Dear Sir or Madam:

I am strongly opposed to the proposal to eliminate or severely limit the use of listed options in self-directed IRAs. I am an individual investor who sometimes trades options in both my IRA and taxable brokerage accounts. I do so to enhance income and/or to provide protection for my equity portfolio.

My brokerage firm and other investment websites provide educational material to assist me in my trading, and I have been qualified by my broker for certain levels of options trading.

I consider myself a fairly sophisticated investor and believe that I am more qualified than you are to decide how to invest my own money, so please reconsider your nonsensical proposal.
