General Comment

I understand the logic in reducing fees and conflicts of interest for investors. That's good. But eliminating option trading should not be a part of this. We are grown adults and understand the risks and fees that go with option trading. In addition, brokerages just doesn't let anyone trade options. They have a vetting process as well. Trading options has grown my IRA considerably. I would hate to see you eliminate options as a choice. I want to have the same advantages as Wall Street has in growing my account.
