Administrators of pension plans should not be required or encouraged to employ "environmental, social, and governance" criteria in making investments. They should be focused on earning a good return for their beneficiaries. Not only does ESG distract them from that aim, but it can be used to punish companies that hold political views different from the administrators ... e.g., that qualified individuals have a right not to be discriminated against because of race or sex in selecting directors for companies.