General Comment

What specific right allows the US government to mandate how a private company focuses its retirement plan investments? This should be up to the company and employee to decide, and frankly as long as it is disclosed to the employee as part of the benefits package, then the employee can decide if it meets their needs and choose not to work there if they do not like the investment strategy. Let the market determine whether a private company is engaging in a practice that employees do not like. To do so by regulation is over-reach by the government and is akin to picking winners.
