To the Department of Labor:

I support the implementation of the Fiduciary Rule, which would require financial advisers to act in the best interest of their clients.

In the face of great uncertainty about the economic future of our country, many young Americans have been working hard to start saving for retirement. I include myself in their ranks, having made the maximum contribution to my Roth IRA every year that my income has allowed. My investments are managed by a financial adviser, one that I hope I can trust to give me the best advice for my future financial health. Please give me and millions of other Americans the peace of mind of knowing that those we trust with our money are obligated to serve us and not their own interests. With threats to Medicare and Social Security popping up at every turn, I am being responsible and preparing to be as self-sufficient as possible in my old age - please make it easier for me to accomplish this goal.

Sincerely,

Leslie Grothaus
