The health care we get should not in any way be dependent on the religion of the provider. If a company or an individual has religious objections to providing treatment, they should be in some other line of work. Their religion has no relation to my health needs.

Instead, use the Insitute of Medicine recommendations for preventive care, and keep our access to care intact. The present exemptions are already inappropriate and unjust; you would do well to pull those back, but certainly do not expand them.

The health of millions of women is at stake.
