ESG factors are important in considering the stability of a company, and its ability to succeed in society that values these factors, such as the United States and the world as a whole today.

Because of their importance to numerous clients, elimination of these from retirement plans will make such plans less relevant to many people, and may even reduce the use of these plans by people who value ESG based investments.

If anything, the use of ESG factors in retirement investment opportunities should be increased, not decreased.