General Comment

Scalia is correct because ESG investing is inherently risky. I am a state employee retiree and I need my returns on investments to live on. I do not want my money going toward funds that address social welfare issues. I need maximize returns. I do not want to investments from China either. Why fatten their pockets when they hate America. I agree with this statement: ESG has nothing to do with furthering social goals or policy objectives. Take the politics out of my money investments !!!

As a reference, I agree with the article I read by Justin Danhof concerning this issue.
