As written the rule could eliminate as much as 82% of our population from professional advice. While this would greatly benefit the robo advisors, the people who need advice the most (those with portfolios less than $200,000) would effectively be cast aside. While the bill was well intentioned typical governmental research inefficiencies will prove to once again defeat the intended purpose.

R. Lane Farmer Ph.D.