly available.(32)

II. Legal Framework on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Argentina has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In 2013, the Government ratified ILO Convention 189 Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers. Convention 189 requires signatories to specify a minimum age of employment for domestic workers, as well as ensure that work performed by domestic workers who are under the age of 18 and above the minimum age does not deprive them of compulsory education, or interfere with opportunities to participate in further education or vocational training.(42)

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

During the reporting period, the Government of Argentina enacted the Special Code on Contracting Domestic Workers (26.844). In addition to regulating the employment of domestic workers in private homes generally, this law specifically prohibits children under age 16 from working in the sector.(46, 55) It also prohibits those between the ages of 16 and 18 from doing such work if they have not finished their secondary education, and prohibits them from residing in the homes in which they work.(46) Also during the reporting period, the Government enacted the Child Labor Law (26.847). This addition to Argentina’s Penal Code penalizes the economic exploitation of children with 1 to 4 years of prison.(44, 55)

Argentina has not adopted a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children.(36) Article 9 of the Prohibition of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Work Law (26.390) prohibits children ages 16 to 18 from working between the hours of 8 p.m. and 6 a.m.(43) However, with regard to certain manufacturing jobs, Article 9 authorizes children ages 16 to 18 to work until 10 p.m.(43) This provision may expose children to risks related to night work. Article 2 of Law 26.388 of the Penal Code prohibits the use of children in pornographic shows and in the production, publication, and distribution of child pornography.(51) However, Law 26.388 does not criminalize the possession of child pornography for personal use.(28)

III. Enforcement of Laws on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Law enforcement agencies in Argentina took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS) employed 547 labor inspectors.(67) While some information on specific inspections is publicly available, a comprehensive count of inspections carried out in 2013 is not publicly available.(68) Moreover, comprehensive information on the particular sectors in which these inspections were carried out, as well as on any sanctions imposed as a result of them, is not publicly available. It is not known whether inspectors received training during the reporting period.

Criminal Law Enforcement

While the Ministry of the Public Prosecutor's Anti-Trafficking Division (PROTEX) has published a report on labor trafficking that includes information on investigations and prosecutions, the report does not disaggregate child labor investigations and prosecutions by year, making these numbers for the reporting period unknown.(63)

IV. Coordination of Government Efforts on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Network of Businesses Against Child Labor	Develop initiatives to sensitize stakeholders to issues of child labor and programs to prevent and eradicate child labor. Developed through a partnership between the Ministry of Labor, CONAETI, and the businesses that comprise it.(69, 79)
Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (CDNNyA)	Develop programs and policies on child labor and the sexual exploitation of children for the City of Buenos Aires.(29, 35)

As part of its coordinating and reporting efforts, the Child and Adolescent Labor Monitoring Office (OTIA) reported that, in November 2013, the MTESS met with the Brick Workers Union (UOLRA) to discuss the Union’s efforts to protect adolescent work and eradicate child labor in brick production.(32) The OTIA also reported that, in July 2013, an International Seminar convened various stakeholders to discuss inequalities among children in urban sectors. Participants included the Research Center for Urban Social Policy at the National University of Tres de Febrero, UNICEF, and the Arcor Foundation.(32)

V. Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Argentina has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (2011-2015)	Calls for actions to address child labor and regulate adolescent work, including awareness-raising, inter-institutional collaboration, stronger inspection mechanisms, and programming in rural and urban settings. Implemented by CONAETI and seeks to mainstream child labor issues into labor and health policies.(71, 80, 81)
National Action Plan for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (2012-2015)	Promotes dignity and rights of children and adolescents in Argentina. Objectives include preventing and eliminating child labor, including its worst forms.(82)

MERCOSUR Southern Child Initiative	Aims to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region by raising awareness and seeking coordination among members states regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking and pornography, child labor, and migrant labor; by improving country legal frameworks to harmonize them with international conventions affecting children; and by exchanging best practices.(85)
Regional Plan for Adolescent Work (2011)	Promotes decent work for adolescent workers. Articulated within MERCOSUR’s Strategy for Employment Growth.(83)

In November 2013, the Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms country participants’ commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(86)

VI. Social Programs to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2013, the Government of Argentina funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Universal Child Allowance Program (Asignación Universal)*‡	Government of Argentina program funded in part by the World Bank that provides a monthly cash transfer to unemployed parents and workers in the informal economy contingent upon parents' fulfillment of health and education requirements for their children.(32, 87, 88) Created in 2009 and expanded in 2011 to include pregnant women. Currently covers 3.5 million children under the age of 18.(32)
CONAETI Awareness-Raising Campaigns	CONAETI/Network of Businesses Against Child Labor campaigns that make businesses and the general public aware of child labor in sourcing and supply chains.(79)
Harvest Day Care and Future Programs (Jardines de Cosecha y Porvenir)	CORPRETI/Network of Businesses against Child Labor coordinated programs that aim to reduce child labor in crops, such as tobacco and blueberries, where labor is often performed by entire families. Children are placed in day care centers that have educational and recreational programming.(11, 89-93)
Heads of Household Program (Programa Jefes de Hogar)*‡	Ministry of Labor program that seeks to improve the employability of families who have experienced economic hardship.(94)
UNICEF Argentina's Program for the Protection of Children's Rights	Works to protect children from child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, violence, and abuse. Priority areas for 2011-2014 concern indigenous and immigrant children and the urban poor.(95)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Américas)	Conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns that combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(96-98).
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Argentina.(99)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in Latin America, including Argentina. Includes the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(99)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Argentina.

During the reporting period, Argentina continued to implement social programs designed to combat child labor. However, programs that address child labor in agriculture do not address the scope of the problem in the sector, and research did not find programs that specifically targeted children working in urban activities such as refuse collection or street begging and performing.

VII. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor

99. ILO-IPEC Geneva official. E-mail communication to USDOL official. April 4, 2014.

In 2013, Armenia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons for years 2013–2015, which seeks to improve victim identification, including for child laborers, and to conduct surveys on working children. The Government is participating in a project to collect original data and analyze child labor in the country. However, although the extent of the problem is unknown, children continue to engage in child labor in the services sector. The Government lacks a mechanism to coordinate its child labor efforts. Likewise, there are gaps in programs to protect children from exploitative labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Limited evidence suggests that children in Armenia are engaged in child labor in the services sector.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Armenia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	8.1 (30,494)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	89.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	9.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2008, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2010.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Activities unknown* (2, 5)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown* (2, 6) Servicing cars, including washing them* (2, 5)
Services	Gathering scrap metals* (2, 7) Street work, including begging (2, 6, 8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking (1, 9, 10) Forced begging* (10)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Inequities in education in Armenia remain as a result of, gender, geography, and family income, and compulsory education is not well enforced.(8, 11-13) Limited evidence suggests that some children are dropping out of school to work in the informal sectors, including in agriculture and construction, car service, scrap metal, and family business.(2)

In 2013, the Government introduced a draft law on improving the identification of and assistance to victims of trafficking and other forms of labor exploitation.(10)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Police/Juvenile Police	Enforce criminal laws.(21) Investigate crimes in which children are victims or perpetrators.(9) Serve as key investigators for enforcing laws against the worst forms of child labor through the Third Division of the Criminal Intelligence Department and the Third Department of the Main Department for Combating Organized Crime, which focuses on human trafficking cases.(18, 22)

Organization/Agency	Role
The Police/The Anti-Trafficking Unit	Investigate and enforce criminal laws against child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children through a staff of seven field officers including the head of the unit.(23) Operate within the Department of Combating High-Tech related (Cyber) Crimes, Human Trafficking, Illegal Migration, and Terrorism, of the General Department on Combating Organized Crime.(21)
The Police/ Unit to Investigate Human Trafficking, Illegal Drug Trafficking and Organized Crime	Investigate and enforce criminal laws against child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(22) Operate within the Department on Especially Serious Crimes within the General Department of Investigations, through a staff of 10 investigators including the head and the deputy head.(21)

Law enforcement agencies in Armenia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In July 2013, the Government adopted Decree #857-N that created a new Public Health Inspectorate under the Ministry of Health. The function of this body was formerly split between the State Hygiene and Anti-Epidemic Inspectorate under the Ministry of Health, and the State Labor Inspectorate under the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs.(21) Although labor inspections are part of its mandate as noted in the decree, it is unclear what the primary function of the new body will be.(21)

In 2012, the Government employed 126 labor inspectors and had an allocated budget of approximately $713,290. The inspectorate was also provided with 16 service cars and one laboratory car.(24) According to a government official, this number is not sufficient to cover the hundreds of thousands of entities in the country and to proactively investigate exploitative child labor.(25, 26) Research did not uncover the number of labor inspectors employed or the allocated budget for the reporting period. The Government does not have a specific mechanism for registering child labor complaints, and no cases of child labor were found during the reporting period.(11, 23, 25)

According to the Government, labor inspectors received training, which included issues pertaining to child labor.(18) Research did not uncover information on the extent to which child labor was addressed or whether the worst forms were included in the training. As a component of the National Plan of Action against Trafficking in Persons for years 2013–2015, labor inspectors are to receive specific training on child exploitation issues, particularly child trafficking.(18)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, 340 police officers were trained on human trafficking issues, including the trafficking of children. Seventy-three police officers received additional training from two NGOs, Hope and Help and the United Methodist Committee on Relief (UMCOR), on anti-trafficking with a focus on the trafficking of children for labor.(21, 22) In addition, Armenian labor inspectors, police officers, investigators, and prosecutors participated in a roundtable event on forced labor and human trafficking, including child labor cases. Participants discussed inconsistencies in labor legislation, collaboration, and coordination of activities in the field, and scenarios for identifying and processing human trafficking cases quickly.(27)

In 2013, law enforcement investigated a total of 23 criminal cases involving minors.(18) Nine individuals were prosecuted and their cases were sent to the courts. In addition, 10 out of the 11 minor victims identified during the 2013 investigations were referred to social service providers Hope and Help, UMCOR Armenia, the Children Support Center Foundation, and the Zatik Children Support Center.(18) One case involving a trafficked minor resulted in a conviction and sentence of 7 years in prison.(10)

Implementing the provisions of the Criminal Procedural Code on victim and witness protection continued to be difficult due to lack of both funding and an appropriate victim-witness protection mechanism.(1, 28)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established coordinating mechanisms to combat human trafficking, research found no evidence of coordinating mechanisms to combat other worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking (Anti-TIP Ministerial Council)	Implement, coordinate, and monitor government efforts on human trafficking.(10, 18) Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister and comprised of various officials from 17 government entities.(10)
Inter-Agency Working Group against Trafficking in Persons (IAWG)	Advise, organize, and implement decisions made by the Anti-TIP Ministerial Council.(10) Chaired by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and comprised of officials from all government entities. Includes non-governmental stakeholders such as NGOs, international organizations, and social partners in regularly scheduled meeting sessions.(10, 18)

Various agencies in Armenia work on child protection, along with an interagency National Commission on the Protection of Children’s Rights.(18, 22) In 2013, the Commission created a working group to prevent begging by children throughout the country. The working group included representatives from the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs, the Ministry of Health, and the Ministry of Education.(18) The Parliamentary Working Group on Child Rights continued to help strengthen child rights institutions in Armenia.(27)

The Government also has a National Referral Mechanism (NRM) which defines procedures and responsible government agencies for identification, referral, assistance, and protection of trafficking victims, including children.(10, 18) Victim assistance includes in-kind, legal, medical, and psychological support, and the integration into various social, education, and employment projects.(10) During the reporting period, the Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking (Anti-TIP Ministerial Council) and the Inter-Agency Working Group against Trafficking in Persons (IAWG) met regularly to share information and make implementation and policy decisions.(21) The two groups focused on taking steps to address the National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons for years 2013–2015, particularly those related to child trafficking.(10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Armenia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Strategic Program on the Protection of the Rights of Children in Armenia for 2013–2016	Adopted through Government Decree #1694-N.(23, 24, 27). Focuses activities —through the child labor component of the program, “On approving the RA Strategic Program on the Protection of Children’s Rights for 2013–2016 and the schedule of activities of the 2013–2016 Strategic Program on the Protection of Children’s Rights for 2013–2016 and on recognizing as invalid the RA Government Decree of December 18, 2003 #1745-N”— in three areas: (1) data collection on working children, (2) awareness-raising on the rights of working children, and (3) implementation of oversight mechanisms for children’s work.(27)
National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons for years 2013–2015†	Expands upon the main objectives and activities of previous action plans and includes special provisions for trafficking of children. Objectives are to improve victim identification, including for child laborers, conduct surveys among working children, improve prevention efforts, and work with the media on the format and approach to reporting on human trafficking cases.(29) Strategies and activities fall under five sections: (1) legislation on action against trafficking in persons and enforcement of laws; (2) prevention of trafficking in persons; (3) protection of and support to victims of trafficking in persons; (3) cooperation; and (4) surveys, monitoring, and evaluation.(29)
Country Program for 2010–2015*	Develops plans, with UNICEF, for an enhanced child care system; a continuum of child protection services to identify and respond to violence, exploitation and abuse of children; and a comprehensive policy framework for protecting vulnerable children.(30)

* The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

The Government collects information on trafficking of children as part of its reporting on trafficking in persons.(21) The National Commission on the Protection of Children’s Rights has concluded that more recent country-specific data are needed on the worst forms of child labor in Armenia.(23)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Armenia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)†	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Armenia, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(31)
When September Comes program*	Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs program, implemented by charitable organizations, that assists families with children excluded from secondary education and families of “deceased freedom fighters” with three or more children of school age. Provides school supplies, clothing, and food.(18)
Secondary School Education to Contribute to the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons in Armenia, Azerbaijan, and Georgia	Regional project supported by the IOM, with the cooperation of the Ministry of Education and Science to introduce a module on counter-trafficking, including child exploitation, into the school curriculum.(28, 32)
Police hotline†	Police-supported hotline for human trafficking and migration-related calls.(22)
The UN Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) plan for Armenia (2010–2015)*	UN program that focuses on developing vocational training and technical assistance programs targeted at the most vulnerable youth.(27, 33)
The Stakeholders Acting Together for Strengthened Child Protection in Armenia*	3-year government and USAID project that aims to improve the well-being of the most vulnerable children by building the human resource and institutional capacity of the child protection system. Combined budget of $2.5 million.(34)
Daycare Centers*‡	Government supported daycare centers providing alternatives to working children and day-time centers provide services for children with special needs.(21) In 2013, Government co-funded four day-time centers to support up to 250 children , and fully owned and operated an additional three to support up to 100 children each.(21, 22, 24, 35)
Shelter for victims of human trafficking‡	Co-funded Government shelter run by the United Methodist Committee on Relief (UMCOR) Armenia that provides victims of human trafficking with medical, psychological, social, and legal services. In 2013, the Government allocated approximately $16,100 in funding for the shelter.(10)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Armenia.

Research found no evidence of any programs specifically for assisting children engaged in agriculture or informal work in the country.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. For more information on sources used, the definition of working children and other indicators used in this report, please see the "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" section of this report.

In 2013, Azerbaijan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The president signed several amendments to the Criminal Code and to the Law of the Republic of Azerbaijan on the Fight against Trafficking in Persons to strengthen protections for children who may be victims of human trafficking, and raise penalties against those involved in human trafficking. The Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population (MLSPP), and the State Committee on Family, Women and Children's Affairs (SCFWCA) also signed a Joint Action Plan (2013-2015) on Elimination of Child Labor Exploitation. However, children in Azerbaijan continue to engage in child labor in both agriculture and street work. Research found limited evidence of government programs to address child labor in sectors where it exists.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Azerbaijan are engaged in child labor in agriculture and street work.(1-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Azerbaijan.

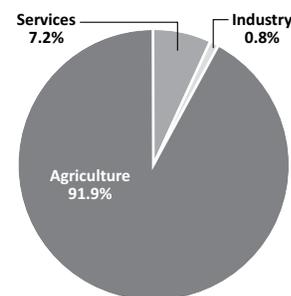

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	7-14 yrs.	4.5 (70,034)
Attending School (%)	6-14 yrs.	94.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		92.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(10)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Child Labor Survey (SIMPOC) Survey, 2005.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton, tea,* and tobacco† (2, 4-6, 12-15)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown* (2, 14)
Services	Street work such as begging, washing cars, and street vending (1-5, 7, 9, 16, 17)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 7, 9, 16, 18) Forced labor, including forced begging (16, 18, 19)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are largely found working in the agriculture sector, which includes cotton, tea, and tobacco production. Evidence suggests that the number of child laborers involved in the production of cotton, tea, and tobacco has considerably declined in the past decade, although the significance of the decline is unknown.(2, 5, 13, 16, 20) Evidence also suggests that Roma children are particularly vulnerable to forced begging.(18)

In 2013, the president signed amendments to the Criminal Code and to the Law of the Republic of Azerbaijan on the Fight against Trafficking in Persons to strengthen protections for children who may be victims of human trafficking and raise penalties against those involved in human trafficking.(9, 26, 33) In addition, the President also signed into force tougher penalties for criminal acts related to forced labor.(19) The Labor Code only covers workers with written employment contracts; therefore, protections exclude children working without a written employment agreement. In February of 2014, the president also signed amendments to the Administrative Offenses Code and the Criminal Code that proscribe a fine or imprisonment for employing people without an effective employment agreement.(9, 26)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population (MLSPP)	Enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(34)
State Labor Inspectorate within the MLSPP	Enforce child labor laws, particularly provisions of the Labor Code.(2, 35)
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MIA)	Function as the central executive agency responsible for public security, prevention and exposure of criminal offences, including child trafficking and begging.(2) Enforce trafficking laws and investigate trafficking violations, and enforce criminal laws related to the use of children in illicit activities.(7) Refer children who are victims of human trafficking to social services for assistance with school enrollment, registering for recreational activities, and obtaining proper documentation.(7) Assist trafficking victims obtain proper documentation as part of a larger government effort to assist children without birth registrations, a group that is particularly vulnerable to trafficking.(7, 16, 25, 36-38)
The Commission on juvenile issues and protection of minors' rights	Coordinate efforts on enforcement of laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Located under the Cabinet of Ministers and consists of relevant state agencies.(34)

Law enforcement agencies in Azerbaijan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2012, the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population (MLSPP) employed 230 labor inspectors.(3) However, research did not reveal information on the number of labor inspectors employed in 2013. Officials of the State Migration Service, the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MIA), and MLSPP were trained on countering human trafficking.(9) The MLSPP did not provide information on whether inspectors received training on laws and the enforcement of laws relating to child labor and/or hazardous child labor. A source suggests that NGOs believe that inspectors are not adequately trained on child labor, including hazardous child labor.(9)

In 2012, the Labor Inspectorate conducted 8,341 inspections. The Government did not make the number of inspections involving child labor for the reporting period publically available.(7) The Ministry does conduct unannounced inspections, but those inspections are not planned or tracked.(4) In addition, the Government does not have a mechanism for filing and responding expeditiously to complaints about child labor.(9)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the State Labor Inspection Service identified two child labor violations involving the employment of children in the service and trade sectors. In both cases, the employers received a $1,275 (1,000 AZN) fine and the victims were returned to their parents.(19) In addition, the MIA reported three cases of underage prostitution.(9, 19) The MIA did not make available additional information on investigations and convictions.(9) One source suggests that the SCFWCA and some NGOs do not view the number of prosecutions of labor and human trafficking violations involving children as sufficient given the scope of the problem.(7)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
State Committee on Family, Women and Children's Affairs (SCFWCA)	Serve as the primary central executive body responsible for implementing child-related policies.(2)
MIA and SCFWCA	Maintain an inter-agency case management database on child rights.(28)
The National Referral Mechanism for Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate over 15 government ministries and committees anti-trafficking efforts. Led by a National Coordinator at the Deputy-Minister within the MIA.(38)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Control-Coordination Group	Work with the Ministry of Education and SCFWCA to develop a national database for local agencies to identify children who are not in school and to track absentees over time and across districts. By the end of the reporting period, one monitoring action occurred covering 23 schools, 11 internet clubs, and four restaurants across the country.(34, 39) Established out of the State Program on Poverty Reduction and Sustainable Development in 2008-2015. Comprised of representatives from the State Committee on Family, Women and Children Affairs, the Ministries of Education, and Health and Labor and Social Protection of Population.(34)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Azerbaijan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Joint Action Plan (2013-2015) on Elimination of Child Labor Exploitation†	Joint action plan between the MLSP and the SCFWCA to coordinate activities. Framework includes: (1) preparation of social awareness raising campaigns on negatives consequences of child labor exploitation; (2) organization of seminars and round tables with the participation of various state agencies with the purpose of reinforcing the fight against child labor; (3) conducting research on the situation of child labor throughout the country; and (4) conducting trainings for labor inspectors.(34)
National Action Plan on the Protection of Human Rights	Seeks to ensure that the Criminal Code is compatible with international standards on preventing the sexual exploitation of children, and to strengthen efforts to fulfill the ILO child labor conventions, respectively. Addresses human trafficking and calls for rehabilitation centers for victims.(29, 40)
2009-2013 National Action Plan for Combatting Human Trafficking	Aims to improve the coordination of activities, the effectiveness of the prosecution of perpetrators and the protection and rehabilitation of victims of trafficking by identifying the parties responsible for each objective of the 2009 National Action Plan.(41, 42) The 2009 National Action Plan targets the underlying social problems that contribute to trafficking.(37, 42) First Deputy Minister of Internal Affairs oversees the implementation of the Plan.(19)
The UN Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) (2011-2015)	Seeks to improve identification, referral, and legal support services for victims of trafficking, as well as to build the capacity of judiciary and law enforcement personnel.(43, 44)
The Poverty Reduction Strategy (PRS)	Seeks to improve social protection for the most vulnerable populations, including child laborers. Calls for developing a National Action Plan on abandoned and street children.(45) Includes a plan to improve efforts to make schools better and more accessible, and to decrease educational costs, for example, with free textbooks and hot meals for children.(45)

In 2013, the MLSP and the SCFWCA drafted and signed an action plan for the protection of children’s rights that includes monitoring to track child labor cases, raids on private enterprises and rural households, and public awareness campaigns on child labor prevention.(46) The Council of Ministers is reviewing the plan.(9, 30) The Government also began drafting a National Action Plan (2014-2018) to follow the current 2009-2013 National Action Plan for Combatting Human Trafficking. At the conclusion of the reporting period, the draft Plan was pending approval by the Cabinet of Ministers.(19) Evidence suggests that the Government is working on capacity building of local governments to provide social services, and on developing a plan to reduce youth unemployment, particularly in rural areas. These plans are not yet complete.(9)

In 2012, the Government established a task force composed of the Ministries of Labor, Internal Affairs, Education, the SCFWCA, and NGOs to create guidelines for implementing the National Action Plan on the Protection of Human Rights. According to one NGO representative of the task force, members conducted monitoring visits to places in which child labor is known to occur, such as restaurants and bazaars, with the intention of drafting new child labor standards for both businesses and government agencies.(7) Research did not uncover the status of the draft standards.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Azerbaijan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
The program of social rehabilitation and social reintegration of child victims of trafficking†‡	Government program implemented by the MLSPP, SCFWCA, and Ministry of Education that assists children who are victims of trafficking and their families by establishing a system of monitoring the social reintegration of child victims of trafficking, and providing for professional development of psychologists and medical professionals. Designated for 2014-2016.(30)
Center of Assistance for Victims of Human Trafficking	MLSPP supported program that provides medical, psychological and social rehabilitation, and reintegration assistance to victims of trafficking.(19, 38)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Azerbaijan.(47)
Targeted Social Assistance (TSA) program*‡	MLSPP run program that provides cash transfers to low-income families. Introduced in 2006 and by the end of the reporting period had reached 139,573 families (612,114 individuals).(48)
MLSPP supported grants*†‡	Government awarded grants totaling over $2.5 million (2 million AZN) to local NGOs to establish eight centers to provide social services to vulnerable children including street children and orphans.(9) NGOs reported that the centers had been effective in providing services, and may have contributed to a reduction in child labor. However, it was also noted that the centers ran out of funds by the end of the year, and are closed. It is unclear the number of children served, or whether the Government will continue to fund this program.(9)
MIA identification document program*	Provides identification documents to undocumented minors who may be street children or victims of human trafficking. In 2013, 21 children were provided with identification documents.(9)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Azerbaijan.

Research has found limited evidence of government funding for social programs to specifically address child labor in agriculture or other sectors where child labor exists. Programs to prevent the worst forms of child labor primarily address human trafficking. Government authorities have undertaken a number of programs, sometimes in cooperation with international organizations or NGOs, under the auspices of the National Action Plan on Combating Human Trafficking. These programs aim to prevent trafficking, and to protect and assist victims through public awareness campaigns and the provision of shelter and psychological and employment assistance for trafficking victims.(18)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Azerbaijan (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Ensure protections are afforded to children who are legally permitted to work and working without written employment contracts.	2011 – 2013
Enforcement	Implement a system to track and monitor labor inspections, including unannounced inspections.	2011 – 2013
	Report whether and how investigations are targeted at sectors with child labor.	2011 – 2013
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in construction to inform policies and programs.	2013
	Target programs specifically to children in the worst forms of child labor, such as agriculture, and their families.	2009 – 2013
	Assess the impact that social protection programs may have on child labor to determine whether expansion of the program may significantly impact child labor in agriculture and forced child labor in prostitution and begging.	2011 – 2013

In 2013, Bahrain made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government issued an updated list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children. Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation. Minors working in family enterprises are exempt from some provisions of the Labor Law. In addition, the Government has not conducted research to determine the extent and nature of the worst forms of child labor in the country. Furthermore, the Government has no policies or coordinating mechanisms to address all worst forms of child labor, nor does it have programs to address child labor in domestic service.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bahrain are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation, although there is no evidence to suggest that this problem is widespread.(1) Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

There is no evidence that the Government has conducted or participated in research to determine the extent to which children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bahrain has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

* No conscription or no standing military.

In 2013, the Government issued an updated list of hazardous occupations that are prohibited to children.(8)

Minors working in enterprises that employ only family members are exempt from the Labor Law, leaving them vulnerable to hazardous work.(7) The Penal Code states that any person who relies on prostitution or immorality for his or her livelihood will be punished with imprisonment.(12, 13) This prohibition may enable the prosecution of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.

The Government has issued Ministerial Orders requiring employers to maintain employment contracts for any domestic workers.(16, 17) The 2012 private-sector labor law extended some provisions, such as annual leave, to domestic workers.(6, 7, 18, 19)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws along with Labor Market Regulatory Authority (LMRA). Share information with LMRA on child labor cases, including through systems for referring cases to the judiciary when warranted.(1) 24 MOL labor inspectors investigate labor law violations, including violations of child labor laws.(1)
LMRA	Enforce child labor laws with the MOL. LMRA inspectors may also perform labor inspections, particularly concerning foreigners' work permits and working situations.(20, 21)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforce criminal laws that prohibit the worst forms of child labor in coordination with the Ministry of Social Development (MOSD), the Ministry of Justice and Islamic Affairs, and the Office of the Public Prosecutor, as needed. Through the Criminal Investigation Directorate, oversee a 12-person unit that investigates potential cases of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(1)

Law enforcement agencies in Bahrain took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms, during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

Ministry of Labor inspectors received some training from the ILO on international standards on child labor.(1) Research did not reveal information on funding levels of any agencies responsible for labor law enforcement, number of inspections, and number of child labor law violations found or citations issued.

Criminal Law Enforcement

The Ministry of the Interior's Criminal Investigation Directorate (CID) investigated cases of trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation. The Office of the Public Prosecutor investigated cases of trafficking referred from CID and LMRA, though it is not clear whether any of those cases involved children.(1) No information on the number of cases investigated, violations found, citations issued, or prosecutions pursued was found.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the National Committee on Combating Human Trafficking, research found no evidence of coordinating mechanisms to combat other forms of child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on Combating Human Trafficking	Coordinate trafficking policies and organize educational and outreach campaigns to raise awareness on trafficking in persons.(22, 23)

The National Committee on Childhood protects children's rights and promotes the educational, social, cultural, and psychological development of children.(4, 24) In 2013, the National Committee on Combating Human Trafficking finalized its work plan for 2013–2014.(25, 26)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence of any policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Bahrain funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Dar al Aman Shelter*‡	NGO-run shelter provides legal, medical, and psychological services for victims (including children) of trafficking, labor exploitation, and commercial sexual exploitation.(11, 13)
Child Protection Center*‡	Government center that provides treatment and counseling to child victims of abuse, including economic exploitation.(4, 27)

Program	Description
Social Welfare Dignity Home*‡	Government program that provides services to homeless persons and beggars, including children.(4)
Toll-Free Hotline*‡	MOSD hotline that receives calls on reported cases of child abuse and child labor.(1, 28)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Bahrain.

The MOSD's hotline for reporting suspected cases of child labor has primarily been used to report suspected cases of physical or sexual abuse of children.(23, 28) It is unknown how many complaints were received, or how many were related to child labor. Despite the programs listed in Table 7, research found no evidence of programs specifically aimed at protecting children engaged in domestic service.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bahrain (Table 8).

Bangladesh

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Bangladesh made a moderate advancement in its efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government issued a Statutory Regulatory Order identifying 38 occupations considered hazardous for children ages 14 to 18 and adopted the Children's Act, which harmonizes national law with international standards on child protection, including extending the legal definition of a child to 18 years. The Government also increased its capacity to enforce child labor laws through the recruitment and training of an additional 39 labor inspectors, for a total of 183 labor inspectors. With support from the ILO, the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics conducted a National Child Labor Survey by including a child labor module in the National Labor Force Survey. However, children in Bangladesh continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in services. In addition, the Government's Child Labor Unit is no longer functioning, children working in the informal sector lack protections, and the Domestic Workers Protection and Welfare Policy has yet to be approved.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bangladesh are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and services.(1, 2) Child labor occurs more in rural areas than in urban areas and the type of work children are engaged in differs by geographic location.(1) Children working in the coastal areas, specifically in the Chittagong and Kuakata regions, may be employed in the shrimp and dried fish sector, while children working in the northern areas may be employed in the local cigarette or 'bidi' industry.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bangladesh.

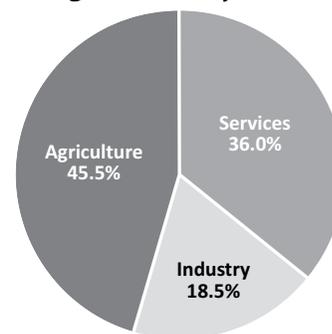

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent

	Street work and domestic service as a result of human trafficking (28, 29)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Some children work under forced labor conditions in the dried fishing sector to help their families pay off debts to local moneylenders.(24) Some Bangladeshi children are trafficked internally and others across borders for commercial sexual exploitation.(28) Children are also trafficked internally for street work and domestic service.(28)

Although by law education is free and compulsory in Bangladesh, the associated costs of teacher fees, books, and uniforms prevent many children from attending school.(2, 7)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bangladesh has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Labor Code excludes many sectors of the economy in which children work, including small farms, family enterprises, street work, and domestic service.(30) However, in 2013, the Government of Bangladesh revised the Labor Code to include further protections in formal establishments for children ages 14 to 18. In particular, the amendments require employers to obtain clear age documentation and mandate that the government periodically update the list of hazardous occupations for children ages 14 to 18.(40) In 2013, the Government issued a Statutory Regulatory Order and published a list of hazardous work prohibited for children ages 14 to 18.(41) The list highlights 38 occupations including ship breaking, leather manufacturing, construction, and automobile repair.(31)

In addition, the Government of Bangladesh adopted the Children's Act of 2013 (Act No. 24 of 2013), which harmonizes national law with international standards on child protection, including extending the legal definition of childhood to 18 years.(7, 37, 42)

The 2010 National Education Policy raised the age of compulsory education from grade five (age 10) to grade eight (age 14); however, until the law is amended to reflect the new compulsory education age, the policy is not enforceable.(2, 43-45) This standard makes children ages 11 to 14 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school and might engage in activities that jeopardize their health and safety.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Office of the Chief Inspector of the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments, Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE)	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor.(2, 43, 46)
Ministry of Home Affairs (MOHA)	Enforce the country's forced labor and anti-trafficking laws, including child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. Operate an anti-trafficking police unit in Dhaka, composed of seven police officers charged with investigating all forms of trafficking. Provide anti-trafficking training to police officers and other public officials and chair an inter-ministerial anti-trafficking committee that oversees and monitors national- and district-level efforts to combat human trafficking.(2, 41, 47, 48)
Child Protection Networks	Respond to a broad spectrum of violations against children, including child labor. Overseen by the Ministry of Social Welfare (MSW). Composed of officials from a variety of sectors mandated to act on prevention, prosecution, and protection of any violations; monitor interventions; and develop referral mechanisms at the district and sub-district (upazilla) levels between law enforcement and social welfare services.(2, 6, 7, 41)

Organization/Agency	Role
Rescue, Recovery, Repatriation, and Reintegration Task Force	Provide referrals for children trafficked from India per process outlined in Standard Procedures (SOP) Guidelines. Operated by the Ministry of Home Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and UNICEF's Task Force.(25)

Law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms, during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Directorate of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Establishments (DFIE), within the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE), employed 183 labor inspectors nationwide. This marked an increase of 39 from the previous year.(7, 41, 46, 49) In addition, in January 2014, the Government issued orders to hire an additional 392 labor inspectors; which once implemented would bring the total number of labor inspectors to 575.(49) As of July 2014, these new labor inspectors have yet to be hired because of bureaucratic challenges.(41, 50) DFIE conducts unannounced inspections in both factories and small businesses to investigate various labor issues, including child labor. In 2013, DFIE conducted approximately 500 inspections per month.(41) Working from one of 31 offices located across the country, each inspector conducts between 4 and 20 inspections monthly, depending on the inspector's capacity and number of facilities.(2, 41) Five inspection teams are assigned to monitoring labor violations in the shrimp sector, and specialized monitoring teams regularly inspect export factories in the ready-made garment sector.(2, 43, 51) In 2013, the ILO and the German Government provided training to new labor inspectors, including on the Labor Code (as well as child labor) and inspection techniques.(52)

No enforcement data were publicly available during the reporting period, including the number of child labor investigations, prosecutions, and convictions. While reports indicate that child labor inspections occurred in export garment factories and shrimp processing, child labor inspections were infrequent, with no oversight of the children working in the informal sector, including unregistered subcontractors in the garment sector.(6, 21) On March 30, 2014, MOLE, with support from the ILO, launched a publicly accessible database for labor inspections in all export factories in the ready-made garment sector. The inspection information is under review for quality control and has yet to be included in the database.(7, 41)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Government reported 377 trafficking cases resulting in 172 prosecutions and 14 convictions. No information is available as to whether these investigations, prosecutions, and convictions involved child victims of human trafficking.(25)

The Ministry of Social Welfare (MOSW) provides services to trafficking victims. However, there is no systematic referral system for the police to inform the MOSW about trafficking victims.(25) To date, the Government of Bangladesh and the Government of India have not formally signed an MOU to bring the Standard Operating Procedures (SOP) of the Rescue, Recovery, Repatriation, and Reintegration Task Force into official use, although NGOs report that the two governments are using this system.(25) NGOs also note that there are no formal referral mechanisms for children trafficked from other countries. They allege that government officials refer victims back to the NGOs that initially identified and rescued them.(25)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Bangladesh

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Labor Unit, MOLE	Coordinate and supervise programs to combat child labor, monitor child labor elimination program activities, and oversee the collection and storage of data in the Child Labor Monitoring Information System.(48, 51, 53)
National Child Labor Welfare Council	Coordinate various government agencies and NGOs that implement programs to reduce child labor and eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Ensure child labor programs align with the National Child Labor Eradication Policy (NCLEP). Prepare annual reports on the state of child labor. Monitor child labor at the district and subdistrict (upazilla) levels.(2, 6, 7, 46, 54, 55)
Counter-Trafficking National Coordination Committee, MOHA	Work with other government agencies and international and national NGOs through bimonthly coordination meetings on trafficking, including child trafficking. Oversee district countertrafficking committees, which oversee anti-trafficking committees for subdistricts and for smaller administrative units (unions).(25, 28, 41)

MOLE’s Child Labor Unit is no longer functioning. However, MOLE is working to create a permanent body on child labor within its ministry. MOLE’s proposal for this permanent body is currently pending with the Ministry of Public Administration.(41)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bangladesh has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Eradication Policy (NCLEP) (2010)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015 by initiating interventions that will sustainably remove children from the worst forms of child labor and provide them with viable work alternatives.(43, 46, 56)
Child Labor National Plan of Action (NPA) (2012–2016)	Lays out NCLEP’s implementation strategy and includes elimination of child labor in other sectoral plans and strategies.(55)
Sixth Five-Year Plan (2011–2015)	Includes the elimination of child labor as a government priority and identifies the NCLEP as the policy and NPA as the plan to eliminate it.(57)
National Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking (2012–2014)	Recognizes the Government’s ratification of international conventions on child labor and the development of NCLEP as the means to address child labor.(58)
National Labor Policy	Includes provisions on the prohibition of child labor in both the informal and formal sector in urban and rural areas. Specifies that the Government will take necessary actions to ensure children do not engage in hazardous labor and creates opportunities for children to access primary education.(59)
National Education Policy (2010)*	Specifies the Government’s education policy, including pre-primary, primary, secondary, vocational and technical, higher, and non-formal education policies.(45)
National Plan of Action for Education for All (2003-2015)	Targets child laborers for non-formal basic education programs.(60)
National Skills Development Policy (2011)	Outlines skills development program for legally working-age children as a means of contributing to a workplace free from child labor.(61)
National Policy for Children (2011)	Acknowledges NCLEP’s strategy to eliminate child labor.(62)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

During the reporting period, senior government officials, international organizations, and officials of Bangladeshi NGOs met to discuss the Domestic Workers Protection and Welfare Policy, which was drafted in 2010. If implemented, the Policy would help protect the rights of child domestic workers and include domestic service on the List of Hazardous Occupations and Working Conditions Prohibited for Children; it continues to await official approval.(7, 63)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Bangladesh funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description and Objectives
Eradication of Hazardous Child Labor, Phase III†‡	Three-year government program that targets 50,000 children between ages 10 and 14 for withdrawal from hazardous labor through non-formal education and skills development training.(43, 64)
Initiative to Eliminate Child Labor from Urban Slums and Rural Areas	Collaboration between UNICEF, the Ministries of Women and Children's Affairs, and MOSW. Two-year project that provides conditional cash transfers and employment training, outreach and referral services, and social protection services for 500,000 children and 30,000 adolescents.(2)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce (CLEAR) Child Labor Project†	$7.7 million USDOL-funded, 4-year capacity building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries, to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. In Bangladesh, aims to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor by improving legislation on child labor. This includes bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards; improving monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies on child labor; developing, validating, adopting, and implementing the NPA; and enhancing the implementation of national and local policies and programs aimed at the reduction and prevention of child labor.(65)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research in Bangladesh.(66)
Expanding the Evidence Base and Reinforcing Policy Research for Scaling Up and Accelerating Action Against Child Labor	USDOL-funded, 3-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to provide technical assistance to develop a national child labor survey. The Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics collected data from January 1 to December 31, 2013 for a National Child Labor Survey as part of the Labor Force Survey. Final report scheduled to be published and disseminated in 2014.(67, 68)
Trafficking Project	USAID-funded project that builds the capacity of the police to identify and prosecute traffickers, expand public awareness on trafficking, and provide services to trafficking victims.(2, 46)
Shelter Project‡	Nine shelters provide services to women and children who have experienced violence, including trafficking.(2, 46)
Child Helpline*	Project funded by the Danish International Development Agency that provides child helpline service.(2, 46, 69)
Community-Based Working Child Protection Project‡	MOHA project that aims to combat human trafficking in Dhaka. Objectives include enhancing preventive and protective measures, improving victim care, and strengthening the Government's capacity to prosecute trafficking-related crimes.(7, 36, 46, 51, 70)
Actions for Combating Trafficking in Persons‡	In collaboration with the government, IOM-implemented project that aims to combat human trafficking, enhance preventive and protective measures, improve victim care, and strengthen the Government's capacity to prosecute trafficking-related crimes.(36, 46, 51, 70)
Employment Generation for the Ultra Poor*‡	Government program that provides short-term employment for the rural poor.(71, 72) From 2012 to 2013, the Government of Bangladesh allocated approximately $148 million for this program.(73)
Vulnerable Group Development Program*‡	Government program that provides vulnerable families with food assistance and training in alternative income-generating opportunities.(46, 74, 75) Government of Bangladesh allocated approximately $96 million to this program in 2012 and 2013.(73)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Bangladesh.

Although Bangladesh has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem in the informal sector.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bangladesh (Table 9).

Barbados

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Barbados made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government has conducted its first prosecution of commercial sexual exploitation of children under the Transnational Organized Crime Act, and began a community outreach program to raise public awareness of human trafficking. However, although evidence is limited, children in Barbados are reported to engage in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation and drug trafficking. The Government does not currently have a comprehensive policy framework to address all worst forms of child labor, and legislative gaps remain. For example, Barbados lacks a legally enforceable list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although evidence is limited, children in Barbados are reported to engage in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation and drug trafficking.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Barbados. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		104.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis, 2014.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Used in drug trafficking* (2-6)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 4-6)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Older men reportedly engage children in commercial sexual exploitation in exchange for material goods.(1) The Government has acknowledged the need to conduct a national child labor survey to assess the magnitude of the problem.(9, 10) However, it does not appear that the Government has undertaken such research.(3, 9)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Barbados has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government of Barbados has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography or the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act; Recruiting of Workers Act (11, 12)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act (11)
List of Hazardous Occupations Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Constitution; Offences Against the Person Act (13, 14)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act (15)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sexual Offences Act (16)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Protection of Children Act; Drug Abuse (Prevention and Control) Act (17, 18)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Defence Act (19)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Education Act (20)
Free Public Education	Yes		Education Act (20)

* No conscription or no standing military.

Part IV of the Employment Act sets the minimum age of employment at 16 for industrial undertakings, but not for all kinds of work.(11) The Recruiting of Workers Act specifies that children between the ages of 14 and 16 can be engaged in light work with parental consent.(12) However, a list of occupations constituting light work has not been established.(6, 21) The Employment Act prohibits the engagement of children below the age of 18 in night work and any occupation that is likely to harm their safety, health, or morals. This includes industrial undertakings such as mining and quarrying.(11) However, despite reports that the Ministry of Labor has created a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations prohibited to all children under the age of 18, it does not yet have legal effect.(5, 9, 22)

The Defence Act sets the minimum age for voluntary enlistment at 18.(19) However, those who wish to enlist before age 18 can do so with parental consent if they are at least 17 years and 9 months old.(5, 23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Conduct labor inspections and enforce child labor laws.(3, 5)
Royal Barbados Police Force	Make criminal arrests for infractions involving the trafficking, use in illicit activities, and commercial sexual exploitation of children. Maintain a Sex Crime and Trafficking Unit, which was further consolidated in 2013.(3, 5, 24)

Law enforcement agencies in Barbados took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) employed 17 inspectors to enforce labor laws, and there were no reported child labor violations. The government did not carry out inspections specifically devoted to child labor but checked for the problem during routine inspections. This number of inspectors and their resources were deemed sufficient with respect to the scope of the problem.(5) Inspectors did not receive training specific to child labor during the reporting period.(5)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the MOL's 17 inspectors also enforced criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. While this number of inspectors was deemed sufficient with respect to the scope of the problem in Barbados, the government did not carry out criminal inspections specific to child labor.(5) During the reporting period, the Government led an anti-trafficking operation that removed one child from commercial sexual exploitation. As of the writing of this report, the perpetrators are facing charges under the Transnational Organized Crime Act, which would be the first prosecution under this law.(5) Officers from the Police Force, the Immigration Department, and other agencies received training in the prevention of human trafficking, anti-trafficking laws, and in identifying victims and referring them for services.(24)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Task Force for the Prevention of Human Trafficking	Train personnel to identify victims of trafficking among vulnerable populations; sensitize government officials to trafficking issues. Composed of 11 members with representatives from several government agencies, NGOs, and interest groups. Initiated the Sex Crime and Trafficking Unit within the Police force.(3, 24)
Child Labor Committee	Coordinate efforts to abolish child labor between government agencies, NGOs, and other civil society organizations. Established by the Ministry of Labor in 2004.(3, 25)

In 2013, the National Task Force for the Prevention of Human Trafficking, along with the Bureau of Gender Affairs, continued an extensive outreach program to raise public awareness of human trafficking, entitled “Not Again: Trafficking in Persons – Modern Day Slavery.”(24) The National Task Force also facilitated dialogue on ways to improve labor legislation.(5) It has been reported that the CLC has not been active for several years due to a reported absence of child labor cases.(3, 5)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Barbados has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Work Plan on Human Trafficking†	Addresses human trafficking in Barbados and contains specific measures with regard to the prosecution of violators, the protection of victims, and the prevention of trafficking.(5, 24)

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

In October 2013, the Government hosted a regional capacity-building conference to combat trafficking in select Eastern Caribbean countries.(5, 26) In November, the Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms country participants' commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(27) The Government does not have a comprehensive policy framework to address all worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Barbados funded and participated in programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Identification, Stabilization, Enablement, and Empowerment (ISEE) Bridge Program*‡	Ministry of Social Care, Constituency Empowerment, and Community Development program that aims to reduce poverty by addressing employment and education.(28, 29) Targets 30 families to work closely with social workers.(3, 5, 29, 30)
UNICEF Multi-Country Programme for the Eastern Caribbean 2012-2016*	Government of Barbados and UNICEF initiatives that address women's and children's issues. Includes the Health and Family Life Education Curriculum and the Schools Positive Behaviour Management Programme (formerly the Child Friendly School Initiative).(4)
School Meal Subsidy*‡	Ministry of Education, Science, Technology and Innovation program that targets low income families to encourage school attendance.(3, 5)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Barbados.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, Belize made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government enacted a new law and amended an existing law to increase protections against the commercial sexual exploitation of children. In addition, the Government provided training on child labor issues to its labor inspectors and increased funding to a key social program to encourage school attendance. However, children in Belize continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Important gaps remain in the country's legal framework on the worst forms of child labor. In addition, the impact of many of the Government's development and education policies and programs on child labor remains unknown.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Belize are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Belize.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	8.3 (6,934)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	93.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	8.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		116.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvest bananas, citrus, and sugarcane (1-3, 8, 9)
Services	Street peddling (3)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3, 9-12)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Agricultural work and street peddling are reported to often take place in the company of parents.(3, 9) It has also been reported that children working in the agricultural sector may be vulnerable to forced labor.(12) Limited evidence suggests that some poor families may, in an effort to cover school fees, push their children into commercial sexual exploitation, for example by providing sexual favors in exchange for gifts and money.(12, 15) Access to education is sometimes hindered when schools charge fees and where parents must pay for textbooks, uniforms, and meals.(11, 13, 14)

Reports indicate that in 2013 the Government collected data on child labor that it intends to publish in 2014.(9) The 2011 Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey, conducted by UNICEF in collaboration with the Government, found that children ages 5 to 11 work at higher rates than those ages 12 to 14, and that child labor was more prominent in rural areas.(8, 16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Belize has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification

	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

* No conscription or no standing military.

In January 2013, the Government of Belize enacted a new Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Act, which prohibits the trafficking of all persons, including children, and replaces the Trafficking in Persons Act of 2003.(8, 9) The new law prescribes punishments from 1 to 8 years imprisonment if the victim is an adult, up to 12 years if the victim is a child, and up to 25 years if the case involves sexual assault.(21, 26) Also in January 2013, the Government passed a Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act.(23) These new laws, along with the Criminal Code, which has been updated to make sexual assault legislation gender-neutral, criminalize all forms of child sexual exploitation, including child pornography.(9, 22, 23, 26) However, Article 3(2) of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act excepts consensual sex with a child ages 16 and 17, where a person gives or promises remuneration or other benefits. This provision leaves these children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(12, 15, 23)

Article 169 of the Labour Act sets the general minimum age of employment at 12 years. Article 164 of the Labour Act sets the minimum age of employment for any public or private industrial undertaking at 14 years, and other legislation, for example the Shops Act, sets the minimum age at 14 for work in wholesale or retail trade or business.(17) The ILO's Committee of Experts has requested that the Government of Belize ensure that a minimum age of work applies to all sectors, and not only to industrial undertakings and shops.(18, 27)

Although the 2009 National Child Labor Policy identified a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children, the Government of Belize has yet to formally adopt this list into law.(8, 28, 29) In addition, research could not determine whether there are laws that prohibit the use of children in specific illicit activities, such as drug trafficking.(28, 30) Although Article 45 of the Education Act makes primary and secondary education tuition-free in Belize, schools may charge fees with the approval of the Chief Education Officer.(13)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Local Government, and Rural Development (MOL)	Enforce laws related to child labor and hazardous child labor.(2, 8, 9)
Department of Human Services (DHS) of the Ministry of Human Development and Social Transformation	Receive referrals regarding child labor cases; train Immigration and Labor officers, as well as the Belize Police Department, in making referrals.(2, 9)
Belize Police Department (Sexual Offense and Family Violence Units)	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(2, 8, 9)

Law enforcement agencies in Belize took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) increased its number of labor inspectors from 25 to 26. These inspectors continue to operate in 10 offices throughout the country.(8, 9) The MOL's 2013 budget was not sufficient to ensure adequate inspections across the country, which are also hindered by road infrastructure and other constraints.(9) During the reporting period, all inspectors received training regarding child labor. While the number of inspections in 2013 is unknown, there were no reported child labor violations.(9)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, there were no investigations pursuant to criminal laws on child labor, and no reported violations of these laws.(9) The Government reportedly considered three trafficking cases during the reporting period, but it is not known whether these cases involved children.(9) It was reported that the MOL's 26 labor inspectors, who coordinate with the Police in criminal investigations, might receive training in 2014 on the new laws on trafficking in persons and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(9) It is not yet known if this training has been provided.

IV. Coordination of Government Efforts on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Committee (NCLC)	Coordinate efforts between Ministries to combat child labor and implement National Child Labor Policy.(27) Led by the Ministry of Labor, Local Government, and Rural Development (MOL) and comprised of 15 government and civil society members.(2, 8, 29)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Committee (ATIP)	Train law enforcement officials and educate the public about the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by the Vice Minister of Human Development and Social Transformation and includes 12 other government agencies and civil society organizations.(2, 8, 31, 32)

In 2013, both the National Child Labor Committee (NCLC) and the Anti-Trafficking in Persons (ATIP) Committee continued to operate and work on issues related to the worst forms of child labor.(9)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Belize has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Policy	Establishes a rights-based framework to eradicate child labor. Priority areas include strengthening current child labor laws, creating new legislation to address existing gaps, and providing educational assistance to former and current child laborers.(8, 27, 29) Promotes awareness and advocacy efforts, strengthening of government institutions and services, and training of labor officers to identify and provide care to child laborers.(8, 29)
CARE Model	Coordinates protection, care, and monitoring of sexually exploited and trafficked children. Outlines the role of the DHS and Police in receiving allegations of the commercial sexual exploitation of children; makes referrals to other agencies for services; and protects children from future exploitation.(2, 32)
National Plan of Action for Children and Adolescents (2004-2015)	Calls for the revision of current child labor legislation, develops protocols to improve interagency coordination, increases institutional capacity to enforce legislation, strengthens child labor prevention programs, and carries out awareness-raising campaigns. Prioritizes child labor issues, including the worst forms of child labor.(8, 9, 16, 33)
National Development Framework, Horizon 2030*	Promotes economic growth and improves national well-being. Recognizes education as a basic human right and ensures access to quality education through secondary school.(34, 35)
Ministry of Education's Early Childhood Development Policy	Promotes the rights of children, from conception to age 8, and provides support to all primary caregivers. Aims to develop innovative programs targeting families of child laborers, particularly those engaged in the worst forms of child labor, and ensures those children attend school.(36)
Ministry of Education's Belizean Education Sector Strategy (2011-2016)*	Aims to improve quality and accessibility of education by focusing on retention rates, years of attendance, and teacher training. Stems from collaboration between the Ministry of Education, Caribbean Development Bank, and other educational stakeholders.(37)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

In November 2013, the Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms country participants' commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(38)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Belize funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Building Opportunities for Our Social Transformation (BOOST) program*‡	Government poverty-reduction initiative, funded in part by the World Bank, that provides monetary incentives for families who comply with program requirements.(8, 39) Families must ensure that their children ages 5 to 17 maintain annual school attendance record of 85 percent.(2, 8, 39, 40). Program has been expanded for a second consecutive year.(9)
Primary School Completers Program*‡	Government education program that increases school enrollment by providing families with cash subsidies contingent upon children completing primary education.(8, 30)
Certification of Primary School Teachers Program*‡	Country-wide teacher training program that improves quality of instruction, school attendance, and completion rates.(8)
Enhancement of the Belize Teaching Force*	$1.2 million project, financed by the Inter-American Development Bank, that trains teachers to improve instruction and increase school attendance and completion rates.(41)
Special Envoy for Women and Children Outreach Program‡	Special Envoy for Women and Children campaign that raises awareness of the commercial sexual exploitation of children; includes hosting conferences and producing public service messages.(9)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve evidence base on child labor through data collection and research.(42)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Belize.

Although the Government of Belize has a program to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children working specifically in agriculture. The Government continues to face budgetary constraints for social programs that address child labor, and poverty remains high.(9) More than 40 percent of the Belizean population continues to live below the poverty line, with more than 16 percent living in extreme poverty. In rural areas, where indigenous peoples largely reside, these rates reach even higher levels.(39, 43, 44)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Belize (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested

For more information on sources used, the definition of working children and other indicators used in this report, please see the "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" section of this report.

In 2013, Benin made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government implemented a nationwide anti-child labor awareness campaign and signed a bi-partite agreement with a Beninese worker association to reduce child labor through increased collaboration. Government officials handled 62 child trafficking cases and 11 exploitive child labor cases, referred 23 suspects to the court system on child labor and trafficking charges, and provided shelter to 173 victims of trafficking. However, children in Benin continue to engage in child labor in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service. Enforcement efforts in Benin are inadequately funded and staffed, and sentences for those who subject children to the worst forms of child labor were reduced to misdemeanors. Furthermore, Benin's national action plan pertaining to the worst forms of child labor remains unfunded and its national action plan pertaining to child protections has not been fully funded.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Benin are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Benin.

Benin

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

A 2013 ILO-IPEC study found 2,553 children working in 102 surveyed mines and quarries across Benin.(9) Children who work in quarries are subject to long working hours and to physical injuries and illnesses from dynamite explosions, falling rocks, collapsing quarry walls, and dust inhalation.(8, 9, 19, 36) A UNICEF study of 3 markets in Benin revealed more than 7,800 children working in the markets; the majority of these children were selling goods.(37) Children working in markets are exposed to injuries, and sexual and physical abuse.(37)

Through the system of vidomegon, girls, as young as age 7, work as domestic servants in exchange for housing.(4, 6, 10-13) While such arrangements may be voluntary, some children in domestic service are engaged in forced or bonded labor. Children in domestic service frequently work long hours, receive insufficient food, and are vulnerable to verbal, physical, and sexual abuse.(10, 13, 26, 27) Some boys, placed in the care of Koranic teachers to be educated, are forced by their teachers to beg on the street, work in construction or in agricultural fields, or sell goods in the market.(4, 19-23)

Although trafficking in Benin is primarily conducted internally, Benin is also a source, transit, and destination country for trafficked children.(11, 24, 30, 33) Children are trafficked within Benin for the purpose of domestic service, commercial sexual exploitation, and labor on farms, in stone quarries, and in markets.(29-32) Children are trafficked from Benin to West and Central Africa for domestic work and to work in quarries and in agriculture, including in the production of cocoa. Although evidence is limited, there are reports that children are also trafficked from Benin to Central Africa to work in fishing.(6, 11, 18, 26, 30, 33, 34, 38) Children are also trafficked from Benin to West Africa for commercial sexual exploitation.(30, 38) Research on Beninese children trafficked abroad shows that these children endure sexual and physical abuse, malnourishment, and in some cases, death.(30) Children from West Africa are also trafficked to Benin for commercial sexual exploitation, domestic service, and for labor in agriculture and quarries.(5, 26, 30, 32, 38)

Access to quality education is a critical component in preventing the economic exploitation of children.(2, 30, 39-41) Benin lacks the teaching staff and educational infrastructure to ensure all children have access to education.(42) In addition, limited evidence suggests that schoolchildren are subjected to verbal, physical, psychological, and sexual abuse at school. Abuses range from beatings with sticks, whips, or belts, to sexual abuse by teachers.(5, 43, 44) School-based violence may discourage families from sending their children to school.(43)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Benin has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Beninese law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. Although Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors prohibits the use of a child in pornography, the sale or possession of child pornography is not prohibited in Benin.(19, 51, 52) Benin's Child Code is a compilation of existing legislation related to children's rights, education, protection, labor, and health. The Child Code's second volume, which contains a bill on child protection and amendments pertaining to offenses involving minors, has been pending adoption by the National Assembly since 2009.(19, 53) In 2013, the Government of Benin took measures to update the Labor Code. The new Labor Code, still in draft form, proposes to increase penalties for child labor violations and to increase the minimum age of employment from age 14 to age 15.(7)

Although by law primary school is compulsory and progressively free, in practice some parents must pay tuition and the cost of books and uniforms if their schools have insufficient funds.(2, 5, 6, 11, 54-56) The requirement of school fees may prevent children from accessing education.(57) Access to education is also hindered by the lack of birth registration.(6, 38) Forty percent of Beninese children under age 5 remain unregistered. If they are unable to prove citizenship, some children may be denied services such as education.(6, 38) In addition, Beninese children are only required to attend 6 years of primary school, through age 11.(58) Since the minimum age for children to work is 14, children ages 12 to 14 are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor as they may have completed primary school but are not legally permitted to work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Civil Service (MOLCS)	Enforce labor laws in the formal sector.(3, 51)
The Ministry of Interior's Central Office for the Protection of Minors (OCPM), under the Criminal Police Department	Enforce laws related to the protection of minors, including for child trafficking, child labor, the use of children for illicit activities, and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(3, 19, 51, 59)

Benin

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Criminal law enforcement agencies in Benin took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that agencies responsible for labor law enforcement took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

The Ministry of Labor and Civil Service (MOLCS) employs 15 labor administrators, 4 labor controllers, and 75 labor officers, 56 of whom are labor inspectors. These personnel are employed in 12 departments across Benin to ensure the application of labor laws, including those on child labor.(3, 7) Labor inspectors can impose sanctions and order payment for labor violations, which can be given to victims as compensation.(7) The Government refers children identified during labor inspections to shelters run by national and international organizations.(7)

During the reporting period, the ILO trained 25 labor inspectors on methods to combat child labor. However, inspectors continue to lack knowledge of child labor issues.(7) For example, the MOLCS and the ILO cite the need for regularized child labor trainings for inspectors.(7) The Government budgeted $204,500 for the MOLCS to combat child labor in its 2013 budget. This same amount has been budgeted for child labor since 2010.(3, 7, 19, 51) Despite efforts, research indicates that the labor inspectorate lacks adequate staff, material, and financial resources. Moreover, the ILO Committee of Experts notes that Benin's labor inspectors have conducted a steadily decreasing number of workplace inspections due to these inadequacies.(7, 60) In addition, UNICEF reports that child rights laws, including child labor laws, are often not enforced.(48, 61) The Government also does not maintain or publish statistics regarding the number of child labor violations found or the number of victims assisted.(3) The Government does not publish all data related to inspections, investigations, complaints, and prosecutions on the worst forms of child labor.(51) The number of citations issued and the severity of penalties assessed is unknown.

Criminal Law Enforcement

The Ministry of Interior's Central Office for the Protection of Minors (OCPM) maintains one office in Cotonou. (48) OCPM is underfunded and lacks the appropriate facilities and transportation resources, including fuel, necessary to enforce of child protection laws effectively.(7, 56) In rural areas, the police and gendarmerie take on OCPM responsibilities. In 2012, the OCPM created teams within rural police and gendarmes units that are dedicated to child trafficking issues.(3) There is no formal coordinating mechanism between OCPM and labor inspectors enforcing labor laws. However, both agencies are represented on the National Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection (CNSCPE).(7)

The Government has a referral system to ensure care for trafficking victims.(18) In 2013, the OCPM rescued and provided shelter to 173 trafficking victims and subsequently referred the children to local and international NGOs. The OCPM shelter also provided legal, medical, and psychological services to child trafficking victims, including to foreign child trafficking victims before repatriating them to their home countries.(18) The Government maintains social protection centers at the municipal level to provide assistance to victims of child trafficking.(18) In 2012, the Government of Benin established standards for operating protection centers and child centers. In November, 2013 the Government held a kickoff event to publicize and distribute copies of the decree that defined the standards.(18)

The Government handled 62 child trafficking cases and 11 exploitive child labor cases in 2013. It also referred 23 suspected traffickers to court for child labor and trafficking charges.(7) Despite efforts, judges did not consistently apply penalties for perpetrators and applicable penalties were often reduced to misdemeanors.(7) However, fines were imposed and collected against some perpetrators of trafficking.(7) In 2013, the Ministries of Labor and Civil Service, Family, Justice, and of Women and the Child provided child protection awareness training and capacity building to agencies and officials responsible for enforcing child labor laws.(7) The Government also began to differentiate between child labor violations and child trafficking violations.(7) To reduce a backlog of judicial cases against perpetrators of child trafficking, the government of Benin opened five new courts, in addition to the existing nine courts.(18) The Government also assigned statisticians to assist the courts with the computerization of Judicial data.(18)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6)

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor (CDN)	Coordinate child labor issues in Benin. Led by the Ministry of Labor and Civil Service. Comprises delegates from multiple Beninese Ministries, UNICEF, the ILO, trade unions, and NGOs.(7)
National Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection (CNSCPE)	Serve as a child protection task force, chaired by the Ministry of Family, Social Affairs, and National Solidarity (MFSN). Comprises five technical committees, including committees for trafficking and exploitation.(7, 62) Each committee has an action plan and proposes activities to the CNSCPE.(3) Meets on a quarterly basis and includes 40 members from sector-based ministries, NGO networks, international technical and financial partners, and bilateral partners.(3, 19, 51, 63)

In 2013, the CNSCPE met quarterly to ensure coordination and to share information. It also prepared an annual work plan.(18) The Ministry of Family, Social Affairs, and National Solidarity (MFSN) implements the Government's overall policy to improve children's welfare and leads Government efforts to ensure children's rights.(19, 64) A coordinated report by the MFSN, UNICEF, and Plan and Child Frontiers indicates that the overlapping mandates for the National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor (CDN) and CNSCPE is a source of confusion. The lack of clarity among national coordination mechanisms affects work on the ground, where a multitude of committees and local commissions comprise of the same actors.(48) In addition, although numerous activities on the ground feed information into Government information management systems, the information remains at the national level, and data are rarely analyzed or used to affect implementation on the ground.(48)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Benin has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Benin (2012-2015)† (NAP)	Aims to improve child labor by conducting awareness-raising campaigns; increasing access to education and training; reducing socioeconomic vulnerabilities through livelihood strategies; increasing enforcement efforts; strengthening protection and monitoring measures for victims of exploitive child labor; and harmonizing the legal sector by ensuring that judges, police officers, and labor inspectors have access to and understand pertinent laws relating to child labor.(2) Adopted in 2012 and officially launched in July 2013.(7) The Government publicized and disseminated the NAP and began work under the NAP to harmonize legislation relating to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 7, 56) Ministries of Labor, Justice, and Family and National Solidarity conduct activities under the NAP that are also included in each ministry's 2014 activity plans.(7, 56)
National Policy and Action Plan for Child Protection (2009-2013)	Aims to improve child protection in Benin. Includes components to improve school feeding programs and to combat the worst forms of child labor, with a focus on child trafficking.(65)
10-year Education Sector Action Plan*	Aims to reduce poverty and to improve access to primary education, especially for girls.(62)
National Policy and Strategy for Social Protection (2004-2013)*	Aims to provide child labor protections by increasing support for children's education; implementing an outreach campaign on the worst forms of child labor; mainstreaming issues pertaining to the worst forms of child labor in training programs; and building capacity for anti-child labor activists.(19, 51)
Benin and Nigeria Joint Committee to Combat Child Trafficking	Aims to reinforce border security measures and repatriate victims of trafficking between Benin and Nigeria.(63, 66-68) Child victims are not repatriated unless a safe reinsertion program—such as schooling, vocational training, or an apprenticeship—has been arranged in advance.(29) Met twice in 2013.(18)
Anti-Trafficking Accord Between the Republic of Benin and the Republic of the Congo	Targets the identification, prevention, and rehabilitation of cross border trafficked children between Benin and the Congo. Includes components for monitoring and evaluation and for conducting cross-border investigations.(69, 70) In 2013, Beninese law enforcement officials coordinated with officials from the Congo and Gabon on the repatriation of 10 Beninese trafficking victims.(18)

Policy	Description
Bipartite Declaration to Combat Child Labor Between the Government of Benin and the Beninese Worker Associations†	Pledges to promote efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor and to collaborate at all levels with all parties concerned to combat child labor.(71)
PRSP (2011 – 2015)*	Aims to improve free universal primary education, education quality and student retention rates; improve the provision of social services; and improve access to vocational training and microfinance for youth and women.(66) Includes an implementation plan; the Government has initiated many of the plan's steps.(72)

* The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

Despite efforts, the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Benin to Eliminate the Worst forms of Child Labor has not been funded and the National Policy and Action Plan for Child Protection has not been fully funded.(2, 3, 7, 49, 51, 56)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Provided 1,125 families with livelihood services.(77) In coordination with the ECOWAS II project, the Government assisted local child protection committees in 5 communities to design a child labor monitoring system and to develop a community-based response to the worst forms of child labor.(7, 77)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Benin.

Although the Government of Benin has implemented programs to protect children from trafficking and participated in programs focused on child labor in quarrying and mining, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in domestic service, commercial sexual exploitation, or agriculture.

Bhutan

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Bhutan made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched its Eleventh Five-Year Plan (2013-2018), which commits to strengthening both the child protection system and quality of education. The Government also continued to fund and participate in programs that target improved livelihoods and access to education in impoverished, rural areas. However, children in Bhutan continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and domestic service. Bhutan's minimum age for work is inconsistent with international standards and education is not compulsory.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bhutan engage in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic service.(1) The majority of child labor in Bhutan occurs in agriculture in rural areas. Data from the 2010 Multiple Indicator Survey indicate that two-thirds of child workers reside in rural areas.(2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bhutan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	3.8 (6,338)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	84.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	3.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS 4 Survey, 2013.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (1, 5-7)
Industry	Mining*† (5)
	Construction, activities unknown*† (1, 5)
Services	Domestic service (1, 5-9)
	Hotel and restaurant service (1, 5)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation* (5, 9)
	Forced labor in karaoke bars* (9, 10)
	Domestic service, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 5-9)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Some children working as domestic servants live with their employers and are reportedly not allowed to return home.(11) Some young girls are subject to forced labor in karaoke bars known as *drayang*s, particularly in Thimphu. Evidence suggests that some girls are trafficked from rural areas to sing in the bars, and it is here that they are subject to sexual harassment.(9, 10)

There is a lack of current data on child labor in Bhutan. To date, no national survey on child labor has been conducted.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bhutan has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	N/A
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	13	Labor and Employment Act of Bhutan (1, 5, 12)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Labor and Employment Act of Bhutan (1, 5)
List of Hazardous Occupations Prohibited for Children	Yes		Regulation on Acceptable Forms of Child Labor (13)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Labor and Employment Act (12)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Child Care and Protection Act; Penal Code (14, 15)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Child Care and Protection Act; Penal Code (14, 15)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Child Care and Protection Act (15)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Labor and Employment Act of Bhutan (12)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Constitution of the Kingdom of Bhutan (16)

*No conscription or no standing military.

Bhutanese law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. The Labor and Employment Act allows children to work under the age of 14.(5, 12)

There is no age to which education is compulsory.(1) The lack of standards in this area may increase the risk of child involvement in the worst forms of child labor, as young children are not required to be in school but are unable to legally work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Ministry of Labor and Human Resources/Department of Labor	Investigate child labor complaints and ensure employers comply with child labor laws throughout the country.(17)
Royal Bhutan Police	Investigate and enforce child labor laws.(17)
Woman and Child Protection Unit (WCPU)	Enforce laws protecting women and children.(18, 19)

Bhutan

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Research did not reveal specific actions law enforcement agencies in Bhutan took to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2011, the most recent year for which information is available, the Ministry had four labor inspectors in Thimphu and two inspectors in each of Bhutan's two regions.(17) Information is unavailable on the current number of labor inspectors, but labor inspectors are based in Thimphu and in two regional offices.(17) The labor inspectors investigate general working conditions, including child labor violations.(17) Labor inspectors are not permitted to inspect private homes and have reported that this makes it challenging to track child domestic workers.(1) There is no available information on the number of labor inspections, their findings, or resulting actions taken during the reporting period.(17) The Department of Labor has documented the obstacles it must overcome in order to comply with the Labor Law. These include: (1) lack of capacity to enforce occupational health and safety standards; (2) an inconsistent application of the labor law across the country; (3) a lack of awareness amongst stakeholders on the labor law; and (4) an insufficient number of trained labor officers to enforce the labor laws.(20)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, police working on the border of Bhutan participated in a 4-day anti-human trafficking training workshop.(21) The Home Ministry's Royal Bhutan Police enforce the criminal laws related to child labor and the Police's Woman and Child Protection Unit (WCPU) implements laws protecting women and children.(17, 18) The WCPU also provides counseling services and refers victims to the National Commission for Women and Children and NGOs for assistance.(22, 23) Even though this unit reportedly provides legal assistance to victims, there is no information on the number of criminal worst forms of child labor investigations, prosecutions, or victims assisted during the reporting period.(23)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for Women and Children (NCWC)	Coordinate the promotion and protection of women and children and monitoring issues of child labor nationwide.(5, 17) Investigate and receive reports of violations against women and children, and also review and recommend policies and legislation pertaining to women and children.(24) Composed of representatives from government agencies, law enforcement, the judiciary, civil society, media, and business.(5, 17)

In 2013, there was no single coordinating mechanism to address issues related to human trafficking. Several agencies are responsible for various aspects of coordination. In addition to the WCPU, these agencies include the Ministry of Home and Cultural Affairs (Department of Immigration), Ministry of Labor and Employment, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, which engages regionally in the prevention of cross-border trafficking in persons.(10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bhutan established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Eleventh Five-Year Plan (2013-2018)†	Proposes reducing poverty by improving the quality of job opportunities for youth, increasing the quality of education through improving the quality of teachers, textbooks, and school infrastructure, and embracing inclusive social development.(25) Proposes to strengthen child protection systems.(26)

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Bhutan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

TIP Awareness-Raising*‡	Government program that funds an NGO to sensitize communities on cross-border human trafficking.(9)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Bhutan.

Bhutan lacks government programs targeting sectors that are known to employ child labor, such as agriculture, domestic labor, construction, mining, and quarrying.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bhutan (Table 9).

In 2013, Bolivia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government created regional sub-commissions to lead efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor in high-risk regions. The labor inspectorate increased its number of child labor inspections by over 100, and rescued 400 children under age 14 from child labor in the Santa Cruz area. In addition, the Government of Bolivia increased funding for a conditional cash transfer program aimed at bolstering school attendance. However, children continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in mining. Child labor inspections remain insufficient relative to the scope of the problem, and the Government does not make key information publicly available, such as statistics on child trafficking cases or penalties applied to employers for child labor violations. The Government's National Plan to Eradicate Child Labor expired in 2010 and has not been updated.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bolivia are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in mining. Research indicates that many children work in the informal sector. However, specific activities related to children's work in the informal sector are unknown. Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bolivia.

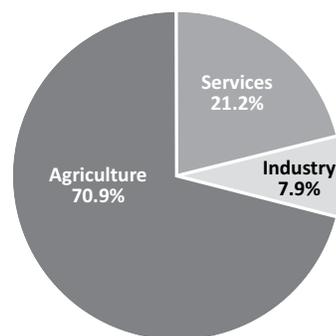

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children produce and harvest sugarcane and Brazil nuts principally in the departments of Pando, Beni, Santa Cruz, and Tarija, although recent efforts and other factors have reportedly reduced the prevalence of child labor in these sectors.(1, 2, 9-15, 21-23) Some indigenous Guaraní families live in debt bondage and work on ranches, including cattle ranches, in the Chaco region.(1, 2, 5, 9, 12) Based on reports, this practice may have been reduced in recent years partially due to increased attention to the region and land tenure reform.(12) Bolivian families reportedly sell or rent their children to work in agriculture and mining near border areas with Peru.(24, 25) Bolivian children have reportedly been trafficked to Argentina where they are victims of forced labor in the production of textiles, grapes and in the sugar industry.(1, 25, 26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bolivia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Bolivia ratified ILO C. 189 Convention Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers on April 15, 2013.(27)

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

In June 2013, the departmental government of Santa Cruz drafted the implementing regulations for Law 046, the Departmental Law on Elimination of Child Labor and Protection of Working Adolescents. The regulations establish mechanisms for implementing the law and reinforce the implementation of the departmental plan for the elimination of child labor.(35)

Although the Labor Code and the Child and Adolescent Code regulate some aspects of apprenticeships to ensure child apprentices are able to attend school, the ILO Committee of Experts has noted that the law does not set a minimum age for apprenticeships.(28, 36, 37)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws. Inspectors conduct unprompted inspections in areas identified by the government as having pervasive child labor.(18) Areas include the sugarcane-producing regions of Santa Cruz and Tarija-Bermejo, as well as the Brazil nut-producing areas of Riberalta, and the mining sectors of Potosí.(38-40) In other sectors and regions, MOL staff conduct inspections in response to complaints but do not proactively inspect workplaces.(18, 41, 42) MOL has authority to fine violators and send cases to labor courts and to municipal offices of the Defender of Children.(18, 21) MOL's Fundamental Rights Unit has the specific responsibility to protect indigenous people and eradicate forced labor.(38)
Labor Courts	Enforce penalties for labor laws.(18)
Attorney General's Office	Oversee all trafficking investigations. Maintain a special trafficking in persons unit that adjudicates cases in the criminal court system. Attorney General's National Coordinator's office coordinates all national prosecutors' offices working on trafficking in persons cases. (25) Attorney General's Coordinator of Specialized Units for the Prosecution of Human Trafficking and Smuggling, Sexual Crimes, and Gender-Based Violence maintains a trafficking cases database.
Military	Support anti-trafficking efforts by assisting police in detecting trafficking and child labor in border-crossing areas as required by the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.(43)
Defender of Children and Adolescents offices	Protect children's rights and interests, often working with NGOs.(18, 21)
Bolivian National Police	Address trafficking for sexual and labor exploitation by maintaining Special Police Investigative Units (SIUs) to address trafficking in persons for sexual and labor exploitation.(18, 40, 44) Maintained telephone hotlines for public to report child trafficking or commercial sexual exploitation of children. (18) SIUs identify trafficked children, then police refer victims to NGOs or to government's Departmental Social Services Agency (SEDEGES).(39)
Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Prosecutor's Office	Coordinate with SIU police to address trafficking for sexual and labor exploitations. One office located in the capital of each of the departments.(40)
National Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Law Enforcement Units	Special Force in the Fight against Crime (FELCC)'s Division of Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons coordinates national efforts to combat human trafficking. Police Unit for Migratory Control and Assistance (UPACOM) patrols the national borders and monitors for human trafficking.(25)

Law enforcement agencies in Bolivia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) employed 78 inspectors nationwide, including four inspectors solely dedicated to conducting child labor inspections in the regions of Potosi, Bermejo, Riberalta, and Santa Cruz/Montero.(9, 40) These four inspectors carried out 163 child labor-specific inspections in 2013: 44 in Potosi, 27 in Bermejo, 11 in Santa Cruz/Montero, and 81 in Riberalta.(40) Although this is over 100 more inspections than were carried out in 2012, the number of inspections is inadequate given the scope of the problem.(39) The Government provided inspectors with training on hazardous child labor and forced labor in six cities during the reporting period.(39, 40)

According to the Government, funding budgeted for inspections in 2013 was approximately $9,500 with an additional $43,500 provided by multilateral organizations.(40) The low funding level for inspections limits the government's ability to adequately address child labor.(39, 40)

According to the MOL's annual report, 400 children under the age of 14 were rescued from the worst forms of labor in Santa Cruz. Information on the services provided to these children and whether they were withdrawn from child labor is unavailable.(40) Information is also unavailable on penalties and fines issued or paid regarding any type of child labor violations.(40)

Criminal Law Enforcement

The Government continued implementing the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling which requires various agencies to support public policies to prevent and detect human trafficking.(40) The MOL continued the process it began in early 2013 to create a national registry of employment agencies, with the goal of identifying agencies engaged in the illegal recruitment and trafficking of children.(39, 40)

In 2013, the National Police maintained 15 SIUs to address trafficking in persons for sexual and labor exploitation.(40) However, there is no information available on the number of SIU investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor. Training for SIU anti-trafficking police is not adequate.(40) There is no indication that police received training on the worst forms of child labor. Although there is a penalty of imprisonment for child labor exploitation and trafficking, no information is available on the number of investigations or convictions.(40)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Institutional Commission to Progressively Eradicate Child Labor (CNEPTI)	Coordinate various agencies and other entities involved in child labor issues. Led by the Ministry of Labor.(18) CNEPTI includes Ministry of Justice, local courts, Ministry of Education, Ministry of Health, and several NGOs.(18) Goal is to create a national plan to combat child labor for 2014-2018.(40)
Steering Committee for Zero Child Labor in Sugarcane Production	Coordinate efforts to eliminate child labor in sugarcane production. Formed with support from the MOL and the participation of the regional government of Santa Cruz, Bolivian municipal governments, the IBCE, and various NGOs.(13)
National Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (National Council)	Implement the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling. Chaired by the Minister of Justice and composed of the ministers of nine ministries.(39, 40) Drafted a 2013-2018 national Comprehensive Action Plan to address human trafficking.(25)
Directorate General for the Fight against Trafficking and Smuggling	Coordinate nationwide policy. Counter-trafficking unit established in October 2013 by the Ministry of Government's Vice Ministry of Citizen Security.(40)
Inter-Ministerial Team	Assist in development of National Labor Plan 2014-2018. Created by Ministry of Labor in 2013 from Ministries of Justice, Health, Education and Government.(40)

Coordination among Inter-Institutional Commission to Progressively Eradicate Child Labor (CNEPTI) members has been challenging and meetings have been infrequent.(18, 45) However, the National Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (National Council) has met monthly since the Trafficking Law was passed in July 2012.(39)

In 2013, department-level governments improved coordination in response to the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling, which mandates the creation of departmental human trafficking councils.(40) Eight of the nine department governments now have departmental counter-trafficking councils, made up of law enforcement, judicial, and civil society officials.(39, 40) The MOL created regional sub-commissions to lead efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor in the cities of Potosi, Bermejo, Santa Cruz/Montero, and Riberalta. The sub-commissions coordinate efforts with local municipal and departmental labor offices.(25, 40)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bolivia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Transitional Plan for the Guaraní Communities*/ (Plan Interministerial Transitorio del Pueblo Guaraní (PIT)	Addressed the forced labor of Guaraní families in the Chaco region and supported agrarian land reform and economic alternatives for Guaraní families.(5, 20, 46)
Human Trafficking and Smuggling Comprehensive Action Plan (2013-2018) *	Serves as basis for national policies to address human trafficking. Drafted by the National Council in compliance with the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.(25)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

In November, the Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms country participants' commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(47)

The Government of Bolivia's policy framework for addressing child labor, the National Plan for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor (2000-2010), expired in 2010; a new plan was not established during the reporting period. The Plan identified mining, sugarcane harvesting, commercial sexual exploitation, and domestic service as priority areas in combating exploitative child labor.(48)

The 2008 Education for All (EFA) Global Monitoring Report published by UNESCO indicates that Bolivia will likely attain the EFA goal of universal primary enrollment by 2015.(49, 50) However, secondary school attendance rates are low, and many children are behind in school due to work, a problem that is being acknowledged and addressed through the implementation of the Avelino Siñani-Elizardo Pérez Education Law.(49, 51)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Bolivia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Juancito Pinto subsidy program *‡	Government program operates a conditional cash transfer program for all primary school students to increase school attendance and reduce dropout rate. (2, 18, 39) Limited evidence suggests the program contributed to increased school attendance and reduced dropout rates.(18, 39) Provides students with a yearly subsidy of approximately $30 if the student maintains an attendance rate of at least 75 percent.(39) Almost 2 million students participate in the program.(21, 41) Government expanded this program in 2013.(40)
ÑPK: Combating Indigenous Child Labor in Bolivia: II Phase	$6-million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Desarrollo y Autogestión (DyA) that works to reduce the worst forms of child labor by improving educational and livelihood opportunities for families in the departments of Chuquisaca, La Paz, and Santa Cruz.(7) Began in 2010 and will assist 3,100 children and 1,300 households in both urban and rural areas. Project collaborates with the Ministry of Education to expand the Leveling Program, an accelerated learning program, to be implemented nationally.(7)

Bolivia

Program	Description
Leveling program‡	Ministry of Education directive requires all public schools to offer an accelerated education “Leveling” program so children who are behind in school have the opportunity to catch up. Program assists children who are behind in school because they work.(52, 53) Municipalities and District Education Departments of Mojocoya, El Alto, Camiri, San Julian, and Pailon have plans of action, timetables and the resources they needed to operate the leveling, multi-grade, after-school and technical high school programs. Implementation started January 2013 and municipalities must assign resources to implement the programs.(35) Program was underfunded in 2012 but has now secured sustained funding and resources.(54) Ministry of Education adapted its national school enrollment form for the 2012 academic year to capture statistics on the number of children enrolled in a Leveling program in addition to the number of hours and the type of work children do.(55, 56)
Combating the Worst Forms of Child Labor through Horizontal Cooperation in South America	$6.75 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat the worst forms of child labor through horizontal cooperation in South America that ended in September 2013. Promoted collaboration across Bolivia, Brazil, Ecuador, and Paraguay to combat the worst forms of child labor among the most socially excluded populations, including indigenous children and children of Afro descent. Withdrew 3,047 children and prevented 5,478 from engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(57, 58)
Bolivian Foreign Trade Institute's (IBCE) Triple Seal initiative/(El Instituto Boliviano de Comercio Exterio Triple Sello)	Ministry of Labor collaborated with the Bolivian Institute of Standardization and Quality (IBNOCA), United Nations Children Fund (UNICEF) Bolivia, and the ILO to develop a voluntary certification indicating that a company complies with Bolivian law and ILO conventions regarding child labor, forced labor, and worker discrimination in the production of its goods.(13, 39, 59) First seal granted in 2013. Triple Seal Alliance in Santa Cruz is working to diminish child labor under the Let's Team Up/(Hagamos Equipo) Campaign.(59, 60) The alliance brought together UNICEF and organizations linked to the sugarcane industry. They are working toward a certification of sugarcane growers to attest to the inexistence of child labor in sugarcane.(61)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Americas)	Conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(62, 63) Bolivia's Secretariat of Tourism is a member.(64)
Program to Protect the Rights of Children and Adolescents*	Government collaborates with UNICEF in 17 Bolivian chestnut and sugarcane producing municipalities to provide education assistance, with funding from the Italian Government and the Swiss Cooperation Agency. The program helped to improve the living conditions of 2,300 families and return 3,400 children to school.(65)
Ministry of Education/ Plurinational Public Management School (Escuela de Gestión Publica Plurinacional, EGPP)†	EGPP instituted a child labor module in its training program for public officials from various government agencies in August 2013. Project collaborated in the preparation of the module, reviewing materials and contributing comments, suggestions and supporting materials.(45, 54) Child labor module was included in the permanent program of training of civil servants.(54)
Human Rights of Children and Adolescents in sugar cane harvesting, Brazil nut processing and mining †	Government programs to combat worst forms of child labor. Ombudsman's Office launched the program in April 2013, in Bermejo (Tarija), Cerro Rico (Potosí) and Riberalta (Beni). Main goal is to promote effective, sustainable policies and actions for the gradual elimination of the worst forms of child labor in these activities, along with labor and social protection for working adolescents between ages 14 and 17.(45, 54) The DyA project participated in preparatory meetings, provided guidance and input for the design.(54) In the Department of Santa Cruz, a commission consisting of a representative from the Departmental Government, a representative from the MOL's Office of the Defender of Children, and an NGO representative from the Hagamos Equipo departmental anti-child labor NGO network inspected 583 of the approximate 4,000 existing sugarcane production plantations. Inspections found more than 80% of the audited plantations no longer use child labor.(13, 66)
Child Trafficking Awareness Raising Campaigns	Government coordinated with The Bolivian Network to conduct public awareness and education campaign to educate the public, including youth and children, about the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling. Campaign also targeted more than 3,000 professionals including administrators of justice, members of the Public Ministry, public defenders, departmental SEDEGES officials, and civil society organizations.(25) National Council partnered with UNICEF to publish a guide for children, youth and adults explaining the new law. The partnership also created a children's cell phone game to teach the dangers of trafficking.(25)
Student Documentation Program	In 2014, the General Service of Personal Identification launched the Civil Registration Service program to provide documentation to 1.7 million undocumented students.(25)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Bolivia.

Although Bolivia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in domestic work, the production of Brazil nuts, forced labor in the Chaco region, urban work, mining, and commercial sexual exploitation.

In 2013, Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Republika Srpska (RS) and the Brcko District (BD) adopted amendments to their criminal codes that harmonize their legal framework on trafficking in persons with the law at the State level. The Government adopted the Strategy for Combatting Trafficking in Human Beings and its Action Plan for 2013-2015. The Government also provided $1.4 million for housing projects for the Roma community and appointed a National Coordinator for the Action Plan under the Decade of Roma Inclusion. However, children in BiH continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in begging and commercial sexual exploitation as a result of trafficking. The Government does not have a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children. Additionally, the number of social protection centers that provide services to vulnerable children, including those found in begging is inadequate.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in begging and commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in BiH. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	8.9 (44,017)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	83.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	10.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Source for primary completion rate: UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Multiple indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Begging (6, 7)
	Begging and domestic service* as a result of human trafficking (8, 9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 7)
	Used for pickpocketing* (7)
	Used in the production of pornography* (10)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C.182.

Most children in BiH who are found in the worst forms of child labor are Roma.(6, 7) Roma children are sometimes used by their parents or guardians to beg.(6) Organized groups also exist that traffic ethnic Roma children and force them to beg.(1, 11) In addition, the Roma custom of paid and arranged marriages between families has resulted in the exploitation of Roma girls as domestic servants.(2, 12, 13) There is a lack of data on the extent and nature of the worst forms of child labor in the country, including the use of children in pickpocketing and commercial sexual exploitation.(6, 13)

Many Roma children do not attend school, which makes them vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(8, 11, 14) Obstacles such as a lack of culturally sensitive curriculum and support programs, as well as language barriers, still prevent Roma children and other minorities from attending and cause some children to drop out of school.(14, 15) Undocumented children, many of whom are Roma, also cannot access education.(8) Poverty is an additional barrier to accessing quality education for Roma children in BiH.(14)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bosnia and Herzegovina has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The State of BiH consists of two entities— the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) and Republika Srpska (RS) —and a self-governing district, the Brčko District (BD).(16) Criminal laws at the State, entity, and district levels regulate issues related to the worst forms of child labor. The entities and district are responsible for regulating labor issues.(17) The State of BiH has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

* No conscription or no standing military.

Neither of the entities nor BD has issued or enacted a list of hazardous occupations or activities prohibited for children.(3)

BiH law prohibits both domestic and international trafficking in persons. The Governments of BiH, the entities, and BD agreed in 2011 that BiH law would be used in cases of international trafficking, but that entity and BD laws should be adopted to cover domestic trafficking.(2, 21) In 2013, RS and the BD amended their Criminal Code to criminalize all forms of trafficking, including the trafficking of minors under 18 for the purpose of exploitation. FBiH is in process of amending their own legal framework to prohibit trafficking, but such amendments were not adopted

Bosnia and Herzegovina

during the reporting period.(2, 7)

The Criminal Codes of BiH, FBiH, RS, and BD prohibit incitement to prostitution, forcing someone into prostitution, and turning a person over to a third party for the purpose of prostitution. However, Federation Law on Public Peace and Order considers prostitution to be a misdemeanor, which may result in minors under 18 involved in commercial sexual exploitation being charged with a crime.(30, 31) The anti-trafficking amendment adopted by BD during the year penalizes the use of a child who is a victim of trafficking for sexual services, and the amendment by RS penalizes the same offense if the perpetrator is aware that the child is a trafficking victim. However, research found no evidence of any penalties for using the services of a child prostitute in FBiH and BD laws.(21, 22, 24-26)

In addition, while FBiH, and BD have laws to prohibit the illicit trafficking of narcotics, they do not include provisions to prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child for this offense.(3) FBiH and BD also do not have legal provisions against the use of a child for other illicit activities.(24, 26)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
FBiH Ministry of Labor and Social Policy	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, in FBiH.(7)
RS Ministry of Labor and Veterans	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, in RS.(7)
BD Administrative Support Department	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, in BD.(7)
Entity-level police	Enforce criminal laws against trafficking, forced labor, prostitution, and begging.(2, 32)
State Investigative and Protection Agency (SIPA) and State Border Police (SBP)	Investigate trafficking crimes and enforce laws against trafficking (SIPA).(2, 30) Identify trafficking victims at the border (SBP).(30)
State and Entity-level Prosecutors' Offices	Prosecute trafficking, forced labor, prostitution, and begging cases at their respective levels, based on applicable laws.(2, 7, 30, 32)

Law enforcement agencies in Bosnia and Herzegovina took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

FBiH, RS, and BD have a total of 121 labor inspectors.(7) Officials in these Ministries have reported that these numbers are adequate and that they have sufficient resources to carry out inspections. Although child labor is not common in the formal sector in which labor inspections take place, labor inspectors undergo training for detection of child labor violations.(7) It has been reported that inspectors have to seek prior supervisory approval to enter inspection sites in some regions of the country. A 2012 labor inspection audit also found that in the two entities, inspectors are sometimes required to announce their intent to visit worksites prior to inspections.(33)

During the reporting period, labor inspectors confirmed that they did not find any cases of child labor, however child labor in BiH is most common in the informal sector, which is not subject to inspections.(7) In 2013, the Ministry of Human Rights and refugees (MHRR), with support from Save the Children, created a referral mechanism to provide assistance to children found begging on the street. However, in many cases, coordination among relevant agencies continues to be lacking.(30)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Government provided specialized training on recognition, investigation, and prosecution of trafficking to State and entity level law enforcement agencies, prosecutors, and judges.(2) Police and prosecutors at the various levels are responsible for investigating trafficking crimes and compiling information about them through the Anti-Trafficking Strike Force. Labor inspectors, however, are not part of the Strike Force.(2) If labor inspectors discover cases of forced begging that may be the result of trafficking, they are not required to investigate whether these are possible trafficking cases, which may result in misclassification of these crimes.(7)

During the reporting period the State Prosecutor's Office investigated 10 trafficking cases and had a conviction in one case, in which two individuals were sentenced to jail.(2) The entities and District prosecutors carried out 19 investigations against 35 persons, indicted 21 persons, and sentenced 4 persons to prison under their own Criminal Code provisions against pimping and pandering for prostitution.(2) Throughout the country, nine out of a total of 16 trafficking victims involved in cases in the justice system were minors and six of the minors were girls.(2) The victims of trafficking were subject to commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging however, research did not clarify which of these crimes involved children.(2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the Office of the State Coordinator for Combatting Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Office of the State Coordinator for Combatting Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate anti-trafficking efforts with a number of ministries at the entity level as well as prosecutors, at the state, entity, and local levels.(7, 30) Chair the Anti-Trafficking Strike Force, which coordinates anti-trafficking enforcement efforts, as well as another working group that addresses prevention of trafficking and protection of victims.(2) Oversee the TIP database, which includes data from NGOs, SIPA, SBP, and police agencies and prosecutors' offices at all levels.(2) Oversee shelter management and monitor NGOs' compliance with the agreed provisions on victims' assistance.(2)
Inter-Ministerial Working Group (Monitoring Team)	Monitor implementation of the Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings and the Action Plan.(30)
Council for Children	Coordinate children's issues at the national level under the Action Plan for Children of Bosnia and Herzegovina.(34) Re-established in 2013.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Decade for Roma Inclusion 2005-2015*	Aims to improve the socioeconomic status and social inclusion of Roma. Appointed a National Coordinator for the Decade of Roma Inclusion and revised its Action Plan for 2013-2016 in December 2013.(2, 30, 35) Includes 12 countries participants, counting BiH.(7, 15)
Action Plan for Children of Bosnia and Herzegovina 2011-2014*	Seeks to enhance institutional capacity, cross-sectoral cooperation, and coordination at all government levels to create favorable conditions for children and families as well as promote children's social inclusion and their general well-being.(6)
Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings and its Action Plan 2013-2015†	Focuses on comprehensive support, prevention, victim protection and assistance, criminal prosecution and international cooperation. Follows international standards set by the Council of Europe Convention on Actions Against Trafficking in Human Beings and the Palermo Protocol.(30) Allocated $100,000 for the Plan's implementation, which builds upon the country's previous anti-trafficking plans, including the National Action Plan for Combatting Trafficking in Human Beings 2008-2012.(1, 2, 7, 30) Implemented and monitored by a team of several ministries.(2, 7)
Action Plan for Protection of Children and Prevention of Violence of Children and Prevention of Violence on Children through information-communication technology	Aims to improve system of child protection from pornography. Includes 40 different activities that need to be accomplished until the end of 2015.(30)
Policy for Protection of Children Deprived of Parental Care and Families at Risk of Separation in FBiH 2006-2016 and the Action Plan for the period 2013-2016*	Calls for the development of social protection systems to provide sufficient protection to children without parental care and children separated from their parents.(13)

* The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

An NGO evaluation of the Decade of Roma Inclusion showed that some progress had been made toward improving conditions for the Roma population, but that the Action Plan was not adequately implemented or funded, decreasing its impact.(36). In 2014, however, the Government revised its Action Plan and appointed a National Coordinator for the Decade of Roma Inclusion.(2)

In 2012, the UN CRC asserted that the fragmented administrative system of BiH creates technical, financial and authority issues that must be overcome to implement the Action Plan for Children.(13) It is too soon to determine what impact the re-activated Council for Children will have on implementation of the Plan.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of BiH funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Ministry of Human Rights and Refugees (MHRR) Funding*†‡	MHRR housing project for the Roma community worth $1.4 million. Implemented by MHRR and 23 NGOs.(7)
Registration Project*‡	MHRR and UNHCR project to promote registration of Roma that would ease Roma's access to social benefits.(37) In 2013, registered about 1,100 Roma for social assistance programs. Enabled 19,000 individuals to apply for social inclusion programs since the project initiation.(34)
Social Protection Centers‡	Government long and short term care for children seeking protection in "day care" and reception centers. In 2013, six such centers in FBiH and one in RS assisted 1,253 children.(13, 30, 34, 37)
Strengthening the Social Protection and Inclusion of Children in BiH‡	Government program to improve social protection systems at all levels of government, strengthen capacity of government agencies to provide for social protection and inclusion of children, and enhance coordination and communication between providers of social services and the responsible authorities at the local level. In 2013, continued with implementation of its third phase.(13) Under the program, MHRR and Save the Children (STC) conducted research on forced begging and street work and released the first report on the prevalence of forced labor. MHRR and STC also established a referral mechanism to provide assistance to children found begging on the street.(34) Program also developed and provided manuals to train judges, prosecutors, police and other relevant bodies on the subject of forced child labor on the streets.(34)
Assistance for trafficking victims‡	Government program that funds seven NGOs to provide shelter and services to both domestic and foreign trafficking victims. Provides counseling, education assistance, job training for domestic victims of human trafficking and, among other services, visa provision and legal services for foreign victims of human trafficking.(2) In 2013, provided $128,000 for trafficking victims.(2) The State Coordinator expanded number of trafficking monitoring teams to include mental health professionals, developed guidelines on assisting trafficking victims for country's center on mental health, and trained mental health professionals, social workers, and law enforcement on trafficking.(2)
Implementation of the Strategy for Counter Trafficking in Human Beings for 2013-2015†	$300,000 joint Government and USAID project to implement the new Strategy for Counter Trafficking in Human Beings for 2013-2015. Includes estimating the extent of trafficking in the country as well as trainings of ministries and other individuals on trafficking issues in order to raise public awareness within the frame of the Strategy.(2)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

During the year, shelters assisted six trafficking victims, however research did not find the number of minors assisted in those shelters.(2) In the past, the Ombudsman for Human Rights attempted to collect data on child beggars from social service centers in five locations across the country. However, most of the social-service centers did not have statistical records due to insufficient financial and human capacity and the lack of jurisdiction on the issue of the rights of children who beg.(6)

BiH continues to lack government programs focusing on the worst forms of child labor, such as the use of children in begging and pick-pocketing. The Government has indicated that the number of centers that accommodate vulnerable children, including those found in begging, is inadequate.(6)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bosnia and Herzegovina (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Ensure that regulations exist in all entities that clearly describe the hazardous types of work prohibited to minors.	2009 – 2013
	Ensure that children engaged in prostitution are treated as victims rather than criminals under FBiH law.	2013
	Adopt proposed amendments to harmonize State and Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina criminal laws to explicitly prohibit all forms of trafficking.	2011 – 2013
	Amend laws in FBiH and BD to penalize any use of a child for prostitution.	2013

Enforcement	Ensure that sufficient investigation is conducted when children are found begging in the streets to determine whether these are possible trafficking cases.	2012 – 2013
	Ensure that labor inspectors do not require prior supervisory approval to conduct inspections and enable their free unannounced entry at inspection sites.	2013
	Collect complete data, disaggregated by age and type of trafficking (when applicable), for victims of trafficking, pimping, and pandering served by the justice system.	2013
	Improve coordination among relevant agencies to ensure children found in the worst forms of child labor are referred to appropriate services.	2013
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms at the state and entity levels to combat all worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2013
Government Policies	Assess the impact of policies aimed at assisting children and vulnerable populations, including the Roma population, on the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2013
Social Programs	Collect data on children involved in the worst forms of child labor, particularly those used in pickpocketing and commercial sexual exploitation in order to enhance policymakers' ability to identify problems more accurately and to address them more effectively.	2009 – 2013
	Promote Roma and other minority involvement in education by instituting support programs, culturally sensitive curriculum, and language barriers.	2013
	Expand efforts to assist Roma and other families to register for the proper citizenship documentation that entitles their children to access to school.	2011 – 2013
	Assess the impact of programs that serve children and vulnerable populations, including the Roma population, on the worst forms of child labor.	2013
	Institute programs, including long-term facilities, to address children's involvement in begging and pickpocketing rings.	2012 – 2013
	Improve the statistical capacity of social service centers to collect quality data on children working in forced begging and child victims of sexual exploitation, and ensure data on trafficking victims served by shelters is disaggregated between adults and children.	2012 – 2013

In 2013, Botswana made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued its Stay-in-School Program which is focused on training educators and social workers to explain the importance of education to parents, and to help them overcome issues preventing children from attending school. The Government is also funding and participating in a working group with NGOs to develop a list of hazardous occupations that should be prohibited for children, and to develop other laws related to child labor. However, children in Botswana continue to engage in child labor in cattle herding in rural areas and domestic service in urban centers. Key gaps remain in the country's legal framework against child labor, and enforcement of existing laws is insufficient.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Botswana are engaged in child labor, including in cattle herding in rural areas and domestic service in urban centers.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Botswana. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Domestic service (1-4, 7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor on farms and cattle posts,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (4, 8)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 8)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Truck drivers are among those who exploit children in commercial sexual exploitation in bars and along major highways in Botswana.(4, 8)

Research found no evidence that Botswanan law establishes a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children, although the Government has made efforts to compile one in recent years.(14, 15) The Government of Botswana does not yet have a law prohibiting trafficking in persons, although one is currently under consideration.(8, 16, 17) In 2013, the Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security (MDJS) held sessions on draft legislation, including one in February 2013 designed to solicit feedback from civil society.(8) In the absence of a comprehensive trafficking law, current laws do not fully protect against sex and labor trafficking in Botswana. While Section 114 of the Children's Act specifically prohibits the trafficking of children, it does not define child trafficking.(12) It is unclear whether the country's various laws on trafficking fully protect children from all forms of trafficking. In addition, while Section 60 of the Children's Act prohibits the use of a child in the production or trafficking of drugs, laws do not prohibit the use of children in other illicit activities or provide protections to children in domestic work.(12) Although research did not uncover any laws making education compulsory, the Government has reported to UNESCO that education is compulsory to age 16.(4, 17-19) Primary school education is free, but secondary school costs between $38 and $43 per year.(17) The law provides that children from poor families are exempted from paying school fees and shall receive free meals, toiletries, and school uniforms.(1, 4, 17, 18) However, the lack of free secondary education and a compulsory education law may leave some children more vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Home Affairs (MOLHA) Department of Labor	Enforce child labor laws and policies. Investigate workplaces that are suspected of violating child labor laws and authorization to end employment relationships involving children is tasked to the Commissioner of Labor within the MOLHA.(1, 4, 9, 14, 20, 21) Enforce the Employment Act, which includes those provisions related to the employment of children, within the scope of its labor inspections is charged to the Labor Inspection Unit under the Commissioner of Labor's Office.(1, 4, 9, 14, 20, 21)
District and Municipal Council Child Welfare Divisions	Enforce child labor laws at the local levels.(1, 14, 22)
Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security (MDJS)	Monitor suspected trafficking cases and trafficking-related matters.(16)

Law enforcement agencies in Botswana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Government reported that it investigated and processed child labor cases; however, research did not uncover any additional information about these actions.(1) The Ministry of Labor and Home Affairs (MOLHA) allocated funding to the Department of Labor specifically for child labor issues in the national 2012-2013 budget.(23) It is unclear how many labor inspectors are employed by the MOLHA or the level of funding available for inspections; however, the MOLHA has stated that it does not have enough labor investigators to address child labor in rural areas.(1, 14, 22)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Department of Social and Community Development began developing tools to support the enforcement of the Children's Act, and the MDJS agreed to include "children used by adults to commit crime" in the Child Justice data collection tool. In addition, the Government has contracted local NGOs to begin drafting referral procedures for orphans and vulnerable children.(17) Despite significant efforts in past years—including increases in training—to address trafficking in Botswana, it is reported that deficiencies in the way police handle cases of violence against women and children (e.g., targeting women in prostitution but not procurers or accomplices, as well as a lack of centralized referral systems and sufficient sensitization and investigative skills) constrain their ability to identify, prosecute, and prevent trafficking.(15, 16, 22) In addition, the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure and Evidence Act have not been used to prosecute or convict any trafficking offenders.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Advisory Committee on Child Labor	Include representatives from government agencies, various NGOs, worker federations, and employer organizations, and facilitate the oversight of child labor issues among all stakeholders.(2, 4, 14)
Child Labor Committees	Identify child laborers. Created by some villages. Include a social worker; local school teachers; members of the Village Development Committees (VDC), which are local government structures; labor inspection officers; and community leaders, including the chief and local priest.(3, 17)

In 2013, in addition to the above mechanisms, the Government is funding and participating in a working group with NGOs to develop a list of hazardous occupations that should be prohibited for children, and to develop other laws related to child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Botswana has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Kinds of Child Labor	Include action items such as addressing legislation and policy gaps, raising awareness, designing programs better targeted to address child labor, and providing training for relevant stakeholders and implementers.(20)
National Plan of Action for Orphans and Vulnerable Children (OVC)*	Respond to challenges faced by OVCs within other strategic policy plans, including Vision 2016, the 2010 National Development Plan (NDP 10), and the Second National Strategic Framework (NSF II). Facilitate decentralized operational planning, serve as a communication tool among key players, provide a long-term perspective for planning within a broad child protection framework, and facilitate the operationalization of the Children's Act (2009) and other OVC-related regulations.(24)
Presidential Task Group on Long-Term Vision for Botswana's Vision 2016 Strategy*	Acknowledge that parents sometimes intentionally choose not to send their children to school. Provide universal access to school and helping improve families' socioeconomic conditions so that children in poor and rural areas are no longer viewed as essential sources of labor and income.(25)
UN Development Assistance Framework for Botswana (2010-2016)*	Include the goal of reducing child labor to help create a protective and supportive environment for children.(26)
1996 Botswana National Youth Policy (NYP) and 2001 National Action Plan for Youth*	Address issues affecting youth, such as abuse of young people and the high number of young people who are not in school. Include government-funded programs and nationwide seminars to encourage youth entrepreneurship.(17, 18, 27)
MOLHA Sustainability Plan	Make child labor a part of the daily operations of labor inspectors, who work closely with the VDCs. Consist mostly of local leaders and volunteers who identify and refer cases of child labor to social workers.(23) That schools will be charged with monitoring school attendance to promote retention.(23)
Ministry and Department Action Plans	Efforts to address child labor by the Ministry of Education, the Department of Social Services, and the Botswana Police.(28) Several components by the Ministry of Gender and Child Welfare were implemented including the safety and protection of children and reaching out to children in need.(28)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Botswana funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (DWCP)*	ILO DWCP for Southern Africa focuses on employment creation, social protection, tripartism, social dialogue, and workers' rights. Addresses HIV/AIDS and child labor issues through addressing socioeconomic issues.(28, 29)
Stay-in-School Program *‡	Government program where educators and social workers collaborate to help keep children in school by explaining the importance of a child's education to parents and by working to overcome issues preventing children from attending school.(1, 14)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Botswana.

In 2013, the Government also began releasing data on a comprehensive census conducted in 2011, which does not appear to include information on child labor.(15, 30) The Government increased campaigns to raise awareness of child labor, including through its ministries and in partnership with NGOs.(1, 8, 14) Although the Government has programs to address child labor, little research is available on their impact, especially in addressing child domestic work and livestock herding.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Botswana (Table 9).

	Extend protection to all children working in child labor in domestic service.	2010 – 2013
	Ensure free education for all children and make education compulsory until at least the minimum age of employment.	2010 – 2013
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on the number of labor inspectors employed, funding levels, number of investigations and outcomes of cases, and ensure that adequate resources are available to enforce child labor laws throughout the whole country.	2012 – 2013

	Prosecute and convict those who violate anti-trafficking laws.	2011 – 2013
Government Policies	Assess the impact of the NYP and other policies on child labor.	2011 – 2013
Social Programs	Develop programs to address child labor in domestic work and cattle herding, and assess the impact of existing programs on child labor.	2012 – 2013

In 2013, Brazil made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government increased budget allocations for its flagship social protection programs, Bolsa Familia, Brasil Carinhoso, and Brasil sem Miséria, with their combined budgets growing from $20.33 billion in 2012 to $24.4 billion in 2013. The Government established new guidelines to prioritize child labor in the labor inspectorate system and created a national training academy for labor inspectors. The Government also conducted 8,277 child labor inspections and rescued 7,413 children from child labor. It restructured the National Program to Eradicate Child Labor to improve coordination and provide additional resources to local governments, and established a new national plan to combat sexual violence and commercial sexual exploitation of children. However, children in Brazil continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and domestic service. Some local governments lack adequate resources to fully implement national programs to combat child labor, including child trafficking.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Brazil are engaged in child labor in agriculture and domestic work. (1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Brazil.

In October 2013, the Government released the results of the 2012 National Household Survey (PNAD).(55) These data were not analyzed in time to be used in this report, so data from 2011 are included in Table 1. According to the 2012 PNAD, more than 3.5 million children ages 5 to 17 work in Brazil, a reduction of 5.4 percent compared with the 2011 PNAD survey results, which found 3.65 million child laborers.(55, 56) However, the Government did not conduct in-depth research on hard-to-reach populations, such as children engaged in drug trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, or labor in indigenous communities.

A 2013 study by the NGO Repórter Brasil estimates that more than 258,000 children ages 10 to 17 work in domestic service in third-party homes.(2) In October 2013, the Ministry of Justice released a study on human trafficking in border areas, covering 11 states. According to the study, Brazilian and Paraguayan indigenous children are trafficked for domestic service; Paraguayan indigenous children are trafficked for the purpose of begging; adolescents, including some from Haiti and South Korea, were trafficked to play in soccer clubs.(50, 53)

In March 2014, the newspaper Folha do São Paulo reported that every day on average, eight primary and secondary schools close in rural areas. In 2013, approximately 3,200 schools were closed because of the high costs and infrastructure problems.(57, 58) A 2009 UNICEF study reported that rural areas in Northeast Brazil face challenges in providing access to education. School infrastructure is precarious, and some schools do not have running water, electricity, or toilets.(59) Transportation is not always available because of aging buses, long travel distances, and bad road conditions. Some children lack birth certificates, which hinders their access to education.(59) A 2010 World Bank study found that only approximately 60 percent of youth enrolled in secondary education in Northeast Brazil complete their schooling.(60)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Brazil has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government of Brazil has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Although Brazil's minimum age legislation is higher than international standards regarding child labor, it includes an exemption for apprenticeships at age 14. The law also makes an exception for adolescents ages 14 to 15 to work under the supervision of their guardian or parents and on the same worksite—as long as it is not harmful to their development and is vital for their family's survival.(62, 69) Based on data from the 2009 PNAD and the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MTE), 1.13 million adolescents ages 14 to 15 work without registered apprenticeship contracts.(70) In 2011, the Brazilian News Agency reported that between 2005 and 2010, judges authorized more than 33,000 children under age 16 to work. Some of these authorizations allowed children to perform hazardous activities such as scavenging, construction, and fertilizer production.(71) In some cases, these authorizations were issued to children under age 14.(70) In 2013, the Labor Regional Court of the 2nd Region determined that the labor justice system has the sole authority to grant work permits. This ruling will allow the labor judges to apply child-labor legislation and streamline the process of issuing work authorizations.(72, 73)

Brazil's definition of forced labor, which is broader than that of the ILO Conventions, includes unacceptable or degrading working conditions as a form of forced labor. However, the Penal Code's definition of trafficking in persons

Brazil

does not cover trafficking for the purposes of labor.(64, 65) Resolution 93 of 2010 grants permanent visa status to foreign victims of human trafficking or labor exploitation, including commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and indentured labor.(74) Notwithstanding, in February and March 2013, the Government deported 47 Paraguayan workers, including seven adolescents who were victims of forced labor.(8, 75)

During the reporting period, the Government approved legislation to lower the age to begin compulsory education from 6 to 4, and to extend labor protections to domestic workers.(76, 77) In 2013, the Brazilian Chamber of Deputies established a task force to discuss efforts to combat child labor and propose changes in legislation and new actions to address it.(78) The São Paulo State Government approved legislation to combat forced and exploitative labor in supply chains, which will revoke for 10 years the business license of any enterprise that directly or indirectly employs workers under forced labor conditions. The revocation can be ordered by any judicial body or jurisdiction hearing the case.(79, 80)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Employment (MTE)	Conduct labor inspections, enforce child and forced labor laws, and monitor child and forced labor.(19) Labor inspections are planned by regional offices based on MTE's goals, analyses of labor market data, and available human and financial resources.(81) Has special units composed of labor inspectors, Federal Police (FP), and federal labor prosecutors to conduct forced labor inspections.(19) Work with the Ministry of Justice and other government agencies when they find foreign workers who have been trafficked and work under forced labor conditions.(82)
Federal Labor Prosecutor's Office (MPT)	Prosecute child labor violations by working with 24 prosecutors from its National Committee to Combat Child Labor, an in-house body that directs the MPT's efforts to combat child labor.(83, 84) Carry out awareness-raising campaigns. Monitor whether child labor policies are implemented and municipalities budget the required 5 percent for initiatives to protect children's rights.(19, 84, 85)
FP	Investigate cases of forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(19)
Public Ministry (MP)	Investigate and prosecute cases of forced labor and human trafficking.(17)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Lead efforts to combat human trafficking.(19)
Office of the President's Secretariat of Human Rights (SDH)	Coordinate efforts to protect human rights, including combating forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Sponsor a human rights violation hotline, Dial 100, which directs complaints to appropriate institutions for follow-up.(19)
Office of the President's Secretariat for Women's Policies	Operate Dial 180, a hotline that receives complaints about human trafficking.(19)

Law enforcement agencies in Brazil took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the MTE had 2,800 labor inspectors who worked in all 26 states. It established a training academy to enhance the skills of labor inspectors, which will be coordinated by the Secretary of Labor Inspections.(19, 86) The MTE's budget reached $29.9 billion, a 13-percent increase over its 2012 budget.(19) The MTE established new guidelines for labor inspectors to address child labor that require its regional offices to prioritize cases of child labor and those involving adolescent apprentices, include child-labor inspections and related activities in their annual planning, and coordinate activities with other government agencies and child-labor committees at the state or local level.(87)

During the reporting period, the MTE inspected 275,139 worksites, carried out 8,277 child labor inspections, and conducted 162 operations against forced labor. As a result, MTE removed 7,432 children from child labor, rescued 1,658 workers from forced labor conditions, and imposed fines of more than $1.4 billion for all labor violations.(17, 88) Data are unavailable about the total number of children under age 18 who were rescued from forced labor conditions in 2013.

During the last 4 years, the Public Ministry (MP) has opened 702 investigations of forced labor and the National Police conducted an additional 185 investigations. Of these cases, 469 have been tried, but no sentences have been issued.(17, 89) The MP has requested that the National Council of Justice prioritize these cases and establish targets for issuing sentences.(89, 90) It is unclear whether these investigations or trials involved forced child labor.

In 2013, the Federal Labor Prosecutor's Office (MPT) published guidelines to mainstream child labor into the actions performed by labor prosecutors, conducted child labor investigations, and raised awareness of child labor.(91) The Office of the President's Secretariat of Human Rights' (SDH) Dial 100 hotline received 124,079 complaints related to violations of children's rights. Approximately 9,900 of these complaints were related to child labor.(19, 92) In addition, states have established mechanisms to receive child labor complaints. For example, the Secretariat for Social Development in the State of Minas Gerais receives such complaints through its human rights hotline.(19, 93)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Between January and June 2013, the Secretariat for Women's Policies' Dial 180 hotline received 263 human trafficking complaints, compared with 17 complaints during the same period in 2012.(94) Although no exact numbers are available, Brazilian prosecutors tried at least 40 individuals for sex trafficking and forced labor; at least 15 of them were convicted with sentences ranging from fines of $135,000 to 15 years in prison.(95) The Government does not distinguish between adult trafficking and child trafficking cases in its public reporting, so it is difficult to discern how many of these 15 individuals were convicted of child trafficking.

Safernet Brazil, a partnership between the Government and an NGO, receives online complaints about human rights violations, including child pornography and human trafficking. Safernet Brazil hosts a helpline to provide counseling support and a one-stop Web site with information about cybercrimes in Brazil.(96, 97) In 2013, Safernet received more than 240,000 complaints, 80,000 of which pertained to child pornography. As a result of those complaints, 134 individuals were sent to prison for child pornography, an increase of 127 percent over 2012, when 59 individuals went to prison for this offense.(98, 99)

In 2013, the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) partnered with the U.S. Government to train more than 360 state law enforcement officials on human trafficking and victims' assistance. The MOJ also trained law enforcement officials, including approximately 2,000 police officers, in 20 cities.(17) The Government signed an agreement with UNODC to establish a country office that will promote South-South and intraregional cooperation, as well as raised awareness of human trafficking.(19, 100)

Based on law enforcement and victim assistance data, the Government and UNODC published a study of human trafficking, which sheds light on the extent of this crime. The study reported that the Federal Police investigated 514 cases of human trafficking between 2005 and 2011: 344 of these cases were related to forced labor, 157 to international trafficking, and 13 to domestic trafficking.(101) The study also pointed out that Brazil has challenges in collecting criminal evidence because of the lack of legislation that covers all forms of human trafficking.(101) Furthermore, according to a 2012 report by the Brazilian Senate, some local governments lack adequate resources to combat human trafficking and assist human trafficking victims.(102)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence against Children and Adolescents†	Lays out a set of strategies to prevent sexual violence, protect children's rights, and assist child victims of sexual violence as well as their families. Approved in 2013.(111) Discussed throughout Brazil, harmonized with other child-related policies, and included in the 4-year National Development Plan.(111)
10-Year Plan for Children and Adolescents	Outlines the policy framework to promote children's rights. Aims to expand and coordinate policies and actions to address child labor.(112) In January 2014, CONANDA established guidelines for states and municipalities to develop 10-year plans for children and adolescents based on the goals and objectives of the 10-Year Plan for Children and Adolescents.(113)
Second Plan to Combat Forced Labor	Establishes the policy framework to address forced labor, including forced child labor.(111, 114)
Second Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons†	Guides efforts to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking. Adopted in 2013.(17, 19)
Decent Work National Plan and the Decent Work Agenda for Youth	The Decent Work National Plan and the Decent Work Agenda for Youth both outline policies to provide decent work opportunities and increase access to education and vocational training.(115, 116)
National Educational Plan†	Aims to expand access to education and improve education quality. Has 20 goals, including increased access to daycare, universal basic education, an end to illiteracy, and conversion of 50 percent of public schools into full-time schools, extending the number of school hours per day to 7 or more. Under the Plan, 10 percent of Brazil's GDP will be allocated to education.(117-119)

Aims to lift 16 million people out of extreme poverty, and build 2 million houses for low-income families and 6,000 daycare centers and preschools.(120)

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

In 2013, the Government hosted the Third Global Conference on Child Labor, which brought together 1,500 participants from more than 150 countries. Country participants signed a non-binding declaration, the Brasilia Declaration, that urges countries to bolster efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor and cooperate to achieve this goal.(19, 121)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Brazil funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating and preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Plan to Eradicate Child Labor (Programa de Erradicação do Trabalho Infantil [PETI])‡	Combats child labor by providing conditional cash transfers to families with working children who commit to keep their children in school and out of work. Beneficiaries receive tailored social services based on their needs and vulnerability.(110, 122, 123) Implemented in more than 3,500 municipalities; more than 820,000 children benefit from the program. Tracks project beneficiaries through a national monitoring system.(110, 123) In 2013, the Government restructured PETI to redefine responsibilities for federal, state, and municipal governments and provides additional resources to states and municipalities for implementation, with a focus on 1,913 municipalities where 78 percent of child labor in Brazil occurs, according to the 2010 National Census.(41, 124)
Family Grant (Bolsa Familia)‡	Aims to combat poverty by supplementing family income and targeting rural and urban areas where child labor is prevalent. One condition for family participation is that children under age 18 attend school regularly; more than 13 million families participate.(125, 126) Its budget grew from $8.5 billion in 2012 to $10.1 billion in 2013.(20) To address non-compliance with the school attendance requirements, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Social Development and Fight against Hunger, and local and state governments track school attendance every two months. In October and November 2013, approximately 96 percent of Bolsa Familia 's children met program requirements; this is the highest number since 2006, when these government agencies began to monitor school attendance.(127, 128)
Caring Brazil Program (Brasil Carinhoso)‡	Combats extreme poverty among participants of the Bolsa Familia program, whose monthly income per capita is less than $137. Brasil Carinhoso targets families with children ages 0 to 15 and benefits 16.4 million people. (129, 130) The budget rose from $930 million in 2012 to $1.67 billion in 2013.(19)
Brazil Without Misery (Brasil sem Miséria)‡	Seeks to lift more than 16 million people out of extreme poverty in rural and urban areas by expanding access to social protection programs, improving productivity and job skills, and providing access to basic services.(131) The budget increased from $10.6 million in 2012 to $12.7 billion in 2013.(19)
Job Training and Employment National Program (Programa Nacional de Acesso ao Ensino Técnico e Emprego [PRONATEC])‡	Provides job training and employment opportunities to youth older than age 16. In 2013, the Government made PRONATEC a permanent program, and will have 1 million spots available for Bolsa Familia beneficiaries.(132, 133)
More Education Program (Programa Mais Educação)‡	Offers educational services such as afterschool activities and remedial activities to reduce dropout rates and grade repetition as well as to combat child labor. In 2013, the program expanded to 49,000 public schools, including schools where the majority of students benefit from Bolsa Familia .(134, 135)
National Household Survey‡	The Government conducts an annual national household survey that includes child labor.(136)
South-South Cooperation Project‡	Funds projects implemented by the ILO-IPEC to promote South-South cooperation. In 2013, the Government tripled the amount of funding (from $1 million to $3 million) to promote the exchange of good practices to combat child labor in Latin America.(137) It continued to partner with the Governments of Haiti and the United States, as well as with the ILO, to combat child labor in Haiti.(138, 139)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Brazil, aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(140)
Project to Consolidate Efforts to Combat Forced Labor in Brazil and Peru	$6 million USDOL-funded 4-year project implemented by the ILO to combat forced labor, including forced child labor, in Brazil and Peru, and to share Brazil's good practices with the Government of Peru and Peruvian stakeholders.(141, 142)
Project to Promote Horizontal Cooperation in South America	$7.65 million USDOL-funded 4-year project implemented by the ILO-IPEC to promote collaboration among Bolivia, Brazil, Ecuador, and Paraguay to combat the worst forms of child labor. Rescued 8,525 children from child labor by providing educational services in the four countries; conducted capacity-building, awareness-raising, and research activities.(143, 144)

Program	Description
Project to Support National Efforts toward a child labor-free state, Bahia	$4.9 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO-IPEC to support the State of Bahia to become the first state free of child labor. Provided educational services to more than 16,000 children, including Afro-descendants.(145, 146)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Brazil.

Although the National Plan to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI) and Bolsa Familia have reduced child labor in Brazil, challenges remain. Research has found that some vulnerable families continue to value children's work over education. (109, 147) Some PETI beneficiaries are not fully complying with program requirements, and reports claim that some children do not attend school while others combine school and work.(148, 149) According to a 2010 report, only 26 percent of street children benefit from Bolsa Familia.(44) Because of decentralization of PETI and Bolsa Familia, local communities are responsible for their implementation; however, they do not have the resources to both fully implement and monitor the programs. Despite the increased funding from the central Government, in some cases, the operational costs of these programs exceed the funding provided by the Federal Government or local governments lack the institutional capacity to implement them.(2, 150, 151) Furthermore, more than 3,200 municipalities in Brazil carry out actions to combat child labor.(152) However, the Government does not have in place an effective monitoring system to track the implementation of child labor policies and programs, which could be used to identify needed technical assistance for local communities and to share best practices.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR, INCLUDING ITS WORST FORMS

In 2013, Burkina Faso made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government rescued more than 1,000 victims of child trafficking and provided child labor training to all the labor inspectors. It also launched and continued to operate key social programs that address the root causes of child labor, including birth registry and food-aid programs. However, children in Burkina Faso continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in mining. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. In addition, the lack of funding has hampered the implementation of child labor policies. Moreover, the social programs related to the worst forms of child labor do not match the scope of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burkina Faso are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in mining. (1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burkina Faso.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	42.1 (2,116,752)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	41.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	21.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		57.6

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

Burkina Faso

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In Burkina Faso, some boys placed in the care of Koranic teachers to be educated are forced by their teachers to beg in the streets and to surrender the money they have earned.(5, 7, 17, 33, 36-39) Koranic students may also be required to work in cotton fields.(39) Street children sometimes beg, including in the two largest cities of Ouagadougou and Bobo-Dioulasso.(5, 7, 32-34, 36) Burkina Faso is a destination, transit point, and source for child trafficking.(5, 7, 37) Boys are trafficked from Burkina Faso to Côte d'Ivoire to work in the cocoa sector, and to Mali to work in rice fields.(40, 41) Nigerian children are also trafficked into forced commercial sexual exploitation in Burkina Faso.(32, 37)

In Burkina Faso, the lack of educational infrastructure hinders children's access to education , particularly in rural areas.(10, 42) The crisis is especially acute among the 49,975 refugees—many resulting from the conflict in Mali—hosted in Burkina Faso as of May 2013.(18, 43-45) A lack of government resources has limited many Malian refugee children's access to education.(46, 47) Students are also abused physically and sexually by their teachers, which may discourage some children from attending school.(7) In addition, one in three Burkinabé children is not registered at birth. Some schools' requirement for birth certificates decreases the likelihood of children attending school, which might increase their vulnerability to exploitation.(7, 48)

In addition, Burkina Faso continued to experience a boom in gold mining.(8, 18) The result is an increased number of children working in gold mines and thousands of students leaving school.(2, 13, 18, 49-51)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Burkina Faso has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Labor Code (52)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Labor Code (1, 52, 53)

Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Labor Code (2, 52)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Trafficking of Persons Law (55, 56)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Labor Code (2, 52)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Labor Code (2, 52)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	21	Legislation title unknown (57)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Education Law (42, 58, 59)
Free Public Education	Yes		Education Law (42, 58, 59)

* No conscription or no standing military.

The Labor Code provides an exception for light work, allowing children age 12 and older to engage in domestic or seasonal work such as farming. This exception increases the likelihood that children ages 12 to 15 may work under hazardous conditions in agriculture and domestic service.(32, 52, 60) Research identified inadequacies in current legislation related to child pornography. Moreover, the Burkinabé Association for the Fight Against the Exploitation of Children for Commercial Ends and EPCAT have recommended that the Penal Code define child pornography and include adequate penalties for the possession of child pornography.(18) Although the law mandates free education through primary school, in practice, schools often ask for contributions and students are frequently charged other fees, which may increase the students vulnerability to exploitation.(32, 42, 58, 61) In addition, research did not uncover a public version of the Government's decree for minimum age for voluntary military service.(57)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Civil Service, Labor, and Social Security (MOL)	Enforce labor laws, including child labor laws.(2, 18, 40)
Ministry of Social Action and National Solidarity (MSA)	Provide child protection services.(18)
Ministry of Security's Morals Brigade of the National Police	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, including investigations into the commercial sexual exploitation of children, trafficking, child labor, and drug-related crimes.(1, 2, 40)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce and prosecute criminal laws, including child labor laws.(2, 40)

Law enforcement agencies in Burkina Faso took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms, during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Government, with the support of ILO-IPEC, trained 291 labor inspectors from the Ministry of Civil Service, Labor, and Social Security (MOL) on child labor issues.(18) However, research indicates that inspectors lack the funds, staffing, training, facilities, transportation, and fuel needed to carry out inspections effectively.(1, 5, 7, 18, 62) Moreover, the ILO Committee of Experts has noted that the labor inspectorate is ill-equipped to conduct inspections in the agricultural sector, in which many children work in hazardous and sometimes forced conditions.(63) No funds were specifically dedicated to the enforcement of child labor laws.(2, 18) Finally, the number of child labor violations found, fines issued, and fines collected in 2013 is unavailable.(18) The Embassy of Burkina Faso to the United States has noted that when inspections occur and violations are found, inspection officers issue formal warnings, specifying the required changes and deadlines.(64, 65) If the requirements are not met within the specified timeframe, inspectors are authorized to impose penalties on the employer.(65) To date, no penalties have been issued to employers. This is largely because many children work on their own accord, for example in artisanal gold mines, and not under an employer.(62, 64, 65)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Government conducted 240 anti-trafficking police patrols in targeted vulnerable villages.(45) Police officers from Burkinabé and Côte d'Ivoire intercepted 55 girls and 142 boys being trafficked across the border. In addition, police officers in Burkina Faso rescued 387 girls and 562 boys from internal trafficking.(18) All the rescued children were referred to Ministry of Social Action and National Solidarity (MSA) social services.(45) During the reporting period, the Government trained 700 local officials and community leaders on trafficking, including on victim identification and assistance, as well as in procedures for investigating and prosecuting cases.(45) Research found that the police force has not made a systematic effort to identify trafficking victims. Moreover, the UN CRC has noted that the police force also does not have adequate funding and staffing to carry out its mandate.(7) No statistics are available on the numbers of violations, convictions, or sentences related to these crimes.(18)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MOL's Directorate to Combat Child Labor and its Worst Forms	Coordinate and lead interagency efforts to combat forced and hazardous child labor. Serve as the Secretariat for the National Steering Committee to Combat Child Labor (SSC).(1, 2, 64) The Ministries of Justice, Social Action, Security, Basic Education, Mines, Human Rights, and Health all are involved in the SSC.(1)
National Coordination Committee against Trafficking (NCC)	Oversee implementation of the National Action Plan on child labor, including trafficking. Chaired by the MOL.(57) In 2013, the Government established a new decree to define the roles and responsibilities of the NCC more clearly, to improve coordination efforts.(18)
National Committee for Vigilance and Surveillance Against the Trafficking in Persons and Assimilated Practices	Coordinate actions against trafficking in persons at the national level. Chaired by the MSA.(57)

Sources indicate that competing priorities and a lack of human and financial resources have limited the effectiveness of the coordination efforts of the National Coordination Committee Against Trafficking (NCC).(1, 18) During the reporting period, the Government held meetings, both nationally and in each of the country's 13 regions, to discuss anti-trafficking coordination with various government agencies and members of civil society.(45)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Burkina Faso has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor 2012–2015 (NAPWFCL)	Aims to prevent and protect children from the worst forms of child labor through awareness raising, data collection, rehabilitation services, increased access to education, and better law enforcement. Calls for the involvement of 11 ministries, particularly the MSA and the MOL, to reduce exploitative child labor significantly by 2015.(18, 66)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan on Child Labor	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015 and to continue to progress toward the total elimination of child labor.(67)
Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development 2011–2015	Mentions the Government's challenge to eliminate child labor and includes strategies to reduce poverty and ensure primary education for all.(2, 18, 68)
Joint Cooperation Agreement Burkina Faso and Côte d'Ivoire	Calls for increased cooperation between Burkina Faso and Côte d'Ivoire against cross-border trafficking.(45, 69)
Decent Work Country Program 2007–2015	Incorporates child labor concerns into the strategy for work.(40, 70)
Ministry of Youth, Vocational Training, and Employment's Action Plan 2012–2014*	Calls for the construction of 45 vocational training centers and a central vocational training center for each region.(60)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

Across the various plans and policies, the existence of multiple coordination mechanisms results in a cumbersome process, while a lack of sufficient funding for implementation presents challenges for national action plans. The Directorate to Combat Child Labor and its Worst Forms acknowledges that inadequate funding of the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor hinders its implementation.(1, 18, 71)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Burkina Faso funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National School Feeding Program*	Government program that provides one meal a day to students during the 3-month “hungry season.” The U.S. Department of Agriculture, USAID, and WFP contribute to the program.(2)
Reducing Child Labor Through Education and Services	$5 million, USDOL-funded 4-year project implemented by Counterpart International that targets 10,000 children engaged in or at risk of entering child labor in the production of cotton and in gold mining.(72, 73) Aims to increase access to education, social protection, and training programs. Also targets 1,000 households of child beneficiaries with livelihood services.(72, 73)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor.(74)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa and Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation Through ECOWAS I & II	USDOL-funded regional projects that supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub-region by providing policy and capacity building support for all ECOWAS states.(75, 76)
Control Stores†‡	$130 million, Government-funded, program that provides food price controls to vulnerable populations. In 2013, the Government operated 140 stores.(18)
Civil Registry Offices†‡	Government program that opened civil registry offices in maternity wards to register newborn babies.(45, 57)
Anti-Trafficking Campaign	MSA program that conducted anti-trafficking awareness programs through theater forums, training workshops, community meetings, and radio programming in all 13 regions of Burkina Faso.(45, 57)
Child Abuse Hotline	MSA program that operates a free hotline to report child abuse, including child labor.(32, 57)
Transit Centers†	Government program that runs 23 transit centers welcoming children rescued from trafficking.(45)
Child Anti-Trafficking Project (Fonds Enfants)	8-year project funded by the Government of Germany to combat child trafficking that conducts awareness-raising campaigns and improves access to education, social services, and protection.(77) Aims to build institutional and judicial capacity to combat child trafficking.(77)
Quarrying and Mining Child Labor Project	Multi-donor-funded, project that seeks to set up nursery schools and provide access to primary and vocational school for children involved in quarrying and mining.(78) Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in quarries and mines.(78)
Country Program*	WFP-funded program that promotes primary education and food security. Aims to reach 560,000 beneficiaries annually.(79)
Refugee Assistance Program*	UNICEF-funded project that provides schooling to 5,000 child refugees to prevent the exploitation of refugee children.(80)
Emergency Assistance†	$4.5 million, USAID-funded project that provides emergency humanitarian aid to refugees and other vulnerable populations.(81)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Burkina Faso.

Although Burkina Faso has social programs to address the worst forms of child labor in the production of cotton and in mining and quarrying, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem fully. In addition, research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to address the worst forms of child labor in such activities as livestock raising, domestic service, forced begging, or street vending. It is unknown how many complaints related to child labor were made to MSA’s hotline.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

81. U.S. Embassy- Ouagadougou. reporting, October 25, 2013.

In 2013, Burundi made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government collected and published data on the prevalence and nature of child labor for the first time and used these data to revise the 2010–2015 National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor to include a new list of worst forms of child labor. Additionally, a technical sub-committee of the National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor was established to focus on the National Plan of Action's specific initiatives to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Burundi continue to engage in child labor in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Education in Burundi is not compulsory; the age to which education is free remains below the minimum age for work, leaving children vulnerable to exploitation. In addition, the Government did not conduct any child labor inspections nor did it train inspectors on child labor law enforcement during the reporting period. Finally, while the Government has drafted at least three policies to provide greater protection to Burundian children, none has yet been adopted for implementation.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burundi are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-7) According to a national study published by the Government of Burundi and ILO, the majority of children work in cash crops such as tea, coffee, cotton, sugarcane, and palm oil.(4, 8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burundi.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Commercial sexual exploitation of children exists in Burundi.(3-7) Older women sometimes push girls into commercial sexual exploitation; they initially offer the children free room and board, but then force the children into commercial sexual exploitation so they can pay for their expenses.(5-7) Poverty may also cause girls to enter commercial sexual exploitation to obtain money for basic needs.(12) Male tourists also are reported to sexually exploit girls in Burundi.(6) There are reports that Burundian children are trafficked internally for work in domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 7, 13, 14) Burundian girls are also trafficked to other countries for commercial sexual exploitation.(6, 7, 13, 14)

Burundian children also work in domestic service and mining.(1, 3, 4, 8) There are reports of the internal trafficking of children for work in domestic service, and of trafficking for exploitation in various forms of forced labor in Tanzania. Children are also reportedly lured under false promises or coerced into forced labor in domestic service or agriculture.(6)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Burundi has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

* No conscription or no standing military.

The Penal Code does not contain explicit penalties for forced labor.(14, 19) And while it sets 18 as the minimum age for military recruitment, the Penal Code makes only the military use of children under age 16 a crime.(19, 23, 24) This legal gap leaves children ages 16 and 17 vulnerable to potential be used in armed conflict; the ILO Committee of Experts has expressed concern over this vulnerability and has urged the Government to raise the military recruitment age to 18.(24) Education in Burundi is free and compulsory until grade six or approximately age 12.(4, 21, 22) This standard makes children ages 12 to 15 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school and are below the minimum age for work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOL)	Enforce all labor laws, including those on child labor.(3)
National Police's Brigade for the Protection of Women and Children	Enforce criminal laws that prohibit of the worst forms of child labor and protect children from criminal influences and harm.(21)

Law enforcement agencies in Burundi took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security Agency employed 18 labor inspectors. According to an ILO official, the number of inspectors is not adequate to enforce child labor laws.(4) Additionally, inspectors are limited to registered businesses, while most child labor cases happen in unregistered or informal businesses. Inspections are further hindered by a lack of resources, such as office equipment or fuel for vehicles.(4) Inspectors only initiate investigations in response to complaints, although a formal system has not been established to file such complaints.(3, 4, 21) There were no child labor inspections conducted during the reporting period, thus no violations were found or no citations were issued.(4)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, ILO-IPEC trained judges of labor courts, labor inspectors, juvenile police officers, and legal advisors of NGOs working on child labor issues in matters of litigation related to child labor.(4) No information on the number of cases investigated, citations issued, or prosecutions made was found.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor, including through the implementation of community development programs that address the education and socio-economic reintegration of children engaged in or removed from the worst forms of child labor.(14, 21, 25, 26) Permanent Secretariat of the Committee was established in 2013; meets regularly and focuses on specific initiatives within the National Plan of Action to combat the worst forms of child labor.(4) Committee, in cooperation with UNICEF and ILO-IPEC, organized a training on the worst forms of child labor for staff of Department of Child and Family in the Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights, Refugee Repatriation, and Gender (MNS).(4)
Centers of Family Development	Province-level units of the MNS's National Directorate of the Promotion of Women and Gender Equality to coordinate and implement policies on children, women, and the family.(27, 28)

The National Independent Commission for Human Rights is an independent, government-supported committee created to defend and promote human rights.(29, 30)

The Committee on the Rights of the Child has expressed concern that the Centers of Family Development do not cover all regions of the country.(27)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Burundi has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2014–2016)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2016; includes an updated list of the worst forms of child labor.(4)
Poverty Reduction Strategic Plan*	Seeks to reduce poverty, increase economic growth and development, and strengthen government institutions, including schools.(11, 13, 14, 21)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

In 2013, the Government, in cooperation with ILO, published a study on the incidence of child labor by sector and region. The Government also revised the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor to include a new list of worst forms of child labor; this list was expanded by the National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor based on studies conducted by ILO and UNICEF. These two organizations supported the Ministry of Labor to develop the list of worst forms of child labor in Burundi so that the Ministerial Ordinance No. 630/1, the government order regulating and limiting child labor, could be revised accordingly.(4) The Government has not yet adopted or implemented the National Plan of Action.(4)

The Ministry of Labor and Social Security has adopted a plan to eliminate all forms of child labor by 2025; however, this plan has not yet been implemented, as the Government is waiting on assistance from UNICEF and ILO.(31)

The Government also approved a National Policy of Child Protection and a National Strategy for Children Living on the Street with UNICEF's support, but neither policy has been implemented.(32)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Burundi funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Domestic Labor Study†‡	Qualitative study carried out by MOL with the support of UNICEF Burundi; study is being finalized and will be made publicly available in February 2014.(4)
Child Trafficking Study†‡	Implemented by the National Independent Commission for Human Rights to better understand how to eliminate child trafficking in Burundi.(33)
Department of Child and Family Interventions‡	Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights, Refugee, and Gender programs that help reintegrate street children through local associations by annually allocating a certain amount of money; assist vulnerable families in developing revenue-generating activities; provides financial assistance to 40 professional children training centers; financially support health care for children at some local hospitals.(34)

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Burundi

In 2013, the Government released the results of a 2012 rapid assessment of the sexual and commercial exploitation of children.(16, 21, 34)

The Government relies primarily on NGOs to provide care and services for exploited children.(35) The Government's Municipal Council for Youth and Children (CMEJ) aims to provide a network of services for street children, former child soldiers, and child trafficking victims; the CMEJ was established in 2009 and began drafting an action plan in 2010.(13, 36) However, the action plan is not yet operational.(13)

Although the Government has supported programs to reach children engaged in some forms of child labor, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in agriculture or commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Burundi (Table 8).

In 2013, Cabo Verde made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established the National Committee to Combat and Eradicate Child Labor in Cabo Verde (CDNPETI). Cabo Verde continued to participate in national and regional projects to combat child labor and enhance services to victims. However, children continue to engage in child labor in street work and domestic service. Cabo Verde continues to have gaps in its laws protecting children from child labor and its worst forms; it requires compulsory education only to the age of 14 and lacks a list of hazardous occupations for children and protections against the commercial sexual exploitation of children above the age of 13.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cabo Verde are engaged in child labor in street work and domestic service.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Cabo Verde.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The commercial sexual exploitation of children is a problem in Cabo Verde, including exploitation in the tourism industry.(1, 2) There is evidence that children are victims of prostitution in Santa Maria, Praia, and Mindelo.(1)

Cabo Verde

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Children typically engage in street work in Cabo Verde's urban centers.(2, 7, 8, 11) The majority of children begin working on the streets when they are under age 15.(12) With the exception of car washing, specific activities related to children's work on the streets are unknown.(2, 5, 7, 8, 10, 11)

Children from Cabo Verde are at risk of becoming victims of trafficking by being forced to transport drugs to Brazil and Portugal.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cabo Verde has ratified all key international conventions on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Section 20 of Education Law of 2010 (2, 14, 17)

The Labor Code only applies to employment relationships with private, cooperative, and mixed enterprises and, in certain instances, public entities. Therefore, children working outside of an employment contract do not have the same protections under child labor laws and regulations as children working in the formal sector.(12)

In 2012, the Government developed an agreement with the Government of Brazil to receive technical assistance to develop a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children under age 18.(18) The Government of Cabo Verde, however, has not yet established a hazardous list.(5, 12, 13)

Children age 17 can also be conscripted into the military during times of conflict.(16, 19) This provision conflicts with ILO C. 182, which considers compulsory recruitment of children into armed conflict a worst form of child labor.

The Penal Code bans the use of minors under 16 for prostitution and sexual exploitation and children under 14 for sex shows and pornography.(15) The Penal Code does not extend these protections to all children under 18, leaving children ages 14–17 vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation.

By law, children are required to attend school only until age 11, leaving children ages 11 to 15 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school and are not legally permitted to work.(2)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
General Inspector for Labor (IGT)	Enforce child labor, working closely with the police, Office of the Attorney General, and the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICAA).(5, 12)
Ministry of Justice, leading the Ministry of Internal Administration, the Judicial Police (PJ), and the National Police (PN)	Combat human trafficking and prosecute criminal violations of child labor laws.(20)
ICCA and the National Committee for Child Labor Combat and Eradication in Cabo Verde (CDNPCTI)	Enforce the laws related to worst forms of child labor. CDNPCTI supervised by ICCA, in collaboration with other institutions, which all meet four times a year to discuss implementation, monitoring, and evaluation of CDNPCTI's objectives.(5)

Law enforcement agencies in Cabo Verde took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, 1,701 inspections were carried out in all formal sectors of the economy, including in places where children may work. Inspectors only found hazardous child labor, but no information is available on how many cases were found. It is unclear how hazardous labor was identified in these cases, since there is no hazardous labor list.(5) No penalties or citations for child labor violations were issued.(5)

According to the IGT, inspectors have sufficient resources to carry out inspections in the formal sector in São Vicente, Santiago, and Sal. Inspections do not take place outside the areas mentioned or anywhere in the informal sector due to budget restrictions.(5, 12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

According to the most recently available information, the PJ employs about 150 officers, and the PN employs about 1,500 officers.(17) The PJ reported investigating two cases of human trafficking for sexual exploitation of children in the city of Praia on the island of Santiago. In the two cases, police identified 17 child victims of sex trafficking. Four individuals were arrested and remained in custody at the end of the reporting period.(17) In April 2013, government prosecutions resulted in convictions of three men involved in the sexual abuse and sex trafficking of six boys in Praia. One foreign national offender was sentenced to 5 years' imprisonment; two Cabo Verdean offenders, who were sentenced to 4 years and 6 months' and 4 years and 8 months' imprisonment, have appealed their sentence.(21)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
CDNPETI	Coordinate the execution of the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labor (NPAECL), ensuring that national laws comply with international conventions on child labor, and producing yearly reports on child labor issues for the National Assembly. Committee established in February 2013.(8, 22)
National Unit for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor	Coordinate and monitor the implementation of all national programs and activities to prevent and eradicate child labor. Participate in CDNPETI meetings to coordinate collective efforts to address child labor. Provide direct services to those affected by child labor.(8, 22)

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Municipal Committees for the Defense of Rights of Children and Adolescents (CMDDCA)	Assist and monitor vulnerable children and their families.(10) Seventeen CMDDCAs operating under municipal jurisdiction; includes representatives from the Ministry of Education and Sports, municipalities, health departments, the PN, courts, and other offices.(10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Cabo Verde has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
NPAECL	Prioritizes the eradication of the worst forms of child labor. Outlines specific objectives, including data collection, institutional capacity-building, and enhancement of measures to prevent, protect, and remove children from involvement in child labor.(10) Aims to engage multiple stakeholders, such as government agencies, workers' organizations, and child workers and their families, in the efforts to achieve these goals.(10) The Government is currently working to update the NPAECL.(22)
Regional Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015.(23, 24)
Strategic Education Plan for 2003–2013	Outlines educational priorities to prevent and reduce child labor. Includes objectives such as strengthening mechanisms to monitor school dropouts, promoting non-formal and vocational training, and increasing financial assistance for low-income families to increase their access to education.(12)
Strategic Plan for the implementation of the National Policy for Children and Adolescents*	Aims to increase coordination among agencies serving children and youth, including the abandoned and vulnerable. Includes plans to establish a standing committee to oversee its implementation and foster collaboration among public bodies.(25, 26)
Poverty Reduction and Growth Plan (DCRP) (2012-2016)*	Targets the elimination of child labor through strategies to reduce poverty, foster economic development, and bolster education.(8, 27) During the reporting period, the Government continued to incorporate child labor issues in the DCRP.(5)
National Action Plan for Human and Citizenship Rights*	Targets human rights violations, including those impacting children and adolescents. For example, the policy explicitly proposes the development of mechanisms to identify cases of forced labor involving children under age 14, and programs to remove children from those situations.(7) However, it is unclear whether any existing policies address mechanisms to identify forced labor cases involving children ages 14 through 17.
Universal Primary Education Policy*	Provides tuition-free, universal primary education for children ages 6 to 12.(2)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Cabo Verde participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Emergency and reception centers for children (CEI) and hotline (Disque Denuncia)‡	Government program run by the Cabo Verdean ICCA. Operates emergency and reception centers for victims of child abuse and a hotline for calls about child abuse.(1, 12, 27) Assists child victims of sexual and economic exploitation.(1, 12, 27)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa and Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS I & II	USDOL-funded regional projects that supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub region by providing policy and capacity-building support for all ECOWAS states.(28, 29)
Government efforts to increase access to education*‡	Government programs to increase the poor's access to education, such as by providing funds for school fees, school materials, and free meals.(12, 27) Universal Primary Education Policy provides free secondary education for children whose families earn less than $1,820 annually.(2)
Street Children Projects (Nôs Kaza-Criança fora da rua, dentro da escola)‡	Government programs for children vulnerable to sexual and labor abuse, including programs to reintegrate children who have been living and working on the streets into their families and schools.(1, 12, 27). Connects street children with educational and training opportunities and helps these children access necessary social, psychological, and medical services.(12)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Cabo Verde.

Reports indicate that there are no funding or programs for trafficking victims or trafficking prevention.(30)

In late 2012, the National Statistical Institute collaborated with the ILO to conduct a national child labor survey, and the results of the survey are still being analyzed.(8, 18, 22, 27, 31)

Although Cabo Verde has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem fully.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, Cambodia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government completed and published a National Child Labor Survey. The Government also participated in multiple projects to address human trafficking to, from, and within the country for forced labor and sexual exploitation, including child sex tourism. The Ministry of Education, Youth, and Sport participated in a new cash scholarship transfer pilot program through a mobile banking system which allows participants to use cash assistance for food or school supplies. However, children in Cambodia continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor as victims of human trafficking and in child labor in agriculture. The legal framework leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor as there is no compulsory education requirement, and the law allows children as young as age 12 to work in domestic service. Labor inspectors lack sufficient resources to adequately monitor child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cambodia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor as victims of human trafficking and in child labor in agriculture. In November 2013, the Government published its first combined Cambodia Labor Force and Child Labor Survey.(1, 2) Data from this survey was not analyzed in time for inclusion in the table below. However, the survey collected data in 2012 on children ages 5-17 and indicated that more than half of child laborers were engaged in agriculture, forestry and the fishing sector, and nearly 20 percent of them worked in manufacturing.(1, 2) Many of these children work in hazardous activities in agriculture, including handling and spraying pesticides and herbicides which the Government has deemed hazardous. Additionally, some fall victim to trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(2-6) Children in rural areas are more likely to work than children in urban areas due to the prevalence of rural poverty and lack of educational opportunities.(7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Cambodia.

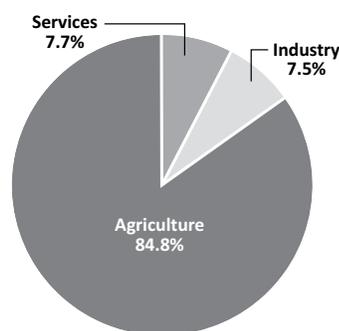

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	28.7 (888,370)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	79.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	28.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.1

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Fishing, including deep-sea† and night fishing† (2, 10-12)
	Peeling shrimp and shucking crabs* (10, 13)
	Production of tobacco, cassava, and rubber (3, 5, 7, 14, 15)
	Logging for the production of timber† (2)
Industry	Making bricks† (2, 5, 6, 13)
	Production of salt (3, 5, 6, 16)
	Construction,† activities unknown (2)
	Production of textiles, including bleaching, dyeing and finishing with chemicals† (2)
	Production of alcoholic beverages† (2)
	Work in slaughterhouses for the production of meat† (2)
Services	Portering (5, 13)
	Domestic service (5, 13, 17-19)
	Work in entertainment,† including as bartenders, masseurs, dancers, and waiters (2)
	Work on the streets, including begging, vending, shoe polishing and scavenging (11, 17, 19, 20)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6, 21-23)
	Domestic service, begging, street vending, and factory work as a result of human trafficking (6, 22-24)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO c. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked to, from, and within Cambodia for commercial sexual exploitation and labor exploitation. Trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation occurs primarily from Cambodia to Thailand, from Vietnam to Cambodia, and within Cambodia.(6, 23) Children are trafficked from smaller villages to larger cities and primarily to Malaysia and Thailand to work as domestic servants.(6, 17, 23, 24) Children are trafficked primarily to Thailand as street vendors, to sell candy or flowers, or work in factories. Children are also trafficked to Thailand and Vietnam and forced to beg.(6, 23)

Significant barriers to accessing the education system still exist. In remote areas, children have to travel long distances to reach school, and transportation is limited.(25) This sometimes deters parents from sending girls to school due to safety concerns.(25) Lack of bilingual education can be an obstacle to school access for children of ethnic minorities and needs to be further expanded.(19) Some children cannot gain access to education due to displacement as a result of land disputes and government land concessions for large agro-industry development and infrastructure projects.(26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cambodia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 177 of The Labor Law (27)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 173, 177 of the Labor Law; Regulation on the Prohibition of Hazardous Child Labor (27, 28)
List of Hazardous Occupations Prohibited for Children	Yes		Regulation on the Prohibition of Hazardous Child Labor (28)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 15 of The Labor Law (27)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Law on Suppression of the Kidnapping, Trafficking and Exploitation of Human Persons (29)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Law on Suppression of the Kidnapping, Trafficking and Exploitation of Human Persons (29)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 343-346 of the Penal Code (11)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	The Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (3, 30)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	The Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (3, 30)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 31 of the Education Law of 2007 (32)

The Labor Law lacks full protections for children involved in domestic service.(5, 33) Children as young as age 12 are permitted to perform domestic labor by law, as long as the work is not hazardous to their health, safety, or morals, and does not involve any type of hazardous work specifically prohibited.(28) This minimum age of 12 for domestic work is below the minimum age for all other occupations in Cambodia. In September 2013, the Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training (MOLVT) and World Vision held a workshop to raise awareness about child domestic labor and to promote passage of a regulation establishing rules for child domestic labor.(1)

Education is free, but not compulsory, through grade nine.(32) The lack of compulsory schooling makes children under age 15, the legal age to work, particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor because they are not required to attend school and are not legally permitted to work. The Education Law provides for free education, however, in practice, teacher salaries are low, and instructors often charge extra fees to students for exams, snacks, tutoring, and even class time.(31, 34, 35)

While the legal framework provides some protection against the worst forms of child labor, the Cambodian Labor Law exempts work performed for a family business from the hazardous work order.(20)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Department of Child Labor within the Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training (MOLVT)	Enforce child-related provisions of the Cambodian Labor Law and manage Cambodia's Child Labor Monitoring System.(1, 36)
The Cambodian National Police's Anti- Human Trafficking and Juvenile Protection Department (Anti-Trafficking Police)	Enforce laws against trafficking, child sexual exploitation, and criminal activities along with municipal and provincial anti-human trafficking and juvenile protection offices.(20) Commanded by the Ministry of the Interior.(37) Human trafficking complaints can be filed through nine anti-trafficking hotlines, one at the Ministry of Interior and eight at the municipal and provincial levels.(20)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation (MOSAVY)	Accompany the police on investigations during which child victims may be found, and subsequently refer child victims to NGO services.(3, 13)

Cambodia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Law enforcement agencies in Cambodia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms, during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Department of Child Labor reported employing 35 staff members, some of whom acted as labor inspectors. The department, however, said that its staff did not receive any professional training on inspection and equated inspections with visiting factories to disseminate information about child labor.(1) The Department visited 153 garment factories.(1)

While the MOLVT has specific regulations regarding acceptable work for children in agriculture, fishing, and tobacco and cassava production, government officials report that they have not yet begun to enforce these regulations.(1, 13) The Government lacks standardized guidelines on how to conduct labor inspections, and it is unclear how inspectors verify the age of children in the workplace.(38) Inspectors have no budget for transportation, fuel, and other necessities to carry out inspections.(3, 20) The MOLVT conducts routine inspections of some industries, primarily in the formal sector; however, most inspections are complaint driven rather than initiated by the MOLVT and do not target or monitor where hazardous child labor is known to occur.(5, 39)

The Government does not officially release data on the number of child labor inspections or the number of children assisted.(40) Although labor inspectors have the authority to order immediate removal of children from the workplace and levy fines, procedures for applying such penalties are not administered uniformly.(38)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, 1,147 police officers participated in anti-trafficking training.(1) The Anti-Trafficking Police employed approximately 500 police officers who served as investigator and enforcement officers. Investigators had office facilities but did not have sufficient means of transportation.(1) They continued to rely heavily on local and international NGOs in all phases of investigations. Funding for the agencies responsible for combating the worst forms of child labor was not adequate to conduct investigations effectively absent NGO participation.(1)

From January through November 2013, police arrested 26 people accused of involvement in human trafficking and child prostitution, and nine defendants were convicted. Of the nine convicted, five defendants were sentenced to 18 months in prison for indecent acts against a minor under 15 years old, three were sentenced to eight years in prison for supplying child prostitutes, and one person was sentenced to seven years in prison for purchasing child prostitutes.(41) During the same time period, police rescued 33 underage victims of trafficking in Cambodia and referred them to MOSAVY.(1) MOSAVY in Phnom Penh received 53 underage victims who were locally trafficked for sexual or labor exploitation. These victims were referred to local or international organizations for assistance.(1) In 2013, MOSAVY also received 143 underage victims of trafficking or commercial sexual exploitation who had been repatriated from Thailand.(1)

Judges can determine whether perpetrators will be imprisoned or fined, and they can determine the amount of the fine. If fines are levied without a prison sentence, the punishment may not be a sufficient deterrent for wealthy perpetrators.(3, 13)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The National Sub-Committee on Child Labor of the Cambodian National Council for Children (CNCC)	Coordinate child labor issues at the national level.(42) Includes all concerned ministries, businesses, trade unions, and NGOs. Ensure that projects and programs follow national policy on child labor. Provincial committees on the Protection of Child Rights and Provincial Committees on Child labor coordinate efforts to address child labor at the provincial level.(42)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The National Committee on Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor and Sexual Exploitation of Women and Children (NC/STSLs)	Coordinate policymaking efforts with regards to trafficking. Includes representatives from the Cambodian Government and civil society.(36, 43)
Migration Working Group within NC/STSLs	Coordinate multi-sectoral participation to address migration issues, gather and monitor data on migration, facilitate information exchange, and provide recommendations on the formulation of agreements with relevant countries. Chaired by the Ministry of Interior and includes representatives from the government, the UN, and NGOs.(44)

In 2013, the National Sub-Committee on Child Labor continued to meet quarterly under MOLVT chairmanship.(1)

Also during the reporting period, the Migration Working Group conducted research on challenges related to migration, held national workshops to determine measures to protect migrants' safety, and disseminated the government's policy on the protection of migrants' safety to 21 recruiting companies.(37)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Cambodia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Plan of Action to Tackle Child Labor in Inland and Coastal Fisheries	Incorporates child labor into the Ministry's policies and legal frameworks for fisheries and aquaculture. Assesses work hazards for children in fisheries and aquaculture and ensures that children who work in fisheries and their families have access to education and livelihood opportunities.(36) In March 2014, Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries (MOAF) with technical assistance from the ILO and World Vision, finalized guidelines for child workers in the fisheries sector.(45) Guidelines define the kinds of hazardous activities in which children are not permitted to engage and set fines for employers who violate them. Awaiting official approval from MOAF and the MOL.(45)
The Education Strategic Plan (2009-2013)	Outlines a plan to improve access to quality education for vulnerable children, including child laborers, and supports the decentralization of education service delivery by building the capacity of local educational institutions to receive and administer funds effectively.(46, 47) Raises awareness on the importance of education; the provision of school meals; improved school infrastructure; bilingual education; and advocacy for community participation.(47) Uses vocational training as a development strategy for marginalized youth, including child laborers.(46) During the reporting period, a new Education Strategic Plan (2014-2018) was drafted, but has not yet been approved.(48)
The National Youth Policy	Aims to afford meaningful opportunities to young people ages 15 to 30 and to provide them with the skills they need to enhance their economic participation.(49)
Rectangular Strategy for Growth, Employment, Equity and Efficiency Phase III (2013-2017)†	Defines Cambodia's socio-economic policy agenda and outlines a strategy for sustainable development and poverty reduction. Includes social protection programs to ensure poor children have access to education; promotes sustainable development of the health sector including improved sanitation, health, and nutrition of children; and a focuses on strengthening law enforcement to be more effective against human trafficking and sexual exploitation of children.(50)
National Social Protection Strategy (NSPS) (2011-2015)	Aims to protect the poorest and most disadvantaged populations, mitigate risk by providing coping strategies, and promote poverty reduction by building human capital and expanding opportunities such as access to health, nutrition, and education services, which the strategy states will benefit child laborers and their families.(51)
ILO Decent Work Country Program (2011-2015), endorsed by the MOSAVY	Highlights child labor issues and outlines a framework for enhancing policies, laws, and enforcement mechanisms to protect children.(52)
MOSAVY's First Occupational Safety and Health Master Plan (2009-2013)	Includes eliminating hazardous child labor as one of its six priorities.(53)
Policy and National Minimum Standards for the Protection of the Rights of Victims of Human Trafficking	Guidelines to improve the treatment of TIP victims. Mandates MOSAVY to train relevant government officials.(54) Lists children among those identified as victims of trafficking in Cambodia and includes the Ministry of the Interior's Safety Village Commune/Sangkat Policy Guide which mandates that local governments take action to end the trafficking of women and children to ensure safe communes.(36, 55)

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action on the Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, Labor, and Sexual Exploitation (NPA-STSLs) (2011-2013)	Includes activities aimed at harmonizing the NPA-WFCL and the NPA-STSLs. These activities include developing monitoring procedures for domestic servants with an emphasis on child domestic workers and training trainers at the sub-national level to prevent child trafficking and child labor.(36, 56)

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

The National Plan of Action on the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NPA-WFCL) ended in 2012. The Department of Child Labor, with technical assistance from the ILO, is incorporating information from the newly-released Child Labor Survey into the development of a new Plan.(48) The Government reports that changes in leadership within the Ministry as a result of national elections in July 2013 have contributed to the lapse in finalizing a new plan. The new plan is expected to be approved in 2014.(48)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Cambodia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Commune Committees for Women and Children (CCWC)‡	MOLVT and provincial government program that establishes and trains these committees at the commune and village level to raise awareness of child labor regulations, ensuring that children continue to go to school, and report employers that use child labor.(1)
Street People Committee‡	Inter-ministerial committee chaired by MOSAVY that provides direct support for street children. It is responsible for determining the number of people living and working on the street, including children, and providing for their needs.(37, 57)
Cambodians EXCEL: Eliminating exploitative Child Labor through Education and Livelihoods	$10 million USDOL funded, 4-year project to combat child labor in agriculture, fishing, and domestic service. Targets 28,000 child laborers and at-risk children to receive education services and 14,000 households to receive livelihood services.(58) Addresses a complex set of factors causing child labor including poverty, lack of education access, cultural acceptance of child labor, debt, migration, and lack of regulation in the informal sector.(58)
United Nations World Food Program (WFP) – Fighting Hunger Worldwide*	Australian-funded, 5-year program implemented by the Ministry of Education, Youth, and Sport (MOEYS) to improve food security and nutrition, which includes providing breakfast and take-home rations to vulnerable primary school children, and off-season income-generation activities for the poor.(59) In 2013, WFP introduced a new cash scholarship transfer pilot program through a mobile banking system in partnership with Angkor Microfinance of Kampuchea. Beneficiaries of the program must attend 80 percent of their classes and receive cash assistance that can be used for food or school supplies.(60)
Project Childhood	$3.7 million Australian-funded, 4-year regional project to combat child sex tourism in Cambodia, Laos, Thailand, and Vietnam.(61, 62) Seeks to ensure that the relevant legislative framework of each participating country meets international standards; police, prosecutors, and judges understand the law; and mechanisms are established to promote cooperation within and across borders.(62)
Counter Trafficking in Persons II (CTIP II)	$5.4 million USAID-funded, 4-year program implemented by Winrock International to improve the Government and civil society's coordination and capacity to effectively combat all forms of human trafficking. CTIP II focuses specifically on addressing the needs of victims of forced labor and sexual exploitation.(63)
Improved Basic Education in Cambodia Project*	$10 million USAID-funded, 5-year project supported by the MOEYS to enhance access to education, targeting 202 primary schools and 101 lower secondary schools. Provides improvement grants to schools for scholarships, latrines, and equipment including computer and science labs.(64)
Bilingual Education Programs*‡	MOEYS bilingual education program for ethnic minority children in preschools and primary schools in three provinces. Targets 2,359 students from grades one through three in 27 schools.(57, 65)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Cambodia.

The Government of Cambodia relies heavily on outside funding to combat child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has set up Committees for Women and Children (CCWC), and it is reported that these monitoring committees were largely successful in the communes where they were established.(1) The Government reports that the Local Administration Department collects reports from the CCWC, however, it has not released any data on their achievements.(37)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cambodia (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Raise the minimum age for work in domestic service to at least 15, in compliance with the minimum age for work and with international standards.	2009 – 2013
	Institute and enforce a compulsory education age that is at a minimum equal to the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2013
	Enact laws to protect children from hazardous work in family businesses.	2009 – 2013
Enforcement	Enforce regulations regarding child labor in agriculture, tobacco, cassava, and fishing.	2012 – 2013
	Develop and implement standardized guidelines for conducting child labor inspections.	2011 – 2013
	Provide sufficient resources for the enforcement of child labor laws to address the full scope of the problem.	2010 – 2013
	Conduct targeted inspections of industries in which hazardous child labor is known to occur.	2009 – 2013
	Collect and publish data on the number of child labor inspections conducted, the employers prosecuted, and the children assisted.	2010 – 2013
	Uniformly administer existing penalties for businesses violating child labor laws and ensure that punishments are a sufficient deterrent.	2009 – 2013
Government Policies	Approve new National Plan of Action on the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NPA-WFCL).	2013
Social Programs	Ensure all children have access to free quality education, including by ensuring school fees are not charged and addressing distance, transport, and language barriers.	2013
	Assess the impact that existing poverty alleviation and education programs may have on the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2013

In 2013, Cameroon made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified the Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict, investigated and prosecuted cases of child trafficking, and implemented new programs to address child labor specifically, and to increase access to education and health care. However, children continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has yet to approve its National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children. Additionally, gaps remain in the legislative framework, leaving children unprotected against the worst forms of child labor. Furthermore, social programs are limited and do not address all sectors in which children work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cameroon are engaged in agriculture, including in the production of cocoa, bananas, palm oil, rubber, and tea, as well as in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-5) A 2010 pilot study by the ILO estimates that approximately 4,000 children between ages 11 and 17, mostly girls, were engaged in commercial sexual exploitation.(6) In the urban informal sector, children carry heavy luggage and sell goods on the streets, such as cigarettes and water.(7-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Cameroon.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	56.2
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	79.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	52.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		72.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(10)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Enquête Démographique et de Santé et à Indicateurs Multiples, 2011.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cocoa (1-4, 12)
	Production of bananas,* coffee,* palm oil*† rubber,* and tea* (1, 4, 13)
	Raising livestock* (1, 12, 14)
Industry	Work in artisanal gold mines and gravel quarries* (15-17)
Services	Domestic service (3, 4, 18)
	Carrying heavy luggage and selling goods on the street (3, 7-9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of trafficking* (4, 6, 19-21)
	Forced labor in the production of cocoa* and tea,* in fishing,* in domestic service, in street vending, and in work in spare parts shops, as a result of trafficking (4, 9, 17, 20-24)
	Forced begging (9, 12, 13, 22)
	Transporting drugs (3, 9, 13, 25)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182

Cameroon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Street children who are used to transport drugs in cities such as Yaoundé and Douala are at risk of being recruited into gangs.(3, 9, 25) In the three Northern regions, it is a tradition to send boys to Koranic teachers to receive education. While some boys receive lessons, others are forced by their teachers to beg or perform other work and to surrender the money that they earn.(9, 12, 13, 22) Cameroon is a source and destination country for the trafficking of children; Cameroon is also a transit country for children trafficked between Gabon and Nigeria, and for children trafficked to Europe.(4, 21, 23, 24) Child trafficking also occurs internally and is prevalent in the Northwest region.(26)

Access to education is hindered by the remote locations of schools and the lack of potable water in rural schools.(27, 28) In addition, the Government of Cameroon reports that in many regions, fewer than 40 percent of children are registered at birth. Unregistered children in Cameroon cannot access essential services, including schooling.(8, 12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cameroon has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

In 2013, the Government ratified the Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict; however, it has not ratified the Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution, and Child Pornography.(29, 30)

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Section 86 of the Labor Code (3, 9, 31)

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 343 of the Penal Code; Article 76 of Law No. 2010/12 (33, 34, 38)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Presidential Decree No. 1994/185 (40, 41)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12	Articles 9 and 16 of Law No. 1998/004 (42-44)
Free Public Education	Yes		Presidential Decree No. 2001/041 (5, 12, 45)

* No conscription or no standing military.

While Law No. 017 sets a minimum age for hazardous work and prohibits children from certain occupations, it does not prohibit work underwater and at dangerous heights, which is often performed by children who fish or harvest bananas.(17, 32) The Law does not fully protect children working in agriculture, domestic service, and street vending, even though many children are known to work in these sectors. Labor laws do not extend to these children, who typically work without formal employment contracts; moreover, health and safety laws do not apply to all domestic workers.(17, 32) The Government lacks a mechanism for protecting these children, since they are not covered by law.(3, 9, 12, 17, 32) The compulsory school age of 12 makes children ages 12 to 14 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school and are below the minimum age for work. Although Presidential Decree No. 2001/041 establishes the right to free education, in practice, additional school fees and the costs of books and uniforms are prohibitive for many families.(3, 12, 45) The Ministry of Education offers fee waivers to disadvantaged primary students; however, these waivers sometimes do not cover the costs or arrive late, which means that parents must still pay some out-of-pocket fees.(3, 46, 47) The Government has not criminalized the use of children for illicit activities.(13, 39)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security	Lead efforts to enforce child labor laws, in cooperation with other government bodies, including the Ministries of Social Affairs, Justice, Women's Empowerment and the Family, and Employment.(3)
National Commission on Human Rights and Freedoms	Promote and protect human rights and investigate human rights abuses.(5, 42, 48)
Minors Brigade	Investigate the use of children in hazardous work and trafficking; work within the public security sections of local police stations; and work within public security sections of local police stations.(5, 36)
Ministry of Justice	Contribute to investigations through judicial auxiliaries and send files to court for prosecution as appropriate.(36)

Research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took actions to combat child labor, including its worst form. However, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MINLSS) employed 81 labor inspectors, which is an insufficient number, according to an MINLSS official.(3) Additionally, inspectors often do not have the means of transportation or fuel they need to conduct inspections.(3) A 2011 ILO review of Cameroon's labor inspectorate found that few workplace visits occur.(49) Labor inspectors are informed of the ILO's core conventions during their initial training, but they do not receive any further training on these issues.(3) The ILO Committee of Experts has expressed concern that inspectors are not sufficiently familiar with the labor laws.(3, 49) The number of inspections conducted in 2013 is unavailable. There are no official comprehensive statistics on the number of child labor violations found, of penalties or citations issued, or of children removed and assisted as a result of the inspections.(3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Government conducted at least 10 child trafficking investigations, and at least five children were removed from exploitative labor situations and eight children were rescued from traffickers as a result of these investigations; these children were placed in the care of social services. The investigations targeted trafficking within Cameroon, from the Central African Republic for labor exploitation, and to Equatorial Guinea for commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 50) At least one person was convicted of child trafficking.(3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the Government has other mechanisms that may have an impact on child labor (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Committee	Coordinate government efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including by training stakeholders, proposing legislation, and ratifying international instruments.(3)
Joint Mobile Brigade	Work to prevent and combat the phenomenon of street children by identifying street children, helping to convince them to return to their families or to enter Government-run centers, and educating families whose children have returned home on the root causes of the phenomenon to prevent these children from returning to the streets.(1, 13)

In 2013, the Inter-Ministerial Committee, with assistance from the NGO Vital Voices, organized two training sessions on trafficking in persons for judges, diplomats, social workers, labor officials, and members of civil society.(3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Cameroon has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Trafficking in Persons Action Plan*	Outlines efforts to prosecute and convict trafficking offenders, to educate law enforcement personnel and social workers, to develop and enact legislation prohibiting the trafficking of adults, and to train enforcement personnel on how to use the human trafficking database.(51)
PRSP*	Includes overall goals of poverty reduction, increased access to health and social services, and improved infrastructure such as education.(52)
Country Program Action Plan (2013–2017)†	UNICEF- and Government-implemented program that addresses the full development of young children and builds on the previous Country Program Action Plan.(13)

* The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

In 2013, the Government and UNICEF launched a new Country Program Action Plan to address the full development of young children and build on the previous Country Program Action Plan.(13) The Government appoints Child Parliamentarians to provide recommendations on issues related to children, including child labor.(5, 53)

In 2013, the Government drafted a National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children. However, it has yet to ratify or officially approve the Plan, and it is unknown whether the Plan addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor.(1, 5, 35, 54, 55) The PRSP has neither budgets nor details related to the worst forms of child labor.(52) Moreover, the Trafficking in Persons Action Plan does not include timelines.(51, 56)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Cameroon funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Cameroon, aims to build the capacity of the national government, to develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor, and to strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(57, 58)

Program	Description
Multi-Sector Cooperation Program*†	UNICEF-implemented program to address areas such as ensuring access to basic education and preventive health care, returning children to school, developing special curriculum for schools with high concentrations of Bakas, promoting birth registration, and providing shelters and safe drinking water in northern regions affected by floods.(3, 36)
School Feeding Program*‡	USAID-funded program provides meals to help improve the educational goals of girls in target geographic zones.(5, 46)
Direct Cash Transfer*‡	Government program that provides limited direct cash transfers to street children on an ad hoc basis.(46)
Project to Fight the Phenomenon of Street Children‡	Government program that gathers information on street children and offers health care, education, and psychosocial care.(3)
Horizen Femmes project on domestic workers*	Government-supported, NGO-run project focusing on educating domestic workers about their rights.(35, 36)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Cameroon.

In 2013, MINLSS evaluated the programs that had been implemented to prevent and combat child labor since 2003, and updated its manual for identifying child trafficking victims. The results of the study are expected to be released in 2014.(3, 13) As part of the Project to Fight the Phenomenon of Street Children, the Ministry of Social Affairs (MINAS) and the Civic Service Agency for Participation in Development adopted a collaborative framework for the reintegration of street children. By mid-2013, the MINAS had identified 1,321 street children and had reunited 554 of them with their families.(3)

The school feeding program has reached only 5.3 percent of students in target zones.(46) Despite the initiatives described here, Cameroon's social programs do not address all the sectors in which children work, such as agriculture and domestic service.(56)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cameroon (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Ratify the Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2013
	Ensure that the law fully protects children working in agriculture, domestic service, and street vending, and that it develops mechanisms for enforcing those laws.	2009 – 2013
	Prohibit children under age 18 from engaging in dangerous activities—such as working underwater and at dangerous heights—and enact legislation to prohibit the use, procurement, or offering of children for illicit activities.	2009 – 2013
	Raise the age for compulsory education to 14 to match the established minimum age for work.	2009 – 2013
Enforcement	Ensure that the number of labor inspectors is sufficient, given the scope and prevalence of child labor in Cameroon, and allocate more resources to provide vehicles and fuel to the Ministry of Labor and Social Security.	2009 – 2013
	Provide regular training to inspectors on child labor issues and Cameroonian labor laws.	2013
	Gather and make information publicly available about child labor investigations and enforcement.	2009 – 2013
	Establish a referral mechanism between enforcement agencies and social services.	2013
Coordination	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat child labor, including all its worst forms.	2013

Central African Republic

NO ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, the Central African Republic made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government's transitional authorities adopted a National Strategy to End the Recruitment and Use of Children in Armed Conflict. However, children in the Central African Republic continue to engage in child labor in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor in armed conflict. Widespread violence and instability limited the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor. Armed groups on all sides of the conflict increased the use of child soldiers. The National Strategy to End the Recruitment and Use of Children in Armed Conflict was not implemented during the reporting period. Legal protections against child labor were not adopted, and research found no evidence that enforcement actions were taken or that policies and programs to address child labor were implemented.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Central African Republic (CAR) are engaged in child labor in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor in armed conflict.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in CAR.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	51.1 (602,932)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	53.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	33.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		45.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS 3 Survey, 2006.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Working on cotton,* coffee,* cassava,* and peanut* farms (4, 8)
	Gathering mushrooms,* hay,* firewood,* and caterpillars* (4)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (4, 5)
Industry	Diamond and gold* mining† (4, 8-11)
Services	Domestic work (4, 12)
	Portering and vending (4, 9)
	Working in restaurants and markets (12, 13)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Use of under-age children in armed conflict (1-4, 13-16)
	Domestic service, work in agriculture, restaurants, markets, and mining, including diamond mines, as a result of human trafficking (12, 13)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (12, 13)
	Forced labor of Ba'aka children in agriculture and domestic service (4)
	Use of child soldiers as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment (3, 4, 16-18)
	Use of children in illicit activities for criminal and rebel groups, including carrying stolen goods (4, 9, 17, 18)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In March 2013, Seleka rebels, a coalition of several rebel groups, ousted the sitting president and formed a new government.(19, 20) Escalating violence by various armed groups, including between Seleka elements and the Anti-Balaka self-defense group, caused most government institutions to close.(4, 21) Most residents of the capital, Bangui, have been forced to flee the violence.(21-23) During the reporting period, the UN estimated that half of CAR's population had been made homeless by the conflict and needed aid.(24) In January 2014, a Transitional National Council selected a new interim president. In addition, by January 2014, a multinational peacekeeping force was present in parts of the country.(25) However, the ongoing conflict continues to affect the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.

Research found many cases of child soldiers in CAR. Moreover, the UN has noted that during the reporting period, the recruitment and use of child soldiers occurred on all sides of the conflict.(19, 24, 26, 27) In January 2014, the UN estimated that more than 6,000 child soldiers were involved in armed conflict.(27) Between March and June 2013, approximately 3,500 children were recruited by ex-Seleka elements.(28) During the reporting period, self-defense groups across the country, including the Anti-Balaka, have expanded to include many children.(19, 23, 24, 27)

The ongoing conflict has resulted in more boys and girls being forced into armed groups to serve as child soldiers, including participating in hostilities, carrying supplies, and being sexually exploited.(27, 29, 30) Children are also abducted for forced labor and/or forced soldiering by the Lord's Resistance Army, a Ugandan rebel force that has moved into CAR.(3, 4, 16, 23)

There is a severe lack of schools and teachers especially in rural areas, which prevents many children from accessing education.(9, 31, 32) Furthermore, during the reporting period, an estimated 800,000 children lacked access to education due to the ongoing conflict. In addition, many children do not have birth registration certificates, which may limit their access to education.(4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

CAR has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Act No. 97/014 of 1997 (4, 9)
Free Public Education	Yes		Legislation title unknown (4, 36)

The Government has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict.(37) Children younger than age 18 are prohibited from working between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m., and from working in mines (18, 34, 38, 39). The Government does not have a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children.(9, 11) The Labor Code prohibits the production of pornography, but not the possession and distribution of child pornography.(12, 31) Education is tuition free, but students must pay for their own supplies, books, and transportation, which may prevent some children from accessing school.(4) In addition, research did not uncover a public version of the Government’s legislation for minimum age regarding compulsory military recruitment and free public education.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Monitor and enforce laws related to child labor.(12)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities. The MOJ shares this responsibility with CAR’s security forces.(18, 34)

Research found no evidence that law enforcement agencies took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

Research identified a lack of systems to enforce child labor laws. Moreover, the ILO Committee of Experts has noted that, since 1999, there has not been a labor administrator to coordinate the labor inspection efforts of the Ministry of Labor (MOL).(34, 40) There is also no system in place for the MOL to track child labor complaints.(12, 34, 40) Information was not available on the number of labor inspectors employed by the MOL’s Labor Inspectorate Unit, on whether labor inspectors had received any training on child labor, or on whether inspectors have the necessary resources to conduct their inspections. However, in previous years, training for labor inspectors did not include any specific information on child labor, and the inspectors lacked the resources necessary to carry out inspections — including funds for transportation — and in some cases, chairs, desks, doors, and lights for their offices, some of which are inaccessible due to flooding when it rains.(12, 34, 40) Given the state of insecurity in CAR during the reporting period, it appears unlikely these gaps were addressed.

Criminal Law Enforcement

Information was not available on the efforts of the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) to protect children, on the number of arrests and prosecutions involving children victims, or on whether actual punishments were consistent with those prescribed by law.(34) However, in previous years, the MOJ did not train its officers in these areas; the officers also lacked sufficient office facilities and transportation to carry out investigations.(34) Moreover, the Government did not have any means to identify victims of trafficking and was unable to provide data on the number of arrests and prosecutions of the individuals involved in trafficking children, including in using these children in commercial sexual exploitation or other illicit activities.(12, 13) In previous years the Government did not report having arrested or prosecuted individuals for these acts and, given the state of insecurity in CAR during the reporting period, it appears unlikely these gaps were addressed during 2013.(41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for the Protection of Children (NCPC)	Coordinate policies and strategies to protect children, including from sexual exploitation and child soldiering.(12, 13) Research found no evidence the NCPC met or took actions during 2013.

In 2013, research found no evidence of a body that coordinates Government efforts to combat all forms of child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of CAR has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Child Sexual Exploitation and Abuse	Addresses child sexual exploitation and abuse, including measures to address trafficking for purposes of commercial sexual exploitation.(42)
National Action Plan for Education*	Aims to improve enrollment and completion rates for primary school. Also calls for the establishment of informal schools in rural areas to provide education access to children ages 8 to 15 who have never attended school.(31, 43)
National Poverty Reduction Strategy*	Serves as a primary strategy for determining national development policy.(31, 44)
National Strategy to End Recruitment and Use of Children in Armed Conflict†	Aims to end the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict. Calls for negotiating with armed groups and securing the release of children.(23)
N'djamena Declaration of Regional Conference: Ending Recruitment and Use of Children by Armed Forces and Groups; Contributing to Peace, Justice and Development	Represents a commitment among the signatory countries, including CAR, to eliminate the use of child soldiers in their territories.(45)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

In November 2013, the Government's transitional authorities adopted the National Strategy to End the Recruitment and Use of Children in Armed Conflict.(23) However, as of May 2014, the National Strategy was not being implemented.(41) Moreover, given the state of insecurity in CAR, it is unlikely that any of the above policies were implemented during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence of programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in CAR (Table 8).

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Chad made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government criminalized recruiting children for armed service and implemented the 2013 Child Soldier Action Plan.

Government inspectors and UN officials conducted joint inspections to screen for underage recruits in the military. The Government also established Child Protection Units in military zones and provided child protection training. In addition, the Government ratified the National Birth Registry Code, which requires all children be issued a birth certificate. However, children in Chad continue to engage in child labor, including in cattle herding and in agriculture. Many gaps remain in the legal framework, which leave children vulnerable to exploitation. Children working in domestic service and in other informal workplaces are not covered by the Labor Law; there are no laws to protect trafficked children or children engaged in illicit activities, and there is no compulsory education age.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chad are engaged in child labor, including in cattle herding and in agriculture. (1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Chad.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	53.0 (1,535,025)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	39.6
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	30.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		35.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2004.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Crop harvesting* (3)
	Cattle herding (1, 3-6, 9)
Industry	Mining, including panning for gold*† (3, 10)
	Domestic work (1-3, 9, 11, 12)
Services	Street work, including vending and manual labor (2, 4)
	Begging (2, 3, 12, 13)

	Domestic work, cattle herding, begging, street vending, and agriculture, as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 12-14)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Chadian children are trafficked to the Central African Republic, Nigeria, and Cameroon for forced labor in cattle herding.(3, 14) Some boys, sent to Koranic teachers to receive an education, are forced to beg and surrender the money they have earned.(3, 9, 12, 13) Sources indicate that there were a few cases of children being removed from surrendered rebel groups entering Chad.(15-17) Research found that some Chadian children are recruited into armed groups in the Central African Republic (CAR), but was unable to determine the extent of the problem. Moreover, the UN and Child Soldiers International have noted that there are reports of cross-border recruitment of Chadian children into armed groups in CAR.(15, 18)

During the reporting period, Chad continued to suffer a food crisis because of a combination of severe drought and flooding that occurred in 2012.(14, 19) The UN estimates that 2.1 million people remain food insecure in Chad. In addition, in 2013, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees estimated that more than 60,000 foreign refugees and Chadian returnees arrived in Chad; they were fleeing instability from neighboring Nigeria, CAR, and South Sudan.(19) Given Chad's limited resources, both of these ongoing situations may affect the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.

A source indicates that less than 16 percent of children have birth certificates, which may limit their access to education. Moreover, UNICEF has noted that birth registration rates are lower for vulnerable children.(16) In addition, rural areas offer limited access to registration centers, which may hinder parents' ability to register their children.(15)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Chad has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Compulsory Education Age	No		Law No. 016/PR/06 (13, 25)
Free Public Education	Yes		Law No. 016/PR/06 (25)

In February 2014, The Government issued Ordinance 001/PR/2014, which criminalized the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.(17, 18) The Ordinance includes provisions that call for imprisonment of 5 to 10 years and a fine ranging from $200 to $2,000.(17)

In April 2013, the Government ratified the National Birth Registry Code, which requires all children to be issued a birth certificate in order to provide age verification for employment and military service.(9) However, according to Child Soldiers International, the new law only provides free registration within the first month of birth.(15) During the reporting period, a draft new Child Protection Code was pending ratification by the National Assembly. Also, during the reporting period, the Government was revising the Penal Code, the Labor Code, and the List of Hazardous Occupations, which has not been updated since 1969.(9, 20)

Currently, protections in the Labor Code apply to work in formal enterprises only; they do not protect children working in informal activities such as domestic service.(9, 26)

There is no specific law on human trafficking in Chad.(12) Research also found no prohibition to using children in illicit activities. Moreover, the CEACR has noted that Chad lacks a law protecting children from being used, offered, or procured for illicit activities.(2)

Chad does not have a compulsory education age. Moreover, the CEACR has noted that Chadian law makes attending primary and middle school compulsory, but does not establish a specific age for schooling to begin.(13, 25) The lack of a clear age for children to enroll in school puts them at risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor, because the children could have completed their compulsory education requirement before reaching the minimum age for work.(13, 25) Such children would not be in school but would also not be legally permitted to work, thus making them vulnerable to being involved in the worst forms of child labor.(13, 25) In addition, although education is free, in practice, parents often must pay for textbooks and school fees, which may prevent some children from attending school.(3)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Function, Labor, and Employment	Implement and enforce child labor laws.(1, 3, 27)
Ministry of Public Health, Social Affairs, and National Solidarity	Work to prevent child abuse and endangerment.(9) Also provide interim accommodation for child soldiers removed from the military.(28)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Investigate and enforce all laws, including criminal child labor laws.(3, 29)
National Police's Child Protection Office	Investigate cases involving women and children, including victims of trafficking.(30)
Child Protection Units	Monitor and address violations of children's rights in military zones, including trafficking, forced labor, child soldier, and child labor issues.(16) Also conduct awareness-raising activities and trainings in the military.(15)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in Chad took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that agencies responsible for labor law enforcement took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Public Works, Labor and Employment employed approximately 100 inspectors, controllers, and supervisory controllers.(1, 27) However, the Government acknowledges that better child labor enforcement efforts are needed, but resources remain limited.(9) The Government and local NGOs believe that the number of labor inspectors is insufficient and more inspectors need to be trained. Local NGOs also report that inspectors do not have adequate resources, including vehicles and fuel, to conduct inspections.(1, 9) During the reporting period, the Government did not collect statistics on the number of inspections conducted, child labor violations found, or citations and penalties issued.(9)

Criminal Law Enforcement

While the Government stopped recruiting children as soldiers into the national army in 2010, between February and August 2013, the Government and UN conducted joint inspections of all military districts in Chad to ensure compliance. No child soldiers were identified in the joint inspections.(9, 28) In April 2013, Chadian military officials identified and removed 14 children among rebel leader Baba Lade's returning troops and transferred them to the Ministry of Public Health, Social Affairs, and National Solidarity (MSA) for reinsertion with their families.(15-17) In addition, between January and February 2013, the Government removed 23 children from armed groups entering Chad from the Central African Republic.(16) During the reporting period, the Government established Child Protection Units in all of Chad's military zones.(15, 16, 18) The Government also provided child protection training to 300 military personnel in Chad, as well as to 864 Chadian soldiers preparing for a peacekeeping mission abroad.(18) In addition, MSA staff received training on child protection from the International Bureau for Children Rights and UNICEF.(9, 28)

Sources indicate that there are not enough judges in Chad, and there is a lack of physical infrastructure for the judiciary, such as courthouses. As a result, the judicial system is ill-equipped to enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor.(4, 31) Some crimes are dealt with under traditional and tribal justice systems, especially in rural areas, and statistics are not centrally compiled.(29) During the reporting period, no official statistics were available on the number of complaints, investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and sentences for the worst forms of child labor.(9) However, the Government reported 23 criminal cases of trafficking or forced labor involving children. Eleven cases resulted in prosecution; the remaining cases are at various stages in the criminal justice system.(16, 17) In July 2013, the MSA began tracking nationwide anti-trafficking actions that involve children.(16)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons and Child Protection (ICTPCP)	Coordinate Government efforts on child trafficking, forced labor, commercial sexual exploitation, the use of children in illicit activities, and all other child labor, including the worst forms of child labor. Implement the National Action Plan for Protecting Chadian Children (PRONAFET).(9, 16, 30) Led by the Secretary General of the Ministry of Human Rights and includes representatives from the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, the MSA, local NGOs, and the Judicial Police.(9, 16, 30) The ICTPCP's structure is based on recommendations by the UN and modeled after the existing the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Soldiers (ICCS).(9)
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Soldiers (ICCS)	Coordinate government efforts to eliminate the use of children in armed conflict.(9)
Regional Committees to Combat Child Labor	Coordinate regional government efforts to address the worst forms of child labor in each of Chad's 22 regions.(14, 16) Include representatives from the Ministries of Education, Public Works, Justice, and Social Affairs and Family, as well as a representative from the police.(14)

In 2013, the Government established the new Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons and Child Protection (ICTPCP) to replace the National Committee for Child Protection.(9) During the reporting period,

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

UNICEF conducted training with the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Soldiers to develop an age verification procedure allowing the identification of children among potential military recruits.(9)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Chad has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Protecting Chadian Children (PRONAFET)	Establishes responsibilities for several ministries that cooperate at various levels of government to prevent and address child labor, including the worst forms.(1, 9)
National Development Plan 2013–2015 (NDP)†	Establishes a comprehensive development plan with an emphasis on education and poverty reduction. Other goals include increasing primary and secondary education and youth employment.(9, 22) In 2013, the Government launched and began implementing the NDP.(9)
2013 Child Soldiers Action Plan (CSAP)†	In partnership with UNICEF, aims to eliminate the use of child soldiers by providing a road map of 10 specific objectives, and by designating agencies responsible for implementation.(9) In 2013, the Government launched and successfully implemented 7 of the CSAP's 10 objectives.(9)
N'djamena Declaration of Regional Conference: Ending Recruitment and Use of Children by Armed Forces and Groups; Contributing to Peace, Justice and Development	Represents a commitment among the signatory countries, including Chad, to eliminate the use of child soldiers in their territories.(32-34)
Guide on the Protection and Assistance of Child Victims of Trafficking	Outlines the Government's formal procedures for protecting and assisting child victims of trafficking.(16)
Support Program for Reform of the Educational System 2004 –2015	Reforms the education system, including by ensuring equitable access to education for child domestic workers, child herders, child soldiers, and street children, as well as by increasing girls' school attendance.(2, 13, 35)

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

Although the Government of Chad has adopted anti-trafficking and child soldier policies, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.(3) During the reporting period, the National Action Plan for Protecting Chadian Children was not fully implemented because of the transition from the National Committee for Child Protection to the new Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons and Child Protection.(9)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Chad participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Birth Registration Campaign†	UN-funded program that conducts birth registrations. In 2013, provided registration for approximately 100,000 births in N'Djamena.(18)
Transition Center	MSA program that provides family reunification and reintegration assistance to child soldiers removed from the military.(3, 36) A source indicates that the center also assists victims of child trafficking.(30)
Awareness-Raising Activities	Government program that conducts outreach campaigns to raise awareness and prevent child trafficking and child labor, especially of child herders.(3, 22, 30) In 2013, emphasis was on the importance of birth registration.(16)
Income-Generating Activities†	Government program that provides grants to women's groups that work to increase income of vulnerable women and children. In 2013, the grants assisted 1,590 beneficiaries.(16)
Humanitarian Assistance†	$10 million USAID-funded program that provides humanitarian assistance. In 2013, funded agriculture, livelihoods, nutrition, and health interventions.(19)

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

Although Chad has set up programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem fully, particularly in agriculture, herding, forced begging, and domestic work.(2)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, Chile made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government, in collaboration with the ILO, published a national survey on child labor. The Ministry of Labor and Social Prevision (MINTRAB) increased the number of labor inspections almost threefold, and the Inter-Agency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons adopted a National Plan against Trafficking in Persons. The Government passed a law that provides free education to children, from preschool to age 18. Chile also continued to implement a number of policies and programs targeting the worst forms of child labor. However, children continue to engage in child labor in urban informal work, and in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities, including drug trafficking. The Government has yet to adopt a new national plan against child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children engage in child labor in urban informal work, and in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Chile. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		97.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(3) Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics, 2014.(4)

In 2013, the Government of Chile, in collaboration with the ILO, published the results of the 2012 National Survey on Activities of Children and Adolescents (Encuesta de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes (EANNA)).(5, 6) These data were not analyzed in time to be used in this report. According to the 2012 EANNA, more than 219 million children ages 5 to 17 work in Chile.(6) EANNA results also indicate that 70.6 percent of working children in the same age group are engaged in work classified as hazardous.(5, 6)

Region IX of Chile experiences the highest levels of poverty; it is also a region with a large indigenous population.(6) A 2005 ILO study indicated that Region IX had a child labor problem; however, no recent data were found on the percentage of indigenous children engaged in child labor in Chile.(50)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Forestry, activities unknown*† (2, 6, 7)
	Hunting, activities unknown* (2, 6, 7)

	Urban informal work, activities unknown (1, 2)
Services	Domestic service (1, 5-7)
	Retail,* washing cars,* and repairing shoes (2, 5, 6, 8)
	Work in the commercial sector, activities unknown (2, 6, 8)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Used in drug trafficking and other illicit activities (8-11)
	Forced labor in agriculture,* mining,* domestic service,* hotels and restaurants,* and in other hospitality sectors* (8, 11)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 2, 8, 11, 12)
	Domestic service as a result of human trafficking* (11)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Limited evidence suggests that children from Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay, and Peru are found in forced labor in the agriculture, mining, domestic service, and hospitality sectors.(11) Children are used to transport drugs in the border area with Peru and Bolivia.(9, 10, 13) In 2013, there was a reported increase in the number of children under 14 who were involved in illicit activities, including drug trafficking and robbery.(12)

The commercial sexual exploitation of children occurs in cities, in open public areas, and in other venues, such as bars and dance clubs.(14) Child trafficking occurs internally and, to a lesser extent, from Chile to other Latin American countries for commercial sexual exploitation. Girls from other Latin American countries are trafficked to Chile for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic service.(11)

Research indicates that many children work in the informal sector. However, specific activities related to children’s work in the informal sector are unknown.(1, 2, 6, 8)

Limited evidence suggests that access to education is a problem for indigenous children, who are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(15)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Chile has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including in its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Penal Code; Law 20.507 (19, 20)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Penal Code ; Law 20.594 (2, 20, 21)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Law 20.084; Law 20.000 (22-25)

	Non-Combat: Yes	17
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	General Education Law (29)
Free Public Education	Yes		General Education Law (29)

The minimum age for voluntary and compulsory military service in Chile is 18. Children may register at age 17 for voluntary service, and in some exceptional cases at age 16, but may only enter the service at age 18.(26, 27) According to the Armed Forces' Recruitment and Mobilization Law, during times of war the President of Chile may call upon persons of any age to be employed in "services that the nation requires." The UN CRC has suggested that Chile clarify that this provision applies only to persons age 18 and older.(27, 28)

In November 2013, the Government passed Law 20,710, which requires children to attend kindergarten and guarantees access to public education for children beginning at age 2 or 3 through age 18, thus reducing the children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor.(5)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Prevision (MINTRAB)	Enforce child labor laws.(5, 30)
National Child Service (Servicio Nacional de Menores) (SENAME)	Coordinate and provide services for children; coordinate provision of services with Rights Protection Offices in other cases.(31)
National Investigations Police	Oversee regional offices that specialize in the investigation of sex crimes and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Refer children to SENAME.(32)
National Prosecutor's Office	Enforce laws against child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(32)
Rights Protection Offices	Monitor cases of worst forms of child labor and raise awareness about them. Located in municipalities throughout the country.(2)

Law enforcement agencies in Chile took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the budget for inspections was $20,877, 306 million. MINTRAB employs approximately 1,229 labor inspectors; they inspect for all types of labor violations, including child labor.(5, 30) In 2013, MINTRAB had 160 vehicles and 84 permanent offices and carried out 3,350 inspection visits, an increase from 1,505 in 2012.(5) During 2013, 575 cases of worst forms of child labor were detected, and MINTRAB imposed sanctions for child labor violations in 1,175 cases.(5, 30, 31) Inspectors visit various locations in all the regions of Chile to inspect labor conditions, including child labor violations.(30)

Chile

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, the Superintendent of Social Security (SUSESO) reported on injuries that occurred to children in 2010, 2011, and 2012. As a result, SUSESO requested the Institute of Occupational Safety (ISL) to review the cases and report the data, especially pertaining to workplace accidents involving children under age 18.(5)

SENAME continued to incorporate information from other government agencies, particularly city-level offices, into the case registry system.(5) It also worked to merge the registry with its institutional database, SENAINFO, which will enable the agency to provide integrated data on victims of worst forms of child labor.(5) In 2013, SENAME assisted 1,095 child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, compared with 1,209 during 2012.(31) It continued to participate with the National Tourism Service (SERNATUR) in the certification of tourism organizations that adhere to the norms for the prevention of the commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC); it also developed certification norms for rental cabins, apartment hotels, tourism offices, and travel agencies.(31)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, 175 cases of commercial sexual exploitation, including cases of child prostitution, pornography, and trafficking for sexual exploitation, were investigated in the Chilean judicial system. A total of 29 criminal convictions for the commercial sexual exploitation of minors also occurred during this same period.(31, 33) These cases resulted in three convictions for the prostitution of minors and three convictions for trafficking in persons violations involving minors.(12)

During the reporting period, 1,284 minors under age 18 were reported to have been involved in drug trafficking.(33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6)

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor	Implement national plan against child labor; operates in many of Chile's regions.(1, 2) Headed by MINTRAB and include among others, SENAME, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Agriculture, the National Statistics Institute and SERNATUR, as well as the National Investigations Police and the National Uniformed Police.(1)
National Action Plan Against Trafficking in Persons	Implement actions to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, with a focus on women and children.(12) Encompass four strategic areas: (1) prevention and awareness-raising, (2) control (prosecution), (3) victim's assistance and protection, and (4) interinstitutional cooperation and coordination.(12)
Worst Forms of Child Labor Task Force	Evaluate and promote programs that prevent and protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Headed by SENAME; participating members include the National Advisory Committee, which includes MINTRAB, the Ministry of Education, SERNATUR, National Investigations Police, and National Uniformed Police; receives financial and technical assistance from the ILO.(22, 31) Oversee the national case registry of the worst forms of child labor.(2, 10) Registry enables SENAME to track incidents of the worst forms of child labor and to enhance programs designed to assist child laborers.(14, 34) Includes implementing a multisector protocol for the identification, registration, and care of victims of the worst forms of child labor.(31)
Inter-Agency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate the Government's anti-trafficking efforts; headed by the Ministry of the Interior. Members include law enforcement agencies, the National Prosecutors' Office, the Ministry of Foreign Relations, the Ministry of Justice, and the National Service for Minors, among others.(35)
National Observatory of Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Produce information on CSEC in collaboration with government and civil society.(5) Created in 2010 and coordinated by SENAME.(5)

In 2013, the National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor met twice, and the Worst Forms of Child Labor Task Force met seven times.(31) The "Worst Forms of Child Labor" registry received reports of 575 cases of children and adolescents, a decrease from 870 in 2012. The majority of the cases involved the use of children in illicit activities, such as drug trafficking, followed by children's involvement in work under hazardous conditions and commercial sexual exploitation.(36) The Committee imposed sanctions for child labor violations in 1,175 cases, among which 575 were for child labor, an increase from 193 child labor sanctions in 2012.(5)

In 2013, the Inter-Agency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons adopted a National Plan Against Trafficking in Persons.(5, 31)

During the reporting period, the National Observatory of Commercial Sexual Exploitation held monthly meetings on the “Role of Media in the Dissemination, Awareness, Prevention and Reporting of Child and Adolescent Victims of CSEC,” “Analysis of Theoretical and Practical Scenarios of Commercial Sexual Exploitation in Tourism,” and “Progress of the Second National Framework against CSEC.”(31)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Chile has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Second Framework for Action Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Aims to prevent such crimes against children and coordination among government agencies and NGO service providers. Adopted by the Ministry of Justice, SENAME, and with other government agencies and NGO partners in 2012.(2, 10, 37)
Cooperative Agreement for the prevention and eradication of child labor and protection of adolescent workers in Chile between the Ministry of Labor and Social Prevision and the Ministry of Education (Convenio de cooperación para la prevención y erradicación del trabajo infantil y protección del adolescente trabajador en Chile entre Ministerio del Trabajo y Previsión Social y Ministerio de Educación)	Creates mechanisms to detect child labor within the school system in the capital region. The MOE and the MINTRAB are signatories to the agreement.(38)
National Plan against Trafficking in Personst	Sets goals for providing services to child victims, including assigning them to a case manager.(5)

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

The National Advisory Committee is working on designing its second National Action Plan and aims to announce the plan during the first half of 2014.(31)

MINTRAB, SENAME, and the Ministry of Social Development are working with the ILO to integrate the issue of child labor into Chile’s social protection system. A study on the pilot model for the program, “Local Care for Child Workers and Their Families,” was developed and tested as part of this initiative.(13, 39). In 2012, the study’s results were reported to the participating government agencies for consideration and follow-up.(13, 39) In 2013 MINTRAB began coordination efforts to implement the model.(31)

In November 2013, the Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms country participants’ commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance the efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(40)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
SENAME programs for children at risk of or engaged in the worst forms of child labor‡	More than 90 SENAME programs for disadvantaged youth and children at risk of or engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(2, 22) In 2013, SENAME continued funding 16 projects to treat CSEC victims in 10 regions, and 93 comprehensive interventions programs. Programs provide specialized care for children and adolescents found in vulnerable situations, including victims of the worst forms of child labor.(5) Projects in collaboration with municipal governments, involved 121 local branches of the Office for the Protection of Children's Rights. Programs also include continued support and sponsorship of a program called "Regional Initiatives Against CSEC," run by the NGO "Raices," the European Union, and Chile's Agency for International Cooperation.(31)
Child labor survey on commercial sexual exploitation	Government in collaboration with the ILO, collected data from police and other governmental agencies for a preparatory study on commercial sexual exploitation. Results expected to be released within the first half of 2014.(5, 36)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor	Government of Spain-funded child labor prevention and eradication program that aims to strengthen capacity and decision-making to meet the goals for the Hemispheric Agenda for Decent Work for 2015 and 2020.(41)
Eradication of child labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (Erradicación del trabajo infantil en América Latina)	ILO-sponsored program to contribute to the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor and Protection of Permitted Adolescent Work in Latin America. Program funded Chile's second National Survey on Activities of Children and Adolescents (EANNA), conducted in 2012 by MINTRAB, the Ministry of Social Development, and the ILO. Results published in 2013.(41) Survey provides detailed information on the magnitude and characteristics of child labor in Chile.(31, 41) In 2013, the Government initiated significant outreach efforts to raise awareness of the results of the 2012 EANNA. Approximately 2,500 copies of the survey summary report were distributed, along with other promotional materials.(5)
New Life Program*‡	Program by Ministries of Education and Health, along with the Department of Juvenile Justice and the Service for Clinical Intervention New Life program in eight cities, aiming to address delinquency among children age 14 and younger.(42) Targets children who have been used by adults to carry out illegal activities.(2, 10) Program aims to provide integrated intervention for children who have been detained by the police for such activities, but are not subject to the juvenile justice channels because of their age. Since the inception of the program in 2010, a total of 5,629 children have benefitted from its services.(42) In 2013, "New Life," along with the Ministry of Education's reinsertion programs for vulnerable children, provided two training courses to teachers. In October 2013, SENAME published its third book; the book was written by the caregivers of these vulnerable children.(31, 42)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Americas)	Conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(43, 44)
Bilingual education programs*‡	Ministry of Education bilingual education program to increase the quality of education available to indigenous children and improve community involvement in the educational process.(45)
Extended School Day Program*‡	National Women's Service extended school day program aiming to keep children off the streets while their parents are at work, among other goals.(2)
MERCOSUR Southern Child Initiative	Aims to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region by raising awareness and seeking coordination among member states regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking and pornography, child labor, and migrant labor; by improving country legal frameworks to harmonize them with international conventions affecting children; and by exchanging best practices.(46)
Ethical Family Income program*‡	Government program to provide cash transfers to families in extreme poverty. Transfers conditioned upon certain factors, including school attendance.(2) Other programs provide scholarships and social services to children from low-income families and to families who qualify for benefits under the social protection system or who are otherwise at high risk of leaving school to enter work, such as adolescent parents and children of incarcerated parents.(2, 22)
Regional child labor projects	Chile participates in two separate Government of Spain-funded regional projects to eradicate child labor in Latin America, one with a specific focus on promoting education and monitoring child labor.(47)
Strengthening social dialogue as an effective tool to address the worst forms of child labor	Government of Ireland collaboration with the Government of Chile; program that works toward the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Aims to achieve its objectives through social dialogue and by building capacity of social partners to improve their role in the implementation of national policies or programs on child labor, with special focus on its worst forms.(41) Program has supported Global Pact Chile, which has developed a survey to analyze attitudes and actions of Chilean companies on child labor.(38)
Child labor prevention and awareness-raising campaigns in tourism	Joint Regional Group for the Americas program, administered in Chile by SERNATUR, which conducts child labor prevention and awareness-raising campaigns in tourism. Members of the group include Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela. In 2013, SERNATUR developed new certification norms on preventing CSEC for apartment hotels, lodges, and campgrounds.(5)

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
MINTRAB collaboration with Confederation of Production and Chilean Safety Association	MINTRAB collaboration with the Confederation of Production and Commerce (CPC), one of the country's largest business associations, and the Chilean Safety Association (ACHS), to fight against child labor. The CPC distributes guides to employers on eliminating child labor through public-private partnerships, and the ACHS has developed a manual promoting safety for adolescent workers and has distributed this information widely. (13, 32)
Government projects for at-risk youth in the Dominican Republic*‡	Government and World Bank program to support programs that aid the employability of disadvantaged, at-risk youth through training and internship opportunities in order to promote entrepreneurial and job-related skills. Offers training courses in 10 provinces throughout the Dominican Republic.(48, 49)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Chile.

During the reporting period, SENAME carried out many awareness-raising activities, including designing a Web site about child labor and the worst forms of child labor.(5)

The Government of Chile has a range of services and programs to assist the most vulnerable children. These programs offer nationwide coverage and can reach children engaged in many of the worst forms of child labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, Colombia made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government expanded its social protection program, More Families in Action, increasing the number of beneficiary families from 2.6 million to 3 million. The Government updated its list of the prohibited worst forms of child labor and conducted 1,543 inspections to verify labor conditions for adolescents with permits to work. The Government investigated 144 new cases of recruitment of children by illegal, non-state armed groups and convicted six individuals for such crimes. The Government also established an inspection unit within the Ministry of Labor to combat child labor, restructured the National System of Family Well-Being to improve interagency coordination to protect children's rights, and began to participate in a 4-year, $9 million project to combat child labor and improve workplace health and safety in mining. However, children continue to be forcibly recruited by non-state armed groups and engage in child labor in agriculture and street work. Limited interagency coordination and inadequate resources hinder efforts to combat child labor, including child trafficking.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Colombia are engaged in child labor, primarily in agricultural activities and street work.(1, 2) Children are also forcibly recruited by non-state armed groups.(3-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Colombia.

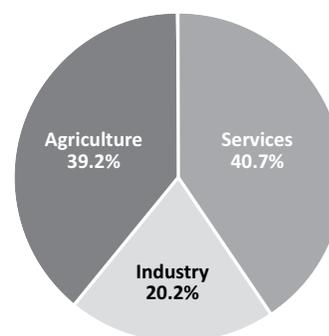

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In April 2013, the Government released the results of the 2012 National Household Survey, which includes estimates of the number of working children in Colombia as described in Table 1.(2) However, the Government does not collect disaggregated survey information on health, occupational safety, and similar risks associated with particular activities. Neither does it collect data on the geographical areas and sectors where children work, particularly the priority sectors identified by the Government such as coffee, sugarcane, and tobacco. The Government also does not attempt to gather data on child labor in hard-to-reach populations, including street children or children involved in illicit activities such as involvement with illegal non-state armed groups, illegal mining, and drug trafficking.

Government estimates reported in credible media outlets state that, in the city of Cali, more than 60,000 children work on the streets and 1,000 are homeless and that, in the city of Medellín, more than 25,000 children are engaged in street work and 11,000 children live on the streets, due to domestic violence, poverty, unemployment, and displacement.(17, 18) A 2013 report by the ILO and the Ministry of Labor found that 20,000 children ages 10 to 17 are engaged in domestic service in third-party homes in Colombia. They can work up to 60 hours per week and sometimes are not paid or receive little remuneration. Few of these children attend school, and they generally lack health benefits.(24, 25)

The Government of Colombia and the Armed Revolutionary Forces of Colombia (FARC) began peace negotiations in 2012. However, the FARC continues to recruit children, including indigenous and Ecuadorian children, into its ranks; this practice has not been included in the negotiations agenda.(26-30) A 2013 report by the Prosecutor General’s Office (PGO) documented 3,000 cases of children recruited by non-state groups during the last decade: 59 percent of them were recruited by the FARC.(31) Credible media outlets report that non-state armed groups use bullying as a strategy to recruit children from schools and use underage girls as couriers to collect extortion payments.(32-34)

In Colombia, children’s access to education is complicated by the internal armed conflict, displacement, long distances, and sometimes impassable routes between their homes and schools in rural areas.(35-38) The UN has reported that some schools have been damaged or that their classes were suspended because of confrontations between illegal non-state armed forces and the Colombian Armed Forces (CAF), and that some school children have participated in educational and recreational activities carried out by the CAF in areas of armed conflict, which could potentially put these children at risk of retaliation by such non-state armed forces.(30) The 2012 National School Desertion Survey for children enrolled in primary and secondary education identified child labor as one of the primary causes of school desertion in the Caribbean and Pacific regions.(39)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Colombia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government of Colombia has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4).

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 1 of Decree 4807 of 2011 (49)

In 2013, the Government of Colombia updated its list of the worst forms of child labor. This update specifically prohibits adolescents ages 15 to 17 from performing activities that pose physical, physiological, or occupational and safety risks; expose them to dangerous biological or chemical substances or psychological abuse; interfere with their education; and are unpaid or do not provide social security or other employment benefits.(41) The Government increased the fines for most labor law violations, including those involving child labor, from up to 100 times the minimum monthly wage to up to 5,000 times the minimum monthly wage. The Government also ratified ILO C. 189 concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers.(50-52)

Colombian legislation relevant to the worst forms of child labor undergoes frequent changes. However, it is not clear whether those changes are effectively disseminated to the general public or relevant groups, including enforcement officials, employers, and civil society organizations.(53) The UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women reports that the Government has not adopted regulations to protect and assist victims of human trafficking, including child victims, under Law 985 of 2005.(54)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Receive complaints of labor law violations and conduct labor inspections, including inspections to verify labor conditions for adolescent workers and compliance with other child labor provisions. Operate a child labor monitoring system independent of the labor inspection system that identifies children engaged in or at risk of child labor.(55)
Ministry of Interior (MOI)	Operate a hotline to report and track cases of human trafficking, coordinate investigations, and facilitate access to social services for victims.(56)
National Police (PNC)	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(19, 55)

National Training Center (SENA)	Responsible for collecting fines imposed by the MOL for labor law violations.(60)

Law enforcement agencies in Colombia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In February 2014, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) issued Resolution 430 to establish an inspection unit to investigate cases of child labor and carry out activities to prevent child labor in coordination with the MOL's Fundamental Labor Rights Unit.(61) In 2013, the Government approved Law 1610, which clarifies the main responsibilities of the labor inspectorate system, including enforcing labor laws through inspections, identifying violations, imposing sanctions, and helping ensure that conciliation and mediation are used to resolve labor conflicts.(51) The National Training Center (SENA) issued Resolution 2126 to improve its ability to collect fines for labor law violations.(60, 62)

According to the MOL, there are 904 inspector positions, and 684 have been filled during the reporting period.(62, 63) In 2013, labor inspectors conducted 1,559 inspections in regard to child labor laws. Although the MOL did not provide complete information about these inspections, it reported that, as a result of these inspections, the MOL removed 84 children and adolescents from worksites that did not comply with labor laws and issued four sanctions for a total of more than $2,400.(64, 65) The MOL did not report whether these children and adolescents were referred to any social services. SENA also did not report whether fines were collected for these or any child labor infractions.(65)

In 2013, the MOL's Fundamental Labor Rights Unit identified more than 126,500 children who were working or were at risk of working through its monitoring system; 5,714 of them received services from the Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being (ICBF).(65) The ICBF reported that it received 5,988 child labor complaints directly; as a result of these complaints it provided social services to more than 1,700 children involved in child labor. Furthermore, ICBF provided services through its mobile units to more than 88,900 additional children, including children engaged in child labor.(58) Although the ICBF refers cases of apparent child labor violations to the MOL for further action, it is unclear whether the MOL conducts any follow up, including whether labor inspectors use this information to target their inspections.(58)

To combat child labor in the mining sector, the ICBF requires its regional offices to coordinate with the MOL's regional offices and other government agencies. It also requires its regional offices to collaborate with labor inspectors in the periodic inspections of mines and quarries, provide social services to children found working, and notify the relevant MOL authorities of any apparent child-labor infractions the ICBF identifies.(66) However, it is unclear whether such coordination occurs in practice.

During the reporting period, the MOL trained inspectors in a number of areas, including labor inspection procedures, child labor, and occupational health hazards.(55) It also partnered with the ILO to design a training program to strengthen the labor inspectorate. In 2013, 600 MOL inspectors participated in this training. This training was part of the activities carried out by the “Promoting Compliance with International Labor Standards” project in 2013 — a 4-year, $7.82 million USDOL-funded ILO project to help Colombia strengthen the institutional capacity of the MOL to enforce labor laws, improve protective measures for trade union leaders, and promote social dialogue.(67, 68) Despite these important efforts, the Government of Colombia also acknowledges that labor inspectors still lack the resources to fully carry out all their duties.(69)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the ICBF received reports of 903 cases of child commercial sexual exploitation, including 263 cases of child pornography, through its hotline. In addition, it received more than 1,490 complaints related to sexual abuse, child pornography, and sexual exploitation through its Internet hotline.(55, 58) The ICBF assisted 228 children involved in commercial sexual exploitation, including 70 child victims of child pornography.(55, 58) The National Police (PNC) arrested 57 individuals for commercial sexual exploitation.(56) The Government did not report whether it had followed up on these 57 arrests. Moreover, no information is available about whether the Government carried out investigations, prosecutions, or convictions related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Interior (MOI) received more than 15,000 calls on its human trafficking hotline; 157 of these calls were forwarded to the PNC, 14 of which were investigated by the PNC and 18 by the PGO.(56) In addition, the PNC arrested 28 suspects for human trafficking in 15 anti-trafficking operations. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs identified 60 victims of international human trafficking, including five children.(70)

The PNC launched three investigations into human trafficking for the purpose of labor exploitation. The PGO opened 143 new human trafficking investigations, including 87 for sexual exploitation and 21 for labor exploitation.(56) Research could not determine whether these investigations were related to the investigations that resulted from the hotline calls. The PGO initiated 44 new human trafficking prosecutions that involved international trafficking, although it is unknown whether these involved labor or sex exploitation.(56) No information is available on whether these prosecutions are linked to the investigations mentioned above. In separate cases, the Government convicted and sentenced 12 individuals on human trafficking charges; their sentences ranged from 8 to 10 years in prison and they received fines of approximately $120,000.(56) Limited information is available about how many of these trafficking cases involved children. The Government has acknowledged that it lacks adequate resources to effectively conduct investigations and prosecutions of human trafficking cases.(69) Furthermore, the Government has limited resources to provide assistance to victims.(56)

The MOL and UNODC signed an agreement to combat human trafficking for the purpose of labor exploitation. Under this agreement, UNODC will carry out research to determine the prevalence of and risk factors for this crime and develop tools for labor inspectors to identify, address, and refer cases of human trafficking to the appropriate criminal authorities.(71) UNODC also signed an agreement with the MOI to strengthen its efforts to combat trafficking in persons. In November 2013, UNODC rolled out an online training tool for labor inspectors, which will be used in 15 MOL regional offices throughout the country.(72, 73) In addition, the PGO has appointed a special prosecutor to focus on internal human trafficking cases that involve the use of children for illegal activities, including child trafficking, in the Bogotá region.(56)

Colombia

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

The Ministry of Defense, in partnership with UNICEF, trained members of the Armed Forces on children's rights. As of April 2014, 25 Training Battalions have received training.(74) Between January and November 2013, the Government investigated 144 new cases of child recruitment by illegal, non-state armed groups, convicted six individuals for recruiting these children, and separated 342 children from these groups.(58, 75)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National System of Family Well-Being†	Promote interagency coordination to protect children's rights, including related to child labor. Design, implement, monitor, and evaluate policies that affect children from early childhood to adolescence.(76)
Interagency Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the MOL, includes 13 government agencies and representatives from trade unions, business associations, and civil society organizations.(77)
National Interagency Committee for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Direct efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Coordinated by the MOL, includes 11 government agencies and representatives from business associations, trade unions, and civil society organizations.(78, 79)
Interagency Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Lead efforts to combat human trafficking. Chaired by the MOI, includes 14 government agencies.(80)
Interagency Committee for the Prevention of the Recruitment and Use of Children by Illegal Armed Groups	Coordinate efforts to prevent child recruitment by non-state armed groups, including for purposes of sexual exploitation. Led by the Office of the Vice President and composed of more than 21 government agencies.(81, 82)
Office of the Inspector General (OIG)	Monitor the implementation of child labor laws and policies, including the National Strategy to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(40)

† Coordinating mechanism created during the reporting period.

In 2013, the Government of Colombia restructured the National System of Family Well-Being to improve coordination of actions to protect children's rights at the national, departmental, and local levels. The National System comprises more than 36 national government agencies, including the MOL.(76)

Despite these efforts, it is not clear how effectively these interagency mechanisms coordinate activities and exchange information. Local authorities and international organizations have cited lack of coordination as one of the main obstacles to addressing child labor and human trafficking.(18, 56)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Colombia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2008–2015)	Lays out Colombia's strategy to combat the worst forms of child labor. Government established nine priority sectors: coffee, tobacco, sugarcane, mining, street work, garbage scavenging, illegal sale of gasoline, commercial sexual exploitation, and recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.(77, 83)
National Strategy to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2008–2012)	Guides efforts to combat human trafficking, including the trafficking of children.(55) In 2013, developed a new strategy to combat trafficking and to protect victims' rights through prevention, protection, assistance, and law enforcement efforts. However, it has not yet been approved.(84)
National Policy to Prevent the Recruitment of Children and Adolescents by Illegal Armed Groups	Directs actions to prevent the recruitment and use of children by non-state armed groups. Calls for the Government to develop strategies to protect children from recruitment in areas of conflict, address violence against children (including sexual violence and child labor), and improve interagency coordination.(85)

Policy	Description
National Development Plan (2010–2014)	Outlines Colombia's strategy to promote economic growth and social inclusion. Includes the goal of reducing the number of working children by 35 percent (from 1,768,153 to 1,149,300).(86)
10-Year National Plan for Children and Adolescents (2009–2019)	Encompasses actions to increase children's access to social services from prenatal stage to 18 years of age. Seeks to reduce the number of children who are engaged in child labor.(87)
National Strategy to End Extreme Poverty	Seeks to lift 1.4 million people out of extreme poverty by 2014 and includes combating child labor as a goal.(88, 89)

†Policy was launched during the reporting period.

In 2013, the Government trained 2,700 public servants to implement the National Strategy to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor, and the MOL helped establish 100 interagency committees to combat child labor at the departmental and municipal levels, expanding the number of committees from 335 to 435.(55) However, a 2012 report by the Office of the Inspector General on the implementation of the National Strategy to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor indicates that some of the country's provinces and main cities have neither fully implemented the Strategy nor allocated funding for child labor initiatives.(90) Furthermore, the Government has not carried out programs in some of the priority sectors such as coffee, tobacco, sugarcane, garbage scavenging, and the illegal sale of gasoline. Although the National Action Plan to Prevent and Eradicate the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children ended in 2011 and the Government continued to carry out actions to combat this crime, the Government has not yet approved a new National Action Plan.(56, 91)

In November 2013, the Government hosted the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms governmental commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(92)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, Comoros made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government implemented a new Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan, and established the Inter-Agency Monitoring Group to coordinate its efforts to carry out commitments against trafficking in persons. While child labor does not appear to be widespread in Comoros, children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in fishing and domestic service. Comoros lacks social programs targeting sectors in which children work. Furthermore, a gap between the minimum age for work and the age for compulsory education leaves children ages 13 to 15 particularly vulnerable to child labor. Finally, access to free public education is limited in rural areas.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Comoros are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in fishing and domestic service. Children are also work in agriculture.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Comoros.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	35.6 (56,840)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	44.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	23.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		79.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2008, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2013.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from MICS Survey, 2000.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Activities unknown* (3, 7)
	Fishing,*† activities unknown (1, 3)
Services	Domestic service*† (1, 3, 4, 7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in domestic service,* street vending,* baking,* and agriculture* (1, 7)
	Drug trafficking* (7)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined hazardous by national law or regulation.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are sometimes sent to live with wealthy families to obtain educational opportunities; but in some cases, they are forced to work in domestic service instead.(1, 3, 4, 7) In Comoros and in other countries, it is a traditional practice to send children to receive Arabic reading instruction at the homes of private instructors. Since these instructors are not paid for their services at these home-based, informal institutions, children may be forced to work in the instructors’ homes.(3, 4, 7, 8) Girls usually clean the homes, while boys work as field hands or in the gardens.(3, 4, 7, 8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Comoros has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

* No conscription or no standing military.

In 2013, the Council of Ministers accepted and validated a new Penal Code and new Criminal Procedures Code to increase the penalties for child labor and incorporate sanctions against trafficking in persons. The codes have been submitted to the National Assembly, but have not yet been ratified.(3)

Article 123 of the Labor Code and Article 129 of Law No. 12 of 2012 establish the minimum age for work and apprenticeship as 15, but this does not apply to children working in the informal sector, or children performing light work in domestic service or agriculture, as long as the work does not interfere with the children's education, or their physical or moral development.(2, 10, 13, 17) Children in Comoros are required to attend school only until age 12. The compulsory school age leaves children ages 13 to 15 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.(4, 12, 13)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforce child labor laws, investigate allegations of child labor, and refer cases for investigation.(3, 18, 19)
Police Morals and Minors Brigade	Investigate allegations of child abuse and refer cases for prosecution.(3)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute criminal cases.(3)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in Comoros took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that agencies responsible to enforce labor laws took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

The number of labor inspectors for 2013 is unavailable. The MOL had one inspector for each island in 2012.(18, 19) In 2013, there were no MOL inspections related to child labor, as there were no allegations reported to the MOL; thus no child labor law violations were found nor were there any citations issued.(3) Labor inspectors did not receive training on child labor issues during the reporting period.(20) Moreover, research did not reveal information on the MOL's funding levels.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, an ongoing investigation led to the removal of one child from domestic service. Additionally, two investigators on the Morals and Minors Brigade received training on how to prevent and combat trafficking in persons during the reporting period.(3) No information was found regarding the number of criminal investigators, about whether the criminal investigators were trained on child labor issues other than trafficking in persons, or about the funding levels of the agencies responsible for criminal law enforcement.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee Against Child Labor	Coordinate government efforts on child labor.(3)
Regional Committees Against Child Labor	Serve as surveillance and identification mechanisms on each island for cases of child labor and violence against children, and educate communities on child labor.(8, 19)
Inter-Agency Monitoring Group	Established in 2013, coordinate efforts to meet commitments to fight trafficking in persons. Headed by the Secretary General of the Government and reports to the Cabinet on a weekly basis on progress in implementing the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor and the new Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan.(3) Members include the Government Human Rights Officer, and representatives of the Ministries of Education, Interior, Justice, Foreign Affairs, and Health, Police, Gendarmes, and child protection NGOs.(16)

In 2013, the Government established the Inter-Agency Monitoring Group to coordinate its efforts to carry out commitments against trafficking in persons.(3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Comoros has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor (NAP) (2010–2015)	Aims to harmonize labor laws, mobilize groups to combat the worst forms of child labor, promote universal primary education, address family poverty, and collect systematic information on the worst forms of child labor.(19, 21)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan†	Prescribes applying existing laws related to trafficking in persons and considering new laws to specifically prohibit it, creating a mechanism for identifying victims of trafficking and for referring them to the appropriate social services, and raising awareness of the phenomenon.(3, 22)
National Plan on Education For All in 2015	Includes the goal of universal primary education.(13)
Poverty Reduction and Growth Strategy Paper	Includes goals such as reducing poverty and increasing access to social services, such as education and preventative health.(23, 24)

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

According to a Ministry of Education official, the Government opened more than 200 new schools in 2012. Although the IMF reports that Comoros increased its spending for education by 30 percent, and for school construction by 60 percent in 2013, access to school remains a problem in some rural areas.(25, 26) In areas where public schools are not easily accessible, the costs of private schooling are prohibitive for many families. These costs may prevent children, especially girls, from attending school, because families are less likely to pay for their education.(4, 12, 13, 27)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Comoros funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
NAP‡	Government plan that proposes several programs targeting the worst forms of child labor; Government held a high-level awareness-raising conference on stopping child labor in November of 2013 as part of this plan.(21, 26, 28)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Comoros, aims to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(29)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Comoros.

Research found no evidence that any other programs proposed in the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor were implemented during the reporting period.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Comoros (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Extend the minimum age for work to children working in the informal sector.	2010 – 2013
	Establish a minimum age for children performing light work in domestic service and agriculture.	2012 – 2013
Enforcement	Provide inspectors with training on child labor.	2009 – 2013
	Carry out inspections to enforce compliance with the laws addressing child labor.	2009 – 2013
	Ensure that data on child labor law and criminal law enforcement are collected and made publicly available.	2009 – 2013
Government Policies	Make education a viable alternative to work by raising the compulsory education age to 15, the established minimum age for work, and by making public schools more accessible.	2009 – 2013
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children, particularly in agriculture.	2013
	Implement social programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2013

In 2013, the Democratic Republic of the Congo made no advancement in efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor. The Government is receiving a “No Advancement” assessment because some elements of the Congolese National Army continue to abduct and forcibly recruit children for use in armed conflict, labor, and sexual exploitation. The Government released results from the National Survey on the Situation of Children and Adolescents Outside of School, issued two directives that provide protections to children affected by armed conflict, and launched a project to combat child labor in the mining sector. However, children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo also continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in the forced mining of gold, cassiterite (tin ore), coltan (tantalum ore), and wolframite (tungsten ore).

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in the forced mining of gold, cassiterite (tin ore), coltan (tantalum ore), and wolframite (tungsten ore). Children are also abducted and forcibly recruited for use in armed conflict.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

NO ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, some members of the Congolese National Army (FARDC) and armed groups, including rebel groups, continued to abduct and recruit children to be used in their units.(11, 34, 40, 41) Children associated with armed groups may be forced to serve as combatants and bodyguards for army commanders, as well as porters, spies, miners, domestic servants, and sex slaves. Children also monitor military check points and are used during looting expeditions.(10, 11, 32, 34, 41-46) The Lord’s Resistance Army also abducted children from the Democratic Republic of the Congo for service in Sudan, in South Sudan, and in the Central African Republic.(32, 45) In addition, children were recruited and abducted for service in the Democratic Republic of the Congo from Rwanda by the March 23 Movement (M23) rebel group, and from Uganda by the Allied Democratic Forces/National Army for the Liberation of Uganda.(32, 34, 36, 39, 40, 46) Children also engage in commercial sexual exploitation, many starting at age 12.(47)

Armed conflict hinders children’s access to education in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Children are forcibly recruited from schools to serve as child soldiers, and some are victims of sexual violence on their way to and from school.(28, 34, 48) Many schools have closed or have been destroyed because of armed conflict.(11, 40, 48) Some schools are also physically occupied by armed forces and used as barracks and operations bases, which places children in the vicinity at risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(39, 40, 48) In addition, the lack of schools and the long travel distances to get to schools prevents children from receiving an education.(49)

Access to education is further constrained by the lack of birth registration. According to the Government’s Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey in 2010, only 29 percent of children in rural areas and 24 percent in urban areas are registered at birth.(50) Unable to prove citizenship, nonregistered children may have difficulty accessing services such as education and are more vulnerable to being recruited into armed conflict and other forms of child labor.(32) Approximately 2.9 million people were internally displaced in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in 2013.(51) Internally displaced children may have difficulty accessing education, which puts them at increased risk of engaging in child labor.

In 2013, results were reported from the National Survey on the Situation of Children and Adolescents Outside of School in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.(52) The results showed that children residing in rural areas and in the Katanga province are more likely to work.(52) There has never been a comprehensive, stand-alone child labor survey conducted in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In addition, the Government’s efforts to collect data on children involved in armed conflict remains incomplete.(43)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Democratic Republic of the Congo has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4).

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 43 of the Constitution (57)

* No conscription or no standing military.

The laws of the Democratic Republic of the Congo are not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. Penalties in the Labor Code outlined for the use of forced or compulsory labor are low and do not deter violations. Article 326 of the Labor Code provides for a maximum penalty for the use of forced or compulsory labor of up to 6 months' imprisonment and/or a fine.(44)

Children are required to attend school only until age 15. This standard makes children age 15 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.(53, 62) Although the Constitution establishes the right to free education, school fees are still required in Kinshasa and Lubumbashi. It is also unclear whether President Kabila's 2009 declaration—that primary school fees would no longer be required outside of Kinshasa and Lubumbashi—is being implemented and why school fees would be required in those provinces.(29, 49, 57) Children engage in various kinds of work to pay school fees and compensate underpaid teachers, including in work in artisanal mining and on their teachers' farms.(20, 29) The cost of uniforms may also deter children's enrollment.(63) In addition, because the compulsory education law is not systematically enforced, children may enter the work force and may engage in worst forms of child labor activities.(61) Enacted laws in the Democratic Republic of the Congo are usually not followed by the issuance of implementing decrees, and the Government does not promote awareness of its laws. As a result, many enacted laws are not implemented effectively.(28)

In 2013, the Government issued two directives that protect children affected by armed conflict. The first directive, NVPM/MDNAC/CAB/0909/2013, prohibits the recruitment of children for armed conflict and the use of schools for military purposes.(40, 41) The second directive, N05/00/CAG/ANR/195/2013, requires that all children in detention for their association with armed groups be transferred to UN child protection agencies for reintegration.(40, 41)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

NO ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Investigate cases related to the worst forms of child labor.(10, 41)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action, and National Solidarity (MINAS)	Investigate child trafficking cases and receive referrals of child workers found during inspections and reunite these children with their families.(5, 10)
MINAS' Department of Child Protection	Operate a database to monitor and coordinate children's rights activities and implement programs targeting orphans and vulnerable children.(30, 64)
Ministry of Gender, Family, and Children (MoGFC)	Investigate cases related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(29, 41)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Enforce criminal laws related to forced labor, trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.(10, 41)
National Police	Enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(5)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in the Democratic Republic of the Congo took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Government employed 200 labor inspectors; 75 percent of these were women posted in Kinshasa.(10) There are also 20 labor controllers in the Katanga mining region.(5) According to the Government, the number of labor inspectors is not sufficient given the size of the country.(5) Labor inspectors often do not have adequate staff, facilities, and means of transportation to conduct inspections.(5, 41, 65) Labor inspectors did not receive training on the worst forms of child labor during 2013.(10) The Ministry of Labor (MOL) also does not have a system to track child labor complaints. Each inspector is required to prepare one annual inspection report, but this report does not necessarily include information on child labor.(29) Information on the number of complaints, inspections, citations, and prosecutions is not publicly available.(10) The Government does not facilitate cooperation between the inspection services and the justice system, resulting in a lack of information on whether penalties were applied to labor violations.(66) In 2012, the last date for which information is available, the Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action, and National Solidarity (MINAS) Department of Child Protection (DISPE) employed 57 people at the national level and 8 at the provincial level.(64)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research found no information on whether MINAS investigated cases of child trafficking, or whether there were any trafficking prosecutions or convictions during the year.(10, 64) Research was also unable to uncover whether MINAS employees had received training. A source indicates that the MINAS staff have limited professional experience and high turnover.(30)

The Ministry of Justice (MOJ) and the Ministry of Gender, Family, and Children (MoGFC) have not investigated cases involving the worst forms of child labor.(10) Investigators in the MoGFC and the MOJ were not trained on the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.(10) In 2012, the last date for which information is available, the MOJ was allocated a budget of less than 2 percent of the national budget, an increase of 1 percent from 2011.(64, 67) The Government lacks procedures for identifying victims of the worst forms of child labor and referring them to social services.(32)

In 2013, the UN Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO), with support from the IOM and police, held two workshops in Kisangani to raise awareness among 300 female police officers on how to combat commercial sexual exploitation.(45) MONUSCO also established four police commissariats of special police to protect women and children in Kisangani. The commissariats were provided with vehicles, motorbikes, and computer equipment.(45) In addition, MONUSCO trained approximately 49 police officers and 1,182 FARDC personnel in child protection and children's rights during the year.(45)

During the reporting period, Bosco Ntaganda, the former leader of the M23 rebel group, was transferred to the International Criminal Court for crimes against humanity, including the recruitment of child soldiers.(11, 41) As a result of the military defeat of the M23 rebel group and actions against the Mayi Mayi Cheka armed group in North Kivu, 268 children were released to the FARDC; they were later transferred to the UN's Country Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting.(68) However, the FARDC's lack of control over some of its commanders has led to the continued recruitment of child soldiers in 2013.(41) In addition, some children association with armed groups were detained, interrogated, and beaten, despite the passing of Directive N05/00/CAG/ANR/195/2013, which requires that all children in detention for their association with armed groups be transferred to the UN.(40, 41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NCCL)	Coordinate activities that include compiling data on the nature and extent of child labor, preventing and withdrawing children from engaging in the worst forms of child labor, conducting public awareness campaigns, and building the capacity of government officials and civil society to combat exploitative child labor.(29, 64) Led by the MOL and composed of members from MINAS, MOJ, local NGOs, and civil society.(10)
Executive Committee of the National Program to Demobilize, Disarm, and Reintegrate (DDR)	Coordinate the identification, verification, and release of child soldiers, with assistance from MONUSCO, UNICEF, and partner NGOs.(69)
Provincial Worst Forms of Child Labor Committees in Kasai Oriental province, Kolwezi, and Mongbwalu	Coordinate activities to combat child labor at the provincial level.(13, 64, 70)

During the reporting period, the National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NCCL) did not receive funding from the Government.(10) In 2010, the MOL issued a decree nominating members for the NCCL's permanent secretariat. However, research found no evidence demonstrating that this decree had been implemented or whether the NCCL met in 2013.(29, 64, 71) In October 2013, the Government published a decree authorizing the creation of committees to combat child labor at the provincial level.(10) However, the Government has not funded the three existing provincial committees.(13, 64)

In 2011, the Government, representatives of artisanal miners, mineral buyers and traders, and civil society groups signed a code of conduct to increase transparency and prohibit the employment of children in mines. Research did not uncover whether the code of conduct was implemented in 2013.(64, 72)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2011)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the Democratic Republic of the Congo by 2020. Promotes the enforcement of legislation on the worst forms of child labor, awareness raising, education, prevention and reintegration services, and monitoring and evaluation efforts.(29, 35)
UN-Backed Action Plan to End the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers (2012–2020)	Seeks to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers within the Government's armed forces and security services. Implemented by the Ministry of Defense, the four components of this action plan include identifying children serving in the armed forces, providing reintegration services to those children, establishing accountability measures against the perpetrators, and creating a partnership framework for the UN and the Government.(10, 39, 41, 73, 74)
National Action Plan for Orphans and Vulnerable Children (2010–2014)*	Aims to provide orphans and vulnerable children with improved access to education and psychosocial, medical, and nutritional support.(30, 75, 76)
Growth and Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (2011–2015)*	Seeks to improve living conditions and access to social services for vulnerable groups, including children, by 2015.(49)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

NO ADVANCEMENT

The National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor has not been financed by the Government. As a result, implementation is dependent on external support, which has not been received.(10, 64) In addition, although three provincial committees have action plans to combat the worst forms of child labor, no information could be obtained to assess the implementation of those plans.(29, 64)

Although the Government continued to make efforts to release child soldiers from its armed units, certain elements of the FARDC continued to recruit children into the armed forces, which diminished the impact of government policies to combat the worst forms of child labor.(10, 40, 41) The UN documented 1,023 cases of children who were both recruited and separated from armed groups in 2013; 113 of these children were from the FARDC.(41)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description and Objectives
Program to Demobilize, Disarm, and Reintegrate	2-year Government program receiving support from USAID, the World Bank, Sweden, and Japan; aims to reintegrate children associated with armed groups in North and South Kivu.(29) By mid-September, 2,234 children had received support.(5, 45) Approximately 30 children formerly associated with armed groups were also released from government detention centers during the reporting period.(45) In December 2013, the Government adopted the third national DDR program referred to as the PNDDR III.(68)
Program to Assist Children Formerly Associated with Armed Groups	UNICEF-implemented program that assisted vulnerable children and children formerly associated with armed groups with economic strengthening interventions through November 2013.(77)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.(78)
Growth with Governance in the Mineral Sector Project†‡	Government implemented project that aims to eliminate child labor and the presence of children from mines in Kolwezi by raising awareness of child labor among parents and by providing children with extracurricular activities, income-generating activities, school catch-up classes, and school clubs.(79)
Rights Initiative to Enhance Worker Rights in the Kivus	$692,988 USDOS-funded program collected information on forced labor, supported the identification and remediation of labor law violations in the mining sector, and provided livelihood opportunities to exploited workers, including child laborers. Implemented from October 2011 to September 2013.(80)
Street Children Project	$10 million World Bank- funded, 5-year project to prevent children from engaging in street work and provide support services for street children.(30)
School Rehabilitation Project*†‡	Government project that provided $100 million to rehabilitate 1,000 schools across the country.(81)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Democratic Republic of the Congo's programs to assist child soldiers are not sufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. The Program to Demobilize, Disarm, and Reintegrate (DDR) does not provide sufficient resources to support reintegration services.(65, 82) More than half of the child soldiers returning from armed conflict do not have access to reintegration services, and the programs available do not respond to the medical, psychological, and economic needs of former child soldiers.(43) Limited evidence also suggests that girls do not enter the DDR because they fear being stigmatized and they lack awareness about their rights and options.(34, 46) The UN and other organizations have called on the Government to make the DDR more accessible and effective for girls.(43, 83)

Despite the Katanga Provincial Ministry of Interior's effort to manage a center for street children in Lubumbashi, children continued to live and work on the streets. There is a need for the Government to strengthen its efforts to provide street children with food, shelter, and health care.(27, 28, 64, 82)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Congo, Republic of the

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, the Republic of the Congo made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Republic of the Congo began implementing a social safety net program, used as a means to provide education to the poor, and continued to fund a school feeding program. The Government also conducted a qualitative survey on the trafficking of children and adults. However, children in the Republic of the Congo continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and domestic work. Gaps also remain in the coordination and enforcement of child labor laws. In addition, there is an overall lack of programming on child labor, particularly for children working in agriculture and domestic service.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Republic of the Congo engage in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work.⁽¹⁾ Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Republic of the Congo.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	27.0 (256,993)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	87.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	27.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		73.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.⁽²⁾

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2005.⁽³⁾

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cocoa* (4)
	Farming, activities unknown (5, 6)
	Catching and processing fish* (4-6)
	Raising livestock* (5)
Industry	Production of charcoal by burning trees* (5)
	Breaking stones* (5)
Services	Domestic work (4-8)
	Baking* (5)
	Market vending (4, 5, 7, 8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 5, 7)
	Domestic work, farming, fishing,* and market vending, as a result of human trafficking (4, 5, 7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Many children are trafficked to the Republic of the Congo, mainly from West African countries such as Benin and the Democratic Republic of the Congo for the purpose of forced labor.(4, 7, 9) Children are also trafficked internally from rural areas to the cities of Brazzaville and Pointe-Noire to work as domestic servants, with the expectation that they will receive an education and care.(4, 5)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Republic of the Congo has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 23 of the Constitution of 2002 (15)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 23 of the Constitution of 2002 (15)

* No conscription or no standing military.

The Labor Code allows the Ministry of Education to issue waivers allowing the employment of a child under age 16 after consulting with a labor inspector and examining the type of work.(10) A list of hazardous work for children dates back to Order 2224 of 1953.(12) However, ILO C. 182 calls for periodic review and revision of the list of hazardous work for signatory countries. The Government has yet to submit a revised list identifying hazardous forms of work prohibited to minors under ILO C. 182 and 138 to the ILO Committee of Experts.(12, 16)

The Law on the Protection of the Child specifies penalties against the abduction of persons younger than 18 independently of trafficking, but there are no penalties specifically prescribed against trafficking persons for commercial sexual exploitation or child domestic workers. The Government drafted a comprehensive anti-trafficking law during the reporting period. The Law is being considered by the Parliamentary Committee.(5)

Congo, Republic of the

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Although the Constitution stipulates that free and compulsory education be provided until age 16, parents may be required to pay for books, uniforms, and school fees, which may limit children's access to education.(6, 15)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws and monitor officially registered businesses.(5)
National Police	Enforce criminal laws against child labor, forced labor, human trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities.(5)
Ministry of Social Affairs (MSA)	Identify child trafficking victims, enforces laws against the trafficking of children, and provides social welfare assistance to trafficking victims.(5)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce criminal laws against child labor, forced labor, human trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities.(5)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in the Republic of the Congo took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the MOL employed 17 full-time and 11 part-time inspectors with duties to inspect for all types of labor law violations. According to the MOL, additional inspectors and training are needed.(5) While child labor complaints can be made to MOL officials, inspection efforts are generally limited to urban areas and formal establishments; however, most children work in rural areas and in small, informal establishments. The Government did not provide any information about the number of inspections carried out, the number of violations of child labor laws, or the number of penalties or citations issued for child labor law violations during the reporting period.(5)

Criminal Law Enforcement

During the reporting period, the MSA shifted its focus from mediating and applying civil penalties against suspected traffickers to instituting criminal charges.(5) In addition, the Government identified 25 child victims of trafficking. As of the writing of this report, 10 criminal child trafficking cases were pending.(17) The Government also provided anti-trafficking training to approximately 1,000 police officers. The training included definitions, investigation techniques, and victim identification for trafficking cases.(17) During the reporting period, the UNODC trained police and magistrates on how to prosecute trafficking and forced child labor, and law enforcement officials referred child trafficking victims to the MSA for assistance.(5) The MSA budgeted $255,000 for 2011–2013 to finance inspections, vehicles, and supplies as part of the action plan to combat child trafficking. A limited number of sources indicate that the budget for the MSA is inadequate to address the scope of child labor, including the trafficking of children.(5)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MSA's Task Force	Coordinate efforts to combat child trafficking and is composed of the representatives of the MSA, other government agencies, the national police, border patrol agents, and NGOs.(5, 18)
Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire (ATCC)	Coordinate anti-trafficking efforts in Pointe-Noire. In 2013, the MSA provided $80,000 in funding to the ATCC.(17)

Although the Government has established the MSA's Task Force, research found no evidence of a coordinating mechanism to combat all forms of child labor. Moreover, UNICEF and UNODC have noted that the Government needs better inter-ministerial coordination if it is to reduce child labor, including trafficking.(5)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Republic of the Congo has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (PRSP)*	Develops core strategies to set national priorities for poverty reduction and attainment of the Millennium Development Goals. As part of the strategy, calls for increased preschool, primary, secondary, and literacy education; improved access to quality education; and training girls in sectors in which they have low representation.(5, 19)
United Nations Development Assistance Framework 2009–2013*	Includes provisions for vulnerable populations such as children with HIV/AIDS, child ex-combatants, and children from ethnic populations into the Country Plan of Action.(20)
Action Plan on Child Trafficking	Includes public awareness campaigns; training law enforcement officials; and identifying trafficked children, repatriating them to their countries of origin, and/or placing them with foster families.(5)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

Although the Government has adopted the Action Plan on Child Trafficking, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of the Republic of the Congo funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Safety Net Program (LISUNGI)†‡	Government program that, in partnership with the World Bank, provides a national safety net program to improve access to health and education services for the poorest in the Republic of the Congo. Program includes a pilot cash transfer program to cover 5,000 households. Launched in January 2014, Government will contribute $15 million to the project.(21)
Government School Feeding Program*‡	Government is transitioning from the U.S. Government’s McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program to a government-supported school feeding program and is providing $9 million to the school feeding program between 2012–2014.(5)
WFP School Feeding Program*	WFP-funded program that provides meals to primary school students in the regions of Cuvette, Lekoumou, Plateaux, and Pool. Project operated between 2011 and 2013 and targeted 65,000 children.(22)
Foster Families Program‡	Government program that provides small stipends to foster families of child trafficking victims. Government’s budget for its 2013 activities to counter child trafficking was in line with the 2012 budget of $100,000.(5)
Awareness-Raising Activities	MSA program that conducts anti-trafficking awareness-raising activities through television, banners, and public events. In 2013, the MSA estimates that anti-trafficking awareness-raising efforts, through television and banners, reached more than 1 million people.(17)
Trafficking in Persons Study	MSA and Ministry of the Interior program that, with assistance from IOM, conducted a qualitative study on the trafficking of children and adults in 9 of the 12 regions of the Republic of the Congo in 2012–2013.(5)
Non-Contributory Social Protection Program‡	MSA social transfer program that, supported by the WFP and Japan, provides financial, material and medical aid to the poor.(23)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of the Republic of the Congo.

While the Government is implementing an anti-trafficking project, there is an overall lack of programming on child labor, particularly on children working in agriculture and domestic service. Moreover, UNICEF, UNODC, and a local NGO—ALTO—have noted that funding levels are not sufficient to address the scope of child labor or trafficking in the Republic of the Congo.(5)

Costa Rica

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Costa Rica made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, Costa Rica passed a new anti-trafficking law and strengthened its laws against the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Government also ratified the ILO Convention on Domestic Workers. The labor inspectorate identified 47 child labor cases, and the judicial system prosecuted 20 child labor cases and convicted several offenders. In addition, the Government's child labor coordinating body provided services to more than 600 former child laborers, and various agencies continued to invest in social protection programs designed to reduce child labor. Despite these efforts, children in Costa Rica continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Social programs do not reach all child laborers, and the numbers of labor inspectors and criminal prosecutors remain inadequate.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Costa Rica are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Costa Rica.

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

While evidence is limited, there are reports of indigenous migrant children, primarily from Panama, working in coffee, banana, and sugarcane plantations on the border of Panama and Costa Rica.(8, 9, 17) Commercial sexual exploitation of children is known to be a problem in the provinces of Guanacaste, Limón, Puntarenas, San José, as well as in border towns and port areas.(3, 5)

In 2012, the National Statistics Office (INEC) released the results of its national survey, which measured the prevalence of child labor.(1) Results from the study indicate that 8.2 percent of children between the ages of 5 to 9 are engaged in some form of economic activity. Approximately 25.9 percent of children ages 10 to 14, and 65.9 percent of children ages 15 to 17, reported working. The survey also indicates that child labor predominately occurs in rural areas, and that more females work in urban areas than males.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Costa Rica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In January 2014, Costa Rica ratified ILO Convention 189, Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers.(18) Costa Rica also became the tenth country to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a Communications Procedure.(19) This Protocol establishes an international system that allows children's complaints to be examined by the Committee on the Rights of the Child after exhausting national mechanisms.(20)

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

* No conscription or no standing military.

In February 2013, the Government enacted a Trafficking in Persons law, which prohibits and penalizes trafficking and creates a National Coalition against the Smuggling of Migrants and Trafficking in Persons (CONATT).(28) In November 2013, the Government updated the Penal Code and the Immigration Law to increase protections on the use of minors for the production of pornography. In addition to prohibiting the possession of child pornography, the new legislation increases penalties and expands the definition of pornography.(13)

While Sections 78 and 92 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code set the minimum age for employment at 15, Section 89 of the Labor Code establishes the minimum age at 12.(2, 21, 23) The Government of Costa Rica has indicated that the Childhood and Adolescence Code takes precedence over the Labor Code as it relates to children's issues and that 15 is the minimum age enforced by labor authorities.(34) The ILO Committee of Experts has observed that it is desirable for the Government to increase the minimum age provisions in the Labor Code from 12 to 15 to ensure consistency with the provisions in the Childhood and Adolescence Code.(35)

As Costa Rica does not have armed forces, there is no military conscription.(13, 36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS)	Investigate reports of child labor, including hazardous and forced child labor, and enforce child labor laws.(2, 13) Protect adolescents' labor rights.(21)
Prosecutor's Office	Enforce criminal laws protecting children, including laws prohibiting forced child labor, trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.(2, 37) Employs the following investigative and prosecutorial units: the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit against Trafficking in Persons (FACTRA); the Organized Crime Unit (FADCO); the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit for Gender Issues; and the Juvenile Justice Unit.(2, 13, 38)
Judicial Investigative Police (OIJ)	Conduct investigations of child labor violations, child trafficking, child commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.(2, 37)

Law enforcement agencies in Costa Rica took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security's (MTSS) Inspection Office (DNI) operated on a budget of $8 million, and employed 103 inspectors who conducted 5,000 regular labor inspections. All inspections included child labor protocols.(13) The DNI detected 133 labor infractions, of which 47 were child labor infractions, with 5 cases involving working children below the age of 15. In total, 108 children were assisted as a result of inspections, and 20 cases were ultimately referred to the Judiciary for prosecution.(13) The DNI and the MTSS's Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA) reported that these inspections were not adequate, and that they reached only 15 percent of businesses and institutions. They also reported that their personnel dedicated to the enforcement of child labor laws were fewer than in the previous year.(13, 34)

OATIA reported that during the year, a total of 90 inspectors received training in workshops dedicated to hazardous labor, adolescent domestic service, and trafficking in persons. DNI reported that ten inspectors from the central region also received training on hazardous labor among adolescent workers.(13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Prosecutor’s Office was active. Its Organized Crime Unit (FADCO) employed 16 investigators; its Specialized Prosecutorial Unit against Trafficking in Persons (FACTRA) employed eight prosecutors; and its Specialized Prosecutorial Unit for Gender Issues employed two investigators.(13) The Judicial Investigative Police (OIJ) was also active; its trafficking and smuggling unit employed nine investigators. These agencies reported that their numbers of investigators, budgets, and resources were insufficient.(13) However, officials in these units, as well as in the OIJ, did receive training on investigation and prosecution techniques.(13)

During the reporting period, FACTRA reported two convictions, one for a trafficking case for child commercial sexual exploitation, and the other for a trafficking case involving child labor exploitation. The Specialized Prosecutorial Unit for Gender Issues also reported seven convictions involving child commercial sexual exploitation.(13) Each unit reported new violations of criminal laws involving the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.(13)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA)	Coordinate Government policies and programs to combat child labor from within the MTSS.(2, 34, 39) Monitor implementation of the National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and Special Protection of Adolescent Workers. Employ child labor specialists, provide technical assistance to government ministries, and design social programs to combat child labor.(2, 38-40) Oversee the Inter-Institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors to ensure children’s and adolescents’ rights and welfare are protected.(34, 41)
National Committee for the Elimination of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Work	Develop and promote policy initiatives trained on eliminating child labor and regulating adolescent work. Overseen by the OATIA; includes a technical secretariat that is composed of representatives from various economic sectors.(34)
National Coalition against the Smuggling of Migrants and Trafficking in Persons (CONATT)	Promote the formulation, implementation, and assessment of national policies that address trafficking, including labor trafficking.(13, 28, 42) Review the country’s adherence to international standards and evaluate and award funds for programming through the National Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants Trust Fund (FONATT).(13) Help coordinate prosecutions of trafficking and assistance to trafficking victims.(13)
National Commission to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONACOES)	Address child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of minors.(2, 13, 37). Report to the National Council of Childhood and Adolescence. Has legal standing under the National Child Welfare Agency (PANI).(13)
National Child Welfare Agency (PANI)	Protect child and adolescent rights and receive reports of child labor.(2, 21, 43) Activate inter-agency social services to provide child labor victims with protection and welfare assistance, including temporary shelter, legal advice, and victim counseling. Responsible for reintegrating child labor victims into the educational system.(2, 43)

In 2013, the OATIA, CONATT, and the National Commission to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONACOES) continued to work together to address the eradication of child labor, including its worst forms.(13) These bodies helped coordinate and promote prevention campaigns, training for officials, and the creation of protocols, manuals, and Web-based instruments for detecting and combatting trafficking. The Government also participated in international meetings for the prevention of sexual exploitation linked to tourism and developed a letter of understanding for the Central America and Panama sub-region to combat these practices.(13)

Costa Rica

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, OATIA removed from work and assisted 623 children. Over 200 of these were referred to the National Scholarship Fund (FONABE), and 384 were assisted by other government agencies.(13)

Also during the reporting period, and as part of the Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor, the National Child Welfare Agency (PANI), the Immigration Office, and the MTSS developed a manual for interagency collaboration to manage cases of child labor, including its worst forms.(13)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Costa Rica has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in Costa Rica (2011-2014)	Aims to eradicate worst forms of child labor by 2015 and all forms of child labor by 2020 by eliminating poverty, improving the education system, strengthening health and legal frameworks, and conducting campaigns to raise awareness on the child labor situation. Developed by OATIA in coordination with ILO-IPEC.(44-46) Roadmap forms part of the National Plan for Development (2011-2014).(2, 47) Reports indicate MTSS plans to develop an updated Roadmap for 2015-2020.(13)
National Coalition against the Smuggling of Migrants and Trafficking in Persons (CONATT) Strategic Plan (2012-2015)	Seeks to combat trafficking in persons, including for commercial sexual exploitation and labor exploitation.(13)
National Commission to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONACOES) Strategic Plan (2011-2014)	Aims to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents.(13)
National Plan for Development (2011-2014)*	Incorporates child labor issues into national education and poverty reduction strategies.(48)
Inter-institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors	Requires the Ministry of Labor, Ministry of Education, Social Welfare Institute, National Training Institute, as well as their regional and local agencies, to coordinate with the private sector in order to provide services to child laborers and at risk-children.(49) As part of this partnership, civil society organizations collaborate with the tourist industry to train companies on how to identify and report the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(15)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

In June 2013, the Government and the ILO signed a public commitment to define plans of action to meet the goal of eliminating the worst forms of child labor by 2020.(4) In November, the Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms country participants' commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(50)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Costa Rica funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Let's Get Ahead Program (Avancemos)‡	Social Welfare Institute program that provides conditional cash transfers to low-income families to keep their children in school and out of exploitative work. Includes the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(59)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Costa Rica.

While the Government continues to support initiatives to eradicate child labor, current programming does not reach all children who are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. According to OATIA, staff and funding were insufficient to conduct studies of the impact of social programs on child labor, including its worst forms(13).

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Costa Rica (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Analysis received February 13, 2014. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children’s work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. For more information on sources used, the definition of working children and other indicators used in this report, please see the “Children’s Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions” section of this report.

In 2013, Côte d'Ivoire made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government partially funded and began implementing its National Action Plan against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor; launched a pilot program for a national child labor monitoring system; and continued funding various social programs to address child labor. The Government also coordinated child labor efforts and reviewed projects addressing child labor to ensure that they supported activities under the National Action Plan against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor. However, children in Côte d'Ivoire continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, particularly on cocoa farms, sometimes under conditions of forced labor. Côte d'Ivoire still lacks a compulsory education law and gaps remain in enforcement efforts and in children's access to education.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Côte d'Ivoire are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, particularly on cocoa farms, sometimes under conditions of forced labor.(1-10) According to a report by Tulane University that assessed data collected during the 2008–2009 harvest season, 819,921 children ages 5 to 17 were estimated to be working in the cocoa sector, and 50.6 percent, or 414,778 of these children were estimated to report injuries from dangerous activities.(4, 5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Côte d'Ivoire.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	39.8 (2,181,894)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	53.6
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	24.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		61.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2013.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (7, 10, 13, 15, 25, 27, 31)
	Use of underage children in armed conflict* (32)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers (33)
	Forced labor in agriculture, including in the production of cocoa and coffee (5, 9)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

A 2013 report conducted by the Government of Côte d'Ivoire and the ILO shows that more than 1.6 million children, or 73.3 per cent of the estimated 2.13 million children working in agriculture, domestic service; mining; transportation; and commerce in stores, markets, and on the street, are involved in the worst forms of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire.(9) The same report estimates that more than 97,700 children are involved in forced labor in these sectors.(9)

In return for education and food, some boys, known as talibés, are forced by their Koranic teachers to beg on the streets.(33) During the reporting period the UN documented three cases of the recruitment and use of child soldiers, ages 13 to 17, to staff checkpoints for the Government's armed forces.(32)

Children are trafficked to, from, and within Côte d'Ivoire.(15) Girls are internally trafficked for work in commercial sexual exploitation after being promised work in bars and restaurants. Many of these girls are ages 15 and 16, but some are as young as age 10.(25, 31, 34) Children from neighboring West African countries are trafficked into Côte d'Ivoire for agricultural labor, especially in cocoa production, and for work in mining, construction, domestic labor, street vending, and commercial sexual exploitation.(6, 7, 9, 14-16, 19, 26-31)

Access to quality education is a critical component in preventing the economic exploitation of children.(35) However, Côte d'Ivoire still lacks sufficient teachers and school buildings to provide education for all children.(8, 17, 36-42) Some schools require birth certificates for school enrollment and all schools require birth certificates to take primary school exit exams. Since many children—including those born in Côte d'Ivoire and those who have migrated to Côte d'Ivoire—do not have birth certificates, they may be prevented from enrolling in or graduating from primary school.(17, 43-46) Sexual abuse and school-based violence also discourage families from accessing education for their children. Evidence suggests that some children in Côte d'Ivoire are physically and sexually abused at schools. Limited evidence suggests some teachers demand sexual favors from some students in exchange for grades or money.(10, 47-50)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Côte d'Ivoire has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Provisions of the Labor Code that protect children working in the formal sector do not apply to children working in the informal sector. This situation puts children working in the informal sector, including in street vending and artisanal gold and diamond mining, at risk of exploitative child labor.(53, 56) In addition, although the Trafficking and Worst Forms of Child Labor Law was adopted in 2010, the implementing decree for the law has yet to be adopted.(53, 57)

Education is not compulsory by law in Côte d'Ivoire.(2, 10, 56) Although education is officially free, in practice some parents are required to pay fees for teachers' salaries and books.(3, 8, 10, 43) The absence of a compulsory education requirement, along with the requirement by some schools to pay for school-related fees, decreases the likelihood of children attending school and may increase their vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor.(2)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Ministry of Employment, Social Affairs, and Professional Training / Labor Inspectorate	Enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor.(13) Implement Côte d'Ivoire's Système de Suivi du Travail des enfants, (SOSTECl) or Child Labor Monitoring System (CLMS). SOSTECl collects and analyzes statistical data on the worst forms of child labor. It also monitors, reports on, and coordinates services for children involved in or at risk of child labor.(8, 13, 58)
The Ministry of Interior/ National Police	Enforce criminal laws against child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, forced child labor, and the use of children in illicit activities.(8) Maintain an anti-trafficking unit, overseen by a police chief, that investigates cases of child trafficking.(13, 24)

Organization/Agency	Role
National Monitoring Committee for Actions to Fight against Trafficking, Exploitation and Child Labor (CNS) Monitoring Brigades	Conduct trafficking investigations. Composed of security forces tasked with dismantling trafficking networks and rescuing exploited or trafficked children.(24)

Law enforcement agencies in Côte d'Ivoire took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Employment, Social Affairs, and Professional Training employed 250 labor inspectors, up from 206 labor inspectors in 2012. In August 2013, the ILO and the Government of Côte d'Ivoire trained 243 labor inspectors and government officials on the worst forms of child labor.(8, 13, 59, 60) Despite these efforts, research found that labor inspectors lack an adequate understanding of child labor issues. A 2013 ILO report notes serious deficiencies among Ivoirian labor inspectors in their knowledge of child labor.(17) Labor inspectors are employed across 15 regional offices, 5 departmental offices, and 8 units in Abidjan.(8) They are trained to inspect all sectors.(17) Labor inspectors may conduct surprise inspections of any establishment.(51, 61) However, the Labor Inspectorate does not have access to a reliable list of establishments subject to inspections in industrial and commercial workplaces.(62, 63)

Labor inspections target general labor laws; specific child labor inspections are not conducted. However, incidences of child labor are identified during broader labor inspections.(8) A lack of sufficient staffing, offices, and funding, including for vehicles and fuel, hinders labor inspections. For example, most inspectorate offices are dilapidated and some lack access to a water supply; only three inspection offices have vehicles; and no labor inspections are carried out in the agricultural sector.(8, 10, 17, 20, 61, 62, 64) The combined budget for the regional, departmental, and capital offices, and the Ministry of Labor's Direction to Combat Child Labor increased in 2013 to $2 million, up from $588,566 in 2012.(8, 13) Statistics relating to the number of labor inspections conducted, violations cited, or fines collected for 2013 are unavailable.(8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, with the support of UNICEF, the police service school and the gendarmerie developed a 50-hour training program on child protection.(8, 65, 66) The training program is currently active, with 1,450 anticipated graduates. In addition, the ILO provided training on the worst forms of child labor to anti-trafficking officers.(8, 65) Despite these efforts, the police force and the anti-trafficking units remain understaffed and lack adequate resources and training.(8, 20) For example, the anti-trafficking unit only has two computers and one vehicle, a sedan, which is unable to navigate difficult terrain and cannot travel outside of Abidjan.(8) In addition, the ILO Committee of Experts and the UNHCR have observed that there is weak enforcement of the laws, particularly those governing the worst forms of child labor and trafficking.(2)

Staffing of the anti-trafficking unit increased in 2013 to 10 full-time officers, up from 5 officers in 2012.(8, 13, 59) The anti-trafficking unit recorded 5 cases of child trafficking involving 33 children, 18 cases of economic exploitation, 29 cases of statutory rape, and 18 cases of indecent assault. Of those cases, the unit referred 24 people for criminal charges, and 8 for child trafficking charges.(8, 59) In July 2013, authorities intercepted vehicles from Burkina Faso carrying 36 children between ages 12 and 16. The nine people arrested in connection with the incident were sentenced under the child trafficking law to 12 months in prison and a $1,000 fine each.(10, 67) In January 2014, the police rescued 40 girls and 9 boys, between ages 7 and 12, from being trafficked to the cotton fields in the Mankono region.(8) The three adults accompanying the children were arrested. The current circumstances of the children are unknown.(8) In general, the Government refers victims to NGOs on an as-needed basis.(8) The number of prosecutions and convictions during the reporting period is unknown. The Ministry of Justice does not regularly collect, publish, or share information on cases of trafficking. The lack of comprehensive data makes it difficult to evaluate if trafficking cases are isolated incidents or part of a larger network.(68)

Cote d'Ivoire

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In a continued response to eliminate the recruitment and use of child soldiers in Côte d'Ivoire, in November 2013, the Government re-established a child protection cell within the national army in order to deal with child protection concerns and, in coordination with the UN, the Government appointed a new chief of child protection for the National Army.(32) The Government also adopted service provider procedures and guidelines for the prevention, referral, and response to grave violations committed against children; it also implemented a series of child protection and capacity building training for defense and security forces. During the reporting period, 78 police and gendarmerie staff received the training.(32)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The National Monitoring Committee for Actions to Fight against Trafficking, Exploitation and Child Labor (CNS)	Review and provide approval for all anti-child labor and anti-child trafficking activities in Côte d'Ivoire. Provide oversight for the Joint Ministerial Committee on the Fight against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CIM). Chaired by the First Lady of Côte d'Ivoire.(8, 69, 70)
The Joint Ministerial Committee on the Fight against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor	Coordinate national actions to combat the worst forms of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire. Chaired by the Minister of Employment, Social Affairs, and Professional Training. Composed of representatives from 13 ministries, including the Ministries of Justice; Interior; Education; Agriculture; and Family and Women.(24, 69, 71)

The National Monitoring Committee for Actions to Fight against Trafficking, Exploitation and Child Labor (CNS) and the Joint Ministerial Committee on the Fight against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CIM) meet regularly, both separately and in coordinated working groups.(8) However, the coordinating structures lack sufficient resources. In addition, despite the structures' coordinated working groups, some NGOs and companies continue to lack clarity about the respective roles and responsibilities of the CIM and the CNS, undermining effective coordination on the ground.(20, 72)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Côte d'Ivoire has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

In 2013, the Government of Côte d'Ivoire funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Système d'Observation et de Suivi du Travail des enfants en Côte d'Ivoire (SOSTECI) †‡	Government pilot program to implement its national child labor monitoring system, SOSTECI, in July 2013. Enables communities to collect and analyze statistical data on the worst forms of child labor and to monitor, report on, and coordinate services for children involved in or at risk of child labor.(8, 13, 58) Piloted in 19 communities in the districts of Abengourou, Bouaflé, Daoukro, M'Batto, and Soubré between July 2013 and August 2014.(8, 65) Will need to reach 3,750 villages and 21,900 hamlets to achieve a sector-wide child labor monitoring process.(14)
National Awareness Campaign against Child Labor‡	Government implemented large-scale national awareness campaign against child labor. Implemented by the CNS and headed by the First Lady of Côte d'Ivoire. Includes radio broadcasts and illustrated brochures in French and local languages. Broadcasts public awareness information on television, displayed on billboards, and published in newspapers.(8, 57, 58) Sensitized 150 cocoa producers on child labor, using cocoa-cooperatives to disseminate information.(8, 13)
Self Help Village Initiative‡	Government implemented initiative to combat child labor in the cocoa sector, implemented since 2009. Builds schools and health centers, introduces income generating activities, and implements a CLMS.(13, 58, 87, 88) Each village service package, funded by taxes and fees on cocoa exports, is valued at $60,000.(8) Seven new villages began participating in the initiative in 2013.(8)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa by Strengthening Sub Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS (ECOWAS I)	$7.95 million, USDOL-funded, 5-year project implemented by the ILO to accelerate progress on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, and Nigeria. Supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub region by providing policy and capacity building support for all ECOWAS states. In Côte d'Ivoire, targeted children involved in child labor in agriculture and domestic service for withdrawal and prevention services, including by providing access to education services.(89, 90) By March 2014, had withdrawn and prevented 5,315 children from the worst forms of child labor and provided livelihoods services to 150 households. Helped establish 70 community child labor committees under SOSTECI, in coordination with the Government. Committees form the foundation for implementing SOSTECI at the local level.(91, 92)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa by Strengthening Sub Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS (ECOWAS II)	Linked to the ECOWAS I project, a $5 million, USDOL-funded, 4-year project, implemented by the ILO with direct interventions in Benin, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, and Nigeria. Supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub-region by providing policy and capacity building support for all ECOWAS states.(87, 93) By March 2014, had provided education services to 1,251 children and livelihoods services to 786 households.(94) Provided support to SOSTECI and supported the establishment of 41 community child labor protection committees.(94)

Also provided support to SOSTECI to develop the CLMS framework for data collection and coordination and assistance in the collection of data.(3)
Survey on Child Labor in West African Cocoa Growing Areas	$1.5 million, USDOL-funded, 3-year research project, implemented by the Payson Center at Tulane University. Supports the collection of nationally representative survey data on child labor in cocoa-growing areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana.(58) Will help assess the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas. As called for in the 2010 Declaration, the study developed a baseline estimate of the number of children working in the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas.(58) Coordinates with the Government and works with government statistical experts to build the country's capacity to implement future child labor surveys.(58)

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Côte d'Ivoire.

Djibouti

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Djibouti made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government hired three labor inspectors and developed a national strategy that seeks to protect vulnerable populations and the rights of children. With support from the IOM, Djibouti continues to combat trafficking and hosts a center for assisting migrants. However, children in Djibouti continue to engage in child labor in street work and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Significant gaps remain in the legal framework on child labor, and the Government has not established a coordinating mechanism to address child labor. Neither law enforcement efforts nor programs to assist working children are adequate.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Djibouti are engaged in child labor in street work and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Child labor in Djibouti varies in urban and rural settings; however, in both, it largely takes place in the informal sector.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Djibouti.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	12.3 (23,693)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	67.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	10.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		52.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(2)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS3 Survey, 2006.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Herding livestock (1, 4)
	Agriculture, activities unknown* (4)
Services	Working as domestic servants (1, 4)
	Street work, including shining shoes, washing and guarding cars, selling items, cleaning storefronts, sorting merchandise, collecting garbage, and begging (1, 4)
	Working in restaurants and small shops (1, 4)
	Selling the narcotic, khat (1, 4)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 5)
	Domestic service as a result of human trafficking (1, 4, 5)
	Forced begging and theft* (4, 5)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children's work occurs predominantly in urban areas, where the majority of the Djiboutian population is concentrated.(1, 6) A small number of refugees, Ethiopian and Somali migrants, and girls from poor Djiboutian families are trafficked into commercial sexual exploitation in Djibouti City and along trucking routes on the Ethiopia-

Djibouti corridor.(1, 5) Limited evidence suggests younger children are sometimes involve younger children in exploited in commercial sexual exploitation by older children.(5)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Djibouti has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Labor Code (7)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No
List of Hazardous Occupations Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Penal Code (1)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Law 210 Regarding the Fight Against Human Trafficking (8)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Penal Code (1)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Penal Code (1)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Establishment of the National Army Amendment Decree (1, 9)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Law on the Orientation of the Education System (10)
Free Public Education	Yes		Law on the Orientation of the Education System (10)

* No conscription or no standing military.

Djiboutian law does not define hazardous work or clearly establish a minimum age for it. Additionally, the Government has not developed a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children.(11)

Research uncovered no evidence that the law prohibits the purchase of child pornography. While education in Djibouti is free, expenses associated with education are often prohibitively high for poor families, which contributes to low primary school attendance rates.(4, 12)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor's Labor Inspectorate	Enforce child labor laws and regulations.(1)
Djibouti National Police and Vice Squad	Enforce criminal laws and investigate criminal offenses related to child labor, including forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(1)
Ministry of Justice	Investigate child labor cases.(1)

Law enforcement agencies in Djibouti took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor hired three new labor inspectors to the Inspectorate for a total of four labor inspectors.(1) None of the four labor inspectors have received training related to child labor investigations; meanwhile, an overall lack of resources have hampered inspection and enforcement efforts. No child labor inspections were undertaken in 2013 and no violations were issued.(1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Vice Squad included four officers, but lacked sufficient training and resources to effectively enforce laws related to child labor, trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, no data on investigations, prosecutions, or convictions on child labor or exploitation were available.(1)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Djibouti has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy 2013–2017†	Provide social safety nets for vulnerable populations, protect the rights of children, and develop social programs to address the risks of children.(1)

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

In 2013, the Government of Djibouti sought to increase the quality of education. It maintained a policy of offering free public education and devotes a quarter of its national budget to the education sector.(1)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Djibouti participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description and Objectives
UNICEF Country Program*	UNICEF program with the Government to assist orphans and vulnerable children who may be at risk of entering the worst forms of child labor.(1)
IOM Program*	IOM program in partnership with the Government to address the risks of irregular migration , which operates a service center along the route most often traveled by migrants.(1)
Urban Poverty Reduction Program*	African Development Bank program to promote socioeconomic development in Djibouti's towns and cities, where the majority of child workers live.(6)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

Research uncovered no evidence of programs that specifically assist children engaged in other forms of child labor, such as domestic labor, commercial sexual exploitation, or illicit activity.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Djibouti (Table 8).

Table 8. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Dominica

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Dominica made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified the Palermo Protocol, passed the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act, and continued to implement programs to reduce poverty and ensure that education is a viable alternative to work for all children. Although no information suggests that the worst forms of child labor are a problem, critical gaps exist in the legal framework to prevent children from involvement in the worst forms of child labor. National legislation still does not prohibit child pornography, the minimum age for hazardous work falls below international standards, and the country lacks a comprehensive list of hazardous work prohibited to children, which leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists in Dominica.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Dominica. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Dominica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 2).

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 3).

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	12/14/16	Employment of Children (Prohibition) Act, Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act, Education Act (4-6)

Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A*
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Education Act (1, 6, 17)
Free Public Education	Yes		Education Act (1, 6, 17)

* No conscription or no standing military.

The Government of Dominica ratified the Palermo Protocol and passed the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act during the reporting period, but has yet to enact laws or regulations explicitly prohibiting child pornography.(12, 17, 19, 20)

The Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act prohibits children under age 14 from working in certain industries, including mining, construction, and transportation, and it bars children under the age of 16 from working in those industries at night. However, Dominica does not have a list of work considered hazardous for children.(5, 9, 20)

The Government specified that it would raise the statutory minimum age to 15 when it ratified ILO C. 138, but has not done so.(8) The three different minimum ages for work in the two relevant statutes may create confusion over which protections apply to working children and may make the law difficult to enforce. In addition, the minimum age for hazardous work of 14 does not comply with international standards and leaves children age 14 and above vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(7-10)

Dominica has no national army.(18)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of National Security, Labor, and Immigration (MNSLI)	Conduct inspections and enforce laws related to child labor. Inspectors report children found in exploitative labor situations to police and social services. In 2013, the MNSLI employed four labor inspectors. (1)
Welfare Division, Ministry of Social Services, Community Development, and Gender Affairs	Address the welfare aspects of child labor cases. (1)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Health (MOH)	Enforce labor laws by reporting children found in exploitative labor situations to police and social services. In 2013, the MOH employed 19 health inspectors. (1)
Police Force	Enforce criminal laws, including those related to child labor. (1)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for labor law enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for criminal law enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for coordinating mechanisms to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor. However, the Government has a policy that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Dominica (Table 7).

Table 7. Suggested Government Actions to Prevent Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Harmonize all laws governing the minimum age to work to set the statutory minimum age for employment to at least 15.	2009 – 2013
	Raise the minimum age for hazardous work to comply with international standards.	2009 – 2013
	Adopt a list of hazardous work prohibited to children.	2011 – 2013
	Enact legislation to expressly prohibit child prostitution, as well as the use, procuring, or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.	2011 – 2013

Dominican Republic

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, the Dominican Republic made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite several initiatives to address child labor, the Dominican Republic received this assessment because of significant limitations on educational opportunities for certain children, which increases their vulnerability to labor exploitation.

In 2013, the Government expanded some of its social programs, including its conditional cash transfer program that requires children in families receiving benefits to stay in school and out of work. In addition, the Government allocated 4 percent of national GDP for primary and secondary education, an increase from 2.4 percent in 2011. It also launched public campaigns to raise awareness about child labor. However, children in the Dominican Republic continue to engage in exploitative child labor in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation. Moreover, due to frequent misinterpretations and misapplication of Dominican law and policies on the right to education, school officials do not permit many children, particularly those of Haitian descent, to enroll in primary and secondary education without birth certificates or other identifying documentation. These incorrectly-applied provisions may prevent or discourage children not entitled to Dominican documents or unable to obtain documents from their countries of nationality from enrolling in or completing school.

In addition, the Government's steps to address child labor may be further undermined by the September 23, 2013, Constitutional Tribunal ruling that impacted the citizenship status and, consequently, access to education of Dominican-born descendants of foreign parents "in transit", including both documented and undocumented migrants. In May 2014, Dominican President Medina signed a naturalization law approved by Congress that may restore nationality to some affected by the ruling, which may potentially enable access to education for some affected children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Dominican Republic are engaged in exploitative child labor in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation. (1-3) The 2009-2010 National Household Survey found that although the overall incidence of child labor has decreased in the past decade, incidence of child labor in agriculture has increased. (4, 5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Dominican Republic.

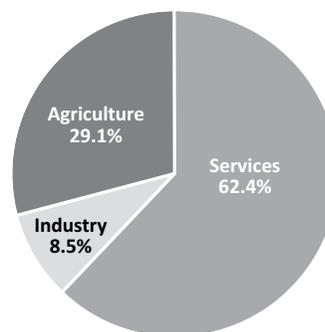

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in the Dominican Republic are exploited in commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in tourist locations and major urban areas.(3, 26, 31) There are also incidences of children trafficked internally for sex tourism.(24, 29)

Haitian migration to the Dominican Republic is a longstanding phenomenon; although estimates vary, approximately 900,000 to 1.2 million Haitians and Dominicans of Haitian descent live in the Dominican Republic.(18, 23, 26, 37, 38) Many Haitians and Dominicans of Haitian descent, including children, live in communities known as bateyes that traditionally have housed sugarcane workers and often lack adequate housing, medical services, and other basic services.(3, 9, 17, 18, 39) Some children harvest sugarcane, collect cut cane, clear land, or plant for sugarcane production, sometimes alongside their parents.(8-16) The porous border between Haiti and the Dominican Republic has enabled children, accompanied or not, to be trafficked into the Dominican Republic without coming to the attention of authorities.(26, 40, 41) Some Haitian children who are trafficked to the Dominican Republic are forced to work in agriculture, domestic service, or begging.(26, 32-34)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Dominican Republic has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Free Public Education	Yes	18	Article 63 of the Constitution (46, 50)

* No conscription in peacetime. However, the Armed Forces Law establishes the minimum age for recruitment in times of war.(49)

The 2010 Constitution declares the eradication of child labor as a national priority.(46) The Constitution guarantees free public education and requires that all children attend school until age 18.(2, 46, 50) However, in practice, associated school costs, such as transportation and books, and misinterpretation and misapplication of student documentation requirements by school officials may prevent or discourage some children from attending or completing school.(31, 39, 51-55) In practice, some primary or secondary schools deny access to children who cannot present birth certificates, putting such children in precarious situations in which they are more likely to work.(18, 20, 39, 53) Other secondary schools permit access absent birth documentation but deny high school diplomas.(53) Without the opportunity to receive high school diplomas and, as a result, pursue higher education and thereby improve access to formal sector employment as adults, individuals without identity documents have significantly less incentive to remain in school, which increases their vulnerability to entry into the worst forms of child labor.(2, 3, 18, 26, 31, 38, 53, 55-57) An estimated 13 percent of all children younger than age 15 have no birth documents.(18, 31) The lack of documentation also impedes age verification of working adolescents, making them more likely to perform work considered hazardous for minors.(18, 20, 38)

Children of parents with irregular migration status are particularly vulnerable to labor exploitation due to a lack of identity documents.(3, 18, 52, 58, 59) The 2010 Constitution stipulates that children born in the Dominican Republic can receive Dominican citizenship if one of their parents is a Dominican citizen.(46) However, the 2010 Constitution clarified that anyone born in the country is considered a Dominican national except children born to diplomats, parents who are “in transit,” or parents who are in the country illegally.(46) At the same time, the Constitution adopted the 2004 Migration Law’s definition of “in transit,” which had been upheld in 2005 by the Supreme Court of Justice, meaning that anyone born in the Dominican Republic to parents without valid resident status would not qualify as a Dominican citizen.(3, 46, 52, 55, 58, 59) On September 23, 2013, the Constitutional Tribunal, the highest judicial court in the Dominican Republic, upheld the definition of “in transit” and ruled that children born in the Dominican Republic to any foreigners “in transit” (going back to 1929) are not considered Dominican nationals, potentially impacting an estimated 200,000 individuals.(39, 60) The option of obtaining birth certificates from the countries from where their parents originated is also not viable for many children born in the Dominican Republic, particularly if their parents are no longer citizens of or have lost ties with their countries of origin as a result of their long-established presence in the Dominican Republic or, as in the case of Haiti, the countries of origin have suffered natural disasters resulting in the destruction of birth records that would have demonstrated citizenship.(3) In November, President Medina issued a presidential decree to promulgate the National Regularization Plan for Foreigners as a mechanism to recognize, document, and regularize undocumented migrants in the Dominican Republic.(60) In May 2014, the President signed a naturalization law approved by Congress that may restore nationality to some affected by the ruling, which may potentially enable access to education for some affected children.(61)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (SET)	Lead government efforts to eliminate child labor, conduct labor inspections to identify and document offenses, and direct the Child Labor Unit to investigate and eradicate child labor.(2, 10, 22, 24) Implement the Institutional Strategic Plan (2013–2016) approved in 2013, which outlines objectives to improve the number and quality of labor inspections overall, offer better service to workers, coordinate Labor Code reform, integrate the Child Labor Inspection Unit into existing enforcement efforts, and provide improved vocational training for vulnerable populations, including children.(10)
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI)	Promote policies to eradicate all forms of violence against children and child labor.(62) Coordinate with SET to protect children against labor exploitation, as well as promote policies designed to improve the employability of young people and reduce barriers to entry into the labor market.(58, 62, 63) Receive victims of child labor for psychological evaluation and possible institutionalization while the Attorney General's Office undertakes the judicial and prosecutorial processes.(11)
Specialized Corps for Tourist Safety (previously POLITUR)	Prevent child sex abuse in tourist areas, rescue minors, and arrest and bring to justice the child sex offenders.(62)
Ministry of the Interior's National Police (PN), PN's Trafficking in Persons Unit (TIP), and Directorate of Migration (DGM)	Enforce criminal laws, including those prohibiting and punishing the worst forms of child labor, and coordinate with the Attorney General's Office in the prosecution of perpetrators.(10)
Attorney General's Office and Trafficking in Persons Unit	Train investigators on child labor issues and prosecute the perpetrators of crimes involving children.(10, 45)

Law enforcement agencies in the Dominican Republic took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the SET employed 207 labor inspectors, all of whom receive training to detect child labor.(25, 62–64) The Government of the Dominican Republic reported that around 98,000 labor inspections (an average of 473 inspections for each SET labor inspector) were conducted in 2013 to verify compliance with labor laws, including child labor laws.(25, 62, 64, 65) These figures indicate an increase of 15 inspectors and 30,000 inspections from 2012.(62) The Ministry of Labor reported that its Inspection Unit removed a total of 317 minors from exploitative labor situations through 22 of its inspections conducted in 2013; however, no information was provided on whether any sanctions were issued or penalties assessed and collected for these or other child labor violations.(62, 66) In addition, no information was provided about whether the inspections conducted in 2013 were planned inspections or reactive inspections at the request of employers or employees or what sectors or geographical areas were targeted.(62)

Furthermore, although the 2008 General Inspection Protocol and 2011 Inspection Protocol for Agriculture instruct inspectors to assess child labor violations by reviewing workers' identity documents and employers' records, making observations, and conducting interviews, the widespread lack of identity documents impedes both inspectors and employers from verifying the ages of workers and guaranteeing that children under 18 are not participating in dangerous or unhealthy work.(11, 20, 38, 67, 68) Further, it is unknown how the high number of inspections conducted by each SET inspector may impact the quality of such inspections. Additionally, the Ministry of Labor has indicated that improvements are needed in how inspectors conduct interviews, ask follow up questions, and use inspection data to strengthen the inspection system.(20) The Ministry of Labor has also indicated that resources, such as vehicles and fuel, are insufficient for inspectors to perform field visits on a regular basis.(10)

Moreover, the process developed by SET for inspections to enforce labor laws includes a preliminary visit, during which inspectors inform employers of violations but do not issue fines. Inspectors then conduct a re-inspection to determine if the violations have been rectified.(42, 67, 68) If violations are found during re-inspection, the Ministry of Labor is required to file the infraction with the court.(42, 67, 68) This two-tiered inspection process puts a strain on the inspectorate's limited human and financial resources and may not sufficiently deter employers from exploiting children in the workplace, particularly in remote rural areas where re-inspections are more difficult and less consistent. Furthermore, the lack of publicly-available information on the results of inspections prevents a complete understanding of how effective this inspection system is in practice.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Criminal Law Enforcement

Although complete information on convictions and prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor is not systematically published, in 2013, the Dominican Government reported on the status of a number of criminal cases involving the worst forms of child labor.(17, 62, 69) In 2013, the Government initiated prosecutions in several criminal cases involving the worst forms of child labor, such as forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation; most of these cases resulted in prison sentences.(62, 64) In May 2013, four individuals were convicted and received 2-year prison sentences for forcing a group of children to beg in the streets of Santo Domingo. Additionally, during 2013, the Specialized Corps for Tourist Safety detained eight foreign tourists for investigation of child sex tourism; however, the status of the individual cases is unknown.(62)

The Government of the Dominican Republic maintains that there is no current forced labor in the production of goods; therefore, the Government takes no measures to prevent or combat it.(45) The Government provides anti-trafficking training to officials, including anti-trafficking, judicial, immigration and migration officials and those posted overseas, on how to recognize and assist Dominican nationals in other countries who are trafficking victims.(28, 45) The Government has a zero-tolerance policy for public officials who are complicit in trafficking or migrant smuggling activities.(45, 63, 70, 71) In 2013, the Government sentenced a National Police official and four other individuals to a year in prison for their involvement in a network of smuggling women and girls across the border to Haiti for commercial sexual exploitation.(62) The Government reports investigations and prosecutions conducted under the Law Against Trafficking in Persons and Migrant Smuggling, including commercial sexual exploitation of minors. However, the statistics are not disaggregated to distinguish between trafficking versus smuggling or adult versus child victims.(26, 28, 45, 72)

Coordination between the Ministry of Labor and Attorney General's Office is limited.(10) In 2013, the Minister of Labor stated in the local press that the Ministry's role is to identify child labor violations and criticized the Attorney General's Office for not fulfilling its responsibilities to investigate and prosecute criminal cases of the worst forms of child labor.(10, 21)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor (CDN)	Coordinate all child labor initiatives in the country; established by SET in 1997.(2, 22, 24) Convene regular meetings, including the 34 local and municipal committees around the country, to develop strategies to combat child labor.(22, 24, 62, 64, 73)
Inter-Institutional Commission against Child Abuse and Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Coordinate and implement actions to confront commercial sexual exploitation and abuse. Led by CONANI and SET, includes representatives from various ministries, the National and Tourism Police, the Attorney General's Office, NGOs, and the Hotel and Restaurant Association, in addition to representatives of UNICEF and the ILO as advisors.(10, 25, 62-64)
Social Policies Coordination Cabinet	Coordinate all social policies and conditional cash transfer programs, such as the Progressing with Solidarity Program led by the Vice President.(10)
Local Committees for the Protection and Restitution of Children's Rights	Ensure that children's rights are not being violated; consists of community volunteers in 10 municipalities.(62)

In 2013, the Inter-Institutional Commission against Child Abuse and Commercial Sexual Exploitation reported that it provided guidance to over 300 professionals, including healthcare workers and the National Police, to train committee members that form municipal-level networks to protect children against commercial sexual exploitation and abuse.(62) Subsequently, more than 3,000 community members received training in an effort to strengthen municipal networks.(62) However, the local and municipal committees' existing mechanisms face limitations in their coordination efforts. The ILO Committee of Experts has indicated that insufficient resources limit the effectiveness of the CDN and local and municipal committees.(2, 20, 74)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Dominican Republic has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Strategic National Plan to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2006–2016)	Identifies the roles and responsibilities of government agencies and municipal representatives to eradicate the worst forms of child labor.(10, 24, 62)
Action Plan for the Eradication of Abuse and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Boys, Girls, and Adolescents (2009–2014)	Identifies the roles and responsibilities of government agencies and municipal representatives to eradicate commercial sexual exploitation of children.(10, 62)
Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in the Dominican Republic	Outlines a plan to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the country by 2015 and all other types of child labor by 2020.(2, 75) Designates the roles of various government agencies and sets targets and indicators for each area of responsibility, specifically poverty reduction, health, education, institutional coordination, awareness raising, and information sharing.(10) A lack of coordination between the various agencies and limited resources have hindered implementation of the Roadmap.(10)
National Development Plan (2010–2030)	Includes policies and programs that encourage families to keep their children out of the workforce and in school.(10)
National 10-year Education Plan and 5-year Strategic Plan	Coordinated and executed by the Ministry of Education, these plans include child labor provisions.(45, 76)
Quality Education for All (END)*	Specific objective to provide quality, universal education through middle school, including to students without identity documents and with disabilities.(62)
National Plan on Gender Equality (2006–2016)*	Promotes child care for working mothers so that children do not have to be in the workplace.(63)
National Anti-Poverty Plan	Includes child labor provisions to protect children from exploitation.(2, 25, 63)
Government Plan (2012–2016) under President Medina	Focuses on the development of 400,000 new jobs and integrates the elimination of child labor.(10)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

However, there are insufficient resources allocated to implement child labor elimination strategies. Moreover, a 2010 ILO evaluation suggested that additional personnel are needed to implement the national child labor elimination strategies, but there is no evidence that such personnel have been hired since then.(77)

The National 10-year Education Plan and 5-year Strategic Plan have identified educational challenges, including inadequate classroom space, insufficient classroom time, and inadequate strategies to address the special educational needs of children who are behind in school because of work.(43, 73) Deficiencies in the national education system have also been identified as contributing to children’s engagement in the worst forms of child labor.(10, 31, 54, 78-81) UNESCO has reported that the percentage of children completing primary school has been declining and that the country is not likely to meet the Education for All goal of universal primary enrollment by 2015.(78, 80, 82) Furthermore, a short school day prompts some parents to take their children to work rather than leave them unattended outside of school hours.(83) In 2013, the Government’s budget allocated 4 percent of national GDP for primary and secondary education, an increase from 2.4 percent in 2011. Plans for the increased budget include constructing 29,000 additional classrooms, extending school hours nationwide, providing breakfast, improving teacher training, and raising the quality of education. However, these plans have not been fully implemented.(2, 20, 54, 84-88)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of the Dominican Republic participated in and funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Dominican Republic

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Progressing with Solidarity*‡	Government program with conditional cash transfers to promote the well-being of families living in extreme poverty through an integrated approach. Aims to increase the number of students who attend school and to reduce child labor by requiring that child beneficiaries attend school regularly and that parents protect their children from the worst forms of child labor. Assists the families of poor children ages 4 to 21 through the provision of funds for school supplies and food.(45, 62-64, 82, 89, 90) The Government reported in 2013 that 778,606 children and adolescents benefited from at least one of the components of the program.(10, 62) More than 288,000 beneficiaries received monetary assistance to attend school, which was up from approximately 212,000 in 2012.(91) In June 2013, the ILO and Dominican Vice President announced a project to withdraw 38,000 beneficiaries of the program from child labor; this action supports the 2012 letter of agreement between the Vice President and the ILO to remove 100,000 children from exploitative work over the next four years.(92-94)
Youth Development and the Youth and Employment Projects*	Government projects supported by the World Bank and the Chilean Government that improve the employability of disadvantaged, at-risk youth through training and internship opportunities to promote entrepreneurial and job-related skills.(58, 64, 83) Offers training courses in 10 provinces throughout the country. A total of 942 youth ages 14 and older have received entrepreneurship training. Of the 901 youth who finished the course, 42 percent are employed or have their own businesses; the others are waiting for microcredit through a government small business program (PROMIPYME).(62)
At-Risk Youth Initiative*	USAID-funded project to protect youth from crime and promote access to education, including through participation in afterschool programs (Spaces for Growth) and other social services.(95)
Let's Work for Our Rights Project†	$10 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project awarded to Catholic Relief Services to reduce child labor and improve respect for labor rights and working conditions in the agriculture sector, including sugar. Targets more than 18,000 children for provision of educational services and almost 6,000 households for provision of livelihood services.(96) ¹
Child Labor Elimination Project	$9.4 million multi-year regional project implemented funded by the Government of Spain and implemented by the ILO-IPEC that aims to eradicate child labor in 18 countries in Latin America, including in the Dominican Republic.(97-100)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, including the Dominican Republic, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor in the Dominican Republic and improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research.(101)
Child Domestic Work Awareness-raising Campaign	SET and ILO child labor eradication campaign launched in 2013 that supports reaching the goals outlined in the Roadmap with an emphasis on the elimination of child domestic work.(62)
Awareness-raising Campaign on Child Labor	SET and the Foundation for Peace and Democracy (FUNPADEM) public awareness-raising campaign to mobilize communities to report cases of child labor, launched in January 2014.(62, 66)
"Line 700" Hotline*‡	Office of the First Lady's free hotline to enable citizens to report cases of child labor, in addition to child abuse.(62) From January through September 2013, more than 700,000 calls were received.(62)
Extended School Day‡	Ministry of Education pilot program to extend school hours to a full day (8 a.m. to 4 p.m.) in order to improve educational achievement and reduce child labor.(10, 20, 25, 102)
Spaces for Growth and Homework Rooms‡	Government afterschool programs that seek to prevent children from working by keeping them in a creative learning environment outside of normal classroom hours.(2, 20, 45, 64, 103)
Spaces for Hope*	Government early educational centers to promote integrated attention and positive stimulation to pre-school aged children. During 2013, the Government increased funding for early childhood development, including the operation of 71 Spaces for Hope.(10, 62, 104)
Childcare Facilities*‡	Government childcare facilities to provide comprehensive attention to children under age 5 of adult workers. In 2013, SET worked to build the capacity of these facilities.(62)
Presidential Microcredit Initiative*‡	Government program to provide microcredit to small businesses in the disadvantaged regions in order to increase employment and provide improved livelihoods for families.(10)
Literacy Campaign†	Government major literacy campaign instituted in 2013 to promote the importance of education among families.(10, 105)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of the Dominican Republic.

¹Implementation has been delayed due to governmental opposition to project activities in the sugar and banana sectors.

In November, the Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms country participants' commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(106)

A study commissioned by the IDB indicated that the Progressing with Solidarity Program increased school enrollment and attendance among beneficiaries.(64, 99) Another study indicated an increase in beneficiaries' abilities to read and write.(62) An evaluation conducted in the province of Montecristi showed a decline in child labor among program beneficiaries compared to a control group in the same province.(62) However, the Progressing with Solidarity Program requires participants to present identification documents in order to access program benefits, which would limit the participation of those individuals lacking such documentation, many of whom are the most vulnerable to child labor.(20)

While the Government has committed to expanding the Spaces for Growth model, it has not yet allocated the resources needed to scale-up and sustain the program.(45, 77, 107)

Despite the efforts described above, current programs do not appear to be sufficient to adequately address the extent of the worst forms of child labor in the Dominican Republic, particularly the commercial sexual exploitation and harmful work in agricultural areas.(26) Further, there are insufficient efforts to reduce the demand for child sex tourism. In addition, governmental assistance to trafficking victims is minimal and inadequate, with civil society organizations as the principal service providers assisting trafficking victims.(10, 26)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Dominican Republic (Table 9).

In 2013, Ecuador made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government also launched the Unified Child Labor Registration System (SURTI) and prioritized eradicating child labor in agriculture as well as street begging. It increased the number of Grants for Human Development beneficiaries to 1.5 million families. It also increased the budget for labor inspections by 42 percent, and conducted a child labor survey that included domestic child labor. In addition, the Government issued a decree requiring that all Government procurement contracts with the private sector include a provision prohibiting the use of child labor.

However, children in Ecuador continue to be engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and street work. Ecuador still faces resource constraints that prevent labor inspectors from conducting inspections and enforcing child labor laws.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ecuador engage in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and street work. Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to involvement in child labor.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ecuador.

During the reporting period, the Government released the results of the Child Labor Survey. The Survey indicates that 359,597, or 8.56 percent, Ecuadorian children and adolescents between the ages of 5 and 17 work. Data from this survey were not analyzed in time for inclusion in the table above.(3, 43) The number of children and adolescents working is higher than the number of children and adolescents reported working in Ecuador in 2010 (269,881). The survey also includes domestic housework over 14 hours a week which was not counted in 2010.(3, 43) Children, mostly girls, who do household chores for more than 14 hours a week, Monday through Friday, are often the most vulnerable because they perform work activities behind closed doors.(3) According to the survey, 75 percent of the children and adolescents who worked in 2013 also attended school. This number reflects an increase of 25 percent from the 2010 survey.(43) Cotopaxi Province, located in the central highlands, has the highest percentage of children working.(44) The survey shows that children work predominantly in agriculture and street begging.(3)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor Relations (MRL)	Monitor child labor, conduct labor inspections at work sites, and enforce child labor laws. Administer sanctions against companies found using child labor.(10) The MRL also has a system to collect fines.(7)
Attorney General's Office (AGO), Ministry of Justice (MoJ)	Enforce criminal laws against child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and trafficking.(6, 10, 12)
Ministry of Interior (MOI)	Oversee and evaluate all police actions, including those of the country's Anti-Trafficking Police Unit (ATU) and the National Police Unit for Crimes against Children and Adolescents (DINAPEN).(24) The ATU investigates trafficking cases, rescues victims, and arrests traffickers.(7, 10) These police units have dedicated officers for victims and witness protection in each province.(43)
National Directorate of Specialized Police for Children and Adolescents (DINAPEN)	Investigate all crimes against children, including abuse, sexual exploitation, sex tourism, smuggling, kidnapping, illegal confinement, disappearance, exploitative and forced labor, use of children in the drug trade, and abandoned children.(43)
Office of the Public Prosecutor	Conduct investigations and try cases of child sex trafficking, child forced labor, commercial sexual exploitation and child pornography.(10, 25)
Ministry of Education	Provide immediate educational services for victims of child labor.(51)
Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion (MIES)	Provide remediation services to child laborers and their families.(51) MIES has a "Special Protection Unit" to work with children who are victims of abuse, trafficking, exploitative child labor, and sexual abuse of all types. Runs seven protection centers staffed by social workers, doctors, psychologists, and educators.(43)

Law enforcement agencies in Ecuador took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor Relations (MRL) employed 262 people nationwide in the inspection unit, including a dedicated child labor inspector in each province. This overall number was a decrease from 280 in 2012.(43) The total budget in 2013 for labor inspections related activities was $857,000, an increase of 42 percent from 2012.(10, 43) The MRL acknowledged that the amount of funding was still insufficient.(43) Between January and November 2013, labor inspectors conducted approximately 27,169 inspections for all types of labor violations, versus 23,773 for the entire year in 2012, and found that 1,345 children were engaged in child labor, compared to 223 children in 2012.(10) As a result, the MRL removed the 1,345 children in question, provided them with services, and issued 56 fines.(10, 43, 52) Of the 24 fines issued in 2012, three had been collected as of January 2013.(10, 43) Between January and November 2013, the MOL reported that it collected 39 out of 56 fines imposed in 2013, for a total of $42,996.(43) All labor inspectors received training about the laws and the enforcement of laws related to child labor. In addition, an online child labor training program and reference materials were made available to inspectors.(43) During the reporting period, the MOL began providing inspectors with computer tablets so that they could access online materials from the field.(43) The Government has a protocol in place to provide immediate access to social protection programs to working children and adolescents who are found during inspections.(53)

The Labor Code authorizes labor inspectors to conduct inspections at workplaces, including factories, workshops, workers' homes, and any other work establishments, when they consider it appropriate or when employers or workers request an inspection.(48) In addition, under an agreement between the MRL and the Ministry of Mines and Energy, labor inspectors can enforce child labor laws in mining activities and impose sanctions for violations.(12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Anti-Trafficking Unit (ATU) of the National Police had 27 agents based in Quito.(43) The National Directorate of Specialized Police for Children and Adolescents (DINAPEN) had approximately 600 agents nationwide to handle all crimes against children.(10) Also in 2013, the Ministry of Justice (MoJ), DINAPEN, and the ATU sponsored training for police on themes of child labor and trafficking in persons.(43)

In 2013, DINAPEN investigated 73 cases involving the worst forms of child labor, a decrease from 86 in 2012. During the reporting period, 41 individuals were arrested for child sexual exploitation and three individual for child labor exploitation.(43) DINAPEN, ATU, and the MRL removed 1,397 children from labor exploitation, sexual exploitation, child trafficking, street begging, and membership in guerillas, up from 300 in 2012.(43) During the reporting period, ATU conducted 72 investigations on the worst forms of child labor, sex trafficking, and forced labor of adults.(43) ATU arrested five persons for child sexual exploitation. Six convictions for sexual trafficking and one for labor trafficking were reported by DINAPEN during 2013.(43) The seven convicted persons are all serving sentences, yet no information was available about the length of the sentences.(43)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interagency Committee for the Elimination and Prevention of Child Labor (IAC)	Coordinate efforts to combat child labor in Ecuador under the Program to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI).(6, 12) Includes several ministries as well as provincial and municipal governments. Systematically document the elimination of child labor in priority sectors and develop guidelines so that the strategy can be replicated in other sectors in which children work.(7, 54-57) MIES coordinates the actions of all the institutions involved to combat child labor.(51, 57)
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CNNA)	Monitor child labor eradication policy at the national and local levels.(6, 10, 51, 58)
Local Autonomous Governments	Participate in coordinating the mechanisms to combat child labor. Mayors are accountable for ensuring that children are not found working, or they face a fine.(51)
Unified Child Labor Registration System (SURT)	Used by agencies within the IAC to provide appropriate services to working children.(52)

During the reporting period, the IAC, through the PETI program, launched the Unified Child Labor Registration System (SURT). The system will alert and allow agencies within the IAC to provide appropriate services to children registered in the system.(52) In addition, the IAC launched the national public awareness campaign “A child who works loses more than he earns.” The campaign included ads on billboards, short films, and radio spots across the country.(52)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Ecuador has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
2005-2013 National Plan for the Progressive Elimination of Child Labor	Seeks to mainstream child labor eradication and prevention into social programs and to coordinate efforts between Government, private sector, and civil society. This is the main policy instrument to combat child labor.(59)
National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, Sexual and Labor Exploitation, and other Forms of Exploitation	Guides efforts to prevent, investigate, and impose legal sanctions for human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and other forms of abuse as well as protect and restore the rights of victims of these crimes.(60)

Policy	Description
Ecuador Without Child Labor	Seeks to increase efforts to eradicate child labor by improving data collection, strengthening labor inspections, and carrying out awareness-raising activities in 150 municipalities.(61-63) Various government agencies work with the private sector and other actors to address child labor in brickmaking, fishing, street work, and markets.(53) The Government signed an agreement with the agriculture, flower, livestock, and construction sectors to coordinate actions and promote joint programs for the elimination of child labor in those sectors.(53, 55) In addition, MIES entered into 206 agreements with local governments and organizations throughout the country to help up to 41,000 children by increasing assistance to children and families and improved protection and shelter to trafficking victims.(43)
Agenda for the Equality of Children and Adolescents in Ecuador	Outlines strategies to assist children and help their families overcome poverty, remove children from work, and prevent children from entering the workforce.(10, 64) This Agenda also outlines specific goals for the Government of Ecuador to eradicate the worst forms of child labor, such as by having a dedicated child labor inspector in each province.(64)
National Plan for Good Living	Seeks to improve living conditions for all citizens and promote social inclusion and decent work.(65) Eradicating child labor and providing access to decent work for adolescents of legal working age are guiding policies under Objectives Two and Nine of the National Plan, which was renewed to cover the period from 2013 to 2017.(65)
10-year National Plan for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents	Seeks to protect the rights of children and adolescents. Under Objective 18, for children between the ages of 6 and 12, the plan addresses the eradication of child labor and hazardous child labor.(66) For adolescents between the ages of 12 and 18, Objective 26 focuses on protection against commercial sexual exploitation, and Objective 27 focuses on the eradication of hazardous work and prevention of labor exploitation.(66)
Social Agenda for Children and Adolescents	Aims to ensure, as part of the main objectives of the Agenda, that the rights of children are protected and that they are prevented them from performing hazardous labor. It also sets out to reinforce the protection of children against exploitative labor as set out in the Child and Adolescent Code.(67)

During the reporting period, the Government released the results of the First Child Labor Survey (ENTI 2013). It also prioritized eradicating child labor from agriculture and street begging, and pledged to continue working toward eliminating child labor throughout the country.(10, 23, 43, 53-56, 58, 68)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Ecuador funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Grants for Human Development‡	Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion conditional cash transfer program that supplements household income. It also targets vulnerable families and conditions payments on keeping children under age 15 in school and taking them for medical checkups.(9, 10, 69-71) The payments assisted 1.5 million families in 2013.(43) Working children whose families receive the Grants for Human Development are more likely to stay in school rather than work, particularly children ages 11 to 15.(71-73)
National Program to Combat Child Begging‡	Government awareness-raising program in origin and receiving communities that send and receive child beggars.(7, 27, 61, 74) Although the Government has not eliminated child labor in begging, reports indicate that there has been a significant reduction in child begging over the last 3 years.(10)
School Meals Program*‡	Government program that provides free meals to 1.6 million school children across the country.(7, 74)
Business Network for a Child Labor Free Ecuador‡	Initiative that seeks to gain commitment from participating industries to promote the prevention and elimination of child labor in their supply chains. By 2013, 27 businesses had joined, up from 14 in 2012.(52, 75, 76) Businesses participating in the program, have three commitments: zero tolerance of child labor, conduct a supply-chain analysis to determine if there is child labor, and develop strategies to prevent and eradicate child labor in the supply chain.(76)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year multi country education and monitoring program for the eradication of child labor.(77)
Eradication of Child Labor in Latin America	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 3-year multi-country project for the eradication of child labor.(77)

Program	Description
Project for the Reduction of Child Labor through South-South Cooperation in Ecuador	$700,000 Government of Brazil-funded, 4-year project to support exchange of good practices to combat child labor through South-South Cooperation.(77)
Support to the Partnership Program to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor in the Americas.	$2.2 million Government of Brazil-funded, 4-year project to support exchange of good practices to combat child labor between Paraguay, Bolivia, Ecuador, and Timor-Leste.(77)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016; established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Ecuador, the project aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor. The project also aims to strengthen legal protection of and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(78)
Combating WFCL Promoting Horizontal Cooperation in South America (Bolivia, Brazil, Ecuador, and Paraguay)	$6.75 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC regional project to promote collaboration across four countries (Bolivia, Brazil, Ecuador, and Paraguay) to combat the worst forms of child labor among the most socially excluded populations, including indigenous children and Afro-descendants.(79) The project, which began in 2009, aims to rescue 6,600 children in the four target countries from the worst forms of child labor through education interventions. It also supports capacity-building of government and civil society organizations, raises awareness, and conducts research.(79)
Building Effective Policies against Child Labor in Ecuador and Panama	$3.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to strengthen policy and enforcement of child labor laws as well as occupational health and safety services.(80) The project also promotes lesson sharing between Panama, Ecuador, and other countries. In Ecuador, the project is piloting efforts to address the link between child labor and disabilities.(80)
Educafuturo Project	$6.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Partners of the Americas to combat the worst forms of child labor among the most vulnerable populations, including Afro-descendants, migrants, and indigenous children, by providing them with educational and livelihood services in Ecuador and Panama.(81) The project also promotes lesson sharing between Panama, Ecuador, and other countries. In Ecuador, the project is piloting efforts to address the link between child labor and disabilities.(81) The Project targets approximately 2,000 children and 1,000 households.(81)
Project to Combat Human Trafficking and Exploitation	INFA program to assist children who are engaged in child labor or who are victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation works closely with law enforcement officials to protect children and provide social services at 86 INFA centers across the country.(7, 10, 12) Additionally, the Government of Ecuador works with four NGOs to provide services to child victims of trafficking. These services include shelter, food, job training, legal assistance, and physical and psychological medical care.(25) The Government continues to receive technical support from international organizations to combat trafficking in persons.(82, 83)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Ecuador.

The Government has partnered with NGOs to combat child labor by raising awareness in local communities and providing educational opportunities to children, particularly indigenous children, who work or are at risk of working.(7, 10, 84) Despite these efforts, current programs do not appear to be sufficient to address the extent of the worst forms of child labor in Ecuador, particularly in agriculture and street work.(3)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ecuador (Table 9).

	Assess the impact that the School Meals Program may have on reducing child labor.	2011 – 2013

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in unknown sectors as a result of trafficking to inform policies and programs.	2013

In 2013, Egypt made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified the 2014 Constitution, which establishes a new minimum age for work that is harmonized with the compulsory education age and prohibitions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children and hazardous work for children under the age of 18. Implementing legislation will be necessary in order for these protections to take effect. The National Council for Childhood and Motherhood increased its efforts to combat trafficking through training and awareness raising activities. Finally, the Government started to participate in an EU-funded program with an $81.5 million component designed to provide access to education for children vulnerable to entry into child labor. However, children in Egypt continue to engage in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic service. The Government has not addressed gaps in its legal and enforcement framework to protect children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Egypt are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic service.(1) Data from the 2010 National Child Labor Survey indicate that 55 percent of all child laborers work in agriculture. Boys are three times more likely to engage in child labor.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Egypt.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	6.7 (993,417)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	88.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	6.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		107.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(2)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2005.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Picking cotton (4-7)
	Caring for livestock† (4)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (4, 8)
Industry	Quarrying limestone† (5, 6, 9)
	Making bricks* (5, 10)
	Construction, activities unknown (9, 11)
Services	Domestic service (12-16)
	Work in automobile workshops (5, 10)
	Street work, including selling goods, begging, shining shoes, collecting garbage, and carrying goods (6, 9, 13, 16-20)

	Forced begging (16, 22, 23)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3 (d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Anecdotal reports indicate that the poor economic situation in Egypt led to an increase in the number of children working on the streets in 2013.(22) Some working children are also trafficked internally, primarily to urban centers and tourist destinations. Children who are trafficked internally are involved in domestic service, agricultural labor, and commercial sexual exploitation.(15, 17, 19-21, 24) Street children are especially vulnerable to internal trafficking for begging or commercial sexual exploitation.(23, 24)

Cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children have been reported in a number of governorates, including Cairo, Alexandria, and Luxor.(21, 24, 25) In return for payments, parents give their young daughters into “temporary (or summer) marriages” to wealthy foreign men, mostly from Gulf countries.(17, 20, 21, 23, 24, 26-28)

The ongoing political transition in Egypt, heightened by an economic crisis, and recurring periods of violence, has increased children’s vulnerability to child labor, including hazardous child labor. This situation has also hampered the development of policies by the Government to address the worst forms of child labor.(6, 21, 28)

Costs associated with school attendance and cultural practices keep many children out of school. The costs of school fees, books, and uniforms are prohibitive for lower income families. This causes some children to drop out of school or, most often in the case of girls who face certain cultural barriers, results in their parents not sending them to school in the first place.(18, 29, 30)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Egypt has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Free Public Education	Yes		Child Protection Law (33)

The Egyptian Constitution was passed by referendum in January 2014.(6, 32) The Constitution prohibits trafficking and forced labor, and expands the rights of children, including establishing a new right to free early education in a childhood center until age 6. However, legislation implementing the forced labor protection has not been enacted. Article 80 of the Constitution sets a minimum age for work that is harmonized with the compulsory education age, prohibits hazardous work by children under the age of 18, and calls for the protection of children from all types of commercial and sexual exploitation.(6, 32) The new Constitution also requires the state to allocate a minimum of 4 percent of GDP to education.(32) Enforcement and implementation of Article 80 is pending the passage of new or amended legislation. Until then, existing laws on child labor remain in effect.(6)

The Child Protection Law sets the minimum age for regular employment at 15, and at 13 for seasonal employment.(6) The Unified Labor Code allows children as young as 13 years old to work as apprentices.(6, 37, 38) The Unified Labor Code limits the hours children can work and mandates that they be allowed shift breaks. However, children working in domestic work, in family businesses, and in agriculture are excluded from coverage by the Unified Labor Code.(37)

The Ministry of Manpower and Migration’s (MOMM) Decree 118 bars children under age 18 from 44 occupations and certain dangerous work activities; however, some dangerous tasks that children perform are not explicitly prohibited by this decree, particularly in the agriculture and domestic service sectors. For instance, although children are prohibited from preparing or spraying pesticides, they are not prohibited from working in fields just after pesticides have been applied.(4, 29) Decree 118 also prohibits children under age 16 from performing work that exposes them to physical, or sexual exploitation, or to chemical, biological, or mechanical dangers; but it does not define these terms.(31) These protections do not apply to children ages 16–17.

The Child Protection Law provides for compulsory and free education at the primary and secondary stages of education (known in Egypt as “preparatory”), which amounts to a total of 9 years, from approximately ages 6 to 15, depending on when a child starts school.(11, 33)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
MOMM	Enforce child labor laws and regulations, including receiving child labor complaints and sending labor inspectors to investigate them.(6, 39)
Ministry of the Interior and Prosecutor General’s Office	Enforce laws and regulations prohibiting trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. Refer relevant cases to National Council for Childhood and Motherhood (NCCM).(6, 28, 39)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute employers of children found in violation of the Unified Labor Code.(6)

Organization/Agency	Role
NCCM; Ministry of Local Administration and Development	Enforce child protection laws.(30)

Law enforcement agencies in Egypt took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

Labor inspectors from MOMM have the authority to inspect businesses, industrial facilities, and commercial agricultural enterprises to ensure legal compliance with child labor regulations, including those related to its worst forms.(6, 39) There is no enforcement mechanism to protect children working on private noncommercial farms, in unregistered businesses, or in private homes as domestic workers.(9)

MOMM’s primary way of responding to child labor is by using a child labor complaints mechanism. When the child labor complaint is filed a labor inspector responds to the violation.(6) MOMM employs more than 500 labor inspectors, all of whom can inspect workplaces for child labor violations.(6) The budget for labor inspections is not publicly available.(6) During 2013, MOMM conducted inspections specifically for child labor in 6,732 workplaces, of which 1,466 sites were found to employ a total of 9,268 children, in violation of the law. MOMM reportedly issued warnings to all workplaces found in violation.(6) In response, 1,400 workplaces complied with the warning and ceased the illegal employment of children. The remaining 66 workplaces were referred to the Prosecutor General’s office, and the courts ordered all 66 employers to pay a fine of $72 per illegally-employed child, according to government officials.(6) MOMM reported that the number of labor inspectors and of labor inspections is not enough to address the magnitude of child labor in Egypt.(6) MOMM did not provide information on the number of children assisted or removed as a result of the investigations.(6)

The National Council for Childhood and Motherhood (NCCM) provided technical and financial support to train MOMM labor inspectors on child labor. In addition, MOMM provided 300 small “in-house” training programs for 400 labor inspectors on Egypt’s commitments to child labor, the national legislative framework, and polices on child labor.(6)

MOMM conducted training and provided equipment to authorities to support the operation of a child labor monitoring database that will track children working, or at risk of working, in the worst forms of child labor. According to MOMM, the database will be launched in 2014.(28, 30, 40)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, there were 10 ongoing trafficking investigations and prosecutions of trafficking offenders under the 2010 Combating Human Trafficking law; half of the investigations involved forced child labor.(22)

IOM, in coordination with NCCM, conducted anti-trafficking training for 4,650 officials, including 550 prosecutors and judges.(22) Reports indicate that, because of this training, the number of trafficking victims being treated as criminals decreased.(22)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordination Committee (NCC) on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking, including women and children. Led by the Deputy Minister of Justice with committee members from the Ministries of Justice, Interior, the General Intelligence Service, and Councils for Human Rights, Childhood and Motherhood, and Women.(6, 22, 41)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
NCCM	Focal point for the National Protection Program, which identifies and monitors children at risk, including those vulnerable to exploitative labor.(39, 42) Oversees a committee comprising various ministries, international agencies, and civil society organizations to address the issue of domestic workers.(43, 44)
Child Protection Committees	Coordinate child protection efforts at the local level. Organized at the governorate level, with subcommittees at each police station.(34, 39, 45)

In 2013, oversight of the National Coordination Committee (NCC) was transferred from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Ministry of Justice and now reports directly to the Prime Minister. This realignment is meant to assist with the prosecution of traffickers.(22)

In 2009, MOMM organized a national committee to coordinate government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor and develop a national action plan to eliminate child labor.(39) The committee has been inactive since 2011 and, due to the political transition, did not meet during the reporting period.(28) Child protection committees are currently operating in 15 of Egypt's 27 governorates; other subcommittees are operating at the district level.(30)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Egypt has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
First National Strategy for the Elimination of Child Labor*	Aims to identify vulnerable children and remove them from child labor.(39, 45)
National Plan of Action Against Human Trafficking*	Currently in draft form, the plan prioritizes and coordinates activities to combat human trafficking and identifies the relevant Ministries responsible for their execution.(22, 46) The Plan includes a victim assistance fund and a statistical data management system and prioritizes combating the trafficking of street children.(21)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

During the reporting period, the political situation impeded progress towards the finalization of a national action plan to implement the First National Strategy for the Elimination of Child Labor.(30)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Egypt funded and participated in programs that aim to, or may contribute to, the elimination or prevention of child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Socio-Economic Development and Civil Society Support Program‡	$123 million EU-funded program with a $81.5 million component to enhance access to education for children, especially girls, in order eliminate child labor in the poorest areas of Egypt.(47, 48) Will target 90,000 children, support 3,800 community based schools, provide families of targeted children with vocational training and link them to social protection schemes.(48)
Combating the Worst Forms of Child Labor through Education and Livelihood Interventions in Egypt	USDOL-funded, 4-year, $9.5 million project to provide educational services for children engaged in or at risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and enhanced livelihood opportunities for members of their households in Upper Egypt and the Delta region.(40, 49, 50) From April to September 2013, provided educational services to 2,748 children at risk of or engaged in the worst forms of child labor and economic strengthening services to 1,263 mothers.(51)
Shelters for Street Children	Program by NCCM, in cooperation with NGOs that operates shelters and provides support services to street children. A center for male street children is operated by a Belgian NGO and NCCM; the center provided services to 1,482 children during the reporting period.(22)
Child Rights Program‡	Program operated by UNICEF, in cooperation with the Government that aims to improve children's rights. Works to improve the quality and coverage of child protection services and programs to prevent violence against children.(52)

Program	Description
Child Help Hotline	NCCM-managed 24-hour child help hotline, which can be used to report cases of child exploitation.(19, 20, 22, 53)
Awareness Raising Campaigns*	NCCM program generating awareness of trafficking violations and victims services through teacher training, pamphlets, and advertising.(22)
Programs for Victims of Trafficking, including Care Centers and Shelters	Program by NCCM, the Ministry of Health, and NGOs providing two health centers and shelter for trafficking victims, including women and children.(20, 21, 24, 41, 54, 55) IOM, in cooperation with NCCM, provided protection and assistance to 177 trafficking victims.(22, 28)
Food Security Support*‡	Program by WFP, in cooperation with the Government, implementing a 4-year project that works to improve food security, nutritional status, and access to socioeconomic opportunities for 800,000 beneficiaries, including women, children, and vulnerable communities.(56-59)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program was launched during the reporting period.

There was no information available on the number of complaints, including the number that involved children exploited in child labor, to the Child Help Hotline. Research found no evidence of programs to address child trafficking through “temporary marriages.”(22)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, El Salvador made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government increased the budget allocation for labor inspections, employed additional labor inspectors, and increased the number of inspections targeting child labor, as compared to 2012. The Government also conducted more investigations of crimes related to the worst forms of child labor than in 2012, and the Attorney General's Office increased the number of convictions for crimes involving the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Government's National Council for Children and Adolescents passed a new National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents for 2013 to 2023, which includes the objective of protecting children from the worst forms of child labor. In addition, in collaboration with the ILO, the Government launched a Web platform to more rigorously monitor progress in executing its main policy framework on child labor, the Roadmap to Make El Salvador Free from Child Labor and its Worst Forms. However, children in El Salvador continue to engage in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic service. Penalties for violations of child labor and human trafficking laws are insufficient to act as a deterrent, and law enforcement agencies still lack sufficient resources to enforce child labor laws.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in El Salvador are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and domestic service. (1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in El Salvador.

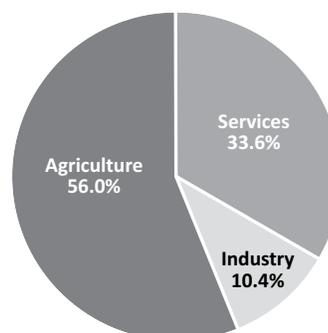

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	6.3 (84,927)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	6.2

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 2, 11, 12)
	Use of children by gangs to perform illicit activities, including committing homicides and trafficking drugs* (1, 11, 13, 14)
	Forced begging and forced domestic service* (1, 2, 11)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

A third party monitoring group has documented a decrease in the use of child labor in the sugarcane harvest every year since 2010.(5) In some cases, girls do not attend school because they have childcare responsibilities while their mothers go to work.(15) Child domestic servants working in third party homes are principally girls.(2) Victims of forced domestic service include migrant children, particularly from Nicaragua, Guatemala, and Honduras.(11) There are reports that children are recruited into gang activity while at school.(13, 14, 16) Though the Government regularly collects statistics on children’s work through its annual Multipurpose Household Survey, it has not conducted in-depth research on some hard-to-reach populations, such as children used in illicit activities.(17)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

El Salvador has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 56 of the Constitution (18, 25)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 56 of the Constitution (18)

Article 627 of the Labor Code specifies a default fine of no more than $60 per violation of all labor laws, including child labor laws, a penalty the ILO deems insufficient to act as a deterrent.(19, 26) Article 367 of the Penal Code specifies that human trafficking and sex trafficking are punishable by 4 to 8 years in prison. However, the Government has acknowledged that penalties for trafficking in persons are insufficient.(10, 22)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS)	Enforce regulations on child labor, including hazardous child labor. Inspect registered businesses for all types of labor violations, including child labor.(1, 10) Maintain a special child labor unit that trains inspectors and businesses on child labor law.(26) Refer cases of possible crimes committed against children to the Attorney General's Office.(1)
Attorney General's Office (AGO)	Enforce criminal law related to the worst forms of child labor. Maintain a special trafficking in persons unit consisting of 14 prosecutors and 10 support staff who investigate trafficking and related crimes.(1) Refer exploited children to ISNA for social services and shelter.(1)
National Civilian Police (PNC)	Enforce criminal law relating to the worst forms of child labor. Maintain a special unit of seven investigators who investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, including child trafficking.(10, 27) Maintain an emergency hotline that receives complaints about commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(27)
Salvadoran National Institute for the Full Development of Children (ISNA)	Receive referrals from law enforcement agencies of cases of the criminal exploitation of children, including forced labor, trafficking, and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Provide child victims with services including shelter, medical attention, psychological help, and legal advice.(27)

Law enforcement agencies in El Salvador took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Government employed 203 labor inspectors, an increase from 120 inspectors in 2012.(1) The Government also increased the budget allocation for labor inspections from $1.6 million in 2012 to approximately $1.8 million in 2013.(1, 10) However, the MTPS has acknowledged that it lacks sufficient resources, such as vehicles, fuel, and computers, to fully enforce labor laws.(1, 10) In addition, each inspection process can entail multiple visits per site, and MTPS inspectors do not have independent authority to issue fines. The Ministry of Economy and the AGO issue penalties in a process that can take up to 6 months.(26)

In 2013, the MTPS performed 1,127 inspections in the formal sector, of which 249 specifically targeted child labor, an increase from 20 inspections specifically targeting child labor in 2012.(1, 2) As a result of the inspections, the MTPS identified 20 children who were working in violation of child labor law; however, the data did not specify the type of work these children performed. One of the 20 children was removed from his or her workplace.(1) In 2013, the MTPS did not issue any citations for these or any other violations of child labor law, and did not receive any complaints related to child labor.(1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the AGO's trafficking in persons unit hired two new prosecutors, for a total of 14 prosecutors. It also provided training to its staff on human trafficking.(1)

Law enforcement officials in El Salvador do not receive adequate training and resources to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including child pornography, and lack of evidence is one of the major obstacles to investigating cases of child pornography in El Salvador.(28) Evidence that could be used by investigators is limited because Internet service providers, cell phone operators, and search engines are not required to keep information for a sufficient period of time to allow its use in investigations.(29)

El Salvador

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, ISNA reported assisting 28 child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, 21 victims of forced begging, and seven child victims of other types of labor exploitation.(1) The AGO investigated 143 cases of the worst forms of child labor in 2013, a marked increase from 61 investigations in 2012. The AGO pressed charges in 23 of the 143 cases, resulting in 16 convictions for crimes related to child trafficking and child commercial sexual exploitation, an increase from five such convictions in 2012.(1)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA)	Develop policies to protect the rights of children, including child labor policies, and implement the LEPINA and the National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (PNAIA).(20, 30, 31) Composed of Departmental Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights, the Salvadoran Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Adolescents, the Ministry of Public Security and Justice, the Attorney General, the Human Rights Ombudsman, and others.(10)
Departmental Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights	Carry out CONNA's policies and the National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents at the departmental level. Composed of local elected officials, departmental specialists in public health and education, and members of civil society.(20)
National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (CNETI)	Determine and implement government efforts to combat child labor, including the Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms.(32) Chaired by the MTPS, includes 12 government agencies, along with representatives from labor union organizations, business associations, and NGOs.(2, 10)
The National Council against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate government efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including by implementing the National Policy against Trafficking in Persons.(33) Headed by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security and composed of five other government agencies.(34)

In 2013, the CNETI met periodically to review its members' progress in implementing the Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms.(35) The CNETI also approved a monitoring system developed by the Ministry of Finance that will allow government agencies to share and analyze information on their efforts to implement the Roadmap through a Web portal.(35, 36)

In 2013, CONNA took several actions to implement the LEPINA and the PNAIA. CONNA and the Organization of American States jointly hosted the IV Sub-Regional Conference to Prevent and Eradicate the Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents in Travel and Tourism, which was attended by government and civil society representatives from all Central American countries and Mexico. The conference identified best practices and lessons learned in the region to reduce child sexual exploitation.(37) Also in 2013, in an effort to improve the coordination of services for children whose rights have been violated, CONNA launched a Public Registry for Entities that Provide Services to Children and Adolescents and trained over 100 public and civil society institutions on the requirements and procedures for providing such services to youth.(38) CONNA continued to support the creation and functioning of Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights, including by providing them with training and equipment.(38, 39)

Despite these efforts, challenges remain. CONNA does not have sufficient resources to implement all of its mandates established by the LEPINA. As a result, it cannot fully implement the interagency coordination mechanisms it has developed to combat child labor and protect children's rights.(10, 40)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of El Salvador has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms	Serves as the Government's main policy framework to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015 and all child labor by 2020 by reducing poverty, improving education and health, protecting children's rights, raising awareness and mobilizing the public, and generating knowledge.(32)
National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents for 2013-2023 (PNAIA)†	Sets government policies and action plans aimed at guaranteeing children's rights and protecting them from violence and harm, including the worst forms of child labor. Objectives include improving health services for children, improving access to quality education, improving services for children with disabilities, reducing poverty among children, and others.(31) In 2013, was drafted and launched by CONNA after it consulted thousands of children and adults throughout El Salvador, as mandated by the LEPINA.(38)
National Youth Policy for 2010-2024*	Outlines the government's strategy to provide integrated services to socially excluded youth. Includes the goal of providing vocational training and creating 50,000 temporary jobs for youth.(41)
Inclusive Education Policy	Defines actions that the Ministry of Education should implement to improve education for marginalized and excluded groups, including child laborers.(42)
National Policy against Trafficking in Persons	Defines a comprehensive plan to combat human trafficking, including commercial sexual exploitation, labor exploitation, begging, pornography, and sex tourism. Includes a focus on improving services for children.(45, 46)

* The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

In November, the Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms country participants' commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(47)

Also during the reporting period, the Governments of El Salvador and the United States continued to implement their Partnership for Growth Agreement to promote broad-based economic growth in El Salvador, with a focus on human capital development and crime prevention, including assisting at-risk youth.(48, 49)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of El Salvador funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project to Combat Child Labor in El Salvador	$14 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor, including by strengthening national and municipal government capacity to address child labor.(15, 50) As of October 2013, has provided education services to 3,623 children who work or are at risk of working, and livelihood services to 1,528 households with working children.(15, 36, 50) In 2013, collaborated with the Government to produce studies on the prevalence of child labor in 15 municipalities.(36)
Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)†	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including El Salvador, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(51)

In 2013, identified 35,531 school children working in agriculture; 9,034 in domestic service; and 1,450 working in other commercial and service activities.(1)
School Feeding and School Supply Programs*‡	Government programs that provide low-income children with school lunches and school supplies, including uniforms. In 2013, aimed to provide approximately 149,000 students with lunches and 1.3 million students with school supplies.(55)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of El Salvador.

Although the Government implements several programs to reduce the worst forms of child labor through assistance to poor families and schoolchildren, research found no evidence of government programs to assist child laborers who may not live with their families or attend school, such as children engaged in domestic service or street work. In addition, although government programs have expanded basic education coverage, gang violence has hindered efforts to increase school enrollment and decrease dropout rates.(60, 61)

In 2013, Eritrea made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. While Eritrea did build a number of new schools for children in remote areas and nomadic communities, the Government is receiving this assessment because it continued to require children to participate in a national program called Maetot, under which some children in grades nine through eleven engage in agricultural, environmental or hygiene-related public works projects for varying amounts of time during their annual summer holidays from school. In addition, although the law prohibits the recruitment of children under age 18 into the armed forces, there may be children enrolled in the Government's compulsory military training program. Children in Eritrea continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Gaps in legislation also exist, including the lack of laws to prohibit trafficking for labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Eritrea are engaged in child labor in agriculture and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government of Eritrea is also complicit in the worst forms of child labor through national policies and programs.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Eritrea. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		31.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(2)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2014.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of corn,* wheat,* sorghum,* and other grains, and picking cotton* (1, 4-6)
	Herding livestock (1, 4, 5)
Industry	Working in garages, bicycle repair shops, and workshops (1, 4)
	Making household utensils and furniture* (1, 4)
	Domestic service (1)
Services	Working on the street in vending including, selling cigarettes, newspapers, chewing gum, cleaning cars, and transporting goods on donkey carts or tricycles*† (1, 4)
	Gathering firewood and hauling water (1, 4, 5)
	Working in tea and coffee shops* (1, 4)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 4, 7, 8)
	Compulsory labor in producing and maintaining school furniture;* in water-related projects such as building canals and irrigation; in reforestation activities such as planting trees; and in agricultural activities such as hoeing, terracing, and picking cotton* (1, 4, 6, 7, 9)
	Forced labor in mining (10)
	Compulsory participation in National Service or the Popular Army prior to the age of 18 (1, 4)
	Forced labor as a result of human trafficking (7, 8)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The Government of Eritrea sponsors a national program called Maetot, under which children in grades nine through eleven are required to engage in team-building through public works projects in agriculture, environmental protection, or hygiene during their summer holidays, in some cases for as long as two months.(1, 4, 6, 7, 9, 11) Government declarations indicate that the purpose of Maetot is to instill in adolescents a proper work ethic and expose them to persons of other ethnic backgrounds in the aim of fostering appreciation for diverse cultures and strengthening national unity through cooperation and self-reliance. Adolescents may be asked to dig irrigation ditches or canals or maintain agricultural terracing.(11)

The Government of Eritrea also engages in a compulsory practice, whereby, in order to graduate from high school, students are required by the Government to complete their final, 12th, year of schooling and military training at the Sawa Center for Education and Training in remote Western Eritrea. In the course of the reporting period, the Government has attempted to identify persons under age 18 while attending Sawa so that this cohort is not required to undertake required military training before reaching 18.(1, 4, 6, 7, 9-11) Persons who attempt to flee or otherwise avoid military training and national service have in the past been subject to detention and poor treatment, including torture when caught. During the reporting period, the Government attempted to address the phenomenon of out-migration, including flight from Sawa, and although circumstances varied considerably, penalties were less severe for those caught fleeing Sawa as long as they agreed to resume their studies and complete national service.(6, 7, 11, 12).

In Eritrea, children who are not in school often enter the workforce; because of the limited number of schools, children may work at a young age.(4, 5, 8) Additionally, children from nomadic communities have difficulty accessing education, as their seasonal movements are incompatible with the formal school calendar.(13, 14) The Government made no known effort to collect or publish data on the worst forms of child labor.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Eritrea has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	14	National Policy on Education (20, 21)
Free Public Education	Yes		National Policy on Education(20)

The Labor Proclamation 118 of 2001 does not require employers to keep a register containing the name, age, or date of birth of their employees, nor does it include penalties for employers of children in hazardous work or employers of children under the minimum age. Further, the Government does not provide protection for children working without a contract, leaving many children working for family businesses and as child domestics unprotected by the law.(8, 15, 20) A child may become an apprentice at the age of 14. Article 35 and Article 69 of the Labor Proclamation respectively indicate that no apprentice may alone be assigned to hazardous work, but that the list of activities prohibited to young employees shall not apply to any type of training carried out and supervised by a competent authority.(11, 15, 20) No law prohibits trafficking for labor exploitation.(7) Research did not uncover information on whether there are laws regulating the use of children in illicit activities such as drug trafficking. The Government has not ratified ILO Convention 182 or the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Welfare	Enforce child labor laws, including criminal violations of the worst forms of child labor, such as trafficking.(1)
Eritrean Police	Address the worst forms of child labor, child trafficking, the use of children in illicit activities, and the commercial sexual exploitation of children by enforcing the law and investigating referred cases.(1, 11)
Popular Army	Perform night patrols and refer cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children or other exploitative practices to the Eritrean Police.(1, 11)
Eritrean Defense Forces	Refer cases of the worst forms of child labor to the Eritrean Police or the Ministry of Labor.(1, 11)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in Eritrea took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies took such actions.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, participants in the Popular Army referred suspected cases of child prostitution to the Police, but the latter tended to try to resolve them through family mediation rather than legal action.(11)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Eritrea has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
The National Plan of Action on Child Labor and National Program of Action on Children	Prevent child labor and support victims by reintegrating them with families, communities, and schools.(1) Incorporated into a Comprehensive Child Policy and the United Nations Strategic Partnership Cooperation Framework.(11)
United Nations Strategic Partnership Cooperation Framework †	Align with the Government's priorities, including protecting children from exploitative situations, and designed in consultation with the Government. Implementation began in 2013.(1, 22)

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

Research did not uncover the extent to which the National Plan of Action on Child Labor and National Program of Action on Children have been implemented or what their impact has been on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. The Government's compulsory military training requirements for 12th graders may diminish the impact of Eritrea's policies to combat the worst forms of child labor for all those wishing to obtain high school diplomas. In addition, the Government's use of compulsory labor through the Maetot program also may diminish these efforts.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Eritrea participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
UNICEF Education Program *	UNICEF program with the support of the Ministry of Education, built a number of permanent new elementary schools for the 2012-2013 academic year to target children living in remote areas and for nomadic populations.(23)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

Eritrea's social programs are limited in scope and do not adequately protect or provide alternatives for self-employed children or target areas in which the majority of children work, such as agriculture, domestic service.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Eritrea (Table 8).

Table 8. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Ethiopia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Ethiopia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Ethiopia approved a National Human Rights Action Plan, which aims to strengthen the implementation of human rights, including efforts to eliminate child labor, and developed a new labor inspection guideline, which includes child labor issues. The Government also operates Africa's largest social protection program, the Productive Safety Net Program Phase II, and participates in and implements several programs to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Ethiopia continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service. Gaps in legislation continue to put children at risk and government efforts to address child labor have not sufficiently targeted sectors with a high incidence of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ethiopia are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service.(1-4) Data from the Government's 2011 Demographic and Health Survey (DHS) show that most children work for a family business. In addition, DHS data indicates that the percentages of child labor are higher among males and in rural areas.(5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ethiopia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	22.0 (5,545,319)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	54.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	17.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		43.4

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Used in the production of pornography* (36)
	Domestic service, herding, street vending, and traditional weaving, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (13, 24, 36-40)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In Ethiopia, children work in the traditional weaving industry in Addis Ababa and in the Gamo Gofa and Wolayita Zones.(13, 15, 23-26) Child weavers may work long hours, face physical, sexual, or emotional abuse from their employers; and develop injuries as a result of crouching while working on traditional weaving looms.(13, 18, 41, 42) Anecdotal evidence suggests that some child weavers are held in debt bondage.(40, 42) In addition, children are trafficked from rural areas to Addis Ababa and other regions of the country for forced labor in the weaving industry.(13, 36, 37) The Confederation of Ethiopian Trade Unions reports that there was an increase in child labor in the construction industry in 2013.(4)

Although the Government has improved access to education, the lack of adequate schools in rural areas increases children’s risk of entering the workforce at a young age.(21, 43-45)Droughts and floods also hindered access to education in Afar; Amhara; Benishangul-Gumuz; Dire Dawa; Gambella; Harar; Oromia; Somali Region; Southern Nations, Nationalities, and Peoples Region (SNNPR); and Tigray.(31, 46) In SNNPR, sexual abuse and harassment of girls is also a barrier to education.(45) In addition, even though the Vital Events Registration Proclamation mandates the registration of all births, many children in Ethiopia are not registered. Unable to prove citizenship, nonregistered children may have difficulty accessing services such as education.(25, 47-50) In 2013, the Government established the Vital Events Registration Agency to assist with the registration of births and rollout of the Proclamation, which has been delayed by the absence of uniform national identification cards.(37, 49, 51)

In 2013, Ethiopia proposed a law that would allow for the ratification of the CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography. The President still needs to sign the bill before the Protocol is ratified.(4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

* No conscription or no standing military.

Ethiopian law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. Article 89.5 of the Labor Proclamation allows children above the age of 14 to engage in hazardous work if this work is performed following a government-approved vocational training course.(52, 60) Children working in non-contractual employment do not have the same protections under child labor laws and regulations as children working in contractual employment.(60-62) In addition, penalties outlined in Article 184 of the Labor Proclamation for violating child labor laws are low and do not deter violations.(52, 63) Although the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA) submitted a proposal to Parliament in 2012 to raise the minimum age for employment from 14 to 15 years, the minimum age was not raised in 2013.(4)

There is no law establishing compulsory education in Ethiopia. The lack of compulsory education may increase the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor as they are not required to be in school.(4, 64) In addition, although primary education is free, the cost of school supplies keeps some children from attending school.(3, 12)

In 2013, the Sodo town administration (Wolayita zone, SNNPR) enacted a directive to prevent social and economic crimes against children.(65) The directive requires community members to report instances of child labor to the kebele or ward administration. The directive also includes small fines for those found using child laborers.(65, 66)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Occupational Safety and Health Case Team (OSHCT)	Enforce occupational safety, health, and wage and hour protections, which include child labor laws, at industrial enterprises in Addis Ababa and Dire Dawa.(57, 67) Collect and analyze data and make policymaking recommendations for labor purposes. Located within MOLSA.(17, 67, 68)
Regional Bureaus of Social and Labor Affairs (BOLSAs) and City Administration	Conduct labor inspections at the zonal offices, and regional and city levels.(67) In the case of the BOLSA office in Addis Ababa, operate an occupational safety and health laboratory to identify work place hazards.(48)
Ethiopian Federal Police and the Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Investigate and prosecute criminal violations of laws that protect against the worst forms of child labor.(4, 12) In the case of police stations at the regional level, employ a trained child protection officer and for the 10 sub-city level police stations in Addis Ababa, employ Child Protection Units.(34)

Organization/Agency	Role
The Human Trafficking and Narcotics Section	Collaborate with the prosecutor's office to conduct investigations, prosecute offenders, and report and collect trafficking data. Located in the Organized Crime Investigation Unit of the Federal Police.(4, 12, 37)

Law enforcement agencies in Ethiopia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Occupational Safety and Health Case Team (OSHCT) employed 291 labor inspectors. MOLSA reports that the decline in labor inspectors from 380 in 2012 was a result of high turnover and limited financial resources.(4) During the year, 245 labor inspectors from the Addis Ababa, SNNPR, Tigray, and Oromia regions received training on how to conduct child labor inspections.(66) The ILO reports that OSHCT is understaffed and lacks sector-specific occupational safety and health guidelines, which weakens enforcement efforts.(67) OSHCT and Regional Bureaus of Social and Labor Affairs (BOLSAs) both lack equipment, and their inspectors do not have access to suitable transportation, sometimes relying on employers and trade union representatives for rides.(4, 67) The ILO reports that labor inspectors' salaries are not competitive.(63, 67, 68).

Labor inspectors do not have the authority to impose immediate sanctions, and fines can be issued only by a court.(67) Although labor inspectors bring cases to court, they lack training on presenting evidence in court.(63, 69) MOLSA encourages labor inspectors to advise employers on compliance issues rather than punish employers by issuing citations. However, labor inspectors report egregious violations to the police.(4) The labor relations board, an institution that settles labor disputes, can also receive labor complaints and issue decisions on alleged violations.(42) MOLSA does not disaggregate child labor data, and research found no information on the number of labor inspections, child labor law violations found, how many citations were issued, or whether appropriate penalties were applied.(4, 68)

During the reporting period, the Government published a Labor Inspection Operation Manual, which includes child labor issues and aims to standardize the labor inspection process throughout the country.(66) In addition, the Wolayita zone BOLSA committed to monitoring 6,000 child laborers and providing services to 150 victims of child labor in its 2013 budget.(70)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2012, the last date for which information is available, the Ethiopian Federal Police Human Trafficking and Narcotics Section employed 31 investigators. In 2013, the Human Trafficking and Narcotics Section identified 133 cases of human trafficking and prosecuted 158 trafficking offenders.(37) The Federal High Court secured 100 convictions for trafficking in persons and ordered punishments ranging from two to 16 years' imprisonment without parole. There is no information available on whether these cases involved children.(37) During the year, the Wolayita zone police department prevented 424 children from being trafficked.(71) The Federal Police also reported that they routinely intercepted children along the borders during the reporting period.(34) The Gamo Gofa zone High Court also sentenced six people for trafficking children with prison sentences ranging from one to eight years, and the SNNPR Supreme Court found six people guilty of trafficking children from Chenchu.(66) Although the Government attained prosecutions and convictions during the year, there are low prosecution and conviction rates for the internal trafficking of women and children for forced labor and sexual exploitation.(72)

During the year, 77 judges were trained on child labor issues.(4) Police departments and district officials also refer victims of the worst forms of child labor to NGO-run shelters and government orphanages.(36)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Ethiopia

Composed of children, police, health workers, and teachers.(15-17, 75, 76)

The National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons normally meets twice per year, but during the reporting period it met quarterly. The National Human Trafficking Task Force held its annual meeting in June 2013.(4, 66) In addition, MOLSA's child labor desk employed one person during the reporting period.(73)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Ethiopia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2013-15)	Includes guidelines on child labor identification, withdrawal, reintegration, and educational policies. Available in Amharic.(17, 48, 77) In 2013, 77 participants from federal agencies, regional governments, and media groups attended a training on the implementation of the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(66)

National Youth Policy (2005)	Addresses the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and illicit work.(80)
National Employment Policy & Strategy of Ethiopia (2009)	Describes the root causes of child labor in Ethiopia and lists interventions that may be used to combat child labor, including income generating activities and awareness raising.(81)

Policy	Description
National Policy Framework for Early Childhood Care and Education (2010)*	Supports early education programs for children and community-based non-formal school readiness programs.(86, 87)
Growth and Transformation Plan (2010-2015)*	Calls for the expansion of education services and outlines interventions to provide greater opportunities for vulnerable households to engage in decent work.(88)
National Technical Vocational Education and Training Strategy (2008)*	Aims to increase employment opportunities for school dropouts and youth without formal education through technology and skills training.(53, 89)
General Education Quality Assurance Package (2008)*	Seeks to improve the quality of general education through curriculum development, textbook assessment, teacher training, and school construction throughout Ethiopia.(90)

* The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

The National Youth Policy and Decent Work Country Program do not have budgets or detailed action plans related to the worst forms of child labor.(57, 80, 83, 91) In addition, the National Child Policy, Social Protection Policy, and National Action Plan Against Trafficking, which were drafted to protect the rights of children, have not yet been adopted.(73, 92)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Ethiopia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child-Labor-Free Zones	Government program that pilots child-labor-free zones in the cities of Addis Ababa and Adama in collaboration with the Forum on Sustainable Child Empowerment. Child protection officers, labor inspectors, police officers, and other stakeholders support this initiative by reintegrating child laborers.(17) In 2013, the child labor free zones were expanded to three additional urban areas, including Bahir Dar, Dessie, and Dire Dawa. In addition, one district in the city of Adama became child labor free in 2013.(4)
Ethiopians Fighting Against Child Exploitation	$10 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by World Vision, targets 20,000 children engaged in or at risk of entering exploitative child labor, particularly in the traditional weaving industry and in rural areas.(15) Assists 7,000 households of targeted children to promote sustainable livelihoods, and collaborates with MOLSA to coordinate the provision of services and provide occupational safety and health training to labor inspectors. Operates primarily in Addis Ababa and in the Gamo Gofa and Wolayita Zones.(15)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor in Ethiopia.(93)
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)†	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Ethiopia, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(94) Aims to conduct a national child labor survey in Ethiopia.(94)
Child Labor Awareness Raising‡	MOLSA programs that raise awareness on child labor issues, including the quarterly media forum that raises awareness through broadcasts on national television; regional and local level awareness raising to encourage community members to report child labor violations to the authorities; and awareness raising to address the trafficking of humans from rural to urban areas.(4, 34, 66)
Afar Region Emergency Migration Response Center	Ethiopian Federal Police operated center to assist human trafficking victims by providing them with shelter and transportation back to their villages in collaboration with the IOM. In 2013, this center provided assistance to 37 children.(34, 95)
Cash Transfer Program*	3-year Government program, in partnership with UNICEF, provides vulnerable populations, including child laborers, with cash transfer in two districts of the Tigray Region, and the Afar, Oromia, and SNNPR regions.(12, 96-98) Aims to improve school attendance and enrollment and support the health of the children in the targeted districts. Operates through Community Care Coalitions.(98)

Program	Description
Productive Safety Net Program (PSNP) Phase II‡	Government program that operates in 319 food insecure districts and assisted approximately 6.9 million beneficiaries in 2013.(95, 99-103) Considered as Africa's largest social protection program, it includes several components, one of which provides cash and in-kind transfers to OVCs and households without able-bodied adults who can work. This component has been shown to reduce the amount of time children spend doing household work and increase the amount of time children spend in school.(99, 101, 102)
General Education Quality Improvement Project*	$417 million World Bank and other donors funded project aimed to improve the quality of general education across Ethiopia through curriculum development, textbook assessment, teacher training, and school construction. Implemented from 2008-2013.(104)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Ethiopia.

While the Government participates in and implements several programs to combat the worst forms of child labor, its efforts have not sufficiently targeted sectors with a high incidence of the worst forms of child labor, such as agriculture and domestic service. In addition, in rare cases, the promotion of employment through public works component of PSNP Phase II has been shown to increase the amount of time children work, as families substitute adult family members' labor with children's labor to receive benefits under this program.(101)

In 2013, Fiji made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government signed into law a new constitution which prohibits slavery or servitude, forced labor, and human trafficking, and establishes the right to early childhood, primary, and secondary education. The Government also adopted a hazardous list of occupations and workplaces prohibited to children under the age of 18. The Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations and Employment (MLIRE) established a National Child Labor Database to track child labor cases, and for the first time funded two full-time positions in the Child Labor Unit. The Inter-Agency Taskforce on Beggars was established to address issues related to children who beg and other exploited children. However, children in Fiji continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and street work. The Government has yet to finalize the National Action Plan for Child Labor and 5-year Strategic Plan for Combatting Child Labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Fiji are engaged in child labor, primarily in agriculture and street work. (1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Fiji. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		103.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2014.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting sugarcane*† (1, 2, 5-7)
	Planting, picking, spraying pesticides,† and laying fertilizer in tobacco fields*† (1)
	Producing coconuts,* rice,* roots (including dalo and yaqona),* tubers,* and other kinds of vegetables* (1, 8, 9)
	Pig farming and goat and cattle herding* (1)
Services	Fishing* and deep-sea diving† (1)
	Street work, including pushing wheelbarrows for shoppers in markets, street vending, washing cars, repairing and shining shoes, and begging (1, 2, 10-13)
	Selling fruit (1, 14, 15)
	Collecting bottles and scrap metal† (1, 13)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 10, 16-21)
	Forced labor in agriculture,* begging,* and industrial sectors* (18, 22)
	Use in drug trafficking* (1, 16, 23)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The commercial sexual exploitation of children is a problem, particularly in Fiji's urban centers and near ports where fishing and other vessels dock.(1, 10, 16, 17, 19, 24) One source suggests that a large number of children from squatter settlements in Suva and Lami are engaged in child labor working in garages, washing cars, and selling food, including fruits and vegetables. Many of these children miss school in order to work.(13) Parents sometimes send their child to live with families in cities or near schools to facilitate their continuing education and to perform light household work. There are reports that the adopted households sometimes force children into involuntary domestic service or sexual activity in exchange for food, clothing, shelter, or school fees.(10, 18)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Fiji has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

* No conscription or no standing military

In 2013, the President signed into law a new constitution, which prohibits slavery or servitude, forced labor, and human trafficking.(30, 33) The Constitution also establishes the right to early childhood, primary, and secondary education; however, there is no implementing legislation or policy providing for free education. The approved budget released in November 2013 includes tuition-free education but leaves additional school-related expenses up to the household to cover.(30, 34) Evidence suggests that the cost of uniforms and school fees prevents some children from attending school.(10) The Government also adopted a hazardous list of occupations and workplaces prohibited to children under the age of 18.(2, 27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations and Employment (MLIRE)	Enforce labor laws on child labor, including its worst forms. Monitor child employment including compliance with the requirement of the minimum age for employment, and the Employment Relations Promulgation.(2)
The Child Labor Unit (CLU)	Serve as the mechanism within the MLIRE for filing and responding to child labor complaints.(2) Coordinate activities at the national, divisional, and district levels through Interagency Committees on Child Abuse. These committees include the police; Ministries of Social Welfare, Labor, Health, and Education; the Public Prosecutor's Office; the Solicitor General's Office; and NGOs working on child labor issues.(2) Conduct training on child labor within the Ministry of Labor and in communities, schools, and industries where child labor occurs. Refer children to social services when appropriate.(2)
Fiji Police Force	Enforce laws on child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and other illicit activities.(2) Maintain a Human Trafficking Unit (HTU) to investigate allegations of human trafficking and to provide training focused on combating human trafficking to other police units.(24) The HTU works closely with the Department of Immigration and the Police Transnational Crime Unit.(35)
The Department of Immigration	Coordinate with the Fiji Police Force to investigate cases involving underage victims of commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking, which are then tried in the criminal court system.(22, 36)
The Department of Social Welfare, and the Director of Public Prosecutions	Enforce laws on child trafficking.(2)

Law enforcement agencies in Fiji took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the MLIRE established a National Child Labor Database to track child labor cases. Labor inspectors and officers were trained to use the database and it is currently operational in the following Districts: Suva, Sigatoka, Nadi, Lautoka, Ba, Labasa, and Savusavu.(37) In addition, the MLIRE funded two permanent positions in the CLU which were previously funded through the Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE) project.(2)

During the reporting period, the Government employed 45 labor inspectors whose portfolios include child labor.(2, 22) In addition, the MLIRE employed 30 Occupational Health and Safety inspectors. Some of these inspectors have received training on child labor issues and help labor inspectors enforce child labor laws.(2) All of these inspectors are stationed in larger, more populated areas and sometimes find it a challenge to access smaller, rural communities and outer islands.(2) The CLU conducted several trainings with a focus on the sugar industry and relevant stakeholders. Furthermore, the training material was customized to address the sectors in which children are known to work in in a particular area.(34) For example, in Sigatoka the focus was on vegetable farms, in Lautoka child begging was addressed, and in Taveuni, the Taveuni Child Labor Interagency Committee conducted training to combat child labor in dalo and yaqona (piper methysticum) farms.(34, 37) Since the hazardous list of occupations prohibited to children came into effect, 100 sugar industry stakeholders, including farmers, Fiji Sugar Corporation field staff, and Cane Producing Associations, received training on the hazardous list. In addition, the CLU developed a reporting system for the withdrawal of children from the production of sugar, tobacco, and other agricultural work, as well as one for children working in markets during school hours.(37) The reporting system includes forms to be completed by Labor Inspectors or Fiji Sugar Corporation Field Officers.(34, 37) Information was unavailable on the amount of funding designated to inspections or the number of inspections conducted in 2013.(2)

The Government funded anti-human trafficking training for police personnel through the Fiji Police Human Trafficking Unit's workshops, which focus on ensuring that every police station has a police officer trained in trafficking-related issues. The Police also trained labor inspectors on how to identify potential trafficking victims during a routine labor inspection.(35) In addition, the Human Trafficking Unit carried out an anti-trafficking campaign that included distribution of government-funded anti-trafficking posters.(22, 35) The Trafficking Task Force did not meet in 2013, but the Director for Immigration reported that the Task Force will resume activities in 2014 to carry out the National Action Plan on Trafficking.(22)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Labor cases are tried in the Employment Relations Tribunal and the Employment Relations Division of the High Court.(38, 39) According to the Government, the CLU registered three criminal cases at the Employment Relations Tribunal. Of these cases, one case was completed, one was partially heard, and the third was set for final mention in 2014 with a hearing date to be scheduled for 2014.(22, 37) The Solicitor General's office approved two additional cases of child labor to be registered in the Tribunal in 2014.(37)

During the reporting period a case of child trafficking was investigated, but charges had not yet been filed at the end of the reporting period.(2, 22) The Fijian Courts may grant custody over child victims to the Department of Social Welfare, which operates four shelters throughout Fiji.(22, 39) Research did not uncover the total number of trafficking investigations conducted or the number of victims assisted during the reporting period.(22)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The Interagency Committee on Child Labor	Focus on child labor issues at the district and provincial level. Monitor and report on cases of noncompliance, and conduct awareness-raising activities.(37) Operational in nine towns in Fiji: Suva, Sigatoka, Nadi, Ba, Lautoka, Tavua, Rakiraki, Labasa, and Taveuni.(2, 34) Comprised of NGOs and key government offices involved in the field, including the police force, and the Ministries of Labor, Social Welfare, and Health.(2)
The Inter-Agency Taskforce on Beggars	Address issues related to children who beg and other exploited children. Includes the Fiji Police Force, the Ministry of Local Government, the Suva City Council, the Fiji National Council for Disabled Persons, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of iTaukei Affairs, and local NGOs.(2)
The Trafficking Task Force	Government-wide task force to address human trafficking. Led by the Department of Immigration.(2, 35)

In 2013, the Ministry of Social Welfare established a taskforce to address children who beg and other exploited children. In January 2014, the taskforce declared a zero-tolerance policy on child begging.(2)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Fiji has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
School bus fare scheme*	Supports a school bus fare scheme that aims to offset transportation costs.(2)
National Plan of Action to Eradicate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking	National action plan to address human trafficking.(35)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

Through the MLIRE, the Fijian Government is developing a National Action Plan for Child Labor and 5-year strategic plan for combatting child labor, including the worst forms.(40) To inform the plan, the MLIRE, along with the Ministry of Education, conducted a national survey on child labor in Fiji to determine the number of children from selected schools who were working in child labor, including the worst forms. The Government anticipated the plan would be implemented by September 2013 and operational through 2018; however, at the close of the reporting period the plan was still under consultation.(2, 40)

The Government has not provided updates on the comprehensive implementation of the National Plan of Action to Eradicate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking.(24)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Fiji participated in and funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE) project	Jointly launched by the European Commission and the ILO to combat child labor through education in 12 African and Caribbean countries and the Pacific group of states (ACP).(41) Aims to support government efforts to remove children from commercial sexual exploitation and work in the sugarcane fields, and to increase capacity to address child labor and poverty in squatter settlements, which include a large number of vulnerable children.(42-45) Established the CLU, completed a draft national action plan to eliminate child labor, trained government officials on the worst forms of child labor, and supported legislative reviews on labor and education in Fiji.(43, 45) ILO funding for the project will continue into 2014 and the Government has pledged to continue the work.(2)
Safety Net Project‡	Government program that aims to combat human trafficking at the community level, largely through rehabilitation services targeting female victims of commercial sexual exploitation under the age of 18. Receives referrals from various places including the Fiji Police.(46)
Food voucher assistance*‡	Government program that provides a food voucher for children attending remote schools.(37)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Fiji.

With funding from the Ministry of Education, the MLIRE conducted four radio talk back shows on child labor and the legal rights of children.(22, 37) It is unclear whether the TACKLE project provides adequate assistance to children working in the agricultural and informal sectors, including street vending.(2)

It appears there were no government-run facilities in operation to specifically address the particular needs of child trafficking victims.(24) The Fiji Police's Sexual Offenses Unit has identified the lack of support services for child victims, including counseling and victim-friendly court procedures, as some of their greatest challenges in effectively addressing the needs of child trafficking victims.(34)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Gabon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Gabon made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Criminal Court convicted nine people of child trafficking and sentenced each to 14 years in prison. The labor inspectorate withdrew 50 children from child labor situations, and the Government continued to operate a shelter for children in need. However, children in Gabon continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service, as a result of human trafficking. The Government continues to delay the development of a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children under age 18 and has yet to conduct a proposed study on children trafficked into domestic service. Furthermore, it imposed no penalties for violations of child labor provisions of the Labor Code during the reporting period.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Gabon are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service; some reports suggest that they are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation, although the magnitude of the problem appears to be small.(1-8) According to a government survey, there are approximately 1,000 street children in Gabon. Street children and orphans affected by HIV/AIDS in Gabon are particularly vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.(8) Data on key indicators on children’s work and education in Gabon are not available from the sources used in this report.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (3, 5, 7, 16)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182

Evidence suggests that the children involved in street vending in Gabon are required to carry heavy loads.(1, 15) Boys in Gabon are trafficked to work in handicrafts workshops and as mechanics; girls are trafficked to work in restaurants and commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 7, 16) These children are often from other countries in Central and West Africa.(1, 7, 19) There is some evidence children are trafficked within Gabon as well.(6, 20)

The Government made plans in 2011 to undertake a survey on trafficking victims in 2012, but has not yet done so.(5, 21, 22) The survey was intended to include children trafficked into domestic service.(23) It is unclear whether this survey will be carried out.

The country suffers from a shortage of schools and teachers. While UNICEF reports generally high primary-school attendance rates, a 2010 UNICEF report indicates that dropout and repetition are problems at the secondary level.(12, 16) Reports also suggest that some children, especially girls, are pressured by teachers to have sex in exchange for good grades.(24) The lack of sufficient educational opportunities might increase the likelihood that children will enter into the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Gabon has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Ministry of Education may make exemptions from the minimum employment age of 16; exemptions may be for light work, or for vocational training or apprenticeships for children between 14 and 16. However, the Government decree for exemptions for light work does not set a minimum age for which such light work may be permissible and does not include a list specifying the kinds of light work allowed under this exemption; moreover, the ILO Committee of Experts has expressed concern over this gap in the law.(25, 26, 30)

The Labor Code sets the minimum age for hazardous work at 18 and enables labor inspectors to require medical exams for anyone under the age of 21 who may be asked to perform work that is considered “high risk.”(25, 26) The Labor

Gabon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Code proscribes broad categories of hazardous work, but does not lay out a list of the specific hazardous occupations prohibited for children under age 18.(26) According to the 2010 amendment to the Labor Code, the Ministry of Economy, Employment and Sustainable Development (formerly the Ministry of Labor, Employment and Social Security); the Ministry of Health; and the Ministry of Family and Social Affairs are responsible for formulating such a list and issuing a decree to enact it into law. However, these agencies have not yet begun this task, though UNICEF has offered recommendations on such a law to these agencies.(21, 26, 30, 31) Information was not available on whether laws exist to protect children from engaging in illicit activities such as drug trafficking.

The Constitution calls for the provision of free education; however, in practice, families must pay for supplies, including school uniforms.(16, 28)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Economy, Employment, and Sustainable Development (MOEESD)	Receive, investigate, and address child labor complaints through its inspectors.(3, 11, 32)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce child labor laws.(11, 32)
Local Vigilance Committees	Monitor potential cases of child exploitation and trafficking at the local level.(20, 21, 32)

Law enforcement agencies in Gabon took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Government coordinated with UNICEF to train 10 labor inspectors on child labor.(3) Ministry of Economy, Employment, and Sustainable Development (MOEESD) carries out inspections in cities but not in rural areas; the country's heavily forested terrain contributes to the lack of access to such areas.(3, 11, 33) The Government does not make public any data on the number of child labor inspections, but it acknowledges that while inspections are carried out in sectors where children work, more inspections are needed.(3, 30) Violations of child labor laws were found in at least 16 cases, and approximately 50 children were removed from exploitative labor during the reporting period.(3) However, Gabon has imposed no penalties for violations of child labor provisions of the Labor Code during the reporting period.(30)

Labor inspectors can question any child suspected of being involved in the worst forms of child labor, including in the informal sector. However, the law also gives the police the right to arrest children involved in such work, thereby punishing them for their involvement in exploitative labor.(12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, Department of Justice officials attended a UNICEF workshop on strengthening the rule of law when prosecuting violations of children's rights. Approaches included educating judges and other officials involved in criminal law enforcement on international standards.(34, 35) Nine people were convicted of child trafficking and sentenced to 14 years of prison each.(3) The Government reactivated a dormant Vigilance Committee in Woleu Ntem province because of a reported increase of trafficking of indigenous children in the previous year.(20)

UNICEF has reported that weak enforcement and coordination pose challenges to combating trafficking in Gabon. Although the situation is improving as a result of public awareness campaigns and trainings for law enforcement, the UN has noted that due to a lack of knowledge of the law, officials continue to occasionally try minors as adults or treat child trafficking victims as undocumented immigrants.(12, 36)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking	Coordinate efforts against child trafficking and all worst forms of child labor by facilitating communication and coordinating enforcement actions among ministries. Led by the MOEESD and includes the Ministry of the Interior, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Family and Social Affairs (MFSA), and the head of the police unit for minors. Refer children found during inspections to social services, including shelters run by or in coordination with the MFSA.(3, 11, 23, 37)

In 2013, the Interministerial Committee met regularly, facilitated the repatriation of victims of child trafficking, organized training for labor inspectors and law enforcement officials, and conducted an observation mission in the province of Ogooué Lolo.(3) The Interministerial Committee receives a budget to fund investigations and coordinate actions against child exploitation. The Committee acknowledges that it has a limited budget for fighting child exploitation.(3, 11)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Gabon has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
2013 Plan of Action on the Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Aims to address the worst forms of child labor, including by identifying and prosecuting those who use child labor, building capacity to enforce laws against trafficking, and encouraging civil society to participate in the Vigilance Committees that have been established in rural areas. Vests executive role for the plan in the Interministerial Committee, in cooperation with Economic Community of Central African States, ECOWAS, and other regional partners.(3, 4, 13, 21)
Education Policy (2010-2020)*	Includes goals of making pre-primary education widely available, improving the quality of primary education throughout the country, and improving the quality and increasing the availability of different types of secondary education that would prepare students for the workforce.(29, 38)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Plan on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to develop, validate, adopt, and implement a National Action Plan on the elimination of child labor in Gabon.(39) In 2013, the Government adopted a Plan of Action on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(3, 13, 21)
Gabon Emergent Plan*‡	Government program that outlines President Ali Bongo Ondimba's vision for the country's development, which includes a component on improving work conditions and eliminating child labor; under the Plan, the Government conducted an awareness-raising campaign with the assistance of UNICEF.(11, 31, 40)
Shelters for Children in Need*‡	Vigilance Committees-operated shelters that provide victims of child labor and trafficking and orphans with health, education, financial, and reintegration services.(11, 40)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Gabon.

Although a formal agreement does not exist, standard operating procedures are in place with the Government of Benin to facilitate repatriation of trafficking victims from that country.(20) Gabon also has informal agreements to cover the costs of repatriating trafficking victims with Mali, Nigeria, and Togo.(5, 7, 13, 38)

Gabon

Existing government services offered to victims of child trafficking have been focused on children in street work, to the exclusion of children in other forms of child labor. The Government also lacks programs targeting children in other worst forms of child labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Gambia, The

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, The Gambia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Several law enforcement agencies were trained on a range of issues related to the worst forms of child labor, and officials identified and provided services to 63 children allegedly being used to work as housemaids and street vendors. The Government signed a Memorandum of Understanding on trafficking in persons with the Government of Senegal during the year. In addition, the Government increased funding for a drop-in center that provides medical care, food, and counseling to street children and continued to operate a conditional cash transfer program that provides services to more than 1,000 children rescued from forced begging. However, children in The Gambia continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation. Gaps in the legal framework persist, such as between compulsory education and minimum working ages. In addition, child labor laws are not effectively enforced, and existing social programs are not sufficient to meet the need.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in The Gambia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in The Gambia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	36.4 (180,954)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	65.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	29.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		70.3

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS3 Survey, 2005-2006.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Activities unknown (1)
Industry	Working in carpentry, masonry, plumbing, and in metal welding workshops (1)

	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 7)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers (6, 8-10)
	Domestic service and street vending as a result of human trafficking (1, 7, 9)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The commercial sexual exploitation of children is a serious problem in The Gambia.(1, 2) Children are exploited in brothels and motels in tourist areas.(1, 11, 12)

In The Gambia, it is a common practice to send boys to receive education from Koranic teachers called marabouts. Some Koranic students, or almudus, are forced by their teachers to beg in the streets for money and food.(1, 6, 8, 13) Some reports indicate that cases of begging forced on almudus by marabouts have decreased as a result of increased enforcement and a government cash transfer program.(1, 2, 7) However, evidence suggests that instead of requiring almudus to beg, many marabouts now force students to sell items on the street. Almudus in rural areas also engage in long hours of farm work.(1)

Children, mostly girls, are trafficked within The Gambia for domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation, including in the tourism industry. Children of both sexes are taken to and from neighboring countries where they are exploited in the commercial sexual exploitation, domestic service, and forced street vending.(1, 7) Children are trafficked from other West African nations to The Gambia for commercial sexual exploitation.(7)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 59 of the Children's Act (2005) (1, 15)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12	Constitution (1997) (16, 19)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 30 of the Constitution (1997); Article 18 of the Children's Act (2005) (15, 16)

* No conscription or standing military.

Gambian law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. The Government lacks protections for children working without a formal employer-employee relationship, such as children in domestic work.(20) Children are also required to attend school only until the age of 12. This standard makes children ages 12 to

Gambia, The

15 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.(2, 16, 20)

Article 30 of the Constitution mandates free compulsory education; however, families are often required to buy books and uniforms for their children as well as contribute to the school fund, which is used to fund certain activities in the school.(2, 21) The Government consistently waived school fees for girls in order to increase their enrollment.(2, 8)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Trade, Regional Integration, and Employment (MOTRIE)	Investigate tips and allegations of possible child labor violations.(8) Maintain an electronic database that contains information on cases related to child protection, including those involving labor and trafficking violations.(1, 11)
Department of Social Welfare (DSW)	Combat forced child labor and coordinate the handling of trafficking victims, working closely with social welfare officers in police units.(1, 7) Operate a 24-hour hotline to address human trafficking and maintain a database of persons suspected of pedophilia or child trafficking in collaboration with the GTB.(9, 11, 22)
Child Protection Alliance (CPA)	Promote child rights and child protection.(23-25) Raise awareness about child exploitation and build capacity for prevention and protection. Includes government departments, civil society organizations, UN agencies, NGOs, child and youth organizations and bilateral institutions.(24)
Gambia Tourism Board (GTB)	Combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in tourist areas.(1) Maintain a database of persons suspected of pedophilia or child trafficking in collaboration with the DSW.(11, 22)
Tourism Security Unit (TSU)	Prevent unaccompanied children from entering tourist areas and patrol tourist areas for child labor violations and criminal violations such as commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking. Has a dedicated child protection division.(1, 7, 22)
Gambia Police Force's Child Welfare Unit	Handle all child related matters.(25) Work with the DSW, the CPA, and other agencies and NGOs to assess and identify children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(3)
Community Child Protection Committees (CCPCs)	Raise awareness and report cases of child, including child labor, to the authorities. Currently 55 CCPCs operating in the country.(3, 7, 26)
Neighborhood Watch Groups	Be on the alert for cases of child exploitation. Five existing groups established by DSW in urban areas near tourist resorts.(7) DSW provides members with allowances and cell phone credit.(7)

Law enforcement agencies in The Gambia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Department of Labor, under the Ministry of Trade, Industry, Regional Integration and Employment (MOTRIE) had five labor inspectors to enforce all labor laws, including those related to child labor; this number appears to be insufficient for the size of the population. Adequate transportation and fuel posed a challenge for inspectors.(1) Children found during labor inspections are referred to the Department of Social Welfare (DSW). The Department of Labor did not receive any child labor complaints during the year.(1) A source indicates that inspectors received training on child labor issues in 2013.(1) Early in 2014, the Government of The Gambia tripled the budget for the DSW's child protection efforts.(7)

The Government did not make labor inspection data accessible to the public, including the number of inspections performed, violations found, citations issued, and the severity of penalties applied.(1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Gambia Tourism Board (GTB) trained 50 members of the Tourism Security Unit (TSU) on human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(9) The Child Protection Alliance (CPA) also trained 25 senior police officers on child rights and child protection.(27) Members of the Gambia Armed Forces, TSU, and the Gambia Police Force were also trained to identify child exploitation and learned new methods to combat crimes against vulnerable children.(28) In addition, the CPA, in collaboration with the GTB, trained 30 official tour guides and members of the TSU on the Tourism Offences Act as part of efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children within the tourism industry.(29, 30) The DSW and the Gambia Police Force sensitized over 1,000 police and immigration officers and social workers through trafficking and child protection seminars.(7) The GTB and CPA jointly funded a billboard at Banjul International Airport warning against child sex tourism and its penalties.(7) The Community Child Protection Committee (CCPC) of Sanyang also trained police, immigration, health workers, teachers, and community members on child labor, child trafficking, and child abuse.(31)

The Gambia Police Force and DSW launched a police training manual which includes child protection and child justice issues. The manual is to be integrated into the police-training curriculum as an introduction to child protection and child justice.(32) During the year, police and immigration officers raided unfinished buildings in the capital area and found about 60 Senegalese children living in unsanitary conditions. The group reported to be working as housemaids and street vendors on behalf of employers.(7) Authorities arrested 18 individuals who were released on bail during the investigation. The children stayed at a DSW shelter for prior to their repatriation to Senegal.(7)

Research did not uncover information about the number of investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. There were no trafficking prosecutions or convictions during the year.(7)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department of Social Welfare (DSW)	Coordinate government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Headed by a Director and assisted by social welfare officers.(1)
National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons (NAATIP)	Coordinate, administer, and monitor the implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Act and sharing information among law enforcement agencies. Convene monthly meetings of the National TIP Taskforce.(1, 7, 22, 33)

The National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons' (NAATIP) budget for the year was $33,000.(1) This amount was sufficient to cover salaries and administrative costs, but not enough to cover the costs of training NAATIP and law enforcement officials.(1, 7) In addition, the Agency does not have its own vehicles and must rely on the Ministry of Justice.(1, 25) The Agency is developing a trafficking database and hired a data officer to gather and compile information from all organizations involved in anti-trafficking efforts; however, data was not available during the reporting period. NAATIP officials visited several border posts and trained police, immigration, and customs officials and community leaders on trafficking issues.(7)

NAATIP investigators lack specialized training in the worst forms of child labor.(1)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of The Gambia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Employment Strategy (2010–2014)	Aims to eliminate child labor through awareness raising, promotion of primary education, implementation of ILO Convention 182, and collection and analysis of child labor data.(34)
Code of Conduct of the Gambia Tourism Authority for the Protection of Children (2004)	Seeks to raise awareness within tourism industry and among tourists of commercial sexual exploitation of children.(1, 35) At the beginning of the peak tourism season, new hotel staff were trained on the Code.(1)
National TIP Action Plan (2012–2016)	Aims to combat trafficking. Initially drafted by the Ministry of Justice and recently updated by NAATIP.(7) NAATIP is responsible for implementation.(7)

Policy	Description
Program for Accelerated Growth and Employment (PAGE) (2012–2015)	Calls for improved social protection for children and access to education, as well as to prevent child exploitation including child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and trafficking.(3, 36)
UN Development Assistance Framework (2012–2016)	Promotes improved access to education and develop child labor policies.(37)
Education Policy (2004–2015)	Has goals to expand school infrastructure, increase school enrollment, and improve the quality of education.(38, 39) Some research has indicated that average number of hours worked per child has decreased since implementation of the policy.(40)
The Gambia and Senegal Trafficking MOU†	Coordinates the two countries' counter trafficking efforts through meetings, information sharing, improved laws, and prevention, protection, and assistance activities. Signed in December 2013.(7, 41)

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

In 2013, the Government signed an MOU to establish a partnership on social protection, which includes three government ministries and six UN agencies. This partnership will focus on integrating existing social protection mechanisms in the country that target vulnerable groups, such as child laborers.(42) This partnership also aims to develop a National Social Protection Policy and Operational Plan in 2014.(42)

During the year, the Government was in the process of developing a National Children's Policy and a National Plan of Action to Combat Sexual Exploitation of Children to follow the 2004 Plan. However, neither plan has been approved.(3)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of The Gambia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Combating Child Sex Tourism Project	CPA project, supported by ECPAT Netherlands, to raise awareness about child sex tourism and Tourism Offences Act among TSU, hoteliers, travel agencies, and other tourism stakeholders and provide them with Code of Conduct of the Gambia Tourism Authority for the Protection of Children.(30)
Street Children Center	DSW (with support from international organizations, foreign NGOs, and local businesses), drop-in center in Talinding Kunjang that provides medical care, food, and counseling to street children, including trafficking victims and almudus .(1, 7, 22, 26) Center tries to prevent the children from returning to begging.(8, 43) Government allocated $11,500 for the functioning of the center and another $6,666 for its renovation during the reporting period.(7, 9)
Conditional Cash Transfers to the Majaalis ‡	Ministry of Education (with support from NGOs) conditional cash transfer program that gives marabouts $2.56 per month and food rations for each student on condition that they not force students to beg.(7) Ministry of Education provides teachers for English, mathematics, and science. Government reports that more than a thousand children are benefiting from program and plans to expand into more rural areas.(1, 9, 44)
Shelter for Trafficking Victims	DSW (with support from international organizations, foreign NGOs, and local businesses) 24-hour shelter in Bakoteh for victims of trafficking, including children. Accommodates 48 people and provides guests with food, medical care, and counseling.(7) Over 1,000 children have received services since it opened in 2006.(7)
One-Stop Centert	DSW (with the support of NGO partners) center, opened in 2013, that provides medical care, counseling, and legal services to trafficking victims and victims of gender-based violence.(7)
Family Assistance Hotline‡	DSW 24-hour hotline through which trafficking victims may reach social welfare officers.(7)
Protect Project	USDOS-funded, ChildFund project to develop national child protection system for prevention of and response to child trafficking in The Gambia. Program has trained 120 government officials on child trafficking since its inception.(45)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa and Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS I & II	USDOL-funded regional projects to assist ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub-region.(46, 47)

Program	Description
Children on the Move	DSW participates in 3-year, 12-country regional project, funded by a Swiss NGO, which provides services to child trafficking victims, including repatriation.(1, 7)

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of The Gambia.

Although The Gambia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem and reach all children vulnerable to trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and work on the street. Furthermore, existing programs do not target children working in agriculture and domestic service.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, Georgia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government participated in two projects to address child labor; the first includes original data collection and analysis on child labor, and the second focuses on improving the Government's ability to enforce labor laws and adhere to international labor standards, including those related to child labor. The Government also formed the Inter-Ministerial Coordination Council on Childcare to oversee the implementation of the 2012–2015 Child Action Plan, which aims to serve vulnerable children, including those living and working on the street. It continued to work with international organizations on a program to identify children living and working on the streets. It also continued a reform of its system of orphanages and similar institutions to provide better care to vulnerable children, including street children. However, children in Georgia continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in forced begging. Gaps remain in enforcement and in the collection and dissemination of data, which hinders effective targeting of the policies and programs to address the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Limited evidence suggests that children in Georgia are engaged in child labor in agricultural work, particularly on farms, and in the worst forms of child labor in forced begging.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Georgia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	29.1 (172,378)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	31.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		108.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3 Survey, 2005.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Activities unknown* (1, 2)
Services	Street work including begging, washing cars,* and collecting glass and scrap metal* (2, 6, 7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking* (8) Forced begging* (3)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Many children engaged in agricultural activities work on farms.(1, 2) Limited evidence suggests that agricultural work disrupts school participation among some ethnic minority children.(7)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Georgia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	The Law on General Education (11, 18)
Free Public Education	Yes		Legislation title unknown (2)

Information was unavailable regarding the specific activities on the list of Heavy, Harmful and Hazardous Work.(19) There does not appear to be protection in the law for children engaged in dangerous activities in streets.(2) In addition, the Government does not consider children's work in the agriculture sector to be hired work. This leaves children working in the agricultural sector without the same legal protections afforded to hired laborers as outlined in the Labor Code.(9, 20)

The Law on General Education makes education compulsory for nine years and does not specify a start or end age.(11, 18) Most children begin school at age 6. Education is free through high school.(2) The compulsory education age leaves children ages 15 to 16 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Health and Social Affairs (MoLHSA)	Oversee child welfare issues and address labor matters.(2) Through the Child Protection and Social Programs sub-department, receive and forward complaints of child labor violations to law enforcement agencies for investigation and prosecution.(21)
The Department of Labor and Employment within MoLHSA	Address labor and employment issues, and revise existing laws and policies to be in accordance with international standards.(11)
Social Service Agency (SSA) within MoLHSA	Administer social benefits such as targeted social assistance, health care, and vouchers for day care. Employ social service agents who identify qualifying families for services and social workers who oversee child protection and family welfare cases.(6)
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MoIA)	Investigate child labor cases, including NGO and civilian reports of potential child labor violations.(2, 6) Enforce criminal laws related to child labor and child trafficking.(6)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor and child trafficking.(6)
MoIA's Special Operations Department	Lead criminal investigations of trafficking in persons, including the trafficking of children, and turn actionable cases over to MOJ for prosecution.(22, 23)
The Prosecutor's Office	Investigate large-scale cases of child trafficking.(2)
Police and district inspectors	Maintain contact with district inhabitants to obtain information on the children vulnerable to crime and abuse and to take protective measures.(24)
The Technical Oversight Inspection Agency	Conduct labor inspections in occupations classified as hazardous. These inspections only target violations of child labor laws and hazardous work conditions.(2) Report to the Ministry of Economic Development.(2)
Joint Child Referral Mechanism	Ensure interagency coordination of the enforcement of child labor laws and enumerate the procedures for referring children subject to any form of violence—including labor exploitation—to child protective services.(6) Comprised of the Minister of Labor, Health, and Social Affairs; the Minister of Internal Affairs; and the Minister of Education and Science.(25)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in Georgia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies took such action.

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not uncover the number of inspectors or inspections conducted during the reporting period. Despite being responsible for labor law enforcement, research found the Ministry of Labor, Health and Social Affairs (MoLHSA) to be a policymaking and implementing body without inspectors or other means to enforce labor law. The Labor Inspectorate, within the former Ministry of Labor, Health and Social Security, was abolished under the 2006 Labor Code, leaving Georgia without any means to actively monitor workplaces for violations of child labor laws.(20, 21)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, five cases were investigated under Article 255 of the Criminal Code, which relates to the production and sale of pornography. According to the Interagency Anti-Trafficking Coordination Council for the Implementation of Measures against Human Trafficking, MoIA initiated three investigations on minors subjected to trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation.(6, 26) The MoIA also investigated six allegations of minors involved in “anti-social activities,” which included begging and commercial sexual exploitation. As a result of investigations, one child victim was placed in a shelter.(6, 26) In 2013, there were no cited violations of child labor law.

Law enforcement training includes modules on trafficking of minors. Trafficking in persons trainings were held throughout the year, including a training on victim identification and effective investigation attended by five prosecutors and 19 police investigators.(6, 8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including some of its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Coordination Council on Childcare	Implement the 2012–2015 Child Action Plan, which aims to serve vulnerable children, including those living and working on the street. Comprised of representatives of the MoLHSA, Ministry of Education, Ministry of Finance, MoIA, MOJ, the Public Defender’s Office, and UNICEF.(6)
The Interagency Anti-Trafficking Coordination Council for the Implementation of Measures against Human Trafficking (ICC)	Coordinate government efforts against trafficking in persons and children, including those to protect and rehabilitate victims. Chaired by the Minister of Justice and comprised of representatives from state agencies and non-state entities.(14, 23) Refer child victims to shelters to receive social services.(6)

In 2013, the Government formed the Inter-Ministerial Coordination Council on Childcare to oversee the implementation of the 2012–2015 Child Action Plan, which aims to serve vulnerable children, including those living and working on the street. The Council convened for the first time in October.(6) Various governmental bodies in Georgia are involved in child protection. While the Government of Georgia has established the Inter-Ministerial Coordination Council on Childcare and the Interagency Anti-Trafficking Coordination Council (ICC), research found no evidence of coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Georgia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
The 2012–2015 Action Plan for Child Welfare and Protection	Establishes an overarching framework to improve the welfare of children, including highly vulnerable groups like street children. Identifies the institutions responsible for carrying out activities, funding sources, and expected outcomes in a broad range of areas such as education, health, childcare, public awareness campaigns, and rehabilitation programs.(6, 11, 27) In 2013, the Government closed all of its large, state-run childcare institutions for children without disabilities. Children previously receiving care from these institutions were either reintegrated with their biological families, or placed in foster care or in small group homes.(6)
Education Strategy for 2010–2015*	Research did not uncover information about this strategy.
Anti-trafficking Action Plan for 2013–2014†	Supports implementation activities to address human trafficking, including the exploitation of children.(3) Approved in 2013 by the President and fully implemented during the year.(8)

* The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Georgia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)†	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Georgia, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(28)
Improved Compliance with Labor Laws in the Democratic Republic of Georgia†	$2 million USDOL-funded grant implemented by the ILO to work with the Government to improve their ability to enforce labor laws and adhere to international labor standards.(29)
Strengthening Childcare Services and Systems Project (2010–2013)*	$5.4 million USAID-funded project to assist Georgia’s children by improving access to social benefits for vulnerable groups, providing alternative care and expanding family support services, and strengthening policy, oversight, and accountability in the childcare system.(30, 31)

Program	Description
Child Care Reform*	MoLHSA and SSA program to reform child care efforts. Supported by UNICEF.(25)
Reaching Highly Vulnerable Children in Georgia with a Focus on Children Living or Working on the Streets‡	MoHLSA program to assist children and youth living or working on the streets. Supported by UNICEF and implemented by World Vision, Caritas, and Child and Environment; EU, UNICEF, and World Vision funding a pilot program.(2, 25, 32) Aims to reach more than 500 children and includes the development of a database to house data on children working or living in the streets.(11, 25) Aims to create sustainable, state-financed, community-based mechanisms for the development and social integration of vulnerable children.(6) In 2013, the program was operational and met its goal of operating day care centers and 24-hour crisis centers. Received some government funding.(6)
The State Fund for Protection and Assistance of (Statutory) Victims of Human Trafficking (SFVPA)‡	MoHLSA program to protect, assist, and rehabilitate trafficking victims, including minors.(8) Implements the Government's Rehabilitation and Reintegration Strategy, which includes operating two trafficking shelters in Batumi and Tbilisi, each staffed with a social worker to further assist victims. Funds the Assistance to Victims of Trafficking in Persons Hotline and a related Web site.(6, 23, 25) In 2013, 620 people were employed under the State Fund, 30 of whom focused on trafficking in persons.(6)
Free text book program‡*	Government program that distributes free textbooks to extremely vulnerable children.(25) In 2013, $21 million was allocated for free textbooks for all secondary school children.(6)
The Georgian Language for Future Success Program*	Government program that commissions teachers who are native speakers of Georgian to teach subjects in the Georgian language in ethnic minority classes. These teachers also assist local teachers in improving their abilities in the Georgian language.(19)
Pension program and Targeted Social Assistance (TSA)*	SSA administered program that provides financial assistance to the poorest 10 percent of the population.(33)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Georgia.

The Government has worked largely in cooperation with international organizations, NGOs, and foreign aid agencies to improve the welfare of children and address the plight of street children. Research found no evidence of any programs to assist children engaged in agriculture.

In 2013, the Government introduced universal healthcare and funded the “Mother and Child Healthcare” program, which may impact the overall wellbeing of the children served, including those in child labor.(6) The Government also conducted anti-trafficking training and awareness raising campaigns, including for school-aged children.(8)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Georgia (Table 9).

In 2013, Ghana made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa (NPECLC) released the results and analysis of the pilot of the Ghana Child Labor Monitoring System (GCLMS). The Ghana Police Service's Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) increased the number of investigators it employs and opened its tenth regional office. Ghana became the first country to have its efforts against the worst forms of child labor peer reviewed by ECOWAS. However, children in Ghana continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, including in cocoa, and in fishing. Enforcement of legal protections against the worst forms of child labor is severely limited due to resource constraints, and social programs do not cover all of the sectors in which children work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ghana are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, including in cocoa, and in fishing.(1-3) In the cocoa sector alone, according to a report by Tulane University that assessed data collected during the 2008-2009 harvest season, 997,357 children ages 5 to 17 were estimated to be working, and 54 percent, or 538,297 of these children, were estimated to be reporting injuries from dangerous activities.(3, 4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ghana.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	43.5 (2,731,596)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	83.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	39.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS3 Survey, 2006.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Land clearing,† using machetes† and harvesting hooks,† working in the vicinity of pesticide spraying,† and carrying heavy loads† in the production of cocoa (3, 4, 7)
	Herding livestock* (8, 9)
	Fishing for tilapia, and to a lesser extent for mudfish,* silverfish,* catfish,* and electric fish,* including producing bait, nets, and fishing gear; launching,† paddling,† and draining canoes;† casting† and pulling† fishing nets and untangling† them underwater; sorting, picking, cleaning, and smoking† fish; and cleaning and repairing nets and boats (1, 2, 9, 10)
Industry	Quarrying and small-scale mining, sometimes for gold, including using mercury*† digging,† excavating,† and working in pits† (1, 9, 11, 12)
	Domestic service (1, 9, 13, 14)
Services	Transporting heavy loads as porters or kayayes (mainly girls who perform head portage) (1, 9, 15-17)
	Running errands and cooking for fishermen and transporting and selling fish (2, 9)
	Street hawking (1, 9)
	Street begging† (1, 9)

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 12)
	Forced begging and forced work in agriculture, artisanal gold mining,* domestic service, portering, and street vending (12)
	Fishing, including fishing for tilapia, as a result of human trafficking (2, 18-20)
	Trokosi , a form of forced ritual service for girls (1, 15, 21)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Some girls in the Greater Accra and Volta regions are involved in trokosi, a form of ritual servitude that can last from a few months to several years.(15, 21) Girls are sent by their families to local shrines to atone for their family members’ sins.(1, 15, 21) They perform tasks such as fetching water, maintaining the shrines, and working on the priest’s land. Their basic needs often go unmet, and they frequently suffer sexual and physical abuse.(21)

Ghana is a source, transit, and destination country for the trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, including in the fishing sector.(22) Girls, and to a lesser extent boys, are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in the Volta region and oil-rich Western regions.(12) Ghanaian children are trafficked to neighboring countries in West Africa for labor exploitation.(22, 23)

Despite the requirement for free education in Ghana, families are often required to purchase uniforms and school materials. Children without uniforms may be turned away from school.(8, 24) Access to education is also hindered by a shortage of classrooms and by schools without sufficient teachers or materials. For some children, attending school is practically impossible, as their villages are located many miles away from the nearest school and there is no form of public transportation.(25-28) Although a birth certificate is not a legal requirement to enter school, it is reported that some children who do not have them are denied access to school; births in Ghana are not always registered with the government.(8) Some children, especially girls, are reported to be sexually assaulted and harassed by teachers.(8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ghana has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 2(2) of the Education Act of 2008 (34)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 2(2) of the Education Act of 2008 (34)

* No conscription or no standing military.

Section 107 of the Criminal Code stipulates that it is illegal to procure any person younger than age 21 for prostitution, as long as that person is not a prostitute or of known immoral character. This provision is unclear and makes criminal punishment dependent on a judgment of the child's or adult's moral standing, which may leave some child victims of commercial sexual exploitation unprotected.(32) As such, the Criminal Code contradicts the Children's Act, which states that courts and other institutions must give primary consideration to the best interest of the child in any matter concerned with a child.(29)

Ghana does not have laws to prohibit the use, offering, or procuring of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.(15, 27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Labor Relations (MELR)	Enforce all labor laws. Inspectors can enter any type of workplace.(1, 35) National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa (NPECLC), housed within MELR, implements Ghana Child Labor Monitoring System (GCLMS).(36)
District Assembly and the District Social Welfare Officer	Investigate child labor violations in the informal sector and report findings to police.(27)
Ghana Police Service (GPS)	Make arrests and conduct investigations related to forced child labor, child trafficking, sexual exploitation, and illicit activities. Enforce anti-trafficking laws through the Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) of the Criminal Investigation Division.(1) AHTUs also exist at the regional level.(1) Domestic Violence and Victims Support Unit refers cases of trafficking to AHTU.(37, 38)
Office of the Attorney General	Prosecute child labor and child trafficking crimes.(1)

Law enforcement agencies in Ghana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Employment and Labor Relations (MELR) had 94 labor inspectors responsible for the enforcement of all labor laws in the country, a decrease from the 130 labor inspectors employed in 2012.(1, 38) Community Child Protection Committees (CCPC) operated in over 600 communities in Ghana to monitor, prevent,

Ghana

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

and withdraw children from the worst forms of child labor in cocoa as well as other sectors. These committees report cases to the Ghana Police Service (GPS), the Ministry of Gender, Children, and Social Protection's (MGCSP) Department of Social Welfare, or traditional authorities, depending on availability.(1) The MELR's Child Labor Unit (CLU) reported that during the reporting period the Inspectorate Divisions of the MELR did not receive funding, and inspectors do not have sufficient facilities and transportation to conduct inspections.(1)

With support from the ILO, the MELR conducted a 3-day child labor training for 35 labor inspectors that included discussion of Ghana's child labor legal framework, as well as best practices for labor inspection.(1) The CLU reports that child labor training opportunities are insufficient for the number of inspectors and scope of the problem.(1)

Information on the number of inspections, child labor violations found, and penalties imposed during the reporting period is unavailable.(1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) opened a regional office in the Northern Region and is now present in each of the ten regions of Ghana.(1) During the year, the AHTU employed 58 investigators to enforce laws against trafficking, an increase from the 54 investigators employed in 2012. Four investigators were located in each of the nine regional units, with 22 located in Accra.(1) However, the AHTU operated using only donor funding because the government did not allocate funds to the unit during the year.(1, 12) The modest increase in the number of investigators is not sufficient to allow the AHTU to fulfill its mandate.(1) Information on the number of officials employed by the GPS to investigate other worst forms of child labor is unavailable.

Thirty AHTU officers took part in a one-week anti-trafficking training through an ILO partnership with the CLU and Ghana's Financial Intelligence Center (FIC). Two AHTU officers also received training from the FIC on the links between financial crimes and human trafficking.(1) Training does not appear to have been provided to all investigators. CCPCs, traditional leaders, and children have been educated on child trafficking issues to enable them to identify and report trafficking victims to the District Department of Social Welfare for its collaboration and follow-up with the GPS.(1)

The Office of the Attorney General is responsible for prosecuting criminal offenses related to the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking; prosecutions are usually handled by the GPS prosecutors.(1) The AHTU reported 140 new investigations and 23 prosecutions of trafficking cases, although the number of cases that involved children is not available.(33) Comprehensive information on the number of criminal investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor is unavailable, since a centralized database is not maintained.

The agencies responsible for enforcing child labor laws are poorly coordinated, and there is currently no referral system for victims.(1, 38-40)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor (NSCCL)	Oversee coordination, implementation, and monitoring of National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor 2009-2015 (NPA) and programs targeting worst forms of child labor. Chaired by MELR, and MELR's Child Labor Unit (CLU) is its Secretariat.(1, 38, 41) Members include ministries, labor unions, NGOs, Ghana Cocoa Board, and international organizations. Comprises three subcommittees: Policy Advisory, Education, and Skills Training; Advocacy, Social Mobilization, and Child Labor Monitoring; and Cocoa, Fisheries, and Mining and Quarrying.(38, 41)
National Partners Forum (NPF)	Discuss interventions to address worst forms of child labor in cocoa sector. Convened by NPECLC and comprises district assemblies, NGOs, trade unions, and civil society organizations.(1, 38)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Human Trafficking Management Board (HTMB)	Advise the Minister of Gender, Children, and Social Protection (MGCSP) on trafficking policy and promote prevention and rehabilitation strategies. Intersectoral board chaired by Minister and includes police, immigration, local government, Ministries of Health and Education, and a parliamentarian, among others.(12) MGCSP's Human Trafficking Secretariat convenes quarterly meetings of the HTMB.(12)

During the reporting period, the National Steering Committee on Child Labor (NSCCL) met four times. The NSCCL coordinated information sharing between government agencies and social partners, reviewed and endorsed project proposals, and supported the pilot of the Ghana Child Labor Monitoring System (GCLMS).(1, 38, 42, 43)

The National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa (NPECLC) held the National Partners Forum (NPF) only once during the reporting period, citing that funding constraints prohibited additional meetings. The Human Trafficking Management Board (HTMB) did not meet in 2013, also citing insufficient funding as well as an outstanding request submitted to the Office of the President to rebuild the board.(1)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Ghana has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2009–2015)	Provides a comprehensive framework to significantly reduce worst forms of child labor by 2015.(1, 16, 27, 38) Coordinates various interventions to combat child labor. MOUs exist with 23 government agencies to establish the role of each agency in the fight to reduce worst forms of child labor.(44)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor, Especially the Worst Forms	With 15 ECOWAS countries, implements a regional action plan on child labor, especially its worst forms. Aims to eliminate worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015 and to continue progress toward the total elimination of child labor.(45) During 2013, Ghana volunteered to be first country to have its efforts against worst forms of child labor peer reviewed under the ECOWAS Regional Action Plan. MELR's CLU completed a self-assessment of Ghana's performance, and an external review was conducted by reviewers from Côte d'Ivoire and Nigeria, along with an ECOWAS consultant.(1, 46–48) The ECOWAS peer review report highlighted the need for enhanced support from MELR and coordination among all partners, increased funding beyond cocoa sector, and establishment of clear sanctions for those who violate law. The assessment recommended estimating the cost of implementing the NPA, increasing services for children, and conducting additional local research.(1, 46, 48)
2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol (2010 Declaration) and its accompanying Framework of Action	In cooperation with the Governments of Côte d'Ivoire and the United States and the International Cocoa and Chocolate Industry, provides resources and coordinates with key stakeholders on efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas.(49, 50) Takes steps to ensure that all project efforts implemented under the Declaration and Framework align with its national action plans in order to promote coherence and sustainability.(49–51)
Ministry of Food and Agriculture's Agriculture Extension Services Child Labor Strategic Plan†	Addresses ways to combat child labor in agriculture.(52)
Ghana's UN Development Assistance Framework (2012–2016)	Includes child labor in its National Development Priority for Human Development, Productivity, and Employment.(53)
Ghana's Medium-Term National Development Framework: Ghana Shared Growth and Development Agenda (2010–2013)	Incorporates the NPA and includes child labor as an issue in its Child Protection and Development focus area.(1, 54)
Education Strategic Plan (2003–2015)*	Includes a focus on alternative education for children who are out of school, hard to reach, or in urban slums.(26)

* The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Ghana funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
GCLMS‡	MELR program that enables communities to monitor, report on, and coordinate services for children in exploitative labor.(4, 42, 55, 56) Operates through Community Child Protection Committees (CCPCs) that are active in more than 600 communities nationwide.(1, 36) In 2013, NPECLC held a meeting of partners in Accra to release and discuss the report of the 25-community pilot of GCLMS.(1)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa by Strengthening Sub Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS (ECOWAS I)	USDOL-funded, $7.95 million, 5-year project implemented by the ILO with direct interventions to accelerate progress on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, and Nigeria. Supports ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub-region by providing policy and capacity building support for all ECOWAS states.(57) By the end of March 2014, the project had withdrawn or prevented 5,536 children from the worst forms of child labor in fishing, mining, and agricultural production in Ghana and provided livelihoods services to 440 Ghanaian households. Helped establish CCPCs in 120 communities in the country.(58, 59)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa by Strengthening Sub Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS (ECOWAS II)	Linked to the ECOWAS I project, a $5 million, USDOL-funded, 4-year project, implemented by the ILO with direct interventions in Benin, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, and Nigeria. Supports ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub-region by providing policy and capacity building support for all ECOWAS states.(60) In Ghana, the project worked with the government to support the initial stages of implementation of GCLMS in 20 communities. By the end of March 2014, the project had also provided education services to 1,009 children and livelihoods services to 1,124 households in Ghana.(61)
Towards Child Labor Free Cocoa Growing Communities in Cote d'Ivoire and Ghana through an Integrated Area Based Approach (CCP)	USDOL-funded, $10 million, 4-year project, implemented by the ILO. In support of the 2010 Declaration, aims to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana by providing direct services to communities.(28, 49) In Ghana, aims to rescue more than 2,500 children and provide livelihood assistance to at least 1,000 households.(28) Works with Government to support a child labor monitoring system in cocoa growing areas.(28) By the end of March 2014, the project had provided educational service to 2,862 children and livelihood services to 1,145 households in Ghana.(62)
Survey on Child Labor in West African Cocoa Growing Areas	USDOL-funded, $1.5 million, 3-year research project, implemented by the Payson Center at Tulane University. Supports the collection of nationally representative survey data on child labor in cocoa-growing areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana.(63) Will help assess the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas. As called for in the 2010 Declaration, the study developed a baseline estimate of the number of children working in the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas.(49, 63) In Ghana, the project began a nationally representative survey in the cocoa sector during the 2013-2014 harvest season.(64) Coordinates with the government and works with government statistical experts to build the country's capacity to implement future child labor surveys.(51)
Industry-funded Projects in Support of the 2010 Declaration	Projects in Ghana's cocoa-growing areas funded by Mars, Nestle, Barry Callebaut, Mondelez International, and the former Global Issues Group.(49, 50, 63) Projects aim to reduce the prevalence of child labor, including by improving children's access to education and increasing household incomes. Funding provided by the cocoa industry in Ghana is as follows: Ferrero, $1.14 million; Hershey, $600,000; and Mondelez International, $1.54 million.(63) The Global Issues Group provided $2.25 million for a project that is being implemented in both Ghana in Côte d'Ivoire.(63)
Follow-up to the resolution on child labour statistics adopted at the 18th International Conference of Labor Statisticians (ICLS) through methodological development and expansion of child labour data collection	$3 million, USDOL-funded, 4-year project, implemented by the ILO. Included a sub-survey on child labor within the Ghana Statistical Service's Ghana Living Standards Survey.(65) Results were not available during reporting period.(1, 65)
Human Trafficking Fund‡	Overseen by the HTMB, aims to provide financial support to trafficking victims, including children.(1)
Ghana Police Service(GPS)‡	Maintains an all-hours phone line for reporting crimes, including trafficking of children.(1)
Livelihoods Empowerment Against Poverty (LEAP)*‡	Government conditional cash transfer program that makes monetary grants to households, some of which are conditioned upon children attending school and not engaging in child labor. Aims to reach 300,000 households by 2015.(1) Program had reached 76,000 households in 100 districts by the end of 2013, an 8,000 household increase from 2012.(1)

Program	Description
Empowering Cocoa Households with Opportunities and Education Solutions Project (ECHOES)*	Implemented by World Education and Winrock and funded by the World Cocoa Foundation, USAID, and the International Chocolate and Cocoa Industry, project strengthens cocoa-growing communities by expanding education for youth and young adults; strengthening community based organizations; and improving household livelihoods.(66)
Provision of school supplies*‡	Government program to provide uniforms and books to children in public primary schools in some deprived communities.(1, 38, 67)
Ghana School Feeding Program (GSFP)*‡	Government program, ongoing since 2005, that aims to increase school quality and attendance and reduce malnutrition among school-going children in selected schools.(1)
National Health Insurance Scheme (NHIS)*‡	Government program that waives insurance premiums for children under 18, requiring a minimal registration fee.
Capitation Grant Scheme (CGS)*‡	Government grants that provides public primary schools in targeted districts with grants to defray costs of school fees for students.(1)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Ghana.

NPECLC's pilot of the GCLMS was carried out in 25 communities. NPECLC had originally planned to reach 60 communities, but logistical and funding challenges led to a reduction in the number of communities reached and inhibited NPECLC's ability to complete all activities planned for 2013.(1) A key goal of the GCLMS is to use data on child labor to direct social services to affected children.(63)

Although the Government has worked closely with industry, NGOs, and international organizations to implement child labor programs in cocoa, fishing, and mining, the scope of these programs remains insufficient to address the scope of the problem. Research found no evidence of programs to assist kayayees or children involved in commercial sexual exploitation, domestic service, or forced labor.

Grenada

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Grenada made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Electronic Crimes Act, which prohibits child pornography, and launched the National Child Protocol, which contains guidelines for intra-governmental coordination on child protection, investigations, and referrals to appropriate services. It also continued to implement programs that make education a viable alternative to child labor. While the worst forms of child labor do not appear to be a problem in Grenada, the Government's ability to prevent children from becoming engaged in exploitative work is limited due to a lack of express prohibitions against children's involvement in hazardous work and the sale and trafficking of children for forced labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

There is no evidence that indicates children in the Grenada are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's education in Grenada. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		111.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2010, published by UNESCO Institute of Statistics, 2014.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2014.(4)

Research found no Government-sponsored efforts to determine if any of the worst forms of child labor exist in Grenada.(2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Grenada has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 2).

Grenada limits the general “recruitment” of children under the age of 18 for any type of work, but this prohibition does not extend to the employment of children under the age of 18 who offer services spontaneously.(2, 11, 12) Provisions prohibiting the employment of children in hazardous work do not exist.(2, 11, 12) Although the Constitution prohibits slavery and forced labor, the Criminal Code does not specifically prohibit the sale and trafficking of children for forced labor.(7, 8, 11, 13, 14) The Government has ratified ILO C. 182, which covers the use of children by adults for illegal activities; however, research did not find evidence of laws prohibiting the use of children in illicit activities.(2)

In 2013, the Government passed the Electronic Crimes Act, which prohibits the use of children in pornography, as well as the procurement and distribution of child pornography.(2)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including in its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL), Child Protection Authority (CPA), Royal Grenada Police Force, Ministry of Social Development and Housing (MOSDH), and Ministry of Education truancy officers	Enforce laws related to child labor and school attendance.(2, 8)

Labor law enforcement agencies in Grenada took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms, during the reporting period. MOL employed six labor inspectors and had an overall budget of $317,400 for all its activities in 2013.(2, 8)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no current need for criminal law enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for coordinating mechanisms to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the Government has a policy that may contribute to the prevention of child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Grenada funded programs that may contribute to the prevention of child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would continue the prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Grenada (Table 7).

In 2013, Guatemala made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved an action plan that outlines specific steps for Government agencies to take from 2013 to 2015 to meet the goals set out in its flagship child labor policy, the Roadmap toward the Elimination of Child Labor in Guatemala. The Government also increased its efforts to enforce child labor law by carrying out significantly more inspections than the previous year, allocating additional resources to labor enforcement, and rescuing 159 child victims of human trafficking. In addition, inter-agency committees at the departmental level took actions to combat child labor, such as withdrawing children from work in garbage dumps. However, children in Guatemala continue to engage in child labor, primarily in agriculture. Lack of Government resources, lack of Labor Ministry authority to impose fines, and inadequate judicial enforcement of court orders remain key challenges for enforcement efforts regarding the worst forms of child labor. None of the 346 child labor cases referred to the labor courts in 2013 resulted in an employer sanction. Guatemala also lacks Government programs targeting sectors in which children are known to engage in exploitative labor, such as domestic service, mining, quarrying, and construction.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guatemala are engaged in child labor, primarily in agriculture.(1) Data from the Government’s 2011 National Survey of Living Conditions (ENCOVI) indicate that two-thirds of child workers reside in rural areas, particularly in the Western Highlands.(2) Government data also indicate that more than half of working children in Guatemala are of indigenous heritage.(3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Guatemala.

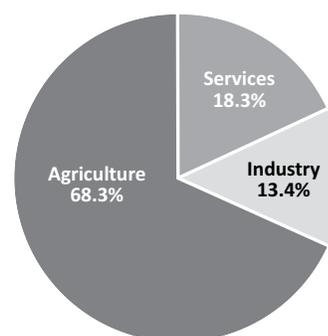

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

† Determined hazardous by national law or regulation as understood under Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3 (a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

According to Government statistics, over the last 12 years, the proportion of children working in the manufacturing and construction sectors has steadily decreased, while the proportion of children working in mining, quarrying, and agriculture has increased.(1) Guatemalan children are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor internally, as well as to Mexico, the United States, and, to a lesser extent, other foreign countries.(12, 18)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guatemala has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Guatemalan law is not fully consistent with international standards regarding child labor. Article 150 of the Labor Code allows the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTPS) to authorize children under age 14 to work under exceptional circumstances, including if the MTPS determines that the child must work to support his or her family due to poverty. However, in 2006, the President's Office and the MTPS signed a Government Agreement reiterating the Labor Code's prohibition of the employment of children under age 14 and committing the MTPS to grant exceptions to the minimum working age only in very special cases.(27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTPS) Office of the Inspector General	Enforce child labor laws, including prohibitions on children engaging in the worst forms of child labor. (28) Inspect businesses for the worst forms of child labor and respond to child labor complaints. Refer children engaged in hazardous work to government social services.(29-31) Establish a period for employers to remedy the violations found. Refer cases of violations that are not remedied within the specified time period to labor courts, which review the cases and impose sanctions, since the MTPS does not have authority to directly fine employers for violating the Labor Code.(1, 19)
MTPS Adolescent Workers Protection Unit	Receive child labor complaints and refer them to the Office of the Inspector General.(28) Coordinate services for children in Guatemala City found to be engaged in hazardous work.(31)
Secretariat of Social Welfare and Departmental Social Welfare Offices	Establish and manage a national protocol for identifying and assisting child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(32) In the case of Departmental Offices, coordinate services for children outside of Guatemala City found to be engaged in hazardous work.(31)
National Civil Police	Maintain a hotline to receive reports of suspected child trafficking cases, a special unit for sex trafficking, and another for forced labor.(13) Investigate cases of child trafficking, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(13, 18)
Public Ministry, Public Prosecutors' Office	Maintain an Anti-Human Trafficking Unit, which conducts investigations on all forms of trafficking in persons, including child trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(14, 18, 33)
Human Rights Ombudsman	Receive complaints regarding the exploitation of children, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(12)
Solicitor General's Office	Receive complaints regarding the exploitation of children, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(12, 18) Also initiate legal proceedings to seek orders of protection for children in cases of violation of criminal law and ensure the legal representation of children whose rights have been infringed.(14) Maintain a Child Rescue Unit that assesses the situational risk of children whose rights have been violated, including whether the children should remain with family members, and request appropriate protection measures.(14)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the MTPS employed approximately 300 inspectors throughout Guatemala.(3) Of these, approximately 20 inspectors were dedicated solely to child and adolescent worker issues.(2, 3) The MTPS trained labor inspectors on human trafficking, the worst forms of child labor, and forced labor.(3) The Labor Inspectorate had a budget of approximately $3.6 million in 2013, an increase from approximately $3.1 million in 2012.(3) However, labor inspectors, especially outside of Guatemala City, still lack necessary resources, such as vehicles and fuel, to carry out sufficient inspections.(8, 34, 35)

According to the MTPS, in 2013, 161 inspectors participated in 7,398 inspections of industries and areas that are at high risk of employing child labor, a significant increase from 1,883 such inspections in 2012.(1, 36) Information was not available on the number of child laborers found by MTPS, or on the services provided to them. As a result of these inspections, the MTPS referred 346 employers to labor courts for child labor violations, an increase from 86 employers in 2012.(1, 34) As of early 2014, labor courts had not yet sanctioned any of the 346 employers.(36) In general, in Guatemala there are significant delays in penalizing employers for labor law violations because the MTPS cannot directly impose fines and must transfer cases of violations to the labor courts.(28, 31, 34, 37)

In 2013, the Guatemalan Government and the United States Government signed an Enforcement Action Plan that specifies a set of actions for the Guatemalan Government to broadly improve the enforcement of labor rights.(3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the National Civil Police maintained a team of approximately 50 investigators specializing in human trafficking.(3) These investigators participated in a 1-month course on trafficking.(3) In addition, the Public Ministry doubled the size of its Anti-Trafficking Unit to include more than 24 staff members, including appointing a new senior prosecutor dedicated solely to forced labor and labor trafficking cases and adding additional attorneys and support staff to its Anti-Trafficking Unit.(3, 18)

In 2013, the Government reported rescuing 159 child victims of trafficking in persons.(18, 38) The Government received 271 complaints regarding trafficking in persons, an increase from 197 complaints received in 2012; however, these data do not distinguish between adult and child trafficking cases.(12, 38) The Public Ministry continued to support 128 ongoing investigations related to trafficking in persons, and it filed charges against 62 individuals for trafficking-related crimes.(38) The Government continued to investigate five ongoing cases related to adults and children subjected to forced labor as of the end of 2013.(18)

The National Civil Police continues to require additional staff and resources to enforce criminal laws relating to the worst forms of child labor.(18) Despite progress over the preceding year, Guatemala continues to have limited avenues for the public to submit complaints and reports of crimes related to the sale of children, child prostitution and trafficking, and child pornography.(14, 18) Additionally, the Government's investigations into these crimes are sometimes of poor quality, though the quality of investigations is improving.(14, 18)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAPETI)	Coordinate Government policies and efforts to combat child labor.(1) Led by the Vice President's Office and composed of several government ministries, including the MTPS and the Ministry of Social Development (MIDES), as well as representatives from industry associations and trade unions.(1, 2, 28)
Departmental Commissions for the Eradication of Child Labor (CODIPETIs)	Coordinate government efforts to combat child labor at the departmental or regional level. Composed of department-level representatives of the agencies that form the CONAPETI.(3)
MTPS Executive Secretariats	Operate nine Executive Secretariats throughout the country that work to coordinate the efforts of NGOs and local government agencies on child labor.(28)
Secretariat against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons (SVET)	Coordinate all Government efforts against trafficking in persons, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children and forced child labor.(12, 18) Operates under the auspices of the Vice President's Office.(12)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Institutional Commission against Trafficking in Persons (CIT)	Develop and manage initiatives to combat human trafficking.(14) Coordinated by SVET and co-chaired by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and includes 28 government and civil society institutions.(12, 18)

In 2013, the National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAPETI) met twice, though a technical-level secretariat within the CONAPETI met every month.(3) The CONAPETI also provided training to all of the 12 existing Departmental Commissions for the Eradication of Child Labor (CODIPETIs).(3) The CODIPETIs took actions to reduce child labor, such as enrolling families at risk of child labor in Government assistance programs, withdrawing children from work in garbage dumps, and passing municipal directives regarding child labor.(3) In 2013, the Secretariat against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons received a budget of approximately $1.1 million, an increase from $650,000 in 2012.(39) The Inter-Institutional Commission against Trafficking in Persons met on a monthly basis in 2013.(18)

The UN Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution, and pornography has noted that Guatemala lacks effective coordination among government actors who provide services and protection to children whose rights have been violated.(14) However, in 2013 there was a marked increase in cooperation between government and civil society actors involved in the provision of services to, and protection of, child victims as compared to previous years.(18)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Guatemala has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap toward the Elimination of Child Labor in Guatemala	Aims to end the worst forms of child labor in Guatemala by 2015 by integrating child labor into anti-poverty, education, and health programs.(1, 40) Calls for legal reform to eliminate exceptions to the minimum age in the Labor Code.(37)
Action Plan to Make Guatemala Free from the Worst Forms of Child Labor for 2013–2015†	Specifies actions for Government agencies to implement the Roadmap toward the Elimination of Child Labor in Guatemala for 2013–2015. In 2013, Government developed a monitoring system for the Action Plan with the assistance of the NGO Catholic Relief Services.(3)
Protocol for Providing Comprehensive Healthcare to Children and Adolescents in the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Requires public health workers to input information about any child whose injuries may have been labor-related into a database. Implemented by the Ministry of Public Health and Social Assistance.(1, 34)
Intra-institutional Coordination Protocol to Assist Child Laborers	Sets guidelines for MTPS inspectors to identify child laborers, remove children from the worst forms of child labor, and coordinate services for such children with other government agencies.(21)
Public Policy on Human Trafficking and the Comprehensive Protection of Victims (2007–2017)	Includes a National Plan of Strategic Action that directs the Government's actions on preventing and combatting human trafficking.(14)
MOU between El Salvador and Guatemala on Protecting Trafficking Victims and the Illicit Trafficking of Migrants	Establishes actions for the Governments of Guatemala and El Salvador to improve the protection of trafficking victims and reduce the trafficking of migrants along the Guatemala-El Salvador border. Includes a focus on improving services for children.(14, 41)
Central American Regional Coalition to Combat Human Trafficking	Aims to improve government and civil society efforts to combat human trafficking in Central America.(14) Includes the participation of civil society organizations and the national police and public prosecutor offices of Central American governments, including the Government of Guatemala.(42)
Urban Social Protection Strategy	Includes the goals of keeping children from engaging in street work and increasing training and employment opportunities for youth.(1)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Guatemala funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
My Rights Matter	$4.2 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Catholic Relief Services to withdraw children or prevent them from entering the worst forms of child labor, which concluded in October 2013.(43) Provided education programs in 141 public schools in the departments of San Marcos and Totonicapán, resulting in the withdrawal of 6,695 children from hazardous labor and the prevention of 3,319 children from entering hazardous labor. Helped the national and local governments integrate child labor issues into public policies.(43)
Conditional Cash Transfer Program (Mi Bono Seguro)*‡	MIDES program that provides cash assistance to families with school-aged children, conditioned on children's school attendance.(1, 34) Serves approximately 758,000 families.(1, 34)
Food Assistance Program (Mi Bolsa Segura)*‡	MIDES program that provides food assistance to poor families, with the requirement that their children attend school.(1, 34) In 2013, assisted approximately 197,000 families.(44)
Young Protagonists (Jóvenes Protagonistas)*‡	MIDES program that provides at-risk adolescents with training and formative activities outside of school hours.(1) In 2013, was regularly attended by approximately 30,000 youth.(45)
School Assistance*‡	Ministry of Education programs that provide children with school supplies, food, and transportation assistance to promote school attendance and retention.(1) Includes a program for students who have fallen behind in their educational attainment, with a particular focus on child workers.(31)
My First Employment (Mi Primer Empleo)*‡	MIDES program that places working-age youth in apprenticeship programs and provides them with on-the-job training and a monthly stipend. In 2013, aimed to serve 50,000 youth.(34, 46)
Zero Hunger Pact (Pacto Hambre Cero)*‡	Government programs to combat malnutrition, increase access to education, and reduce the economic vulnerability of approximately 701,000 families. Has a total budget of $252.7 million.(1, 47)
TIP Referral and Grant Funding‡	Government program that provides funding to NGOs to provide shelter and services to child victims of sex trafficking.(13)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in the Americas, including Guatemala. Includes the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(48)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Guatemala.

In 2013, the Government's primary anti-poverty programs, the conditional cash transfer program (Mi Bono Seguro) and the food assistance program (Mi Bolsa Segura), were criticized for mainly assisting families that live in easier-to-reach urban municipalities rather than assisting the poorest families who live in more remote, rural municipalities.(3, 49) The MTPS noted that these deficiencies were due in part to operational challenges faced by the Ministry of Social Development, which was newly created in 2012 and continued the process of establishing itself during the reporting period.(18) Additionally, although the Government of Guatemala has implemented programs to address the worst forms of child labor in domestic service and agriculture, large numbers of children, particularly indigenous children, continue to perform hazardous work in these sectors. Research found no evidence of Government programs specifically designed to assist children performing hazardous work in mining, quarrying, construction, or in gravel and fireworks production.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guatemala (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Prohibit exceptions to the minimum age for work within Article 150 of the Labor Code that are inconsistent with international standards.	2010 – 2013
Enforcement	Continue to dedicate more resources to labor inspections, including vehicles and fuel, particularly for inspections outside of Guatemala City.	2009 – 2013

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Eliminate significant delays in the process for penalizing labor law violators, including in cases of child labor, at a minimum, by enacting legislation authorizing the MTPS to make fine recommendations and expediting the process for the judiciary to adopt such recommendations, issue fines, order and enforce remediation of labor law violations.	2012 – 2013
	Make information publicly available on whether employers have been sanctioned for child labor violations, have paid the fines imposed, and have remedied the underlying violations.	2011 – 2013
	Continue to dedicate more resources to law enforcement agencies responsible for receiving complaints and investigating child commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, trafficking, and violations of child labor laws.	2013
	Dedicate more resources and staff to the National Civil Police to improve enforcement of criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2013
Coordination	Continue to augment coordination efforts to institutionalize relationships between civil society representatives and government agencies that provide services to child victims of the worst forms of child labor.	2013
Social Programs	Improve the geographical coverage of existing anti-poverty programs to ensure the programs reach families living in both urban and rural areas.	2013
	Expand social programs targeting the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and domestic labor, with a particular focus on indigenous children.	2010 – 2013
	Initiate social programs to address child labor in mining, quarrying, construction, and manufacturing, particularly in gravel and fireworks production.	2009 – 2013
	Assess the impact that existing social programs may have on addressing child labor.	2009 – 2013

In 2013, Guinea made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite political turmoil in Guinea, the National Transition Council approved a new labor code. The Government also extended the National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons for an additional 2 years and issued decrees to protect children from violence in schools and work in gold mines. The Government funded a center to protect victims of child trafficking. However, children in Guinea continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and the worst forms of child labor as a result of human trafficking. The Government lacks coordination among existing government committees and implements a limited number of social programs to address child labor. The Government's capacity to enforce child labor laws is limited.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guinea are engaged in child labor in agriculture and the worst forms of child labor as a result of trafficking.(1, 2) According to the National Survey on Child Labor and Trafficking (2010), more than 40 percent of children ages 5 to 17 were engaged in child labor in Guinea.(3, 4) In addition, more than 76 percent of children ages 5 to 11 and 88 percent of children ages 12 to 15 years were performing hazardous work.(4) The survey also revealed that the incidence of child labor was higher in rural areas than in urban areas.(4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guinea.

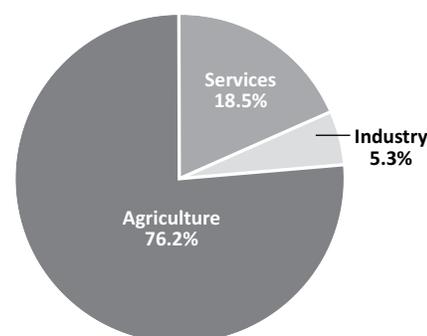

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	38.8 (1,118,519)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	60.1

	Vending in shops, kiosks, and markets, as a result of human trafficking (1, 12)
	Forced Mining (1, 12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In Guinea, it is a traditional practice to send boys, called talibés, to Koranic teachers to receive an education, which may include vocational training or an apprenticeship.(27, 28) While some boys receive lessons, some are forced by their teachers to beg or work in fields and are sometimes beaten or otherwise mistreated if they fail to meet daily quotas.(27, 29) In addition, through the system of confiage, children from rural areas are sent to cities to work or to attend school.(12, 17, 30) These children may work in domestic service, in which they may be beaten and sexually exploited.(4, 17)

A large number of children live and work in the streets, especially in the capital, selling goods illegally for traders who pay them piece rates.(16) However, research has not been conducted to measure the extent of the problem.(13)

Children are sent to the coastal region of Boke for forced labor on farms and to Senegal for education in Koranic schools where some may be forced to beg.(1, 13) Some Guinean boys and girls are subjected to forced labor in gold mining, including in Senegal and Mali.(1) Girls may be trafficked into domestic servitude and sex trafficking in Nigeria, Côte d’Ivoire, Benin, Senegal, Greece, and Spain.(1, 4, 13)

Although education is free in Guinea, various factors prevent children from attending school, including long distances between rural schools and homes; the lack of school infrastructure; the cost of school fees, uniforms, and supplies; and reported school violence.(4, 9, 13, 27) Additional barriers to education include a lack of textbooks and other teaching materials as well as a shortage of teachers.(13) Children also drop out of school because of unhygienic and poor school conditions.(13, 27) Additionally, a significant number of Guinean children are not registered at birth, which may impede their access to education because the age of the children must be proven before they are allowed access to state-sponsored education.(8, 13, 20, 24, 31)

In 2013, political violence in Guinea ensued, including opposition protests, violent demonstrations, and regional tensions in the lead-up to the country’s elections.(2, 32-34) Unrest in Guinea resulted in inadequate allocations of financial resources to state structures, as well as limited funding to procure working vehicles and equipment for inspections, which may have impacted the government’s ability to address child labor effectively.(2, 34) The National Assembly was seated on January 13, 2014, following the September 2013 elections.(2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guinea has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In January 2014, the National Transition Council approved a new labor code, which includes sections on child labor.(2) Research did not uncover a public version of the labor code for review.(2, 3) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Education issued a ministerial decree, which encourages children and their parents to file complaints in the event of any violent treatment at school. Local prefectures have also issued decrees prohibiting children from gold mining.(40)

However, Guinean law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. Because Article 5 of the Labor Code applies only to formal employment relationships, its protections do not apply to children under age 18 who do not have a formal employment contract, including those who do unpaid or temporary work in agriculture or domestic service.(21, 23, 24, 35) The Child Code also allows children under age 16 to work with

Guinea

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

written parental permission, which is contrary to the provisions of ILO C. 138; it is unclear whether steps have been taken to implement the Child Code.(3, 8, 13, 24, 36) In addition, Article 135 of the Mining Code allows children younger than age 16 to work in mines and quarries as assistants. However, the role of assistant is not defined, which leaves open the possibility for children to work as assistants inside mines or in other hazardous activities.(37)

By law, education is free and compulsory for six years.(8, 41) There are conflicting reports on the age to which education is compulsory. The Government reported that education is compulsory beginning at age 5, while other sources like the UNESCO Institute of Statistics state age 6 or 7.(3, 13, 27, 42) Based on this information, the approximate age at which a child is no longer required to go to school is 12 or 13.(1, 3, 8) Currently, the age of completion of compulsory schooling does not coincide with the minimum age for employment. Children who finish their schooling before reaching the legal working age are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor and are at greater risk of entering exploitative work.(13, 21)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor's (MOL's) Labor Inspection Service	Monitor the implementation of ILO C. 182, provide advice to workers and employers, and conduct studies and research on social issues upon the request of the Ministry.(14, 35)
Ministry of Social Affairs' National Committee Against Trafficking (CNLTP)	Enforce child trafficking laws.(1, 2, 14)
MOL's Child Labor Monitoring and Surveillance System	Coordinate child labor. Composed of the National Coordination Unit in the National Directorate of Employment, a prefectural coordination unit and village, and prefectural committees.(14)
Office for the Protection of Gender, Children and Morals (OPROGEM) Special Police Unit	Focus on crimes against children and women. Special unit of the national police, which includes a division of 30 officers that focuses solely on the fight against trafficking in persons and child labor. Also a member of CNLTP.(1, 2, 8)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in Guinea took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.(2) However, research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies took such actions during the reporting period.(2) Information on the number of inspections and citations is not available.(2)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor's Inspection Service employed at least 62 people, some of whom enforced labor regulations and monitored labor law compliance and site inspectors posted across the country.(2, 43) The role of site inspectors is not clear.(2) Labor inspections typically are limited to large firms in the formal employment sector. The majority of children work outside the formal sector, including in agriculture.(2) The Government lacks a mechanism to monitor child labor in the informal sector. In 2013, the Government allocated $27,000 for inspections.(2) Reports indicate there is a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to conduct effective child labor inspections and legal proceedings.(2, 12) Inspectors also reportedly lack training on child labor.(2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Security's Office for the Protection of Children and Morals (OPROGEM) investigated four cases of child trafficking and three cases of child labor.(2) Of these seven cases, one child trafficking case and one child labor case were referred for prosecution; however, the Ministry of Justice has not brought these cases to trial.(2, 23)

Trafficking cases are sent to Guinea's "Cour d'Asise" for high crimes, due to the heavy penalties assessed for trafficking violations.(2) Although the court was supposed to meet three times a year, it met only once in 2013 due to a lack of funding.(2) This created a significant backlog of cases.(2, 8) OPROGEM received $17,270 for fuel and office equipment during the reporting period.(2) OPROGEM investigators were trained on child labor, child trafficking, and child-related crimes.(43) Reports indicate a lack of political will and a lack of coordination between government agencies responsible for child labor.(2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child trafficking (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee Against Trafficking (CNLTP)	Coordinate anti-trafficking efforts, including for children. Led by the Ministry of Social Affairs. The CNLTP comprises secretariat member representatives from the Ministry of Social Affairs for the Promotion of Women and Children, the Ministry of Justice, and the Ministry of Security's OPROGEM; as well as various members of governmental agencies, including the MOL, the police, NGOs, and other stakeholders involved in trafficking issues.(1, 2, 44)
Committee for Monitoring, Protection, and Defense of the Rights of the Child	Coordinate actions taken with regard to children's rights across the country.(13, 20)

Coordination, including between the central and local levels, is inadequate due to the absence of formal protocols between coordinating actors.(45) The Ministry of Social Affairs for the Promotion of Women and Children coordinates through local representatives in each of Guinea's prefectures. Even though reports suggest that the Government established a committee on child labor in 2012, research found no evidence that this committee is active, and Guinea currently lacks a child labor coordinating mechanism.(2) The National Committee Against Trafficking (CNLTP) held two meetings in January, 2014.(2, 43) Officials from OPROGEM and CNLTP reported that they are working to improve inter-ministerial coordination.(2)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Guinea has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2009–2013)*	Provides the strategy to combat trafficking, including for children, in Guinea.(1, 2, 12)
A World Fit for Children*	Assists children and provides general protections and objectives involving child labor, mistreatment, exploitation, and violence.(46)
Education Sector Program/ Programme Sectoriel de l'Education (PSE)	Addresses the welfare of children, which includes initiatives regarding health, education, legal protection, access to clean water, and protection from child labor in its worst forms.(47-49)
National Policy on Birth Registration*	Registers 100 percent of children under age 8 by 2015.(50)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

The Government does not appear to have a comprehensive policy specifically to combat the worst forms of child labor.(2) It extended the National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2009–2011) through 2013.(14) This plan includes strategies to combat trafficking in persons based on prevention, protection, prosecution, coordination, and cooperation.(1) The timeframe for the completion of the Education Sector Program activities was also extended due to delays experienced during the political transition.(48, 49) The Government implements the PSE in partnership with UNICEF and the World Bank. During the reporting period, the Government provided annual education statistics, rehabilitated school classrooms, and increased enrollment in primary schools.(48, 49) Research did not identify updates on Guinea's efforts to implement A World Fit for Children.

VI. Social Programs to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2013, the Government of Guinea participated in and funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Plan Guinea-Conakry Program*	Program that changes attitudes and behaviors that are preventing children from realizing their rights. Strengthens the capacity of key actors to respect children’s rights in the areas of education, survival, and protection.(17)
Country Program-Guinea*†	World Food Program-funded, 4-year program that improves elementary school attendance through the provision of 100,000 meals to students and the promotion of girls’ education.(51) Provides school meals to 735 government-run rural schools nationwide–this represents 21 percent of all rural schools in Guinea.(27, 51, 52)
Center in Ratoma, Conakry*†‡	Government program that helps vulnerable children reintegrate into society.(2)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa and Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS I & II	USDOL-funded regional projects that supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub-region by providing policy and capacity-building support to all ECOWAS states.(53-56)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Guinea.

The Country Program in Guinea was launched during the reporting period.(51) With the exception of the Center in Ratoma, there are no government-funded social protection programs for victims of child trafficking in Guinea, including children working in agriculture, mining, and domestic service.(2, 3) There was a plan to establish a new government-funded transition center, with support from UNICEF, UNDP, and the Government of Germany, but it was not completed during the reporting period.(2, 3)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, Guinea-Bissau made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government remains in transition after the 2012 coup. The Guinea-Bissauan Embassy in Dakar worked closely with the Government of Senegal to repatriate 45 trafficked children back to Guinea-Bissau. Meanwhile, the Guinea-Bissauan Government continued to participate in a project, funded by the U.S. DOL, to combat the worst forms of child labor and in several other social programs. However, children continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in forced begging. A decree to establish a National Commission to Combat Child Labor (CNCTI) remains in draft form. Guinea-Bissau has neither established a list of hazardous occupations that are prohibited for children, nor provided enforcement officials with appropriate training and resources to monitor, investigate, and prosecute cases of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children engage in the worst forms of child labor in forced begging, and in child labor in agriculture.(3-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guinea-Bissau.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	47.3 (219,734)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	56.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	34.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		64.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2010, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(1)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(2)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cashews* and rice* (3, 4)
	Farming, activities unknown (3-5)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (3, 6, 7)
Industry	Mining (3, 6)
Services	Street work, activities unknown (3, 5, 7, 8)
	Domestic service (3, 5, 7, 8)
	Car washing and shoe shining (3, 5, 7, 8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation and begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5, 7, 9-11)
	Forced labor as a result of human trafficking* (9)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The Government lacks current statistics on the prevalence of child labor.(7)

In Guinea-Bissau, organized networks of former male trafficking victims affiliated with Koranic schools traffic young boys.(7) It is a traditional practice to send boys, known as talibés (in Wolof) and almudus (in Fula) away from their families to be educated by Koranic teachers, called marabouts. Though many teachers carry out the intended tradition of providing education, some instead force students to beg on the streets for money and food and to then surrender their earnings to their teachers.(3, 10, 12) Teachers who force talibés/almudus to beg typically set a daily quota; if they do not meet the quota, they may be beaten.(3, 10, 12) A source indicates that politicians in Guinea-Bissau do not confront Koranic teachers for trafficking boys due to the teachers' importance in the Muslim electorate.(13)

Guinea-Bissau

Some children who sell goods on the street are obligated by their families to bring home a certain amount of income. If they are unable to do so, they are likely to be subjected to physical violence.(11) In order to meet their families' demands, some of these children engage in prostitution to avoid corporal punishment.(11)

Child marriage is common in Guinea-Bissau. Limited evidence suggests that girls who flee forced marriages are victims of commercial sexual exploitation as a result of trafficking.(5)

Access to education is hindered by the lack of schools and trained teachers, poor teaching methods, and informal school fees, such as registration and monthly charges, which are common in public schools.(4, 12) Children often leave schools to work in the fields during the cashew harvest season.(5) As reported in the National Strategy to Combat Poverty, for every 100 children who enroll in first grade, only 40 children reach the sixth grade.(14)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guinea-Bissau has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 146 of the General Labor Law (15)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 148 of the General Labor Law (15)
List of Hazardous Occupations Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Prevention and Trafficking in Persons Law; Penal Code (16, 17)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Prevention and Trafficking in Persons Law; Public Law 12/2011; 2009 Child Code (17)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Prevention and Trafficking in Persons Law; Penal Code (16, 17)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	16	Decree 20/83 (3, 18, 19)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Basic Education Law (20)
Free Public Education	Yes		Basic Education Law (20)

The Government has not established a list of hazardous occupations that are prohibited for children.(15)

Children may voluntarily enter the military at age 16 with parental consent, but are not permitted into combat activities.(3, 18, 19) The Government has no law that prohibits the use of children for illicit activities.

Procurement of 16- to 18-year-olds in prostitution is not prohibited.(21)

The Education Law establishes compulsory education through the ninth grade.(20) The Government has reported to the UNESCO Institute of Statistics that education is compulsory until age 13.(22) Therefore, the compulsory education age is unclear in Guinea-Bissau. School is free for all children, but in practice there are limited resources to cover all children in schools; therefore, not all children have equal opportunities in school.(20)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Civil Service and Labor, in collaboration with the National Institute for Women and Children (INMC)	Enforce child labor legislation.(3, 23)
The Ministry of Interior	Lead efforts to combat child trafficking.(3)
Police and border officials	Prevent traffickers from entering or exiting the country with children. With INMC and UNICEF, maintain data on child trafficking.(24)
The Government of Guinea-Bissau and the Government of Senegal	Collaborate in combating child trafficking.(3)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in Guinea-Bissau took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

Enforcement officials, including labor inspectors, do not have appropriate training and equipment to carry out inspections and investigations of child labor cases; the lack of lawyers and courts in rural areas limits law enforcement.(3, 24) During the reporting period, the government provided no funding for labor inspections.(7)

Criminal Law Enforcement

During the reporting period, there was no information available on the number of investigations, labor inspections, prosecutions, or convictions conducted on child labor.

However, during the reporting period, the Guinea-Bissauan Embassy in Dakar worked closely with the Government of Senegal to repatriate 45 trafficked children back to Guinea-Bissau.(7)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Institute for Women and Children (INMC)	Coordinate and monitor NGOs and activities of other rehabilitation partners to defend and protect children.(7)
Ministry of Justice in collaboration with the INMC	Enforce child labor legislation.(3, 23)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee	Coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking. Led by the INMC and includes representatives from the Ministries of Interior, Justice, Health, Education, and Transportation, as well as various NGOs.(24)
Ministry of Public Function, Work, and Modernization of the State (MFPTME)	Implement and coordinate actions to combat child labor in Guinea-Bissau. Comprised of the General Inspector of Public Administration; the General Inspector of Social Security; the General Directorate of Public Function; the General Directorate of Work, Employment, and Professional Training; and the National Institute of Social Security. Drafted the decree establishing the National Commission for Combating Child Labor and carried out a national child labor survey.(8)
National Committee to Prevent, Combat, and Assist Victims of Trafficking	Strengthen efforts to fight human trafficking. Created by the Trafficking Act.(17)

Agencies enforcing criminal laws against child labor and trafficking do little to coordinate their efforts, and there are no social services for victims.(7) The National Trafficking Committee has not met since the 2012 coup; the Committee's operational status and its role in relation to the established Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee is unclear.(3)

The national child labor survey carried out by MFPTME was projected to be published in late 2013, but research did not uncover whether it was published.(8)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence of programs to specifically address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the Government has funded other programs that may have an impact on child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Education Action Plan for All (2000–2015)*	Guides Guinea-Bissau's efforts to ensure universal access to education and facilitate interagency coordination.(25)
Political Letter for Educational Sector (2010– 2020)*	Outlines actions to be developed for preschool, primary, and secondary education, additional higher education, technical/professional training, and higher education, and science studies.(8)
National Strategy for Social Protection of Children*	Provides orientation to the Government and national partners to address social response for vulnerable children, including orphans and children who are HIV/AIDS carriers.(8)
National Action Plan on Trafficking (2011– 2013)*	Aims to guide implementation of the anti-trafficking law. Research unable to identify what the Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee has done toward this goal.(9, 24)
National Strategy to Combat Poverty (2011– 2015)*	Seeks to reduce poverty from 69.3 percent to 24 percent by 2015, and extreme poverty from 33 percent to 13 percent, by 2015 by improving access to basic services and generating income and employment opportunities. Strengthens government coordination and mechanisms to protect at-risk children, including those engaged in child labor.(26)
Community of Portuguese-Speaking Countries (CPLP) Action Plan to Combat Child Labor	Establishes four target areas to combat child labor. Includes the exchange of information and experiences; awareness-raising campaigns; use of statistical methodologies to collect child labor data; and technical cooperation and training.(27-29)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

The Government developed plans for a National Committee to Combat Child Labor (Comissão Nacional para o Combate ao Trabalho Infantil or CNCTI).(8) Once approved and implemented, the Committee will produce reports on child labor and develop a proposal for the National Plan to Combat Child Labor. CNCTI also will receive funding to implement the plan, to approve projects and programs combating the worst forms of child labor, and to create enforcement mechanisms for child labor.(8)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Guinea-Bissau funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National School Lunch Program*‡	Government and International Partnership for Human Development National school lunch program that covers more than 300 schools and reaches more than 88,000 children.(30-32)
Emergency Food Security Support Project*	World Bank and EU program to improve food security by providing school meals to children and food-for-work opportunities to adults.(33)
Cash transfer program*	World Bank program aimed at vulnerable populations that benefits 2,500 individuals.(4)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa and Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS I & II	USDOL-funded regional projects that supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub-region by providing policy and capacity building support for all ECOWAS states.(34, 35)
Association for Women and Children's (Associação de Mulher e Criança) (AMIC), anti-trafficking programs‡	Government provides $10,000 to the budget of the local NGO, AMIC, which offers medical and psychological support to children and women who are trafficking victims; maintains the main anti-trafficking coordinating force in Guinea-Bissau.(7, 13)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Guinea-Bissau

Although Guinea-Bissau has programs that target social welfare and child trafficking, the scope of these problems is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Research did not identify programs that target children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, including agriculture, forced begging, and street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guinea-Bissau (Table 9).

In 2013, Guyana made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government identified and rescued nine girls and one boy as suspected trafficking victims and provided labor inspectors with child labor training. In collaboration with the ILO, the Government implemented the Tackle Child Labor through Education (TACKLE) project through its conclusion in August. During the project period, school attendance and student performance increased, and the Government aims to mainstream the programs initiated under the project. In August, the Government ratified ILO Convention 189 Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers. However, children in Guyana continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Guyana's legislation does not fully protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Children 17 years of age are legally permitted to engage in some hazardous activities. Further, the National Steering Committee on Child Labor appears to be inactive.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guyana are engaged in child labor in agriculture and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guyana.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	23.0 (44,787)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	94.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	23.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		85.3

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MIC3 Survey, 2006-2007.(12)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Guyana, including girls as young as 12, are involved in commercial sexual exploitation in Georgetown and in the country’s interior. There are reports of young girls being trafficking to mining communities for commercial sexual exploitation.(4-10, 18)

In 2011, with assistance from the ILO, the Government conducted a Child Labor Rapid Assessment to better understand the nature of child labor in the country.(19) However, the results of that survey have not yet been released to the public.(4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guyana has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

In August 2013, Guyana ratified ILO C. 189 Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers.(20)

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Although the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act of Guyana prohibits children under age 18 from working at night in industrial undertakings, Article 2 of the Schedule permits children ages 16 and 17 to perform certain types of work that require continuity through day and night, including in certain gold mining processes and in the production of iron, steel, glass, paper, and raw sugar.(21) The Government has issued a list of 22 hazardous occupations and processes that could threaten the health, safety, or moral or personal development of children; the list only prohibits children age 16 and younger from engaging in specified hazardous activities.(13, 24) Therefore, children age 17 are not fully protected from engaging in hazardous work.

Although Article 351 of the Criminal Law Offences Act prohibits the selling, publishing, and exhibiting of obscene material, Guyanese law does not explicitly outlaw child pornography.(1, 3, 26, 30, 31) There is no compulsory recruitment in Guyana.(10, 28)

Despite the legal guarantee of free education in Article 27 of the Constitution of Guyana, some primary schools continue to charge fees; some have even attempted to prevent children from attending school for failure to pay.(32, 33) However, the Government is attempting to address this problem. The Ministry of Education has publicized guidance advising parents and educators that only the Parent Teacher Association has the authority to approve and collect fees from parents, and that no child may be excluded from school for non-payment.(33)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Human Services and Social Security (MLHSS)	Monitor and enforce child labor laws in collaboration with the Ministry of Education, the Forestry Commission, the Geology and Mines Commission, and the Guyana Police Force.(4, 10) At the MLHSS, chief labor officer handles special investigations stemming from child labor complaints and oversees routine labor inspections.(10)
Guyana Police Force (GPF)	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking and use of children for illicit activity.(4)

Law enforcement agencies in Guyana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, officials from the Ministry of Labor, Human Services and Social Security (MLHSS) were trained on child labor issues.(10) Based on reporting by the Government of Guyana, the MLHSS conducted 2,218 inspections in 2013 and did not discover any cases of child labor.(34) Labor inspectors prioritized inspections in the mining, logging, and agriculture sectors.(34) According to most recent information, in 2013 the Ministry had employed 17 labor inspectors.(35) According to reports, including from the MLHSS, there are sometimes delays in accessing the resources needed to carry out inspections to monitor child labor, particularly in remote areas, where law enforcement presence is low.(4, 10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

The Guyana Police Force (GPF) works on criminal cases involving victims of the worst forms of child labor in consultation with the Ministry of Home Affairs, the MLHSS, the Ministry of Education, and the Ministry of

Guyana

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Amerindian Affairs, depending on the circumstances of the cases.(4) In 2013, the Government identified and rescued nine girls and one boy as suspected trafficking victims.(35) During the reporting period, the GPF also conducted training sessions on trafficking in persons for students; nurses; regional officials; and police officers stationed in Bartica, Lethem, and Port Kaituma.(9) However, the Government's capacity to carry out prosecutions is limited. With only 33 justices and magistrates, the courts have a backlog of cases on all matters of law with more than a 2-year waiting period.(2, 4, 9, 10, 36)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor (NSCCL)	Recommend policies and programs to eliminate child labor.(2, 10) A committee within the MLHSS. Includes representatives of the National Commission on the Rights of the Child, the Bureau of Statistics, the National Teacher's Union, the GPF, as well as of the Ministries of Education; Amerindian Affairs; Health; and Culture, Youth and Sports.(37)
Commission on the Rights of the Child	Protect and promote children's rights in accordance with the UN CRC, which includes addressing the worst forms of child labor.(4)
National Task Force for Combatting Trafficking in Persons	Report on the nature and magnitude of trafficking in persons in Guyana, document the Government's response, and carry out public education and prevention measures.(38) Meets monthly.(10)

Evidence suggests the National Steering Committee on Child Labor (NSCCL) has stopped meeting on a regular basis, potentially limiting its ability to carry out its mandates.(39)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Guyana has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Five-year Strategic Plan on the Rights of the Child*	Protects and promotes children's rights in Guyana and advances the UN CRC.(4)
National Education Policy*	Aims to provide equal access to quality education for all children and eliminate barriers to education, especially for the poor.(40)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Guyana funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Tackle Child Labor through Education (TACKLE)	Jointly launched by the European Commission and the ILO to combat child labor through education in 12 African and the Caribbean countries and the Pacific group of states.(41) In Guyana, aims to increase school attendance, by reducing truancy and school dropout rates.(1, 19, 42) Provided entrepreneurial, technical, vocational and life skills training to out-of-school and unemployed youth.(4) In 2013, School Retention and Child Labor Program supported by TACKLE continued to serve communities in Region 4, providing nutrition enhancement, transportation support to school, homework assistance, and psychosocial support for parents and children.(34) During the reporting period, program also undertook awareness-raising activities.(34) Concluded in August 2013.(43) During 5-year project period, participating schools experienced higher student retention, improved student behavior, and better performance on examinations.(44) The MLHSS is seeking support from the private sector to mainstream the program into its service delivery.(44)
Trafficking Hotline‡	Government-funded hotline to assist trafficking victims, run by trained operators.(9)
Shelter for Trafficking Victims‡	Government-run shelter that houses abused and trafficked women and children for up to 6 months. Provides services, including psychological counseling and practical skills training.(1, 2, 4, 9, 10)

Program	Description
School Meals and Uniforms*‡	Government program to provide hot meals to 16,000 students at schools in the interior, and transportation for students in several remote areas. All students in government-run schools from nursery to secondary receive vouchers to purchase school uniforms, shoes, and backpacks.(2, 4, 34, 40, 45, 46)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Guyana.

Although the Government has programs to target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem fully.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guyana (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Extend protections of children working at night beyond those employed in industry.	2010 – 2013
	Amend the list of hazardous work to protect children under age 18 in all listed sectors.	2010 – 2013
	Enact a law to prohibit explicitly child pornography.	2010 – 2013
Enforcement	Ensure sufficient resources are allocated in a timely manner to facilitate labor inspections.	2011 – 2013
	Dedicate more resources, namely judicial personnel, to resolving court cases, including those involving the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2013
Coordination	Ensure the NSCCL engages in regular meetings and coordination efforts.	2009 – 2013
Government Policies	Assess the impact of the Strategic Plan on Children's Rights and the National Education Policy on addressing child labor.	2010 – 2013
	Expand national education policy to achieve free universal education, as guaranteed by law.	2011 – 2013
Social Programs	Make publicly available the results of the Child Labor Rapid Assessment Survey.	2011 – 2013
	Develop new initiatives and expand existing programs to reach all children involved in the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2013
	Assess the impact the school meals program may have on child labor.	2013

In 2013, Haiti made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a new law to bring Haitian law into compliance with the Hague Convention on International Adoptions, which contains provisions that aim to prevent trafficking and other worst forms of child labor from occurring through Haiti's child adoption system. The Government continued to expand access to education and support livelihoods through social programs that provide cash transfers to defray tuition and the cost of school meals during the 2013 school year. However, children in Haiti continue to engage in child labor, including in domestic service and agriculture. Haiti lacks adequate legislation to address the worst forms of child labor, such as trafficking, and a clear, easily applicable minimum age for domestic service, and it has not yet approved a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children. Inspectors and child protection agents lack sufficient resources, such as vehicles and fuel, to carry out inspections. Social protection programs to combat child labor are also insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Haiti are engaged in child labor in domestic service and in agriculture, including on small subsistence farms.(1-6) Child labor in agriculture occurs throughout the country but is most prevalent in the South and Artibonite regions.(3-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Haiti. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3 (d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Some parents unable to care for their children send them to residential care centers (orphanages), or to relatives or strangers expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling to the children in exchange for housework.(2-4, 12) In practice, some of these children receive care and an education, while many become domestic servants and are victims of labor exploitation and abuse.(3, 4, 12, 17)

While many Haitians’ births are not registered, the 2010 earthquake and ensuing infrastructure destruction further exacerbated the lack of identity documentation.(3, 12, 15, 16, 18) Children lacking personal identification papers are particularly vulnerable to trafficking and other forms of labor exploitation; their legal status complicates their access to justice and other systems of government protection.(20, 21) Children are trafficked both internally and to the Dominican Republic.(3, 16) NGOs have reported that children crossing the border illegally are often accompanied by an adult who is paid to pretend to be the child’s parent or guardian until they reach the Dominican Republic.(15) Some of these children are reunited with relatives in the Dominican Republic; whereas, others end up working, including in domestic service, agriculture or on the streets shining shoes, washing windows, and in organized begging.(12, 15, 16, 22, 23)

There are not enough public schools, and many teachers have little or no training and lack official teaching credentials. As a result, most Haitian children who attend school go to private schools that charge a tuition.(2, 18) Many others simply do not attend school, especially in rural areas; as a result, they are at an increased risk of engaging in child labor or of becoming victims of human trafficking.(2, 3, 18)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Haiti has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

On April 30, 2014, Haiti ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict and the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

 Labor Code Article 335 states children must be 15 years old to work in industrial, agricultural, or commercial enterprises.

† At time of ILO C. 138 ratification, the Government specified 14 as the minimum age for admission to employment or work.(29)

* No conscription or no standing military.(27, 28)

Haiti's Labor Code Article 335 sets the minimum age at 15 for work in industrial, agricultural, and commercial enterprises. In its ratification of ILO C. 138, Haiti specified the minimum age of work to be 14.(29) The ILO Committee of Experts has noted that, as permitted under Article 5 of the Convention, Haiti excluded from Convention coverage the activities of children ages 12 and older in family enterprises, particularly in the informal and agricultural sectors, for up to 3 hours per day outside of school hours under MAST supervision. Therefore, the minimum age for work outside the three sectors referenced in the Labor Code and the allowable 3 hours per day in family enterprises is 14. The Labor Code allows children age 14 to be contracted apprentices, although children ages 14–16 may not work as apprentices more than 25 hours a week.(29, 30) The Labor Code also provides penalties for failure to follow procedures, such as obtaining work authorization to employ minors ages 15–18 legally, but does not provide penalties for the employment of underage children. The limited penalties, usually between $68 and $111, are not sufficient deterrents to protect children against labor exploitation.(7, 24) Pursuant to Article 5 of ILO C. 138, the ILO Committee of Experts requested the Government of Haiti to provide additional information about children excluded from ILO C. 138's coverage at ratification and about the Government's efforts to provide broader protections for this group.(24, 29)

The Act on the Prohibition and Elimination of All Forms of Abuse, Violence, Ill Treatment, or Inhuman Treatment Against Children of 2003 (Act of 2003) effectively annulled Chapter 9 of the Labor Code that had set a minimum age for domestic service and had provided for protections for domestic workers and fines in cases of violations.(24, 30) Though the ratification of ILO C. 138 sets the legal minimum age for domestic work at 14, the Act of 2003's repeal of the minimum age for domestic service leaves practical ambiguity about the Government's application of a minimum age for domestic service.(13, 24, 29)

The Labor Code prohibits children ages 15–18 from working at night in industrial jobs and in establishments where alcohol is served. The Labor Code also contains prohibitions against minors performing work that is dangerous or harmful to their physical or moral health. A more specific list of hazardous child labor activities has been developed but was not approved during the reporting period.(24, 30) Even though the Act of 2003 also contains a general prohibition against work that harms the health, security, or morality of a child, the Act establishes no penalties for employing children in these activities.(24) Articles 278–282 of the Penal Code prohibit prostitution and the corruption of minors. Research was inconclusive about whether this includes the use of children in pornographic performances. Articles 281–282 provide relevant penalties and leave open the possibility that a person committing these crimes could be punished with only 6 months of imprisonment.(25)

Haiti

In November 2013, the Government adopted a new law to bring Haiti into compliance with the Hague Convention on International Adoptions. Its provisions prohibit exploitation and trafficking through Haiti’s child adoptions system.(7, 13, 31) The new law reinforces the powers of the Institute of Social Welfare and Research (IBESR), a specialized agency of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor (MAST), as the supervisory body for adoption issues.(7) There is no law penalizing all types of trafficking; however, a trafficking law that would include criminal penalties recently passed both houses of Parliament and is awaiting promulgation.(7, 10-12, 31) Research found no penalties in Haitian law for forced labor or the use of children in illicit activities, although such conduct is prohibited by the Act of 2003.(24, 30)

It appears that children in Haiti are only required to attend school until age 11, which makes children ages 12–14 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are neither required to be in school nor are able to work legally, except in the limited circumstances specified above.(3, 27, 32) The Constitution guarantees free primary education, but most public schools charge fees for books, uniforms, enrollment, and teacher salaries; the cost of these expenses is prohibitive for many families.(2, 13, 18)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor (MAST)	Enforce child protection and child labor laws. MAST labor inspectors investigate Labor Code infractions, including those regarding child labor, in the formal sector. MAST’s Institute of Social Welfare and Research (IBESR) agents perform inspections, with a focus on child protection, and help enforce the Act of 2003. IBESR’s role involves some monitoring of work of children age 12 and older who work in family enterprises. (29, 31, 33) In cases of potential criminal violations, MAST labor inspectors and IBESR agents transfer cases to juvenile courts for prosecution, while children are receive services from IBESR.(3, 7, 11) Collaborate with the Brigade for the Protection of Minors (BPM) to investigate cases of crimes against children and apply the Penal Code to punish those responsible.(7, 11, 31)
Haitian National Police’s (HNP) BPM	Lead anti-child trafficking efforts and investigate Penal Code infractions against children.(11, 15) Conduct investigations upon reports of child or forced labor, or in conjunction with routine police patrols.(7, 31) Operate in public places where children can be in physical or moral danger and victims of certain crimes. BPM agents gather and submit information to judicial and/or social protection authorities to allow criminal prosecution for crimes against minors or to provide social protection and placement services (as needed) for victims.(34)

Law enforcement agencies in Haiti took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

Each of the MAST’s 11 regional offices employs at least one MAST/Labor Inspectorate child labor inspector, but the total number of MAST inspectors is unknown. All MAST labor inspectors are required to monitor and ensure compliance with all Labor Code provisions during their inspections, including on child labor.(11, 15) MAST inspectors found no child labor violations in the formal sector inspections they carried out in 2013, but the number of MAST inspections conducted is unknown and details regarding inspection methodology unclear. For cases of children under age 15 found working in formal sector enterprises, there appears to be no written protocol as to whether inspectors should issue fines, issue warnings, and/or refer the children to IBESR.(24)

There have also been delays in penalizing violations of the Labor Code, because labor inspectors cannot directly fine employers and must transfer cases of violations to labor tribunals for their review and, if appropriate, sanction. The labor courts are often slow to act and delay the imposition and collection of fines.(24) MAST inspectors lack training and sufficient resources to adequately enforce the law, including means of transportation, fuel, and appropriately equipped work places.(7)

In 2013, IBESR's 150 employees, working in all of Haiti's geographic departments, included 77 child inspectors and approximately 20 social workers to handle protection cases including those involving child labor.(7) Each IBESR regional bureau includes a child protection section that employs five to seven inspectors. In 2013, IBESR also conducted a comprehensive reclassification of its staff by revising the terms of reference for each position, reinforcing a standardized hiring process, and providing training.(7) However, the amount of training provided was insufficient, in large part due to lack of funding.(7, 31) IBESR responds to complaints, but does not have a system with sufficient reach or standard protocols to conduct inspections effectively in the informal sector, including on small subsistence farms where most child labor occurs.(34, 35) IBESR inspectors also lack means of transportation, fuel, and appropriately equipped workplaces.(3, 7, 11) In 2013, IBESR carried out 2,578 child labor inspections, including along the Haitian-Dominican border and in nightclubs, the commercial sector, and family-owned farms and shops.(7, 31) IBESR found approximately 50 forced child labor violations and transferred 37 of them to judicial authorities. Children involved in such cases were transferred either to residential care centers or to host families.(10) There is no information available on the total number of working children identified as a result of these inspections, of cases transferred to judicial authorities and fines ultimately assessed, and about whether these children received social services.(7)

Criminal Law Enforcement

The Haitian National Police's (HNP's) Brigade for the Protection of Minors (BPM) maintained a staff of 80 agents, of whom 50 are trained HNP officers and 30 are civilians. The BPM did not hire additional staff in 2013 due to lack of funding.(7) It carried out 100 criminal child labor investigations.(10) This number does not include routine human trafficking controls at border crossings and airports, as such information was unavailable.(10) The investigations found evidence of 93 child sexual abuse cases, but it is unknown to what extent this number included commercial sexual exploitation of children.(7) The BPM arrested and transferred a total of 108 suspected offenders to prosecutors.(7) Information about the results of such criminal investigations and about any possible convictions and sentences imposed on the perpetrators of these crimes related to the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor, was not found; however, the BPM assisted a total of 601 children in 2013, of whom 555 were transferred to IBESR, and 46 were returned to their parents.(7)

Prosecutions of crimes related the worst forms of child labor are rare. Local judges are not sensitized enough to child protection issues, nor are they sufficiently aware of international standards regarding the worst forms of child labor. Although efforts were also made during the reporting period to systematically train law enforcement and judiciary officials in human trafficking, not all of them were trained; more training is needed.(7, 11, 15, 31)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Develop national plan of action to combat child labor.(17, 36) Members include labor unions, civil society representatives, the Ministry of Justice, and the MAST.(11)
Inter-ministerial working group on trafficking	Coordinate all executive branch initiatives on human trafficking.(10, 15)

In 2013, the Commission implemented a campaign to raise public awareness about ILO C. 138 and ILO C. 182.(7, 31) The draft trafficking law calls for the establishment of a new interagency committee to combat trafficking in persons. Research did not determine if the existing inter-ministerial working group was active during the reporting period.(10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Haiti has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategic Development Plan (Plan Stratégique de Développement d’Haiti) (PSDH)	Articulates four pillars—Economic, Social, Territorial, and Institutional—for sustained economic growth in Haiti, which includes the goal to end child labor. Built on 2010 Action Plan for National Recovery and Development, which outlined key initiatives to address structural causes of Haiti’s underdevelopment in order to make Haiti an “emerging country” by 2030.(37-39) The 2010 Action Plan outlined plans to rebuild the country’s infrastructure, economy, and state institutions. Also mapped plans to improve the country’s living standards by increasing employment; providing housing; addressing food insecurity; and providing access to basic services such as health care, education, water, and sanitation. PSDH expands and provides further detail on these plans.(37, 39)
National Action Strategy for Education for All*	Aims to enroll 1.5 million students in school by 2016.(40) Launched in 2011, overseen by the Ministry of Education, and supported by international donors. Subsidizes school fees for both public and private schools, provides school feeding programs, and offers teacher training to increase the number of qualified teachers.(40, 41)
2010 Protocol of Action to Protect Vulnerable Haitian Children*	Sets mandatory procedures for governmental and nongovernmental institutions to provide support to Haitian children. Consequently, many Haitian children who had relocated to the Dominican Republic after the 2010 earthquake have received care or were sent back to Haiti to be reunited with their families.(42)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Haiti participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child and social protection hotlines*‡	Government program that maintains hotlines to receive complaints of situations requiring child protection.(11) BPM manages the “188” hotline, while IBESR manages the “133” hotline. In 2013, BPM received 5,423 phone calls leading to 295 investigations, but number of calls involving child labor is unknown.(7, 10, 31) IBESR handled 93 cases through its social protection hotline, including 11 cases of children in domestic service.(7, 31)
Government Child Shelter Census and National Child Protection Database*	Government programs to support child protection. IBESR reinforces the Government’s regulatory framework for residential care centers (orphanages), collects information on vulnerable children, and tracks them through the National Child Protection Database.(31) In 2013, IBESR updated its census of children’s shelters, thus identifying 756 residential care centers housing more than 34,000 vulnerable children.(7) In 2012 and 2013, IBESR closed 40 residential care centers for violations of international standards. In 2013, IBESR identified 754 children in domestic service and either reintegrated them with their families or placed them with foster families.(31)
USAID’s Protecting the Rights of Children, Women, and Youth in Haiti (Aksyon Kolektif pou Sekirite kont Eksplowatasyon) (AKSE)	$22.5 million USAID-funded, 5-year project that supports a partnership between the Government and private sector to promote children’s rights and child protection services. Supports efforts by governmental organizations; NGOs; and community-based organizations to assist victims of gender-based violence, trafficking, prostitution, sexual exploitation, forced domestic service, and recruitment into criminal activity. Strengthens institutional capacity to prevent abuse and address challenges faced by at-risk children, youth, and women.(43, 44)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Haiti, project aims to build the capacity of the national government and works to develop strategic policies to eliminate child labor and forced labor, as well as strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(45)
Protecting Children from Child Labor during the Early Recovery Phase	$1 million United States- and Brazil-funded, 36-month project, implemented by ILO-IPEC to protect children from child labor during Haiti’s earthquake recovery and reconstruction phases. Part of a larger recovery program developed by the Government of Haiti and supported by the UNDP and other UN and NGO partners to protect children, including by combating the worst forms of child labor and protecting the rights of adolescents to safe and decent work.(36)

Program	Description
Help People (EDE-PEP) Program*‡	Government social program that assists poor families through 16 government- implemented projects, with a focus on improving children’s well-being.(31) Projects include the Ti Manman Cheri project, the Kore Etidyan project, and the Aba Grangou project, among others. Ti Manman Cheri project has provided 105,704 low-income mothers with monthly cash transfers for their children’s tuition.(7) Kore Etidyan project provided monthly grants to 27,000 students during the 2012–2013 school year and continues to provide financial assistance to students in 2013–2014.(31) Aba Grangou project, financed with $30 million from Venezuela with additional financial support from the Government of Haiti, aims to cut the number of people suffering from hunger partly by reaching 2.2 million children through a school food program that has distributed 1,332,000 meals since January 2012.(7, 46)
National Free Education program*‡	Government program that aims to increase poor children’s access to education by expanding free public school education. Program includes school grants intended to eliminate school fees and accelerated learning programs for students who are behind in school (44) In 2013, the Government enrolled more than 1 million school-age children. This is a significant increase from 200,000 children enrolled through this program in 2012.(10, 13, 47)
Children’s Summer Enrichment Program*‡	Office of the Citizen Protector program provided training and ran summer programs for children, with the support of the AKSE program. Assisted approximately 100 children from Cité Soleil in Port-au-Prince by raising their awareness of Haiti’s child protection institutional framework and mechanisms.(7, 10)
IBESR’s National Week of the Child*†	IBESR awareness-raising campaign launched in 2013, funded by international NGOs, to increase public understanding of children’s rights and the barriers they face to secure those rights. Engaged local and international NGOs on issues of forced child labor, child trafficking, and sexual abuse and exploitation.(31)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Haiti.

In November, the Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms the country participants’ commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(48)

The hotlines operated by the BPM and IBESR function exclusively in Port-au-Prince, which makes reporting cases involving child exploitation more difficult in rural areas, where hotlines are nonexistent. Despite IBESR’s efforts to collect information in the National Child Protection Database, it does not fully capture information on the number of displaced street children and of children in domestic service.(11) Although Haiti has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem fully, particularly in agriculture and domestic service.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Haiti (Table 9).

Honduras

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Honduras made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Honduras passed a Legislative Decree harmonizing legal protections for children and trained labor inspectors on child labor issues. It strengthened the role of the seven regional sub-committees against child labor, and provided training to staff and community members on topics such as prevention, withdrawal, and social protection for child workers. The Government also continued to implement the Voucher 10,000 program, which provides cash transfers to families, and added child labor as a target issue under the program.

However, children continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. The inspections process does not sufficiently deter employers from using child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Honduras are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. (1-10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Honduras.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Recent data indicate that 60 percent of working children work in agriculture.(3, 8, 9, 34) Children are sometimes trafficked from rural areas into commercial sexual exploitation in urban and tourist destinations such as the Bay Islands, La Ceiba, San Pedro Sula, and Tegucigalpa.(26, 30, 35, 36) In addition, reports indicate that Honduran children are trafficked to Central and North America for commercial sexual exploitation. Limited evidence suggests that girls from neighboring countries, including Guatemala and Mexico, are subjected to sexual servitude in Honduras.(26, 35, 36) Additionally, reports indicate that children are used by organized crime to commit illicit activities.(33)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Honduras has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In 2013, the National Congress passed Legislative Decree No. 35-2013, which reformed legal protections for children, including those contained in the Code on Childhood and Adolescence, Family Code, Civil and Criminal Codes, Criminal Process Code, and Domestic Violence Code.(9, 52) Article 128 of Legislative Decree No. 35-2013 mandates that the Secretariat of Labor and Social Security (STSS) inspect and regulate businesses, workplaces, and residential homes to verify whether children are working and ensure that their rights are being protected. If a residential home is the workplace, the STSS must obtain judicial authorization before the inspection.(52) Legislative Decree No. 35-2013 also establishes sanctions consisting of a fine of five to 15 times the minimum wage for those found in violation of the law. Fines for repeat offenders are double the amount of the previous fine.(52) If the violations endanger the life of a child or have caused physical, mental, or intellectual harm to the child, civil and criminal penalties may be applied in addition to the fine.(52)

Honduras

The Constitution states that no one under the age of 16 may work unless it is necessary to sustain their family and if the work does not interfere with their schooling. Honduran statutes build upon the protections in the Constitution.(41) The Labor Code and the Code on Childhood and Adolescence prohibit children under age 14 from working under any circumstances, and allows children ages 14 to 17 to work only with written parental consent and authorization from the STSS.(38, 48) Children ages 14 to 15 may work no more than four hours per day; children between the ages of 16 and 18 may work no more than 6 hours per day and can be granted special permission by the STSS to work in the evening if it does not affect their schooling.(7, 38, 48) However, children working in agricultural and stock-raising undertakings that do not permanently employ more than ten workers are not covered by the Labor Code's minimum age protections because these sectors are excluded from the scope of the Labor Code.(6, 10, 38) Although Article 8 of Executive Agreement STSS-211-01 states that minors may not perform dangerous activities even as part of a vocational training program, under Article 122 of the Children's Code minors ages 16 and 17 may receive authorization from the STSS to perform dangerous labor if they have completed technical training approved by the STSS.(6, 7, 28, 42, 48) The STSS has indicated that requests for authorizations for minors to work have decreased; however, it has also acknowledged that this decrease does not mean that the number of children working has actually declined, including those working in hazardous activities.(39)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Secretariat of Labor and Social Security (STSS)	Inspect labor conditions and enforces child labor laws.(30) Responsible for national policy on child labor and the Roadmap for the Prevention and Eradication of the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(10)
Honduran Institute for Children and the Family (INHFA)	Supervise and provide technical assistance to private and public institutions that work to protect the well-being of children, including victims of child labor and their families.(7, 30, 53)
The Ministry of Development and Social Inclusion	Coordinate social protection policy and provide services to vulnerable populations, including victims of violence, trafficking, and sexual and economic exploitation.(10)
The Public Ministry's Office of the Special Prosecutor for Children	Prosecute crimes against children, including those involving children in trafficking, hazardous labor, forced labor, or commercial sexual exploitation.(7, 10, 54) It also works together with the police and INHFA to rescue and protect victims.(10)

Law enforcement agencies in Honduras took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the STSS employed 141 inspectors who were all trained to enforce child labor laws, an increase of 20 from 2012.(9) During the reporting period, 60 inspectors participated in a program on strengthening labor inspections that was financed by the government of Canada; the program included child labor components, and the STSS worked with the ILO to develop programs focused on strengthening child labor inspections.(9) The ILO and the Government of Canada also financed regional trainings and helped support the Second National Congress of Inspectors, which provided general labor training to 97 percent of STSS inspectors.(9) The STSS reported that it had a budget of approximately $2.1 million in 2013 for salaries, fixed organizational costs, and materials required for investigations.(9)

In 2013, the STSS conducted 6,037 comprehensive labor inspections and 11,506 complaint-driven inspections.(9, 55) The STSS reported that 795 children were removed from work as a result of its labor inspections in the cities of El Progreso Yoro, Tegucigalpa, and San Pedro Sula; none were removed in 2012.(9) However, none of the children removed from work subsequently received assistance.(9) The STSS reported that the Inspector General of Labor registered 16,018 citations and 43 infractions, but no sanctions or fines were administered during the reporting period.(9) The Inspector General does not disaggregate statistics on labor violations; so it is not possible to determine how many of these were child labor violations.(9) Most of the inspections take place in the urban areas of San Pedro Sula and Tegucigalpa, and the ILO Committee of Experts reported that resource constraints limited labor inspections in rural areas and in indigenous communities, where hazardous activities in agriculture and fishing or diving are concentrated.(7, 9, 56)

The process for inspections includes a preliminary visit, during which inspectors inform companies of violations but do not issue fines or citations nor do they provide assistance to children who are found working.(7, 57) Employers have 3 days to address violations and make corrections.(7, 58) Inspectors then conduct a reinspection to determine whether the violations have been rectified. If violations are found during reinspection, inspectors recommend that the Inspector General issue penalties.(58) Reports indicate that if serious violations involving underage children or children working in hazardous conditions are found during the preliminary visits, they are immediately reported by the inspectors to their supervisors, but are not necessarily corrected.(59, 60) This two-tiered inspection process does not automatically penalize violators on their first offense, puts a strain on the limited human and financial resources of the inspectorate, and may not sufficiently deter employers from exploiting children in the workplace, particularly in remote rural areas. Furthermore, the lack of publicly available information on the results of inspections prevents an adequate understanding of how effective this inspection system is in practice.(9)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Public Ministry's Office of the Special Prosecutor for Children (OSPC) in Tegucigalpa reported having 38 trafficking investigations, most of which involved the sex trafficking of children. The OSPC reported no labor trafficking prosecutions or convictions.(7, 10, 35, 60, 61) The OSPC is staffed by two prosecutors and eight research analysts who investigate and prosecute cases of child labor.(7, 9, 54)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Gradual and Progressive Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinate all matters related to child labor and includes members of the STSS, INHFA, the Supreme Court, the Social Security Administration, the Public Ministry, and other government entities.(30, 53)
The Inter-Institutional Commission Against Exploitation and Commercial Sex Trafficking (CICESCT)	Coordinate the efforts of government institutions and civil society groups to combat commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking.(28, 30) CICESCT consists of representatives from 52 organizations, including several government ministries and various NGOs.(28, 30)

During the reporting period, the Inter-Institutional Commission Against Exploitation and Commercial Sex Trafficking (CICESCT) incorporated Decree 59-2012, the Anti-Trafficking law passed in 2012, as part of its mandate.(62)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Honduras has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Second National Plan of Action to Prevent and Eradicate Child Labor (NPAPECL II) (2008–2015)	Aims to prevent children from dropping out of school before they can legally work, to withdraw children who are currently engaged in the worst forms of child labor, and to ensure that the laws that protect children are enforced.(30, 53, 63) The Government has established regional subcommittees in Choluteca, Comayagua, Danlí, El Progreso, Juticalpa, La Ceiba, and San Pedro Sula to oversee local implementation of NPAPECL II.(25)
Roadmap for the Eradication of Child Labor (the Roadmap) in Honduras	Aims to improve coordination of the Government's responses to child labor issues.(30) The Roadmap works at the national, regional, and subregional levels and incorporates issues related to poverty, education, health, and social mobilization.(10, 30)

Policy	Description
Executive Decree PCM-011-2011, Article 2*	Mandates that all Secretariats and their dependencies must incorporate the issue of child labor elimination and prevention into their institutional strategic planning in accordance with the framework of the National Plan.(3, 4, 64, 65)
Country Vision (2010-2038) and National Plan (2010–2022)*	Guides national policy to reduce extreme poverty by addressing education, and social protection systems. Both the Country Vision and the National Plan incorporate child labor issues.(7, 30, 66)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

In 2013, the Government of Honduras strengthened the capacity of the regional subcommittees against child labor in Choluteca, Comayagua, Danlí, El Progreso, Juticalpa, La Ceiba, and San Pedro Sula.(8) Training was provided to staff on topics such as prevention, withdrawal, and protection for child workers. The Government also carried out workshops for the development of action plans for each of the regional subcommittees to incorporate institutional and sector strategies to combat child labor.(8)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Honduras funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Voucher 10,000*‡	Government conditional cash transfer program that aims to reduce poverty by providing financial assistance to the head of household, provided that children meet educational and health requirements.(30, 67) Aims to ensure that indigenous and Afro-Honduran households have access to the Program.(67) The total number of beneficiaries reached by the Program during the reporting period was 285,000.(7, 68) During the reporting period, the Voucher 10,000 program added child labor to its specific objectives.(9)
My First Job Program*‡	STSS program that connects disadvantaged youth with vocational opportunities.(28, 30, 69) The program includes job skills and vocational training, internships, job placement, and public-private partnerships to support on-the-job training.(7, 28)

The program offers training for the entire family.(32, 73-75)
Civic Saturdays*†‡	Secretariat of Education program to reintroduce a Saturday school day in 2013, in part to help reduce child labor. Topics covered during Saturday classes are Honduran culture, laws pertaining to children, and recreational activities.(9, 76)

Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research in Honduras.(77)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor	Government of Spain-funded $1.3 million 2-year multicountry education and monitoring program for the eradication of child labor.(78)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Honduras.

In 2013, the Government of Honduras carried out awareness-raising campaigns on hazardous child labor in mining in the Municipality of El Corpus, Choluteca.(8) Additionally, it carried out 19 training sessions with children, parents, and community members on child labor eradication and prevention in the cities of, Choluteca, El Paraíso, Islas de la Bahía, Intibucá, La Ceiba, La Paz, Olancho, Santa Bárbara, and Tegucigalpa.(8)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Honduras (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Ensure that minimum age protections are extended to apply to children in agricultural and stock-raising undertakings that do not permanently employ more than 10 workers.	2013
Enforcement	Ensure adequate funding is provided to the STSS, including resources for inspections in areas where child labor is prevalent, such as rural areas and indigenous communities, where children engage in hazardous activities in agriculture and fishing or diving.	2010 – 2013
	Ensure that minors that work have authorization from the STSS.	2011 – 2013
	Ensure that the two-tiered inspection system does not create an incentive to employ children and consider how the system may affect the limited resources of the labor inspectorate.	2011 – 2013
	Make information publicly available on the sectors in which inspections were carried out and sanctions imposed for child labor violations.	2012 – 2013
Social Programs	Assess the impact of social programs, such as Civic Saturdays and My First Job, on reducing child labor.	2010 – 2013
	Continue targeted programs to address the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, fishing, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2013

India

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, India made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government continues to implement its National Child Labor Project, its project to assist bonded laborers through the provision of loans and alternative livelihoods, and several social protection schemes that address many of the root causes of child labor. In 2013, the Government passed the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, which protects children from sexual offenses and children and adults from trafficking and forced labor and issued guidelines to each state on how to handle cases of child labor trafficking. The Government also launched the Crime and Criminal Tracking and Networking System, which connects all of India's 15,000 police stations. However, children in India continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in the manufacturing of a number of products in the informal economy. Basic legal protections for children remain weak. Legislation to prohibit work by children under the age of 14 and to proscribe hazardous work for children under 18 was introduced in Parliament in 2012 but has yet to be passed.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in India are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in the manufacturing of a number of products in the informal economy.(1-4) Data from the Government's 2009–2010 National Sample Survey indicate that four-fifths of child workers reside in rural areas. Children who belong to scheduled castes or tribes are also more likely than other children to be engaged in child labor.(5, 6) Children engage in the manufacturing of goods, many in the informal economy and increasingly in home-based production.(6-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in India.

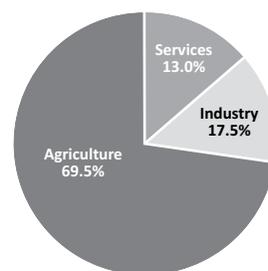

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	2.0 (4,371,604)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	88.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	0.8

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

India remains a source, transit, and destination country for minors trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in domestic service, agriculture, and activities such as begging and brick making.(35, 53, 58) The majority of these children are Indians trafficked within the country.(35) There are also reports that children have been recruited to serve as soldiers by extralegal armed groups in zones where armed conflict is occurring.(35, 57, 59)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

India has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

* No conscription or no standing military.

Indian law is not fully consistent with international standards regarding child labor. The lack of a national minimum age for employment increases the likelihood that very young children may engage in activities that jeopardize their health and safety.(71) The minimum age for hazardous work is also not consistent with international standards and may jeopardize the health and safety of young people ages 14 through 17. Additionally, children in the informal sector do not have the same legal protections those working in the formal sector.(60, 71) In 2013, a parliamentary committee reviewed proposed legislation to prohibit work for children under the age of 14 and to proscribe hazardous work for children under 18. The new legislation would also increase penalties for violations of the law related to child labor.(17, 72) The parliamentary committee released its report in December and recommended some changes to the proposed legislation, which has not been enacted.(17, 73) In addition to national legislation, State governments also have the authority to pass legislation establishing a minimum age for work. In 2012, the State of Rajasthan passed legislation establishing a legal minimum working age of 18 years.(13)

In April 2013, the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act amended the Indian Penal Code to protect children and adults from being trafficked into exploitative situations, including forced labor situations.(64) Penalties include fines and up to lifetime imprisonment.(64)

There is no compulsory military service in India. The voluntary military age is set by military regulations and varies depending on the branch of the military, starting at 17 years.(69) However, the Government states that the minimum age to serve in combat is 18 years.(57, 74, 75)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
National Commission for the Protection of Child Rights	Investigate cases that may involve a violation of a child's rights or a lack of proper implementation of laws relating to the protection and development of children, including those related to child labor.(17)
State-level labor inspectors	Enforce state and national labor laws.(17)
National Human Rights Commission	Monitor implementation of the Bonded Labor System (Abolition) Act. Monitor state level action against bonded labor through its review of quarterly reports by state governments on bonded labor and through exploratory and investigative missions.(76, 77)
Central Bureau of Investigation's anti-human trafficking unit	Conduct operations to arrest traffickers of women and children.(78)

Organization/Agency	Role
Anti-human Trafficking Units (AHTUs)	Investigate cases of human trafficking at the local level, including cases of child labor.(35)
State and local police	Enforce laws pertaining to human trafficking.(79)

Law enforcement agencies in India took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms, during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, children were rescued from hazardous work in Delhi, Rajasthan, Andhra Pradesh, Jharkhand, and Karnataka. (4, 52, 80-83) During the reporting period, labor inspectors conducted 110,821 inspections, which identified 6,877 identified child labor violations.(84)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, 920 prosecutions and 596 child labor law convictions took place.(84) Research was unable to uncover information regarding the number of prosecutions and convictions related to bonded labor, including child bonded labor. In previous years, despite rescue and rehabilitation of child laborers, prosecutions have not always taken place. (35, 85) In cases for which child labor prosecutions were launched, resolution has been unduly delayed because the judicial system is backlogged and overburdened.(35, 86) The Ministry of Home Affairs issued guidelines to all state governments on how to handle cases of child trafficking. These guidelines outline the specific steps that police and district officials must take when handling cases of child trafficking and forced child labor.(4, 87) In 2013, the state governments of Andhra Pradesh, Kolkata, Maharashtra, and Tamil Nadu provided anti-trafficking training to police officers.(75)

Complaints about hazardous child labor can be made through a toll-free helpline, Child Line. In 2013, Child Line expanded to 67 additional cities and now operates in a total of 269 cities across India.(88) After a complaint is received on Child Line, the complaint is given to the police to investigate and rescue children.(79)

In 2013, the Ministry of Home Affairs launched the Criminal Tracking and Networking System on a pilot basis.(79) This system connects all of India's 15,000 police stations and enables the police to monitor trends in serious crimes better, including trafficking.(79) It is not known whether the tracking system will disaggregate its data to include child trafficking victims, and India is not currently collecting or making public this data through other mechanisms.

During the reporting period, the Government established 100 new anti-human trafficking units across India to bring the total number of Anti-human Trafficking Units (AHTUs) to 300.(35)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Labor Technical Advisory Committee	Recommend new occupations and processes to be added to the list of hazardous occupations and processes under the Child Labor (Prohibition & Regulation) Act, 1986.(89)
Central Advisory Board on Child Labor	Review, monitor, and suggest amendments to child labor policy and legislation.(89, 90)
Central Monitoring Committee	Supervise, monitor and evaluate actions of the National Child Labor Projects across India. Some State governments maintain State-Level Monitoring Committees to monitor the National Child Labor Projects in their states.(89, 91)
Core Group on Child Labor	Coordinate the convergence of social protection schemes to reduce child labor. Composed of members from the Ministries of Human Resource Development, Women and Child Development, Housing and Urban Poverty Alleviation, Rural Development, Social Justice and Empowerment, Panchayati Raj and Home Affairs and chaired by the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE).(92)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Women and Child Development (MWCD)	Coordinate all anti-trafficking policies and programs for women and children.(88)
Ministry of Home Affairs Anti-Human Trafficking Cell	Implement the Government's nationwide plan to combat human trafficking by coordinating with states to establish AHTUs and training thousands of officials to combat human trafficking.(79)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of India has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy on Child Labor	Describes concrete actions for combating hazardous child labor for children under age 14, including implementing legislation and providing direct assistance to children.(93)
State Action Plans on Child Labor in Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Gujarat, Jharkhand, Karnataka, Maharashtra, Orissa, and Tamil Nadu	Details how a State government should work to eliminate child labor from hazardous industries. (94-98) Calls for the coordination of social protection programs and services provided by government and civil society organizations to support the livelihood of households vulnerable to child labor. Resulted in the creation of task forces at the state, district, and village levels.(97)
National Skills Development Policy	Includes provisions for child laborers, including short-term skills training for children removed from the worst forms of child labor.(99)
National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Women and Children	Aims to rehabilitate and reintegrate victims of trafficking into society.(100)
Twelfth 5-Year Plan (2012–2017)	Details how the Government should implement its vast array of social protection schemes, including provisions for education, health, and increased livelihood support.(101)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of India participated in and funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description and Objectives
National Child Labor Project (NCLP) Scheme*‡	MOLE scheme that operates at the district level to identify working children under age 14, withdraws them from hazardous work, and provides them with education and vocational training.(77) Sets up and administers NCLP schools, mainstreams children into formal education and provides them with stipends, meals, and health checkups.(77) In 2013, a task force was set up to review the program and has submitted suggested improvements to the government.(77) Between April 1, 2012 and March 31, 2013, 72,976 children were rescued, rehabilitated and mainstreamed into NCLP schools in 266 districts across India.(17)
Convergence Model Project	$6.85 million USDOL-funded, 5-year project that supported the Government's efforts to combat hazardous child labor by linking children to the NCLP scheme and increasing their families' access to the Government's various social protection and welfare programs, including the National Rural Employment Guarantee Scheme (NREGS), the Rashtriya Swasthya Bima Yojna Health Insurance Scheme, Education for All Scheme, and the Skills Development Initiative Scheme. Concluded in June 2013. Referred 22,916 children to education services and 4,437 families to social protection schemes.(17, 102)
Bonded Labor Scheme*‡	MOLE scheme that rescues and rehabilitates child and adult bonded laborers. Each rescued bonded laborer is provided with 20,000 rupees ($325) and offered assistance through additional social protection schemes.(77) Supports the funding of a survey at the district level every 3 years on the prevalence of bonded labor as part of this scheme. Rehabilitates bonded laborers identified through the survey.(77)
Food Security Scheme*‡†	Ministry of Agriculture scheme that provides 5 kg of food grains at subsidized prices every month to families living under the poverty line every month.(103-105)
Midday Meal Program*‡	Ministry of Human Resource Development (MHRD) scheme that provides free lunch to children in government primary and upper primary schools as well as to NCLP students.(106)
National Rural Employment Guarantee Scheme (NREGS)*‡	Ministry of Rural Development (MRD) scheme that provides 100 days of employment to every rural adult living under the poverty line.(17, 107) Research has shown that this program can lead to a reduction in child labor.(107)

Program	Description and Objectives
Rashtriya Swasthya Bima Yojna (RSBY) Health Insurance Scheme*‡	MOLE health insurance scheme for families below the poverty line. RSBY beneficiaries receive up to $485 to cover the cost of hospitalization.(17, 108)
Education for All Scheme (Sarva Shiksha Abhiyan)‡	MHRD scheme that ensures the achievement of universal elementary education and addresses the education needs of 192 million children, including the provision of appropriate schooling facilities and qualified teachers. (109) Linked to NCLP scheme to ensure children's smooth transition from NCLP schools into the formal education system.(77)
Integrated Child Protection Scheme (ICPS)*‡	MWCD scheme that improves children's access to protection services, creates public awareness, increases accountability on child protection, enhances service delivery, and sets up a monitoring and evaluation system. Government expanded its investment in the scheme by allocating more than $41 million to implement ICPS from January 2012 to March 2013.(88)
Welfare of Working Children in Need of Care‡	MWCD scheme that provides non-formal education and vocational training to street children and working children living in urban areas not covered by other MOLE schemes. Received $1.35 million from January 2012 to March 2013, which the MWCD used to fund 104 projects that supported 10,400 beneficiaries.(88)
National Rural Livelihoods Mission*‡	MRD scheme that enables poor households to access gainful self-employment and skilled wage employment opportunities through social mobilization, institutional building, financial inclusion, and livelihoods promotion.(110)
Grants-in-Aid Scheme‡	MOLE scheme that funds more than 20 NGOs in order for them to provide rehabilitation services to working children.(77)
Skill Development Initiative Scheme‡	MOLE scheme that provides vocational training programs and gives priority to children withdrawn from child labor and to the parents of child laborers.(111)
Reducing Vulnerability to bondage in India through the Promotion of Decent Work Project ‡	MOLE project, in cooperation with the ILO, to reduce bonded labor in brick kilns and rice mills in Tamil Nadu. Project integrates existing government social and welfare programs to target vulnerable workers.(112) MOLE expanded this project to address bonded labor in the states of Andhra Pradesh, Haryana and Orissa based on this pilot project.(77)
Ujjawala Scheme‡	MWCD scheme that funded 52 new projects in 2013 and continues to support another 207 projects to help reintegrate, rehabilitate, and repatriate trafficking victims, including children.(88)
Anti-trafficking activities‡	MWCD operates these activities in collaboration with NGOs and state governments. Anti-trafficking activities include raising awareness, maintaining assistance hotlines, rescuing victims and providing shelter homes, counseling, legal aid, medical care, repatriation, and rehabilitative services.(88)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of India.

In 2013, the Government passed the Food Security Act, which provides up to 5 kg of food grains every month at subsidized prices to families living under the poverty line.(103-105) The Food Security Scheme, established by this Act, is projected to reach 67 percent of the population and will cost an estimated $4 billion annually to implement. (103-105) In 2013, the Ministry of Rural Development announced a new pilot project under the National Rural Livelihoods Mission scheme to address bonded labor. The project will work in 10 districts in 5 states to identify and rehabilitate bonded laborers through the provision of loans and the promotion of alternative livelihoods.(113, 114) During the reporting period, state governments continued to conduct surveys on bonded labor under the Bonded Labor Scheme. Although these surveys are conducted, data on the prevalence of bonded labor in India's 28 states were unavailable. Additionally, the data that have been collected are not disaggregated to capture the number of children who are victims of bonded labor.(77)

In 2013, Indonesia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued to strengthen its provincial, district, and municipal-level efforts to combat child labor and human trafficking by adopting and implementing local-level regulations, coordinating mechanisms, policies, and action plans and by opening new investigations for 63 child trafficking cases. The Government also expanded access to social protection programs through the development of a social protection card system. However, children in Indonesia continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service. Enforcement of child labor laws also remains a challenge. Law enforcement officials lack training on child labor and trafficking and the Government lacks comprehensive publicly available data on child labor and trafficking investigations, violations, and convictions.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Indonesia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service.(1, 2) Data from the Government’s 2010 Labor Force Survey (Sakernas) indicate that there are 2 million children working in rural areas and 386,000 children working in urban and peri-urban areas.(1) There are also substantial regional differences in children’s employment. For example, 1 percent of children between ages 10 and 14 work in Jakarta compared to 8 percent of children in Sulawesi (Central Indonesia) and 9 percent in Eastern Indonesia.(1) Children’s work also increases sharply with age. For example, 5.2 percent of 10-year-olds work compared with 13.5 percent of 14-year-olds.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Indonesia.

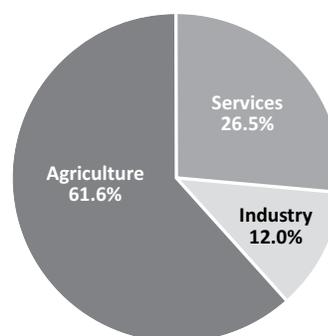

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10-14 yrs.	3.7 (816,363)
Attending School (%)	10-14 yrs.	92.4
Combining Work and School (%)	10-14 yrs.	2.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		99.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Labor Force Survey (Sakernas), 2010.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of rubber, palm oil, and tobacco (5-9)
	Production of cloves,* coconuts,* coffee,* silk cotton (kapok),* melinjo fruit,* sugarcane,* and tea* (5, 10-13)
	Fishing, including fish processing (8, 14, 15)
Industry	Small-scale mining,† including gold (8, 16-18)
	Construction, activities unknown† (11, 19)
	Production of asphalt,* oil,* brick,* cigarettes,* footwear (including sandals), floor coverings,* marble,* stone,* textiles,* and tin* (8, 11-13, 16, 20)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Domestic service and fishing* as a result of human trafficking (15, 25-27)
	Use in sale, production, and trafficking of drugs, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (15, 25)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (15, 27-32)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Indonesia is primarily a source country for child trafficking. Children, mostly girls, are trafficked to Malaysia, Taiwan, and the Middle East where they are subject to commercial sexual exploitation and domestic servitude.(27, 30, 31). Girls are also trafficked internally for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation at mining operations in Jambi, Maluku, and Papua provinces, the Batam District, North Sulawesi, Riau Island, and West Papua provinces. In addition, children are trafficked for sex tourism in Bali and Riau Island.(32) Although information is limited, children are reported to also be trafficked internally for domestic servitude and fishing.(27) Children have reportedly been abducted from their homes and used for drug trafficking.(25)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Indonesia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 34 of the National Education Law, Law No. 20/2003 (44)

In 2013, local governments issued several provincial-, district-, and municipal-level regulations on the worst forms of child labor and child protection. At the provincial level, the Riau provincial government issued Provincial Regulation No. 4/2013 on the Services, Placement and Protection of Workers, including Article 52, which prohibits the worst forms of child labor. The South Kalimantan provincial government also issued Provincial Regulation No. 13/2013 on Child Protection.⁽⁴³⁾ At the district and municipal levels, the District of Kebumen, Central Java, issued District Regulation No. 3/2013 on the Implementation of Child Protection; the Sanggau, West Kalimantan District Government issued the District Regulation on Child Protection; and the Municipality of Sukabumi issued Municipal Regulation No. 4/2013 on Child Protection.^(43, 45) All of these regulations reinforce the legal and regulatory framework on the worst forms of child labor.

The Domestic Worker's Protection Draft Bill continued to be deliberated by the legislature in 2013.⁽⁴⁶⁾ The adoption of the Domestic Worker's Protection Bill would be a stronger source of protections for child domestic workers because the current Ministry of Women's Empowerment and Child Protection's (MOWECP) child domestic worker guidelines is intended for implementation by local governments and it is up to them to enforce the guidelines.^(47, 48)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Manpower and Transmigration's (MOMT) Directorate General of Labor Development and Supervision	Monitor and enforce child labor laws. ^(8, 43) Provide information to employers on child labor laws and regulations, report child labor violations, and work with law enforcement officials to prosecute any child labor violations. ^(8, 49) Refer children found during inspections to the local Women's Empowerment and Family Planning Body (BPPKB) and/or Integrated Service Center for Empowering Women and Children (P2TP2A) to access appropriate social services. ⁽⁴³⁾
MOMT Directorate of Norms Supervision of Women and Child Workers	Receive child labor complaints via telephone, fax, or email. ⁽⁴³⁾
Ministry of Women's Empowerment and Child Protection (MOWECP)	Operate a Children's Helpline in order to receive complaints of children in need of protection, including child workers. ⁽⁴³⁾
National Police, including Women and Children's Service Unit	Conduct inspections and raids as well as make arrests in response to all crimes, including those related to child forced labor and trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and children participating in illicit activities. Conduct joint inspections with the MOMT, other government agencies, and the National Commission on Child Protection (KPAI). ^(15, 26, 43, 49, 50)

Law enforcement agencies in Indonesia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Ministry of Manpower and Transmigration (MOMT) employed 2,384 labor inspectors, of whom, 1,460 are general labor inspectors, 563 are civil servant investigators, and 361 are specialized inspectors tasked with enforcing the labor laws in specific industries such as medicine or engineering, including laws related to child labor.^(43, 51)

Indonesia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, the Minister of MOMT urged employers, trade unions, and families to report violations of child labor laws and regulations. The Minister also stated that employers who employed minors in violation of the Child Protection Act would have their licenses revoked and would face criminal prosecution.(52)

The MOMT allocated $35.6 million for enforcement of labor laws, including child labor, at the federal level. In addition, each province and district head allocates a portion of funds for labor inspections and investigations.(43) Raids on reported child labor violations took place during the reporting period; however, research did not reveal the number of child labor inspections conducted, the number of violations identified, or the number of children assisted as a result of inspections because the Government does not have a system in place to disaggregate data.(14, 43) The MOMT provided 4 months of training to labor inspectors on the worst forms of child labor. The ILO also issued a guidebook on the worst forms of child labor to labor inspectors.(43) Government, ILO, and NGO officials have stated that there are not enough labor inspectors to address the child labor problem in Indonesia adequately and that labor inspectors are not provided with sufficient resources to carry out labor inspections effectively.(43, 53)

Criminal Law Enforcement

During the reporting period, 1,000 police officers and 563 MOMT civil service investigators were deployed nationwide to focus on criminal investigations pertaining to child labor and trafficking.(43, 48)

The police reported opening 112 new trafficking cases involving 155 child and adult victims, of which 60 were girls and 3 were boys.(48, 54) The Attorney General's Office provided anti-trafficking training to 40 law enforcement and judicial officials in Jakarta, 45 law enforcement and judicial officials in West Java, 40 law enforcement and judicial officials in West Kalimantan, and 45 law enforcement and judicial officials in West Nusa Tenggara. Additionally, the Ministry of Education provided anti-child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation training to 80 law enforcement and school teachers in North Sumatra.(54) MOMT also trained civil service investigators on the worst forms of child labor.(43)

Although there is no information on the exact number of convictions, the Attorney General's Task Force on Terrorism and Trans National Crime initiated 126 prosecutions.(55) Many of these prosecutions and convictions stemmed from violations related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children; those found violating the law were sentenced to prison and fined.(54) Information is not available on the exact number of prosecutions and convictions related to violations of laws on the worst forms of child labor. The National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons notes that the lack of data hinders efforts to improve the prevention, prosecution, and protection of human trafficking.(54)

Despite the attention to anti-trafficking, the National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons reports indicate that the police and prosecutors are unfamiliar with anti-trafficking legislation and are unclear about their role.(54) The MOWCEP issued recommendations and has begun implementing guidance on identifying trafficking victims and standard operating procedures for providing integrated services.(54)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Action Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate and monitor policy and program efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor at the national level. Establish metrics for the realization of children's rights, supervising the recruitment of workers, and assisting regional governments to appropriately budget for regional action committees. Chaired by MOMT with membership from 13 ministries, law enforcement institutions, trade unions, NGOs, and employers' associations.(8, 43, 51)
Provincial-level and District-level Child Labor Committees	Coordinate and monitor policy and program efforts, and develop action plans to eliminate the worst forms of child labor at the local level.(56)
MOWCEP	Coordinate the development and implementation of policies related to child protection.(42)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
KPAI	Disseminate information related to child protection, including child labor legislation; receive complaints, including those that pertain to child labor; monitor and evaluate the implementation of child protection efforts; and provide feedback on child protection to the President of Indonesia.(42)
National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate the country's anti-trafficking efforts, including child trafficking.(57) Chaired by MOWECP, which coordinates the Task Force across 19 ministries. Includes six working groups that develop action plans and budgets for programs to address trafficking in persons.(58)
Sub-Task Force on the Prevention of Child Participation in Trafficking in Persons	Organize regular coordination meetings, provide technical training, and produce publications on the prevention of trafficking in persons. Chaired by the Ministry of National Education and Culture's (MONE's) Director for Early Childhood, Non-formal and Informal Education with membership from six ministries, the police, JARAK (network of NGOs working for the elimination of child labor), the Indonesian Journalists Alliance, and KPAI.(43)
Provincial and District Task Forces to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate the prevention, rehabilitation, reintegration, and the development and enforcement of relevant legislation.(51, 58)

The number of provincial child labor action committees increased from 32 in 2012 to 33 in 2013. Additionally, the number of child labor action committees at the district and municipal levels increased from 159 in 2012 to 162 in 2013.(43) However, the various entities responsible for working on child labor at the national, provincial, district, and municipal levels do not always coordinate with one another.(49, 59) The West Java Provincial Government issued a Governor's Decree to establish a Provincial Task Force to address the issue of street children.(45)

The Government increased the number of anti-trafficking task forces in the provinces from 28 to 30, and in districts and towns from 90 to 165; the task forces all coordinate among provincial and district governments (including police, prosecutors and courts), NGOs, and the international community.(54) The MOWECP led a national meeting to improve coordination and cooperation among provincial-level anti-trafficking task forces. As a result, five agreements among five sets of tasks forces were made to prevent human trafficking.(54)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Indonesia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan (NAP) for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2002–2022)	Provides the national government's policy framework for the elimination of child labor in three operational phases.(43, 45, 55)
Provincial and District Action Plans for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Provides provincial and district government's policy framework for the elimination of child labor.(45) In 2013, 4 provincial committees and 12 district and municipal action committees finalized action plans on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.(43, 55)
National, Provincial, and District Plans of Action on the Elimination of Trafficking of Women and Children (2009–2014)	National Plan involves coordination among 19 ministries and formation of 6 sub-task forces under various ministries, including a sub-task force on the prevention of the trafficking of children under MONE. Serves to promote the prevention of trafficking in persons, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(48) Provincial and District Plans are local plans of action on the elimination of trafficking of women and children.(48, 50)
National Mid-Term Development Plan (2010–2014)	Incorporates various child labor prevention and reduction strategies into these development agendas.(60)
UN Partnership for Development Framework (2011–2015)	Tracks the Government's ability to implement the NAP effectively by measuring the number of district action committees and action plans formed, of provincial child labor monitoring systems developed, and of district child labor committees with representation from youth and/or women.(61)
Minimum Service Standards of Basic Education Program (2011–2013)*	Aims to improve access and quality of public education by limiting the distance that elementary and junior secondary schools can be located from children's households, specifying minimum allowable teacher-student ratios, and identifying minimum teacher education qualifications.(60, 62)

* The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

Indonesia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, MOMT, in collaboration with the Ministry for National Development Planning, the ILO, and NGOs, drafted the Roadmap for the Elimination of Child Labor, which is intended to replace the third operational phase of the National Action Plan and is being finalized.(43, 55, 63) Specifically, the Roadmap aims to strengthen coordination and cooperation with stakeholders at all levels for the elimination of all child labor; develop coordinating mechanisms and policies to accelerate actions to eliminate child labor; mainstream the elimination of child labor into national development policies; and mobilize resources from stakeholders for the elimination of all child labor.(48, 55, 64)

The National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons notes that Provincial and District Task Forces to Combat Trafficking in Persons lack Plans of Action on the Elimination of Trafficking of Women and Children.(54)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Indonesia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Elimination Program (Pengurangan Pekerja Anak)‡	MOMT program that removes child laborers ages 7 to 15 years from their workplaces and temporarily places them for 4 months in shelters where they receive counseling, remedial education for re-entry into school, and financial assistance of $21 each month (8, 43, 51, 65) In 2013, the program worked across 21 provinces and 89 cities or districts in Indonesia, removed 11,000 children from child labor, and provided 366 shelters and 503 social workers to assist in this process.(55, 65)
Family Hope Program (Program Keluarga Harapan)‡	The Ministry of Social Affairs (MOSA) managed conditional cash transfer program, which provides services for child laborers who have dropped out of school. Targets the poorest 10 percent of the population and provides cash assistance to families who meet education criteria, including school enrollment and attendance.(43, 51, 63, 66, 67) In 2013, assisted 2,400,000 households.(55) Research shows that conditional cash transfer programs have slightly reduced child labor in Indonesia.(68)
Child Social Welfare Program (Program Kesejahteraan Sosial Anak)‡	MOSA administers conditional cash transfer program, which provides conditional cash transfers to street children, assistance to parents of child laborers at risk, and grants to implementing partners for the reintegration of trafficked children.(2, 15, 26, 43) In 2013, the program provided support to 9,314 street children.(55)
West Java Street Children Program‡	West Java provincial government program to assist street children.(45)
Bandung Municipality Street Children Program‡	Municipality of Bandung program to assist street children.(45)
Promote: Decent Work for Domestic Workers to End Child Domestic Labor	USDOL-funded 4-year, $5 million program implemented by ILO-IPEC. Expands legal protections for child domestic workers, builds capacity of domestic worker organizations to address child domestic work, and promotes national and regional knowledge, awareness, and research of domestic service.(24)
Eliminate Exploitive Child Labor Through Education and Economic Development (EXCEED)	USDOL-funded 4 year, $5.5 million program implemented by Save the Children that provides educational services to children at risk of or engaging in exploitative labor in domestic service, commercial agriculture, street work, and commercial sexual exploitation by providing educational services.(21) Between April and September 2013, withdrew 1,571 children and prevented 1,236 children from exploitative labor and supported one city to develop a district action plan to become a 'child friendly' city.(69)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Indonesia, aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor; improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research; and strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(70)
Social Protection Cards (Kartu Perlindungan Sosial)†‡	Government program that provides a social protection card in order for beneficiaries to access Government social protection programs such as the unconditional cash transfer program, rice for the poor program, and education scholarships program.(66) As of October 2013, the Government issued social protection cards to 15.5 million poor households covering 25 percent of households of the lowest socioeconomic status in Indonesia.(63)

Program	Description
Unconditional Cash Transfer Program (Bantuan Langsung Semetara Masyarakat)*‡	Government unconditional cash transfer program to increase livelihoods of the poorest families.(66) In 2013, the program budgeted $829 million for its unconditional cash transfer program and distributed $13.35 million to 15.5 million households twice between June and October 2013.(55)
Rice for the Poor (Raskin)*‡	Government subsidized food program that provides rice for the poorest 25 percent of households.(66)
Social Security Organizing Body for Health (BPJS Kesehatan)†, plus Regional Health Security (Jamkesda)*	Government national health program that incorporates several existing health programs and provides health services to more than 100 million Indonesians. Incorporates an existing health program which pays the health fees of 86 million poor Indonesians. Additionally, assists millions more poor Indonesians through their local governments.(48, 66, 71, 72)
Education Scholarship (Bantuan Siswa Miskin)‡	Government primary, junior secondary, and senior secondary scholarship program that targets the poorest 25 percent of the population.(51, 60, 63, 66) In 2013, the program assisted 13.5 million students.(55) During 2013, research shows that educational cash transfers and related assistance programs significantly decrease the time spent by children on income-generating activities in Indonesia. In addition, households receiving educational transfers, scholarships and assistance were also found to spend more on educational goods.(73)
Block grants for Schools (Bantuan Operasional Sekolah)*‡	Government block grant program that compensates schools for the loss of income incurred when waiving fees, thereby ensuring free education for poor and vulnerable children in primary, junior secondary, and senior secondary schools.(42, 43, 74) In 2013, the program assisted 36.6 million primary and junior high school students, and 9.8 million senior high school students.(55)
Child Trafficking Services	MOSA and other government program that provides services for child victims of trafficking. In 2013, MOSA provided services to 49 child trafficking victims in Jakarta; the Women's Social Protection Home provided services to 24 child trafficking victims; the Integrated Service Center provided services to 19 child trafficking victims in Jakarta province; and the Integrated Service Center provided services to 11 child trafficking victims in East Java.(54)
Trafficking Awareness Raising Activities	MOWECP, the Ministry of Home Affairs, Ministry of Communication and Information, Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Ministry of Transportation, Ministry of Religious Affairs, and Indonesian National Police awareness raising activities on human trafficking. In 2013, government agencies provided multiple awareness raising activities to prevent human trafficking.(54)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Indonesia.

Iraq

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Iraq made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Increasing insecurity and violence in the country has affected efforts to address child labor. Despite these challenges, the Central Committee on Trafficking in Persons met six times, and counted among its activities lobbying Parliament for improvements to the Anti-Trafficking Act 2012 and establishing a trafficking shelter protocol. The Government adopted new standards for children's education that emphasize inclusiveness and participation. However, children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including through recruitment and use by illegal armed groups. The compulsory education age is lower than the minimum age for entrance to work, leaving children who are no longer required to be in school and not yet permitted to work particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The Government continues to lack programs that target children in relevant worst forms of child labor, particularly those used by armed groups.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Iraq are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, some through recruitment and use by armed groups. (1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Iraq.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	5.3 (454,330)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	75.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		66.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2007, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS4 Survey, 2011.(8)

The newly analyzed results of the 2011 Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS) included in Table 1 show that the percentage of working children ages 5 to 14 has dropped by over half since the previous survey, conducted in 2006. School attendance increased, and the number of children combining work and school dropped over this 5-year period.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Soldiering, including intelligence gathering, couriership, planting improvised explosive devices, acting as a suicide bomber (1-6, 9, 16-18)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of trafficking (4, 6, 19-25)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Sunni and Shiite militias, as well as al-Qaeda in Iraq and the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant, reportedly recruit and use children to gather intelligence, to act as couriers, and to plant improvised explosive devices.(2, 5, 6, 9, 17, 18, 25) During 2013, UNICEF reported that 400 children were found to be engaged in violent activity on behalf of nongovernmental militias.(4) Research found no evidence of the Government recruiting children into the Iraqi armed forces.

Throughout the country, girls are subject to commercial sexual exploitation by their families, who seek financial gain through the traditional institution of temporary marriages.(1, 4, 6, 19, 26) This practice involves a dowry paid to the girl’s family and an agreement to dissolve the marriage after a predetermined length of time.(14, 19, 27, 28) In the Iraqi Kurdistan Region (IKR), child commercial sexual exploitation was reported to be on the rise due to a large increase in Syrian refugees.(4)

Access to education is a challenge due to armed violence targeting teachers or in proximity to schools; school fees, especially for noncitizen children who are exempt from receiving free tuition; and issues related to transportation, especially in rural areas.(1, 4, 9, 29)

Increased insecurity and violence in the country was reported to have had a deleterious effect on Government efforts to combat human trafficking and to protect human rights.(4, 6) According to Government officials and international observers, efforts to combat child labor have been similarly impacted.(28)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Iraq has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). The Iraqi Kurdistan Government does not observe the provisions on child labor in the central government’s labor laws and has drafted a child labor law unique to the region that is pending consideration of the Iraqi Kurdistan Parliament.(28)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12	Constitution (31)

* No conscription or no standing military.

Order No. 89 sets employment conditions for children age 15 and older, including work hours, medical examinations and annual leave policies; it also provides for the creation of a register of employed young persons.(10, 30) Children employed in family enterprises are exempt from the Order’s requirements, which may put these children at greater risk for involvement in the worst forms of child labor.(10, 30) The CEACR has stated that penalties for violating the Order’s provisions on the worst forms of child labor are insufficient.(25)

Forced labor is prohibited by the Constitution.(31) However, the Penal Code only provides for punishment if the perpetrator is a public official. The Government is reportedly drafting revisions to the Labor Law that would extend penalties to anyone convicted of imposing forced labor.(16, 32)

Article 34 of the Constitution guarantees Iraqis the right to free education at all levels.(31) Children in Iraq are required to attend school until age 12.(33) The low compulsory education age leaves children ages 12 to 15 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not permitted to work either.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA)	Enforce child labor laws and regulations through its Child Labor Unit.(9) Conduct research on child labor.(34, 35) Operate shelters for human trafficking victims, including minors.
Ministry of Interior (MOI)	Enforce criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor. Collaborate with MOLSA, the Iraqi Industries Federation, and the Confederation of Trade Unions to conduct inspection campaigns.(9, 25) Run an Anti-Trafficking Department that compiles statistics on human trafficking cases.(9, 25, 35)

Law enforcement agencies in Iraq took action to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

MOLSA has two to three inspectors per province who are assigned to investigate child labor, as well as all other labor violations.(9) In 2012, the most recent period for which data is available, MOLSA reported that 88 businesses had been closed for child labor violations. In 2013, the MOLSA Child Labor Unit Chief attended a UNICEF training on the worst forms of child labor.(9) Subsequently, MOLSA increased its cooperation with UNICEF on efforts to collect data on the problem.(28) Research did not uncover information on the number of labor inspections conducted or the number of labor inspectors employed during the reporting period. Research found no information on funding, violations found, or penalties imposed to enforce child labor laws during the reporting period.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In February 2013, the case of a gang accused of forcing women and girls to work in brothels was sent to Iraq's criminal court system.(6, 11) The Government funded and participated in numerous anti-trafficking trainings for law enforcement, the judiciary, and other officials throughout the reporting period.(6) Although in 2012 the Government compiled and reported statistics on trafficking in persons for the first time, it did not provide this information for 2013.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interministerial Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate overall government efforts to combat child labor. Members include MOLSA, MOI, the Ministry of Education (MOE), and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MFA).(9)
Joint Committee on Street Children	Coordinate the implementation of measures for removing and rehabilitating street children. Members include MOLSA and MOI.(9)
Central Committee on Trafficking in Persons (CCCT)	Oversee implementation of the 2012 Anti-Trafficking Act and serve as the national coordinating body on trafficking in persons. CCCT includes representatives from the Ministries of Health, Finance, Migration and Displacement, Labor and Social Affairs, Human Rights, and Justice; the State Ministry for Women's Affairs; the Council of Ministers Secretariat; and the High Commission on Human Rights.(11, 36)

Limited sources indicate the Interministerial Committee on Child Labor and the Joint Committee on Street Children were active in 2013, though research did not identify their specific activities.(9, 14) The CCCT met six times, despite a security situation that compelled it to institute a rotating chairmanship to protect the personal safety of its representatives. Its activities included advocating for Parliament to strengthen trafficking laws and establishing a protocol for shelters providing services to trafficking victims.(6)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Iraq has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Coalition Provisional Authority Order No. 89	Lays out government policy to address the worst forms of child labor. Order 89 calls for programs to be designed to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor, to provide direct assistance for the removal of children in these labor situations, and to ensure the children have access to basic education.(30) During the reporting period, the Government adopted new standards for children's education (developed with support from UNICEF) that emphasize inclusiveness and participation.(4)

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Human Rights (NAP)	Establishes goals and discrete steps to be taken in specific timeframes to “promote and protect human rights as a core value,” in line with recommendations adopted by Iraq following its submission to the Universal Periodic Review as a party to the UN Declaration of Human Rights. NAP recognizes Iraq’s obligations to international conventions, including the CRC and its optional protocols and ILO C.182 and C.138, and states that such conventions may be applied in Iraqi courts.(37) Sets an action plan to fulfil a proclaimed “right to education” in Iraq, including through financial incentives to families living in poverty to encourage completion of primary and secondary level education.(28, 37)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Iraq funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Hotline for Victims of Trafficking‡	MOI hotline for victims of human trafficking that is routed directly to MOI’s Anti-Trafficking Department.(36)
Child Rights Hotline*	Kurdistan Regional Authority-operated hotline to receive calls for advice or complaints with respect to children’s rights. The hotline received 8,149 calls in 2013.(28)
Informal Education*‡	Government-supported informal education systems, including evening school programs and “fast education modes,” to encourage children ages 12 to 18 years who have dropped out of school to continue their education.(21)
Vulnerable Populations	Australian, Japanese, Dutch, and U.S. Government-funded programs implemented by IOM to focus on the needs of vulnerable populations, including internally displaced persons and refugees, who are often more susceptible to the worst forms of child labor.(35, 38) Include providing psychosocial services specifically for at-risk children in several governorates. Government monitors and assesses the needs of internally displaced persons and returnees to the country to offer assistance and protection, including from trafficking.(38)

* The question of whether this program has an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Iraq.

Research found no evidence of programs to address specific forms of child labor such as children used or recruited by armed groups, or those engaged in street work, construction, brickmaking, or agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Jamaica

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2013, Jamaica made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government amended the trafficking law to include harsher penalties for violators of child trafficking cases, the National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons (NTFATIP) supported many awareness activities, and the Government conducted three small pilot surveys on child labor. Jamaica also continued to participate in the Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP) program and the Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE) program, through which they published a Child Labor Handbook for Professionals. However, children in Jamaica are engaged in child labor in street work and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. There is no law prohibiting the procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, including drug trafficking and production. The country lacks current nationwide comprehensive statistics on child labor, and it has not enacted a draft Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Act.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Jamaica are engaged in child labor in street work and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Jamaica.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Used in the production of pornography* (12-14)
	Forced work in domestic service* and as vendors (1-4, 10)
	Illicit activities, executing financial scams, and serving as drug and gun couriers* (15-17)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

While Jamaica lacks comprehensive statistics on child labor, in 2013 the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) conducted three small surveys on vulnerable children in the parishes of Clarendon, St. Catherine, and St. James.(18)

In Jamaica, trafficking victims are often young girls from low-income and single-parent homes.(11)

Children are commercially sexually exploited in the island's resort areas.(2, 4, 9) Children are known to be used as the subjects of pornographic films and, less commonly, live sex shows.(12) Limited evidence suggests that some Jamaican police and government officials are complicit with hiring children to be a part of prostitution rings.(11)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Jamaica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Trafficking in Persons (Prevention, Suppression and Punishment) Act of 2007; Child Pornography (Prevention) Act of 2009; Sexual Offences Act of 2009; Cyber Crimes Act of 2010 (10, 23, 25-31)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Child Care and Protection Act (2004) (24)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	17.5	Defense Act of 1962 (32, 33)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Education Act of 1965 (3, 26)
Free Public Education	Yes		Jamaican Charter of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms (26, 34)

* No conscription or no standing military.

The law establishes the minimum age for employment at 15, but allows children ages 13 to 14 to engage in light work; however, the list of occupations considered light work has not been finalized by the Government. The draft list includes hair braiding, clerical work, newspaper vending, supermarket packing, and engagement in household chores.(19, 24, 35) While there is no general legislation prohibiting specific hazardous activities to children under 18, the OSH Act, drafted in 2010 and currently under review by Parliament, would specify 45 hazardous occupations

Jamaica

prohibited for children under 18.(1, 29, 30, 35). The draft statute identifies those to include, among others, fishing at sea, working on construction sites, participating in the production of pornography, and engaging in illicit activities that involve weapons. If adopted, the OSH Act will increase current fines for employers who illegally utilize child labor and will enable labor inspectors to access formerly prohibited workplace environments in the informal economic sector.(1, 2, 35) Industry-specific statutes, such as the Building Operations and Works of Engineering Construction Regulations of 1968, the Shipping Act, and the Docks (Safety Health and Welfare) Regulations of 1968, identify as hazardous occupations for children under the age of 18 the operation of cranes and other duties related to lifting appliances in construction and in mining.(30)

Current legislation does not prohibit the use, procurement, or offering of a child for illicit activities, such as for the production and trafficking of drugs.(36) However, the Child Care and Prevention Act bans children from selling alcohol or tobacco products.(24)

In 2013, the Government adopted amendments to the Trafficking in Persons (Prevention, Suppression and Punishment) Act. The law identifies “debt bondage” as a means by which a victim may be coerced, doubles the maximum sentence for human trafficking from 10 years to 20 years, and mandates an additional 10-year sentence to those convicted of an offense in which “aggravating factors” are proven, such as the trafficking of minors by adults.(18)

The minimum age for voluntary military service in Jamaica is 17 years 6 months with parental consent. Children may enlist at age 17 for training purposes only. Children under 18 can enlist with parental consent.(32, 33)

Although education is compulsory, in practice it is difficult to enforce in the absence of an adequate number of truancy officers and the financial circumstances of some families that depend upon income from their children for support.(37)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
MLSS, the Child Labor Unit (CLU), and the Occupation Safety and Health Department (OSHD)	Enforce and administer child labor laws, including monitoring of violations under related laws. Has 15 inspectors and is planning to fill three more positions; OSHD has 30 inspectors who cover businesses and sites in the formal economy.(1, 2, 18) Develop flow charts to facilitated multiple-agency responses. Share information with all other agencies involved in child labor issues.(18)
Child Development Agency (CDA)	Enforce child labor laws, monitor related violations, and oversee efforts to address the problem.(1, 2)
Office of Children’s Advocate (OCA)	Enforce and protect children’s rights, including maintaining records of complaints, conducting investigations, providing legal services for children, and educating the public on office’s services.(3, 38)
Jamaica Constabulary Force (JCF)	Enforce criminal laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor. Includes a Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Unit that investigates and prosecutes cases of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 13, 39)
Centre for the Investigation of Sexual Offences and Child Abuse (CISOCA)	Investigate and prosecute sexual offences and child abuse. Work in victim rehabilitation and conduct public education programs. Branch of the JCF.(40)

Law enforcement agencies in Jamaica took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

Between January and September of 2013, the Occupational Safety and Health Department carried out 1,015 inspections. For FY 2013, approximately $404,000 was allocated to the MLSS Occupation Safety and Health Unit.(18)

There were no cases of child labor found, as inspections are only conducted in factories, building sites, docks, and ships, where child labor is typically not found.(18, 36)

Authorities removed 130 children from child labor situations; however, there is no information available to identify the sectors in which these children were found working.(10)

There was no information available on how many inspections the MLSS carried out during the reporting period.

Criminal Law Enforcement

From 2012-2013, the TIP unit conducted 213 raids, an increase from 32 raids during 2011–2012. Two arrests were made for child trafficking during the reporting period.(41) The Ministry of National Security provided the JCF TIP Unit with $29,826 in equipment and a vehicle for purposes of investigations and outreach work.(41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MLSS Program for the Elimination of Child Labor	Coordinate the enforcement of child labor laws. Employs 15 labor inspectors and 30 general inspectors who are trained to investigate a range of violations, including child labor violations.(3)
National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons (NTFATIP) (led by the Ministry of Justice)	Facilitate information exchanges between government agencies and external stakeholders, as well as creating momentum for counter trafficking efforts. Oversee the implementation of the country's National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking.(30, 39) Includes representatives from the Ministries of National Security and Foreign Affairs, the Jamaica Constabulary Force (JCF) and the Department of the Public Prosecutor, as well as representatives from the Ministries of Health, Education, Labor and Youth and Culture.(2, 3) Meets regularly with the JCF, Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP), and other ministries.(18) Held a four-day training seminar in January 2014.(42)
Office of Children's Registry (OCR)	Receive complaints about child abuse, including criminal violations of child labor laws.(3, 38)

From April 2012 to March 2013, the NTFATIP supported many trafficking awareness activities, including distribution of 15,000 TIP wallet cards to officials, and conducting workshops, conferences, and radio broadcasts.(41)

Research did not uncover any information on other efforts during the reporting period, nor is there information available on OCR registry reports received during 2013.(3, 43)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Jamaica has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Compulsory Education Policy*	Ensures that all children between the ages of 3 and 18 have access to a learning institution or vocational training program. Includes the Career Advancement Program, which provides 16- to 18-year-olds with two additional years of schooling upon completion of the eleventh grade.(44)
National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking	Targets law enforcement officials to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children, conducts public awareness campaigns, and implements outreach programs.(41)
National Plan of Action on Child Labor	Aims to strengthen current legislative frameworks to address all forms of child labor, specifically focusing on children engaged in domestic service, prostitution, forced labor, and hazardous work within the agricultural and fishing industries. Identifies four primary objectives: to collect current and reliable data on child labor, to establish public awareness and sensitize the Jamaican people to the problem, to improve the Labor Ministry's personnel capacity to be able to identify child laborers, and to work with trade unions, as well as the Jamaican Employers' Federation, to raise awareness among employees.(2, 17, 45)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

The Government established no new plans during the reporting period. The Government has drafted a National Policy on Child Labor in an effort to implement the National Plan of Action on Child Labor and address some of the current challenges, but it continues to be under review.(26, 30) Implementation of the current National Plan of Action of

Jamaica

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Child Labor has faced difficulties, including the lack of adequate resources, recent statistical data, and an institutional tracking system.(17, 37)

The Government has drafted a new Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking in Persons (2012–2015) in an effort to strengthen current priority areas and ensure that shelters are available to victims. The new Plan has not been adopted.(30, 46)

In November, the Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. The joint declaration of the Conference promotes social dialogue to address child labor and reaffirms country participants' commitment to work with civil society organizations to advance efforts toward the eradication of child labor.(47)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Jamaica funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE) project	Jointly launched by the European Commission and the ILO to combat child labor through education in 12 African and the Caribbean countries and the Pacific group of states (ACP).(48) Government worked closely with NGOs RISE and Children First to provide direct support to children engaging and at risk of engaging in child labor activities.(49, 50) In 2013, Children First withdrew 130 children from child labor and benefitted 670 children through its prevention work.(51) TACKLE project introduced the Red Card to Combat Child Labor at the Jamaica vs. Panama World Cup qualifying match in 2013.(52) Created a handbook on "Child Labor for Professionals," which was published in 2013.(51, 53) Baseline survey data has already been used to synchronize current laws and policies, improve enforcement, and was utilized in the drafting of the National Child Labor Policy.(51)
Program for Advancement through Health and Education (PATH)‡	Government conditional cash transfer program to reduce child labor by requiring participants to attend school at least 85 percent of the academic days within a month.(54-56) Recent evaluations of the PATH program reveal that children at the primary and secondary level are not likely to reach that target.(56)
Hotline‡	Government-run hotline that receives reports of child abuse, including cases that involve the worst forms of child labor and trafficking.(1, 2). It is unknown how many reports were related to child labor.
Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)†	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Jamaica, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(57) Received technical assistance in 2013 from the ILO's Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development project to conduct a Child Labor Survey in 2014.(58)
Shelters for female trafficking victims‡	Government shelters to aid female trafficking victims.(2, 26, 29, 41)
Child Protection Database*‡	Government-run database that provides the public with data on the issues affecting the children of Jamaica.(30)
Child Labor Handbook for Professionals†	ILO-IPEC 42-page handbook provides professionals with a background on international standards on child labor, Jamaican child labor laws, and services to take action and address child labor situations.(53)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Jamaica.

Although Jamaica has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Submitted in response to the U.S. Department of Labor letter to the Embassy of Jamaica (December 3, 2013) "Request for Information on Efforts by Certain Countries to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor". Washington, DC; March 10, 2014.

In 2013, Jordan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government created a National Steering Committee to coordinate efforts to implement the National Framework to Combat Child Labor and formed a technical committee to coordinate the country's strategy to address the increase in child labor due to the influx of Syrian refugees. In addition, the Government increased the number of labor inspectors from 120 to 190. However, children in Jordan continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and the worst forms of child labor in domestic service as a result of human trafficking. The Government lacks a mechanism to monitor child labor in informal work such as work done by children with family businesses and non-formal work in the agricultural sector.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Jordan are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in domestic service as a result of human trafficking.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Jordan.

	Domestic service as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 20, 23)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 23, 25-27)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children work in Jordan’s tourist areas, such as Petra.(16-18) Children often work alongside their family members, especially in agriculture for no pay.(6) Anecdotal evidence also suggests that some children may be trafficked for the purpose of forced begging.(1, 9, 20, 23, 24, 28)

The latest census, conducted in 2007, estimates that the number of working school-aged children in Jordan is approximately 33,000 out of a total labor force of 1.2 million. Other estimates suggest the real number exceeds 50,000.(29) However, the most recent statistics on child labor do not include Syrian refugee children, many of whom are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(3, 7)

In places where the refugee population is steadily increasing, such as in the northern regions and in Amman, primary schools are not able to meet the increasing demand and lack sufficient space and teaching staff.(30) Although all Syrian children living in host communities are granted access to Jordanian public schools, up to one-third of Syrian refugee children do not attend school.(20, 31-35)

Some Syrian refugee children in Jordan serve as the sole breadwinners of their family and directly compete with Jordanian adults for work.(3, 36, 37) Additionally, some Syrian children work in agriculture and some girls work in domestic service.(37) UNICEF found that approximately half of all school-aged Syrian refugees in the Jordan Valley were working.(37) NGOs and government officials report that an increasing number of undocumented Syrian refugees, particularly women and children, are working illegally in the Jordanian economy, making them vulnerable to trafficking. Reports also suggest that Syrian refugee children peddle goods inside and outside the Za’atari refugee camp; there are also increasing numbers of Syrian refugee children begging in Jordanian cities.(3)

There is evidence of child marriages and commercial sexual exploitation of Syrian refugee girls residing in the Za’atari refugee camp and in Jordan’s urban areas.(2, 24) Relief agencies estimate that some 500 Syrian girls under age 18 have been legally married in recent years.(25, 38) Limited evidence suggests that sometimes these girls are abandoned, making them vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation. In other cases, girls may be sold into “temporary marriages,” primarily for the purpose of sexual exploitation.(25-27, 39)

There are reports that as many as 15 percent of all sexual abuse cases involving children under age 18 are connected with the sexual exploitation of boys who work or girls forced into commercial sexual exploitation.(29)

Jordanian NGOs and third-country embassies of sending-country workers (e.g., Indonesia) identified underage female third-country domestic workers who had fled from abusive employers to their embassy’s shelter. These girls had traveled on forged passports to work as domestic workers.(1-3) Additionally, there have been reports of Jordanian girls being forced to drop out of school to perform domestic service in their own homes under conditions of forced labor.(2, 8, 20, 40, 41)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Jordan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Labor Code (10, 42)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Ministerial Order of 2011 (43)
List of Hazardous Occupations Prohibited for Children	Yes		Order on dangerous, tiring or health endangering tasks for young persons of 1997, amended in 2004, 2011 (43, 44)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 13 of the Constitution of Jordan (45)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Human Trafficking Law (40, 46, 47)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 310 of the Penal Code; Human Trafficking Law (48-50)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Penal Code; Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act No. 11 of 1988 (50, 51)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	18		Article 5 of the Military Service Law (3, 52)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	16	Article 5 of the Military Service Law (3)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 20 of the Constitution of Jordan (45, 53)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 20 of the Constitution of Jordan (45, 53)

Children in the informal sector do not benefit from the minimum age requirements that protect children working in the formal sector.(22) The Government lacks a mechanism to monitor child labor in informal work such as work done by children with family businesses and non-formal work in the agricultural sector.(54)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Child Labor Unit (CLU)	Coordinate the Government's child labor programs. Incorporate child labor concerns into policy initiatives; propose and draft new legislation on child labor; monitor its scope and prevalence; direct child labor inspections; and ensure the enforcement of child labor laws.(1, 18, 55, 56)
MOL's Directorate of Labor Affairs and Inspection	Carry out labor inspections, including child labor violations.(1, 57) Identify cases of child labor through work site visits and refer to relevant officials for service. Register cases into a National Child Labor Database, which allows ministries to monitor and track children as they are identified and referred to services.(58)

Organization/Agency	Role
Minister of Justice's (MOJ) Public Security Directorate's (PSD) Criminal Investigation Unit (CID)	Investigate and prosecute trafficking crimes and violations of Jordan's Penal Code, including allegations of child prostitution.(2, 3, 59)
MOJ's National Screening Team	Identify victims of human trafficking.(40)
MOL's The Family Protection Department	Enforce laws regarding domestic violence, abuse, and exploitation of children committed by family members.(3)
The National Committee for the Prevention of Human Trafficking, Chaired by the Minister of Justice. Headed by the PSD CID	Coordinate the implementation of the National Strategy and Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking.(3, 59, 60)

Law enforcement agencies in Jordan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

During the reporting period, the Jordanian Parliament added 70 labor inspectors to the existing 120. The Ministry of Labor (MOL) reportedly issued nearly twice as many warnings and more than four times as many violations for child labor infractions as it did in the previous year.(3) The Child Labor Unit reported identifying 753 child laborers at 600 institutions and issuing 265 warnings and 200 violations.(7) In particular, the Inspectorate increased its focus on enforcing adherence to the minimum age for work.(61, 62)

The ILO administered a training-of-trainers workshop for labor inspectors from the MOL and the Aqaba Special Economic Zone Authority. Participants learned how to undertake labor inspections in accordance with international standards, including those on child labor.(63)

The ILO and Save the Children collaborated with Government officials to develop standard operating procedures for the referral of Syrian refugees to various services.(30)

Employers who violate laws governing child labor can be fined between $425–$566 (300–500 Jordanian Dinars). Observers note that monetary penalties are insufficient to deter future infractions, especially given the limited ability of the labor inspectorate to regularly inspect all workplaces and to follow up on cases with known violators.(3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the MOL and the Public Security Directorate (PSD) established a joint unit of labor inspectors and Criminal Investigation Division police officers to investigate criminal violations against workers, including children. However, the Government did not provide data on investigations or prosecutions of the worst forms child labor during the reporting period.(3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including in its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The National Committee on Child Labor, led by the MOL	Form new policy and oversee the implementation of current child labor policy, including the National Framework to Combat Child Labor. Coordinate inter-agency responses to child labor for enforcement and referral services.(1, 64) Coordinate responses to cases of child labor among Syrian refugees.(3, 10, 65)
The National Center for Family Affairs	Coordinate policy issues involving abused or exploited children.(3)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Technical Committee on Syrian Refugees under the MOL CLU	Coordinate the country's strategy to address the issue of many Syrian refugee children being vulnerable to work. Established during the reporting period.(3, 56, 66)
The National Framework to Combat Child Labor Referral Mechanism	Coordinate referrals between stakeholder agencies which identify child laborers, withdraw them from work, provide them with education and services, and monitor their progress.(61, 67, 68)

NGOs and other agencies noted the lack of social services and referral capacity by the Ministry of Social Development and by other government agencies to address adequately the extent of child labor in Jordan.(3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Jordan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Framework to Combat Child Labor (NFCL)†	Outlines the roles and responsibilities of the key government agencies (MOL, Ministry of Education (MOE), Ministry of Social Development (MOSD), NGOs, and other stakeholders) involved in responding to cases of child labor at the national, governorate, and community levels.(61, 67, 68) Steering committee met three to four times a month during 2013.(69) Is supported by ILO-IPEC who piloted the Framework in Amman, Aqaba, Deir Alla, Irbid, Mafraq, and Rusayfa.(3)
Syrian Regional Response Plan*	Facilitates the country's response to the needs of incoming Syrian refugees, a combined effort by the Government and UN.(32) Led by Jordan's MOL, MOE, and MOSD.(56, 66)
The National Agenda*	Provides a comprehensive reform framework for political, economic, and social policies, including the restructuring of Jordan's social safety net system.(70)
The National Aid Fund*	Provides social protection services to poor families through cash aid, the creation of jobs, and vocational training; also conducts research. Directed by the Ministry of Social Development.(71)

* The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Jordan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Non-formal education center in the Umm Sayhoun community	Joint MOE and UNESCO program that operates a non-formal education center and provides services to children at risk of child labor in the local tourism industry in the Umm Sayhoun community and in Petra.(16, 56, 72)
Moving Towards a Child-Labor Free Jordan	$2 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to facilitate the Government of Jordan's implementation of the National Framework to Combat Child Labor.(66) Is developing online case management database for key government and nongovernment stakeholders to document cases of child labor and refer victims to services.(7, 68) In 2013, the project, in collaboration with the Jordan Tourism Development Project and UNICEF, finalized a plan of action to eliminate child labor in Petra's tourism industry.(58, 73)
Promising Futures: Reducing Child Labor in Jordan through education and Sustainable Livelihoods	$4 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Save the Children to reduce the number of children subjected to child labor in construction, manufacturing, informal services and storage industries, as well as domestic service.(30) Serves beneficiaries in poverty-stricken areas with high numbers of child refugees, including East Amman, Mafraq, and Zarqa.(3, 74)
Jordan Social Protection Enhancement Project*	World Bank-funded, 5-year government program that provides financial and technical assistance to the National Action Fund to assist vulnerable populations.(75)
Counter-Trafficking: Awareness and Capacity Building*	USDOS-funded 3-year program (2010–2013) implemented by the IOM that builds the capacity of the MOJ, MOL and the Public Security Directorate to raise awareness and provide direct assistance to victims of human trafficking.(76)

Program	Description
Child Begging Assistance campaign‡	Ministry of Social Development program that implements an identification and services referral system for child beggars. Links children with shelter and education services. Returns children to their parents who must pledge in writing that their children will not return to the street.(62)
Child Labor Hotline††	MOL program that operates a toll-free phone number to receives complaints and tips about the involvement of underage children in labor.(35)
Non-Formal Educational Alternatives‡*	MOE program that provides educational alternatives to students who have dropped out of school and a follow-up mechanism for those who want to return to schools. Requires parents to provide a written commitment to maintain their children in school.(30, 62)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Jordan.

Although Jordan has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs does not address the extent of the problem including in begging, commercial sexual exploitation, and street work. In addition, while the Government of Jordan has implemented education programs for Syrians, research did not uncover evidence of programs specifically responding to incidences of the forced marriage and commercial sexual exploitation of Syrian girls.-

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, Kazakhstan made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the President signed into law several amendments and additions to existing laws. These bring current legislation into line with international standards, improve law enforcement's ability to respond to cases of trafficking in persons, and improve prosecution of human trafficking crimes. The Government also established a system for filing and responding to complaints about child labor through the police, education officials, labor inspectors, or one of the several government-operated hotlines. The Government also continued to fund anti-trafficking education campaigns that target potential child victims and public awareness activities, including a campaign on hazardous child labor in the Almaty and South Kazakhstan regions. However, children in Kazakhstan continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in cotton farming. Funding is not adequate to carry out thorough labor inspections, and no data are available on the number of child labor investigations conducted during the reporting period.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Kazakhstan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in cotton farming.(1-5) There is limited evidence that children from the neighboring countries of Uzbekistan and the Kyrgyz Republic migrate with their families to work in Kazakhstan's cotton fields.(3, 6, 7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Kazakhstan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	3.2 (79,690)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	90.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	3.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		102.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cotton farming† (1-5)
	Production of vegetables* (1-3)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown* (3, 10)
	Street work, work in markets, transporting goods in handcarts and unloading goods (3, 7, 11)
Services	Domestic work* (12, 13)
	Work in gas stations, activities unknown* (7)
	Car washing* (3, 7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced begging* (3, 6, 14)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (3, 6, 10, 14)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

Kazakhstan

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

There is no current, comprehensive research on child labor in Kazakhstan. The last national child labor survey was conducted in 2006 and a baseline study prioritizing child labor in agriculture in the Almaty and South Kazakhstan areas was completed in 2012.(15, 16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Kazakhstan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established relevant laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 30 of the Constitution (24)

During the reporting period, the President signed into law several amendments and additions to existing laws which altered provisions of the criminal, administrative, and labor codes. These amendments bring current legislation into line with international standards, improve law enforcement’s ability to respond to cases of trafficking in persons, and improve prosecution of human trafficking crimes.(3, 13) They clarify the definition of the term “exploitation of a person” to be consistent with the Palermo Protocol, enhance penalties for using minors’ labor in a way that results in “substantial prejudice to their rights and legal interests,” and expand overall protections for minors.(3, 13) The Labor Code was also updated to prevent persons convicted of crimes related to minors, including trafficking in persons, from securing employment in education, child care, recreation and/or health-related activities, sports, medical care, social services, or the arts.(3) Previously, the statute only applied to persons convicted of murder or purposeful personal injury.(3)

In 2013, the Government also issued Decree No. 411, eliminating the Departments for the Protection of Children's Rights in each of the 16 regions in Kazakhstan and transferring their duties to the regional Departments of Education.(3) Government officials report that the reorganization will allow closer coordination with education officials and eliminate a perceived duplication of functions.(3)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Protection (MLSP)	Enforce child labor laws and administrative offences punishable by fines.(14, 26) Manage child labor cases in the course of broader investigations.(3)
Ministry of Internal Affairs	Enforce child labor laws in criminal offenses and train criminal and migration police in investigating the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 14, 26)
Center for the Adaptation of Minors	Refer child victims of child forced labor and human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and/or involvement in illicit activities to the appropriate government services or NGOs for further assistance.(3)
Anti-Trafficking Unit in the Criminal Police Committee's Organized Crime Department	Investigate allegations of human trafficking, including trafficking of children.(27)

Labor law enforcement agencies in Kazakhstan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that criminal law enforcement agencies took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

The Ministry of Labor and Social Protection (MLSP) has approximately 320 labor inspectors. However, the majority of these are assigned to local level governments so there is a lack of coordination on the national level.(3) The MLSP reported that, while it did not conduct specific training on child labor for its inspectors, their periodic recertification requires competence on all facets of labor inspection, and that preparation for recertification includes some materials on combating child labor.(3) No statistics are available on official inspections or violations of child labor cases.(3)

In 2013, the Government established a system for filing and responding to complaints about child labor.(3) Instances of illegal child labor may be reported to the police, an education official, a labor inspector, or one of the several government-operated hotlines.(3, 5). An official from the Oblast-level Department of Education (local level) will respond and determine whether law enforcement should investigate the claim.(3) In cases where the alleged child labor occurs in an agricultural setting, local officials will meet with parents and school administrators to reinforce the message that, during the school year, children should be in school and not in the fields.(3)

During the reporting period, local news reported that the Prosecutor's office discovered that principals at 11 schools allowed over 700 students to skip school to harvest cotton in the South Kazakhstan Oblast. Principals and teachers at the schools were fined and subject to disciplinary actions.(3, 28, 29)

Despite ILO-compliant legislation and a commitment from the Kazakhstani Government to address child labor, efforts are undercut by a failure to adequately monitor workplaces such as cotton fields for incidences of child labor because funding is not adequate to carry out thorough inspections.(3, 14)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2013, the Government did not publicly release statistics on criminal violations related to child labor or provide data on official criminal inspections.(3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The National Coordination Council on Child Labor (NCCCL)	Coordinate efforts to address the worst forms of child labor, and prepare proposals and recommendations on implementing state policy to eliminate child labor. Chaired by Vice Minister of Labor, includes representatives from the Ministry of Internal Affairs, Ministry of Education, Prosecutor General's Office, Human Rights Ombudsman, and NGOs and meets semi-annually.(3, 12, 18, 30)
Committee for the Protection of Child Rights	Work to protect children against exploitation. Operates under the Ministry of Education.(3)
National Child Protection Department	Refer child labor cases to law enforcement and ensure that children receive rehabilitative services when needed.(30)
Regional Child Protection Departments	Work with law enforcement to help prevent and eliminate the worst forms of child labor under the Ministry of Education.(30)
Interagency Trafficking in Persons Working Group	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking.(27) Chaired by the Ministry of Justice and includes other relevant ministries and meets quarterly to report on each agency's anti-trafficking efforts.(6, 31)

During the reporting period, the National Coordination Council on Child Labor (NCCCL) continued its work to implement the 2012–2014 Joint Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor, conducted the “12 Days Against Child Labor” informational campaign to bring national awareness to child labor issues, and discussed the findings and work of the ILO child labor monitoring and reduction pilot project in South Kazakhstan Oblast.(3, 26)

In 2013, the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection, the ILO, and the Union of Producers and Exporters of Kazakhstan met for the 12th session of the NCCCL.(13, 32) Following the meeting, participants adopted a resolution to raise awareness of labor and migration laws for employers as well as disseminate promising practices of projects to prevent child labor in agriculture.(13, 32)

NGOs report that, while the NCCCL is largely effective, it is not adequately monitoring the results of implementation of the Joint Action Plan.(30) The NCCCL also lacks data on child labor migration in the regions.(30) Additionally, NGOs have complained of a lack of targeted financing of programs to prevent the worst forms of child labor on the local and national levels, especially in South Kazakhstan and Almaty Provinces, the most problematic areas of the country.(30)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Kazakhstan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Joint Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Implementation of ILO International Convention 182 in the Republic of Kazakhstan for 2012–2014	Maps out legislation and policies in Kazakhstan and both state and national programs on child labor and youth employment to facilitate future collaboration between the Government and its partners on these issues.(16)
National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking (2012–2014)*	Prioritizes the development of standards for shelter assistance for trafficking victims and the provision of services to vulnerable population groups, including children.(33, 34) Also includes the development of recommendations to improve regulation of the domestic labor market and the accession of Kazakhstan to the ILO Convention on Domestic Workers, the ILO Convention on Migration for Employment, and the ILO Convention on Migrant Workers.(34)

*The impact of this policy on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2013, the Government of Kazakhstan participated in and funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Combating Child Labor in Central Asia – Commitment Becomes Action (PROACT CAR Phase III)	$1.4 million Government of Germany-funded, 5-year project that works to mainstream child labor issues into national policies and legislation, build the capacity of stakeholders, and provide direct services to children withdrawn from the worst forms of child labor.(13) Designed a pilot child labor monitoring system in the region using 2012 survey findings, which targets child laborers in cotton.(16, 35, 36) Increases the participation of Kazakhstan's Confederation of Employers in the elimination of child labor through two Action Plans for employers to address child labor in the vegetable and tobacco sectors in the Almaty region, and two Action Plans on Mainstreaming Child Labor into the Education Sector in Almaty and South Kazakhstan regions.(16) Continued its partnership with Philip Morris Kazakhstan (PMK) and worked to eliminate child and forced labor in tobacco production by providing assistance to migrant children in the Almaty region.(16, 37) In 2013, provided direct services to approximately 90 children of migrant workers in the tobacco industry.(3) Implemented "No child labor in domestic work in Kazakhstan" by the NGO "Union of Women of Intellectual Work" in partnership with the ILO-IPEC. Included a 3-month mini-program designed to prevent and eliminate child labor through public awareness raising, the collection of Action Plans, site visits by the NCCCL, and a 1-day Round Table in the South Kazakhstan region on the topic of "Children in domestic work as WFCL in South Kazakhstan."(12, 13)
National Awareness Raising Campaign†‡	Ministry of Education and Committee for Child Protection-led activities including press-conferences, round table discussions, seminars, trainings, debates, flash-mobs, telephone and personal counseling, and mass media programs. During the campaign, identified 76 children as involved in the worst forms of child labor and made 14 employers administratively liable as violators of the Labor Code.(12, 13)
100 Schools, 100 Hospitals Program‡*	Ministry of Labor and Social Protection and Ministry of Education program that increases children's access to schools through school construction and rehabilitation programs.(38) Continued to operate 18 Centers for Adaptation of Minors under the Ministry of Education, which houses street children, migrant children, and children in difficult situations after being picked up by the police for truancy, curfew violations, lack of documentation, and other minor infractions.(30, 33, 39)
Assistance Hotlines‡*	Ministry of Internal Affairs and Ministry of Education and Science hotlines for child-related issues, including child labor and child trafficking. Refers all child labor and trafficking cases to the police and/or NGOs, who then refer victims to shelters or crisis centers.(27, 40, 41)
Assistance to trafficking victims‡*	Government-funded assistance that provides medical and legal assistance, pretrial safe houses, security services, housing, food, clothing, and transportation to trafficking victims. Authorities can help a victim or witness change residence, find another job, or change his or her physical appearance.(30)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Kazakhstan.

In 2013, the ILO-IPEC project ran a pilot project called the "Action Program Establishing and Piloting a Child Labor Monitoring System in Maktaaral district, South-Kazakhstan Region."(3, 7) The South Kazakhstan Oblast-based NGO Sana Sezim administered the program which sought to build capacity of national and local authorities, provide direct services for children involved in, or at risk of entering into, hazardous child labor in agriculture, as well as raise awareness of community members, the general public and the media.(13) In the South Kazakhstan Oblast it was reported that 3,287 children received free meals at schools in an effort to reduce the economic incentive for parents to send their children to gather cotton to contribute to the family economy.(3)

During the reporting period, ILO-IPEC trained trainers from the Federation of Trade Unions and the Trade Union of Education and Science of Kazakhstan and conducted a 2-day training for 25 representatives of the Education Trade Unions of South Kazakhstan region.(12) The training covered issues on child labor, mainstreaming child labor into education sector plans, and the Child Labor Monitoring System (CLMS).(12)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR
