Subject: Fiduciary rule

Dear DOL:

The fiduciary rule is one law designed to look out for working people.

The Department of Labor approved this common-sense rule toward the end of the Obama administration. It requires financial advisers to put the best interests of retirement savers first. Wall Street hates this rule and has spent millions on lobbyists to stop it. That's because without the rule, Wall Street brokers and other advisers have been allowed to fatten their own paydays at our expense. Now they may get their way because the Trump administration is trying to weaken or even roll back this critical rule.

DO NOT side with Wall Street over working people—robbing families of their hard-earned retirement savings. According to the Council of Economic Advisers, retirement savers lose $17 billion each year because Wall Street advisers are not required to provide advice in the best interests of their clients.

Working people deserve a government that works for them, not one that rigs the rules in favor of Wall Street. I demand an economy that works for all of us, not just the wealthy. Protecting the retirement security of working people is part of that.
