General Comment

Socially responsible investment of retirement plan funds should be encouraged, not discouraged, as it is inherently safer in the longterm. Throughout history, irresponsible actions have consistently lead to negative consequences, for both individuals and corporations. Investing in companies with poor or misguided decision-making processes in regards to environmental, social and corporate governance results in accumulating risk over time. Fund investment that doesn't include consideration of these important factors is short-sighted and too narrowly focused to ultimately serve the United States and its citizens in the best possible manner.
