I have been led to believe that new legislation is in progress to eliminate option trading in IRA accounts. I think this is a huge mistake, as two specific option strategies reduce the risk for IRA accounts. These are selling covered calls and selling puts (cash covered or naked). These strategies are very conservative and effective in reducing risk for IRA accounts.

I have traded options as an individual investor for about 15 years and believe the restriction on these two strategies will negatively impact retired and soon to retire individuals.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment.
