There is no greater threat to the global economy then climate change. This is widely accepted knowledge shared by Democrats and even such notable Republicans as Hank Paulson. To allow pension investments in such industries that are exacerbating climate change as the fossil fuel industry and industrial agriculture is not only contrary to the financial interests of those people holding the pensions, but also contrary to the worldwide goal of zero emissions to lessen the impact of the climate crisis and allow for the thriving of future generations.