General Comment

RE: CMS-9992-IFC2 Enough with religious people trying to tell the whole population what they should and should not do. This is the government we're talking about and religion should not play any part in determining what a woman decides is best for her health. If a religious person does not want preventable health care or to abort a baby as a result of rape because of her religious beliefs, then fine, she doesn't have to!!! They are following their own personal religious belief and choice. They can be proud of that. But to believe they have the right to force their beliefs and choice on others is simply arrogant and wrong and they should be ashamed of themselves!
