I am currently retired and have had a Roth IRA for some time. I understand that this particular regulation - as it stands - includes a prohibition of using options in this type of account, the justification being that such a prohibition would protect the investor. Since I frequently use options, such a prohibition would be most unwelcome to me! It seems to me that the casual IRA investor who might be more susceptible to the unwise use of options would not be using them in the first place. Please reconsider this prohibition!!
