It is my understanding that this regulation would prohibit the trading of stock options within an IRA. Many use options to limit the risk associated with owning securities within their accounts to limit any loss due to market fluctuations. Please consider this as a higher risk to retirement accounts if options trading was eliminated. Simple options such as covered calls are less risky than just owning stocks. Simple puts and calls protect accounts against wild market swings. These act as insurance against large market losses. Please consider the above before changing these regulations.

Thank you
W Walloch