In 2012, the Kyrgyz Republic made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a new version of the Code on Children, which will create local-level Family and Child Support Units that could improve the early detection and support of vulnerable children. The Government also participated in the piloting of a Child Labor Monitoring System (CLMS) in three regions and the establishment of a Child Labor Free Zone in the Chuy region. In addition, the Government established a child labor information center, a child labor rehabilitation center, and participated in the development of an education curriculum for a “catch-up” program for children who were out of school for an extended period or dropped out before reaching the secondary school level. However, interagency coordination on child labor was poor and no data were available on the number of child labor or child trafficking investigations or prosecutions during the reporting period. Children continue to work in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous agricultural work in cotton and tobacco cultivation.

Statistics on Working Children and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working	5-14 yrs.	4.5 (48,305)
Attending School	5-14 yrs.	84.0
Combining Work and School	7-14 yrs.	4.8
Primary Completion Rate		95.8

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in the Kyrgyz Republic are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, many under dangerous conditions in agriculture. Children work in cotton and tobacco cultivation. Although the extent of the problem is unknown, there are reports that children are also found working in rice cultivation.(3-6) NGOs report that some schools cancelled classes in the fall to allow children to stay home to pick cotton. Evidence suggests that a limited number of other schools required children to harvest tobacco on school grounds.(3, 4, 7, 8) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(9, 10)

Although information is limited, there are reports that children are also found working in other sectors, including coal mining, brick making, and construction. Children working in these sectors often carry heavy loads, and children in coal mines work in confined spaces underground.(3, 7, 8, 11) Children are also reportedly used in “shuttle commerce,” which is the transport, loading, and unloading of goods in markets. Children in this sector push heavy carts and carry bundles that exceed their physical capacity.(12) Street children reportedly engage in forced begging. These children may also be subjected to commercial sexual exploitation.(13)

Children are trafficked internally for forced labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and the sale and distribution of illegal drugs.(6, 14) Children are also trafficked to Russia for forced labor.(15) Children involved in commercial sexual exploitation in the Kyrgyz Republic are often stigmatized and may be tried and placed in detention.(16)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code sets the minimum age for employment at 16, although children may work at age 14 with the permission of a parent or guardian. The minimum age for hazardous work is 18.(14)

The Labor Code prohibits harmful and dangerous work, underground work, forced work and work which might harm the health and moral development of children under the age of 18.(17, 18) Pursuant to the Labor Code, Decree No. 239 lays out a detailed list of hazardous work prohibited for children under the age of 18, including the use of pesticides and manufacture of tobacco. Decree No. 548 enumerates specific weight limits permissible for children of legal working age in occupations that require them to carry loads.(6, 17) In June of the reporting period, the Government organized a roundtable for stakeholders to review the hazardous list. A revised draft has been submitted to the Ministry of Social Development and is currently under consideration. (19)

In May 2012, the President signed an amendment to the Family Code, which provides grounds for the termination of parents' or legal guardians' rights if they are found involving their children in the worst forms of child labor.(20, 21) In July, the President also signed into law a new version of the Code on Children, which lays out protections for children in difficult situations and specifically includes children working in the worst forms of child labor.(20, 22)

The Criminal Code prohibits adults from involving minors in criminal activity, forced prostitution, slavery, and armed conflicts.(6, 17) It is unclear whether the Criminal Code prohibits adults from using children for drug trafficking or other illicit activities.(23) The 2005 Prevention and Combating Trafficking in Persons law criminalizes trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labor.(24) It also provides protection and assistance to trafficking victims, including child trafficking victims. In particular, the law requires that child protection service agencies are immediately informed when the victim is a minor.(25)

The minimum age for military recruitment is 18.(26)

Education is free and compulsory for nine years, roughly equivalent to age 16, depending on the age at which a child starts school.(27, 28) However, during the reporting period, children had to pay burdensome school administrative fees because of Government resource constraints.(29, 30) There is limited evidence that children with disabilities are denied entry to schools.(29) Refugees, migrants, and noncitizens also have limited access to education because of the country's system of residence registration.(29)

The law states that children cannot be removed from school to work during agricultural harvest periods. However, an exception to the law allows school principals to request permission from the Ministry of Education to allow children to leave school to work on their family farms for a specific period, provided the school agrees to organize makeup classes.(31, 32) The Ministry of Education stated that no such requests were received during the reporting period.(31, 32)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

During the reporting period, the role of the Coordination Council on Child Labor was reassigned to the newly established Coordination Council on the Implementation of the Social Protection Development Strategy (SPDS) for 2012-2014. The Council was responsible for developing policies to eliminate child labor, coordinating the efforts of key stakeholders, and providing recommendations to harmonize national legislation on child labor with international standards.(20) Also during the reporting period, the Government participated in the ILO-IPEC-implemented mapping of legislation and policies, such as action plans and state/national programs on child labor and youth employment. Once approved, the report will provide a foundation for future coordination and collaboration between the government and its partners on these issues.(20) The Ministry of Foreign Affairs coordinates efforts against trafficking in persons.(4)

The Ministry of Internal Affairs' Inspectorate for Minors' Affairs, the State Inspectorate on Ecological and Technical Safety, the Prosecutor General's Office and regional State District Administration each have responsibility to enforce child labor laws. However, these agencies do not adequately coordinate their efforts.(31, 33). The State Inspectorate has 23 inspectors charged with investigating all labor issues, including those dealing with child labor violations. This number of inspectors is inadequate to ensure appropriate enforcement of laws against child labor, and the Inspectorate reports that there were no inspections specifically targeted at sectors with child labor due to the limited number of inspectors.(4) In addition, there was no training for inspectors on child labor in 2012. The exact number of inspections conducted during the reporting period and the number of child laborers identified through inspections is unavailable.(4, 33) It is unclear whether follow-up services were provided to children identified through this process.

The Prosecutor General's Office enforces laws against child trafficking. The number of inspectors in the Prosecutor General's Office during the reporting period is not available, nor is any information on the number of child labor or child trafficking cases investigated or prosecuted in 2012.(32, 33) In addition, no information was available on the number of children identified through this process or on whether follow-up services were provided to the children identified.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The SPDS for 2012-2014 and its supplement, the National Action Plan (NAP) of 2012-2014, encompass all child labor issues in the Kyrgyz Republic. Child laborers fall under a specific category, called "Children and Families in Difficult Conditions."(4, 16, 34, 35) In April 2012, the Ministry of Social Development adopted a Roadmap for the implementation of SPDS and NAP.(35) The drafting of a National Action Plan on the Prevention and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor for 2013-2016 was postponed until 2013; delays occurred because of the unclear status of the Coordination Council and staff changes at the Ministry of Social Development.(20)

The National Action Plan Against Human Trafficking (2008-2011) aimed to combat human trafficking through the prevention, detection, and suppression of human trafficking and through the provision of social protection and assistance to victims of human trafficking.(36, 37) During the reporting period, the draft National Action Plan against Human Trafficking for 2012-2015 became the Government Program Against Human Trafficking for 2013-2016.(20, 38) The final draft was agreed upon by the line ministries and was submitted to the Government for consideration in November 2012.(20)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Social Development established a child labor information center in the Chuy region and a child labor rehabilitation center in Dordoi.(35) The Ministry of Internal Affairs also continued to maintain a rehabilitation center for street children in Bishkek. However, the center remained in poor condition, and lacked a sufficient amount of food, clothes, and medicine.(29)

The Government continued to participate in the third phase of the 2010-2013 regional project, "Combating Child Labor in Central Asia," funded by the German Government.(39) Under one component of this project, the Ministry of Social Development, with technical support from the ILO, piloted a Child Labor Monitoring System (CLMS) in Bishkek, Issyk-Kul, and Chuy. The CLMS is intended to identify working and at-risk children, assess hazards and risks to which they are exposed, refer them to relevant services, verify that they have been removed from hazardous work, and track them to ensure that the root causes creating the need for them to work have been eliminated.(20, 23) During the pilot period, 152 children were withdrawn or prevented from hazardous child labor in the agriculture and informal labor sectors.(20)

In a second component of the project, the Government, with technical support from the ILO, participated in the establishment of a Child Labor Free Zone in the Chuy region. During 2012, this project withdrew and prevented 140 children from the worst forms of child labor in the agriculture and informal labor sectors through the provision of comprehensive educational services.(20)

Under a third component, the project supported a workers' federation and an employers' confederation to create and institutionalize Child Labor Units, which act as national focal points for each organization to coordinate and monitor their members' activities to eliminate child labor in Kyrgyz Republic.(35, 40) In addition, the project conducts awareness raising activities and provides direct services to child laborers and their families. The project assisted with the review of the list of hazardous work prohibited to children under the age of 18.(39)

The Government continued to participate in the One UN Program in Kyrgyz Republic, in collaboration with ILO-IPEC and USAID. During the reporting period, the project developed an education curriculum for a "catch-up" program for children who had been out of school for an extended period or had dropped out before reaching the secondary school level.(20) The project also trained teachers to use the curriculum, mainstreamed the issue of child labor into education sector plans regionally, and raised the awareness of the public on the issue.(20, 40) This program was implemented in migrant settlements around Bishkek to assist 2,500 children to return to school.(41) The program was extended to the end of 2013.(20)

The third phase of a project funded by the Elimination of Child Labor in Tobacco Growing Foundation ended in December 2012. The project provided conditional loans to tobacco farmers, organized support groups and holiday camps for children, and developed district advisory committees to address the causes of children entering hazardous labor on tobacco farms.(19) A fourth phase was approved during the reporting period and will be implemented between 2013-2015.(19)

Kyrgyz Republic

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Kyrgyz Republic:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Clarify whether the law protects children against being used by adults in drug trafficking or other illicit activities.	2011, 2012
	Enforce laws on free education and ensure school administrators and teachers do not charge school fees.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Ensure increased coordination among government agencies on child labor.	2012
	Ensure an adequate number of labor inspectors, and that these inspectors receive training on child labor.	2012
	Make information on the number of labor inspections conducted and penalties assessed for child labor violations publicly available.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Make information on the services provided to victims of child labor and trafficking publicly available.	2011, 2012
	Make information on the number of inspectors in the Prosecutor General's Office and the number of child trafficking cases investigated or prosecuted publicly available.	2011, 2012
	Ensure that child victims of sexual exploitation are treated as victims rather than as criminals.	2012
Social Programs	Ensure that children working on the streets vulnerable to forced begging or commercial sexual exploitation receive access to education, medicine and other services.	2012

Lebanon

In 2012, Lebanon made a moderate advancement in its efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In addition to approving a list of hazardous labor activities for children over the reporting period, the Government reconvened its National Steering Committee on Child Labor and approved the National Protection Strategy to Combat and Protect Children from Child Abuse. However, the Government has yet to approve labor law provisions that would protect children working in the informal sector, and enforcement agencies lack resources and do not maintain enforcement data. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor including in dangerous activities in agriculture and small workshops.

Children in Lebanon are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including dangerous activities in agriculture and small workshops.(3) Children, predominantly girls, are involved in planting and picking tobacco.(4-8) Common hazards in this sector include the risk of cuts and puncture wounds from threading tobacco leaves; the risk of exposure to toxins and pesticides; and the danger of musculoskeletal problems caused by the process of planting tobacco seedlings.(5-7) Although the extent of the problem is unknown, children are also found picking olives and citrus fruit.(8) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(3) Child labor among boys is prominent in small workshops, such as mechanics and carpentry workshops, as well as in construction, manufacturing, and industry.(6-11) Children working in these sectors risk exhaustion from long working hours, injuries from heavy equipment and sharp tools, and body discomfort or deformation from assuming awkward positions.(8)

Children also vend goods in markets, wash car windshields, pick through trash, and beg on the streets.(10-13) There is increasing evidence that some children involved in street work are trafficking victims, forced into commercial sexual exploitation and illicit work by criminal gangs, family members, and acquaintances.(14, 15) A study found that boys working on the street are at high risk of sexual exploitation by peers and men.(15) Other hazards for children working on the streets include severe weather, vehicle accidents, harassment, and arrest.(16) Foreign-born children, including Palestinian, Iraqi, Egyptian, Kurdish, and increasingly, Syrian children, form the majority of child street workers. Dom children, an ethnic minority, are also prevalent among the children working in the street.(12, 13, 15-19)

Children, especially adolescent girls, are engaged in domestic work in Lebanon. According to a study conducted in Northern Lebanon, child domestic workers are exposed to hazards such as carrying and moving very heavy objects, injury from sharp knives, and falling off unstable or unsafe chairs or ladders.(8, 13)

Lebanon is a source country for children, especially girls, trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation, domestic servitude, and criminal activity.(14, 15) In addition, Lebanon is a destination country for child commercial sexual exploitation, through the guise of fake or temporary marriages.(15, 18) Girls may be tricked into fake marriages and then forced into commercial exploitation and other illegal activities.(15, 20)

There are reports that children have been used in armed conflict, especially in North Lebanon and in Beirut.(21) In most Palestinian refugee camps, children were not reportedly involved in local militia groups. However, in some camps, where the security situation is more tenuous, such as Ain El Helwe and Bedawwi, there may be instances of children, ages 15 to 17, employed as guards at internal checkpoints or at building entrances.(22)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code sets the minimum age for employment at 14.(4, 23, 24) Children between ages 14 to 18 may work if they receive a medical certificate asserting their fitness to do the type of job for which they have been recruited.(10) The Labor Code provides basic protections to children, such as limiting the work day to a maximum of 6 hours per day with 1 hour of rest after every 4 hours worked.

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	C138, Minimum Age	✓
	C182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	CRC	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	No
	CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓
	Minimum Age for Work	14
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	16
	Compulsory Education Age	12
	Free Public Education	Yes

The Labor Code includes a list of industrial, arduous and unhealthy work prohibited for children under age 16.(4, 10, 23, 24) In 2012, the Cabinet approved a list of hazardous occupations and activities which includes domestic work and hazardous agricultural work on family farms.(13, 25) The list differentiates work prohibited for children under 18 and activities allowable for children under 16 if proper training and protection has occurred.(13, 25) Draft child labor provisions to the Labor Code have been pending cabinet approval and parliamentary ratification since 2008.(13) These provisions would help protect children working in the informal sector as they would give labor inspectors the authority to inspect the informal sector. Additionally, they would raise the minimum age of work to 15.(7, 8, 13, 26, 27) Until these provisions are finalized, children may continue to be exposed to hazards as labor inspectors lack access to the informal sector.

The Penal Code and Law 422 protect children from commercial sexual exploitation and prohibit financial gain from the prostitution of others, child pornography, involvement of a child in illegal activity, forced labor, and involuntary servitude.(6, 13, 28)

Lebanese law is not consistent in its treatment of children working as beggars. In the Penal Code, child begging is criminalized.(16) Conversely, Law 422 stipulates that child begging endangers a child and that child beggars should be admitted to juvenile protection facilities.(16) However, due to an insufficient number of juvenile protection facilities (especially for non-Lebanese children), child beggars often end up confined to adult jail cells.(15, 16, 18)

Law 164 criminalizes the trafficking and use of persons for commercial sexual exploitation, begging, and forced involvement in terrorist acts. It also bans the recruitment of children for armed conflict.(7, 29, 30)

The minimum age for voluntary recruitment into the armed forces is 18 for soldiers, noncommissioned personnel, and officers. Military service is not compulsory in Lebanon.(31)

Education in Lebanon is free and compulsory by law for most residents of the country until age 12, but barriers still exist.(32) Education related costs such as transportation, books, and uniforms have prevented some families from enrolling their children into school.(33, 34) Additionally, the law denies free education to children born to foreign national fathers, regardless of the mother's nationality with an exception made for Syrian refugee children.(13) Further, children older than age 12 are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work. A bill to raise the age of compulsory education to 15 is pending, but has not yet been approved.(13)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Child Labor Unit (CLU), under the Ministry of Labor (MOL), serves as the Government's focal point on national child labor issues.(6, 7) The CLU's chief functions include raising awareness on the dangers of child labor, drafting legislation on child labor, and coordinating with other governmental agencies, civil society, and international organizations to gradually eliminate child labor.(7, 14, 35) The CLU also coordinates with the Ministry of Social Affairs (MOA) in the referral of children to protective institutions such as shelters.(14) A national steering committee on child labor is an inter-ministerial body responsible for implementing MOA's national strategy to combat child labor and draft child labor-related amendments to the Labor law.(13, 36) During the reporting period, the committee was revitalized and met several times after years of inactivity. They are currently drafting a national action plan to combat the worst forms of child labor by 2016 and are finalizing the national awareness strategy against the worst forms of child labor.(13) Since May 2012, they have revised their terms of reference and have provided three child labor-related trainings.(13) The Higher Council for Childhood (HCC), which is led by MOA, oversees the implementation of child rights policies, including combating child labor.(12) No information was available on how the CLU, the steering committee, and the HCC coordinate efforts on this issue.

The MOA is responsible for enforcing child labor laws through workplace inspections.(4) The MOA has approximately 25 inspectors who conduct child labor inspections.(13) The MOA maintains that the number of inspectors is inadequate to address the scope of the problem.(13) During the reporting period, the ILO trained MOA inspectors on investigating child labor issues.(13)

Child labor-related inspections at informal work sites are only permitted if a complaint is filed and the accused fails to respond to a summons from the CLU.(13, 37) No mechanism exists to investigate complaints of child domestic labor since social workers—the only officials allowed to enter a private home—may only assess the overall welfare of the family and not the working conditions of domestic laborers.(37)

The Government does not track the number of child labor violations, the number of children removed or assisted as a result of inspections, the number of citations issued for child labor, or the penalties applied and fines collected.(13) MOA estimates that approximately 4,000 to 5,000 children were removed from hazardous work by municipalities and local NGOs during the reporting period.(13)

The HCC, the Internal Security Forces (ISF), and the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) are jointly charged with the enforcement of laws related to forced labor, the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities.(7, 13) From January to June 2012, five investigations concerning commercial sexual exploitation and child trafficking were conducted.(13) The Public Prosecutor, the Juvenile Court Judge, the Police, and a representative from the Union for Protecting Childhood in Lebanon (UPEL), a quasi-governmental organization, cooperate to refer ill-treated and abused children, or children in conflict with the law, to appropriate services. This includes children exploited in the worst forms of child labor.(13, 14) With six locations throughout Lebanon, UPEL is charged with coordinating juvenile justice procedures and advising juvenile judges on referring the child to appropriate social services.(7, 14) During the reporting period, UPEL provided training to ISF officials on how to deal with cases of child trafficking.(13) An additional 1,926 ISF officials received training on human trafficking prevention during the reporting period.(38)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, MOA continued to implement its National Social Development Strategy, which lays out a plan for the establishment of a comprehensive social, health, and educational program.(13, 39) The strategy, includes the protection of working children and the implementation of HCC's strategy to address the needs of street children.(40)

During the reporting period, the National Protection Strategy to Combat and Protect Children from Child Abuse was approved by the Government. The strategy includes protections for child laborers and street children.(13)

In 2012, the Government launched a draft National Action Plan for Human Rights. The plan consists of proposed legislative and executive procedures in 21 human rights topics, including children's rights.(13) The Action Plan recommends cooperation between all relevant authorities to ban child labor.(41) The Action Plan must be approved by Parliament before it can be implemented.(41)

The Education Sector Development Plan focuses on expanding early childhood education, achieving higher rates of retention and achievement, and improving the quality of teachers.(42) The question of whether this plan has an impact on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During 2012, the Government began to participate in a European Union funded program that supports the implementation of the Education Sector Development

Plan.(13) The program focuses on improving retention and educational achievement in areas with high drop-out rates.(13)

The HCC, with government and UN funding, is leading a project to identify gaps in the child protection legal framework.(13) To date, HCC has drafted amendments to the Penal Code that provide clearer definitions on hazards children face and protective measures needed. These issues are currently under discussion by ministries and relevant parliamentary groups.(13)

NGOs and UN agencies are the main providers of children's social protection services, chiefly for child victims of trafficking.(15, 43) Due to the lack of funding, government bodies, such as the ISF and UPEL, depend on the aforementioned providers when making service referrals of children.(15) In addition, the scarcity of shelters for child trafficking victims results in some children being placed in juvenile detention centers.(15) The lack of shelters and resources to effectively handle child labor and trafficking cases puts children at a heightened risk for further exploitation.(15)

During the reporting period, MOSA continued to implement a national poverty alleviation program funded by the Government, the Italian Foreign Ministry, the World Bank, and the Canadian Embassy.(13) The program targets 74,000 families living below the poverty line and provides them with a variety of services including school waivers for children that preclude them from having to pay government school tuition and book fees. It is too early to determine what impact this poverty alleviation plan will have on child labor.(13)

The Government also worked with the ILO-IPEC on a study of child laborers between ages 5 and 17 in the North and Bekaa regions of Lebanon.(7, 13) In an additional collaboration, the ILO-IPEC and the Government conducted a mapping of policy and initiatives on child labor in Lebanon. Both reports were released in early 2012.(7)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Lebanon:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Approve into law the 2008 draft provisions to give labor inspectors the authority to inspect the informal sector and raise the minimum age of work to 15.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend Penal Code articles that criminalize child beggars to ensure their protection.	2011, 2012
	Ensure that children whose mothers are Lebanese nationals have the right to free education.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Adopt the pending legislation for raising the compulsory age of education from 12 to 15.	2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors.	2011, 2012
	Track and make publicly available the number of inspections carried out, with special attention to the incidence of child labor, the numbers of children assisted, and any sanctions imposed as a result of violations.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Assess the impact that the Education Sector Development Plan has had on addressing child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Approve the draft National Action Plan for Human Rights.	2012
Social Programs	Increase the number of shelters for children involved in the worst forms of child labor and child trafficking victims.	2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Lesotho made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established a Children's Court to enforce all criminal laws protecting children against child labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. The Government also expanded its Children's Grant program to include a tiered support system to households with more children. However, gaps in the law leave children working in domestic service, street vending, and most types of agriculture unprotected from labor violations. Children continue to be engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous cattle herding and in domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Lesotho are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in cattle herding and domestic service. Cattle herding among Lesotho boys is considered a rite of passage.(3, 4) Child herders often work in cattle posts for long hours, are exposed to extreme weather conditions, and are at risk of being attacked by armed thieves because they work in isolation.(3) Children herding cattle also may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(5, 6) According to Lesotho's 2008 labor survey, an estimated 66.0 percent of working children ages 6 to 14 in Lesotho are engaged in farming.(7, 8) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(9, 10)

Children, mostly girls, are commonly employed as domestic servants.(3, 4) These children work long hours, sometimes up to 16 hours a day.(4, 7) They also may be required to perform strenuous tasks, may lack sufficient food or shelter, and may be susceptible to sexual abuse because they are isolated in private homes.(10)

Children also engage in informal street vending during which they work long hours, generally without breaks, up to 7 days a week.(3) These children work in severe weather and are used by criminals to engage in illicit activities, such as theft.(3, 4)

Commercial sexual exploitation among both boys and girls is a problem in Lesotho. Many of these children are HIV/AIDS orphans; driven by poverty, they migrate to urban areas to engage in prostitution for survival.(4) Children are reportedly trafficked from Lesotho to South Africa for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic service.(4, 11)

With an HIV/AIDS rate of 23.3 percent, Lesotho has the third-highest rate of HIV prevalence in the world.(12, 13) The HIV/AIDS pandemic has resulted in 140,000 orphaned children as of 2011.(13) Orphans and vulnerable children (OVC), especially girls, often become primary caregivers for other family members and act as heads of households.(14)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

According to the Labor Code and the Children's Protection and Welfare Act (CPWA), the minimum age for employment is 15, and the minimum age for hazardous work is 18. Children ages 13 to 15 may perform light work in a home-based environment, technical school, or in another institution approved by the Department of Education.(15, 16) Light work may not cause harm to the health or development of a child and should not affect a child's ability to attend and to benefit from school.(16) The Labor Code and the CPWA prohibit the employment of children at night and in work that is likely to jeopardize their health, safety, and morals.(15, 16)

Lesotho

The CPWA defines hazardous work for children as mining and quarrying, portering, cattle herding, tobacco production, commercial sexual exploitation, work in bars and hotels, work in manufacturing where chemicals are produced or used, and work with dangerous machines.(4, 16) The law does not extend protections against hazardous labor to children employed in domestic service, street vending, and most types of agriculture.(17, 18) Although there are maximum penalties for violations of the CPWA, the Act does not set minimum punishments for employing underage children or exploiting children in night work, industrial undertakings, or hazardous work for first-time offenders.(16)

While Lesotho's Education Act of 2010 makes primary education free and compulsory from age 6, the age to which it is compulsory is not clear.(3, 19, 20) This decreases the likelihood of children attending school and may increase their vulnerability to exploitation.

The Constitution prohibits forced labor.(21) Lesotho's Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2011 prohibits trafficking of all citizens, including children, for both sexual and labor exploitation.(22) The Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2011 provides for a maximum penalty of life imprisonment for child trafficking.(7) In addition, the Children's Protection and Welfare Act criminalizes child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, and also prescribes stringent penalties of 20 years' imprisonment for these offenses.(3)

Military service in Lesotho is voluntary, and the minimum age for conscription is 18.(23) No legislation prohibits the use of children for illicit activities, such as the distribution and production of drugs. The ILO Committee of Experts recommends that amendments to the Labor Code prohibiting the use, procurement, or offering of children in illicit activities, principally the production or trafficking of drugs, that have been pending since 2006, be ratified.(24)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

In 2012, the Government of Lesotho renamed its multisectoral Program Advisory Committee on Child Labor to the National Task Team on child labor (NTT). The NTT still oversees the coordination of child labor programs at the national level.(3, 4) The NTT comprises representatives of government ministries, NGOs, international organizations, and law enforcement. Participating ministries include the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Relations; the Ministry of Gender and Youth, Sports, and Recreation; the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights; the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare; the Ministry of Education and Training; the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE); the Ministry of Home Affairs; and the Ministry of Law and Constitutional Affairs.(3, 4) The Child Labor Unit within the MOLE is responsible for leading the NTT.(4) There is no evidence of the NTT functioning during the reporting period.(4)

The Multi-Sectoral Committee on Combating Trafficking in Persons (MSC) is the Government of Lesotho's lead agency on trafficking in persons, including children, and is responsible for providing recommendations on legislations and policies to prevent trafficking. Chaired by the Ministry of Home Affairs, the MSC also has representations from the MOLE, the Child and Gender Protection Unit (CGPU) and the Ministries of Foreign Affairs; Gender, Youth, Sports and Recreation; Health and Social Welfare; Law and Constitutional Affairs; Justice and Human Rights; and Education and Training, among others.(17, 25) While the MSC is tasked with drafting a National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking and National Referral Guidelines for the Victims of Trafficking, these were not completed in 2012.(25) During the reporting period, World Vision assisted the MSC in drafting the referral guidelines, but the document remains under revision.(25) The MSC is also responsible for coordinating with stakeholders to conduct research on the extent of trafficking in Lesotho, conducting public awareness campaigns, identifying training needs of law enforcement, and ensuring the adequate protection, return, and reintegration of trafficking victims.(17) The MSC held two meetings in 2012.(25)

The MOLE and the CGPU of the national police are responsible for enforcing child labor laws and investigating child labor violations.(4) The MOLE has approximately 40 inspectors. These inspectors verified compliance with child labor laws during general labor inspections within the formal sector. The Government, UNICEF, and NGOs indicated that the number of inspectors was inadequate.(4) The MOLE and the CGPU also reported having inadequate resources, including insufficient transportation and fuel, to investigate child labor violations.(4). While the ILO organized a training on child labor for labor inspectors during the reporting period, the MOLE reported it to be inadequate because it did not provide practical skills for inspections in the informal sector.(4) While the Government of Lesotho does not have a referral system for children identified during inspections, the CGPU reported that child victims are referred to appropriate NGO-supported social services.(4)

The CGPU is responsible for enforcing laws related to hazardous and forced child labor, child prostitution, child trafficking, and the use of children for illicit activities. The Public Prosecutor's Office is responsible for prosecuting offenders of child labor-related laws.(4, 26) CGPU investigations are funded under the general operation budget of the national police; the CGPU did not receive funding specifically for investigating cases related to child trafficking, child prostitution, or the use of children in illicit activities during the reporting period.(4)

The Government of Lesotho could not provide statistics on the overall number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions of child labor and trafficking laws for the reporting period. In 2012, the MOLE carried out 1,200 labor inspections, an increase from 1,000 inspections in 2011. These inspections were mostly in the formal sector, although child labor is most prevalent in the informal sector.(3, 4) In 2012, the CGPU investigated 171 cases involving children, but could not determine how many of the investigated cases involved child labor.(4) One trafficking case concerning a minor was prosecuted.(4) If child trafficking victims were found, they were generally placed with the Lesotho Child Counseling Unit, a local charity that specializes in rehabilitating abused children.(25) No children were withdrawn from trafficking during the reporting period. The labor inspectorate and national police anecdotally reported identifying one child labor case involving a 14-year-old girl working as a domestic worker. When they attempted to remove the child from the home and reunite her with her family, the child refused. There is no evidence of a final resolution during the reporting period.(4, 25)

The Government of Lesotho established a Children's Court in 2012 to be responsible for the enforcement of all criminal laws to protect children, including laws against forced labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and use of children in illicit activities. The Court did not hear any child labor cases during the reporting period.(4).

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Lesotho does not have a functioning policy framework specifically for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. The Government established a National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor (APEC) in 2008 but could not begin implementation because the APEC had not received cabinet approval.(3, 4) The APEC was revised in 2011 so that it would not need such approval or an independent budget.(3) During the reporting period, the Government conducted a needs assessment of APEC implementing agencies to assess their readiness and the assistance they would need to implement APEC effectively and to determine the most appropriate way forward for implementation.(4)

The Government of Lesotho continues to implement its Education Sector Strategy Plan 2005-2015. The plan calls for improving access, equity, and quality of education. As part of this plan, the Government enacted the Education Act of 2010.(27) Lesotho's education policy also aims to eliminate school fees across the country through a phased approach and to provide school meals to vulnerable children.(3, 28) Effective January 2012, school fees were lowered in all public secondary schools. These advancements in the education policy are likely to increase school enrollment and may decrease child labor.(3) However, no assessment has been made on the impact of the Government of Lesotho's education policies on child labor.(4)

The Government's National Policy on Orphans and Vulnerable Children notes that OVC are exposed to child labor, safeguards the rights of OVC to an education, and calls for child labor prevention and vocational training programs.(14, 29) Through its National AIDS Commission, the Government of Lesotho also developed the HIV/AIDS Strategic Plan 2010-2012 for the herd boys' community. This Plan calls for access to education and HIV/AIDS awareness raising for herders.(30) Although herd boys are no more affected by HIV/AIDS than the rest of the Lesotho population, this Plan is directed at the herd boys' community, because they are considered especially vulnerable due to their poverty, level of education, and geographical inaccessibility. Many Basotho boys raised as herders do not receive formal education and are illiterate, which prevents them from being able to read the materials published on HIV/AIDS issues.(30)

Lesotho

The 2008 United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), revised in 2009, ended in the reporting year. The UNDAF developed core strategies to set national priorities for poverty reduction and the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals in Lesotho.(31) These include provisions for vulnerable populations, such as children with HIV/AIDS and OVC.(31) The UNDAF promoted education for herd boys, domestic workers, and vulnerable children. It also supported youth employment and built the Government's capacity to provide social welfare services to vulnerable children.(31) The new UNDAF cycle will run from 2013 to 2017 to align with national development processes.(8)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the Government conducted public campaigns to increase awareness of human trafficking. With support from an NGO, the national police conducted a campaign for taxi drivers to assist in identifying and preventing trafficking.(25)

The Government of Lesotho continued to implement its Child Grant Program, increasing its support from 50.0 percent of the benefit cost of the program to 75.0 percent in 2012. The EU contributed funding for the remaining 25.0 percent.(4) The Child Grants Program provides direct cash transfers to the OVC as a means to improve the living standards of the OVC by increasing their school enrollment and improving their nutrition and health.(4) In 2012, the Government introduced a tiered transfer system for the Child Grants Program, which increases the grant amount per household based on the number of OVC for which each household is caring. Households with one to two children receive $41 per quarter, those with three to four children receive $69 per quarter, and families with five or more receive $87 per quarter.(4) As of September 2012, the Child Grants program served 9,987 households caring for 27,959 children.(4) The Government also continued its support of the OVC Scholarship Program, which pays for the tuition, uniforms, supplies, and boarding fees for OVC. Since 2000, this Program has helped 22,000 children in Lesotho.(4) The Government and UNICEF described both the Child Grants Program and the OVC Scholarship Program as insufficient relative to the size of the OVC population. Research found no evidence of an assessment of the impact of either program on reducing the worst forms of child labor in Lesotho.(4)

Although the Government of Lesotho has implemented programs to assist the OVC, research found no evidence that it carried out programs during the reporting period to assist children engaged in domestic service, commercial sexual exploitation, livestock herding, and street work.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Lesotho:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Legally establish 15 as the age to which education is compulsory to match the minimum age for full-time work.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that laws protect children working in domestic service, street vending, and agriculture.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Draft and adopt laws to prohibit the use of children for illicit activities.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Establish minimum penalties for those who commit offenses under the Children's Protection and Welfare Act.	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Ensure that the NTT serves its function to coordinate efforts to combat child labor.	2011, 2012
	Provide adequate funding to support the MOLE and the CGPU to conduct child labor investigations.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Collect and publish appropriate statistics on investigations, prosecutions, and convictions of child labor and trafficking laws.	2011, 2012
	Provide training on practical inspection skills to all labor inspectors.	2011, 2012
	Implement a trafficking victim referral system.	2011, 2012
Policies	Implement the action results of the APEC need assessment to address child labor within the APEC specifically.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that the education policies may have on addressing child labor.	2012
	Adopt and implement the National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking.	2012
Social Programs	Assess the impact of the Child Grants Program and the OVC Scholarships Program on the elimination of worst forms of child labor.	2012
	Implement social programs to assist children engaged in domestic service, commercial sexual exploitation, livestock herding, and street work.	2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Liberia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the International Convention on the Rights of the Child, raised awareness on its Child Rights Act, conducted police raids on institutions suspected of engaging in commercial sexual exploitation of children and expanded commitments to social programs. However, the Government has yet to pass into law the Decent Work Bill, including a hazardous labor list, and enforcement efforts are still lacking. Children in Liberia continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous activities in the agriculture and mining sectors.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Liberia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous activities in the agriculture and mining sectors. Some children working in agriculture are engaged in risky activities, including using dangerous tools and applying harmful pesticides.(3-7) On some rubber plantations, children are employed to tap rubber trees, clear brush, and carry buckets, which are considered dangerous activities.(3, 8, 9)

Children are engaged in mining natural resources, and although information is limited, it suggests that some children mine alluvial diamonds.(3, 9-11) Some children are known to mine gold, engaging in dangerous activities such as digging trenches with shovels and pick axes and washing gravel. Reports suggest that some children are also engaged in quarrying and stone cutting and crushing, though the full scope of the problem is unknown.(3, 10-14) Children's work in mining and quarrying often involves unsafe activities, such as carrying heavy loads and working long hours.(15)

Liberian children are engaged in the informal sector as vendors, porters, and construction workers (which may involve breaking rocks and digging sand), which involve transporting heavy loads.(11, 12, 16-21) Some children are forced to beg and engage in illicit activities, such as selling drugs or commercial sexual exploitation.(11, 22) In the domestic service sector, children commonly work long hours and are exposed to exploitative conditions.(11-13, 16) These children may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(23, 24)

In 2012, limited reports indicate that children within Liberia were recruited from border regions by pro-Gbagbo armed rebel groups for armed conflict in cross-border raids between Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire.(25, 26)

Liberia

Children are trafficked within Liberia for domestic service and exploitative labor.(27-29) Children are also trafficked to Liberia from Sierra Leone, as well as being trafficked from Liberia to Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, and Nigeria for domestic service, street vending, sexual exploitation, agricultural labor, and forced begging.(29) In addition, during the reporting period, there were a few isolated reports that some Ivorian refugee girls had engaged in sex for food and shelter in Liberia.(22)

Between 1990 and 2003, Liberia was engaged in intermittent internal and regional armed conflict, which resulted in the displacement of entire communities and the destruction of the country's political, economic, and physical infrastructure, including schools.(30) Due to the level of destruction and budgetary and resource constraints, the school infrastructure is still being rebuilt. The limited number of schools in some areas impedes access to education and increases the risk of children engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(29, 31, 32) Furthermore, sexual abuse by male teachers in schools is reported as a barrier to girls' education.(33, 34)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(11, 22)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Law sets the minimum age for work at 16 for the agriculture sector. The minimum age for work in the industrial sector is 18.(35) Children younger than age 16 are prohibited from working during school hours and may only work for wages if the employer can demonstrate that they are attending school regularly and have a basic education.(35) According to the Labor Law, recruiters are permitted to hire children between ages 16 and 18 for light work in occupations that the Ministry of Labor determines are not harmful to the children's physical and moral development.(8, 35) The Labor Law does not include any penalties for violations of its child labor laws, which inhibits prosecution.(12, 35) However, at times, perpetrators can be prosecuted under the Penal Law's child endangerment provision.(36)

The 2011 National Children's Act prohibits the worst forms of child labor—including engaging children in illicit activities, prostitution, pornography, and armed conflict—and protects children from (non-specified) hazardous activities.(12, 22, 29, 37) During the reporting period, the Government disseminated and raised awareness on the provisions of the Act.(11) Additionally, the Decent Work Bill is still pending in front of the Senate.(38) The Bill would provide additional protections for children, including a hazardous labor list.(11) However, the Bill's list of hazardous labor is not comprehensive and does not include all activities that are prohibited to children younger than age 18.(39)

The Constitution of the Republic of Liberia prohibits forced labor, bonded labor, and slavery.(12, 40) The Act to Ban Trafficking in Persons within the Republic of Liberia criminalizes internal and international trafficking of children for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(12, 41) The Act to Amend the New Penal Code Chapter 14 Section 14.70 and to Provide for (the crime of) Gang Rape prohibits rape, including intercourse with a child younger than age 18.(42, 43) When enforced, the penalties for violating these laws are reportedly sufficient to serve as deterrents.(12) The minimum age for voluntary military recruitment into the Liberian Army is 18.(44)

The Education Reform Act of 2011 increased the compulsory age of education from age 12 to age 15. The Act eliminated the gap between the compulsory education age and minimum age for work, which is age 16.(13) However, in practice, many children still pay school fees to attend school, which may prevent some children from attending school.(13)

During the reporting period, the Government also adopted the International Convention on the Rights of a Child.(32) In addition, the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa (the “Kampala Convention”) came into force in Liberia. The Kampala Convention prohibits the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict, as well as the trafficking, abduction, and forced labor of women and children.(45, 46)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Commission on Child Labor (NACOMAL) is charged with monitoring child labor issues and directing child labor policies. The commission is headed by the Ministry of Labor and includes representatives from 16 other organizations, including NGOs and international and civil society organizations.(11, 47) The objectives of NACOMAL include reforming national child labor laws and designing a national child labor database.(13, 47) In addition, the Child Protection Network, chaired by the Ministry of Gender and Development (MOGD), coordinates child protection efforts through monthly meetings to discuss child protection issues, including child labor and trafficking. Members of the network include the Ministry of Labor, the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare, the Ministry of Justice’s Women and Children Protection Section (WCPS), the Liberia National Police Force, civil society organizations and several NGO’s.(11) The Child Protection Network also is responsible for coordinating referrals for provision of services to child victims, and receives support from international and national organizations in doing so.(13, 48) In addition, the MOGD manages seven community child welfare committees in different counties that monitor children’s issues at the community level and also makes referrals to other organizations.(13)

NACOMAL and other ministries generally perform preliminary investigations on exploitative child labor cases.(43) Child labor cases requiring further investigation or possible prosecution are referred to WCPS. WCPS has approximately 217 investigators.(11) During the reporting period, the Government performed a number of raids on institutions suspected of being brothels engaged in commercial sexual exploitation of children.(49-51) As of February 2013, the outcome of the raids is unknown.(12) In 2012, WCPS processed 54 cases of child endangerment, some of which were child labor cases. Though, none of the child labor cases were prosecuted, and no additional information on the number of child labor prosecutions was available at the time of writing.(11) According to the ILO and other stakeholders, severe budgetary constraints, a lack of resources (such as computer equipment), and staff training impede the efforts of NACOMAL and WCPS to combat the worst forms of child labor.(11, 29, 43, 52)

Liberia has mechanisms in place for monitoring and prosecuting criminal violations involving the worst forms of child labor as they relate to trafficking and the use of children in illicit activities.(12) These include a number of specialized enforcement mechanisms, such as the Liberian Transnational Crime Unit, which receives support from UNODC.(53) The Unit brings together Liberian law enforcement and security experts from the National Police, National Security Agency, Customs, Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization (BIN), and other law enforcement agencies to coordinate responses to international organized crime.(53) There is also a new Anti-Trafficking Bureau set up within the WCPS of the LNP. It is composed of 4 officers who are being mentored by Swedish UNPOL advisors for the next year.(53)

The Ministry of Justice, through WCPS and BIN, is responsible for enforcing laws relating to violations involving the worst forms of child labor including trafficking. The Government coordinates anti-trafficking activities through the Anti-Trafficking Task Force, which is chaired by the Ministry of Labor and includes the Commissioner of BIN, the Liberia National Police, and representatives from the Ministries of Justice, Foreign Affairs, and Internal Affairs.(54) During the year, the Government of Liberia reports making an arrest of a child trafficker who subsequently escaped captivity.(36, 55) Reports suggest that the Government did not collect or publish information on exploitative child labor during the reporting period.(12)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Liberia has a number of policy frameworks that address child labor.(12) The Government has undertaken a Country Program Action Plan (2008-2012) with UNICEF that seeks to reduce the vulnerability of children to exploitation, including child labor and child trafficking.(30) The plan calls for national child labor data collection and analysis, as well as management capacity building of Liberian institutions, and includes indicators, targets, and sources of data to measure progress.(30) However, due to resource and staffing constraints, the Government did not collect or publish data on child labor during the reporting period, which hinders enforcement and policy implementation efforts.(12, 43, 56) The Government is currently designing a National Action Plan under the Anti-Trafficking Law.

During the reporting period, the Governments of Sierra Leone and Liberia signed a joint agreement to curb illegal cross-border activities between their two countries, such as human trafficking and illicit mining.(57) No additional information is available about the Plan or the Agreement at the time of writing.

The Government of Liberia has included child labor issues in other development agendas and social policies. The United Nations Development Assistance Framework for Liberia (2008-2012) tasks the Government with reforming national labor laws in accordance with ILO Conventions and assisting in the implementation of child labor policies.(58) The Framework promotes youth empowerment and improving access to quality education.(58) The Government's Poverty Reduction Strategy (2008-2011), still relevant during the reporting period, recognizes the link between household income and child labor and highlights the importance of protecting children from physical, psychological, and sexual abuse.(59)

Liberia's National Social Welfare Policy prioritizes the development of action plans and policies that target children engaged in exploitive labor and child trafficking.(60) The Government has a National Employment Policy that aims to provide vocational training for youth.(61) The Liberian National Youth Policy of 2008 and revamped in 2012 identified as priority target groups for assistance children working in the informal sector, children living and working in the streets, and children associated with armed groups.(62) However, the National Youth Policy for Liberia has not been formally adopted as of the writing of this report and its status is unclear.(43) Additionally, the Government of Liberia has a National Youth Policy Action Plan, which provides youth of legal working age with training in entrepreneurship skills and links to business mentoring programs and cooperatives.(63) The Rubber Industry Master Plan (2010-2040) prioritizes the development of the rubber industry and includes provisions for improving workers' standard of living, access to credit, and children's access to education.(64)

The Government has an Education for All Policy (2010-2013) that aims to provide universal primary education by 2015. The Ministry of Education has an Education Sector Plan (2010-2020) that aims to improve the education infrastructure, as well as the access to and quality of primary education.(65) The Ministry of Education has a 5-year Plan (2010-2014) to provide education to vulnerable children affected by HIV/AIDS.(66) During the reporting period, the President also endorsed the New Deal Trust policy that commits the Government of Liberia to improving the efficiency and effectiveness of its key ministries, such as the Ministries of Finance, Health, and Education.(67) In addition, in the new 2030 Vision policy document (2012-2017), the Government of Liberia outlines its goal to become a middle income country by 2030, by increasing focus on education and livelihoods.(68, 69)

While the child protection, livelihoods, and education policies noted above address some child labor concerns, the impact of these policies on child labor has yet to be assessed.(43)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, President Sirleaf spoke out against child labor and extolled the benefits of education.(70) The President passed a 2012 fiscal year National Budget of an estimated $672 million; of this amount, $69 million was allocated for education and an additional $20 million was allocated for youth development.(71, 72) In addition, the Government continued to implement the $175 million, multi-donor funded Liberia Agriculture Investment Program (2011-2015), which aims to enhance household livelihoods in the agriculture sector by building linkages with markets and improving rural infrastructure, which may have a positive impact on reducing exploitative child labor.(73)

The Government of Liberia started participating in the USDOL-funded, 4-year, $6 million project to combat child labor in the rubber sector.(74) The project aims to withdraw and prevent 10,100 children from engaging in the worst forms of child labor by providing education, as well as providing livelihoods support to 3,700 vulnerable families. The project is implemented in collaboration with local rubber industries.(74) The Government also cooperated with a USDOL-funded $1.4 million grant for research on forced labor in the rubber sector, which ended in March 2012.(75) The Government of Liberia participated in two regional USDOL-funded projects, including a 4-year, $7.95 million regional project and a 3-year, $5 million regional project, both of which assisted ECOWAS member countries in strengthening regional efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. In 2012, with the assistance of the two regional projects, ECOWAS developed a draft Regional Plan of Action for the elimination of child labor.(76, 77) In addition to the two regional projects, USDOL funded a global, 4.5-year, $6.7 million project worked with the Liberian Government to build national capacity to collect and analyze child labor data.(78) The Government also continued to participate in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Liberia, the project aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor.(79)

Save the Children, with participation of the Government of Liberia, supported a drop-in center in Monrovia, which provide street children with safe-haven and services.(80) The Government supported microcredit activities by the Ministry of Information, Culture Affairs, and Tourism, providing $2.7 million in funds as loan guarantees for small businesses, which can increase livelihoods and decrease dependence on child labor.(81) The Government of Germany also pledged funds to support Government efforts to build national police capacity and build schools.(82)

The Government continued to participate in the UNODC West Africa Coast Initiative that aims to strengthen national capacities and cross-border cooperation to address organized crime, including human trafficking and drug trafficking.(53, 83) With support from IOM, the Government provided training to immigration and labor officials during the year, including on identification and provision of services to trafficking victims.(29, 84)

The Government of Liberia participates in the EU-funded, $3.1 million Social Cash Transfer Program, which aims to provide regular payments to poor and “labor constrained” households in Bomi County, along with other counties. Labor constrained households include households in which the majority of household members are unable to work for reasons such as disability.(85) The program targets 5,000 households, and each beneficiary household receives between $10 and $25 per month.(85) The Government of Liberia participates in the USAID-funded, 4-year (ending September 2014) Educating and Protecting Vulnerable Children in Family Settings Project, which aims to enhance protection systems for vulnerable children, including improving access to primary education and health services.(86)

Liberia continues to participate in the World Bank-funded, $40 million Fast Track Initiative Grant for Basic Education project that aims to improve primary education access and quality.(87, 88) The Government participated in a project funded by Sahbu, an NGO, that provided educational scholarships to children.(89) Ending in June 2013, the project targets over 470,000 direct beneficiaries. The Government of Liberia continued to implement the World Bank-funded, $6 million Youth Employment and Skills Project that aims to provide employment opportunities and training to youth.(90) The Project targets 49,500 direct beneficiaries and is scheduled to end in June 2013.(90)

During the reporting period, the Government participated in numerous food security, agriculture and livelihood improvement programs, which can decrease household dependency on child labor. For example, the Government participated in the USDA and USAID-funded Sustainable Tree Crops Program, which aimed to support cocoa farmers through training and farmer field schools, and to improve cocoa production and income in the counties of Bong, Lofa, and Nimba.(91) The International Fund for Agricultural Development and the Government of Liberia also signed a loan agreement during the reporting period for $25 million to improve food security for 300,000 households under the Smallholder Tree Crop Project.(92) In addition, the Government signed for a $15 million credit from the World Bank to increase access to finance, technologies, and markets for smallholder tree crop farmers.(93) During the reporting period, the Governments of Liberia and Japan signed a food aid agreement worth $8.5 million that aims to build livelihoods and increase food security in the rice sector in 15 countries.(94) The Government also participates in a U.S. Government-funded, $75 million Feed the Future Project that aims to improve the food security and nutrition among vulnerable populations.(95)

During the reporting period, the Government of Liberia continued to cooperate with the UN High Commissioner for Refugees to establish camps and provide essential services to Ivorian refugees, including children.(96-100) The Government participated in a World Bank funded Emergency Food Support for Vulnerable Women and Children Project that provided school lunches to 310 schools in the counties of Maryland, Grand Kru, Grand Gedeh, River Gee, and Sinoe, in Southeastern Liberia.(101) In addition, the Government of Liberia took a number of steps, such as increasing refugee camps security and apprehending suspects, to address the issue of child soldier recruitment by cross-border rebel groups from Côte d'Ivoire.(26, 102) As of February 2013, reports conflict as to whether or not the Government's steps were sufficient to address the issue.(26, 103, 104)

The question of whether these education, social protection and livelihoods programs have had an impact on child labor has yet to be assessed. In addition, despite government efforts, the worst forms of child labor continue to be a significant problem. Current social programs do not match the scope of the problem.

Liberia

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Liberia:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Pass law, potentially the Decent Work Bill, which includes a hazardous labor list for children younger than age 18, and sufficiently strict penalties for engaging in exploitative child labor, in compliance with international standards.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that the law, potentially through the new Labor Law, includes provisions that protect children engaged in street work and domestic labor.	2011, 2012
	Implement legal provisions that provide for free education.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Fully fund child labor enforcement mechanisms and prosecution efforts, such as NACOMAL, WCPS, and the Anti-Human Trafficking Task Force and provide necessary training for such officials, to enforce child labor laws.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Consistently collect and publish data on violations, citations, investigations, and prosecutions for child labor and child trafficking.	2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Collect (such as through national child labor surveys) and publish data on child labor and child trafficking, to inform enforcement efforts and policies.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Formally adopt and implement the National Youth Policy for Liberia.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing child protection, livelihoods and education policies may have on addressing child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Assess and evaluate the impact that existing education, social protection, and livelihoods programs may have on addressing child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase the scope of existing social programs to reach more children at risk of and engaged in the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Macedonia

In 2012, Macedonia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Macedonia adopted a rulebook on the minimum occupational safety and health requirements for workers younger than 18 years, continued to implement projects to assist street children and children from the Roma communities, opened a toll-free hotline for street children and victims of sexual abuse, and trained social workers to address trafficking. However, the Government does not have a national system to record labor inspections and make the data publicly available, and Government programs are not of sufficient scope to cover the majority of children being trafficked or working on the streets. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and child trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation.

Statistics on Working Children and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working	5-14 yrs.	9.9 (30,052)
Attending School	5-14 yrs.	84.7
Combining Work and School	7-14 yrs.	11.5
Primary Completion Rate		92.3

Primary completion rate: Data from 2009 published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2013.(1)

All other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS3, 2005.(2)

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Macedonia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly as victims of domestic and international trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging on the streets.(3-6) Macedonian victims of trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation tended to be minors between the ages of 12 and 18. Women and young girls were subjected to conditions of forced labor and sex trafficking in Macedonia's bars and nightclubs.(5)

Children in Macedonia, primarily ethnic Roma, are forced to beg and sell cigarettes and other small items in open markets, in the streets, and to patrons of bars and restaurants.(4-11) The ILO notes that the majority of children engaged in child labor did so on an unpaid basis.(12)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Constitution and the Labor Relations Act set the minimum working age at 15.(6, 13-15) Children who are 14 years of age are allowed to work as apprentices or as part of an official educational program.(6, 13, 14, 16) In October 2012, the Minister of Labor and Social Policy, with the consent of the Minister of Health, adopted a Rulebook on the minimum occupational safety and health requirements for workers younger than 18 years of age.(17) The Rulebook covers the general provisions for the protection of workers and prescribes the limit values of exposure to the harmful effects of physical, chemical, and biological agents in the workplace, and the list of harmful factors and working conditions to which young workers should not be exposed.(17)

Forced labor is prohibited by Article 11 of the Constitution.(13, 14) Trafficking of children is specifically prohibited and can be prosecuted under Article 418 of the Criminal Code.(4, 5, 18) In the case of foreign child victims of trafficking, the Law on Foreigners allows them two months of temporary residence to determine whether they wish to assist the authorities with prosecutions. This period can be extended several times, conditioned upon collaboration with the authorities during criminal proceedings.(4, 5)

The minimum age for voluntary military service is age 18, and there is no compulsory military service.(19) The Criminal Code bans prostitution and procuring people for prostitution, in addition to forced labor, slavery, and transporting of people into slavery.(4, 5, 18) The Law on the Protection of Children forbids prostitution, including any type of sexual use or abuse of children. In addition, Article 201 of the Criminal Code states that it is illegal for parents or guardians to coerce children into forced prostitution for their own interest.(18)

While begging itself is not illegal in Macedonia, the use of children for forced organized and exploitative begging is prohibited under Article 201 of the Criminal Code.(18)

Education in Macedonia is free and compulsory to age 15, which is also the minimum age that children can start working in Macedonia.(14, 20) Roma children sometimes experience discriminatory treatment in schools, and primary level enrollment and completion rates remain low for this group.(8, 11) School dropout rates are significantly higher among Roma children.(9)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Commission for the Protection of the Rights of Children is a coordinating body composed of representatives from government agencies.(5, 16) The Commission's responsibilities include protection against child labor; however, the main focus of the group is social services and other ways to protect children's rights.(16) The National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration coordinates the work of all institutions involved in the prevention, protection, and prosecution of trafficking in humans. This National Commission is chaired by the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator who has the status of counselor of State.(16, 21) The National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration meets six times a year to draft policies and strategies, monitor their implementation, report on them, and recommend activities. The Commission has a subgroup which addresses child victims of trafficking.(21)

The Ministry of Labor and Social Policy (MLSP), the Ministry of Interior (MOI), the Ombudsman's Office, the Prosecutor's Office, the Courts, and Social Care Centers are the agencies responsible for enforcing laws regarding hazardous and forced child labor.(6, 16) There are 110 labor inspectors who are responsible for all labor violations, including child labor.(6, 10) In regional offices where there is only one inspector, he or she may cover all labor violations without having been trained on occupational safety and health standards for children.(22, 23) Occupational safety and health and labor relations inspectors are mandated to carry out at least 60 inspections per month and at least one inspection per year for businesses within the following sectors: industrial, agriculture, trade, construction, forestry, transport, communal services, craft trade, hotel and restaurants, schools and universities, workshops, and laboratories used for professional practice.(23) Inspections for all other premises are required once every 3 years.(22, 23) The ILO Committee of Experts has encouraged the Government to expand the reach and strengthen the capacity of the labor inspection services to better monitor work performed by children in the informal sector.(12)

The data and results of the MLSP inspections are not shared between the regional offices and are not publicly available.(23) The Office of the Ombudsman is available to receive complaints of hazardous and forced child labor.(6) The Ombudsman's Office reported that there were no official complaints of child labor in 2012.(6)

The Ministry of the Interior (MOI) special police unit is responsible for investigating crimes involving child trafficking, use of children in illicit activities, commercial sexual exploitation, and forced begging.(6) The police unit has 19 officers dedicated to organized crime, corruption and trafficking. Five of these officers are specifically designated to investigate cases involving the trafficking of children for the purpose of sexual and labor exploitation.(6, 16) According to data available to the Office of National Referral Mechanism, eight victims of human trafficking were identified in 2012. Four of these victims were minors.(17) In 2012, five children were found to be victims of child trafficking.(6) All children found to be victims of child trafficking were removed from the situation, placed in shelters for trafficked children, and given immediate medical and psychological care.(6)

In 2012, police charged a total of 33 people with trafficking in persons offenses.(5) The Prosecution Office obtained convictions against 20 defendants in four trafficking cases. Sentences for these convictions ranged from nine months to ten years.(5) Information was unavailable regarding whether any of the victims were children.

The Government continued to implement police directives, which jointly include one plainclothes police officer and one social worker reaching out to street children and engaging their families in order to encourage other lifestyles, including school attendance.(6) Research indicates that government efforts to eliminate forced begging by children have been ineffective. The necessary laws were in place, but they were rarely implemented by officials.(10, 11)

In October 2012, the Anti-Trafficking Coordinator participated in a conference for southeastern European countries to coordinate national activities for combating trafficking and establish more efficient regional cooperation.(5) Social workers and Directors of the Centers for Social Work (CSW) received specialized antitrafficking training on the role of the CSW in dealing with trafficking cases. Social workers working on mobile teams completed antitrafficking courses, and general training for social workers covered how to identify victims of labor exploitation.(5)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The MLSP adopted a 10-year National Strategy in 2010 for the Fight Against Poverty and Social Exclusion. The strategy addresses children's rights including social protection, social inclusion, health, education, and employment.(6, 16) The question of whether this policy has an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

The National Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration drafted the new National Strategy and the 2013-2016 National Action Plan (NAP). The plan was adopted by the Government of Macedonia in October, 2012.(5) The third consecutive NAP sets the country's priorities and serves as a tool for increasing Macedonia's ability to combat trafficking.(5) It coordinates procedures with neighboring countries and puts forth new approaches to reduce the vulnerability of risk groups and potential victims. The plan covers prevention and focuses on early detection of both victims and traffickers. It also calls for the establishment of local anti-trafficking committees and mobile teams.(5) The National Rapporteur on Trafficking and Smuggling published its fourth annual report in February 2013, providing a comprehensive assessment of trafficking in persons activities during 2012.(5)

The Government has a 10-year National Plan of Action on the Rights of the Child (2006-2015), which outlines activities for prevention and elimination of the worst forms of child labor. The National Action Plan includes direct assistance and intervention for withdrawal from child labor, rehabilitation of victims, and provisions for better access to primary education.(8, 16) The implementation of the National Plan of Action has been slow, however, with no specific funds being earmarked for implementation, including the monitoring and evaluation of the Plan.(8, 9) An Action Plan for Children on the Streets 2013-2015 is currently being developed in order to provide a systemic and holistic response to the issue of children on the streets. (17). The plan includes an emphasis on social services, health care, and inclusion in the educational system. It is anticipated that the Action Plan will be adopted in the first quarter of 2013.(17)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Ministry of Labor and Social Policy, with international support, continues to operate five Drop-In Centers responsible for rendering social services to children working in the streets, including street children who beg.(11, 16, 24) A team of inspectors search for these children to persuade them to go to the centers or back to school. A free-of-charge SOS phone line was opened to report a child on the street or a child victim of sexual abuse.(17)

The ILO Committee of Experts noted that the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy, in cooperation with UNICEF, is implementing a project for improved social protection for street children entitled, "Children-at-risk; Breaking the Cycle of Social Exclusion of Children in Macedonia." This project aims to develop services and programs for children who live and work on the street, as well as for their families.(9) The Ministry of Labor and Social Policy, in cooperation with the Roma Education Fund and 19 government units, continued to implement the “Inclusion of Roma Children in Pre-School Education” project. This project implements some of the measures and activities included in the Decade of Roma Inclusion and Roma Strategy in the Republic of Macedonia.(11, 25) The main goal of the project is to improve and support the integration of Roma children by increasing the number of Roma children in preschool.(25)

The Government fully funds the operation of a shelter for domestic trafficking victims. In 2012, the Government allocated federal funding for five NGOs to conduct preventive antitrafficking activities and to provide services to victims of trafficking.(5) The Center for victims of human trafficking assisted a total of 12 people in 2012. Ten of these victims were minors.(17) The victims received emotional and medical support, in addition to legal aid. Efforts for their social inclusion were made in cooperation with NGOs and the social workers from the CSW.(17) The CSW also provide reintegration services for domestic victims of trafficking. However, they cannot accommodate all victims seeking services in a 24-hour period. There is no facility that is specifically dedicated to children. Children and adults are housed in the same facilities.(21)

In Gostivar, Bitola, and Kumanovo, social workers from the CSW and representatives of NGOs work in the field to detect human trafficking victims and vulnerable groups.(17) In addition, the teams work to find and propose possible solutions to address the needs of vulnerable groups, provide help and support to identified trafficking victims and their families, and implement programs for reintegration.(17)

The Government runs a Reception Center for foreign victims of trafficking. Additional services at the Reception Center are provided by an NGO receiving funds from the Government.(21) The Reception Center has no facilities dedicated exclusively to children and they do not have the capacity to handle male victims or any victims under 12 years of age.(21)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Macedonia:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Expand the reach and strengthen the capacity of labor inspection services to better monitor work performed by children in the informal sector.	2012
	Provide the inspectors of the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy with a nationally accessible system to record inspections and make data publicly available.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Government Policies	Provide sufficient funding to implement the National Plan of Action on the Rights of the Child (2006-2015)	2012
Social Programs	Expand programs to address the economic and education factors behind forced, organized, and exploitative begging, particularly within the Roma community.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase the capacity of the Reception Center and the Centers for Social Welfare to reach more child victims of trafficking and forced labor, adapting the services of these shelters to the unique needs of child victims, including separate spaces for children.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Madagascar made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The de facto government conducted child trafficking related investigations and participated in UN and World Bank-funded education and livelihoods programs. However, some of the labor positions within the de facto government remained vacant, and most of the child labor policies and laws from the previous administration were not implemented. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in hazardous forms of agriculture and mining.

Children in Madagascar are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including hazardous activities in agriculture and mining. (3, 4) In Madagascar, children produce a variety of agricultural products. While the extent of the problem is unknown, evidence suggests that children as young as age 8 are involved in the production of grapes, wine, tea, cocoa, and cotton. (5, 6) Although information is limited, there are reports that children are also found working in the vanilla sector, hand-pollinating flowers and also working in the triage and drying process for 7 to 8 hours a day. Limited evidence also suggests that children are engaged in cutting and planting sisal (an agave plant with sharp edges commonly used to produce rope) in the district of Amboasary. (5-10) Although information is limited, there are reports that children are engaged in the production of copra (dried meat of the coconut) in Sambava and Toamasina. (5, 6) In addition, some children reportedly labor in the tea industry, working with fertilizer or carrying up to 50 kilograms of weight on their backs. (5, 6, 11) Risks for children engaged in agriculture include using dangerous tools, carrying heavy loads, and applying hazardous pesticides. (3, 12, 13)

Although information is limited, there are reports that children herd cattle and sheep, working long hours and risking exposure to environmental elements. (11, 14) Limited evidence suggests that children in coastal areas are engaged in fishing, including for crabs, sea cucumbers, shrimp, and oysters. (5, 10, 11, 15) Some children also perform deep-sea diving. Children engaged in the fishing sector may be at risk of drowning and excessive sun exposure. (6, 15) Although information is limited, there are some reports that some children make charcoal, risking injury from burning wood and carrying heavy loads. (11, 14)

Children in various regions are involved in hazardous gemstone mining, including mining for sapphires. (15) These children are at risk of suffocation and death during mine cave-ins and landslides. Although information is limited, there are reports that children engaged in salt mining risk respiratory illness and exposure to high temperatures, and may carry heavy loads. A growing number of children (some as young as age 7) are involved in gold mining in the regions of Analamanga, Vakinankaratra, and Anosy. These children work 10 hours per day and earn no more than $14 per week.(8, 11, 16, 17) In stone quarries, children work long hours crushing rocks to produce building materials, and they endure physical and verbal abuse.(14, 18, 19)

In the urban informal sector, children work in bars, sell goods on the street, and transport goods by rickshaw.(4, 15, 20) Children are also reportedly involved in transporting bricks to trucks or construction sites.(5) Such children commonly carry heavy loads. There are also an unknown number of street children who guard vehicles and fetch water for restaurants. Such activities may include carrying heavy loads and exposure to criminal elements.(21) Limited reports suggest that children are forced to beg by relatives in order to earn an income for the family, and some are subjected to violence.(22)

Malagasy children engaged in domestic service commonly work in Antananarivo or Antsirabe and are between the ages of 9 and 12. These children work an average of 12 hours per day, with some working as much as 18 hours per day. Many children receive little to no payment or even in-kind compensation (such as room and board) for their work.(10, 14, 15, 23-28) These children are sometimes exposed to hazardous activities, such as carrying heavy loads, as well as to sexual and psychological abuse from their employers.(14, 15, 23-26)

A growing number of children in Madagascar's coastal cities and in Antananarivo are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation to survive and to pay for school fees.(10, 15, 29-32) Children, mostly girls, are exploited in sex tourism. Children are often recruited for commercial sexual exploitation through fraudulent offers of employment in the service industry and are subject to physical and psychological abuse.(29, 33)

Madagascar is a source country for domestic and international trafficking in persons.(29, 33) Reportedly, Malagasy children are mostly trafficked domestically from rural to urban areas for forced labor in sectors such as commercial sexual exploitation, domestic service, mines, fishing, and agriculture.(29) The majority of child trafficking involves recruitment by acquaintances, transport operators, tour guides, and hotel workers, as well as complacent family members.(29, 33)

Reports indicate that ongoing political and economic instability since the 2009 coup and subsequent droughts and cyclones have caused an increase in unemployment, inflation, and poverty.(10, 26, 29, 34-42) These problems appear to have contributed to a decrease in school enrollment and an increase in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in commercial sexual exploitation of girls. Furthermore, the lack of school infrastructure (especially in rural areas) and vocational and technical training opportunities are significant barriers to children's education in Madagascar.

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code sets the minimum age for work and apprenticeships at 15.(43) The Decree also permits children age 14 to work if authorized by a labor inspector and compulsory schooling is completed.(15)

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	C138, Minimum Age	✓
	C182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	CRC	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓
	Minimum Age for Work	15
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	18
	Compulsory Education Age	14
	Free Public Education	Yes

The Labor Code prohibits children under age 18 from employment that is immoral or hazardous, and several other laws also restrict children's work.(43) Decree N2007-563 permits children between ages 15 and 17 to perform light work if the work does not exceed their strength, is not hazardous, and does not interfere with their health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral, and social development.(48) Both the Decree and the Labor Code prohibit children under age 18 from working at night. The Decree further stipulates the maximum weight a child can carry, by gender (i.e., 10 kg for girls and 20 kg for boys). Decree N2007-563 also prohibits children from working near toxic materials and pesticides, as domestic servants, or in bars, discos, casinos, mines, or quarries.

Decree N2007-563 criminalizes commercial sexual exploitation of children, including the use of children to produce and disseminate pornographic materials, the trafficking of children, and the use of children in illicit activities (e.g., trafficking drugs).(48) The Penal Code allows for the extradition of Malagasy nationals and persons charged with trafficking in other countries.(49) Forced labor, including slavery and debt bondage, is prohibited in Madagascar under both the Labor Code and Decree N2007-563.(43, 48)

Ordinance No. 78-002 of 1978 defines national service as the compulsory participation of young Malagasy in national defense and in the economic and social development of the country.(50, 51) However, the law also defines the minimum age for compulsory military service in the Malagasy army as 18 and prohibits engagement of children in armed conflict.(52, 53)

The Constitution provides for free and compulsory primary education until age 14.(15, 44-46) The gap between the compulsory education age and the minimum age to work leaves children ages 14 to 15 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either. In practice, a growing number of families have to pay registration and other school fees, as the de facto government has decreased its school subsidies since the 2009 coup.(10, 27, 38, 47)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Political instability since the 2009 coup continued to hamper efforts to coordinate and enforce laws that protect children from the worst forms of child labor.(37, 54, 55) Shortly after the coup, many public servants and labor inspectors were relieved of their positions, and some still have not been replaced.(33)

The National Committee to Fight Child Labor (CNLTE) is an inter-ministerial committee led by the Ministry of Civil Services and Labor, with representatives from the Ministries of Education, Health, and Justice.(5) The CNLTE coordinates programs, provides input on legislation and regulations on child labor, and is charged with monitoring and pursuing the implementation of the National Action Plan to Fight Child Labor.(5) The Division for the Prevention, Abolition, and Monitoring of Child Labor within the Ministry of Civil Service and Labor supports the CNLTE by coordinating, monitoring, and evaluating framework activities designed to combat child labor. The Division also conducts research and development activities to combat child labor.(5) However, research indicates that CNLTE efforts to coordinate on child labor issues were minimal during the reporting period, as it operated on a small budget.(10, 33)

The National Statistics Institute is responsible for collecting and processing data for monitoring the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.(56) In addition, the Ministry of Population and Social Affairs (with support from UNICEF) is responsible for maintaining child protection databases at the regional and local levels, including data on the incidence of child labor.(56) The extent of the current de facto government's efforts to collect, compile, and share data is unknown.

Prior to the 2009 coup, anti-trafficking efforts in Madagascar were coordinated by the President's Inter-Ministerial Anti-Trafficking Committee, with members from 11 other ministries, as well as the police and the gendarmerie (a military body charged with police duties among civilian populations).(57) However, under the current de facto government in Madagascar, the Anti-Trafficking Committee has been operating informally without a budget, and lack of coordination between the agencies remains an issue.

The Ministry of Civil Services and Labor is charged with conducting workplace inspections and enforcing child labor laws.(15, 58) The Ministry of Civil Services and Labor has approximately 90 labor inspectors.(10) Research indicates that no child labor inspections were performed during the reporting period, and the number of labor complaints is unknown, as the de facto government did not make this information available. Insufficient staffing, equipment, transportation, and funding hampered inspection, monitoring, and enforcement efforts.(10, 15, 29, 54, 59, 60)

The Ministry of Justice is charged with enforcing all laws pertaining to violence against children, including trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(10) The Morals and Minors Brigade of the National Police Force oversees investigations related to minors, including issues of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(57) Aside from its headquarters in Antananarivo, the Morals and Minors Brigade has 15 regional units across Madagascar who are responsible for investigating criminal cases involving children.(10, 21) The Brigade continues to operate a hotline and work with other agencies, NGOs, and international organizations to organize assistance for victims.(33, 57) However, reports indicate that the de facto government made limited efforts to refer cases of child exploitation to the very few service providers.(15, 29) In addition, the Brigade's anti-trafficking database remains dormant due to a lack of funding and the reassignment of key personnel.(33)

The Brigade reports having investigated 70 cases related to trafficking and exploitative child labor offenses in Antananarivo during the reporting period.(10) The Brigade notes that it reported about 30 of these cases to the Justice Department for prosecution. However, these statistics are not fully verifiable, and no additional information was available as of February 2013.(10)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The previous Malagasy Government had adopted the 2007-2012 Madagascar Action Plan (MAP), which expressly includes the objective of fighting child labor and trafficking. It had also adopted the 2004-2019 National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NAP), which includes anti-trafficking and anti-commercial sexual exploitation initiatives. Since the coup, the de facto government has not fully recognized or sufficiently implemented much of the previous Government's policies on the worst forms of child labor.(14, 29, 37, 54, 61)

Child labor concerns were also incorporated by the previous Government into national development agendas and key documents, such as the Education for All Program, the 2008-2013 Decent Work Program, Madagascar's 2007-2012 Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper, and the 2008-2011 United Nations Development Assistance Framework.(62, 64, 65) Evidence suggests that the de facto government has not fully recognized or sufficiently implemented these poverty reduction, education, and development policies.(33, 55)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In September 2011, Malagasy political stakeholders signed the Southern African Development Community's (SADC) Roadmap for Ending the Crisis in Madagascar, which outlines steps toward free and fair elections.(10, 66-69) During the reporting period, Madagascar's National Independent Electoral Commission for the Transition (CENI-T) and the United Nations scheduled elections for July and September 2013.(70-72) Much of the donor funding for social programs in Madagascar remained suspended during the reporting period due to the political situation.

The current de facto government continued limited participation in the World Bank-funded, $119 million Rural Development Project that aimed to improve productive investments in household livelihoods and food production, as well as in agriculture development.(73) Ending in December 2012, the Project targeted 90,000 beneficiaries, though research did not find information on actual results.(73) In addition, the government participated in a WFP project that continued to provide food support to 131 schools in the three regions of Atsimo Andrefana, Androy, and Anosy, covering 63,967 students.(73) The de facto government also participated in a childbirth registration campaign, with funding from UNICEF.(15)

During the reporting period, the International Fund for Agricultural Development committed a loan of $33 million and a grant of an additional $2 million to the de facto government to finance the Vocational Training and Agricultural Productivity Improvement Program (FORMAPROD).(74) In addition, the de facto government participated in projects funded by UNICEF to construct 650 temporary education facilities in regions hit by cyclones.(75) UNICEF also provided basic education, health, and social services to children throughout the country.(76) During the year, the de facto government funded an education project that provided disabled children with specialized education services and trained 400 teachers to address their needs.(77) The impact of these education, agriculture, and social programs on child labor is unknown.

During the reporting period, the de facto government continued to operate the state-funded Manjorisoa Center, which provides support and services to child laborers in the capital. In addition to staff, the de facto government provides $6,700 annually to the center.(10) However, reports suggest that this funding amount is insufficient to meet the total need.(10, 33) The Ministry of Population and Social Affairs, in collaboration with UNICEF, supported approximately 450 multi-sector networks covering 55 districts in 11 regions throughout the country to protect children from abuse and exploitation; however, it is unclear how many specific child labor-related cases were addressed during the reporting period.(21) The de facto government also participated in some awareness raising campaigns, including on child sex tourism.(10)

The de facto government continued to take part in the Regional Program for Eastern Africa to increase coordination in combating human trafficking.(78) Government officials also participated in activities to raise awareness of child sex trafficking, including films, radio broadcasts, posters, and other materials, with support from NGOs, ILO-IPEC, and UNICEF.(56)

Certain child labor-related humanitarian activities at the local level continued during the reporting period.(10, 79) The USDOL-funded, 4-year, $4.5 million KILONGA project to combat the worst forms of child labor ended during the reporting period.(79) Among its results, it withdrew or prevented 9,375 children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, commercial sexual exploitation, domestic service, mining, and quarrying.(79) Also during the reporting period, the de facto government continued to participate in the 4-year, EU-funded Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE) project.(80) This

$13.5 million project aims to combat child labor through the provision of educational services in Madagascar, along with 10 other countries.(80, 81) The de facto government participated in a regional, $1 million, French-funded, 3-year (ending in 2014) project that aims to combat child labor in the domestic service sector.(10)

During the reporting period, the de facto government provided limited investment in social programs that protect children.(29, 37, 54, 55) As a result, the scope of existing child labor and anti-trafficking programs is insufficient to address the magnitude of the problem.(10, 29) Furthermore, the question of whether these programs are sustainable has not been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Madagascar:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Establish a compulsory age for education equivalent to or greater than the minimum age for work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Ensure committees to combat the worst forms of child labor are operational.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Fully fund activities such as the existing anti-trafficking database.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Expand efforts to refer cases of child exploitation to service providers.	2011, 2012
	Track and make publicly available information on the results of labor inspections, investigations, and violations.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Investigate and prosecute child labor and worst forms of child labor violations.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement constitutional provisions that provide for free education.	2011, 2012
Policies	Reinvigorate efforts to implement existing policies, including the MAP and the NAP.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Take steps to implement development, education, and poverty reduction policies.	2011, 2012
Social Programs	Assess the impact of the existing education, agriculture and social programs on addressing child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase the scope of child labor and anti-trafficking programs to reach more children at risk of the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Establish and implement a program to address the lack of school infrastructure, which impedes children's access to education.	2011, 2012

Malawi

In 2012, Malawi made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government published its list of hazardous work, convened the first meeting of the Child Labor National Steering Committee, and continued to support social programs to address child labor, particularly in the tobacco sector. However, the Government has not finalized or fully implemented either key legislation or policies protecting children from the worst forms of child labor, including the Tenancy Bill, the Child Labor Policy, and the Child Protection Policy. In addition, the country continues to lack a compulsory education law. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in Malawi, particularly in dangerous activities in agriculture and fishing.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Malawi are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, primarily in dangerous activities in agriculture and fishing.(3-6) Many work on farms, including in the tea, tobacco, and sugar sectors.(7-9) Children working in agriculture may be denied food, experience verbal and physical abuse, sustain injuries from carrying heavy loads, contract respiratory illnesses, and risk exposure to toxic fertilizers and pesticides.(4, 7, 10) Children who sort and handle tobacco risk illness from nicotine absorption, including green tobacco sickness.(7, 10, 11) Children are involved (sometimes working alongside family members who are tenants on farms) in the tenancy system; farm owners loan agricultural inputs to tenants and deduct the debt from future profits. Families who cannot meet production quotas and are unable to repay these debts may face debt bondage.(12)

Boys catch, process, and sell fish, reportedly including the local varieties of chambo (tilapia) and mlamba (catfish).(13, 14) Some work as bila boys, responsible for pulling and detangling nets. They spend prolonged periods in the water and dive at unsafe depths.(13, 15) Children, known as chimgubidi (“water pumps”), empty water from small fishing boats. They work long hours, experience seasickness, and may receive low pay.(15)

Although evidence is limited, children—especially boys—herd livestock, including cattle. They have long workdays and often live alone and away from their families in order to care for animals.(5, 16). Boys are also involved in dangerous activities in quarrying, mining, and construction, including carrying heavy loads.(5)

There are reports that children are forced to beg and commit crimes, including home robberies.(17) Children, primarily girls, are involved in domestic service and may be subject to abuse and long working hours.(19, 20)

Children, often from rural areas, are exploited in commercial sexual exploitation, begging, and sex tourism in urban areas and resorts near the country's lakes.(19) Girls who are engaged in commercial sexual activity may be subject to debt bondage, becoming indebted to individuals who promise legitimate employment, housing, or clothing and later ask for repayment of these services.(17) Within Malawi, boys are trafficked for animal herding and girls are trafficked for forced labor as domestics or in restaurants and bars.(19-22) Malawian boys may be trafficked to Tanzania for fishing, and girls to South Africa for commercial sexual exploitation. Malawian, Zambian, and Mozambican children are trafficked within Malawi for forced labor on farms.(4, 21, 23)

Children affected by HIV/AIDS, including more than 500,000 orphans, are at increased risk of entering into the worst forms of child labor.(24, 25) These children may become the heads of their households or primary caretakers to a sick parent, and may have to work to support their families.

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(18)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Employment Act No. 6, adopted in 2000, sets the minimum age for employment at 14 in agricultural, industrial, or non-industrial work. However, this minimum age does not extend to work performed in private homes.(26)

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	C138, Minimum Age	✓
	C182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

	CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓
	Minimum Age for Work	14
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	18
	Compulsory Education Age	14
	Free Public Education	Yes

The Tenancy Bill, first drafted in 1997, would regulate labor tenancy and include legal protections for children working in agriculture through the tenancy system; however, it has not yet been passed into law.(12, 27, 28)

Although the Constitution states that children under age 16 are entitled to protection from hazardous work, the Employment Act sets the minimum age for hazardous labor at 18.(23, 26) On February 17, 2012, the list of hazardous occupations—Employment Order, 2011 (“Prohibition of Hazardous Work for Children”)—was published in the government gazette.(18, 29-31) It has not been fully enforced.

The Penal Code prohibits pornography and criminalizes the procurement of prostitution. However, it does not prohibit the sale of a child into prostitution, and its protections only apply to girls, leaving boys vulnerable.(26)

Although the Government reported to the UNESCO Institute for Statistics that education is compulsory until age 14, other evidence indicates that compulsory education has not been implemented.(27, 32, 33) Primary schools are free by law. Although families are responsible for school-related expenses, such as books and uniforms, the Government directly provides schools with training and teaching resources and provides some book subsidies for poor families.(4, 34) Despite this support, government resources to schools are limited and students drop out due to the lack of school materials, qualified teachers, relevant school curricula, and vocational training opportunities.(9, 12, 34, 35)

Both the Employment Act and Malawi’s Constitution prohibit and punish slavery, servitude, and forced labor.(8) Elements of human trafficking can be prosecuted through the child labor, forced labor, and hazardous labor provisions of the Employment Act, the Penal Code, and the Child Protection Act.(21, 22, 24, 26, 36). The Child Care, Protection and Justice Bill (Child Protection Act) also addresses the issues of child abduction and trafficking.(22, 37)

The Defense Force Act sets the minimum age for military recruitment at 18.(38) The Child Care, Protection and Justice Bill (Child Protection Act) was codified in January 2012 through publication in the Government’s official records.(22) It prohibits the use of children for illicit activities.(22, 37)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Ministry of Labor (MOL), through its Child Labor Unit, is the primary agency coordinating efforts to combat child labor.(27, 39) The Unit provides technical assistance to other government agencies implementing child labor laws at the district and national levels.(39, 40) It provides policy guidance on child labor issues, including to the Child Labor Network, of which it is a member. The Network's membership includes government, trade unions, employers, and civil society, and it is responsible for drafting policies, identifying resources, and harmonizing programs and activities for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.(8, 39) However, the Network has not met since October 2009.(22) In 2012, the Child Labor Unit was allocated $10,409 for child labor monitoring visits.(18) According to USDOS, the Unit has limited staff and resources, including office space and fuel for inspection vehicles, to address the problem of child labor in Malawi effectively.(18, 27)

Malawi has many committees and working groups focused on issues relating to child labor, including the District Child Labor and Protection Technical Committee, the District Orphan and Vulnerable Child (OVC) Committee, the District Committee on Child Rights, the Area Child Labor and Protection Committee, and the Community Child Labor and Protection Committee.(22, 27) In some districts, committees have combined to create a single district child protection committee.(22) District Child Protection Committees coordinate all district-level child protection activities, including child labor.(18) District Child Labor Committees meet to discuss incidents of child labor and monitor and implement child labor projects in their area. The committees are guided by their district plans.(35, 41) Some districts have Child Protection Committees at the traditional authority (sub-district) level.(22) Community members also are encouraged to provide continuous community-level child labor monitoring.(18, 27, 42) Community Child Protection Committees exist in some communities to identify child abuse and exploitation.(22) In 2012, the Government provided child labor training to child protection workers, volunteers, and district community development officers.(18, 27)

The Government of Malawi's OVC, Child Protection, and National Technical Working Group on Child Labor and Protection merged into a single Child Protection Technical Working Group during the reporting period.(22) The Working Group is chaired by the Ministry of Gender, Children, and Social Welfare.

In January 2013, the National Steering Committee on Child Labor held its first meeting in Malawi.(43) The committee is chaired by the Ministry of Agriculture, and the MOL serves as the Secretariat. Members include representatives from government ministries, trade unions, employers, development partners, and civil society organizations. The committee provides policy guidance to support the elimination of child labor and implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor (NAP). It also harmonizes child labor messaging and data and links with other government committees working on child labor.(35, 44)

The MOL's General Inspectorate is charged with performing inspections and investigating all labor complaints, including those related to child labor.(45) By law, labor inspectors are required to visit workplaces biannually.(8, 39) There is no formal mechanism for reporting child labor complaints, and data is not available on the breakdown of complaint-driven inspections compared with regularly scheduled inspections.(18) District child labor and protection committees typically receive complaints.(28) Workers and district child labor and protection committees also notify district labor offices to report hazardous child labor.(8, 39) Labor officers in 29 decentralized district offices administer and coordinate labor inspection services.(18, 39) District labor offices receive funding directly from the Treasury; however, there are still insufficient funds to purchase office space and vehicle fuel in order to conduct inspections.(18, 28, 46) During the reporting period, 165 labor inspectors conducted approximately 1,750 general labor inspections.(18, 27) Complete information was not available on the number of child labor cases investigated, citations given, and cases prosecuted. Standard labor inspection forms were developed to capture child labor information; however, information on the use of these forms and the specific number of inspections focused on child labor was not available.(18)

Child labor cases during the reporting period were resolved through out-of-court settlements and payment of fines.(18) It is reported that fines were not sufficient to dissuade offenders from continuing to use child labor.(18, 27)

The Ministry for Gender, Children and Social Welfare and the Ministry of Home Affairs coordinate anti-trafficking efforts.(22) The National Steering Committee on Child Protection is also responsible for addressing trafficking issues specifically related to children.(18)

The Ministry of Home Affairs is the lead agency responsible for the enforcement of trafficking laws.(39) The Ministry employs workers specifically to identify trafficking and child labor victims. The Community Policing Division leads trafficking issues for the Malawi Police Service.(22)

The police identify and rescue child trafficking and child labor victims.(21, 36) One officer within the Division was assigned to compile trafficking in persons (TIP) data. During 2012, the Government reported trafficking prosecutions and convictions.(17, 22, 47) While at least 54 of the trafficking victims reported were under age 18, the police do not systematically report child trafficking cases.(22, 47) The police reports difficulty in collecting data on child trafficking cases due to widespread lack of awareness and poor record-keeping, lack of reporting, and inability to detect TIP cases.(47) During the reporting period, the Malawi Network Against Child Trafficking, which includes government representatives, trained 62 police officers in the prevention of child trafficking.(18)

Other agencies supporting the enforcement of child trafficking laws include the Ministry of Justice, the MOL, and the Ministry of Local Government and Rural Development.(21)

The Police operate Victim Support Units in 300 traditional authorities which handle trafficking cases. These units provide limited counseling, support, and shelter to trafficking victims.(18) However, these units lacked capacity to adequately support victims.(17, 22) The Government relied on international organizations and NGOs to identify victims and provide long-term care.(17, 22)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The draft National Child Labor Policy, prepared in 2009, focuses on the issue of child labor and provides government, civil society, and other partners with a framework to implement child labor programs and activities.(8) However, it still awaits Cabinet approval.(48) The National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor (2010-2016) assigns roles and responsibilities for each ministry in charge of implementing the National Child Labor Policy.(42) It provides a comprehensive framework to reduce the worst forms of child labor.(42) The Plan proposes concrete activities to support policies to combat child labor.(28, 48) The Child Protection Policy of 2010 has not been implemented.(25) Malawi also has an Employers' and a National Code of Conduct on Child Labor, which were developed prior to drafting the list of hazardous work. Both codes define conditions under which children are prohibited from work.(40)

Malawi has included the prevention of child labor into other important development agendas, including the Malawi Growth and Development Strategy (MGDS II) (2011-2016), the Decent Work Country Program (2011-2016), and UNDAF.(27, 42, 49) In April 2012, the Government of Malawi approved the poverty reduction paper, which includes child labor.(49)

The Government and UN agencies in Malawi work together under the One UN Fund program.(35, 42, 44) This program supports the Government of Malawi's current efforts and seeks to enhance current UN agencies' activities to combat child labor.(50)

The Government currently implements the National Education Sector Plan 2008-2017, which outlines the Government's goals and objectives toward achieving education for all.(12) The National Youth Policy (1996) promotes community engagement and youth participation in interventions that contribute to reducing the worst forms of child labor.(8) The impact of these programs on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the President of Malawi chaired a National Conference on Child Labor in Agriculture and concurrent Children's Conference. The conferences resulted in the adoption of an outcome document that outlines priority actions and commitments to implement the agriculture component of the NAP and address child labor in the agriculture sector.(9, 18, 29) The conference was funded by the MOL, the Employers Consultative Association of Malawi and the Eliminating Child Labor in Tobacco-growing Foundation (ECLT), which provided $199,941 towards the event.(29) The conference brought attention to the issue of child labor and moved child labor forward on the Malawian agenda.(29)

Several projects address child labor in agriculture. A 3-year, $1.8 million, Swedish International Development Agency-funded project supports rural employment and decent work policies that promote equitable and sustainable livelihoods in Malawi and Tanzania.(29) USDOL also funds a 4-year, $1.5 million project, Cooperation to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Agriculture: Support to the International Agricultural Partnership.(42, 51) The project began in 2011 and focuses on data collection and research on child labor in agriculture. The Government developed a list of priority actions and an action plan to address child labor in agriculture. It also supported training for Directors of the MOL and of the Ministry of Agriculture, as well as for Labor Officers and Agriculture Extension Officers, to ensure that employees of both Ministries are equipped to identify and support child laborers.(42)

Malawi

There are many current initiatives to combat child labor in the tobacco sector. The Government is a steering committee member of ECLT's Integrated Child Labor Elimination Project, which intends to reduce child labor in 200 villages in Malawi.(52) Under a private-public partnership agreement, the Government collaborates with Japan Tobacco (JTI) to implement the $3 million project, Combating Child Labor in the Tobacco Industry.(27) The project receives additional support from the UNDP and the African Development Bank.(18) The Government supports the JTI-funded Program to Reduce the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Tobacco-Growing Communities in Malawi.(53)

The Government supports the $8 million, 4-year project, Child Labor Elimination Actions for Real Change (CLEAR), funded by ECLT.(27, 29) The project aims to address the root causes of child labor in the districts of Ntchisi, Mchinji, and Rumphu, and targets 10,000 children for withdrawal or prevention.(29)

The One UN Fund currently finances a $90,000, 2-year project, Improved Social Protection through the Reduction of Child Labor in Malawi, which began in March 2012.(42, 44)

The Government works with Plan International to improve access to quality education through the construction of classrooms, teachers' houses, and implementation of school feeding programs in collaboration with WFP.(18) The program also piloted a child helpline project and supported the withdrawal of 2,000 children from dangerous work and the arrest of 19 employers who promoted child labor.(18)

The Government continues to participate in a 3.5-year, $2.75 million project funded by USDOL to combat child labor.(12, 27, 42) The project began in 2009 and aims to strengthen child labor policies and develop codes of conduct for the elimination of child labor in the production of tea, tobacco, and other agricultural goods. The project ended in March 2013 and withdrew and prevent 5,617 children from involvement in child labor.(50) In 2012, the project adapted the child labor monitoring system established under a past USDOL-funded project to focus on more on community-level child labor monitoring.(50) However, the Government does not currently systematically collect data on child labor.(18, 35, 44) Project beneficiaries were linked to the government Youth Enterprise Development Fund.(42) The Fund was created to address the problem of youth unemployment in Malawi. It provides youth, including those previously in the worst forms of child labor, with access to credit to start their own businesses.(42) In 2012, Malawi participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Malawi, the project aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(54)

The Government continued to implement a cash transfer program to low-income families in high-risk districts to enable their children to stay in school.(27, 28) The cash transfer program has been shown to have an impact on reducing child labor.(55, 56)

Studies on a program that provides rural financial credits indicate that children of credit recipients are generally more likely to attend school and less likely to engage in child labor. Other analysis suggests that these credits may result in more children not working or attending school during the agricultural off-season, and more children participating in agricultural production during the peak agricultural season.(57)

The Government also supports various microcredit programs, including the Malawi Social Action Fund, which provides loans for community development and social support programs.(58) Previous studies on microcredit programs in Malawi found that in the season of peak labor demand, household access to microcredit may increase work by children.(59) Girls, especially, may take over the domestic chores of adult women who become more involved in income-generating activities financed by the credit, thereby delaying enrollment of girls in school.(57) Recent studies on the impact of these social programs on child labor have not been conducted.

In 2012, border migration officials in Karonga and magistrates and judges were trained on human trafficking issues.(22, 60) The Government has also established child-friendly courts, community victim support units, and a Child Stop Center to assist child labor victims.(17, 28) It is unknown whether the center assisted trafficking victims during the reporting period. Government-run hospitals provided limited medical and psychological services; for shelter, district social welfare and child protection officers referred victims to NGO-run facilities.(17) The government held a TIP awareness event in the Karonga district and aired anti-trafficking programming on national and district radio stations during the reporting period.(22) Police training schools included human trafficking courses in their curricula.(22) The Government of Malawi runs a social rehabilitation drop-in center for orphans and vulnerable children and victims of trafficking and gender-based violence.(22) However, these rehabilitation centers only provide temporary shelter, are limited in their ability to provide care, and do not provide needed gender specific services.(22)

Research did not identify any current programs focusing on children in the herding and fishing sectors.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Malawi:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Increase the minimum age for work for children employed in the home to 14.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Protect children working in the tenancy system by passing the Tenancy Bill, which regulates tenant farms and protects children working on them.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that both boys and girls are protected from all forms of sexual exploitation.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Fully implement the Employment Order.	2011, 2012
	Extend current child labor protections to children working in private homes (domestic service).	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Publish data on inspections, criminal investigations, prosecutions, and other steps taken to enforce laws.	2011, 2012
	Assess the effectiveness of current child protection and child labor committees.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Improve the current child labor enforcement reporting mechanisms and require inspectors to use data collection forms and keep records of workplace visits.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase resources to the Child Labor Unit and district inspectors to conduct regular child labor inspections and provide adequate funding and resources for regular inspections.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Establish a formal mechanism for reporting child labor complaints and provide data on the breakdown of complaint-driven and other inspections.	2012
	Provide information on the number of child labor cases found, citations given, and cases prosecuted.	2012
	Provide training to staff of the victim support unit and improve referral services for child trafficking victims.	2012
	Establish whether fines assessed for child labor violations are sufficient to dissuade offenders from continuing to use child labor and ensure that penalties are sufficient to deter individuals exploiting children in the worst forms of child labor.	2012
Policies	Finalize and implement the Child Labor Policy.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement the Child Protection Policy.	2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing education and youth policies may have on addressing child labor in Malawi.	2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Social Programs	Conduct research to clarify the impact of the microfinance programs and rural credits on child labor.	2011, 2012
	Ensure government-run hospitals provide medical and psychological services and shelter to trafficking victims.	2012
	Increase the scope of existing social programs to reach more children at risk of the worst forms of child labor and develop programs to target children in the fishing and herding sectors specifically.	2011, 2012
	Systematically collect data on the number of working children, including through the child labor monitoring system established under the USDOL-funded project.	2011, 2012
	Establish and improve rehabilitation centers and medical and psychological services for victims of trafficking.	2011, 2012
	Prioritize resources towards improving education infrastructure, teacher training, and other factors that may improve school attendance.	2012

Maldives, The

In 2012, the Maldives made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified ILO Convention 138 and ILO Convention 182. The Government began implementing the newly passed anti-trafficking plan for 2011–2012. However, the Government has not established a list of hazardous work activities for children, and the compulsory education age of 13 leaves children ages 13 to 16 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The country also lacks laws prohibiting trafficking in persons. While the Government has a steering committee on counter-trafficking, there is no coordination mechanism on other child labor issues. Additionally, although the Government has not collected data on the issue, children in the Maldives are reportedly engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly girls found in commercial sexual exploitation and working as domestics in private households.

Statistics on Working Children and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working	5-14 yrs.	3.9 (2,364)
Attending School	5-14 yrs.	79.5
Combining Work and School	7-14 yrs.	4.0
Primary Completion Rate		114.0

All other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from DHS survey, 2006.(2)

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There are reports of limited numbers of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in the Maldives, particularly girls found in commercial sexual exploitation and working as domestics in private households.(3-5) Girls are reportedly trafficked for prostitution from other parts of the country to the capital city, Malé; the extent of the problem is unknown.(4) The UN Committee on the Rights of the Child has expressed serious concern about the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the Maldives and has warned that a lack of research on this exploitation has contributed to widespread denial of the problem.(3) In addition, although the number of children working as domestics in private homes is unknown, child domestics may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes where they are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(6, 7)

Although evidence is limited, there is information that children work in potentially dangerous activities in fishing.(8) These children may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(6, 9)

In January 2013, the Government ratified ILO Convention 138 and ILO Convention 182.(10)

The Employment Act establishes 16 as the minimum age for work and 18 as the minimum age for work that may have a detrimental effect on a child's health, education, safety, or conduct.(11) Research has not found evidence of laws or regulations that specify work activities and processes that are hazardous and thus prohibited to children. The Employment Act permits minors under age 16 to work in family businesses, provided such work is voluntary, and to perform work for educational or training purposes.(11) However, children under age 16 are prohibited from working during school hours, and children under age 18 cannot be required to work after 11 p.m.(11, 12)

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	Compulsory Education Age	13
	Free Public Education	Yes

The Constitution establishes the right to free education. It states that “it is imperative on parents and the State to provide children with primary and secondary education,” but there is no law that establishes an age for compulsory schooling.(13, 14) However, the Government reported to the UNESCO Institute of Statistics that education is compulsory until age 13.(15) The compulsory education age leaves children ages 13 to 16 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not permitted to work either.

The Employment Act and the Constitution both prohibit forced labor, and the Constitution prohibits slavery and servitude.(11, 14) The Government does not have laws in place prohibiting trafficking in persons.(4) The Penal Code and the Child Sex Abuse (Special Provisions) Act criminalize the use of children for prostitution and pornography, but these offenses are not criminalized if the perpetrator and victim are married under Sharia Law.(16)

The Drug Act explicitly prohibits the use of children in drug trafficking.(16) There is no compulsory conscription into the military, and the voluntary recruitment age is 18.(17, 18)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Although the Government of the Maldives has established an interagency steering committee to strengthen counter-trafficking coordination, research found no evidence of a coordinating mechanism to combat other worst forms of child labor.(16)

The Ministry of Human Resources, Youth, and Sports’ (MHRYS) Labor Relations Authority (LRA) enforces the child labor provisions of the Employment Act.(16) In 2012, the LRA was staffed with 10 labor inspectors and 6 investigation officers to inspect for any violations of the Employment Act.(16) The LRA carried out 360 routine labor inspections in 2012 and found no child labor. It also received 1,619 labor-related complaints through its complaint mechanism, but none involved child labor violations.(16) Inspectors and officers do not receive targeted training on child labor issues.(16)

Until mid-year, the LRA maintained a “blacklist” of employers who violated any provision of the Employment Act, over which the Department of Immigration and Emigration (DIE) then assumed jurisdiction. Employers on the blacklist cannot hire new workers until violations are corrected. Data are not available on whether any employers were blacklisted for child labor violations in 2012, but it is unlikely, since no violations were found during the year.(16)

The DIE is the Government’s focal point on trafficking in persons.(19) The DIE, in coordination with the Maldives Police Service (MPS), are responsible for identifying victims of trafficking.(16) An interagency steering committee comprised of the MPS, the DIE, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the LRA, the Ministry of Home Affairs, the Ministry of Health and Family (MHF), the Maldivian Democracy Network (an NGO), and the Human Rights Commission of the Maldives is charged with counter-trafficking coordination.(19)

The Government’s Family and Children’s Centers assist the public in reporting cases of abuse against both women and children.(20) When cases of child sexual abuse are identified, including child prostitution, the Ministry of Gender, Family, and Human Rights (MGFHR) provides victim care, while the MPS’ Family and Child Protection Unit (FCPU) investigates the cases and refers them to the Prosecutor General’s Office for prosecution.(16) In 2012, the FCPU had 25 officers to process child abuse cases in Malé, as well as officers in stations throughout the country’s many islands.(16) Three cases of child prostitution were handled by the MPS in 2012, and charges were filed under the Child Abuse (Special Provisions) Act in two of these cases.(16)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the Government began implementing the newly passed anti-trafficking plan for 2011-2012. The plan establishes the Anti-Human Trafficking and People Smuggling Unit as its implementing agency.(4, 21)

The Maldives Strategic Action Plan, recognized by the World Bank and other development partners as the country's PRSP, establishes policies to strengthen child and family protection service delivery at the central and provincial levels and establishes and strengthens alternative care systems for children.(22) The UNDP Country Program for the Maldives (2011-2015) aims to support the ILO in developing a Decent Work framework to address youth unemployment, among other issues. The UNDP Country Program also aims to promote equitable access to justice and rule of law by increasing the capacity of the Prosecutor General's Office and the employment tribunals and by training these institutions on human rights issues.(23)

The question of whether these poverty alleviation and rule of law policies have an impact on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed. The Government does not regularly collect data on working children, making it difficult to understand the scope of the problem and to design strategies to address it. However, the Maldives Human Rights Commission is currently assessing the scope of the trafficking in persons problem in the country.(13)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Social protection centers on many of the Maldives' islands provide temporary shelter and protection for children in need, which could include children rescued from abusive work situations.(3) The MGFHR provides general protection and rehabilitation services, such as counseling, family reintegration, medical treatment, and educational assistance to vulnerable children.(13, 16, 24) The target population for these services could include children in the worst forms of child labor, but the extent to which such children are involved is unknown. The MHF operates a hotline to report child abuse cases.(20, 25) It is unclear if such cases include children abused in work settings and/or in commercial sexual exploitation.

Research found no evidence of any programs that specifically address the worst forms of child labor for children working as domestics in private homes or those who may be found in commercial sexual exploitation.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in the Maldives:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the Employment Law or enact regulations specifying the work activities and processes that are hazardous to children.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Raise compulsory education to age 16, the minimum age for work.	2011, 2012
	Enact a law against trafficking in persons.	2011, 2012
	Enact laws to criminalize all child prostitution and child pornography, even when it occurs within a marriage relationship.	2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordination mechanism to combat all worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that the labor inspectorate receives training on child labor issues.	2009, 2011, 2012
Policies	Assess the impact that existing poverty alleviation policies may have on addressing child labor, particularly in domestic service and forced prostitution.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Policies	Conduct research on the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor to determine whether better targeted policies and services are necessary.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Develop and implement programs to address the worst forms of child labor, particularly for children exploited in domestic service and forced prostitution.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Mali

In 2012, Mali made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the Government adopted a comprehensive law to prohibit trafficking in persons and made minimal efforts to address the issue of child soldiers. However, laws relating to the worst forms of child labor are not harmonized and gaps in enforcement, exacerbated by the military coup, subsequent suspension of foreign aid, and terrorist occupation in the north, has left children unprotected. In addition, children continue to be recruited and used for military purposes by non-state groups as well as by pro-government militias that have trained on government land and received training from independently acting members of the Malian army. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including as child soldiers in militias and in dangerous activities in agriculture.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Mali are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including child soldiers in militias and dangerous activities in agriculture.(3-10) Children, as young as age 5, work in agriculture, including in livestock raising, animal traction, and in the production of rice and cotton.(4, 11-18) Children working in agriculture seed, plow, and harvest fields. They also transport the harvest to storage. Children use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, apply harmful pesticides, and plow fields with oxen.(19-21) Children raising livestock in Mali raise cattle and reportedly raise oxen and small ruminants. Children handling livestock suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(17, 18, 22) Reportedly, children are also employed in dangerous labor in the fishing sector; they are at risk of drowning while capturing fish and of injury from sharp tools while processing fish.(23)

Children in Mali work as domestic servants, which may require them to work long hours and perform strenuous tasks without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(4, 24-26)

Children, especially girls who work in the vending and mining sectors, are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation.(10-12, 27)

Children in Mali are engaged in small-scale gold mines.(10, 16, 27-29) Children, as young as age 5 work long hours in all mining activities, including extracting material from underground passages.(27-29) They also amalgamate gold with mercury. These children are subjected to unhealthy and dangerous conditions, risking injury and exposure to mercury poisoning and other illnesses. In mining, children perform work that surpasses their physical and mental capabilities.(27-29)

Forced child labor in Mali is found in agriculture and domestic service. Limited evidence suggests that forced child labor occurs in mining and the informal economy.(3) Children, especially of the Tamachek community, are subject to hereditary slavery in northern Mali. These children may be forced to work as domestic or agricultural laborers.(3, 10, 30, 31) In addition, children, particularly of the Songhai ethnicity, work in debt bondage in the northern salt mines of Taudenni.(3, 23, 32)

Thousands of boys, placed in the care of Koranic teachers for the purpose of education, are forced by their teachers to beg on the street or to work in fields; they must then surrender the money they have earned to the teachers.(4, 10, 33-36) These children may be punished physically if they do not remit enough money to their teachers. Other Koranic teachers force the boys to work their land for free.(33, 36-39)

Mali is a source, transit, and destination country for children trafficked for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(32, 36, 40) Children are trafficked internally for domestic service, gold mining, begging, and agricultural work, including in the production of rice.(36) Malian children are trafficked to Senegal and Guinea for forced labor in gold mines, and to Côte d'Ivoire to work as domestic servants and as laborers on plantations, especially on cotton and cocoa farms.(32, 33, 36, 41) Malian boys are trafficked to Mauritania and Senegal for forced begging, while Malian girls are trafficked there for domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation. Boys from other countries, such as Niger, Guinea, and Burkina Faso are trafficked to Mali for forced begging and they work in mines and rice fields.(29, 36, 42, 43) Girls from Nigeria are trafficked to Mali for commercial sexual exploitation.(40, 44, 45)

In January 2012, attacks against the Malian army were carried out by the National Movement for the Liberation of Azawad (MNLA); Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM); Ansar Dine; and the Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa (MUJAO). Following the attacks, the three main regions of northern Mali fell under the control of these groups.(46) In April 2012, the rebels declared northern Mali an independent state. In March 2012, members of the Malian army overthrew the president of Mali in a coup d'état. Facing international condemnation, an interim government was agreed to and was sworn in April 2012.(47) In January 2013, French troops began to carry out airstrikes against Islamist fighters in the north.(47) Although French and Malian forces were able to take back key areas in northern Mali, other areas in the north remain under rebel control.(48, 49)

In 2012, armed rebel and extremist Islamic militia groups, including the MNLA, the Arab Movement of Azawad, Ansar Dine, the MUJAO, and AQIM began recruiting and using child soldiers in northern Mali.(6-9, 46, 50-60) In 2012, more than 1,000 Malian children, including Malian children in neighboring refugee camps, were forcibly recruited, forcibly sold, or willingly paid by extremist groups to fight.(6, 9, 10, 46, 50, 54, 57, 58, 61, 62) Reports indicate that some families are forced to sell, or willingly receive as much as $2,000 per child, while other children receive up to $30 per day to fight.(9, 46, 50, 54, 57, 61, 63) Limited evidence indicates that some children, held in traditional slavery, are sold by their masters to Islamic extremists to fight. Limited evidence also indicates that Koranic masters have traded hundreds of their students to extremist groups to serve as soldiers.(56, 62) Children, some as young as age 8, carry assault rifles, man checkpoints, gather intelligence, guard prisoners, conduct foot patrols, and participate in looting and extortion.(6-10, 58, 62) Limited evidence indicates that children are used as mine sweeps, servants, and human shields. Girls are used by armed groups for sexual exploitation.(7, 56, 62) Limited evidence indicates that a disproportional number of child recruits are of Arab, Songhai, Peul, and Tuareg ethnicities.(62, 64)

Children are also recruited by, and trained to fight in, pro-government counterinsurgent militias, including the Liberation Front of the North, Ganda Koy, and Ganda Izo.(9, 10, 46, 56, 58, 60, 62) These pro-government militias train on government land. Soldiers within the army, acting independently, provided training to pro-government counterinsurgent militias.(9, 10, 46, 60, 65-68) Some pro-government militias are being integrated into the Malian army. The UN Special Representative for Children in Armed Conflict notes that a screening and separation process for children as part of the integration of pro-government militias into the Malian army is needed.(62)

In 2012, following the coup d'état and violent extremist attacks, grave and large-scale human rights violations occurred in Mali, leading to the displacement of up to 301,027 internally displaced people. Many of those displaced are children, often separated from parents or unaccompanied by adults.(53, 59, 69-72) In northern Mali, access to education, which can be a critical component in preventing child economic exploitation, has been significantly hindered by violence, displacement, and school closures.(25, 51, 53, 58, 62) As of February 2013, 86.0 percent of students in the north lacked access to education.(62) In many of the schools that remained open during the occupation of violent extremist groups in the north, extremist groups, including MUJAO and Ansar Dine, separated girls from boys in the classroom, or limited or prohibited school access to female students.(10, 53, 59, 73-75) Koranic schools are used for the recruitment of child soldiers and some schools are used as military storage and training bases.(46, 55, 57, 58, 64) Access to education is also hindered by a nationwide chronic shortage of teachers, school materials, school infrastructure, and transportation.(3, 10, 15, 38, 53, 76, 77) Additionally, limited evidence suggests that corporal punishment and the sexual exploitation of students by teachers prevents some children from remaining in school.(78) In some areas of Mali, due to societal discrimination, Arab, Peul, and black Tamasheq children were denied access to education.(10, 59) Mali experienced a severe drought in 2012 and households in northern Mali continue to experience food access constraints. Although there are no statistics yet, several reports indicate that the violence, drought, and growing food insecurity have led to a decrease in school attendance and an increase in the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor, particularly in gold mining and domestic service.(25, 59, 70, 71, 79-81)

Thousands of Malian children work on the street, but specific hazards associated with these activities is unknown.(81-83)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Against the backdrop of instability and violence, areas of the north remain under rebel control and are therefore ungovernable by the Malian government, leaving Malian citizens in the north unprotected by the laws laid out below.(48, 49)

The Labor Code sets the minimum age for work at 14, although children under age 14 may work with the approval of the Minister of Labor. A decree also permits children age 12 or older to perform domestic or seasonal light work, such as assisting in harvesting activities.(84, 85) However, the Labor Code only applies to contractual work and excludes children working in the informal sector, including noncontractual agricultural and domestic work.(86)

Children under age 18 are protected by restrictions on activities such as industrial night work and hazardous labor.(35, 37)

Mali's hazardous occupation list prohibits the employment of any child under age 18 in any work that presents dangers or harms the morality of the child.(87) However, a decree from 1996 that is still in force permits children ages 16 to 18 to perform certain hazardous activities. The 1996 Decree, while requiring labor inspectors to authorize this work, does not require employers to demonstrate that such children have received required vocational training to mitigate the hazardous nature of these activities as called for in ILO Convention 138.(85) This gap could expose these children to increased risks.

The Child Protection Code provides additional protection for children under age 18, while the Penal Code establishes criminal penalties for several of the worst forms of child labor.(88, 89) The Child Protection Code identifies begging as a form of economic exploitation of children, and the Penal Code provides for punishment for engaging a child in begging. However, the Penal Code does not provide penalties for some of the prohibitions enumerated in the Child Protection Code.(88, 89) For example, although the Child Protection Code prohibits children under age 18 from participating in armed conflicts or joining the armed forces, the Penal Code only provides penalties for those recruiting and enlisting children under age 15.(88, 89) Additionally, although the Child Protection Code prohibits the use of children in organized crime, no law prohibits the use of a child for illicit activities.(43, 89, 90)

The Penal Code prohibits the trafficking and debauching of children. However, the prohibition of the debauchment of children only applies to children under age 13.(88) The Penal Code also forbids third-party involvement in prostitution (pimping) and the sexual slavery of children. However, the law that prohibits these acts is only applicable to girls.(88) Furthermore, since provisions of the Penal Code only apply to cases of pimping, those soliciting or purchasing sex from a minor are not punishable under this law. The Child Protection Code explicitly broadens the definition of sexual exploitation, including prostitution, to both girls and boys. (88, 89) However, there are no penalties prescribed by this Code.(88)

Although the Penal Code bans slavery, no penalties are outlined for the offense.(88) Forced labor is prohibited under the Labor Code. However, the punishment for forced labor is only a fine and/or imprisonment for a period of 15 days to 6 months.(84)

The Constitution provides for free and compulsory education.(91) Education is compulsory for 9 years, beginning at age 7, and all children have the right to education.(3, 5, 15, 89) However, some Arab, Peul, and black Tamasheq, also known as Bellah, children are denied access to school at the local level because of their ethnicity; and although the Constitution establishes free education, parents are still expected to pay school fees for registration, uniforms, books, and materials.(3, 10, 16, 59, 91) These costs may deter families from sending their children to school.

On June 28, 2012, the Government of Mali passed a comprehensive trafficking in persons law.(92) The law prohibits and sets penalties for the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harboring, or receipt of persons for the purpose of exploitation.(93) The law considers exploitation to include slavery, forced labor, servitude, and commercial sexual exploitation. It also includes protections for all people or groups of people from forcing a person to beg.(93) Although the exploitation of children, including slavery and commercial exploitation is prohibited in the context of trafficking, it is unclear if these forms of exploitation are prohibited as standalone offenses.

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor coordinates Mali's efforts to eliminate child labor.(94-96) Its mission is to reduce the worst forms of child labor by collecting statistics, coordinating programs, and acting as a liaison with partners.(95, 97) As of 2010, seven members staffed the Unit.(13) Although the National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor is named the official coordinating body for child labor policy, the multiplicity of government structures sharing some of this responsibility leads to an inefficient and cumbersome system. Currently, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry for Women, Children and the Family, the Ministry of Internal Security, and the Ministry of Labor share responsibility.(98) The National Coordinating Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices coordinates government efforts to combat trafficking. The committee has 43 members, comprising various government agencies, civil society groups, and NGOs.(3, 39) The National Unit, the National Coordinating Committee, the Committee to Track Child Labor and Trafficking, and the Fode and Yaguine Action Network hold regular meetings to focus on improving interagency coordination on child labor and human trafficking.(98)

In October 2012, the Government of Mali established an interministerial group to prevent grave violations against children. The working group aims to conduct awareness raising campaigns to prevent the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.(62) The group will also conduct joint missions with international partners to determine the presence of children in self-defense militias.

Child labor laws are enforced by the Ministry of Youth, Labor, Employment, and Professional Training through its 54 labor inspectors. Labor inspectors receive and investigate complaints and perform unannounced labor inspections in the formal labor sector.(56, 98) In addition to inspections, inspectors provide dispute settlement and conciliation. These additional responsibilities detract from labor inspectors' abilities to complete workplace inspections.(99) These responsibilities make it difficult for the small number of labor inspectors to effectively enforce child labor laws.(84, 85, 98) None of the labor inspectors specialize in child labor. However, one person in each region is designated as the point of contact for the National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor.(56) Due to the military coup and subsequent suspension of foreign aid, funds for the labor inspectorate are at a strict minimum and funds are rarely allocated to regional labor inspectors.(56) Due to the terrorist occupation of the north, labor inspectors do not operate in the northern region.(56) The Government of Mali lacks a mechanism to monitor the informal sector for child labor, including most agricultural work and self-employed children.(84, 85, 98) The number of inspections carried out, violations cited, fines assessed, or fines collected during the reporting period is unknown.

Mali

The Ministries of Justice, Internal Security, Labor, and Women, Children, and the Family work together to enforce laws pertaining to all worst forms of child labor.(56) The Ministry of Internal Security, through its judiciary police, is the principal agency enforcing laws relating to children involved in illicit activities and, through its Morals Brigade of the National Police, is the principal agency enforcing laws relating to trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(56) The Morals Brigade is staffed by approximately 10 officers. However, Morals Brigade officers are responsible for other duties in addition to their duties pertaining to trafficked or exploited children.(56) The Morals Brigade does not have national coverage.(100) Although the Brigade was created to handle criminal affairs involving children, the main police force has no explicit obligation to turn children's cases over to it. As a result, many children's issues are handled by members of the general police force, who do not receive special training on children's affairs.(100) During the reporting period, some police officers and magistrates received training on children's rights and four arrests were made on allegations of child trafficking and sexual exploitation.(56) In 2012, the Gendarmerie rescued 37 Burkinabe and 2 Nigerian children from the worst forms of child labor in artisanal gold mining. The children were returned to their countries of origin.(56) In addition, four Burkinabe traffickers were arrested for trafficking 11 Burkinabe children for labor in artisanal gold mines.(56) Research did not identify the number of criminal investigations, prosecutions, and convictions relating to the other worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Women, Children, and the Family is specifically responsible for assisting with trafficking victims.(101) However, there are no government facilities in Mali to shelter or offer support to victims of trafficking.(43)

Reports indicate that, due to a lack of law and judicial enforcement, the prevalence of hereditary slavery has worsened since the conflict in Mali began.(102) Four civil lawsuits involving children held in traditional slavery are pending due to the absence of the justice administration in the north.(56)

In March 2013, during military operations, French soldiers apprehended five child soldiers. These children were transferred to Malian authorities and handed over to UNICEF for interim care.(62) Children are currently being transferred from French forces to UNICEF via Malian authorities.(62) Children also receive psychosocial care and reunification services from a government-owned facility, with the collaboration of UNICEF and NGOs.(59) However, the process for handing over children is not a formalized operation, and standard operating procedures are not in place.(62) Evidence does not reveal any efforts made by the Government of Mali to prosecute offenders of or enforce laws relating to the use of child soldiers.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The National Plan to Combat Child Labor (2011-2020) has the goal of eradicating the worst forms of child labor by 2015, and all exploitative child labor by 2020.(23, 103) The Plan calls for improving the judicial framework, increasing awareness about child labor, withdrawing children from the worst forms of child labor, providing these children with appropriate remediation services, and improving the livelihoods of families.(23) This Plan falls under the direction of the National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor and is to be implemented in conjunction with 14 other Ministries, including the Ministries of Education, Agriculture, Mining, Justice, and Women, Children, and the Family.(23) However, there is no evidence that implementation of the National Action Plan has begun.

Child labor concerns have also been incorporated in the UN Development Assistance Framework (2008-2012).(23, 104) Research did not identify the status of implementing the framework.

In February 2013, an inter-ministerial circular was signed on the prevention, protection, and reintegration of children in armed conflict.(62) Information regarding the activities implemented under this circular is unavailable.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, Mali participated in social programs to reduce the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Mali partnered with WFP to provide school feeding programs to 290 schools in southern Mali, as well as emergency food distribution centers to over 250,000 people.(70) It also participated in two USDOL-funded regional projects to combat the worst forms of child labor, both of which assist ECOWAS to develop systems to help its member countries reduce the worst forms of child labor.(105) The ECOWAS I project is funded for 4 years at $7.95 million. The ECOWAS II project is funded for 4 years at $5 million.(105, 106)

Although Mali does provide some housing, medical, and psychosocial support, it has generally relied on NGOs and international organizations to provide social programs for vulnerable children.(32, 38, 101) Mali does not have a formal method for transferring vulnerable children who are detained by the police and Morals Brigade to NGOs, although there is an informal transfer system through which the police transfer children to NGOs; the transfer is recorded by both the NGO and the police.(32, 38, 101)

Prior to the coup in March 2012 and the attempted secession in northern Mali, the Government of Mali participated in two USAID-funded projects to improve access to education, including a 5-year, $30 million project to improve literacy by providing interactive radio instruction for primary school students and a 5-year project to provide basic education and training to out-of-school youth.(107-109) Prior to the coup, Mali also participated in a 4-year, $21 million project funded by the European Commission to combat child labor through education in 11 countries globally.(110, 111) The project worked with private companies to encourage social responsibility, conducted awareness-raising campaigns, and worked with teachers, students, and community members to sensitize communities about the worst forms of child labor.(112) Following the coup, USAID and European Commission funding for these projects were withdrawn from Mali.(113, 114)

The Government of Mali has participated in programs to reduce the worst forms of child labor and strengthen the education system. Following the international intervention in Mali, the Government, in collaboration with UNICEF and NGOs, took minimal actions to provide psychosocial care and reunification services to child soldiers on an ad hoc basis. However, the Government has not implemented programs to assist children engaged in agriculture, domestic service, and begging. Due to violent extremist occupation in the north, the Government is unable to provide services to children residing in the occupied territory.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Mali:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the decree that permits certain hazardous activities for children ages 16 and 17 to require that employers provide proof that required vocational training has been provided prior to the commencement of such work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Adopt laws to ensure protections for all children working outside the formal sector, particularly in domestic service and agricultural work.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Harmonize the Child Protection Code and Penal Code to remove gaps that leave children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including by ensuring that the use, procurement, or offering of a child for prostitution is prohibited for both girls and boys.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Criminalize and provide appropriate penalties for child slavery and forced labor, the commercial sexual exploitation of children, the recruitment and use of children ages 15 to 18 as child soldiers, and for the use of children in illicit activities.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Streamline coordination across agencies, including by ensuring coordination between the National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor and other overlapping agencies.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure the Morals Brigade has adequate reach, that local police receive adequate training on child protection and the worst forms of child labor, and that the Morals Brigade and local police coordinate on the cases of minors with the intention of providing services in the best interest of the child.	2011, 2012
	Create a mechanism to provide enforcement protection for children working in the informal sector.	2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Collect and make public information on the number of labor inspections and penalties assessed, as well as criminal investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Create a formalized mechanism to rescue and reintegrate children involved in armed militias and to ensure the Malian army does not support children serving in pro-government militias or integrate children serving in pro-government militias into the Malian army.	2012
	Ensure labor inspectors have adequate staff, time, and resources to conduct inspections.	2012
	Enforce laws relating to child soldiers and slavery, including hereditary slavery and forced labor.	2012
Policies	Take measures to ensure children's safety in schools and to ensure all children have access to education, no matter their ethnicity or gender.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Take measures to implement the National Plan to Combat Child Labor (2011-2020).	2012
Social Programs	Expand and improve programs to prevent children's involvement in exploitative child labor, including by developing and implementing effective model programs to withdraw children from the worst forms of child labor in <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Agriculture, domestic service, forced begging, and mining. • Disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration of child soldiers. 	2009, 2010, 2011 2012 2012
	Formalize Mali's system for transferring detained victims of trafficking to NGOs.	2010, 2011

Mauritania

In 2012, Mauritania made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed a new UN Assistance Development Framework that aims to provide educational assistance to vulnerable and exploited children, and increased its number of labor inspectors from 60 to 80. However, Mauritania's legal framework lacks a hazardous occupations list, does not prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, and does not provide protection for children working without a contract, excluding many children, for example, who work on the streets or perform unpaid work. In addition, the Government continued to detain anti-slavery protestors. Social programs are not sufficient to address the needs of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor. Children continue to be engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous forms in the agriculture and herding sectors, as well as hereditary servitude and slavery in all areas of the country.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Mauritania are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including dangerous activities in agriculture, herding, and indentured and hereditary servitude.(3-5) Although information is limited, there are reports that children work in the production of beans, rice, and vegetables.(5-8) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(7, 9) Children herd and care for livestock, such as cattle and goats.(4, 5, 10) While research is limited, evidence suggests that children also herd camels and sheep.(11, 12) Children herding livestock may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(13, 14) Limited evidence also suggests that children work in the fishing sector.(5) These children may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(15, 16) Children also crush gravel for construction and deliver water to construction sites.(4)

Some children are engaged in criminal street gangs and are forced to beg and sell drugs.(5, 17) In addition, some male street children are Koranic students, or talibés.(5, 18, 19) In Mauritania, it is traditional practice to send boys to Koranic teachers to receive education that may include vocational training or apprenticeship.(5, 18, 19) Some Koranic teachers, or marabouts, force talibés to beg for more than 12 hours a day, without adequate food or shelter.(5, 18-21) In addition, some children work as apprentices. Over 48 percent of apprentices are beaten and some are forced to work for many years.(11)

Girls, many of whom are between ages 7 and 14, work as domestic servants in urban households in Nouakchott; many of these girls reportedly come from the Senegal River Valley and Assaba geographic regions.(5, 12, 22) Some child domestics are beaten, work long hours, often without pay, and 1 percent are sexually abused.(12, 21, 23-25)

Children in Mauritania continue to be exploited in hereditary servitude, as slaves, and endure slave-like practices in remote areas of the country.(17, 26-29) Some children are born into slavery, while others are forced to work the land and turn over what they produce to their "master" in order to remain on the land. Some child slaves herd animals, such as cattle and goats, and perform domestic labor.(4, 5, 28, 30-32) Those that attempt to escape are reportedly beaten or killed.(17)

Some former slaves (commonly descendants of slaves) continue to endure slave-like practices, including working for their former masters in exchange for minimal food, money, and lodging.(31)

Mauritania is a source and destination country for trafficked children.(28) Children are trafficked domestically within Mauritania for forced labor in herding and domestic labor.(4, 28) Internally, girls are trafficked for domestic labor and commercial sexual exploitation, and boys are trafficked for forced begging as talibés on the streets of Nouakchott.(20, 21, 28) Talibés are also trafficked from Guinea-Bissau, Mali, and Senegal to Mauritania for forced begging.(28, 33) Girls are trafficked from Mali and the Gambia for domestic service and from Senegal for domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation in Mauritania.(28, 34) During the reporting period, there were reports of girls between the ages of 5 and 13 being trafficked from Mauritania to the Middle East under the guise of marriage, but who were instead victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 17, 28)

There are reports of children working on the streets, especially in urban areas such as Nouakchott, Nouadhibou, Kiffa, and Rosso, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(4, 12)

Reports indicate that droughts and agriculture pest infestations have caused an increase in unemployment, inflation, and poverty, leaving children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(35-37) Research further suggests that a lack of school infrastructure and limited availability of teachers impedes access to education, which also increases the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(31, 38, 39) Many children in Mauritania are also not registered at birth. Unable to prove citizenship, unregistered children may have difficulty accessing services such as education.(40, 41) In addition, in 2012, Mauritania experienced an influx of refugees from Mali. Midway through the year, only 20 percent of refugee children had access to education in Mauritania, which put them at increased risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(42-44)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code (2004-017) sets the minimum age for employment at 14.(45, 46) At age 12, children may perform light work in establishments in which their family members are employed, provided that they have the Ministry of Labor's authorization and remain in school.(45) The Labor Code prohibits children younger than 14 from working at night. It also bans children younger than age 18 from work that is dangerous, beyond their strength, or likely to harm their safety, health, or morals.(45, 47) All laws regarding regular work also apply to apprenticeships.(48) Nevertheless, the Government lacks a hazardous occupations list that specifies activities considered hazardous for children.(6, 49) In addition, the Labor Code only applies to contractual labor, excluding many children, for example, who work on the streets or perform unpaid work.(6, 45, 50)

Regulation No. 1797 of the Labor Code establishes the minimum standards of the workplace, contracts, leave, and access to social security for domestic workers, including child care providers, in accordance with ILO Convention 189.(6, 31) Although the Government partnered with local NGOs, UNICEF, and Terre des Hommes to draft a law against the worst forms of child labor, it did not enact this legislation.(4)

The Penal Protection Code for Children establishes penalties for sexually exploiting a child, for inciting a child to beg, or for giving authority to another person to do so.(51) The law also prohibits the production of child pornography.(38) It does not, however, prohibit the use of children in other illicit activities, such as selling drugs.(17, 39, 52)

Laws 2007-048 and 025/3003 prohibit forced and compulsory labor, as well as slavery and trafficking in persons.(52-54) This law also prescribes penalties for Government officials who do not respond to reported cases of forced labor and individuals who profit from or procure slaves.(17) The minimum age for both voluntary and compulsory recruitment into the military is 18.(55) However, children between the ages of 16 and 18 are permitted to participate in the armed forces if they receive parental consent.(56)

According to Law 2001-054, the Government has established the right to free primary education until the age of 14. However, in practice, the free education provision is not effectively enforced as many children do not attend school.(4, 5, 46, 57)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The multi-stakeholder Child Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor Group coordinates child labor and child trafficking efforts and comprises the Ministry of Social Affairs, Childhood, and the Family (MASEF); the Ministry of Justice; the Ministry of Interior; the National Commission on Human Rights, Humanitarian Action, and Civil Society; NGOs; and international organizations.(4) This Group met five times in 2012 and reportedly effectively coordinated activities.(58) It also held a workshop in January 2013 to present a draft law on the worst forms of child labor.(4) During the reporting period, the Government created structures to monitor child protection issues in the Gorgol and Guidimaka regions and allocated $16,000 to this effort.(4)

The MASEF has primary responsibility for both child labor policy and monitoring all alleged violations of child labor laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(4) The MASEF is also responsible for developing and implementing programs to protect vulnerable children.(4) In 2012, the Government of Mauritania increased its number of labor inspectors from 60 to 80. However, there are no labor inspectors dedicated to child labor.(4) The ILO Committee of Experts reports that the labor inspectorate lacks staff and resources to carry out its mandate.(39, 59)

During the year, labor inspectors did not receive training on child labor issues, and no child labor inspections or investigations were performed by the Government. Furthermore, the Government did not make labor inspection data accessible to the public.(4) In 2012, the Government budgeted $50,000 to MASEF's Labor Office and $33,300 to the Office of Childhood to support the implementation of the national strategy and plan of action for the protection of children. However, there was no budget for labor inspections.(4)

The Ministry of Justice's Directorate of Judicial Protection for Children, the Commissariat for Human Rights, and the Ministry of Interior's Special Brigade for Minors also undertake activities that protect children and enforce laws, including the worst forms of child labor.(4) The Special Brigade for Minors in collaboration with NGOs identified 1,877 girls working as domestic servants in private homes from January to September 2012. However, no penalties or citation for child labor violations were issued during the year.(4) The Ministry of the Interior also monitors religious schools, or mahadras, to ensure that children are not forced to beg on behalf of their teachers.(20) Children are referred to social and other services through labor inspectors and the Special Brigade for Minors.(4)

During the reporting period, the police arrested two women accused in two separate cases of child slavery after receiving a complaint from an NGO. Both cases are pending prosecution.(21) However, there were no convictions involving the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.(4, 21) Research indicates that the Government prefers to settle cases involving slavery out of court, as it is perceived as the quicker and more amicable way to resolve disputes.(31)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The MASEF's National Strategy for the Protection of Children in Mauritania and Action Plan (2009-2013) aims to strengthen the legal system, increase access to social services for vulnerable children, and establish a system to coordinate, monitor, and evaluate service provision.(58, 60, 61) In addition, the Commission on Human Rights has established a national plan to combat the vestiges of slavery, which includes education as a means to reduce poverty.(12, 52) However, the Government has not yet adopted the plan. Furthermore, according to the ILO, the Government of Mauritania lacks reliable data to be able to provide the plan's services to all victims of slavery or those at risk.(12, 62)

During the reporting period, Government officials brought together Imams, clerics, educators, and human rights activists to sign the Nouakchott Declaration, which calls for increased protection of children.(63) The Commissariat for Human Rights, Humanitarian Action, and Relations with Civil Society, in cooperation with the UN, worked with stakeholders to develop an action plan for Mauritania's anti-trafficking efforts.(28)

The Government of Mauritania has other policies, such as the PRSP II 2011-2015, which calls for the elimination of child labor and includes plans to increase access to quality education for all children.(64, 65) The Government has a United Nations Assistance Development Framework (2012-2016) that aims to provide educational assistance to vulnerable and exploited children.(66) Finally, the Government of Mauritania has an Education Sector Development Program (2001-2015), which aims to increase children's access to education.(67) However, the question of whether child protection, poverty reduction, and educational policies have had an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

In 2012, the National Office of Statistics conducted a survey on child trafficking and the worst forms of child labor in Mauritania. According to UNICEF, the survey report is expected to be released in 2013.(4)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since 2007, the Government has operated Centers for the Protection and Social Integration of Children in Difficult Situations (CPISEs) in the El Mina and Dar Naim regions of Nouakchott and in Kiffa. The CPISEs provide shelter for vulnerable children, many of whom are talibés.(3, 4, 31) In 2012, the Government allocated $30,000 to the centers, opened a new center in Nouadhibou, and provided 90 children with assistance.(4, 31) In addition, the Government opened a child protection training center in the town of Selibaby. This center will provide training on child protection to local organizations, including child labor.(4)

The Government of Mauritania continued to participate in a 2-year project through September 2012 which aimed to strengthen legal frameworks and provide support to women and children engaged in slavery, domestic service, commercial sexual exploitation, and forced begging. The $500,000 project was funded by USAID and assisted 70 talibés during the reporting period.(6, 21, 38, 68, 69) In June 2012, Mauritania completed its program to provide social and other services to children that had been trafficked for labor in the camel jockeying sector in the United Arab Emirates (UAE). This program was funded by the UAE and UNICEF.(70, 71)

During the reporting period, the multi-stakeholder Child Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor Group presented its draft law on the worst forms of child labor to representative government agencies.(28) The Government, in collaboration with UNICEF, also taught stakeholders how to perform rapid needs assessments for children in crisis situations and psychosocial monitoring of vulnerable children.(4)

The Government of Mauritania continued to participate in the EU-funded UNODC Impact Program, which aims to assist West and North African States in implementing the Migrant Smuggling Protocol. The Program aims to strengthen criminal justice systems by improving legislative frameworks, building government capacity, improving data collection and analysis techniques, and raising awareness.(72, 73) Under the Program, 12 traditional mediators from remote areas in which a formal justice system is absent were trained on the national legal framework, including child labor laws.(74)

During the year, the Mauritanian government participated in the $29 million Poverty Reduction Project in Aftout South and Karakoro, funded by the UN International Fund for Agricultural Development.(75) The Project targets 21,000 households and aims to assist rural communities through the provision of loans and grants to improve livelihoods, economic opportunities, and food security.(76) The question of whether these programs have had an impact on child labor has not been addressed. In addition, despite these efforts, Mauritania's social programs are not sufficient to assist the numerous children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture, herding, domestic service, and indentured servitude.(4)

The Government's continued detention of anti-slavery protestors and the lack of recent data on slavery hampers its ability to comprehensively address this issue and develop programs for future initiatives.(17, 29, 32, 77, 78) Further, some government officials do not acknowledge that slavery continues despite its prohibition.(6) In particular, the UN reports that more needs to be done to address the problem of slavery in Mauritania and the UN Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery recommended that a sustained awareness raising campaign be carried out in urban and rural areas to make all Mauritians aware of national laws on slavery.(79, 80)

Mauritania

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Mauritania:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Draft and adopt a hazardous occupations list in accordance with international standards.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure protection for children who are working on a noncontractual basis or engaging in unpaid work, such as children working on the streets.	2012
	Adopt the law on the worst forms of child labor.	2012
	Draft and adopt a law that prohibits the use of children in illicit activities.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Take all necessary measures to effectively enforce all worst forms of child labor laws, including labor inspections, investigation, prosecution, and conviction of violators of the law.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide sufficient funding, human resources, and personnel training for effective coordination, inspection, and enforcement efforts.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Make data regarding inspections, investigations, complaints, and prosecutions accessible to the public.	2011, 2012
	Effectively enforce free public education legal provisions.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Take steps to ensure that anti-slavery protestors are not unlawfully detained.	2011, 2012
Policies	Collect data on the worst forms of child labor, including slavery, to identify children in need of these services.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing policies may have on addressing the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Make publicly available the survey on child trafficking and the worst forms of child labor in Mauritania.	2012
Social Programs	Conduct research on children engaged in street work, including specific activities and associated hazards, in order to inform policy and program design.	2012
	Expand the scope of programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture, herding, domestic service, and other sectors in which children work, as well as children in hereditary and indentured servitude.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement a continuous awareness-raising campaign in urban and rural areas on worst forms of child labor laws and provide support to victims of slavery to allow for their reintegration into society.	2012
	Ensure that all children have access to education, including refugees, by registering children at birth and establishing and implementing a program to address the lack of teachers and schools.	2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Social Programs	Step up efforts to develop and implement programs to lessen the impact food shortages may have on rural populations.	2011, 2012
	Assess and evaluate the impact that existing education, social protection and livelihoods programs may have on addressing child labor.	2011, 2012

Mauritius

In 2012, Mauritius made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued its efforts to combat commercial sexual exploitation by creating a sub-committee to facilitate inter-agency coordination, operating drop-in centers, and providing services via its Child Development Unit. In addition, the Government continued efforts to increase access to quality education through strategies such as the Zones d'Education Prioritaire (ZEP) and vocational programs for school drop outs. However, the Government does not currently ensure that victims of commercial sexual exploitation have access to comprehensive, quality services. Children in Mauritius are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, primarily in commercial sexual exploitation, although the extent of the problem is unknown.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Mauritius are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, primarily in commercial sexual exploitation (CSEC), although the extent of the problem is unknown.(3-5) Recent unofficial estimates report that the scale of the problem has been reduced even though accurate figures are not available.(5) However, the UN Special Rapporteur on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography visited Mauritius in May 2011 and found, through anecdotal reports, that the scale of CSEC in the country seems to be growing.(6) Some children are lured into CSEC by their peers or through false offers of other employment. Some adult prostitutes force their sons and daughters into CSEC.(4, 7) Although information is limited, children are reportedly engaged in the production of pornography.(8)

Agalega Islands, Cargados Carajos Shoals, and Rodrigues are not shown.

Available evidence suggests a low incidence of other worst forms of child labor in Mauritius and its dependencies, such as Rodrigues Island. Although information is limited and the extent of the problem is unknown, some children reportedly work in dangerous activities in agriculture and in domestic service.(4, 9, 10) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(11, 12) Children working in domestic service may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes, making them susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(13, 14)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Employment Rights Act sets the minimum age for work at 16. Children under age 18 are prohibited from work that is likely to jeopardize their health or safety, or their physical, mental, moral, or social development.(15) The Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Act identifies specific work activities prohibited to young persons 16 to 18 years old, which includes work with heavy metals and work in the forestry or construction sectors.(16) It is illegal to employ youth ages 16 to 18 to work in any industrial setting between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m. Employers are required to maintain records of all employees ages 16 to 18.(15) The Constitution prohibits forced labor and slavery.(17)

The Combating Trafficking in Persons Act establishes trafficking as a criminal offense, including trafficking of children. The Act also requires Internet service providers to inform the police of any information that suggests or alludes to trafficking on its server.(18) The Child Protection Act forbids causing, inciting, or allowing any child under age 18 to engage in prostitution. The Criminal Code provides for penalties against procuring, exploiting, or enticing a prostitute, including a child prostitute.(6) The Child Protection Act also prohibits distributing, showing, taking, or possessing with the intention of showing or distributing any indecent photograph of a child, including electronic images.(6)

There is no compulsory military recruitment because Mauritius has no military. The voluntary recruitment age for the Police Force, which includes other security forces, is 18.(19-22) Education is free and compulsory to age 16.(23, 24)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Government has created a National Child Protection Committee (NCPC, also known as the Working Together Committee) that includes key stakeholders related to the coordination and implementation of child protection policies.(24, 25) The NCPC coordinates the roles and responsibilities of the relevant ministries and ensures there is effective collaboration on effective intervention on cases involving children, including the worst forms of child labor.(21, 24) Under the auspices of the Ministry of Gender Equality, Child Development and Family Welfare (MOGE), the Government established the National Children's Council (NCC) in 1990 following its ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.(6) The NCC is an independent, para-governmental entity that serves as the executive of child protection programs and focuses on child protection issues in the country.(6) During the reporting period, the MOGE consulted the NCC and various child protection service providers to discuss a new Consolidated Children's Bill.(4, 21) Significant overlap appears to exist between the committees involved in child protection issues, and it is unclear if worst forms of child labor are specifically coordinated through the NCC.

The Inspection and Enforcement Division of the Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations, and Employment (MOLIRE) enforces all labor laws, including those related to child labor.(4) It employs 45 inspectors and is responsible for conducting all regular labor inspections, including monitoring for child labor.(10, 26) From January 1, 2012 to November 2012, the MOLIRE inspections found no cases of child labor.(4) Information was not available on the number of labor inspections conducted. The Office of the Ombudsperson for Children also has the authority to investigate any suspected or reported case of child labor.(27) The 2012 Ombudsperson for Children Annual Report indicated that the Office investigated the absence of four children from school in alleged child labor cases. It reported that three of the children are back in school and that follow-up is being maintained on the fourth.(27, 28) When a child labor violation is found, the MOLIRE carries out unannounced follow-up inspections to deter repeat offenses.(10) Prosecution is usually pursued against repeat offenders.(29) Violations related to the hazardous work provisions of the OSH Act are referred to the MOLIRE's OSH Division.(10)

The MOGE is the lead agency for implementing anti-Trafficking in Persons (TIP) policies and the Prime Minister's Office (PMO) is the coordinating agency for government anti-TIP policies.(5, 7) The MOGE established a sub-committee with the NCPC to facilitate inter-agency coordination on the CSEC.(21) Despite efforts to improve inter-agency coordination, a formal and permanent anti-TIP coordinating body does not exist and a lack of understanding of TIP by government officials has prevented the Government from effectively addressing the issue.(5, 7, 21) In addition, coordination and cooperation among government agencies and with civil society groups seems to be a persistent challenge in addressing commercial sexual exploitation and related child protection issues in the country.(6)

The Police Brigade for the Protection of Minors (Minors' Brigade), a unit of the Mauritius Police Force (MPF), patrols areas such as arcades, bus terminals, and other areas in which youth are vulnerable to involvement in commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 6) The MOGE, the NCC, and NGOs also participate in these operations.(30) The MOGE has established Family Service Bureaus throughout the country to receive calls and handle walk-in visits related to any situation involving harm to children. The Bureaus are staffed with family welfare officers, psychologists, police officers, and family counselors.(6) The MOGE's Child Development Unit (CDU) also receives tips on all forms of child abuse, including commercial sexual exploitation and child trafficking, through two telephone hotlines. From January to November 2012, the CDU received reports of six cases of child trafficking and five cases of child prostitution.(4) The Minors' Brigade investigates these cases while the CDU provides follow-up assistance to victims.(31) However, the CDU suffers from a lack of resources and personnel, with only nine family welfare officers to serve Mauritius and one for Rodrigues, leading to insufficient service provision.(6)

In 2012, the most recent time period for which information is available, the Government prosecuted four cases of child prostitution, involving seven offenders.(21) As of May 2011, one case of child pornography was pending in the courts.(6)

The MPF provides anti-TIP training to new recruits as part of basic training requirements. During the reporting period, over 200 new recruits received training.(5) Training on preventing CSEC was provided by an NGO to 30 officials from the Government including the police, Ministry of Tourism, the probation service, and the MOGE. The USDOJ provided the Children as Victims and Witnesses in the Criminal Justice System training, with a substantial anti-TIP component, to over 150 government officials.(5)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government does not have a national policy that specifically targets child labor. It has a Protocol of Assistance to Victims of Sexual Abuse that lays out procedures to be followed by police and other officials when handling sexual abuse cases, including commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 32) In addition, the Government's Child Safety Online Action Plan aims to prevent sexual exploitation of children on the Internet by strengthening the legal framework and raising awareness among parents and children.(4, 31)

The Government's National Policy Paper on the Family lays out strategies to support child welfare through holistic support for families, including job training for parents.(33) The Government's Education and Human Resources Strategy Plan (2008-2020) aims to improve equity of access to primary, secondary, and technical/vocational education, among other goals.(34)

The draft UNDP Country Program for Mauritius includes improving the education of vulnerable children through programs such as the ZEP.(24, 35) Although the Government's PRSP does not explicitly discuss child labor, together with other poverty alleviation programs, it emphasizes child retention in school as a means to ensure equal opportunity for all.(10)

The question of whether these policies have an impact on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

The Government is currently developing a comprehensive national child protection strategy to establish a coordinated response to child protection issues.(4)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government carries out a number of activities to prevent child sexual abuse and exploitation, including widespread public awareness-raising in schools and community centers, as well as on the radio and television. The Government also holds workshops on CSEC for vulnerable groups, and participates in working groups with private sector and civil society actors on anti-trafficking and CSEC issues.(6, 24, 30) The Ministry of Tourism publishes and distributes pamphlets on trafficking to tourism companies, including tour operators and hotels.(36)

In the area of victim services, the Government operates drop-in centers that provide counseling and referrals to victims of sexual abuse, including CSEC and trafficking of children.(22, 36) When victims report such abuses, child welfare officers are available to accompany them as they receive immediate medical care. These officers then work in conjunction with the police if an official statement is needed.(7) The CDU provides a variety of support services, including counseling, legal support, and reintegration, although it does face significant resource constraints as noted above.(6, 37)

If institutional care is needed, victims are referred to government or NGO shelters, most of which receive government funding.(6, 22, 36) However, these facilities are overcrowded, service providers are overtaxed and lack appropriate training, and institutions do not have appropriate standards of care, leading to inadequate rehabilitative services for this vulnerable population.(6) In addition, child victims of prostitution are sometimes placed by court order in residential centers for youth on probation. Child victims of prostitution placed in such facilities may not receive appropriate treatment.(6)

The Government provides free school materials, lunches and medical examinations to economically underprivileged students.(38) The ZEP program aims to combat social inequalities by providing equal opportunities to all primary school children throughout the country. This program has been shown to reduce school dropouts through enhanced community participation in education.(24, 35) The Government's Strategy for Special Education Needs and Inclusive Education in Mauritius includes a program for at-risk primary school students outside of school hours that focuses on physical education and the arts.(31) The MOGE operates a Child Mentoring Scheme that provides one-on-one counseling to at-risk children through a government-selected mentor.(24, 39) The public school system also includes a pre-vocational track for youth who are at risk of exploitation or of becoming drop outs.(24, 29) In addition, the Government has a pilot Summer and Winter school program to enhance the successful transition from primary to secondary school for students in addition to a Second Chance Program to educate and provide vocational training and life skills to those who dropped out after age 16.(4, 24)

The Ministry of Social Integration and Economic Empowerment operates a National Empowerment Foundation which provides comprehensive support to deprived children through a Child and Family Development program. The program includes day care facilities, assistance with preschool education, and holiday camps for children during school breaks.(24)

The question of whether these programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Mauritius:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Ensure that all government efforts to address the worst forms of child labor are coordinated by the National Child Protection Committee and that any overlap in coordination is addressed.	2012
	Establish a formal and permanent structure to coordinate anti-TIP efforts and increase anti-TIP training for government officials.	2012
	Increase investigations and prosecutions of CSEC crimes, and punish offenders.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide necessary resources to the Child Development Unit to ensure adequate service delivery for victims.	2011, 2012
	Make information publicly available on the number of labor inspections conducted.	2012
Policies	Assess the impact that existing policies have had on the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Ensure that victims of CSEC have access to comprehensive, quality services.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Refrain from placing CSEC victims in facilities designed for youth on probation.	2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on addressing child labor, particularly CSEC.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Moldova made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Moldova adopted an amendment to the Labor Code that increased fines for engaging children in hazardous work. The Government also implemented the National Action Plan on the Prevention and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor for 2011-2015 at the regional level, and six districts developed local strategies and teams to implement the Plan. Further, the Ministry of Education adopted and issued the decision prohibiting students from agricultural work during the school year. However, the number of inspectors in the Labor Inspection Office and Child Labor Monitoring Unit was not sufficient. While the Government provides some financial support to programs addressing both child labor and trafficking, all major child labor programs have been donor funded. These programs do not appear to be sustainable without outside financial assistance. Children continue to be found in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in hazardous activities in agriculture and as a result of trafficking for forced labor and begging.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Moldova are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and as a result of trafficking for forced labor and begging.(3) The 2009-2010 National Child Labor Survey estimated that 109,000 children were engaged in dangerous child labor, mostly in agriculture.(3-5) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(6, 7)

Reports indicate that school directors, farms, and agricultural cooperatives signed contracts in 2011 that required students to help with the harvest during the high season in autumn.(8, 9) There was no new information about whether these contracts were signed during the reporting period.

Moldovan children are trafficked abroad and within the country for commercial sexual exploitation, begging, and forced labor in construction and agriculture.(4, 8)

The latest national study on the situation of children in need and those whose parents work abroad conducted between March and July 2012 reveals that 105,270 children have one or both parents working abroad.(4) These children often lack adult supervision and may be at risk of being trafficked, especially if a parent was trafficked.(10)

Moldova

There are reports of children working in the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(11, 12)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Article 46 of the Labor Code sets the minimum age for employment at 16 and article 255 sets the minimum age for employment in hazardous work at 18.(3, 4, 13) In certain cases, children age 15 can work with parental or legal authorization if the work will not interfere with their education, health, or development.(11, 13) Government Decision No. 562 establishes a list of jobs in 32 industries, including agriculture, textile, construction, and food processing, that are prohibited to persons younger than age 18.(4, 11, 14) Article 58 of the Labor Code passed in 2012 increased fines for engaging children in hazardous work. The Law on Prevention and Combating Family Violence also has provisions against hazardous work for minors.(4)

	Free Public Education	Yes

The Constitution forbids forced labor and the exploitation of minors.(11, 15) Article 206 of the Criminal Code and article 6 of the Law on Child Rights prohibits trafficking in children for labor and sexual exploitation and lays out penalties for the use of children in illicit activities, forced labor, prostitution, and the creation of pornography.(4) Article 208.1 of the Criminal Code prohibits the production, distribution, dissemination, and possession of pornographic images of children.(12) The Law on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Human Beings provides guidelines for combating child trafficking including prevention, victim assistance, and repatriation for child victims.(16)

The legal framework also includes several other laws that address child labor. These laws include the Law on Labor Force Migration, which calls for protection and care of children left behind by migrant parents; the Law on Occupational Safety and Health, which states that children of working age are individuals in need of specific protections in the workplace; and the Code of Contraventions, which establishes fines for those violating a child's rights.(17) In 2012, the Government developed the Draft Law on special protection of children in high risk situations and children separated from their parents.(18) It is unknown at this point in time whether this law was adopted. The age for military recruitment is 18.(4) Article 6 of the Law on Child Rights also prohibits and lays out penalties for child soldiering.(11)

Education is free and compulsory until the age of 16.(4, 19) However, many schools are not adequately funded, and parents are sometimes charged for school supplies and textbooks.(8) Roma children are particularly vulnerable to barriers in accessing education due to poverty.(8, 20) The law also requires children to have access to education in their native language.(19) In August 2012, the Ministry of Education adopted and issued a decision that prohibits students from engaging in agricultural work during the school year.(4) It is unknown whether students were engaged in agricultural work while attending school during this reporting period.

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Steering Committee on the Elimination of Child Labor (NSC) coordinates work on child labor issues at the national level and is chaired by the Deputy Minister of Labor, Social Protection and Family. It includes representatives from the Government, workers' organizations, NGOs, and academia.(4) At the local level, multidisciplinary teams identify children involved in the worst forms of child labor, offer alternatives to child laborers, monitor children's living conditions, and use the collected information for policy development.(4, 18)

The National Commission for Consultation and Collective Bargaining includes a permanent council on child labor.(4) The National Council for the Protection of Child Rights is chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister and meets on a regular basis to discuss the protection of child rights.(4) The Council's task is to inform and provide consultation to the National Commission for Consultation and Collective Bargaining's members about the worst forms of child labor.(4)

The Parliament appoints an Ombudsperson who specializes in child protection issues by defending children's constitutional rights and freedoms and by promoting the CRC.(4)

The Labor Inspection Office (LIO) within the Ministry of Labor, Family and Social Protection is responsible for enforcing all labor laws in the Republic of Moldova. In 2012, the LIO operated on a budget of $615,000 and with a staff of 96.(4)

The direct monitoring of child labor is accomplished through the Child Labor Monitoring Unit that is set up within the LIO. The Unit is a coordinating mechanism between the NSC at the national level and multidisciplinary teams at the local level. It supervises the activities related to combating child labor and coordinates the results coming out of inspections.(18) The Government has reported that the number of inspectors in the LIO and the Child Labor Monitoring Unit is not sufficient.(18)

During the reporting period, the National Confederation of Trade Unions of Moldova established its own Labor Inspection Unit, which supports the LIO by detecting child labor exploitation cases.(18)

The law permits child labor inspections for both legally registered workplaces and individual persons, thus covering informal worksites.(13) Inspectors are also allowed to seek assistance from local public administrators to suspend licenses of employers who repeatedly neglect labor inspection recommendations. However, small farms are not subjected to the inspection, which increases the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(4)

In 2012, the LIO conducted 6,499 inspections and uncovered 116 child labor violations, 78 of which were in the agricultural sector.(4) Although information is not available on all types of the 116 violations, there were 52 children working illegally, and 39 children in hazardous work situations.(4) During this same period, the LIO referred 23 child labor violations to Moldovan courts.(4) All 39 children in hazardous activities were removed from work and another 59 children were assisted by LIO inspectors.(4)

The Permanent Secretariat under the National Committee for Combating Trafficking in Persons coordinates government efforts to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking.(21) The agenda of the Permanent Secretariat is to implement legal provisions on combating trafficking in persons (TIP), establishing working groups for drafting of new provisions on TIP, as well as participation in anti-TIP campaigns, developing the national action plans, and seeking support for projects.(21)

The Center for Combating Trafficking in Persons (CCTIP) is responsible for investigating child trafficking cases. The CCTIP employs 43 police officers to conduct criminal investigations of trafficking, including trafficking for sexual exploitation of children.(4) Despite the training, the techniques by law enforcement are criticized because they sometimes force the victims to confront their trafficker, and victims are required to give numerous declarations and statements.(4) The CCTIP annual budget is approximately $300,000, which is insufficient to cover the cost of the operations in all territories.(4) In 2012, the Government opened 20 investigations on child trafficking. Of those cases, 12 children were found to be victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation.(4) During the reporting period, seven criminal investigations were finalized and nine perpetrators were sentenced to prison for child trafficking.(4) The average sentence received for trafficking of children in 2012 was 13 years' imprisonment. The Government requested the NGO assistance on all cases with a minor victim that included legal, social, and psychological assistance as well as accommodations to victims of human trafficking in shelters, including children.(4)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the Government continued to implement the National Action Plan on the Prevention and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor for 2011-2015.(4, 18) The National Action Plan outlines 44 action items to be implemented by 30 stakeholders working on child labor issues.(4) The action items include training key stakeholders on the prevention of the worst forms of child labor, institutionalizing a child labor monitoring system, and developing public informational campaigns on child labor issues.(22) The Ministry of Labor, Social Protection and Family is responsible for monitoring the implementation of the plan and the National Steering Committee will draft annual progress reports.(22) In 2012, officials in six districts developed local plans and formed special teams under the National Action Plan.(4)

In 2012, the Government adopted the National Plan for Prevention and Combating Trafficking of Human Beings for 2012-2013 and implemented the additional specific Plan to the National Plan for Preventing and Combating Trafficking of Human Beings for 2012-2013, approved in 2010.(18) With both strategies in place, child victims or potential victims are provided with different social services, ranging from psychosocial care and maternal centers to family-type children's homes.(18)

In addition, the Government continued to implement the National Plan on Community Support of Children in Need for 2007-2014, adopted in September 2007.(18) The question of whether this policy has an impact on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

In December of 2012, the Government initiated a reform of child protection policies and drafted a new National Strategy for Child and Family Protection for 2013-2020.(4) The strategy calls for the protection of families in high-risk situations and children in hardship. The Action Plan for implementation of this Strategy is planned to begin in 2013.(18)

In 2007, the Collective Convention on Elimination of Worst Forms of Child Labor was signed by the Government, the National Confederation of Employers, the Trade Unions Confederation, and the Free Trade Union Confederation.(3) This agreement outlined actions aimed at eliminating the worst forms of child labor and included specific work activities and hazards prohibited to children, such as underground work and work that exposes them to machinery, electric shock, extreme temperatures, and chemical or biological agents.(23)

The National Youth Strategy, through its Plan of Action for 2009-2013, aims to facilitate youth employment, provide access to education, encourage youth participation in public life, build the capacity of youth institutions, and develop health and social protection services. The Government allocated $24 million for the Strategy's implementation.(24)

The Activity Program of the Government of Moldova, "European Integration: Freedom, Democracy, Wellbeing 2011-2014" aims to have a direct impact on the worst forms of child labor by implementing activities such as: ensuring all citizens have access to early education; creating an adequate number of kindergartens and schools for each community; "strengthening the institutional and functional capacities of the local public administration authorities in their exercising of the functions of guardianship authority to ensure observance of children's rights;" and promoting inclusive education to ensure that children with disabilities and from socially vulnerable families have access to education.(18) The question of whether these policies have an impact on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Moldova continued to implement a project titled "Free, Strong and Safe—to a Better Child Protection System," which started in September 2011. The objective of the project is to establish multidisciplinary assistance for child victims and potential victims of abuse, neglect, and exploitation.(4) The Government expanded the support in 2012 by drafting and adopting a new guide for assisting child victims. A pilot version of the program was carried out from July through December 2012 in 10 localities in two districts.(4) The actions of this project for 2012 include testing the notification process of suspected cases of abuse, neglect, exploitation, and trafficking of children; creating the "Register" for tracking reported cases of abuse; training the members of the multidisciplinary teams; and providing needed assistance in monitoring of child victims and potential victims of abuse, neglect, and exploitation.(18)

In 2012, the Government of Moldova, together with the UN, launched a new program of cooperation for 2013-2017 titled "Towards Unity in Action: United Nations-Republic of Moldova Partnership Framework."(4) The responsibility of the Government and civil society under this program is to improve the social inclusion of vulnerable children and their families. Addressed in the program are child migrants, child victims of sexual exploitation and abuse, and children involved in labor.(4)

The Government participates in USDOS-funded programs to address human trafficking. These programs, with $1.42 million in funding, build capacity of local government officials and police to investigate and try trafficking cases, as well as strengthen victim identification and assistance.(25) While the Government of Moldova provides some financial support to programs addressing both child labor and trafficking, all major child labor programs have been donor funded. These programs do not appear to be sustainable without outside financial assistance.(4)

In 2012, the Government continued to implement project titled "Addressing the Negative Effects of Migration on Minors and Families Left Behind." This 18-month, $2.5 million project, funded by the EU, aimed to improve the Government's public information system on child protection, to promote employment opportunities for young people through vocational training, to support business startups, and to conduct awareness campaigns regarding the negative consequences of migration.(26)

The Government of Moldova has various social programs to support vulnerable groups, including vulnerable children.(3) One such program is the Ajutor Social Program, which is a cash benefit program targeted for the poor.(27) Another social program includes the Government's provision of the equivalent of $29 each to qualifying children from vulnerable families to cover the cost of school supplies.(9, 28) Additionally, Moldova's Social Investment Fund works to empower poor communities and vulnerable population groups to manage their priority needs through a small grants program.(29) The question of whether these programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Moldova:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Adopt the Draft Law on Special Protection of Children in Risk Situations and Children Separated from Their Parents.	2012
	Monitor schools to ensure that children are not charged extra educational fees or required to participate in farm work during the harvest season.	2010, 2011, 2012
Coordinating Mechanisms	Increase funding for the CCTIP, and increase resources for hiring more labor inspectors in the Labor Inspection Office and the Child Labor Monitoring Unit.	2012
	Take steps to ensure that children working on farms and other small establishments are protected from involvement in hazardous activities.	2012
Policies	Conduct research on whether children are engaged in dangerous work on the street in order to inform policy and program design.	2012
	Assess the impact of the National Plan on Community Support of Children in Need for 2007-2014 on the worst forms of child labor.	2012
	Assess the impact the National Youth Strategy and its Plan of Action for 2009-2013 may have on addressing the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Ensure current child labor programs are sustainable by providing increased financial support.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase school funding to ensure that children have access to mandated free education through age 16.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing policies and programs such as the Ajutor Social Program may have on reducing child labor.	2011, 2012

In 2012, Mongolia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed a new Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons and with local government agencies, implemented child protection programs that provided services to some children engaged in the worst forms of child labor. However, during the reporting year, the Government did not implement national programs to address child labor and trafficking and dissolved or failed to appoint the relevant coordinating committees. Enforcement mechanisms for reducing child labor are minimal, and gaps persist in the legal framework and operating procedures for prosecuting criminal offenders, specifically regarding commercial sexual exploitation. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, especially in hazardous activities in herding and animal husbandry.

Children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Mongolia, most commonly in hazardous activities in herding and animal husbandry.(3, 4) Children work in animal husbandry and herding for their own families or for others, often residing with the employer.(5) Animal husbandry exposes children to risks including bites and attacks by animals, extreme temperatures, being cut by sharp knives while slaughtering livestock, and nonpayment of wages. Herding exposes children to extreme cold and frostbite, exhaustion, wild animal attacks, assault or beatings when far from home, and accidents such as falling off horses.(4-7)

Children also perform dangerous tasks while working as horse jockeys, domestic workers, construction workers, and ticket-takers for public transportation.(3, 4, 8-11) Horse jockeys risk injury or death from accidents or falls. In 2012, the Ministry of Health reported that more than 300 children injured during horse races were treated at the National Trauma Center; this statistic does not include children treated in other facilities.(4, 12, 13) Children employed as domestics may be required to work long hours and perform strenuous tasks without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(14, 15) Children working as ticket-takers for public transportation were sometimes injured in traffic accidents.(10)

Children are engaged in hazardous work scavenging in dumpsites, where they are exposed to unhygienic conditions, extreme weather, and health problems caused by inhaling smoke from burning garbage.(3, 4, 11) Children also perform hazardous work as porters, often carrying loads exceeding legal limits or pushing carts weighing up to one ton.(4)

Children are found in situations of forced begging on the streets. There are reports of children performing other types of work on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(10, 17) The Government reported a recent decline in homeless children due to outreach and services through social programs administered by government agencies and NGOs, which may have reduced the number of children working in urban areas.(10, 18)

Mongolia

Children perform hazardous work in mining coal, gold, and fluorspar both on the surface and underground in artisanal mines.(3, 4, 9-11, 19) Although some NGOs reported a decline in child labor in the mining sector in prior years, monitoring of the artisanal sector has not been comprehensive in recent years and there is no data available on recent child labor rates. Government officials identified cases of children engaged in mining in 2012.(10) In mining, children handle mercury and explosives, transport heavy materials, stand in water for prolonged periods, work in extreme climate conditions, risk falling into open pits, and descend into tunnels that are up to 10 meters deep, which causes them to be at risk of collapse.(3, 4)

The unconditional worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation of children, pornography, and child trafficking also exist in Mongolia.(9-11, 20-23) Commercial sexual exploitation of children, including child sex tourism, is a continuing problem.(11, 21-24) Girls are trafficked internally and forced into prostitution, sometimes in saunas, bars, hotels, karaoke clubs, and massage parlors.(11, 21-23, 25) In addition, emerging reports indicate that girls were sexually exploited at rural mining sites.(23) Children are trafficked internally for forced begging and stealing; and in some cases children may be forced to work in the construction, mining, and industrial sectors.(23) Girls may also be trafficked to China and destinations in East Asia for sexual exploitation or forced labor.(22-25) NGOs and law enforcement officials reported cases in which young girls were trafficked internationally for exploitation as contortionists in circuses, sold by their families, and subjected to physical abuse.(23)

Children may face barriers to education. Schools in Ulaanbaatar are often overpopulated; and in rural areas, schools are often distant from many children's homes, especially at the secondary level. This leads to children dropping out of school if their families cannot afford the dormitory costs.(10)

During the reporting period, the Parliamentary elections and subsequent reorganization of the Government ministries resulted in extensive personnel changes and a reduced focus on child labor and other socioeconomic issues in Mongolia.(10)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Law sets the minimum age for employment at 16 but allows children to work at age 15 with the permission of a parent or guardian. Under certain conditions, children as young as 14 may participate in vocational education.(26)

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	C138, Minimum Age	✓
	C182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	CRC	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓
	Minimum Age for Work	16
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	18
	Compulsory Education Age	16
	Free Public Education	Yes

The Labor Law is under revision, but there is no information on how the amendment may extend greater protection to children or the timeframe for submitting the amended law to Parliament.(20, 27) Under the current law, protections are lacking for children who work for informal businesses, family businesses, or without a formal contract.(19, 20, 26, 27)

The List of Jobs Prohibited to Minors, issued by the Ministry of Social Welfare and Labor (MOSWL), lists locations, professions, and conditions of work for which it is prohibited to employ minors under age 18.(28) Children under age 18 are barred from working as miners, load carriers, horse breakers, animal trainers, and garbage scavengers. Child herders are prohibited from pasturing small animals at distances greater than 1,000 meters during dangerous weather conditions or natural disasters.(28) The MOSWL List does not specify whether it has the same limitations as the Labor Law or whether it applies to children working in informal businesses, family businesses, or to those working without a formal contract.(28, 29) The 2002 Criminal Code and the 1996 Law on the Protection of the Rights of the Child prohibit the use of children in begging.(30, 31)

The Standards for Clothes and Safety Equipment for Horse Jockeys provides occupational safety and health standards for children engaged in this activity.(32) The Law on the National Naadam Holiday prohibits children under the age of 7 from working as horse jockeys and mandates that child horse jockeys be insured.(12) The minimum age for working as a horse jockey does not meet the standards prescribed in international conventions and this current legislation does not fully protect children working in this sector.

In January 2012, Mongolia passed a new Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons.(33) The new Law expands the definition of trafficking to include forced prostitution and the prostitution of minors, assigns responsibilities for trafficking enforcement to Government agencies, and mandates coordination among the agencies.(22, 23) The Law also calls for the establishment of a national database on trafficking, though it does not provide funding allocation or responsibility for maintaining the database.(23) However, in the year following the passage of the Law, the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) reported that its implementation was put on hold. There were no efforts to implement the law through allocation of funding or training to law enforcement or judicial officials.(23, 34) As a result, Government officials reported that law enforcement, prosecutors, and judges lacked understanding of the application of the new law.(10, 23)

Following the passage of the 2012 Law on Trafficking, Parliament amended articles on trafficking in the Criminal Code to ensure consistency between the legislation.(23) Forced labor, human trafficking, sexual exploitation, and use of children in other illegal activities are prohibited in the Criminal Code.(30, 35) The Code also prohibits exploiting children in prostitution and in pornography.(30)

The sexual exploitation of children is also covered under the administrative Law on Banning Prostitution. Administrative law prescribes lesser penalties for the sexual exploitation of children than the Criminal Code, and penalizes child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, instead of the perpetrators.(10, 20)

These laws do not provide clear definitions of forced labor and prostitution, allowing for ambiguous interpretation by law enforcement and judicial officials. Because trafficking and sexual exploitation are covered by multiple laws, the Police and the Prosecutor's Office each have discretion to select the article under which to try each case.(9, 20, 22, 24, 35) In cases of sexual exploitation of minors, officials continued to classify the charges under lesser articles or dismissed the cases entirely.(10, 23) In addition, Government officials reported that MOJ investigators and prosecutors are ranked and promoted based on their conviction rate, encouraging them to process cases under lighter articles, which require less evidence and effort.(23) As a result, cases of child sexual exploitation and child trafficking are often prosecuted under lenient administrative laws and receive lesser penalties.(10, 23)

NGOs providing services to victims of trafficking reported a decline in victim referral cases following the 2012 Government reorganization, citing newly appointed government officials who were unfamiliar with the referral process as the cause.(10) In addition, some child victims of trafficking or commercial sexual exploitation were arrested, detained, and prosecuted for crimes committed as a direct result of their victimization.(10, 23, 35, 36)

The MOJ is considering a revision to the Criminal Code, which would provide an opportunity to prohibit the worst forms of child labor and to strengthen the protection of children and victims of trafficking during legal proceedings.(37)

The minimum age for both voluntary and compulsory military recruitment is 18, as mandated in the Law on Civil Military Duties and the Legal Status of Military Personnel.(38)

Primary and lower secondary education is free for 11 years and compulsory for 10 years, generally from ages 6 until the age of 16, as mandated by the Education Law.(12, 27, 39)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Authority for Children (NAC) implements the Child Protection Strategy, which includes the National Program for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor 2011-16.(3, 10, 20, 40) The NAC is also supposed to serve as the Secretariat for the Committee on Child Labor in implementing the National Program, as called for in 2011 by the MOSWL. However, the Committee on Child Labor has not been appointed.(10, 20) Instead the National Network Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor, an NGO-led initiative that included the participation of the NAC, primarily coordinates child labor activities in Mongolia.(20)

The enforcement of labor laws, including child labor, is conducted by the General Agency of Specialized Inspection (GASI); however, inspections cover only registered businesses, which means they fail to protect the majority of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Mongolia.(10) GASI reported that no child labor-specific inspections were conducted in 2012, but that investigations were conducted following the deaths of three minor workers.(10) Two of these victims died from accidents working in the construction sector. The outcome of these cases is not known.(10) In addition, GASI reported that child labor violations found through labor inspections included work exceeding the hour limit set for minors, failure to pay overtime wages to the children, employing children without proper authorization from their guardians, and failure to train children on health and safety standards.(10) GASI reported identifying 182 children working in hazardous work in the mining sector and ordered the employers to provide vocational training to working minors.(10) No information on penalties or citations for these or other child labor violations was made available.

GASI inspectors have broad authority to set and collect penalties and the discretion to choose to refer cases to law enforcement. Government and NGO officials reported that administrative fines (ranging from $525 to $4,200 in 2012) were insufficient to deter those violating child labor legislation.(10) In addition, law enforcement and government officials reported a lack of understanding of child labor statutes, due in part to the reorganization of the Government in 2012, which resulted in new personnel in these agencies who were unfamiliar with applicable laws and operating procedures for investigations, prosecutions, and referral of victims.(10) GASI employs 47 inspectors nationwide who enforce compliance with labor laws, including child labor, occupational safety, hygiene, and social security; 10 of these inspectors cover child labor issues among other responsibilities.(10, 12) GASI did not provide or participate in any child labor trainings during the year.(10) The GASI budget was increased in 2012, but no additional funds were allocated for child labor enforcement. The Government and NGOs reported that the GASI budget and number of inspectors was inadequate for labor monitoring and enforcement.(10)

The Government reported that the National Police Agency does not view child labor to be within its responsibilities and dissolved the Children's Unit at the national level; however the Metropolitan and province-level police departments each have a Children's Department to address issues including child labor.(10, 20) Ulaanbaatar Metropolitan Police conducted a campaign during the year that identified 30 children engaged in child labor and an additional 27 children engaged in hazardous child labor. However, there was no indication that these cases were investigated or prosecuted.(10)

There is no evidence of any monitoring or enforcement mechanisms to protect children working in animal husbandry and herding, or working as horse jockeys, with NGOs reporting that provincial races are not regulated and children are not provided with helmets as required by law.(10)

There is currently no official national body that coordinates efforts to combat trafficking.(23) The 2012 Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons assigned responsibility to the MOJ for coordination of trafficking efforts and mandated the creation of a council to coordinate Government efforts to prevent trafficking. During the year, a council was named within the MOJ but then almost immediately dissolved.(23) The MOJ reported that the council will not be established until the reforms of the criminal code and law enforcement system have been completed.(23)

MOSWL was responsible for the National Council for Coordinating the Implementation of the 2006-12 National Program for Preventing and Protecting Children and Women from Trafficking or Sexual Exploitation, in collaboration with other ministries, law enforcement agencies, and civil society organizations.(3, 20, 32) Since the Government reorganization, which rolled MOSWL into the new Ministry of Population Development and Social Welfare, there have been no meetings for stakeholders involved in anti-trafficking efforts and no evidence of continued coordination by the Ministry.(23)

In cases of trafficking or sexual exploitation, the National Criminal Police Department will conduct the initial investigation and then turn it over to the National State Investigation Department, General Intelligence Agency, and the Prosecutor's Office.(10) In 2012, the State Investigation Department's Special Police Unit to Combat Trafficking, which was responsible for enforcing criminal laws regarding child trafficking, forced child labor, and commercial sexual exploitation of children, was dissolved. This unit was folded into the unit that covers narcotics and organized crime, which is staffed by only nine officers.(10, 20) The Criminal Police Department's Organized Crime Division has three officers dedicated to trafficking who conducted the majority of trafficking investigations and organized trainings for other officials.(23)

In 2012, the police conducted 10 investigations targeting the alleged trafficking and sexual exploitation of 14 children. In addition, a Government-run shelter for homeless children in Ulaanbaatar reported referring two cases of child commercial sexual exploitation and 54 cases of forced child begging to police authorities for investigation.(10) However, information on these investigations, including the prosecutions and convictions of these cases, was conflicting as such data is not accurately documented or compiled across agencies.(10)

The National Police and the Supreme Court reported that there were no convictions pending cases of child labor, child trafficking, or child sexual exploitation during the year. The National Police Agency reported that the database they used to track cases of trafficking and sexual exploitation was infrequently updated and data was inconsistently classified.(10)

Furthermore, it is not known whether the data is disaggregated by age of majority to report on cases of minors.(10)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The National Program for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor 2011-16 was intended to be a continuation of the USDOL-funded ILO-IPEC project that ended in 2010.(20) The Program was designed to be implemented through a National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor that identifies specific actions to combat child labor through 2016. The National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor 2011-2016 defines the responsibilities of the Ministries of Population Development and Social Welfare, Labor, Justice, Education, and Agriculture; GASI; the National Police Agency; the Confederation of Mongolian Trade Unions; and local governors.(20) However, the Plan was not implemented during the year and the Government took no steps to establish a committee, implement the Plan, or allocate a budget for the activities.(10, 12)

The National Program for Preventing and Protecting Children and Women from Trafficking for Sexual Exploitation provided an overarching framework for trafficking issues in Mongolia.(23) The National Plan of Action on Commercial Sexual Exploitation and Trafficking of Children and Women was extended through 2012 and addressed trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation, particularly for women and children.(3, 24) In addition, the 2012 Law on Trafficking presented a policy that mandated activities to combat trafficking. However, none of these policies were implemented during the year.(23)

The Program on Development of Small-Scale Mining, 2008-15, also aims to eliminate child labor in the mining sector with provisions for providing children with informal or distance education. However, research has not confirmed whether this Program has been implemented.(3, 12) The State Policy on Herders clarifies the conditions and criteria for engaging children in herding to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in that sector.(41) Research did not find any evidence that these policies were implemented throughout 2012.

The 2008 National Development Strategy calls for improvement in education, health, social welfare, and labor policies through 2020.(3, 42) Child labor does not appear to be directly addressed in the strategy, although a number of objectives apply to the education and livelihoods of vulnerable children.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Due to the stalled National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor 2011-16, no programs or activities were conducted during the year.(10) Research found no evidence of any programs to address child trafficking, forced child labor, or the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

The National Statistics Office, with support from a USDOL-funded ILO project, had conducted a national labor force survey in previous years that included a module on child labor. The survey results were expected to be published in 2012, but the results were not released during the year and are now anticipated to be released in 2013.(10)

In 2012, Mongolia participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Mongolia, the project aims to build the capacity of the national Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor.(43) The project is currently working with the Government to revise the Criminal Code to better protect children exploited through worst forms of child labor and trafficking.(37)

Provincial and district governments conducted local campaigns to raise awareness of child labor, trafficking, and prostitution for children, schools, and employers.(23) The Ulaanbaatar Mayor's Office runs centers for street children, including children working in markets, providing educational and social activities.(12) Through the Subnational Action Plan of Ulaanbaatar, social workers were trained to monitor and provide services to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, including livelihood support to households of child laborers, on the condition that the children attend school.(10, 20, 32) The Subnational Action Plan of Ulaanbaatar continued through early 2012; however, it was not continued following the June 2012 city government reorganization, and its affiliated programs ended.(10, 12)

The Government runs a temporary shelter for homeless children, including those engaged in child labor. The shelter reported serving 56 children, mostly exploited for forced begging, during the year.(10) The NAC also operated the Road to Home program for homeless children, using $360,000 of Government funding to provide shelter and education in 2012.(10) Due to its success, the NAC reported that the program was institutionalized as the Child Development and Protection Center, indicating Government commitment to future support and sustainability of services.(10)

Mongolia

The Government provides limited social protection programs to vulnerable households. The NAC's Child Protection Strategy includes child welfare programs implemented by NGOs and local government offices. The NAC reported that their funding, approximately $720,500 for 2012 activities, is not sufficient to provide the necessary services to children nationwide.(10) Through its Child Protection activities, the NAC reported identifying 978 children engaged in worst forms of child labor during the year; it removed 360 children from their exploitative work and referred them to NGOs for shelter, psychosocial counseling, and other services.(10)

The Human Development Fund, created in 2009 and administered by the Ministry of Finance, distributes national profit from mineral resources through funding for health insurance, pensions, and education tuition.(20, 44-47) In 2012, the Government began the Children's Money unconditional cash transfer program, a reformulation of the prior social benefits program, which provides $15 monthly for children under age 18.(10) The Government continued to provide a school lunch program for low-income students to encourage attendance, particularly at the secondary level.(10) The question of whether these programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

The Government participates in a wide range of development programs funded by agencies such as USAID, the World Bank, the EU, the Asian Development Bank, the IMF, UNICEF, and UNDP. The programs focus on issues including rural education, universal basic education, vocational training, child rights, social protection policies, livestock-based livelihoods, water and sanitation, disaster preparedness, and HIV/AIDS. The question of whether these programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Mongolia:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the Labor Law and List of Jobs Prohibited to Minors to ensure they apply to all children working in hazardous activities, including those working in unregistered or family businesses, or without a labor contract.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend legislation to increase the minimum age for children working as horse jockeys to adhere to international conventions.	2012
	Provide training for law enforcement and judicial officials on the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons and allocate funding for its full implementation.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Clarify the applicability of overlapping laws on trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and amend criminal and administrative law to ensure that child victims of human trafficking, forced labor, and commercial sexual exploitation are not prosecuted as criminals.	2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Re-activate the National Program for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor 2011-2016 by <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Allocating resources for implementation of the National Program for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor 2011-2016. Appointing a Committee on Child Labor to implement the National Program for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor. 	2010, 2011, 2012
	Create mechanisms to protect children employed by unregistered businesses, family businesses, and the informal sector, including those working as horse jockeys and animal herders.	2010, 2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Increase the number of inspections for child labor compliance and impose penalties for child labor violations. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Provide GASI with a sufficient number of inspectors and resources to adequately monitor and enforce labor laws related to worst forms of child labor. • Collect and compile data on child labor investigations, citations, and penalties. • Ensure that criminal violations are referred to law enforcement. 	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that violations of child labor laws are documented and that appropriate penalties are assessed and collected and that the cases are promptly investigated and prosecuted, to deter repeat offenses.	2011, 2012
	Ensure continued coordination of efforts protecting children from trafficking through the National Council for Coordinating the Implementation of the 2006-2012 National Program for Preventing and Protecting Children and Women from Trafficking or Sexual Exploitation or other mechanism, such as a council to coordinate efforts to combat trafficking.	2012
	Consistently document and update cases of trafficking and sexual exploitation in the national database.	2012
Policies	Reactivate the National Program for Preventing and Protecting Children and Women from Trafficking or Sexual Exploitation and implement the National Plan of Action on Commercial Sexual Exploitation and Trafficking of Children and Women.	2012
	Assess the impact that existing policies may have on addressing child labor.	2011, 2012
	Expand access to education, especially for children in rural areas and in overpopulated schools in Ulaanbaatar.	2011, 2012
Social Programs	Publish the results of the child labor module of the national labor force survey.	2012
	Implement programs to address child labor, particularly in sectors where children are known to work, including herding, animal husbandry, and mining.	2012
	Provide protection and direct assistance to child victims of human trafficking, forced labor, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2012

In 2012, Montenegro made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the Law on Social and Child Protection; the 2012-2018 National Strategy for Combating Human Trafficking and the corresponding Action Plan for its Accomplishments; and the 2012-2016 Strategy for the Improvement of the Position of Roma and other minorities in Montenegro. However, gaps remain in the areas of laws, policies, and programs. The Criminal Code lacks protections against the use, procurement, or offering of children ages 14 to 18 for the production of pornography. In addition, there are no programs that specifically address the problem of children working on the streets and children involved in forced begging. The worst forms of child labor continue to be found in Montenegro in forced begging and informal work on the streets.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Montenegro are found in the worst forms of child labor in forced begging and perform informal work on the streets.(3, 4) Roma children are most commonly involved in these activities. This type of work includes washing car windows, sorting through rubbish, and selling small goods.(4) These activities are dangerous, as children perform many of them in the middle of busy intersections and streets, and in extreme heat or during seasonal downpours without adequate clothing.(5) Lacking either birth or citizenship documentation, a large number of Roma remain unregistered, which means they are not entitled to receive social protection or child support.(6, 7) The rate of unregistered children appears to be related to the costs of registration and lack of information and awareness of the process.(5)

Although evidence is limited, young children reportedly work in agriculture.(3) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(8, 9)

Montenegro is a source, destination, and transit country for children trafficked for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Children are trafficked internally and externally from and to other Balkan countries.(10)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Law of 2008 establishes the minimum age for work at 15 and the minimum age for hazardous work at 18.(11, 12) The Labor Law prohibits hard physical labor and underground or underwater work, as well as any other activities that may have a harmful impact on or increase the risk to a child's health and life. The Labor Law also prohibits children under 18 from performing overtime and night work.(11, 12) However, employees between 15 and 18 are sometimes assigned to dangerous work at night if the nature of work requires a continuation of work that was interrupted by natural disasters or to prevent damage to raw and other materials.(13)

The Constitution calls for special protections for children against psychological, physical, and economic harm, and all other kinds of exploitation or abuse. Article 63 of the Constitution explicitly bans forced labor.(14) Article 446 of the Criminal Code prohibits any act that submits another person to slavery and that involves the transport of enslaved persons, penalizing such an act by imprisonment for a term of 1 to 10 years. If the offense involves a minor, the offender may receive a harsher punishment of imprisonment for a term of 5 to 15 years.(15)

Articles 209 and 210 of the Criminal Code prohibit pimping and procurement of a child for sexual acts and the recruitment, sale, and incitement of persons for the purposes of prostitution. The Criminal Code stipulates greater penalties for those who perpetrate this act against children.(15) Article 444 of the Criminal Code explicitly bans the trafficking of minors for the purposes of labor, commercial sexual exploitation, forced prostitution, forced begging, and pornography.(15) In 2012, the Government amended this Article to include provisions on the criminalization of exploitation related to slavery and entering into an illicit marriage.(16) Other amendments include new regulations to treat a Trafficking in Persons victim's consent to exploitation as irrelevant and to consider it an aggravated offense for a public official to commit a crime during his official duties.(16) Article 211 of the Criminal Code prohibits using, procuring, or offering a child for the production of pornography or pornographic performances. However, that particular article applies only to children who have not reached the age of 14.(15, 17)

The Law on Labor Inspection empowers labor inspectors to suspend or shut down employers who commit gross violations of labor laws.(18) An amendment to the Labor Law authorizes labor inspectors to issue monetary penalties for violation of labor provisions, including the employment of minors.(11)

The Law on Juvenile Justice, which is separated from the law for adults, provides for assistance to underage victims of crime.(6, 19)

The Government adopted Amendments to the Law on Foreigners that permit foreign nationals who are victims of trafficking, including minors, to temporarily stay in Montenegro for humanitarian reasons.(19) Furthermore, the Government ratified the European Convention on the Compensation of Victims for Violent Crimes and adopted a draft law to establish a national mechanism for the compensation of victims of violent crimes in 2011.(19) In December 2012, the Government convened a round table meeting during which a draft law was presented and discussed.(16)

The Government does not require mandatory military service and the minimum age for voluntary recruitment is 18.(20) However, the Government retains the law that permits or could result in mobilization of children under 18 in national armies in the event of war or other emergencies.(21)

Article 75 of the Constitution stipulates that education is free and compulsory for children until age 15.(14, 22)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Council for Children's Rights is the main body for coordinating and implementing the National Plan of Action for Children.(3, 23) The Council for Children's Rights consists of the President of the Council; the Minister of Labor and Social Welfare; and other relevant ministries, agencies, and NGOs.(24) Reportedly, the Council met only once during the last reporting period and the issue of the worst forms of child labor was not discussed during that meeting.(3)

The Labor Inspectorate, formerly within the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare, is responsible for enforcing child labor laws.(23) The Labor Inspectorate was transferred to become part of the new Inspection Administration, which is an independent body, in June 2012. The Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare is still responsible for the protection of children's rights and child labor cases are still referred to the Ministry and the police for further consideration.(3)

The Inspection Administration employs 35 inspectors who are responsible for monitoring working conditions in workplaces throughout the country.(3, 24) For the purpose of conducting and planning inspections, the Ministry regularly provides the Labor Inspectorate with an updated registry of companies, enterprises, and legal entities that are subject to taxation.(23, 25) In 2012, the Inspection Administration carried out 12,154 labor inspections. Although 8,359 violations were found, none involved child labor.(3)

In 2012, two inspectors from the Inspection Administration received a week of specialized training on trafficking in persons for labor exploitation.(3) During the reporting period, the Government did not provide any child labor related training because it was not considered a problem.(3)

The Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator is the major entity responsible for overseeing efforts to combat human trafficking, including the trafficking of children.(3) It regularly reports on the progress being made concerning these issues.(19, 23) Forced begging cases are the responsibility of the Ministry of Interior, the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare, and the National Office for Combating Human Trafficking.(3)

The government agencies involved in enforcing anti-trafficking laws include the Chief State Prosecutor; Montenegrin courts; the Ministry of Internal Affairs and its Police Directorate; as well as the Ministries of Health, Justice, Labor and Social Welfare, and Education.(3, 19) Anti-trafficking efforts within the Police Directorate are led by the organized crime department.(19, 26) The Government has established a unified system for collecting data on law enforcement through the Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator. The Montenegrin courts, the Chief State Prosecutor, and the Police Directorate contribute information to this database.(26)

During the reporting period, the Chief State Prosecutor filed charges against one person for human trafficking that involved two minors and seven adults. One more minor girl was trafficked from Montenegro to Serbia, but was returned by the Serbian government.(16) The Government offered assistance and shelter to all victims.(16)

Police continued with Operation Beggar in 2012.(25) The law prescribes fines ranging from $650 to $1,970 or 60 days in prison for organizing, inciting, or forcing others to beg.(25) There were 79 children caught begging, but charges were not filed against anyone for forcing children to beg in 2012.(25)

Generally, the police inform parents of children who are caught begging. Otherwise, children are referred to a shelter and afterwards to local social welfare centers.(25) It is unclear whether these children returned to begging.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

While the Government does not have a child labor policy, it has adopted several policies that serve vulnerable children. The National Plan of Action for Children promotes and protects children's rights in the areas of social services, child protection, health services, education, and other areas relevant for their protection.(3) During the reporting period, the Government adopted a 2012-2016 Strategy for the Improvement of the Position of Roma and other minorities in Montenegro.(3) The Strategy is the plan for the Decade of Roma Inclusion 2005-15.(25) The Ministry for Minority and Human Rights is responsible for the implementation of this strategy.(3) Among other topics, the Strategy addresses issues such as Montenegro's legal framework, education, employment, child protection, housing, and participation in public life.(3) The Government appropriated $614,000 during 2012, however there were no significant measures to advance the Strategy.(25)

In 2012, the Government, with assistance from UNICEF and UNDP, developed and adopted the Action Plans for the Country Program 2012-16.(6) The Program aims to address disparities and gaps in access to quality social services for children and families to conform to UN standards; harmonize the country's legal framework with EU and UN standards; implement and monitor policies relevant to child-focused governance and social inclusion; apply the principles and standards of the Convention on the Rights of the Child by using national and local authorities; and facilitate independent monitoring.(6, 27)

The Government adopted a new 2012-18 National Strategy for Combating Human Trafficking and the corresponding Action plan for its Accomplishments.(3) The coordinating body for the implementation of this Strategy, which includes a focus on child trafficking, is the National Office for Combating Human Trafficking. The Strategy focuses on prevention and education; the identification, assistance, protection, and reintegration of victims; efficient prosecution; international cooperation; and coordination and partnership.(3) The question of whether the above policies have had an impact on the worst forms of child labor remains unanswered due to their recent adoption.

Montenegro

The Government of Montenegro is currently implementing the Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection for 2008-12. The new Strategy for 2013-17 is being drafted.(13) The main objectives of the Strategy are building an integrated social and child protection system by developing efficient service networks and building capacity.(13) More specifically, the social protection called for in the Strategy includes monthly social assistance, health care, and child allowances conditioned on school attendance. There were approximately 20,000 children benefitting from family and child allowances.(13) Older children who are registered as unemployed are offered employment through re-training services and additional training.(13) For better protection of children without parents, the Government adopted the Strategy for the Development of Foster Care along with the Action Plans for the Country Program 2012-16.(13)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator continues to fully fund the shelter in Podgorica, an expense which accounted for approximately 50 percent of the total budget of $182,000. Each victim receives $10 per day at the shelter.(16) The Government has a national mechanism to identify and refer victims of trafficking to shelters.(16)

Research suggests that the Government also supports social welfare centers that provide social, child, and family protection. Foreign citizens are entitled to one-term financial assistance and the right to be assigned a guardian.(16)

prosecutors, and law enforcement officials.(16) The Government participated in the Council of Europe campaign against childhood violence, “One of Five,” which addressed children vulnerable to different forms of exploitation, including trafficking, begging, and forced marriage, among other forms.(16) Despite this awareness-raising effort and the trafficking victims’ shelter in the capital city, there is no evidence of other services provided for children involved in the worst forms of child labor in street work and forced begging.

The Ombudsman’s Office, together with an NGO, contributed to drafting a regional report on child begging issues.(25)

The Government, along with the European Commission, UNDP, and UNICEF, implemented the project “Social Welfare and Child Care System Reform: Enhancing Social Inclusion” under the Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection for 2008-12.(13) The project began in January 2011 and is expected to continue until June 2013.(13) It is unknown how this project has impacted the worst forms of child labor.

Under the Law on Social and Child Protection, the Government allocated approximately $76 million to the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare for monthly social assistance, child support, personal disability, institutional care, and the care and assistance of other persons.(13, 25) The impact of these actions on the worst forms of child labor is currently unknown. All social protection programs aim to protect at-risk children from economically disadvantaged families; children with physical, mental and sensory disabilities; abused and neglected children; orphans; and children with behavioral disorders.(13)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Montenegro:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend Article 211 of the Criminal Code to ensure that children up to age 18 are protected from the use, procurement, or offering of a child for the production of pornography or pornographic performances.	2011, 2012
	Prevent employees between 15 and 18 years of age from being assigned to work at night.	2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Organize more frequent meetings of the Council for Children's Rights to discuss and coordinate government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor or to establish another body to coordinate such efforts.	2012
	Ensure that children removed from the streets are not placed in the position to re-enter into begging.	2012
Policies	Evaluate the impact the Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection for 2008-12 has had on the worst forms of child labor.	2012
	Fully fund and implement the National Strategy for the Improvement of the Position of Roma and other minorities in Montenegro.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Make survey results and data related to Roma children and other children involved in the worst forms of child labor publically available.	2011, 2012
	Assess the impact of the Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection on children found in the worst forms of child labor.	2012
	In cooperation with NGOs, address the cost of social programs and strengthen efforts to provide access to information about how to register and apply for social protection programs.	2012

In 2012, Morocco made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government provided specialized training to labor inspectors on child labor; committed funding for projects in several regions, including projects to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in handicrafts and commercial sexual exploitation; implemented programming on trafficking of girls; and conducted research on children working as domestic servants in Casablanca. In addition, the Government began Phase II of the National Initiative for Human Development (INDH), a community-based poverty alleviation program designed to enhance the lives of vulnerable families and children, and continued to invest in education in rural areas through the cash assistance program, Tayssir. Despite these efforts, the Government lacks a coordinating mechanism to combat all worst forms of child labor. Children in Morocco continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in hazardous activities in agriculture and domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Morocco are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, primarily in hazardous agricultural and dangerous activities in domestic service.(3-6) Activities in agriculture may include using dangerous machinery and tools, carrying heavy loads, and applying harmful pesticides.(7, 8) The Moroccan High Commission for Planning's annual labor surveys have indicated a steady decline in the incidence of child labor over the decade.(4, 9-11) However, this data were not analyzed prior to the release of this report and are not included in the data table above.

Young girls in Morocco are sometimes sent to work as live-in domestic servants, often before they reach age 10 and sometimes as young as age 6.(5, 12-15) Intermediaries typically recruit girls upon the request of a potential employer; they sometimes deceive parents into believing their daughters will be treated well.(14) Most often, parents receive payment of wages in exchange for their daughters' service.(6, 14) These petites bonnes (little maids) often face conditions of involuntary servitude including long hours without breaks; physical, verbal, and sexual abuse; withheld wages; and even restrictions on their movement.(6, 14, 15) Frequently, they are sent from rural villages to more urban areas. Most petites bonnes are denied an education, and illiteracy rates are high among this population.(13)

Children work in construction, and may also work cutting trees and tanning hides.(4, 16-18) Limited evidence suggests that children in Morocco are engaged in fishing.(16) These children may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(19, 20) Some boys are subject to involuntary servitude as apprentices for mechanics and artisans and in the construction industry.(6, 15)

Some children are found in commercial sexual exploitation.(10, 15) Limited evidence suggest that child domestic servants are particularly found in these activities, as domestics who flee their employers frequently end up on the streets.(21) Children, primarily boys, are exploited for sex tourism, often in Tangier, Agadir, and Marrakech, which are popular tourist sites that attract customers from the Persian Gulf and Europe.(22, 23) Children are also trafficked to countries in the Middle East and Europe for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(15)

Morocco

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(18, 24)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code of 2004 establishes the minimum age for employment at 15 and prohibits night work for children age 15.(25) However, the Labor Code exempts certain types of agricultural work from this prohibition, potentially exposing any children involved in this exempted agricultural work to hazardous labor. Since children 16-17 are not prohibited from agricultural night work, they may also potentially be exposed to hazardous labor.(25)

Under the Government's hazardous child labor list, certain activities, such as work in underground mines and tanneries, and agriculture work involving the use of pesticides and sharp blades, are prohibited for children under age 18.(26) The Labor Code's prescribed penalties for employing children under age 18 in hazardous work include fines or jail time between 6 days and three months. According to the ILO Committee of Experts, the fines imposed on companies for employing children are inadequate to act as an effective deterrent.(27) The Government is further refining and expanding this hazardous child labor list, to better protect minors. The revised list is expected to be issued in 2013, but as of the writing of this report had not yet been adopted.(10)

The Labor Code does not apply to those who are self-employed, work in private residences (including domestic workers), or work in traditional artisan or handicraft sectors for businesses with less than five employees.(12, 25, 27)

The Government of Morocco has made progress on the adoption of a law to increase protections for domestic workers. Over the reporting period, the Government strengthened the draft bill on domestic workers originally proposed in 2011, to bring it closer to conforming to ILO Convention 189 on Domestic Workers.(10, 28) In July 2012, the latest iteration of the draft law was submitted to the General Secretariat for adoption.(10) However, the overhaul of the legislative system since the adoption of the new Constitution in July 2011 has delayed the passage of the law to protect male and female domestic workers until other vital laws are in place.(14, 29, 30) If passed, the law would prohibit the employment of children under 15 years of age as domestic servants and determine the working conditions, terms, and conditions of employment for those between the ages of 15 and 18.(27)

A draft bill to clarify article 4 of the Labor Code regarding child labor in traditional artisan or handicraft activities, submitted to the Secretary General of the Government of Morocco for approval in 2011, remains under review by the recently elected government. (17, 29) The draft bill would apply the minimum age of 15 in the Labor Code to traditional activities and would also regulate apprenticeships in the sector.(10, 17)

Forced or compulsory child labor is prohibited in the Labor Code and Penal Code.(25, 31) The commercial sexual exploitation of children, including pornography and prostitution, is also prohibited under the Penal Code.(10, 31) The Penal Code specifically forbids sex tourism.(31) Morocco does not have a specific trafficking in persons law, but child trafficking is prosecuted using articles from the Penal Code and the Immigration Law.(10, 31, 32) During the reporting period, the Government drafted a revised Penal Code to include further anti-trafficking provisions.(10, 33)

Morocco does not prohibit the use, procurement, or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.(34)

The minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is 18, and there is no military conscription.(35)

Education is free and compulsory for children aged 6 through 15.(30, 36) Secondary school and rural-based enrollment rates remain low, particularly among girls.(10, 29, 36, 37)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of Morocco has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.

The Ministry of Social Development, Family, and Solidarity (MOSDFS) coordinate the implementation of the National Plan of Action for Children (PANE) (2006-2015).(10) The Plan, which includes activities to combat child labor in domestic work and on the streets, is administered through a technical committee in cooperation with other ministries.(3, 10, 17) Over the reporting period, the PANE technical committee analyzed the results of the project's first phase, which ended in 2011, and began to draft an action plan for phase 2, which should be available later in 2013.(10)

The Child Labor Task Force, headed by the Director of Work under the Ministry of Employment and Professional Training (MOEPT), enforces child labor laws.(3, 10) The MOEPT has 51 labor inspector focal points nationwide to carry out the implementation of labor legislation, particularly the provisions regulating the worst forms of child labor. These inspectors received child labor training of up to 14 weeks from ILO-IPEC and further child labor training through an international agreement with Spain.(6, 10) During the reporting period labor inspectors found and removed 2,089 children under 15 years old from child labor.(38) Information is not available regarding the specific penalties imposed on these employers found to be in violation of child labor laws. Stakeholders, including the Government, indicate that inspectors lack adequate finances and manpower to adequately monitor and enforce the labor code.(6, 10)

The Ministry of the Interior (MOI) is responsible for enforcing the Penal Code's prohibitions on prostitution and trafficking, including minors.(3) Morocco has a specialized group of 3,171 judicial police officers dedicated to children's issues and child units within the courts designed to help child victims.(10) In addition, the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) prosecutes criminal offenses against children, such as commercial sexual exploitation of children and child trafficking. Over the reporting period, the MOJ organized training roundtables on trafficking and victim identification for judges, judicial police officers, and representatives of civil society.(10, 33) The MOJ held sessions at its children's units to review procedures and protocols for dealing with trafficking cases. In addition, the National Observatory for Children's Rights continued to operate a toll-free telephone number available to children who have been victims of violence, including sexual exploitation.(10)

Information on the number of cases involving sexual exploitation and trafficking investigated or prosecutions carried out was not available. However, over the reporting period, the courts handed down some of the toughest sentences to date, including a 10-year prison sentence for a Moroccan woman charged with the assault of a child domestic worker, which resulted in the child's death.(14) A Spanish retiree living in Morocco was convicted on charges of commercial sexual exploitation and child pornography, for which he received a 30-year sentence.(10, 33)

MOSDFS continues to implement activities as prescribed in the first phase of PANE (2006-2015). PANE calls for efforts to promote children's health, protection, civic participation, and education.(3, 10, 17, 18)

Over the reporting period, MOSDFS developed a new child protection strategy (2012-2016) that pools together child protection mechanisms from different organizations and government agencies. Before finalizing the new strategy, government representatives from different ministries are analyzing information from the first phase of PANE to determine best practices and what further mechanisms are needed to alert authorities to violence against children, including those involved in child labor.(10, 30, 39)

The Government has initiated several education policy initiatives in order to increase enrollment rates in its schools, most recently through the $3 billion Educational Emergency Plan (EEP) (2009-2012).(10, 40) The program successfully increased the enrollment rates of children into primary schools, even in rural areas; however, the number of children dropping out of school after primary education remains high, and the system still struggles with the provision of quality education to meet all of the needs of the school-going population.(10, 29, 36) Despite increasing enrollment and completion rates, access barriers remain at the secondary level, especially for girls, including long distances to schools and the lack of reliable transportation.(3, 41) Under a United Nations Development Assistance Framework involving several UN agencies, the Government began implementing a new anti-poverty action plan (2012-2016) that addresses education, health, and socio-economic development. Budgeted at $32 million, the plan includes a focus on equal access to education for vulnerable children.(42)

Morocco

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, Morocco participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on the Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Morocco, the project aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(43)

The Moroccan High Commission for Planning conducts annual labor surveys, which includes the collection of data on the number of children under age 15 who work.(11, 30, 44) The most recent data, from 2011, shows a steady decline in child labor over the decade.(9, 44) Nonetheless, the survey does not take into account child labor in the informal sector or domestic work. Furthermore, the survey lacks a breakdown or further analysis of the number of children between the ages of 15 and 18 working in the worst forms of child labor.(3, 4, 9)

The MOSDFS launched a survey on the domestic work of girls in Casablanca during the reporting period. The results and publication are due for release in early 2013.(29)

In December 2012, the Minister of Employment and Professional Development (MEPD) signed an agreement with eight Moroccan NGOs to continue providing services to children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in the country. The MEPD committed $180,000 for 2013.(11, 45) In addition, the Ministry of Handicrafts launched a child labor project in Fes (2012-2013) and in Marrakech on child labor in the handicraft sector. The $46,000 Ministry of Handicrafts project in Marrakesh aims to remove children under 15 from child labor and reintegrate them into school and to improve the conditions of working children between the ages of 15 and 18.(11, 46)

Over the reporting period the MOSDFS put out a solicitation to grant $1 million for programs that served child victims of sexual exploitation, street children, and other child workers in the regions of Agadir, Oujda, and Tangier.(47) MOEPT provided alternative certificates of completion to former street children who enrolled in and finished a course on animal husbandry and farming techniques, and also ran awareness campaigns on the dangers associated with child domestic labor in Oujda, Tangier, and Fez.(10, 30, 48)

The King's INDH is Morocco's first program that allocates significant resources directly to communities based on poverty and social exclusion criteria, which includes child workers and those vulnerable to work. Building on the first phase (2005-2010), the Government is investing nearly twice as many resources to phase two (2012-2015) of INDH.(49, 50)

The program reaches out to the most vulnerable, including those in far reaching rural areas, through better access to basic services, such as schools; enhanced income-earning opportunities, such as micro-credit for women; and improved participation at the local level, to assure sustainability. During phase one, the project succeeded in reducing the school dropout rate for the 6-15 year old cohort by about 6 percent.(10, 49, 50)

The Taysir program, managed by the Ministry of National Education (MONE) aims to increase school enrollment and reduce dropout rates, particularly in the rural areas, by awarding stipends amounting to between $7 and $16 a month to qualifying families provided the children meet school attendance criteria.(10, 17, 51) Over the 2011-2012 school year, 406,000 families received monthly financial allowances that enabled them to keep their children enrolled in school.(10, 52) During the reporting period the program succeeded in reducing public school dropout rates among its beneficiaries by 68 percent and in increasing school enrollment by 10 percent.(10, 52)

MONE manages additional education activities, such as the "one million school bags" program, which reached more than 4 million children during the 2011-2012 school year.(10, 30) A MONE subsidy gives girls from isolated areas of Morocco who were previously unable to attend school due to the cost of schooling and safety issues the opportunity to attend schools while residing in school dormitories.(53) During the 2011-2012 school year, the program reached 119,868 children.(10) The Government also continues to run an alternative education program to allow school dropouts the opportunity to reenroll in school. The program has enrolled a number of working children, including child domestics.(10)

The Government oversees numerous child protection centers for victims of violence, neglect, and sexual exploitation. Child Protection Units (CPUs), managed through the PANE project and based in Casablanca, Marrakesh, Tangier, Meknès, and Essaouira, provide temporary shelter for these children and offer medical, legal, and psychological services and service referrals.(10, 36) The CPUs have also served children employed in domestic work.(14) Additionally, over the reporting period the Government's National Observatory for the Rights of the Child operated 75 Child Reception Centers that provided services to child victims of violence, sexual abuse, or neglect.(10)

The Childhood Division of the Ministry of Youth and Sport manages Child Protection Centers (CSC) that provide social and educational services to minors referred by the courts.(54, 55) The minors served at the centers are victims of abuse or legal offenders, which include child domestics and street children. The goal of the program is to strengthen the children's ties with their families and with society.(54, 55)

The Government cooperates with the UN on a $32 million program (2012-2016) that aims to create a more protective and fair environment for vulnerable children in Morocco through improved access to equitable and quality education and health services; an enhanced protection mechanism for vulnerable children exposed to abuse, exploitation, and violence; and a coordinated programmatic response at the local policy level to issues related to the rights of children and adolescents.(42, 56)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Morocco:

Laws and Regulations	Ensure that children 15-18 are protected from involvement in dangerous agricultural work at night.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Approve legislation to protect domestic workers from dangerous work and to prevent children under the legal working age from working in domestic service. Also approve legislation to prohibit children under the legal working age from employment in the handicraft sector and to regulate apprenticeships in traditional sectors.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend legislation to increase the penalties for those who employ children under age 18 in hazardous work.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to specifically and comprehensively combat the worst forms of child labor.	2012
	Publish information on the number of investigations and prosecutions and the amount of penalties imposed for violations of child labor and child trafficking laws.	2012
	Increase funding and number of inspectors employed under the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training.	2012

In 2012, Mozambique made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Council of Ministers approved the new National Plan of Action for Children (2013–2019). The Ministry of Labor trained provincial labor inspectors on child labor, which included material on national and international child labor laws. The Government began preparing the National Plan for Eradication of Child Labor to be presented jointly with the members of the Community of Lusophone Countries at the Global Conference on Child Labor in 2013. However, a number of gaps remain in Mozambique's legal framework. There is no list of hazardous activities prohibited to children and the prohibitions on child prostitution are incomplete. Current social protection programs focus on raising awareness and on street children, but fail to address sectors in which children engage in dangerous work. Children in Mozambique continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including dangerous activities in agriculture and domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Mozambique are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous work in agriculture and domestic service.(3-8) The largest number of children work in the Inhambane region.(9)

Children working in agriculture work on farms and small plots known as machambas. Limited evidence suggests some of these children produce cotton, cashews, copra (dried coconut meat), seaweed, tea, and sugar.(3, 5, 6, 10-13) Children also work in the production of tobacco.(6, 13) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(5, 14, 15) Limited evidence suggests that children in agriculture often work with no pay and that there are cases of children used as laborers to pay off family debt.(16-19) Some children in Mozambique are subject to debt bondage.(4, 17-21) Children also work in the forestry sector.(12) Children working in forestry may be exposed to falling from ladders and trees, extreme temperatures, and hazardous chemical substances.(22)

Children in Mozambique perform domestic labor in third-party homes.(6, 7, 10, 13, 23-25) Some domestic servants work up to 15 hours per day and may be subject to physical abuse, including burns.(3, 7, 26, 27)

Children in Mozambique herd livestock. Children herding livestock may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(28, 29) Limited evidence indicates that children are involved in fishing.(3, 6, 12) These children may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(30, 31)

Mozambique

Mozambique is a source, destination, and transit country for child trafficking.(11, 18, 19) Children are trafficked internally and to South Africa for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in agriculture, mines, and domestic service.(17, 18, 32-39) Girls from Zimbabwe, Zambia, and Malawi are trafficked to Mozambique for commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic service.(4, 8, 18, 40-45) Commercial sexual exploitation is especially prevalent in rural areas, border towns, and in the regions of Maputo, Beira, Napula, Tete, and Nacala.(4, 7, 8, 34, 46-50) There are reports of children working on the streets but specific information on hazards is unknown.(4, 7, 23, 47, 51-54)

Access to education in Mozambique is limited because of teacher shortages, indirect schooling costs, and the lack of schools and sanitation facilities.(4, 11, 20, 48, 53, 55, 56) The Government of Mozambique estimated in 2011 that nearly 200,000 school aged children were out of the school system.(57) Despite government efforts to provide birth registration to children, some children may not attend school because they do not have the birth records needed for enrollment.(49, 58, 59) Even though the National Organization of Professors established a code of conduct, verbal, physical, and sexual abuse is common in schools. It is also common for teachers to demand sex as a condition for advancement to the next grade.(7, 60) For many children, especially girls, this type of abuse leads to withdrawal from school.(4, 7, 8, 11, 20, 58, 60) Additionally, there are an estimated 900,000 orphaned children in Mozambique, many of whom lost their parents to HIV/AIDS.(21, 57, 61, 62) The Government of Mozambique estimates that nearly 20,000 children are heads of households and are responsible for their younger siblings.(57, 63) As a result, these children are particularly vulnerable to poor school attendance and engagement in the worst forms of child labor.(4, 7, 61)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Law establishes the minimum age for employment at 15 and the minimum age for hazardous work at 18. Article 3 of the Labor Law covers a number of special and noncommercial sectors, such as work in the home, domestic service, and work in rural areas, among others, but only “insofar as it is suited to their particular nature and characteristics.”(64) The provision makes it unclear if the Ministry of Labor (MITRAB) has the authority to inspect in these noncommercial establishments.(6, 25) Although Article 259 of the Labor Law gives inspectors authority to enter any establishment, in practice, cases of labor violations are discovered through investigations rather than inspections.(16) During the reporting period MITRAB offered training to provincial labor inspectors on child labor and national and international laws regarding child labor.(25)

Children between ages 12 and 14 may work with written approval by their legal representative. (6, 64) These children are issued legal documents establishing the conditions under which they are allowed to work and must undergo a prior medical examination.(6, 64) The Labor Law also restricts the conditions under which minors between ages 15 and 18 may work. Minors under age 18 are not permitted to work in unhealthy, dangerous, or physically taxing occupations.(64) The Labor Code prohibits children between ages 15 and 18 from working at night.(64, 65) The Labor Code does not specifically identify hazardous activities from which children are prohibited.(4, 6, 7, 21, 66)

The Constitution guarantees the right to education for all.(67) The Child Protection Act provides for free and compulsory education through primary school.(65) However, evidence suggests these goals have not been met.(11, 56, 58) Primary school covers a period of 7 years and begins at age 6, making education compulsory until the age of 13.(6, 20, 68) This standard makes children ages 13 to 14 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are under the minimum age to work.(6) Additionally, although the Child Protection Act was passed in 2008, the procedures and regulatory frameworks to put the law into practice have not yet been implemented.(11)

The Constitution prohibits forced labor.(67) The Law on Military Service sets the age for military conscription at age 18, which can be lowered in times of war.(69, 70) Act 3/97 prohibits the use of children in the transport and sale of illegal drugs.(21)

While the Child Protection Act does not directly provide children protection from sexual exploitation, it requires the Government to adopt legislation protecting children from all forms of sexual exploitation. However, legislation has not yet been adopted to meet this requirement.(4, 65)

Article 405 of the Penal Code establishes penalties for the prostitution of a minor, which include imprisonment and a fine.(8, 71) Children are protected from exposure to pornographic materials and acts, under article 64 of the Children's Code, which provides sanctions, although unspecified, for inciting, coercing, abusing, using, or procuring of minors for prostitution or any other illicit sexual activity.(4, 7, 8, 65)

The Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Law forbids international and domestic trafficking for forced labor, prostitution, slavery, involuntary servitude or debt bondage.(16, 72, 73) Despite the lack of implementing regulations, there were police and prosecutorial enforcement actions, prosecutions, and convictions including 16 ongoing investigations carried into 2012.(10, 12, 16, 58, 74-76) However, information on TIP cases did not identify the number of cases involving children.(16) (21, 35) Implementing regulations would clarify the roles and responsibilities of the ministries involved in anti-trafficking efforts.(76)

The Government is in the process of revising the Penal Code and provisions to protect children from all forms of trafficking are expected to be included.(4, 21, 24, 75)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Government of Mozambique does not have a specific mechanism to coordinate policies on the worst forms of child labor. However, the National Council on the Rights of the Child (CNAC), an interagency commission led by the Ministry of Women and Social Action (MIMAS), coordinates efforts to promote the welfare of children.(12, 17) The Council is comprised of religious and civil society representatives and the Ministries of Labor, Justice, Education, Health, Interior, and Youth and Sports.(3, 4, 10, 12, 58, 77)

MITRAB is responsible for the enforcement of child labor laws in an operating environment that is accepting of child labor as a response to poverty or the death of parents due to HIV/AIDS.(3, 10, 78-80) Within MITRAB, the Labor Inspection Office employs 130 labor inspectors who primarily inspect commercial establishments.(3, 10, 12, 25) In 2012, MITRAB had a budget of $40,000 for child labor-related issues.(81) This office routinely lacks resources to conduct inspections.(3, 10, 12) Information was not found on the type of inspections nor what kind of labor law violations were detected.(12, 17, 82) There is no mechanism in place for the public to report labor law violations.(3)

The National Police Force, the Criminal Investigation Branch (PIC), and the Labor Inspectorate General (LIG) share responsibilities for the enforcement of all criminal laws, including forced child labor, child trafficking, the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children for illicit activities.(3) The Government of Mozambique has special gender-sensitive police units.(3) In addition, the PIC has a seven-person unit devoted to anti-trafficking. Further, there is a system in place for reporting instances of the sexual exploitation of children.(3, 4, 10, 12, 40, 76) A telephone hotline Speak Child-116 was established in 2009 to report cases of child abuse and exploitation.(83) Between January and March 2012, the hotline registered 366 cases, of which 51 were referred to the police, 45 to the Women and Children Victim Assistance Unit (GAMC), and 33 to the Family Council.(84) The Government also maintains approximately 215 help desks where trafficking victims can go to police stations to file complaints and receive assistance.(16, 40, 75, 81) In addition, there are twenty Victims of Violence Centers run by the GAMC that can provide temporary shelter to children who have been victims of trafficking.(81) However, evidence suggests the Government lacks procedures to identify victims of child trafficking as well as services for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 48, 85) Despite these efforts, the Ministries of Justice and Interior, including the police and the LIG, have insufficient financial and human resources to improve their effectiveness in enforcing laws pertaining to children.(6, 12, 58, 81, 82)

Mozambique

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Council of Ministers approved the second National Plan of Action for Children (PNAC II) 2013–2019 during the reporting period.(81, 86) The four key priority areas are: child survival, child development, child protection, and child participation. The PNAC II establishes 13 goals which include an increase in birth registrations, access to education, decrease in child marriage, and an increase in participation of children in social protection programs. Efforts under the PNAC II are coordinated by the CNAC.(81, 86)

During the reporting period, the Government continued to support and implement several policies that include components to combat child labor in Mozambique. The National Action Plan on Birth Registration aims to clear away a backlog of birth registrations and to strengthen and decentralize the birth registration system nationwide.(11, 61) The Strategic Plan for Education and Culture (2006-2010/2011) aims to ensure primary education is free and compulsory through higher primary school (grades six and seven) and to improve post-primary education.(87) The Plan also proposes to increase access to education for female students, support the construction of new schools, and encourage the training and recruitment of teachers.(87) The Employment and Professional Training Strategy (2006-2015) aims to raise awareness of, and disseminate information on, labor laws, including the laws pertaining to the worst forms of child labor.(55, 77)

In 2009, the Government adopted the Strategic Plan of Action on Combating Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children in the Southern African Development Community (SADC).(11, 77) The Government and civil society representatives also form part of the Southern African Regional network against Trafficking and Abuse of Children (SANTAC).(44)

During the reporting period, the Government of Mozambique made efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. It continued partnerships with NGOs to provide anti-trafficking seminars for new police officers throughout the country.(12) Anti-trafficking training now forms part of the regular training curriculum for new officers. Mozambique's Center for Judicial Training included a session on trafficking that was provided to 50 judges.(12, 82) Furthermore, 20 Mozambican judges were trained in Brazil and produced an electronic manual on TIP.(12) Despite these efforts, the Government of Mozambique has devoted limited resources for assisting trafficking victims, including a lack of safe houses and no formal referral system.(4, 12, 19, 76, 82)

In 2012, Mozambique participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Mozambique the project aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(88) Additionally, the Government continued to participate in a 2-year $500,000 USDOL-funded project that assisted participating countries in developing a National Plan for Eradication of Child Labor and promoted south-south cooperation between Lusophone-speaking countries for the purpose of eliminating worst forms of child labor.(89, 90) During the reporting period, the Community of Portuguese Speaking Countries (CPLP) met jointly with the ILO to discuss progress and planning for the Global Conference on Child Labor to take place in Brazil in 2013, and produced a documentary regarding child labor in the member countries.(91-93)

The Government continued to partner with civil society organizations to provide a reintegration process for street children. The program provided shelters and schooling to prepare children for reintegration.(4) Minors, who are head of households, receive small amounts of cash from the Government until age 18. The cash disbursements amount is determined by household size.(82)

Government officials received training from UNICEF on the use of radio broadcasts to communicate to the public about issues of child abuse, including child labor.(3) The Government of Mozambique is also participating in a 10-year UNESCO Literacy Initiative.(21) The impact of this Literacy Initiative on child labor has yet to be assessed.

The Government is not currently involved in social programs to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in sectors where the majority of children work such as in agriculture and domestic service.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Mozambique:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the Labor Law to identify hazardous activities from which children are prohibited.	2009,2010,2011,2012
	Raise the age of compulsory education to be consistent with the minimum age for employment.	2009, 2010,2011, 2012
	Ensure children under age 18 are prohibited from military conscription in all circumstances.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the revised Penal Code and Child Protection Act to include protection for all children from all forms of sexual exploitation, including child prostitution, child pornography, child trafficking, and child sex tourism.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Adopt implementing regulations for the Trafficking in Persons Act and the Child Protection Act.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Clarify whether MITRAB has the authority to conduct labor inspections in non-commercial establishments.	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Create a mechanism to coordinate policy and efforts on the worst forms of child labor.	2010,2011,2012
	Allocate sufficient resources to MITRAB to conduct inspections.	2009, 2011, 2012
	Ensure the Labor Inspection Office targets sectors where children are known to work, including agriculture.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Create mechanisms to identify victims of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.	2011, 2012
	Use the provisions from the Child Protection Act prohibiting sexual exploitation to prosecute those involved in sexual exploitation of children	2012
	Make information publicly available on the sectors in which inspections were carried out and sanctions imposed for child labor violations.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Ensure the National Plan of Action for Children (2013–2019) has the resources necessary for implementation.	2012
	Take measures to ensure children, particularly girls, have access to quality education and safety in schools, including prosecuting teachers who demand sex with students as a condition for advancement.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing educational and other policies may have on child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Develop social protection programs that assist children working in sectors such as agriculture, domestic service and for victims of trafficking.	2010, 2011,2012
	Assess the impact of the UNESCO literacy program on child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Namibia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government published the Plan of Action on Gender Based Violence (2012-16), which includes comprehensive recommendations to combat trafficking; established the National Agenda for Children (2012-2016) to guide various sectors in the protecting of child rights; and abolished the requirement that forces parents to contribute to primary school development funds. Gaps remain in existing laws regarding child prostitution and the use of children for illicit activities, passage of the draft Child Care and Protection Bill is still pending, and resources for enforcement are insufficient. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Namibia, primarily in agriculture and domestic service.(3-6) Children in Namibia herd and tend to cattle. Although evidence is limited, there are reports that children also herd sheep and goats.(4, 5, 7) Children herding livestock may be at risk of snake bites, animal-borne illnesses, long hours in the heat, and abuse.(8) Children's work in agriculture may involve unsafe activities, such as using dangerous tools, carrying heavy loads, and applying harmful pesticides.(9, 10)

Girls, and to a lesser extent boys, are engaged in sex work in Namibia.(6, 11, 12) Although evidence is limited, it is reported that girls from Angola, Zambia, and Zimbabwe are involved in commercial sex work within the country.(6)

Some children in Namibia work as domestic servants.(6, 11) Children working as domestic servants may work long hours for little to no pay and be exposed to physical, psychological, and sexual abuse.(13, 14)

There are reports of children being used by adults to commit crimes that include drug trafficking and stealing, in particular, cattle theft.(6, 15-17)

Although the extent of the problem is unknown, children in Namibia are trafficked within the country for domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation. Children from the marginalized San ethnic group are particularly vulnerable to this type of exploitation.(11, 18) There are also reports of children being trafficked for livestock herding.(14, 17-22)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Act sets the minimum age for work in Namibia at 14. Children between the ages of 14 and 18 are prohibited from hazardous and harmful work; night work; and work in mining, construction, and other specific forms of dangerous labor. Children between the ages of 14 and 18 are also prohibited from working on premises that may put their health; safety; and physical, mental, spiritual, moral, or social development at risk, except if the Minister of Labor and Social Welfare puts forth regulations permitting such work.(6, 23) The Constitution outlaws the economic exploitation of children less than 16 years of age and prohibits their employment in work that would interfere with their education or that is likely to harm their physical health or mental, spiritual, moral, or social development.(24) A list of hazardous work activities for children has been finalized and submitted to the Tripartite Labor Advisory Council for its consideration and to the Minister of Labor and Social Welfare for recommendations.(25)

The Constitution and the Labor Act prohibit slavery and forced labor and provide penalties for violators.(23, 24) The 2004 Prevention of Organized Crime Act prohibits and criminalizes all forms of domestic and international trafficking in persons, including the recruitment, harboring, transportation, transfer, and receipt of persons.(6, 18) The Combating of Immoral Practices Act and the Children's Act of 1960 prohibit parents, guardians, or those possessing custody of a child from offering the child for prostitution.(11)

The Government, in collaboration with civil society, has drafted a Child Care and Protection Bill to specifically address child trafficking and other crimes including prostitution, pornography, and the use of children for illicit activities. The Child Care and Protection Bill is with Parliament for review and consideration.(6, 11)

The Labor Act explicitly allows labor inspections of private farms.(26)

Namibia does not have military conscription and the Namibian Defense Force Personnel Policies set the minimum age for voluntary military service at age 18.(27)

The Constitution mandates free and compulsory education for all children, beginning at age 7 and continuing until the child has completed primary school or reached the age of 16, whichever is sooner.(24) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Education (MoE) abolished the requirement that forces parents to contribute to their child's school development fund. This requirement had previously been a barrier to some children's ability to attend school.(17, 28, 29)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Although worst forms of child labor issues are handled by the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MLSW), in conjunction with the Ministry of Home Affairs and Immigration; Namibian Police (in particular its Women and Child Protection Units [WACPU]); Ministry of Gender, Equality, and Social Welfare (MGECW); and MoE, research found no evidence that the Government of Namibia has established a formal coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor. The ministries coordinate their efforts through the WACPU (regional offices that house police, social workers, legal advisors, and health workers) and regional Child Care and Protection Forums led by local councils and also containing participation from civil society.(6) The Tripartite (workers, employers, and the Government) Participatory Advisory Committee on Child Labor (PACC) comprises several government ministries, businesses, trade unions, and international organizations; it is responsible for sharing information and coordinating government responses to child labor concerns. The PACC, established under a USDOL-funded regional child labor project, is supposed to meet quarterly; however, the Committee has not met since the regional project ended in June 2012.(4, 6, 30, 31)

The Government has several interministerial groups that coordinate its trafficking efforts. The MGECW coordinates a group to draft trafficking legislation.(11) During the reporting period, an interministerial group on border and migration issues was established by the Ministry of Home Affairs and Immigration. Trafficking is one of eight main topics being addressed by this group.(11) In addition, regional councils throughout the country convene interministerial Child Care and Protection Forums on a quarterly basis that include discussions about trafficking.(11)

The MLSW is the main agency responsible for enforcing child labor laws and investigating allegations of child labor law violations, including those involving forced labor. MGECW is responsible for cases involving trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(6, 14) MLSW inspectors work together with the Ministry of Safety and Security (WACPU and Criminal Investigations Division), MGECW, Namibia Central Intelligence Service, and the MoE on child labor matters.(4, 6, 14) The MLSW leads these ministries in joint inspection teams and manages the Permanent Joint Child Labor Inspection Committee.(6, 14) Children removed from child labor situations during inspections may be brought to a regional WACPU to receive assistance from MGECW social workers or to an MGECW shelter, six of which exist throughout the country.(6)

The Labor Inspectorate employed approximately 40 labor inspectors during the reporting period. Although none of the labor inspectors were child labor specialists, they were all trained to identify and manage child labor violations, and to look for these violations when conducting routine inspections; however, MLSW and MGECW officials report that additional training is needed.(4, 6) MLSW officials report that its funding is sufficient to carry out inspections and investigations in areas where child labor has been reported, but while child labor inspections have increased significantly over the last 4 years, funding for additional inspections, including spot inspections, is insufficient. The MLSW lacks the budget, transportation, and personnel necessary to conduct frequent and comprehensive inspections throughout Namibia's vast, remote, and sparsely populated land.(6, 29) Inspections are reportedly carried out in all areas where work is performed. (32) However, inspectors sometimes have difficulty gaining access to large communal and family-owned commercial farms and to private households.(14, 26) NGOs report that difficulty accessing private farms makes addressing child labor challenging.(26)

During the reporting period, the MLSW conducted approximately 3,000 labor inspections, with a particular focus on agriculture. Six probable child labor violations in herding in communal areas were identified.(6) However, lack of age documentation prevented the MLSW from being able to prove the violations and issue penalties or citations. The MLSW instead issued warnings and instructed the cattle owners to return the children to their homes.(6)

The WACPU and Criminal Investigations Division enforce criminal laws and frequently conduct site visits with labor inspectors in the event a criminal case needs to be opened. The WACPU employ officers in 16 units around the country.(19, 30, 33) The MGECW leads anti-trafficking efforts for the Government and coordinates closely with the Namibian Police's WACPU.(6) The MGECW employs 62 social workers throughout the country, whose duties include providing counseling and referral services to victims of trafficking; it has also established six safe houses for survivors.(14, 19, 30, 33) The number of prosecutions and convictions for child labor violations during the reporting period is unknown.

Investigation continued into the case of two women in the area of Walvis Bay and Swakopmund who allegedly sold three minor girls for sex.(33, 34) The women are being held until their court date and the minors are being provided with counseling.(33)

Namibia's National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor ended in 2012 and a new plan has not yet been drafted.(6) During the reporting period, the Government released several national plans that include child protection concerns, such as National Development Plan Four (2012/2013-2016/2017) and the National Plan of Action on Gender Based Violence (2012-2016), which delineate comprehensive recommendations for combatting trafficking.(6, 35) The Government initiated the National Agenda for Children (2012-2016) in order to guide various sectors in protecting children's rights.(22) Child labor concerns are included in the Education for All National Plan (2001-2015) and the Decent Work Country Program (2010-2014).(3, 36-38) In addition, the MGECW is in the process of publishing Namibia's National Protection Referral Network, a chart indicating the flow of services for children experiencing any form of abuse.(39)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Namibia maintains a comprehensive government-funded social protection system that includes grants for orphans and children in foster care, as well as child maintenance grants for children whose parents have died, are on pension, or are in prison. Child welfare grants are administered by the MGECW.(6, 36)

The Namibian School Feeding Program continued to provide a mid-morning meal to about 270,000 schoolchildren throughout the country. The National Youth Service also continued to offer training in civic education, national voluntary service, and job skills to unemployed youth, some of whom have never attended school.(33) Lack of birth registration is an issue in Namibia. Unable to prove citizenship, some unregistered Namibian children lose access to school.(40, 41) During the reporting period, the Government of Namibia continued to make efforts to ensure that children are appropriately documented.(40) The Government, in coordination with UNICEF, has opened 21 hospital-based birth registration facilities and 22 subregional offices in rural areas.(41, 42) The impact of the above programs on the worst forms of child labor is unknown. The impact of the grants, school feeding program, and birth registration efforts on the worst forms of child labor has not been assessed.

The Government runs a toll-free hotline, operated by the Namibian Police, for reporting crimes, including child trafficking.(30) The Government has established six shelters for women and children to assist victims of sexual assault, gender-based violence, trafficking, and the worst forms of child labor.(6, 19) In addition, Namibia runs three “one-stop-shops” for victim protection. These facilities provide lodging, medical, and psychosocial care for victims. The Government also provides subsidies and funding to NGOs that assist victims of trafficking.(42)

During the reporting period, Namibia participated in a $4.8 million USDOL-funded regional project lasting 3 years and 9 months, to support the implementation of national child labor action plans. The project, which helped the Government of Namibia mainstream child labor issues into legislative and policy frameworks, ended during the reporting period.(6, 36, 43, 44) The project provided services to withdraw or prevent children from the worst forms of child labor, particularly in hazardous work in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation, with a special focus on children affected by HIV/AIDS.(31)

In 2012, Namibia participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries.(45) In Namibia, the project aims to build the capacity of the Government and to develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor. It also aims to strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(45)

While the Government implements programs to assist vulnerable children, its efforts do not target the worst forms of child labor in which some children work, namely domestic service, commercial sexual exploitation, agriculture, and herding.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Namibia:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Pursue the finalization and adoption of the hazardous worklist.	2012
	Continue to seek passage of revisions to the Child Care and Protection Bill to better address child trafficking, child prostitution, and the use of children in illicit activities.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Make efforts to convene the PACC on a regular basis or establish an alternative coordinating mechanism for efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2012
	Provide additional training to MLSW and MGECW officials on child labor issues.	2012
	Provide appropriate levels of personnel and vehicles to the Labor Inspectorate to carry out regular enforcement.	2011, 2012
	Make information available on the number of prosecutions and convictions related to child labor violations.	2012

Policies	Draft and adopt a new National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor.	2012
Social Programs	Develop programs to prevent children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor, namely domestic service, commercial sexual exploitation, and agriculture and herding.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing child assistance programs may have on addressing child labor.	2011, 2012

45. ILO-IPEC. Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues. Technical Progress Report. Geneva; April 2013.

In 2012, Nepal made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government conducted a raid on embroidery factories employing child laborers and rescued 124 children from exploitative labor. In addition, the National Children's Policy, which protects children from physical, mental, and sexual abuse as well as exploitation, was approved during the reporting period. However, the lack of compulsory education and legal protections for children ages 16 and 17 still leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Resources for enforcement are insufficient and data on enforcement are lacking. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in dangerous forms of agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Nepal are engaged in the worst forms of child labor. More than three-quarters of child laborers work in agriculture, which may expose them to occupational safety risks including dangerous machinery and tools, heavy loads, and harmful pesticides.(3-7) More girls than boys are subjected to exploitative labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, and many children work under informal work arrangements.(3, 8, 9)

Children also work in the production of bricks, spending long hours in dust-filled environments. They carry loads of bricks on their heads and suffer from back injuries.(10-12) Children are also found working in mining and stone breaking, which exposes them to dangers such as falling off steep hillsides, working in unstable tunnels at risk of collapse, and injuring their eyes and hands while breaking rocks.(11, 13, 14) In the construction sector, children operate heavy machinery and may face many dangers due to a lack of proper safety precautions.(11, 15, 16) Child rag pickers and recyclers in Nepal are exposed to sharp glass, metal objects, and dangerous chemicals. They work long hours in the early morning and late evening collecting items to recycle.(4, 17) Boys working on the street are sometimes subjected to sexual exploitation.(9)

Children endure unsafe conditions in the carpet sector, often inhaling harmful dust, using hazardous chemicals, and working in cramped spaces. Their duties can include wool spinning, thread rolling, wool dyeing, carpet weaving, edge trimming, and carpet washing.(18) With the global economic crisis, demand for Nepali carpets has decreased, and carpet factories have returned to using indentured child labor rather than adult labor to save money.(19) Children as young as 7 years old are also subject to working long hours in poor lighting and cramped working conditions in embroidered textile production.(11, 20, 21) Child porters carry heavy loads for long hours and are vulnerable to injuries.(12, 22) Children also work long hours in domestic service where they perform physically demanding tasks that can have harmful effects on their physical, mental, and social development and in shops and restaurants where they often work in small, unhygienic, and poorly ventilated workspaces. Other children work in the transportation industry where they face mental and physical abuse or the entertainment industry where they are sexually exploited.(11, 12, 16, 23-26)

Bonded labor exists in Nepal. Some children, called Kamaiyas, are born into a family legacy of bonded labor, while other bonded child laborers come from large, landless families.(20, 27) As bonded laborers, children work in carpet weaving, domestic service, rock breaking, brick manufacturing, and embroidery of textiles.(14, 15, 20, 27) Limited evidence also indicates that bonded child laborers are exploited as commercial sex workers.(27) Girls who are forced to work as household servants are sometimes sexually abused.(25, 28-30)

Nepali children are also vulnerable to being trafficked.(31) They are trafficked to India to work in various industries including the embroidery, leather, and garment industries. Some also work in domestic service or are forced to beg.(31-33) Limited evidence suggests that some children are also trafficked to India to work in circuses—although reports suggest that in recent years the number of children working in circuses has declined significantly.(34) Nepal is also a source country for children trafficked to India and the Middle East for commercial sexual exploitation. Internal trafficking occurs for commercial sexual exploitation and indentured work as domestic servants or factory workers.(14, 31, 35) Some children are trafficked for forced begging.(31)

Children continue to perform illegal tasks for criminal organizations.(36, 37)

Research indicates that not all children have access to education, which increases the risk of children engaging in the worst forms of child labor. Some rural villages do not have secondary schools, leaving children to walk for hours to attend classes.(38) The costs of teacher fees, books, and uniforms are prohibitive for many families. Some children, often girls, are not sent to school.(8, 39) In addition, children with disabilities face barriers to education, in some cases including denial of school admission.(40) A lack of sanitation facilities in schools also deters some girls from attending.(41)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Child Labor (Prohibition and Regulation) Act of 2000 establishes the minimum age for work at 14 and the minimum age for hazardous work at 16.(42) However, the Act does not cover nontraditional establishments in which many child laborers are found, including home-based enterprises and unregistered establishments in the informal and agricultural sectors.(3, 43, 44) The Act also establishes a list of occupations prohibited for children including tourism-related occupations such as working in hotels, restaurants, and bars.(41, 42) However, the minimum age for hazardous work is not consistent with international standards and fails to protect children ages 16 and 17 from work that could jeopardize their health and safety.

Nepali law also prohibits forced or compulsory labor. The Kamaiya Labor (Prohibition) Act of 2002 forbids keeping or employing any person as a bonded laborer and cancels any unpaid loans or bonds between creditors and Kamaiya laborers.(45) The Child Labor Prohibition Act of 2000 and the Children's Act of 1991 also prohibit forced labor and practices similar to slavery.(4, 42, 46) The voluntary military recruitment age in Nepal is 18.(47) In addition, the Interim Constitution prohibits the use of children in armed conflict.(48)

The Government of Nepal has laws against trafficking and against sexually exploiting children and involving children in illicit activities. The Human Trafficking and Transportation Control Act prohibits many, but not all, forms of trafficking in persons and prostitution and prescribes imprisonment for violations.(31, 34, 49) The Children's Act punishes persons who use children younger than age 16 in immoral activities, including taking pornographic pictures.(46, 50) This law also protects children younger than age 16 from involvement in “immoral professions” and in the sale, distribution, or trafficking of alcohol and drugs.(46) However, children ages 16 and 17 are not covered. These children may face criminal penalties if found participating in activities such as prostitution and the sale of drugs. Further, there is no prohibition against taking pornographic photographs of children ages 16 and 17.

Education is free for children between the ages of 6 and 12, but it is not compulsory.(28, 51, 52)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Steering Committee and a high-level inter-ministerial committee coordinate child labor eradication efforts. The National Steering Committee is headed by the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MoLE) and comprises other government departments, NGOs, employers, trade unions, and donors.(4, 5) According to MoLE officials, the Committee did not meet during the reporting period; however, in the absence of the National Steering Committee, an informal network of child labor stakeholders met regularly to provide feedback on activities under an IPEC project charged with supporting the implementation of the country's National Master Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor.(48, 53)

The National Human Rights Commission's Office of the National Rapporteur on Trafficking in Women and Children is responsible for monitoring the Government's response to trafficking and the effectiveness of its anti-trafficking policies.(4, 5)

MoLE is the primary national agency responsible for enforcing child labor laws.(4, 5) In fiscal year 2012-2013, MoLE's Department of Labor operated on a budget of approximately $235,300.(48) MoLE, which includes the labor inspectorate, budgeted for 10 inspector positions; however, not all positions are filled. MoLE officials report that this number of inspectors is inadequate.(48) Inspectors are tasked with handling all labor code violations.(5) Labor inspectors received basic training for enforcement in the formal sector, but they had insufficient guidance or protocols to effectively address child labor issues.(4, 5) MoLE does not maintain records on the number or types of labor inspections it conducts or the sanctions imposed. Therefore it is unclear whether child labor violations were found or any perpetrators were punished through the labor inspection process.(48)

At the local level, District Child Welfare Boards (DCWBs) have limited legal authority to enforce child labor laws and may issue civil fines.(15) These DCWBs are the entities that receive complaints of forced child labor violations. However, the Government of Nepal maintains no data on the number of cases reported.(15) MoLE reports that there is no official referral system for children removed from child labor, and coordination between agencies and NGOs providing rehabilitation services remains weak.(48)

In July 2012, the Bhaktapur District Administration Office, along with the police and NGOs, rescued 124 child laborers from embroidery factories in the Bhaktapur District. Police referred 39 factory owners to the labor office for employing children under age 14.(21) The Chief District Officer, the Women Development Officer, hundreds of police, and officials of the Ministry of Women, Children, and Social Welfare (MWCSW) collaborated with NGOs to accomplish this rescue.(54)

The Ministry of Land Reform and Management is responsible for enforcing laws that prohibit bonded labor in agriculture.(15) The Office of the Attorney General and the Ministry of Home Affairs are responsible for anti-trafficking enforcement.(5) The Nepali Police Force's Women and Children's Service Centers (WCSC) investigate crimes against women and children, including trafficking, at the district level.(4) There are 110 WCSCs throughout Nepal's 75 districts and 477 investigators.(48, 55) From July 2011 through July 2012, at least 118 trafficking cases were registered with police and 189 people were convicted for trafficking, although it is unclear how many of the victims may have been children.(34) However, MoLE officials indicate that the number of investigations and convictions for child trafficking is inadequate relative to the scope of the problem.(48)

The National Rapporteur on Trafficking and the Central Child Welfare Board are tasked with monitoring the enforcement of laws related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children at the national level.(4, 5) At the district level, Chief District Officers and Women Development Officers are responsible for enforcement.(5) Additionally, district-level monitoring and action committees investigate reports of commercial sexual exploitation, including the exploitation of children.(11) Limited evidence suggests the Nepal Police lack sufficient resources to investigate all possible trafficking cases.(56)

MoLE's National Master Plan on Child Labor 2004-2014 calls for eliminating the worst forms of child labor by 2009 and all forms of child labor by 2014.(57) The Plan identifies bonded child labor, rag-picking, portering, child domestic service, mining, carpet weaving, and child trafficking as the worst forms of child labor to be addressed.(58) The Government has been in the process of revising this Plan since 2009; it expects to unveil a new plan with a revised timetable (2011-2020) in 2013. Under this draft plan the goal is to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2016 and eliminate all forms of child labor by 2020.(4, 48, 53)

Over the reporting period, the ILO-IPEC continued to work with the Government to improve the policy and legal framework for child labor through the implementation of the National Master Plan.(53, 59)

In 2012, the Government approved the National Children's Policy 2012. This policy includes provisions for protecting children from exploitation and physical, mental, and sexual abuse.(54)

The Government's School Sector Reform Plan aims to expand access to education and to provide alternative schooling and

nonformal education to vulnerable populations.(4) Out-of-school children (which include child laborers) are the primary beneficiaries identified in the plan.(60) In 2012, the Ministry of Education continued to mainstream 189,000 out-of school children into school.(61) Research indicates that overall financial resources for education are still inadequate.(62)

The MWCSW sets standards for registering brick kilns. Each kiln must have a certified school for children of kiln workers to attend, distribute nutritious food, and provide decent living conditions.(63)

At the local level, Village Development Committees (VDC) and District Development Committees (DDC) have taken action on child labor. The DDC in Kavre committed funding to support livelihood opportunities for families of vulnerable children.(61) The municipality of Lalitpur also has a 5-year strategic work plan to protect child rights and reduce child labor, including a plan to implement a child labor monitoring system.(61)

The Government of Nepal has a National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking.(64) NGOs received limited funding to provide rehabilitation services, medical care, and legal services to trafficking victims.(4) In 2012, the MWCSW completed a review of this Plan and revisions were approved by the Council of Ministers.(65)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Nepal relies largely on donor funding for programs to address the worst forms of child labor. The USDOL-funded, 3-year, $4.75 million New Path New Steps Project runs through April 2013.(66) This Project provides new learning and employment opportunities for exploited and at-risk children and aims to withdraw 8,000 children and prevent 7,000 children from commercial sexual exploitation, domestic service, brick factories, mining, portering, and the embroidered textile sectors.(11) During 2012, the Project was instrumental in the embroidery factory raid that resulted in over 100 children being rescued.(54) The Project also conducted a 2-week long proposal and report writing training workshop for 20 partner NGOs, thereby facilitating sustainability of project efforts through building the capacity of local organizations. As a result of this training, participants have reported success in obtaining funding for future child labor elimination efforts.(54)

In 2012, the Government continued to participate in a $375,000, one-and-a-half year, Danish-funded ILO-IPEC project to support the implementation of the National Master Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor. The project worked with the Federation of Nepalese Chambers of Commerce and Industries to produce and air radio spots, and hold consultations, workshops, and focus group discussions targeting employer's organizations and the general public on the worst forms of child labor and the National Master Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor.(53)

The Government participates in a UN Interagency Rehabilitation Program to provide rehabilitation assistance to children formerly associated with the Maoist rebel forces. Each former child soldier can access rehabilitation and reintegration services.(37)

MoLE also supports several programs to reduce child labor. In addition to its annual funding, MoLE manages a Child Labor Elimination Fund, currently funded at $23,530; however, the fund is inactive because the Child Labor Elimination Commission has yet to be formulated.(48) The Ministry also manages the Child Labor and Rehabilitation Fund, currently budgeted at $117,650, which provided support to five daycare centers for children at risk of entering child labor in Kathmandu.(48) During the reporting period MoLE implemented two 1-year projects to provide educational opportunities to children at risk of child labor. One of these programs operated in Birtnagar and the other in Timi Municipality.(48) Together, these two small projects were funded by MoLE at approximately $27,000.(48) According to MoLE officials, these programs and the annual budget for implementing them were not sufficient compared to the size of the problem.(48, 67, 68)

The Government of Nepal continued to rescue and rehabilitate Kamaiya bonded laborers, some of whom are children, and provide them with land, home construction materials, and livelihood training.(28) The Government also participates in the Kamalari Abolition Project in which social workers work with former child bonded laborers to help others escape bonded labor and return to their families. Through this Project, girls are provided with shelter and vocational training.(25)

The Government supports several education programs that may increase access to education for vulnerable children. The Education Guarantee Scheme identifies out-of-school children, including child laborers, and financially supports the VDCs' plans to enroll them in schools.(69) This Scheme is budgeted for $1.2 million annually.(4) The Government also collaborated with the World Bank to implement a cash transfer program and a school feeding program in several districts that target out-of-school youth.(4) One local district education office operates a dormitory for Chepang children, a disadvantaged indigenous group. The school provides free food and lodging for 40 children per year.(38)

The MWCSW supports 15 emergency shelters for victims of abuse, including child victims of trafficking and 8 NGO-run homes for female trafficking victims and victims of domestic violence and sexual assault.(31) However, there is a lack of standard guidelines for the care and support of child victims in these centers, and funding is limited.(68) Border police at 10 of the 26 Nepal-India border crossings work with a local NGO to intercept girls being trafficked out of Nepal. On average, police report 20 suspected trafficking victims are identified each day.(56)

In 2012, the release of budgeted government funds for all programs was delayed due to the lack of a parliament after May 2012.(52) This jeopardizes the sustainability of ongoing programs and may also negatively affect child labor programs.(70)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Nepal:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend laws so that they are in line with ILO Convention 182 by <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Extending protections in the Child Labor Act to include children working in home-based enterprises and nonregistered establishments in the informal and agricultural sectors. • Raising the minimum age for entry into hazardous work from 16 to 18. • Defining a child as any person younger than age 18 and ensuring that all children are equally protected under laws that prohibit the worst forms of child labor. 	2011, 2012 2009, 2010, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Make primary education compulsory to ensure children are attending school and are therefore less vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors and devote more resources to enforcing child labor laws.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide inspectors with adequate guidelines and protocols to effectively inspect establishments for child labor violations.	2011, 2012
	Enhance data collection and ensure data available on the worst forms of child labor include <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Complaints/reports on child labor made to the DCWBs aggregated at a national level. • Records on type of labor inspections the MoLE conducts and sanctions imposed on violators. • Data collected identifying the number of child trafficking victims. 	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Institute a referral system to ensure coordination between enforcement agencies and NGOs providing rehabilitation services to children removed from child labor.	2012
	Provide additional resources for the Nepal Police so that they are able to pursue those engaged in child trafficking.	2011, 2012
Policies	Finalize the draft National Master Plan on the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor 2011–2020 and allocate sufficient funds for implementation.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase financial resources committed to implementing the School Sector Reform Plan.	2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Social Programs	Put in place the Child Labor Elimination Commission to manage programs under the Child Labor Elimination Fund.	2012
	Increase financial resources for and ensure a timely release of funds budgeted to child labor reduction programs.	2011, 2012

Nicaragua

In 2012, Nicaragua made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established a National Plan of Youth Employment (2012-2016) and expanded its Youth Employment and Migration program to protect working adolescents and increase their employment opportunities. It also expanded programs to improve livelihoods for families and eliminate child labor in stone quarries. Nicaragua was one of the first countries to ratify the ILO Convention on Domestic Workers. Labor inspectors have authority to inspect working conditions of domestic workers. However, the Government's enforcement of labor laws in agriculture is still inadequate due in part to resource constraints. Plans to combat child labor and protect children have not been fully implemented, and programs are insufficient to reach the numbers of children engaged in hazardous child labor in agriculture and victims of commercial sexual exploitation.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Nicaragua are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, especially in hazardous work in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.(2-6) Children work in hazardous conditions producing crops such as coffee, bananas, tobacco, and African palm.(7-13) Children have been found working in dangerous conditions in the production of oranges, rice, and sugarcane, although the extent of the problem is unknown.(2, 7, 8, 10, 12) These children often carry heavy loads, use dangerous tools, and are exposed to hazardous pesticides and fertilizers.(7, 8)

Children also work long hours risking injury in tasks such as breeding livestock, crushing stone, extracting pumice, mining for gold and collecting shellfish.(2, 7, 8, 10, 12, 13) Children are employed as domestic servants in third-party homes in which they may face long hours and are often subjected to abuse.(2, 3, 15, 16) Some children engage in construction, which may expose them to intense heat and dangerous machinery.(7, 13, 17) Children may also work as bus drivers' assistants, often riding precariously on the exterior of vehicles or entering and exiting moving vehicles.(6, 13) Children work as street vendors and street performers at traffic lights, which may expose them to multiple dangers, including severe weather, vehicle accidents, physical and psychological risks, and crime.(2, 8, 12, 13, 16, 18, 19) Some children work as garbage scavengers and are exposed to toxic substances.(2, 8, 13, 20, 21)

Children in Nicaragua are exploited in commercial sexual exploitation, and although the information is limited, child pornography has been reported as a problem.(2, 6, 22, 23)

Nicaragua is a source and transit country for minors trafficked for sexual exploitation.(5, 6, 22, 24) Some children are trafficked within Nicaragua for sex tourism, which is reportedly on the rise, and to work as domestic servants.(6, 22) Persons without legal identification documents are at an increased risk of trafficking, and UNICEF has indicated that more than one-third of Nicaraguan children have not been formally registered with the Government.(2, 25) Children from poor rural areas, especially girls, are among the most vulnerable to trafficking. The victims are often deceived with promises of good jobs and then forced into commercial sexual exploitation in urban areas or neighboring countries.(6, 23) The Government reports that trafficking is a significant problem and that trafficking victims and brothel owners are linked to organized crime.(6, 26, 27) The Government has stated that the lack of economic opportunities, increased regional trade, semi-porous borders, and the development of communications technology have been factors contributing to the recruitment of children and youth into commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking.(28)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code sets the minimum age for employment at age 14.(29, 30) Children ages 14 to 16 must have parental permission and be under the supervision of the Ministry of Labor (MITRAB) in order to work.(2) Minors are prohibited from engaging in work that may interfere with their schooling or that endangers their health and safety, such as work in mines, garbage dumps, and night entertainment venues.(29) The law imposes fines for violators and allows inspectors to close establishments employing children.(2, 31) The Labor Code requires employers of adolescent domestic workers under age 18 to facilitate and promote their education.(29, 32)

MITRAB maintains an updated list of types of work that are harmful to the health, safety and morals of children, applicable to both the informal and formal sectors. The list prohibits children under age 18 from working in mining and manufacturing or engaging in activities with exposure to toxic substances or that interfere with schooling.(13, 33) The Childhood and Adolescence Code prohibits the use of children in illicit activities.(30) MITRAB issued regulations specific to the 2011-2012 coffee harvest prohibiting children under age 14 from working, protecting adolescents of legal working age, and ensuring minimum wages.(34, 35) In October, Nicaragua became one of the first countries to ratify ILO Convention No. 189: Decent Work for Domestic Workers, which addresses issues such as working conditions, wages, and child labor in the sector.(36)

In October 2012, the National Assembly approved a law to simplify, modernize, and streamline the public administration of labor justice, including child labor cases. The new law aims to improve the labor justice process by addressing complaints in a timely manner without sacrificing due process for employers and workers.(37)

The Constitution prohibits forced labor, slavery, and indentured servitude.(2, 38) The Constitution was amended in 1995 to prohibit compulsory military service. The minimum age for voluntary entry into the armed forces is 18.(16, 39)

The Penal Code establishes penalties related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including for the procurement or recruitment of children under age 18 for prostitution.(40) Promoting, filming, or selling child pornography is prohibited.(40) The Penal Code also prohibits trafficking of persons and imposes increased penalties for trafficking of individuals under age 18.(40)

The Constitution requires compulsory education through primary school, which is about age 15.(38) The Constitution establishes the right to free primary education, but associated school costs prevent some children from attending school.(11, 21, 38, 41-43)

Nicaragua

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

MITRAB's National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Young Worker (CNEPTI) has been the primary institution that sets the priorities on child labor policy.(44) CNEPTI consists of a consortium of government agencies and NGOs that address child labor issues in the country through awareness-raising strategies and coordination of direct action programs.(31, 44) The Labor Code designates CNEPTI to receive the revenues from fines issued for child labor violations and to use them to raise awareness and protect minors.(45) However, it is unclear if CNEPTI remains the primary entity responsible for coordinating overall efforts to address child labor. Since 2009, the directive board of CNEPTI has convened only once in conjunction with the 2010 launch of the Roadmap for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(12, 16, 17, 33, 34, 46-50) The National Social Welfare System (SNBS) requires government institutions to protect the rights of children and adolescents.(51) Under the SNBS, Program Love (Programa Amor) is responsible for the protection of the rights of children and adolescents at risk, including those involved in street work, and their families. The program is overseen by First Lady Rosario Murillo, in coordination with the Ministries of Government, Family, Health, Education, and Labor.(26, 42, 51-53) Child labor experts have indicated that coordination between Program Love, CNEPTI, and MITRAB has been weak.(12, 16, 17, 33, 34, 46-48)

MITRAB's Inspector General's Office is responsible for all labor law inspections, including those on child labor.(12, 17, 51) MITRAB's Child Labor Inspections Unit conducts training on child labor for inspectors. It also is charged with ensuring that child labor issues are integrated into labor inspections and works with the Nicaraguan National Police (NNP), the Ministry of Family, and the Human Rights Attorney for Children to enforce child labor laws.(12, 17, 31, 32) The Ministry of Family and NNP administer a general hotline to report on the welfare of children, including reporting on trafficking and exploitation of children.(12, 16, 17)

In 2012, MITRAB had 90 labor inspectors whose responsibilities included investigating for child labor violations.(12, 16, 17) Government officials and child labor experts have reported that child labor inspections throughout the country, and especially in agricultural areas, are limited due to resource and personnel constraints.(16, 17) From January through June 2012, MITRAB conducted 2,546 child labor inspections, which was a notable increase from 761 during the same time period in 2011.(16, 17) During the first 6 months of 2012, MITRAB identified 178 child labor infractions by employers, affecting 3,543 children.(16, 17) MITRAB reported that of the children found during these inspections, it removed 759 children from work, including from hazardous conditions, which was an increase from 148 children during the same time period in 2011.(16, 17) However, no information on fines associated with these child labor violations was publicly available.(16) In addition, although labor inspectors have the authority to enter private homes to monitor the working conditions of child domestic workers, research found no information on those types of inspections in practice.(54)

The Ministry of Governance is responsible for combating trafficking in persons, operating an anti-trafficking in persons unit, leading the National Coalition against Trafficking in Persons (NCATIP) and supporting a national protocol to repatriate children and adolescents who have been victims of trafficking.(16, 23, 27, 51) The NCATIP consists of government ministries, civil society organizations, and international NGOs, which aim to detect, prevent, protect, and rehabilitate trafficking victims.(27) Nonetheless, a 2009 evaluation of a USDOL-funded project found that institutional weaknesses in some of the agencies that participate in the NCATIP could hinder the effectiveness of the protocol.(55, 56) Research found no evidence to indicate whether these weaknesses have been addressed.

The Public Prosecutor's Office has two national-level prosecutors and 35 department-level prosecutors who handle cases of child exploitation, including child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illegal activities.(12, 16, 17) The NNP also has three units that address cases of human trafficking, including child trafficking. These units are the Police Intelligence Unit, which is responsible for detection; the Special Crimes Unit, which is responsible for investigation; and 54 Women's Commissions, which are responsible for prevention and protection.(6, 16, 17) In 2012, the Government closed three businesses in the City of Granada because of trafficking and sexual exploitation of minors.(16)

In 2012, the Public Prosecutor's Office prosecuted 24 trafficking cases and reached convictions in 14 of those cases; 17 child victims were involved in those cases.(16, 24) Prosecution began in October for a case of trafficking of three minors for sexual exploitation.(16) The Ministry of Family is responsible for providing care to child trafficking victims and has a unit specifically to address trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(51) During the reporting period, 30 child trafficking victims were referred to the Ministry of Family for social services.(16) Although the Government provides shelter and other services to some child trafficking victims, current services do not appear to be sufficient to assist the majority of child trafficking victims in Nicaragua. Instead, international organizations and NGOs are the principal service providers assisting trafficking victims.(6, 16, 17)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government's Roadmap for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor sets the goal of eliminating the worst forms of child labor by 2015.(16, 34, 48) The Government's current efforts to address child labor support the goals of the Roadmap, although an action plan to implement the broad goals of the Roadmap has not yet been issued.(47, 48, 50)

Data on child labor were collected in 2010 for the National Survey on Child and Adolescent Labor to better understand the country's current child labor situation.(57) However, data had not yet been released as of the end of the reporting period.(16)

The Government of Nicaragua prioritizes assistance for children and adolescents who work in stone quarries, mines, and in African palm cultivation through its Plan of Integrated Attention.(51, 58) The Plan involves coordination among several national ministries and local municipalities to identify the current situation of child labor and to design a plan of action to restore the rights of working children and adolescents for education, recreation, health and nutrition, and to promote better livelihoods for their families.(51, 58, 59) In addition, during the reporting period, the National Commission of Youth Employment established a National Plan of Youth Employment (2012-2016) to eliminate child labor and protect the rights of working adolescents.(58, 59)

The Government provides special protections for victims of commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking in persons through its Policy on Special Protection for Children and Adolescents.(60) As a member of the Central American Parliament Commission on Women, Children, Youth and Family, the Government is participating in a regional Plan to Support the Prevention and Elimination of Human Trafficking and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents.(60) The Government oversees the implementation of the 10-year National Action Plan for Children and Adolescents, which supports children's rights.(61)

There are other national plans that include provisions that may have an impact on child labor. The National Program for Decent Work in Nicaragua (2008-2011) supports efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015 and includes specific provisions for assistance to CNEPTI and the National Commission against Commercial Sexual Exploitation.(41) Additionally, the Government of Nicaragua's poverty reduction strategy incorporates policy actions to eradicate child labor through the provision of comprehensive care and education.(16, 17, 50, 62) Despite this progress, the Government has not fully developed action plans to implement the above policies and programs.

The Government has adopted the UN Millennium Development and Education for All Goals, with an aim to meet them by 2015. With support from the World Bank and USAID, the Government's poverty reduction strategy has contributed to improved educational access, attendance, and quality in primary schools.(62-65) However, access to secondary education is more limited, primarily due to school costs and the need for youth to work to support themselves and their families.(21, 43, 62, 66) The ILO Committee of Experts indicated in 2009 and 2011 that secondary schools have not been targeted as a priority and secondary school attendance remains low—increasing the risk of older children's engagement in exploitative work.(22, 67)

In August 2012, the Government of Panama hosted the Meeting of Labor Ministers of Central America, Belize and the Dominican Republic to highlight good practices and lessons learned.(68-70) At the meeting, the Ministers signed the Panama Declaration committing themselves to specific actions by country to eradicate the worst forms of child labor.(71-73) MITRAB highlighted its programs in coffee plantations and stone quarries to address child labor as a good practice and its intent to continue expanding these programs.(71, 74)

Nicaragua also is a member of the Regional Conference of Migration, which implements an Action Plan with a special focus on child migrants and their repatriation.(75, 76)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Ministry of Family has 23 departmental offices and 7 district offices in Managua that provide at-risk children and adolescents with educational and recreational opportunities.(51) The regional project, Primero Aprendo (First, I Learn), originally funded by USDOL and currently supported by the European Union, promotes the eradication of child labor through access to quality education, in support of Nicaragua's Roadmap to Eliminate Child Labor.(77)

Nicaragua

The Government of Nicaragua has been collaborating with the private sector and civil society to eliminate hazardous child labor in the coffee sector and to achieve a child-labor free coffee harvest in the Department of Jinotega.(78-80) The Coffee Harvest Plan aims to develop a comprehensive approach to assist children whose parents work in the coffee harvest and improve educational opportunities for children on coffee plantations.(16, 22, 59, 74, 81) MITRAB and the Ministry of Education support the Educational Bridges (EB) program that provides education to children of coffee workers to prevent child labor during the coffee harvests.(47) The EB program was expanded in the 2011-2012 harvest, which included training an additional 60 EB facilitators and guiding improvements of EB venues at 40 coffee farms.(47) The Ministry of Education's School Passport pilot program provides migrant children continuity in their education so that they stay in school instead of work. The pilot program monitors internal migration and education in 13 municipalities that have significant school attrition rates.(47)

During the reporting period, MITRAB expanded a program in support of the Plan for Integrated Attention that aims to reduce child labor in stone quarries through improved livelihood opportunities for families. The Government reported removing 334 children and adolescents from stone quarrying and assisting 155 families in Chinandega, El Rama and El Bluff.(16, 17, 47, 59, 74, 82) The initiative provided the families of those children with training and equipment to generate self-employment.(51)

The Government of Nicaragua participates in a 4-year, $8.4 million regional project funded by the Government of Spain to eradicate child labor in Latin America.(50) In February 2013, La Chureca garbage dump in the City of Managua was permanently closed and a recycling plant was opened in its place through a $50 million project funded by the Government of Spain. This project also created a school and houses for the 258 families who used to find their subsistence in the garbage dump.(83-85)

Program Love targets 25,000 street children and their families, primarily in Managua, and aims to provide education for children and vocational training for parents.(26, 42, 52, 53) A 2012 technical progress report stated that in the reporting period, Program Love assisted 20,000 working children by integrating them into schools and other initiatives.(50) However, there are varied reports about the program's effectiveness.(16, 17, 86, 87) The Ministry of Education and Sport implements a national literacy and education campaign for children and young persons excluded from the educational system.(42)

The Government of Nicaragua also supports a Youth, Employment, and Migration Program that seeks to reduce the need for migration by improving vulnerable youth's access to employment opportunities.(88, 89) In the reporting period, more than 22 additional municipalities joined the program and pursued strategies that facilitate employment and self-employment for youth between the ages of 15 and 24.(59, 62, 88-91) The Government reported that in 2011, 970 adolescents and 1,183 mothers as heads of households completed pre-employment courses provided by the National Technological Institute.(51, 92) However, the impact these programs may have on child labor is unknown.

The Government supports a birth registration campaign in some areas of Nicaragua to facilitate access by undocumented children to social services and reduce their vulnerability to trafficking; however, the campaign is not nationwide, which leaves many children without the record of birth certificates needed to access basic social services.(46, 93)

Despite these efforts, current programs do not appear to be sufficient to address the extent of the worst forms of child labor in Nicaragua, particularly in the production of shellfish, pumice and agricultural products, such as African palm. The Government has identified the need to extend strategies to reach more children who work in other sectors, such as rice and African palm.(2, 17, 51, 78, 80)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Nicaragua:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Clarify the role of CNEPTI in coordinating government efforts to reduce child labor and ensure that progress toward this goal, including the forthcoming action plan, is monitored on a regular basis, including by convening more frequently.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Publicly report on the enforcement of the law on adolescent domestic workers, which includes the employers' obligation to ensure the education of adolescent workers.	2011, 2012
	Dedicate more human and financial resources to the enforcement of child labor laws, in particular, in agriculture, such as hiring and retaining more labor inspectors.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Report fines imposed for child labor violations.	2012
	Enhance coordination and information sharing among actors involved in child labor issues and anti-trafficking campaigns.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Finalize and begin implementation of a concrete action plan to reach the objective of eliminating the worst forms of child labor by 2015.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Develop strategies and devote resources to improve attendance in secondary education.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Make publicly available the results of the latest national child labor survey.	2012
Social Programs	Expand birth registration programs nationwide in order to ensure that children have access to basic services.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Dedicate greater resources to expand services that assist child trafficking victims.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the effectiveness of Program Love on reducing the worst forms of child labor and publicize its results in order to inform future efforts.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Expand programs to address the worst forms of child labor to more sectors in which exploitative child labor exists, such as shellfish and African palm.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact of the Youth, Employment and Migration Program and the National Technological Institute's pre-employment program on reducing child labor.	2011, 2012
	Apply good practices and strategies used to eliminate child labor in the coffee sector to other sectors, including raising awareness and partnering with business owners to eliminate child labor in their production processes.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Niger

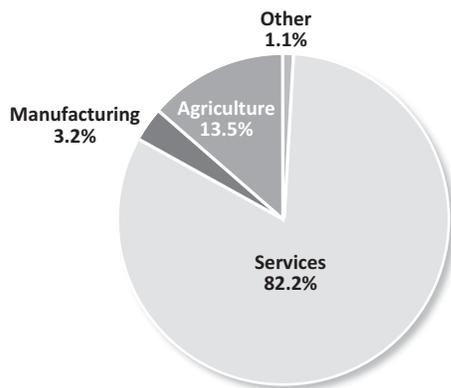

In 2012, Niger made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government secured a number of child trafficking convictions, passed a new Labor Code that criminalizes the exploitation of children in prostitution, incorporated child labor concerns into its new Social and Economic Development Plan, and continued to participate in programs to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, gaps remain in the country's legal framework and implementation of policies. Enforcement efforts and programs are still insufficient. Children in Niger continue to be engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous activities in the agriculture and mining sectors.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Niger are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in the agriculture and mining sectors.(3-7) Children engaged in agriculture are commonly involved in dangerous activities, such as using sharp tools, carrying heavy loads, and applying harmful pesticides.(8, 9) Limited evidence suggests that the worst forms of child labor are used in the production of peppers and rice. Children in rural areas also herd cattle and, although evidence is limited, also, goats; they are exposed to long working hours and severe weather conditions.(5, 10) Limited evidence also suggests that children are engaged in fishing, and in this sector, they may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(7, 11, 12)

Children work in dangerous conditions in mines and quarries, including in the production of trona, salt, gypsum, and gold. They break rocks, transport heavy loads, and extract, process, and hoist ore.(7, 13-22) Limited reports suggest that children also work in natron mining.(23) Risks in the mining sector include exposure to mercury, suffocation, and death from cave-ins.(13, 19) Girls working near the mines commonly deliver food and water to workers and risk harassment and sexual exploitation.(10, 24, 25) While evidence is limited, research indicates that children also work in stone quarries, crushing rocks and carrying heavy loads.(17)

There are reports of children working on the streets in urban areas, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(22, 26-28) Some children work in tanneries.(4) Children, especially girls working in domestic service, are vulnerable to working long hours, as well as physical and sexual harassment.(3, 6, 27)

A 2011 results report on the 2009 National Child Labor Survey implemented by the Government's National Institute of Statistics estimates that 55,000 children (or 3 percent of children) are engaged in forced labor.(29, 30) For example, among nomadic populations, traditional forms of caste-based servitude still exist in parts of Niger, especially among the

Tuareg, Djerma, and Arab ethnic minorities, and particularly in remote northern and western regions, and along the border with Nigeria.(10, 31, 32) Traditional forms of caste-based servitude commonly involve children of slaves who in turn become slaves, and are passed from one owner to another as gifts or as part of dowries.(10) Slaves, including children, are typically forced to work long hours as shepherds, cattle herders, agricultural workers, or domestic servants, and are often sexually exploited.(32, 33)

In Niger, children are engaged in forced labor under the traditional practice of wahaya. Under wahaya, a man may take a girl as a “fifth wife,” meaning as a slave (according to Islamic practices, men are allowed to have only four wives).(17, 34-36) Children of wahaya wives are considered slaves as well. Both are often forced to perform domestic labor in their master’s household. Wahaya wives are commonly sexually exploited by their masters, while their children reportedly are sexually exploited by others.(17, 34, 35, 37) The practice of wahaya is common among Tuareg and Hausa communities in the Tahoua region.(17, 34, 35) Reports suggest that this practice may be increasing as a result of poverty due to droughts, while the practice represents a source of income for some families.(38)

Reports note the ongoing traditional practice of sending boys (called talibés) to Koranic teachers to receive education, which sometimes includes provision of vocational training or apprenticeship.(39, 40) However, some of these boys are forced by their teachers to beg on the streets and surrender the money they have earned, or perform agriculture and domestic labor.(7, 10, 17)

Limited reports suggest that girls are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation along the main east-west highway between the cities of Birni-N’Konni and Zinder along the Niger-Nigeria border.(10, 36) Niger serves as a source, transit, and destination country for children trafficked for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(17) Children are trafficked internally for forced labor in mines, agriculture, begging, domestic service, and commercial sexual exploitation.(26, 41) Children from Benin, Nigeria, Togo, and Ghana are trafficked to Niger for exploitative labor on the streets as menial laborers.(26, 41) Nigerien children are trafficked to work as beggars or manual laborers in both Nigeria and Mali.(41, 42) Nigerien girls are reportedly trafficked to countries in West Africa and the Middle East under the auspices of marriage for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation.(17)

Due to the conflict in Mali, more than 24,000 Malians and Nigeriens residing in Mali crossed the border into Niger during the year. The country also experienced flooding and cholera outbreaks.(43, 44) The situation was compounded by ongoing food shortages in the Sahel region, where Niger faced a nationwide cereal shortage.(45-52) Reports suggest that to cope with economic decline, many families pulled their children out of school and into child labor. The Government’s Ministry of Education estimates that more than 47,000 children left school during the year as a result of the food crisis.(44, 45) Furthermore, the lack of school infrastructure in Niger places children at risk of entering the workforce at a young age and being exploited in the worst forms of child labor.(13, 53)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The 2012 Labor Code sets the minimum age for employment at 14, including for apprenticeships.(54) While children ages 14 to 18 may work a maximum of 4.5 hours per day, the law also requires that no child or apprentice be employed in work that exceeds his or her strength.(10, 55) In addition, the law allows children between the ages of 12 and 13 to perform nonindustrial light work, including domestic work and fruit picking and sorting, for up to 2 hours per day.(10) However, light work requires a labor inspector’s authorization, must take place outside school hours, and must not harm the child.(10) The law does not explicitly include protections for children involved in domestic service and street work.(40, 55, 56)

Decree No. 67-126/MFP/T of September 1967 establishes the minimum age for hazardous labor at 16, and prohibits children from performing hazardous work with saws, explosives, chemicals, and in underground mine work, among others.(54, 57, 58) The Labor Code and Decree do not address related safety concerns such as requiring training, instruction, supervision, or other necessary protections for this group of workers, as called for in ILO C. 138.(57, 58) The Labor Consultative Council is currently reviewing the September 1967 decree—the regulations section implementing the Labor Code—in order to make it compliant with the 2012 Labor Code.(59)

Children in Niger are required to attend school until age 18 according to the Law on the Orientation of the Educational System in Niger.(59) Despite the legal guarantee of free education under the Law on the Orientation of the Educational System, some primary school fees continue to be charged, and the cost of books is prohibitive for many families.(60-62) Furthermore, the Government failed to implement teacher pay increases, which resulted in teacher strikes and the loss of education for children during some of the year.(63) However, reports suggest that the Ministry of Education will likely extend the school year to make up for the time the students missed.(59)

The new 2012 Labor Code prohibits the use of children in illicit activities and pornography, the recruitment and offering of children for prostitution, and all forms of forced and bonded labor, including slavery.(54) The 2006 Penal Code also specifically prohibits inciting a person to beg—however, such acts are categorized only as a misdemeanor and may be punished by a fine and up to 1 year of imprisonment.(16, 64, 65) According to the ILO Committee of Experts, the law is not enforced.(66)

In March 2012, the Government adopted and implemented decrees for its 2010 Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons, which protects children from recruitment and harboring in instances of trafficking.(63, 67) Traffickers of children may also be prosecuted under the Penal Code that criminalizes kidnapping.(64)

The 2012 Labor Code prohibits the recruitment and use of children in the military and armed conflicts, and establishes the minimum age of voluntary recruitment at 18. In March 2012, the Government of Niger acceded to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict.(54, 68) During the reporting period, the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa (the “Kampala Convention”) came into force in Niger. The Government of Niger is a party to the convention, which prohibits the recruitment and use of children in armed conflicts, as well as the trafficking, abduction, and forced labor of women and children.(69, 70)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Ministry of Labor and Civil Service’s (MLCS) national child labor steering committee is composed of representatives from eight ministries, including the Ministry of Population, Women’s Promotion, and Child Protection; NGOs; and UN agencies. It coordinates efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor.(65, 71) The steering committee is responsible for conducting child labor studies, raising awareness, and drafting action plans on the worst forms of child labor.(65, 71) In addition, the National Committee to Combat the Phenomenon of Street Children under the Ministry for the Promotion of Women and Child Protection is responsible for combating child engagement in street work.(56)

The MLCS and the National Commission on Human Rights and Fundamental Liberties are responsible for receiving labor violation complaints, investigating violations, and referring cases to the courts.(54, 72) The MLCS is charged with enforcing labor laws related to child labor, including those provisions governing hazardous labor for children under age 18. The MLCS has nine regional labor inspectorates and approximately 100 inspectors responsible for investigating and enforcing all elements of the Labor Code, including child labor.(4, 55, 73) Inspectors conduct both routine and complaint-based inspections in the formal sector.(4, 74) There do not appear to be any provisions in the law or any systems that have been established by government agencies to inspect for child labor violations in the informal sector. As a result, children working in the informal sector, including on the streets and as domestic servants, remain unprotected.(4, 74) Additionally, the ILO Committee of Experts notes that although the regional inspection service has a number of vehicles to visit worksites, the labor inspectorate lacks both human and material resources.(75) While law enforcement officials, with support from nongovernmental organizations, rescued 326 children from forced begging, the actual number of resulting arrests or prosecutions is unclear.(59, 63) For example, in December 2012, police arrested and detained five individuals who attempted to traffic 14 children (between 10 and 11 years old) to North Africa, with the intention of using the children to work in gardening and animal herding. In January 2013, each of these individuals was convicted and sentenced to 2 years' imprisonment.(59) Additionally, no information is available regarding child labor inspections.

According to the Government of Niger, each of the 10 district courts and 36 magistrate courts has at least one judge designated to address children's issues, including child labor.(10, 54) In addition, the Ministry of Population, Women's Promotion, and Child Protection works with law enforcement authorities to provide referral, education, legal, and other services to vulnerable children in 13 sites throughout Niger.(54) Nigerien government officials, with support from nongovernmental organizations, rescued 326 children from forced begging during the year. No additional information was available at the time this document was written.(54)

The Ministry of Mining and the MLCS are responsible for inspecting and enforcing labor laws in the mining sector.(16, 55) However, research indicates that the Government has yet to adopt legislation that would formally make the issuance of mining licenses contingent on an agreement to not use child labor, which would effectively uphold child labor laws.(72) Additionally, research indicates that the Government does not provide sufficient oversight of the informal mining sector where children work, as the Ministry of Mining notes that only two (of numerous) traditional mining sites officially fall under the supervision of the Ministry of Mining.(72) However, during the reporting period, the Ministry of the Interior issued a circular prohibiting the use of children in mining operations in the locations of Tillabéri, Tahoua, and Agadez, directing the Ministry of Mining to take this issue into consideration while preparing mining contracts.(66) While it is unclear the extent to which the circular was implemented, the local Government of Tillabéri did hold an awareness-raising workshop on the issue during the reporting period.(36) Additionally, the Government reports removing 600 children from labor in the mines and placing them in school.(10)

The 2010 Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons established the National Commission to Coordinate Efforts to Combat Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP) and the National Agency to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (ANLTP).(41, 67) While the CNLTP and the ANLTP were created in March 2012, the funding decrees are pending.(63) The National Commission against Forced Labor and Discrimination with the MLCS coordinates policies and programs to combat slavery, forced labor, and trafficking. The commission includes representatives of the ILO, labor unions, civil society, and traditional chiefs.(4) In Niger, regional committees—supported by vigilance committees in 30 localities—report suspected cases of child trafficking to law enforcement personnel.(4, 39, 72) During the reporting period, the Government reported a number of child trafficking investigations, resulting in the arrest of 25 people, and conviction of nine people for child trafficking.(36, 54) Despite these advances, the Government did not adequately investigate, prosecute, or enforce antislavery and trafficking laws during the year. In addition, there was a general lack of information or data regarding enforcement statistics.(10, 17, 54)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The MLCS's National Action Plan (NAP) to combat the worst forms of child labor covers a period of 2010-2015 and the sectors of agriculture, mining, domestic labor, begging, and commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 56, 76-78) The NAP aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Niger by 2015, and all forms of child labor by 2025.(39) However, the NAP lacks a budget and implementation timeline, and the Government has not adopted or financed the policy yet.(7, 66)

In 2007, the Government developed an action plan to target the exploitation of children by religious instructors, but the plan has reportedly not been adopted or implemented due to a lack of funding.(17) The Government has a national action plan to combat the sexual exploitation of children. No further information was available at the time this document was written.(4, 56, 63)

Child labor concerns were incorporated into the country's new Social and Economic Development Plan (2012-2015).(54) Child labor concerns are also incorporated in the following national development agendas and policy documents: National Policy on Education, Vocational and Professional Training, Accelerated Development and Poverty Reduction Strategic Plan (2008-2012), and UN Development Assistance Framework (2009-2013).(4, 21, 54, 79-82) Reports suggest that Niger's Education Sector Plan (2002-2012), which gives priority to basic education, has contributed to an increase in school attendance for girls and a reduction in the average number of hours children work per week.(83) However, government policy also dictates that children of any age who fail the same grade twice are expelled from public schools. This practice makes children particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they may not be permitted to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.(4, 39, 61) Order No. 09/MPF/PE of 2007 of the National Committee to Combat the Phenomenon of Street Children under the Ministry for the Promotion of Women and Child Protection provides a framework for action to address the issue of street children.(66) Research indicates that the committee is active.(63) According to the World Bank, the Government's social protection policies and programs are fragmented and weak, with insufficient coverage.(84)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, President Mahamadou Issoufou publicly acknowledged the existence of—and spoke out against—forced labor, slavery, and trafficking in persons in Niger.(17, 36) During the reporting period, the Government held a number of workshops in Niamey, Tillabéri, and Dosso to raise awareness on such laws.(54)

In July 2012, the Government of Niger and the ILO signed an agreement (“Protocole d’Accord”) to implement the country’s Decent Work Plan. The ILO pledged to fund 25 percent of the plan’s budget, which amounts to $6.5 million.(85-87) In August 2012, the Government, with assistance from the ILO, finalized its list of 20 Decent Work Plan indicators, which includes the number of children engaged in dangerous child labor and the number of children working.(85-87) The Government also participated in the EU-funded Measuring and Monitoring Decent Work project (2009-2013) that aims to support a transition toward decent work through facilitating the identification of indicators, establishing a monitoring and data collection mechanism (including related to child labor), and drafting an inspection manual.(86, 87)

The Government of Niger continues to participate in two regional USDOL-funded projects, including a 4-year, $7.9 million project and a 3-year, $5 million project. These projects are designed to strengthen ECOWAS’s Child Policy and Strategic Plan of Action, and to develop programs focusing on child trafficking as it pertains to the strategic plan.(88, 89) The Government participates in a $1 million, regional project funded by France. This 3-year project, ending in 2014, aims to combat child labor in the domestic service sector.(90)

The Government of Niger participated in a program that allowed the Red Cross, World Food Program, USAID, IOM, and other organizations to provide uninterrupted assistance to the Malian refugees in Niger.(10, 45) With donor assistance, the Government supported cash-for-work schemes, food banks, and other initiatives to address the food crisis, supporting over 600,000 beneficiaries in Niger.(47, 51, 91, 92) The Government also participated in the World Bank-funded, $70 million Safety Net project that aims to establish a safety net system through cash transfer and cash-for-work programs.(93) The project targets over 1 million beneficiaries, with 60,000 of these receiving cash for work benefits. The project is scheduled to end June 2017.(93) Research suggests that these programs may support vulnerable children and families, and mitigate exploitative child labor.

During the reporting period, UNICEF sponsored “catch-up” classes for children who had dropped out of school due to the food crisis. With support from UNICEF, the Government of Niger also continued its campaign to raise awareness of the importance of civil registry documents, such as birth certificates and national identity cards, in an effort to combat human trafficking.(10) The Government participated in programs financially supported by UNICEF, which provided assistance to local nongovernmental organizations to combat child labor, including educational training centers run by Action Against the Use of Child Workers and case management training by the Niger Human Rights Association. The Government of Niger also participated in programs by local nongovernmental organizations, Volunteers for Education Integration, which provides vulnerable children with educational opportunities.(54)

The Government of Niger continued to participate in the USDOS-funded Program of Assistance for the Return and Reintegration of Trafficked Children in West Africa. Since 2006, the project has rescued over 250 children throughout West Africa (including Niger), providing them with necessary shelter, voluntary return, and reintegration and other assistance.(94) In addition, the Government participated in the UNODC 2010-2013 regional West Africa program that covers 15 countries and supports implementation of the ECOWAS Political Declaration on the Prevention of Drug Abuse, Illicit Drug Trafficking and Organized Crimes in West Africa.(95)

The question of whether these social, educational, and economic development programs have had an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Niger:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Raise the minimum age for hazardous work to 18.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Update the law to ensure protection for child domestic servants and children working on the streets.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the Penal Code to provide more severe penalties for inciting an individual to beg and more vigilantly enforce the existing law.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement the Law on the Orientation of the Educational System in Niger, which establishes free education.	2010, 2011, 2012
Laws and Regulations	Adopt legislation that would formally make the issuance of mining licenses contingent on an agreement not to use child labor.	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Render completely operational and provide resources for the CNLTP and the ANLTP.	2011, 2012
	Increase resources to conduct systematic inspections on the worst forms of child labor in all sectors of the economy, including the informal sector.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase efforts to prosecute and enforce child labor laws, particularly antislavery and anti-trafficking laws.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Collect and make public information on the number of labor inspections and penalties assessed, as well as criminal investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2012
Policies	Adopt and implement the action plan to target children exploited by religious instructors.	2011, 2012
	Adopt and implement the updated NAP to Combat Child Labor and ensure the plan has a budget and implementation timeline.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement strategies to improve school retention by reducing the incidence of grade repetition.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Expand and increase resources for social programs that prevent and withdraw children from the worst forms of child labor (including slave practices), particularly in agriculture and other sectors.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Evaluate the impact that existing social, educational, and economic development programs may have on addressing child labor.	2011, 2012
	Improve access to education by building more schools and ensure timely and consistent compensation for teachers.	2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Nigeria made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Steering Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Nigeria appointed a committee to identify child labor involving hazardous work. The Government also supported the development of curriculum to increase the capacity of school teachers and managers who work with almajiri (children who are often forced into begging after being sent to study and live with Islamic scholars) through the Almajiri Education Program. Gaps remained in legislation, such as a minimum age that falls below international standards, and in social protection programs. In addition, the number of labor inspectors and inspections decreased during the period. Children in Nigeria continued to engage in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in domestic service and dangerous agricultural activities.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Nigeria are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in domestic service and dangerous agricultural activities.(3-6) In rural areas, most children work in agriculture, producing crops, such as cassava and cocoa. Although evidence is limited, there are reports that children also produce tobacco.(3-9) Children working in agriculture may step on sharp objects, wound their hands and legs, and suffer from insect stings.(4) In particular, children engaged in work on cocoa plantations are exposed to pesticides, apply chemical fertilizers without protective gear, and sometimes work under conditions of forced labor.(8, 10, 11) Children, primarily boys, work in cattle herding. Children engaged in herding livestock may suffer injuries, such as being bitten, head butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(3, 6, 9, 12-14)

In urban areas, many children work as domestic servants.(3, 6, 15) Children employed as domestic servants are isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse, and forced labor. Children employed as domestics may also be required to work long hours and perform strenuous tasks without sufficient food or shelter.(16-19)

Both boys and girls engage in street-hawking, sometimes dropping out of school to work.(12, 20-22) Increasing numbers of children also engage in begging. (5, 6, 23-26)

Commercial sexual exploitation of children, especially girls, also occurs in some Nigerian port cities and refugee camps.(5, 6, 15, 29)

Children work in mines and quarries, producing gravel and granite. Such work puts children at risk of injury or death from exposure to dust, falling rocks, and carrying heavy loads.(9, 12, 20, 28, 30) Children also work breaking granite into gravel at various sites near Abuja.(31) Children reportedly work in artisanal gold mining, particularly in Zamfara State. Children working in artisanal gold mining are exposed to extremely toxic chemicals, including lead and mercury.(3, 32-35) Some of the children working in mines and quarries do so under conditions of forced labor.(36)

In northern Nigeria, many families send children, known as almajiri, from rural to urban areas to live with and receive a Koranic education from Islamic teachers. Some of these children receive lessons, but teachers often force them to beg on the streets and surrender the money that they collect; these children may go without adequate food or shelter.(6, 23, 37) Although evidence remains limited, information indicates that some almajiri in Nigeria may undergo deliberate scarring or injuries to arouse sympathy and thus encourage donations.(38) In December 2010, the Ministerial Committee on Madrasah Education estimated that Nigeria has about 9.5 million almajiri.(3, 6)

Nigeria is a source, transit, and destination country for child trafficking.(15, 38, 39) Children in Nigeria are trafficked internally to work in domestic service, agriculture, street peddling, and begging.(8, 15, 29, 40) Children are also trafficked from Nigeria to work in the worst forms of child labor in Equatorial Guinea, Sierra Leone, and Saudi Arabia.(41-43) There are reports of Nigerian girls being trafficked to Italy for commercial sexual exploitation.(15)

Children from Benin, Ghana, and Togo are trafficked to Nigeria, where many are forced to work in granite mines.(15) Some children from the Central African Republic (CAR) are trafficked back and forth between CAR and Nigeria for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation (44) Boys from Niger are subjected to forced begging and forced labor in Nigeria.(45)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Nigeria has the authority to establish labor standards, though legislative power to protect children is reserved for its states.(46-49) The Labor Act sets the minimum age of employment at 13 and is in force in all 36 states of Nigeria. This minimum age is below that called for in international standards. Furthermore, the Labor Act permits children of any age to do light work alongside a family member in agriculture, horticulture, or domestic service, which likewise fails to meet international standards calling for a minimum age for light work of 12 in most cases.(50, 51)

The Federal 2003 Child Rights Act, which codifies the rights of children in Nigeria, must be implemented by each State in its specific territory.(49, 52) Prior to 2012, 24 of the 36 states had adopted the Child Rights Act; there have been no new adoptions during the reporting period. In total, 24 of the 36 states have adopted the Child Rights Act, all of which adopted the Act before the reporting period.(3) The Child Rights Act states that the provisions related to children in the Labor Act apply to children under the Child Rights Act, but also that the Child Rights Act supersedes any other legislation related to children. This language makes it unclear what minimum ages apply for certain types of work in the country. The Child Rights Act, for example, restricts children under the age of 18 from any work aside from light work for family members, while the Labor Act applies the same light work restriction only to children under the age of 12. (26, 53)

The Labor Act forbids the employment of youth under the age of 18 in work that is dangerous to their health, safety, or morals. However, it allows children to participate in certain types of dangerous work by setting different age thresholds for various activities. (50) It prohibits youth under the age of 15 from working in industrial undertakings and youth under the age of 16 from working underground or with machines.(50) Additionally, the Labor Act does not apply to youth working in domestic service.(50) As a result, children are vulnerable to dangerous work in industrial undertakings, underground, with machines, and in domestic service. The Labor Act allows youth above the age of 16 to work at night in gold mining and the manufacturing of iron, steel, paper, raw sugar, and glass.(50) This standard may leave children who work at night in gold mining and the above manufacturing activities vulnerable to hazardous work. In addition, neither the Labor Act nor the Child Rights Act lays out a comprehensive list of hazardous activities prohibited to children.(51, 54) While the Child Rights Act appears to apply appropriate penalties for violating the hazardous labor provisions, the Labor Act's penalties may not be stiff enough to deter violations.(26, 50, 51)

States may also enact additional provisions to bolster protection for working children within their territory. Some states within Nigeria have taken such action and closed gaps in the law.(55) For example, the 2006 Abia State Child’s Rights Law prohibits all children under age 18 from engaging in domestic service outside of the home or family environment.(56)

The Constitution of Nigeria prohibits forced labor, slavery, and servitude.(50, 57) The 2003 Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Law Enforcement and Administration Act applies throughout Nigeria and prohibits commercial sexual exploitation, pornography, drug trafficking, and trafficking for the purposes of forced or compulsory recruitment into armed conflict. Nigerian law punishes such offenses with fines and imprisonment.(3, 58)

The Child Rights Act prohibits the worst forms of child labor, including the forced labor of children and the use of children for commercial sexual exploitation and armed conflict. In addition, this law prohibits the use of children in street hawking and begging.(26) The Child Rights Act imposes strict penalties for abuses and creates family courts.(26, 59)

Some states that apply Shari’a (the moral code and religious law of Islam), however, treat children as offenders rather than victims. For example, the Shari’a Penal Code of the Zamfara State defines an offender as anyone who “does any obscene or indecent act in a private or public place, or acts or conducts himself/herself in an indecent manner.”(54) Treating child victims of commercial sexual exploitation as offenders runs counter to internationally accepted standards for the treatment of such children.(54)

The minimum age for voluntary recruitment into the armed forces is age 18.(26, 60) There are no reports of children being used in the Government’s armed forces; however, while evidence is limited, children as young as age 8 reportedly undergo recruitment into non-state armed groups—particularly in areas in which security has deteriorated. There is no law to prohibit the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.(61-63) Pervasive poverty, coupled with mass unemployment and a poor education system, has created an atmosphere in which youth are increasingly susceptible to participating in armed groups, including ethnic-based militia organizations, criminal gangs, extremist groups, and partisan political organizations, such as party “youth wings.”(64-67)

The Compulsory, Free Universal Basic Education Act (2004) provides for free and compulsory education for children until the age of 15.(68) The Federal Constitution (1999) also provides for free and compulsory primary education

“when practicable.” However, the term “practicable” introduces ambiguity in the concept of free universal compulsory education, which does not yet fully exist in Nigeria.(3, 6, 57, 63) The Ministry of Labor and Productivity reports that only six states provide free education. As the laws providing for free and compulsory education are not systematically enforced, children are more likely to enter the worst forms of child labor.(63) Inadequate facilities and school fees may also deter enrollment.(3, 6)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Steering Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Nigeria serves as the country’s mechanism for coordinating efforts to combat child labor. Represented on the Steering Committee are the Ministries of Labor and Productivity (MOLP), Women and Social Development, Mining and Metal Production, Agriculture, Foreign Affairs, and Education—along with other government bodies, such as the National Agency for the Prohibition of Traffic in Persons and Other Related Matters (NAPTIP) and the National Bureau of Statistics.(3) In addition to government representation, the Committee includes both a mix of faith-based organizations and NGOs that work on child labor issues, and the ILO-IPEC and UNICEF. The Committee met twice in 2012 and appointed a committee to identify hazardous work involving child labor.(3) NAPTIP is the agency responsible for coordinating efforts against trafficking and also chairs the National Task Force on Trafficking in Persons that considers issues of child labor and trafficking. NAPTIP and the Ministry of Women’s Affairs and Social Development coordinate social services for trafficked children and repatriation to their families.(3)

The MOLP is responsible for ensuring the enforcement of federal labor laws. The MOLP’s Inspectorate Division employed about 500 inspectors during the reporting period, 100 fewer inspectors than in the previous year.(3) Labor inspectors are deployed across 36 regions as well as the Federal Capital Territory (including Abuja), and are responsible for investigating all labor law violations, including those related to child labor.(3, 5, 69) The number of inspectors employed appears to be inadequate to address child labor issues sufficiently, given the size of the country and the scope of the worst forms of child labor in the country. The 2012 budget allocated about $29,000 to the MOLP for child labor inspections, but as of the end of the year, the Finance Ministry had not yet released the funds.(3) Training for inspectors was limited.(3)

Nigeria

During 2012, the Government of Nigeria conducted 7,840 labor inspections, 4,200 fewer inspections than in the previous year. The MOLP reported 500 labor violations in 2012, but did not have information on the number of child labor specific violations.(3) The Ministry rescued 25 children from child labor in Oyo State during the year. There is no information about whether these children received adequate services.(3) Labor inspectors do not possess a mandate to conduct inspections on seafaring vessels. Since children age 15 and older may work onboard these vessels, this leaves such children unprotected by the country's enforcement framework.(50, 70) In addition, rather than issuing citations upon discovery of labor infractions, MOLP sends letters of caution to employers encouraging them to resolve violations and then conducts follow-up inspections. It is unclear whether this system sufficiently encourages compliance with labor laws.(3, 63)

NAPTIP is responsible for enforcing anti-trafficking legislation and has an overall budget of about $11.9 million, though the amount of funding received is unknown.(3) The last known training for NAPTIP officials occurred in May 2011. Both the MOLP and NAPTIP are supported by the Nigeria Police Force (NPF).(3) The NPF and the Nigerian Immigration Service have anti-trafficking units responsible for combating trafficking, while other agencies, such as the National Drug Enforcement Agency, help identify traffickers and their victims.(38, 71) NAPTIP reports that authorities turn over rescued children to state-level agencies.(3) In 2010, NAPTIP, through the support of the American Bar Association's Rule of Law Initiative, launched a database to connect its regional offices and improve its data collection.(38) NAPTIP reportedly used this database during 2012.(63)

During the reporting period, NAPTIP began 117 trafficking investigations and 17 prosecutions and made 25 convictions. The number of investigations represents a decrease from the previous year.(19) NAPTIP reported that 8 trafficking convictions involved children. There is no information available on the number of trafficking investigations that involved children and whether the trafficking convictions involving children resulted in offenders serving jail time or paying a fine.(3)

The NPF is responsible for enforcing all laws prohibiting forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(3) However, the NPF is not trained on state laws and may not have knowledge of such laws that protect children from a particular worst form of child labor within a specific state. This limits the capacity of the NPF to enforce the laws protecting children from the worst forms of child labor.(47) Research did not uncover the number of child labor violations and resulting penalties issued by the Police during the reporting period.

States may also undertake other measures that aid in the enforcement of labor provisions. For example, Ondo State has established a child labor monitoring system in cocoa plantations.(71)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Nigeria, with support from ILO-IPEC, finished drafting a National Policy and National Plan of Action on the worst forms of child labor in late 2011. In 2012, consultations on the drafts were held in each of Nigeria's six geo-political zones.(3) The National Steering Committee on Child Labor adopted the policy and plan, but as of the writing of this report, the plans had yet to be presented to the Federal Executive Council for official adoption. (72) If adopted, the Policy would identify and assign roles to participating government law enforcement and agencies, trade unions, community organizations, and other groups.(3)

Nigeria conducted a national survey in 2008 to identify the prevalence and nature of child labor. The results from this survey have still not been made publicly available.(73, 74) Additionally, in 2011 the MOLP reportedly collected data on the prevalence of child labor from state governments. The collected data have not been made publicly available.(73) Moreover, it is unclear what methodology the Ministry used for data collection or how many state governments had participated in the survey.

During the reporting period, the Government of Nigeria had a National Plan of Action on Trafficking in Persons (2010-2012) to provide government entities and NGOs with a framework for coordinating anti-trafficking activities.(75) The Plan set forth NAPTIP's budget and programming costs through 2012.(76) In addition to the Plan, the Government has a National Policy on Protection and Assistance to Trafficked Persons in Nigeria (2008), which provides protection and rehabilitation services to trafficking victims.(77-79)

The Ministry of Education is responsible for implementing the National Framework for the Development and Integration of Almajiri Education in the Universal Basic Education Scheme, released in 2010. Under the framework, state governments regulate almajiri schools to address more effectively the challenges that the traditional Islamic Education Sector faces on itinerancy and begging.(80, 81) Also under the framework, the Government announced plans to build about 400 schools for almajiri children by 2015.(82) By the end of 2012, 89 schools were built, including 18 schools with housing facilities.(63) In early 2012, the Almajiri Education Program developed a curriculum to increase the capacity of almajiri school teachers and managers throughout the country as well as a strategic plan of action to guide the Program.(81)

In 2012, the labor ministers of the 15 ECOWAS countries, including Nigeria, adopted a regional action plan on child labor, especially in its worst forms. The plan seeks to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015 and continue progress towards the total elimination of child labor.(83)

The Government of Nigeria ratified the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa (Kampala Convention), which entered into force on December 6, 2012.(84) The Convention prohibits armed groups from recruiting children, or otherwise permitting them to participate in conflict, and engaging in sexual slavery and trafficking, especially of women and children.(85)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Nigeria continued to participate in several regional projects to combat the worst forms of child labor, including the regional $7.95 million USDOL-funded ECOWAS Project (2009-2014). This Project has assisted ECOWAS member states to develop systems to help member countries, including Nigeria, reduce the worst forms of child labor.(86-88) During the reporting period, ECOWAS member countries adopted a Regional Action Plan on child labor.(83) As part of the ECOWAS Project, Nigeria also participated in the ILO-IPEC's Decent Work Country Program, which aims to increase opportunities for work and social protection for families. The Program includes strategies such as vocational training for youth that support the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.(86)

To assist with implementation of the Benin/Nigeria Anti-Trafficking Agreement, the Government continued to participate in the 3-year, USDOL-funded $5 million regional ECOWAS II Project, which is active in 15 countries. In Nigeria, the project aims to withdraw and prevent 540 children from being trafficked from Benin to Nigeria for mining and associated activities around mining sites in Nigeria's Ogun and Oyo States and to provide livelihood alternatives to 118 households.(89)

In 2012, Nigeria participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project that is active in approximately 40 countries. In Nigeria, the project aims to build the capacity of the national government to implement the National Action Plan (NAP) in Nigeria. During the reporting period, the project supported four consultation workshops to review the draft NAP.(90-92) In addition, since 2007, the MOLP has worked to develop codes of conduct for various sectors, including mining, construction, and fishing. Research did not uncover additional information about the codes of conduct.(48, 80)

In 2011, the last date for which information is available, the Anambra, Lagos, and Ogun States supported efforts to ban children from street trading. As of 2012, the Bayelsa State's bill to ban children from street trading was awaiting approval in its State Assembly.(73, 93) Terre des hommes, along with other groups, is implementing a program to provide services to children exploited and trafficked between the Zakpota community in Benin and Nigeria's gravel quarries in Abeokuta.(94)

The Government continued to operate shelters for trafficking victims and to reunite or repatriate trafficked children.(3, 38, 73, 76) The Government, largely through NAPTIP, operated eight shelters for rescued children in regions across the country.(73, 80) In addition, the Ministry of Women's Affairs and Social Development operates four shelters across the country with the capacity to serve 240 children along with nonresidential drop-in centers, in which at-risk children can access social services.(3, 80) NGOs and states also run programs to address trafficking. NGOs support shelters to which government officials may send rescued children for long-term rehabilitation; however, because of a lack of resources, these shelters could only care for a very limited number of victims.(76, 95) While NAPTIP's Victims of Trafficking Trust Fund in 2010 remained in existence, no additional funds were added to or disbursed from the Fund in 2012.(3, 73)

Despite the various projects across Nigeria, the scale of such programs remained insufficient to reach all Nigerian children engaged in or vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, especially children engaged in begging, mining, domestic service, and agriculture.(3)

Nigeria

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Nigeria:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Raise the minimum wage for regular work to at least 14, in accordance with international standards.	2012
	Amend and harmonize the Labor Act and Child Right's Act to ensure that provisions related to light work conform to international standards.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Publish a comprehensive list of hazardous activities prohibited to minors and ensure that children working in domestic service are protected.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Strengthen penalties for child labor violations in the Labor Act.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that those states applying Shari'a as the Penal Code do not penalize child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Adopt legislation to ensure all children under the age of 18 are prohibited from military recruitment, including by non-state armed groups.	2011, 2012
	Implement the constitutional provision and Compulsory, Free Universal Basic Education Act, which establishes free and compulsory education.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Provide adequate resources and inspectors to effectively address issues of child labor.	2011, 2012
	Collect and make publicly available statistics on the number of: child labor violations and resulting penalties assessed, child labor inspections, and investigations conducted.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that child labor inspections occur on vessels and in all other sectors and locations in which child labor is prevalent.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that National Police Force is aware of the state laws addressing the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Adopt the draft National Policy and National Plan of Action on the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Publish statistics on the worst forms of child labor, including results from the 2008 national survey on child labor and data collected in 2011 on child labor.	2011, 2012
Social Programs	Establish and expand programs to provide services to children working in agriculture, begging, domestic service, and mining.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide adequate resources to shelters to ensure delivery of necessary services for trafficking victims.	2011, 2012

Oman

In 2012, Oman made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Oman continues to delay publishing a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children. In addition, education is not compulsory in Oman, which puts children at risk of the worst forms of child labor. Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, there are limited reports that some children in Oman are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Some children in Oman are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, although there is no evidence to suggest that the problem is widespread. Children reportedly work in dangerous activities in agriculture and fishing.(3-5) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(5) Children engaged in fishing may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(6)

Information on the worst forms of child labor in Oman is lacking. Research has found limited evidence of child trafficking in Oman.(7, 8)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The minimum age for employment in Oman is 15.(9) Children between ages 15 and 18 are barred from working between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m., and for more than six hours a day.(9) Oman's Labor Law further restricts children between ages 15 and 18 from working on weekends and holidays or from working overtime.(9) Pursuant to a government decree passed in 2005, children under 18 are prohibited from working as camel jockeys in races.(3, 10) In 2010, the ILO Committee of Experts reported that the Government was developing a list of 43 hazardous occupations prohibited for children younger than 18; however, the Government has yet to publish the list.(11, 12)

	Free Public Education	Yes

Under the Labor Law, inspectors have jurisdiction to inspect private sector entities for labor law noncompliance.(13)

The Penal Code prohibits inciting a child under the age of 18 to prostitution; anyone found guilty of such incitement will receive a 5-year minimum prison sentence.(14) Research did not identify whether other activities associated with prostitution, such as soliciting a child for prostitution, are also prohibited. The Anti-Trafficking Law criminalizes trafficking in persons and imposes a stiffer sentence for trafficking of a child.(15) The Law also makes it a crime for a person to produce, keep, distribute, or expose pornographic letters or pictures.(16)

Oman has no laws prohibiting the use of children for illicit activities.(17)

The law prohibits forced or compulsory labor, including work by children.(4) Military service is voluntary; the minimum age to join is 18.(18)

Education in Oman is free for all citizens through secondary school (approximately age 18), but it is not compulsory.(3, 17) The lack of compulsory education may make children under the age of 15 more susceptible to the worst forms of child labor, as they cannot legally work, but are not required to be in school.

The Government is considering enacting a draft Children's Law in 2013 to further protect children.(17) It is also considering raising the minimum age for work to 16.(12)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of Oman has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.(17)

The Ministry of Manpower (MOM) and Royal Oman Police (ROP) are responsible for monitoring and enforcing child labor laws.(17) The Inspection Department of the MOM conducts regular visits to private sector establishments to ensure their implementation of laws and the protection of workers' rights.(19) The Department employs 180 inspectors.(17) Research found no information on funding levels for the labor inspectorate. Labor inspectors are trained by the ILO on international labor standards including those regarding the worst forms of child labor.(17)

The MOM and ROP share information on labor cases in which criminal penalties are sought.(17) There were no child labor violations and therefore no prosecutions.(17)

The Public Prosecution is responsible for prosecuting trafficking cases in court with the assistance of the ROP.(17, 20)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The National Committee for Combating Human Trafficking is mandated to oversee the National Plan for Combating Human Trafficking that outlines the Government's human trafficking prevention plan.(20) The Plan also lays out the roles and responsibilities of governmental organizations that are involved in combating trafficking.(20) Research found no evidence of a plan to address other worst forms of child labor, including agriculture and fishing.

In 2010, the ILO Committee of Experts expressed concern over the lack of national research on the prevalence of child trafficking.(3) Likewise, research found no evidence of formal mechanisms or procedures to proactively identify victims of trafficking or other worst forms of child labor.(7)

The Government also lacks information on the prevalence and conditions of child labor in the informal sectors, such as in agriculture and fishing.(4) Recent reports by the ILO Committee of Experts, UNESCO, and the Overseas Development Institute found that available government data were weak, especially on child labor and trafficking, the impact of programming for employed children, and the link between research findings and policy making. The ILO has consistently requested that the Government assess their child labor and trafficking situation in order to ensure that adequate protection mechanisms are in place for vulnerable children.(8, 11, 21, 22) The lack of data available on the incidence, nature, and the types of child labor impedes the Government's and civil society's ability to measure the extent of the worst forms of child labor in the country in order to systematically inform policies and programs.

In addition, the UN Human Rights Council is concerned that the exclusion of migrant workers and their children from public social, health, education, and housing benefits available to citizens increases their vulnerability to forced labor and the worst forms of child labor.(23)

The Government has implemented an education model that aims to equip all children in Oman with the knowledge, tools, attitudes, and values that enable lifelong learning.(24) Research found no evidence of the impact this policy has had on reducing child labor.

Oman

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government collaborates with the ILO on a Decent Work Country Program (DWCP) (2010-2013) that strives to strengthen the employability of Oman's young workforce through vocational education and training programs.⁽¹⁹⁾

The Government invests in Oman's youth through the Fund for Development of Youth, or Sharakah that Sultan Qaboos began in 1998.⁽²⁵⁾ The Fund provides youth (ages 15-24) with equity and loan support for existing and proposed small and medium enterprises, and provides guidance and technical assistance needed to start a new business.⁽²⁵⁻²⁷⁾ In addition, the Ministry of Social Development provides microfinance opportunities to unemployed youth to start their own businesses.⁽²²⁾ Evidence of the impact that these initiatives have on child labor is unavailable.

The National Plan for Combating Human Trafficking's efforts include the implementation of awareness-raising activities on human trafficking in schools and among the general population; also included are the provision of social services for trafficking victims and the coordination with international organizations on trafficking developments.⁽²⁰⁾ The Government operates a 24-hour hotline for reporting suspected cases of trafficking.⁽⁷⁾ The Government continued to operate a shelter for victims of trafficking that can accommodate up to 50 men, women, and children. However, given strict entry policies and requirements regarding who may stay in the shelter and when the shelter is underutilized.⁽⁷⁾

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Finalize and make publicly available the list of all hazardous occupations and jobs prohibited for children under age 18.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Establish a compulsory education age of 15.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Establish a law prohibiting the use of children for illicit activities.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Conduct in-depth research and measure the prevalence of child labor, especially in agriculture, fishing, and child trafficking, and develop a plan to address the worst forms of child labor in those industries in which it is prevalent.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Develop formal mechanisms and procedures to proactively identify victims of trafficking or other worst forms of child labor.	2011, 2012
	Ensure that migrant worker children are afforded protection from exploitation through access to social services.	2011, 2012
Social Programs	Assess the impact that existing policies may have on addressing child labor, especially in agriculture, fishing, and child trafficking.	2012
	Review policies regarding residents of the government shelter to ensure children in need may be admitted.	2012

Pakistan

In 2012, Pakistan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Human Rights Act, increased access to education for children ages 5 to 16 through the Right to Free and Compulsory Education Act, and launched the Waseela-e-Taleem initiative under the Benazir Income Support Program. In addition, the Punjab provincial government passed the Punjab Bonded Labor System Act and launched a 5-year $2 million project to combat the worst forms of child labor. Despite these efforts, Pakistan continues to lack sufficient legal protections for working children. While provincial government units drafted legislation to protect children from the worst forms of child labor in response to a government-wide decentralization effort, only one province passed such legislation while the Federal law remains in effect in the remaining provinces. These laws fall short of meeting international standards. Enforcement efforts remain weak. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in dangerous forms of agriculture and are subject to bonded labor.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Pakistan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor including bonded labor, primarily in dangerous forms of agriculture.(3) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(4)

Children also work in hazardous manufacturing activities. In factories, children are susceptible to industrial accidents.(5) Children who produce glass bangles are exposed to high temperatures and toxic chemicals and suffer from severe joint pain and lung problems.(6-8) There is limited evidence that children weave cloth using power looms. Children working with power looms suffer respiratory disease, work long hours, and face physical and sexual abuse.(9) In the carpet weaving industry children also work long hours and are vulnerable to physical and sexual abuse.(3, 9) Some children are found working in hazardous conditions in the informal construction, transport, leather tanning, and surgical instrument industries. Although evidence is limited, children are reportedly involved in deep-sea fishing.(7, 10-13) While tanning leather, children are exposed to toxic chemicals and dyes and often contract respiratory diseases and sustain chemical burns.(7) Such work also makes them susceptible to eye and lung diseases.(14)

Children in urban areas are often employed as domestic servants and may be subjected to extreme abuse. Reports indicate that some child domestic servants have even been killed by their employers.(15, 16)

Children scavenge for medical waste to recycle, which exposes them to deadly diseases such as HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria.(7)

There is limited evidence that children are involved in the stitching of soccer balls and in shrimp processing.(12, 17, 18) Some children in Pakistan are forced to work as bonded laborers, often in brick making. This practice also occurs in carpet weaving, agriculture, glass bangle making, fish raising, and coal mining.(3, 12, 14, 16) Entire families sometimes become bonded after borrowing money from a landowner. (19) Often, bonded laborers are unable to pay their debts. Their movements may be restricted by armed guards and they may be subjected to violence or resale.(20) Children bonded in coal mining often use donkeys to haul coal to the surface and are vulnerable to multiple dangers, including sexual abuse by miners.(14)

Child trafficking continues to be a problem with children kidnapped, rented, or sold for work in agriculture, domestic service, and begging and trafficked into commercial exploitation.(16, 20) Girls who are sold into forced marriages are sometimes subsequently trafficked internationally into commercial exploitation.(16) Disabled children are sold or kidnapped and taken to countries such as Iran, in which they are forced to beg.(16, 21, 22)

There are reports of children being used by non-state militant groups in armed conflict and some evidence that Afghan and Pakistani children are trafficked across the border for use by these groups.(6, 16, 22-24) Non-state groups kidnap children or coerce parents into giving away their children to spy, fight, or die in suicide attacks.(16, 22, 25, 26) These children are subjected to physical, sexual, and psychological abuse.(16) Reports indicate that children as young as age 12 are recruited by pro-Taliban insurgents, trained as suicide bombers and trafficked between Afghanistan and Pakistan.(3, 16, 27)

Children along the border with Afghanistan are used in illegal smuggling operations. They carry heavy loads of small arms, drugs, and household goods across the border.(22, 24) There are reports of children working on the streets but specific information on hazards is unknown.(3, 8)

While education is free and compulsory through age 16, access to education is still limited. In conflict and flood zones, schools and infrastructure are often damaged.(3, 15, 28) Families and teachers have fled and internally displaced persons are housed in former schools.(29) In some areas, schools are attacked and sometimes destroyed by militant groups opposed to secular education and the education of girls.(3, 22, 30) Children displaced by conflict also have limited access to education in displaced persons camps and in the communities to which they have fled.(28) Pakistan is also recovering from multiple natural disasters and a deteriorating security situation that has weakened the economy, driving some children out of school and into dangerous work.(24, 31)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The 18th Amendment to the Constitution, passed in 2010, devolved all child welfare and labor issues from the national level to the provincial government units. Until each province repeals or adopts a replacement law, federal laws on child protection and labor are in force.(12) Under the 1991 Employment of Children Act, children of any age may be employed, provided that those under age 14 are not employed in occupations or processes deemed hazardous by the Government.(11, 12, 24) The Road Transport Workers Ordinance prohibits children under age 18 from working in the road transportation sector.(32) As of 2002, 29 occupations and 34 processes appear on the Government's hazardous list of prohibited occupations or processes. They include manufacturing; mixing and applying pesticides and insecticides; working at railway stations or ports; carpet weaving; deep-sea fishing; construction; working in the glass bangle industry and manufacturing cement, explosives, and other products that involve the use of toxic substances.(11, 13) Brick making and domestic service, sectors in which many child laborers work, are not covered by the list of prohibited hazardous occupations or processes.(24) Further, the list only prohibits occupations and processes for children under age 14, leaving children ages 15 to 17 unprotected from dangerous or harmful work.(12, 32) The Government also lacks protections for children involved in street work.

Punjab is the only province to have passed a law on the employment of children. This law mirrors the existing national laws.(12) Each of the remaining four provinces proposed new draft legislation pending approval by the provincial governments. Reportedly, this draft legislation prohibits work for children under age 14 and hazardous work for children under age 18 in all four provinces.(24) Under the current laws, children remain vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

Bonded labor, forced labor, and human trafficking are prohibited by law. The Bonded Labor System Abolition Act (BLSA) of 1992 eliminates the liability of bonded laborers to repay their debt and frees property tied to this debt.(6) In 2012, the Punjab provincial government passed the Punjab BLSA becoming the first province to pass such legislation as required by the 18th Amendment.(16) Part II of the Constitution of Pakistan outlaws all forms of forced labor.(33) The Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance 2002 prohibits the trafficking of children internationally for exploitive activities; however, it does not address trafficking within Pakistan.(14) The Government uses the Penal Code and Sections 17 through 23 of the Emigration Ordinance, which address fraudulent immigration, to prosecute internal trafficking cases.(34, 35)

The Penal Code prohibits prostitution of anyone under age 18.(36) Pakistan's laws do not specifically prohibit child pornography, but the Penal Code outlaws the circulation or production of any obscene books, drawings, representations, or other objects.(37, 38)

In 2012, the Government passed the National Commission of Human Rights Act. The Commission will work to ensure that Pakistan is meeting its international treaty obligations including those related to child labor.(24, 39)

Pakistan does not have military conscription. The minimum voluntary recruitment age is 17.(27) The law prohibits the involvement of children in armed conflict.(14) Section 122 of the Pakistan Penal Code prohibits any organization other than State forces from recruiting and or arming people.(12) The Anti-Terrorism Act addresses the issue of forced conscription.(12)

The 18th Amendment to the Constitution guarantees free and compulsory education to children through age 16.(40) In 2012, the Government passed the Right to Free and Compulsory Education Act which provides free and compulsory education to all children from age 5 to 16 years. The Law prescribes penalties for individuals who employ children covered under the Act including fines and/or imprisonment.(41)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

There are no national-level coordinating committees on child labor in Pakistan.(24) Provincial governments and labor ministries are responsible for the coordination of child labor issues on the provincial level. Provincial coordination committees along with Child Labor Resource Cells conduct research, build capacity, and coordinate child labor activities at the provincial level.(24, 42) Work remains to be done to effectively coordinate at the provincial level. Additionally, there is a lack of sharing and coordination nationally amongst provinces.(24)

Labor inspection is carried out at the provincial, rather than national level.(43) Provincial departments of labor perform inspections in industrial areas and markets to identify child labor violations, enforce both national and provincial labor laws and pursue legal action against employers.(6) These bodies do not enforce child labor laws in agricultural settings.(44) In Punjab, routine factory labor inspections have been replaced by a self-declaration system whereby factory owners post declarations regarding workplace safety, health and wage issues in their factories. Some of those factories are then chosen at random for inspection.(42) Because declarations are not mandatory and the review of declarations is the only method used to select companies for inspection, many factories go uninspected and there are no penalties for not complying with the self-declaration policy.(12, 42) In Punjab and Sindh, inspectors are instructed not to inspect a business for one year following its establishment. In addition, inspectors must seek permission from employers before labor inspections can be conducted.(14)

Research has not revealed the number of labor inspectors or inspections conducted throughout Pakistan.(12) The Government of Pakistan does not collect data on the number of violations, children assisted, or penalties imposed for those found to commit child labor violations.(12)

Bonded labor legislation is supposed to be enforced by local vigilance committees. They are responsible for implementing the BLSA, assisting in rehabilitating bonded laborers, and helping the laborers achieve the objectives of the law.(45) The committees are designed to include the deputy commissioner of each district and representatives from the police, judiciary, municipal authorities, and workers and employers groups. However, in most districts the committees are non-functioning.(3, 46)

Police lack the necessary personnel, training and equipment to confront the armed guards who often oversee bonded laborers.(14) These circumstances contrive to hamper the effectiveness of BLSA enforcement, and since the law's passage in 1992, there have been no convictions under the act.(16)

The anti-trafficking unit of the Federal Investigation Agency (FIA) is the lead agency responsible for enforcing transnational trafficking-related laws.(42) FIA cooperates with other governments on trafficking cases, operates a hotline for victims, and publishes information on anti-trafficking efforts on its Web site.(47) The Government of Pakistan does not collect data on the number of criminal investigations, prosecutions, children assisted or convictions of child traffickers and those using children in other exploitative forms of labor. Children identified in the smuggling of illicit goods may be treated as criminals rather than victims.(12, 42)

The Child Protection and Rehabilitation Bureau provides housing for trafficked children, including children returned from working as camel jockeys in the United Arab Emirates and reintegrates child victims of trafficking into their families and home communities. However, government officials lack procedures and resources necessary to identify child victims of trafficking, which hampers these efforts.(14)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government's 2000 National Policy and Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor highlights three objectives: withdraw children from hazardous occupations, rehabilitate child laborers, and eliminate all forms of child labor.(12) It outlines a strategy for combating child labor that includes awareness raising, establishing child labor resource centers, conducting surveys to expand knowledge on child labor, strengthening enforcement, expanding education facilities, and implementing poverty alleviation measures.(48) The National Commission for Child Welfare and Development is in charge of the ongoing policy implementation. The Commission continues to exist after devolution and was moved under the Ministry of Human Rights in December 2011.(12) The National policy outlines resources to be allocated to implementation, including $1.16 million from the Government; a fixed yearly contribution by the quasi-governmental education assistance agency, Pakistan Bait-ul-Mal; and the nonprofit Islamic educational trust, the Iqra Fund.(12, 48)

A principal goal of the Government's National Action Plan for Children is to prohibit, restrict, and regulate child labor with an eventual goal of its ultimate elimination.(49) The plan lays out 14 key strategies and actions including harmonizing work between government agencies, NGOs, and donors; promoting research on child labor issues; developing nonformal education for child laborers; providing microcredit for families of child laborers; and conducting national surveys on child labor. The Action Plan also addresses child trafficking and outlines key objectives for its elimination.(49)

Both of the aforementioned plans mandate child labor surveys; however, such surveys have not been conducted since 1996.(24) The lack of recent data hampers the Government's ability to assess the prevalence of child labor and to develop policies or plans for future child labor initiatives.

The FIA has a National Action Plan for Combating Human Trafficking. This plan lays out prevention, prosecution, and protection strategies for ending human trafficking, including child trafficking.(50) It provides for awareness-raising efforts, service provider training, data collection, and the establishment of victims' shelters. The plan also outlines which ministry, agency, or unit is responsible for each action.(50)

The National Education Policy focuses on increasing the literacy rate and providing livelihood skills to children engaged in child labor. The Policy aims to expand nonformal and vocational education programs to children, including child laborers.(51)

The Government has incorporated the elimination of the worst forms of child labor into other development and poverty reduction policies, including its current Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper.(12, 52) The Poverty Alleviation Strategy includes preferential access to microfinance for families of working children.(12)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government continued to administer the National Centers for Rehabilitation of Child Labor.(12) The centers aim to remove children ages 5 to 14 from hazardous labor and provide them with education, clothing, and a stipend. There are currently 151 centers.(12) During the reporting period, the centers withdrew children from hazardous labor in brick making, carpet weaving, mining, leather tanning, construction, glass bangle manufacturing, and agriculture.(42)

Pakistan continued to participate in a $4.14 million, European Commission-funded project to combat the worst forms of child labor; the project ends in 2013.(53) The project, which covers many informal sectors that have bonded and forced child labor, includes plans for a national survey on child labor and strategies to raise awareness and mainstream child trafficking and child labor initiatives into national policies. The Government makes in-kind contributions and dedicates personnel to the project.(6) The project is working with the Government to establish Federal Child Labor Units and Provincial Child Labor Units that will monitor the implementation of a national child labor program.(32)

In 2012, the Punjab Provincial Child Labor Unit began to implement a 5-year, $2 million project to combat the worst forms of child labor; this project is funded by the Government.(24, 54) The project provides nonformal education and literacy services to children in the worst forms of child labor in four of Punjab's districts. The project also provides livelihood services to target families and improves working conditions.(54)

The Punjab Provincial Government continued implementation of its own $1.4 million project (launched at the end of 2008) aimed at eliminating bonded labor in brick kilns. This project had helped nearly 7,000 child bonded laborers and provided $467,000 in micro loans to help free laborers from debt as of the most recent information available.(42) The project also helps bonded laborers to obtain national identification cards.(12) Given the magnitude of the bonded labor situation in Pakistan, the resources allocated to these programs appear to be insufficient to properly address the problem.

During the reporting period, the national Government launched the Waseela-e-Taleem initiative under the Benazir Income Support Program. This initiative will provide financial assistance and livelihood skills to 3 million poor families who commit to enrolling their children into primary school.(24, 55)

The Government participated in a counter-trafficking program that aims to create 18 district task forces to combat trafficking. These task forces identify trafficking victims, create referral mechanisms to guide victims to appropriate services, and build cooperation between local government, law enforcement, and civil society.(14) This project also supports a dialogue between Pakistan, Afghanistan, and the Islamic Republic of Iran on migration management.(14)

In Punjab Province, the Government implements the Education Voucher Scheme, which promotes education for children vulnerable to child labor. The program provides stipends to private schools for students enrolled from low-income areas of Lahore.(12, 56) However, this Scheme only reaches a small portion of students and the other four provinces of Pakistan lack the resources to ensure that all children receive a free and compulsory education as assured in the Constitution.(12)

The Government of Pakistan has a number of initiatives to address the worst forms of child labor, but their limited reach is insufficient to address the scope of the child labor problem. In addition, there is no evidence of programs specifically targeting child domestics, and Pakistan lacks programs to raise awareness of and provide assistance to children being used in armed conflict.(14)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Pakistan:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Establish a minimum age for employment.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Create comprehensive prohibitions against additional specific hazardous activities and clearly establish a minimum age for hazardous work at 18.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Enact laws to provide protections for child domestic servants and children working on the streets.	2011, 2012
	Adopt amendments to the Pakistan Penal Code to clearly criminalize child pornography and internal child trafficking.	2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Ensure that the response to the worst forms of child labor can be coordinated at both the regional and national levels.	2011, 2012
	Revise the self-declaration labor monitoring system in Punjab to require employers to post reports on workplace safety, health, and wages and thereby be subject to inspection.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Allow labor inspectors to conduct inspections at any time, without notice, including within the first year of an enterprise's establishment and within agricultural settings.	2011, 2012
	Provide adequate funding for training to enable investigators to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Create mechanisms that enable consistent enforcement of child labor laws.	2011, 2012
	Ensure that child victims of the worst forms of child labor are not treated as criminals.	2011, 2012
	Collect and publish enforcement data for child labor violations and criminal violation of child trafficking laws.	2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Conduct sectoral surveys on areas with a high incidence of child labor to increase the knowledge base in these areas and inform policy and program planning.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Expand government programs to reach a larger number of bonded child laborers.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Expand education programs to provide free and compulsory education as required in the Right to Free and Compulsory Education Act.	2011, 2012
	Implement programs to raise awareness and provide assistance to children used by non-state militant groups to engage in armed conflict.	2011, 2012
	Increase the size and scope of government programs to reach children working in the worst forms of child labor including work in domestic service.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Panama

In 2012, Panama made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor conducted a child labor survey in October 2012 and increased the funding for child labor inspections. The Ministry of Health added child labor into Executive Decree 268, which determines the health categories that require immediate notification to health or local authorities. Additionally, the Ministry of Labor increased the number of scholarships offered to child laborers to attend school as part of its direct action program. However, the National Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents and the National Plan for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Young Workers have not been finalized and gaps remain in legal prohibitions on some worst forms of child labor. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including dangerous activities in agriculture and street work in urban areas.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Panama, primarily in dangerous activities in agriculture and street work in urban areas.(3-6) Children cultivate coffee, tomatoes, melons, and sugarcane.(7-14) Although limited, there is some evidence that the worst forms of child labor are also used in the production of beans, rice, bananas, corn, yucca, and onions.(9, 10, 14-16) Children from indigenous communities frequently migrate with their families to work in agriculture.(10, 14, 17) Farm owners often pay wages according to the amount harvested, leading families to bring their children to work alongside them to harvest greater amounts.(11, 14) Children in Panama are engaged in dangerous activities in agriculture. Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(5) Limited evidence indicates that children in Panama are engaged in fishing.(6, 14) These children may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(15, 18-20)

In urban areas, children work in hazardous activities on the streets selling goods, shining shoes, washing cars, and assisting bus drivers by collecting fares.(6, 14, 21). Children working on the streets may be vulnerable to severe weather, traffic accidents, and crime.(15, 20, 22-26) Limited evidence suggests that children also scavenge the ocean for metal and items from boats that can be sold, an activity that may also expose them to drowning and injuries.(6, 14, 18, 20, 26)

Many children, mostly girls of indigenous descent, work as domestic servants, and there are reports of abuse, including domestic servitude.(3, 6, 19, 23, 27-29) Some children are victims of sex trafficking in other countries, but most are exploited within the country.(14, 29) Children from Panama are also recruited by Colombian non-state armed groups.(30, 31)

According to the Government of Panama, 25.5 percent of indigenous children between the ages of 5 and 17 are in child labor.(19, 23, 32) Children of indigenous descent face greater barriers to access education services; many must travel significant distances to reach school, increasing the risk that these children will enter the workforce rather than attend school.(19)

The Government of Panama, through the General Comptroller of the Republic and the National Institute of Statistics, published the results of the 2010 Survey on Child Labor. According to the survey in 2010, there were 60,702 children and adolescents economically active or working, compromising 7.1 percent of the population between ages 5 to 17.(3, 6, 15, 32) The results indicated that boys (10.3 percent) are more likely to work than girls (3.7 percent). The ILO has indicated that government policies may have contributed to a decline in the rate of child labor between 2008 and 2010.(33, 34)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Panama's Constitution, Family Code, and Labor Code set the minimum age for employment at 14, and at 15 for children who have not completed primary school.(35-37) Similarly, the Law on Education establishes that children under age 15, the age to which education is compulsory, cannot work or participate in other activities that deprive them of their right to attend school regularly.(38) Panama provides free and compulsory education for children between the ages of 4 and 15.(6)

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	C138, Minimum Age	✓
	C182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	CRC	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓
	Minimum Age for Work	14
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	18
	Compulsory Education Age	15
	Free Public Education	Yes

The Constitution allows children under the minimum age to work under conditions established by the laws.(35, 39) The Family Code and the Labor Code allow for light work in agriculture starting at age 12, as long as it does not impede school attendance.(14, 36, 37) The Labor Code states that minors ages 12 to 15 may be employed in agriculture if the work is outside regular school hours and limits work of minors under 16 to 6 hours per day and 36 hours per week.(37, 40) Similarly, the Agriculture Code permits children between ages 12 and 14 to perform agricultural labor, as long as the work does not interfere with their schooling.(36, 37, 41) Neither provision defines the kind of light work that children may perform in agriculture.(14, 36, 37)

Various laws and an executive decree govern dangerous work performed by children. The Family Code and the Labor Code prohibit children under age 18 from certain activities and types of hazardous work, including work in venues where alcohol is sold, in public transport, with electricity, with toxic substances, and underground.(6, 36, 37) Both the Labor Code and the Penal Code establish penalties for employing children in dangerous or illegal occupations.(37, 42) Panamanian law also criminalizes the use of children in certain activities involving illegal substances.(42) Executive Decree No. 19, of 2006, provides a list of hazardous work for children, banned both by the Labor Code and by the Penal Code. The Decree clarifies the types of work considered unsafe for children under age 18, including work under water or on ships and work that involves exposure to pesticides or extreme weather conditions. The Decree also prohibits children from using heavy equipment or dangerous tools, carrying heavy loads to transport goods or people, and recycling trash.(26) The Decree indicates that violations related to hazardous child labor will be sanctioned in accordance with existing laws, although it is unclear what penalties are applicable.(26, 43)

The Constitution, the Penal Code, and Law 79 on Trafficking in Persons and Related Activities, afford related protections that can be used to sanction forced labor.(14, 35, 42, 44, 45) For example, the Penal Code prohibits the sale of children and provides increased penalties if actions result in sexual exploitation, forced labor, or servitude of children; moreover, the Constitution states that no one can be deprived of their liberty.(14, 35, 42) The Family Code guarantees children protection against being kidnapped, sold, or trafficked for any purpose, but it does not include penalties.(36)

There are additional protections in the Panamanian Penal Code against the worst forms of child labor. The Penal Code prohibits soliciting and paying a minor for prostitution as well as benefiting from the proceeds of child prostitution.(42) Additionally, the Penal Code provides comprehensive prohibitions against child pornography, including its production, distribution, possession, or promotion. Child sex tourism is also prohibited.(14, 42) Trafficking of minors domestically and internationally for sexual purposes is punishable with prison and fines.(42, 46) Law No. 79 on Trafficking in Persons and Related Activities prohibits trafficking of adults and minors, forced prostitution, forced labor, prostitution, slavery, and related activities. Articles 50, 51, and 53 correspond to the treatment and services that minors who are victims of trafficking are entitled to receive.(20, 45) Additionally, Law 79 adds offenses involving trafficking in persons activities to the Penal Code.(20, 45)

Panama does not have armed forces; therefore, there is no military conscription.

During the reporting period, the National Assembly drafted and sent to first debate Law No. 412, which prevents and eradicates child labor in coffee growing and other agricultural regions.(6) Additionally, the Ministry of Health (MINS) added child labor into Executive Decree 268, which determines the health categories that require immediate notification to health or local authorities.(47, 48)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Workers (CETIPPAT) coordinates various efforts to combat child labor. CETIPPAT is led by the First Lady of Panama and comprises the Ministries of Labor (MITRADEL), Education, Health, and Agriculture, as well as representatives from civil society and workers' and employers' organizations.(49) In addition, the National Commission for the Prevention of Crimes of Sexual Exploitation (CONAPREDES) coordinates government efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children; it is led by the Office of the Attorney General. Members of the CONAPREDES include the Attorney General as well as the Ministries of Labor, Education, Social Development, and Health.(50)

The MITRADEL is charged with enforcing child labor laws. It established the National Bureau against Child Labor and for the Protection of Adolescent Workers (DIRETIPPAT). The Bureau oversees child labor inspections; carries out education programs for employers, parents, and children on child labor; and implements the National Plan for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Young Workers.(15, 51, 52) The MITRADEL employs 138 labor inspectors, 7 of whom are assigned to child labor issues in Panama City.(6) However, all labor inspectors are trained to look for evidence of child labor.(53, 54) In 2012, MITRADEL had a budget of $2.1 million, with $1.3 designated for the Labor Inspectorate and $815,000 for DIRETIPPAT, to conduct inspections, coordination, and programs, among other activities. The budget allocated for child labor inspection was $188,472, an increase of $18,472 from 2011.(55, 56) MITRADEL had sufficient resources such as vehicles and computers to carry out activities in 2012.(55) During the reporting period, the MITRADEL carried out 3,340 labor inspections and found 30 child labor violations.(6) In 2012, DIRETIPPAT removed 1,700 working children from the street and from hazardous labor.(6) Additionally, MITRADEL investigated 48 complaints of child labor offenses, found 30 to be substantiated, and issued fines.(6)

Complaints related to child labor may be filed through hotlines run by the MITRADEL or the Ministry of Social Development (MIDES), in person at one of the MITRADEL offices or at social service centers run by MIDES throughout the country.(15, 22) The MITRADEL refers cases of children found in exploitative work in the informal sector to the Child and Adolescent Courts and the National Secretariat for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (SENNIAF).(15)

The Organized Crime Unit within the Public Ministry is responsible for investigating trafficking cases and operates a unit dedicated to investigating trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation.(15, 22) CONAPREDES has three units within the section of Sexual Exploitation that conduct investigations. Turnover in personnel of these units results in a lack of permanently trained staff at CONAPREDES.(20) In 2012, CONAPREDES worked with the government of the United States to train two specialized units within the CONAPREDES organized crime unit.(6) During the reporting period, there were 25 investigations for child pornography and one for commercial sexual exploitation.(6)

Panama also is a member of the Regional Conference of Migration, which implements an action plan with a special focus on child migrants and their repatriation.(57, 58) During 2012, five workshops with 111 participants were carried out, nationally targeting labor inspectors and social workers who covered issues on the rights of migrant workers as well as children's rights in Latin America.(6)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Panama continues to implement the National Plan for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Young Workers (2007-2011).^(6, 49, 59) The National Plan is administered through CETIPPAT; it includes raising awareness, strengthening national legislation, improving the quality of life of at-risk families, reintegrating child workers into the educational system, and producing systems to monitor working children.⁽⁴⁹⁾ Although CETIPPAT representatives consulted with various stakeholders such as institutions, private business, employers, and civil organizations to draft the new National Plan for the Eradication of Child Labor, a new National Plan was not finalized.^(6, 59) Currently the National Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Sexual Commercial Exploitation of Children and Adolescents 2008-2010 continues to be implemented.⁽⁶⁾ However, a new National Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents was not finalized.

Panama continued to implement the Roadmap towards the Elimination of Child Labor, which aims to achieve the goals of the National Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2015, and all child labor by 2020, by strengthening anti-poverty, health, and educational programs and policies.^(6, 60)

In August 2012, the Government of Panama hosted the Meeting of Labor Ministers from Central America, Belize, and the Dominican Republic to highlight good practices and lessons learned. At the end of this meeting, the Ministers signed the Panama Declaration, committing themselves to specific actions by country to eradicate the worst forms child labor.^(61, 62) During the meeting, the Minister of Labor of Panama highlighted the Direct Action Program that has benefited 3,499 beneficiaries by providing scholarships.^(63, 64) Participating Labor Ministers had the opportunity to identify remaining challenges to eradicate child labor in the region as they prepare for the Global Conference on Child Labor in Brazil in 2013.⁽⁶³⁾ Also in preparation for the Conference in Brazil, the Government of Panama, in collaboration with Fundación Telefónica, hosted the Fourth International Meeting on Child Labor in October 2012.^(65, 66)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the Government of Panama carried out a child labor survey.^(6, 67) The Government of Panama continues to implement social programs to combat poverty among the most vulnerable and to increase the access of children and families to basic and vocational education. A conditional cash transfer program, Network of Opportunities, provides cash transfers to families based on their participation in health and education services.^(6, 68) The 2010 Survey of Child Labor indicates that in indigenous areas, there was a decrease in the percentage of children involved in hazardous work, and an increase in educational opportunities. The Government of Panama attributes these trends to the high participation rates in the program.⁽³²⁾ The cash transfer program also offers training to beneficiaries to improve income-generation opportunities.^(14, 68, 69) The impact of this conditional cash transfer program on child labor does not appear to have been assessed.

SENNIAF implemented programs to identify children engaged in the worst forms of child labor and commercial sexual exploitation, remove them from exploitative situations, and provide them necessary services.^(6, 14) DIRETIPPAT, together with Fundación Telefónica, carried out two workshops in 2012. The first workshop was on child labor and human rights and the second workshop was a certificate program in strategies to prevent and eradicate child labor, facilitated by the Universidad Especializada de las Americas (UDELAS).⁽⁶⁾

The office of the First Lady sponsored a march in June to celebrate World Day Against Child Labor. There was participation from private business, NGOs, and government institutions.^(70, 71) MITRADEL joined the National Council of Private Businesses (CoNEP) in creating a partnership with 105 businesses across Panama to sign the Voluntary Agreement of Corporate Social Responsibility to prevent and eradicate child labor. The agreement was signed during the Meeting of Ministers.^(62, 72)

Additionally, MINSAs prepared a guide for comprehensive health attention for children and adolescents who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation. The national coordinator of the children and adolescents' program at MINSAs together with an interagency team gave awareness and training seminars on the guide to doctors to ensure proper usage of the guide.^(6, 47)

An alliance among 10 coffee plantations to address child labor in the coffee sector remains in the early planning phase with participation of the office of the First Lady.⁽¹⁰⁻¹³⁾ As part of the MITRADEL's program to prevent and eradicate child labor, the Ministry continued to grant scholarships to child laborers throughout the country to guarantee their access to education through the Institute for Training and Utilization of Human Resources.(16, 73) The Government of Panama offered 1,483 new scholarships to child laborers, an increase of 1,200 from 2011.(20, 55, 74) As a result of an agreement signed in 2011, the Government of Panama began discussions with Telefónica Movistar to coordinate programs to eradicate child labor.(75, 76)

The Government of Panama also participates in two USDOL-funded regional projects funded in 2012 to combat child labor among vulnerable groups and to promote lesson sharing between Panama, Ecuador, and other countries. The $3.5 million project strengthens policy and enforcement of child labor laws and occupational safety, and the $6.5 million project combats the worst forms of child labor among the most vulnerable populations, including Afro-descendants and migrant and indigenous children by providing them with educational and livelihood services. In Ecuador, both projects are piloting efforts to address the link between child labor and disabilities.(77, 78)

Additionally, Panama participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Panama, the project aims to strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(79)

Although the Government of Panama has implemented programs to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children involved in domestic service, a sector in which indigenous children are more likely to be involved.

Areas	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Establish clear regulations for the conditions under which children between ages 12 and 14 may engage in light agricultural work, to ensure they are not exposed to hazardous labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Clarify what penalties apply for violations of Executive Decree No. 19.	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Revise Ministry of Public Security assignment policies to address turnover in personnel so that CONAPREDES has permanently trained staff.	2011, 2012
Policies	Update and implement the National Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents.	2011, 2012
	Finalize and implement the National Plan for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Young Workers.	2012
Social Programs	Expand social programs that address child labor in urban informal work.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess whether the conditional cash transfer program- Network of Opportunities has an impact on child labor.	2012
	Take special measures, through social and educational programming, to protect children of indigenous descent from labor abuses and labor law violations, with a particular focus on agriculture and domestic service.	2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Papua New Guinea made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Papua New Guinea established a Child Labor Unit; conducted trainings to sensitize labor inspectors and law enforcement officials to the worst forms of child labor; published a research report on the situation of children in commercial sexual exploitation and working street children in Port Moresby; and worked with the Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE) project to implement a project to prevent and withdraw children from the worst forms of child labor, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children. However, Papua New Guinea does not have a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations from which children are prohibited, Papua New Guinea's child labor laws are not effectively enforced, and the lack of compulsory education may increase the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor. Children in Papua New Guinea continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation.

Children in Papua New Guinea are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in domestic service and in commercial sexual exploitation.(3-10) Some children working in domestic service are held in indentured servitude in order to pay off family debts.(3, 6-8, 10, 11) These children work long hours, lack freedom of mobility, do not have access to medical treatment, and do not attend school.(6) Children employed as domestic servants may also be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. They may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(12)

The commercial sexual exploitation of children in Papua New Guinea typically occurs in bars, nightclubs, and brothels.(7, 9) Although information is limited, there are reports that children are exploited through the production of pornography. There are also reports that children are trafficked both internally and from neighboring countries.(8, 13) Limited evidence suggests that members of the Papua New Guinea police are responsible for committing acts of sexual violence against children, and for facilitating trafficking by accepting bribes and ignoring victims forced into commercial sexual exploitation or labor.(6-9, 14)

Children also work in dangerous activities in agriculture.(4, 5, 7, 15, 16) Although information is limited, there are reports that children in Papua New Guinea work on tea and coffee farms, and on copra, cocoa, and rubber plantations.(7, 9, 16) These children may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, apply harmful pesticides, and work long hours.(7, 15)

In urban areas, there are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(4, 7, 9, 10, 17) In Papua New Guinea street work also includes children chopping firewood for sale, moving furniture, loading and unloading boxes from containers, scavenging for scrap metal, and begging. Children working on the streets work very long hours, work closely around cars and trucks, and are subjected to physical, verbal, and sexual abuse.(7)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Employment Act sets the minimum age for work at 16.(3, 4, 9) The Act only prohibits children aged 16 and younger from working in industrial undertakings in the fishing and mining industries, or under circumstances that are injurious or likely to be injurious. The minimum age for hazardous work in Papua New Guinea is set to 16.(5) This is not consistent with ILO Convention 182, which states that hazardous work by children under the age of 18 should be prohibited. There is no comprehensive list of hazardous work from which children are prohibited, but the Department of Labor and Industrial Relations (DLIR) is developing one.(5-7, 9, 13)

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	C138, Minimum Age	✓
	C182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	CRC	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	No
	CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	No
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	No
	Minimum Age for Work	16
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	16
	Compulsory Education Age	No
	Free Public Education	Yes

During the reporting period the DLIR also worked on labor law reform, including the revision of the Employment Act. Current revisions to the Employment act aim to address legislative gaps in the child labor laws, supporting the development of a national child labor policy, and in the compilation of a hazardous list.(18) The Government will conduct a formal review of the revised Employment Act before it is given to parliament, but a review committee has yet to be established.(19)

Children ages 11 to 16 may work in family businesses by obtaining medical clearance, parental permission, and a work permit.(7, 20) A permit would not be issued for work considered harmful to the child's health, their physical, mental, or spiritual development or work that interferes with their schooling. Children are prohibited from working between the hours of 6 p.m. and 6 a.m. unless they are between ages 16 and 17 and working for a family business.(21) The Child Welfare Act prohibits street trading by children of any age between the hours of 8 p.m. and 6 a.m.(22)

The Lukautim Pikinini (Child) Act of 2009 prohibits the employment of children in conditions that are likely to be hazardous, interfere with their education, and will be harmful to their overall wellbeing. The Act also prescribes penalties of up to 10 years imprisonment if an individual is found guilty of such an offence.(4, 22-24)

The Constitution prohibits forced labor.(4, 25) The Criminal Code prohibits the use, procurement, or offering of a child less than 18 years of age for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Criminal Code also forbids the abduction, kidnapping, or procurement of girls younger than age 18 for sexual exploitation.(4, 9, 13) In 2002, the Government amended the Criminal Code through the Sexual Offences and Crimes Against Children Act. The amendments include harsher penalties for the sexual assault and sexual exploitation of children, including commercial sexual exploitation.(26)

Papua New Guinea does not have legislative provisions for offenses committed against children for the purpose of labor exploitation; laws that explicitly forbid the sale and trafficking of children; or legal instruments that prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.(3, 6, 8, 13, 27) However, the Department of Justice and Attorney General (DJAG), in partnership with the International Organization for Migration, continued to push the newly drafted People Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons Bill through parliament as part of a USDOS-funded project, Combating Trafficking in Persons in Papua New Guinea. The Bill is expected to be presented to Parliament soon.(8, 27-29) If the legislation is passed, it will criminalize smuggling and trafficking in persons, provide assistance and protection for victims, and augment penalties for smugglers and traffickers such as increased imprisonment for offenses that involve children under the age of 18 years.(28)

There is no compulsory military service in Papua New Guinea. The minimum age for voluntary military service is 18, or 16 with parental approval.(4, 30)

In 2011, the Government abolished school fees for students up to grade 10, and introduced subsidies for grades 11 and 12, as well as university and other tertiary colleges.(10, 31) However, education is not compulsory, which makes children especially vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school and are not allowed to legally work until they are age 16.(5, 9) There is limited evidence that the threat of sexual violence against young girls, and the shame and stigma that follows this violence, prevents many girls from attending school.(32)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of Papua New Guinea has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, the DLIR is responsible for implementing and enforcing child labor laws, and the Office of the Director for Child Welfare in the Department of Community Development is responsible for enforcing the Lukautim Pikinini (Child) Act.(13, 22) The DLIR established a Child Labor Unit with a Child Labor Desk in 2012, which will liaise with the Employers and Workers Unions and other line agencies.(9)

The DLIR has chaired a Project Advisory Committee (PAC) on Child Labor for the regional TACKLE child labor project since 2008. DLIR has also endorsed the establishment of a new permanent, interagency committee on child labor. The endorsement is pending signature by the Secretary of DLIR.(9)

The Government employs 55 labor inspectors who cover all 19 provinces in the country.(4) They are responsible for enforcing the country's labor laws, including child labor laws.(4, 22) DLIR conducted three workshops in 2012 to sensitize labor inspectors to child labor, particularly its worst forms. DLIR reports that further training is required.(9) Research did not uncover the number of inspections conducted or the number of violations discovered during the reporting period.

The Police Sexual Offenses Squad is responsible for enforcing laws against child commercial sexual exploitation and the use of children in illicit activities.(4) Government authorities did not report investigating, arresting, or prosecuting any trafficking offenders.(8)

In 2012, the DJAG, in partnership with the IOM, as part of the USDOS-funded project, Combating Trafficking in Persons in Papua New Guinea, provided a 2-week counter-trafficking training program for approximately 200 law enforcement officers, civil servants, and NGO workers.(29) DJAG and IOM also launched a mass information campaign to raise awareness of human trafficking in all targeted provinces. The campaign will run for 6 months and include a toll-free counter-trafficking hotline.(29)

Both the ILO Committee of Experts and senior staff at the Department of Community Development have noted that enforcement is ineffective because of inadequate resources and cultural acceptance of child labor.(6, 13, 22) The responsible agencies lack personnel, particularly labor inspectors and police officers. Inadequate technical capacity and coordination among enforcement agencies constitute additional obstacles to effective enforcement.(4, 9, 22)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Papua New Guinea does not have an overall policy on the Worst Forms of Child Labor. A draft National Action Plan (NAP) for Child Labor was proposed and endorsed in 2012.(9) The endorsed NAP is awaiting technical input before being finalized, and approved by the Secretary of Labor.(9)

The report on "Child Labour in Papua New Guinea: Rapid Assessment in Port Moresby on Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (CSEC) and Children Working on the streets" was published in 2011 and launched by the DLIR at a high-level event in April 2012.(7, 18) The results of these data were used to form the basis for discussing and initiating the draft framework for the National Plan of Action for Child Labor, and DLIR cited this report as the definitive source for government statistics on child trafficking.(9, 33)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Papua New Guinea continued to participate in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Papua New Guinea, the project aims to strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(34)

The Government of Papua New Guinea continued to participate in the regional project funded by the European Commission called Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE). With a 4-year budget of slightly over $23 million, TACKLE aims to combat child labor in the Pacific region.(35) In Papua New Guinea, the project objective is to improve government capacity to implement and enforce child labor laws and policy, and to work with social partners and civil society towards these goals. TACKLE has been extended until late 2013.(36)

DLIR reported that Papua New Guinea has undertaken a social program in Port Moresby with the Young Women's Christian Association (YWCA) as part of the TACKLE project. The program began in April 2012 and is working to withdraw children involved in child labor and prevent those at risk from becoming involved.(9, 18) This program will also focus on the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(18)

Research found no evidence of any other programs to address the worst forms of child labor for children working on the streets and in commercial sexual exploitation.

Papua New Guinea

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Papua New Guinea:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Adopt a comprehensive list of hazardous work from which children under age 18 are prohibited.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Reform child labor legislation to conform with international child labor conventions, including raising the minimum age for hazardous work to 18, and expanding the law to prohibit the abduction, kidnapping, or procurement of children for the purpose of labor exploitation.	2011, 2012
	Enact the proposed anti-trafficking legislation.	2011, 2012
	Establish a compulsory school age, for all children, that is equivalent to or greater than the minimum age for work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Make enforcement data on the worst forms of child labor publicly available.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide inspectors with the authority, training, and resources to enforce labor laws and other laws required to protect children from the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Finalize and implement the draft National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Institute programs that address the worst forms of child labor, with a particular focus on children engaged in street work and in commercial sexual exploitation.	2010, 2011, 2012

Paraguay

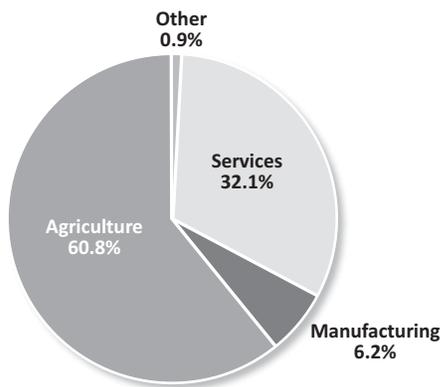

In 2012, Paraguay made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government expanded a nationwide program to combat the worst forms of child labor by more than doubling its geographical coverage from 10 to 23 municipal districts. The Government also created a comprehensive legal framework and outlawed internal trafficking, including forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, the Paraguayan judiciary trained more than 400 judicial advisors and judges on child labor, forced labor, and child domestic labor issues. Despite these gains, Paraguay's child labor inspection system conducted significantly fewer inspections in 2012 than in 2011 and the inspection system remains underfunded relative to the scope of the problem. In addition, the Government did not make information available on whether businesses were fined for child labor infractions. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in hazardous activities in agriculture and in domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Paraguay, particularly in hazardous activities in agriculture and in domestic service.(3-5) Children, primarily indigenous boys, work in hazardous activities in the production of cotton.(6, 7) Children are also involved in the worst forms of child labor in sugarcane production.(7-10) A 2011 quantitative study on child labor in Paraguay's sugarcane sector estimated that children comprise more than 25 percent of the sugarcane workforce, and about one out of four of those children suffered injuries, on average, twice a year while working.(8) The most common injuries entailed lacerations to the upper or lower extremities obtained while cutting down or peeling the sharp outer leaves of the sugarcane, and other risks included carrying heavy loads and prolonged exposure to extreme heat, snakes, and insects.(8) Although evidence is limited, children reportedly work in the worst forms of child labor in the production of soy, sesame, wheat, manioc, peanuts, beans, and stevia.(6, 11) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(6, 8, 12)

Children, primarily girls of indigenous descent, work as child domestic servants.(4, 10) They may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(5, 11, 13) Children also work as street vendors and street beggars, and are vulnerable to severe weather, traffic accidents, and crime.(4, 9, 10, 14-17)

Children, primarily boys, also work in the production of limestone and bricks, which involves carrying heavy loads, the use of dangerous tools, and exposure to toxic dust.(6, 9, 10, 15, 18) Although the evidence is limited, there are reports that children work in the production of charcoal, which involves working long hours and carrying heavy loads.(12, 15)

Children in Paraguay are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic service from rural to urban areas, including Asunción, Encarnación, and Ciudad del Este.(19-21) Paraguayan children are found in sex trafficking in Argentina.(20, 22) Children are also reportedly used to traffic drugs.(10, 11)

Limited evidence suggests that in the Chaco region, indigenous children work raising cattle and sometimes work under conditions of debt bondage.(4, 16, 23, 24) The production of child pornography is a problem in Paraguay.(25, 26)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Child and Adolescent Code establishes the minimum age for work at 14, and light work is permitted for children between ages 12 and 14. However, the Government has not yet adopted regulations governing the nature and conditions of the light work permitted for children between ages 12 and 14.(27, 28) The List of Hazardous Work for Children (Decree 4951) prohibits children under age 18 from working in 26 broad classifications of work including work with dangerous tools, toxic substances, livestock, prolonged exposure to extreme climactic conditions, and work in public transport, public areas, mines, and domestic service.(17) The Labor Code establishes fines for employing children under age 18 in hazardous forms of work.(29) However, research has not identified the specific legal provisions that stipulate penalties for violations of the List of Work Endangering Children or which ministries enforce Decree 4951.(17, 28, 29)

The Penal Code prohibits commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents, including recruiting, facilitating, and benefitting economically from child prostitution.(30) It also prohibits child pornography, including its production, distribution, and possession.(30) Both the Constitution and the Penal Code prohibit slavery, forced labor, or analogous conditions. The Penal Code establishes penalties for forced labor.(30, 31)

In 2012, the Government significantly strengthened its legal framework on human trafficking by passing the Comprehensive

Law Against Human Trafficking.(32) The Law specifically prohibits all forms of human trafficking carried out both internally and on international borders, including trafficking for the purposes of forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(32) The Penal Code requires increased penalties for crimes involving the trafficking of a child.(30)

Paraguayan law establishes the minimum age for conscription into the military at 18.(10, 33) The Penal Code prohibits the use of children in illicit activities.(9) The law establishes free and compulsory education until the completion of ninth grade, approximately age 15.(34-36)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Commission to Prevent and Eradicate the Exploitation of Children (CONAETI) is responsible for coordinating efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor.(28, 32, 37) CONAETI is led by the Ministry of Justice and Labor (MJT) and includes representatives from the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare, the Ministry of Education and Culture, the National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents, the Social Action Secretariat, the Women's Secretariat, as well as representatives of business groups, workers' groups, and civil society.(37) In 2012, Paraguay's main business association of sugarcane producers, the Paraguayan Sugar and Alcohol Center, joined the CONAETI.(32) The National Council for Children and Adolescents (National Council) is the national coordinating body that establishes policies to protect children's rights and approves specific programs aimed at children and adolescents. During the reporting period, the National Council met regularly.(32)

The MJT is responsible for inspecting workplaces for child labor.(10) It can issue fines against businesses found employing children in work prohibited by the Labor Code.(10) Child laborers identified by inspections are referred to other agencies for educational and social services. In 2012, the MJT employed 43 labor inspectors in eight state-level branch offices, the same number of inspectors as in 2011.(10) These inspectors inspect for all types of labor violations, including child labor.(10) Government and civil society groups have noted that the number and capacity of inspectors to address child labor is inadequate given the scope of the problem.(10) Inspectors lack resources, such as vehicles, which are necessary to reach remote areas with a high incidence of child labor.(10) From January to December 2012, the MJT conducted 399 labor inspections, a significant decrease from the 1,544 inspections that occurred between August 2010 to July 2011.(9, 10) Three inspections specifically targeted child labor in brick factories in Tobatí, but these did not discover child labor infractions.(10) Information was not available on whether the MJT issued or collected fines for child labor infractions or whether working children were removed as a result of inspections during the reporting period.(10) In 2012, the MJT arbitrated dozens of settlements among victims or relatives of child labor victims who were injured in their workplaces and are seeking compensation from their employers.(10) Also in 2012, the MJT trained 43 inspectors and MJT directors on conducting child labor inspections; the CONAETI conducted six workshops on the implementation of a new internal government guide on how to detect child labor.(10, 32)

The Government's Inter-Institutional Working Group on Preventing and Combating Human Trafficking, located within the Ministry of Foreign Relations, coordinates the Government's efforts to combat child trafficking.(10, 32) The Public Ministry's Special Directorate to Fight the Trafficking of Persons and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children is responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(37) In 2012, the unit employed three specialized prosecutors, an increase of one from the previous year, and 23 assistants.(10) These prosecutors regularly receive high-quality training in human trafficking and the sexual exploitation of children.(10, 37) During the reporting period, the Human Rights Directorate of the Paraguayan judiciary trained more than 400 judicial advisors and judges on child labor, forced labor, and child domestic labor issues.(32)

The National Police operates a unit that investigates cases of trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. In 2012, the unit employed 33 staff members and operated in five cities, the same as in 2011.(10, 37) The National Police has established mandatory training on human trafficking.(38) Along with local prosecutors, the anti-trafficking unit at the Attorney General's Office investigates and prosecutes human trafficking cases.(38) The National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents maintains a unit dedicated to fighting child trafficking.(22) In addition, the Ministry of Women's Affairs (MWA) has five dedicated personnel to the handling of female victims of trafficking; half of female trafficking victims are estimated to be children.(10)

The MWA and the National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents have offices dedicated to combating trafficking of children. The National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents and the Public Ministry maintain hotlines to report cases of trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children; these agencies provide social services to trafficking victims upon receiving referrals from law enforcement agencies.(37, 39) During the reporting period, the MWA provided assistance to 18 child victims of trafficking through its shelters and drop-in centers throughout the country.(21)

Although the Public Ministry sometimes acts on referrals from the MJT and the National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents, in dangerous cases of child labor and criminal law violations, there is no established mechanism for exchanging information between prosecutors at the Public Ministry and other agencies that receive complaints.(10) There was one conviction by the Public Ministry regarding the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.(10)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Paraguay's policy framework to address child labor is the National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Working Adolescents (2010-2015).(10) The objectives of the Strategy are to coordinate policies to combat the worst forms of child labor, provide access to free and quality education to child laborers and livelihood alternatives for their families, raise public awareness of child labor, and improve enforcement of child labor laws.(32, 40) During the reporting period, the Government worked with the ILO to create a monitoring tool to measure Paraguay's progress in implementing the Strategy.(32) The Government also has a National Plan for Development (2010-2020), which includes goals for reducing child labor as part of broader efforts to reduce social exclusion and poverty.(41)

In 2012, the Government's National Statistics Office worked with the ILO to analyze and prepare publications on the results of Paraguay's first national survey on child labor, conducted in 2011.(9, 32, 42-44) The study was released in April 2013.(22) In 2012, the National Statistics Office also conducted a national census that included questions on child labor.(10) The Ministry of Education and Culture also captures statistics on the working status of children through its student enrollment forms.(45)

The Government of Paraguay and other MERCOSUR countries are carrying out the Southern Child Initiative to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region.(10) The Initiative includes public campaigns against commercial sexual exploitation, trafficking, and child labor; mutual technical assistance in raising domestic legal frameworks to international standards on those issues; and the exchange of best practices related to victim protection and assistance.(46-48) During the reporting period, the Government of Paraguay implemented a public campaign to raise awareness about commercial sexual exploitation and child labor in agriculture and domestic service as part of the Regional Plan to Eradicate Child Labor implemented in MERCOSUR member countries.(32, 49)

Paraguay's National Tourism Office is a member of the Joint Regional Group for the Americas. The Joint Regional Group, whose members also include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela, conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America.(50, 51)

The National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents has an inter-institutional agreement with the National Bureau for Public Contracts to ensure that any goods or services procured by the government are not produced through child labor.(52)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Paraguay operated several programs to combat poverty, and to prevent or remove children engaged in or at risk of the worst forms of child labor. The Embrace Program assists children engaged in exploitative work by providing children and their families with health and education services, and by providing cash transfers conditioned on children's school attendance and withdrawal from work.(10, 32) Originally targeted at children working in urban areas, this program was expanded in 2011 and 2012 to target all children working in the worst forms of child labor, especially work involving garbage dumps, limestone quarries, and the production of sugarcane and bricks.(32) During the reporting period, the Embrace Program significantly increased its coverage, from 13 program centers in 10 districts in 2011, to 43 centers in 23 districts in 2012.(10, 32, 53) The Program has a budget of approximately $7 million, operates in 9 of Paraguay's 17 departments and, as of May 2012, has helped more than 5,331 children and 2,843 families.(32)

The Government also operates the Tekoporá Program, which provides conditional cash transfers to families in moderate to extreme poverty in the Concepción, San Pedro, Canindeyu, Caaguazu, and Caazapa departments.(10) The cash transfer is provided in exchange for the family's commitment to send children to school, be vaccinated, and attend regular medical checkups.(9, 10, 37) As of January 2013, the Tekoporá Program assists 88,320 families and operates with a yearly budget of approximately $40 million.(10)

The Ñopytyvô Program is another conditional cash transfer initiative funded by the Government. The Ñopytyvô Program serves impoverished indigenous families in the Chaco region.(54) The cash transfer is conditioned on families withdrawing children from child labor and meeting education and health requirements.(54) The Program assists approximately 700 families, including 1,320 children younger than age 14.(54)

The Ministry of Education and Culture works with the ILO to carry out child labor awareness-raising activities among students and teachers, to help school administrators identify child laborers, and to prevent children from engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(32) During the reporting period, these awareness-raising activities were initiated for the first time in schools in the Chaco region.(32)

Paraguay

The Comprehensive Attention Program for Street Children and Adolescents is managed by the National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents; it provides assistance and services to children living on the streets.(32) The program’s goal is to assist approximately 200 children.(32) The National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents also carries out actions to improve the livelihoods of indigenous communities through its Directorate of Indigenous Communities and Welfare.(32)

During the reporting period, the Government participated in a 4-year, USDOL-funded $6.75 million regional project to promote collaboration across four countries (Bolivia, Brazil, Ecuador, and Paraguay) to combat the worst forms of child labor among the most socially excluded populations, including indigenous children and children of Afro descent.(23) The project, which began in 2009, aims to rescue 6,600 children from the worst forms of child labor through education interventions in the four countries. The project also conducts capacity building of government and civil society organizations, raising awareness and conducting research.(23) The project supports programs to reduce child labor in garbage dumps in Encarnación and brick factories in Tobatí through the provision of educational opportunities for child laborers and children at risk of entering child labor.(55) In 2012, the Municipality of Encarnación’s garbage dump was declared “free of child labor” after the Municipality worked with the Embrace Program to withdraw child workers from working in the dump.(10)

In 2012, Paraguay participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Paraguay, the Project aims to build the capacity of the Government of Paraguay and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor.(56)

The Government also participated in donor-funded initiatives and collaborated with local NGOs to combat child trafficking.(9) The Government worked with the IDB on a $1.2 million regional project to combat the trafficking and sexual exploitation of children in municipalities of Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay, and Uruguay. The regional project aims to strengthen local organizations and governments that work in prevention, detection and victim assistance.(57) The Government also provided funding to NGOs to assist trafficking victims in Asunción and Ciudad del Este by providing victims with short-term legal, medical, and psychological services.(9)

During the reporting period, the MJT and the National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents worked with the Paraguayan Industrial Union and other NGOs on a pilot initiative to reduce child labor in sugarcane production by distributing information on child labor in sugarcane-producing communities in the interior of the country.(32)

Although the Government implements and participates in a range of programs to combat child labor, no known studies have been undertaken to assess the impact of these programs in reducing child labor.(10) Additional programs are needed to reach the magnitude of working children, especially in agriculture and domestic service.(10)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Paraguay:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Adopt regulations governing the nature and conditions of the light work permitted for children between ages 12 and 14.	2009, 2011, 2012
	Create and publicize the legislation that establishes sanctions for violations of Decree 4951, the List of Work Endangering Children.	2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Increase personnel and resources available to the Ministry of Justice and Labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase the number of child labor inspections, including those with a focus on occupational safety and health to reduce the occurrence of injury or permanent disability among children as a result of dangerous child labor.	2012
	Make information publicly available on penalties issued to employers for child labor infractions.	2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Increase efforts to prosecute crimes related to employing children in the worst forms of child labor, including by developing a coordination mechanism for government agencies to refer relevant complaints to the Public Ministry.	2012
Social Programs	Further expand Government programs to assist more families and children affected by the worst forms of child labor, especially in agriculture and domestic service.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact existing programs have had on reducing the worst forms of child labor.	2012

In 2012, Peru made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved and began implementing its second National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor for 2012-2021. As part of the strategy, the Government funded and launched two new pilot programs to reduce child labor in urban and rural areas. The Government also began collecting more detailed annual statistics on children's work and initiated two impact evaluations on programs to combat child labor. Further, the Ministry of Labor hired additional inspectors and increased the number of employers sanctioned for child labor violations. The National Police released public information on the number of children rescued from situations of trafficking, as well as information on criminal prosecutions of traffickers. While these efforts demonstrate positive steps, child labor inspections remain underfunded and are insufficient in number, especially in regions with the highest rates of child labor. There is also a lack of coordination and information-sharing between Government agencies dealing with child labor issues. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in hazardous activities in agriculture and mining.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Peru are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in hazardous activities in agriculture and mining.(3, 4) According to the Government's 2011 Household Survey, 68 percent of child laborers under the legal working age work in rural areas.(5) Though evidence is limited, in agriculture children reportedly produce cotton, rice, barley, coffee, broccoli, cacao, avocado, and sugarcane, which often exposes them to harmful pesticides, long working hours, and extreme weather.(6-8) Although information is limited, there are reports that children also perform hazardous activities in the production of Brazil nuts.(6-8) Children are responsible for shepherding and caring for farm animals, as well.(9) Children herding livestock may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(10)

Children work in mining, particularly gold mines, which requires them to carry heavy loads and work in poorly ventilated, unsafe conditions.(4, 6, 8, 11) Evidence suggests that forced child labor is a problem in informal gold mines.(8, 12-14) Children, principally boys, also work in fishing.(15, 16) These children may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(3, 17)

Peru

In urban areas, children produce bricks and fireworks, which may cause them to be harmed by dangerous chemicals, extreme heat, and carrying heavy loads.(8, 18) Children work on the streets as vendors, performers, beggars, and car washers, which exposes them to the risk of vehicle accidents. Children also work as fare collectors on buses and as scavengers in garbage dumps.(6, 8, 9, 19-21) Children also reportedly work in battery recycling, which exposes them to hazardous substances.(4)

Children, mainly girls, work in domestic service in both rural and urban areas and are vulnerable to physical and sexual abuse.(6, 22) Some children, especially girls from the poorest areas of Peru, are trafficked into commercial sexual exploitation and domestic service through false offers of employment in other occupations or promises of education.(12, 23, 24) Girls are reportedly particularly found in commercial sexual exploitation near mining camps.(25, 26) Child sex tourism is a problem in Cuzco, Lima, and Iquitos.(12, 23)

Drug traffickers and the terrorist group Shining Path are reported to use children to grow and process coca, sometimes using hazardous chemicals, as well as to transport drugs.(12, 21, 23) There are credible reports that Shining Path employs child soldiers, including through forced recruitment, in the Apurimac-Ene River Valley.(21, 23, 27)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Child and Adolescent Code sets the general minimum age for employment at 14 and places some restrictions on the ability of children ages 14 and older to work legally. For employment in nonindustrial agricultural work, the minimum age is 15; for work in the industrial, commercial, and surface mining sectors, the age is 16; and for work in the industrial fishing sector, the age is 17.(28) Additionally, the Child and Adolescent Code requires children under age 18 to receive a permit from the Ministry of Labor or the municipality in order to work and prohibits night work for children under age 15.(29)

The Government of Peru has in place a List of Hazardous Occupations for Children under Age 18, which prohibits minors from working in 29 types of hazardous activities and allows for updates to the list as necessary. These hazardous activities include domestic work in third-party homes, work in fireworks production, public transportation, garbage dumps, manufacturing, and street work.(24, 30) The list also prohibits minors from engaging in hazardous activities in fishing, mining, and agriculture, such as carrying heavy loads, working underwater or underground, and handling pesticides or sharp tools.(30)

Peru's Constitution and Penal Code prohibit all forms of compulsory labor, including forced labor, debt bondage, and servitude.(31, 32) Peru's Penal Code prohibits the prostitution of children, including selling, recruiting, using, and benefiting economically from the crime. The Penal Code also prohibits child pornography, including its production, sale, use, and possession.(33) The Law against Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migrant Smuggling prohibits all forms of trafficking in persons; penalties increase significantly for child trafficking.(34) The Military Service Law sets the minimum age at 18 and prohibits forced recruitment into the armed services or any defense or armed groups.(35, 36) Peru's Decree No. 22095 prohibits the recruitment of children for the production, sale, and trafficking of illicit drugs.(37)

The Constitution provides for free primary and secondary education. Education is compulsory through the completion of secondary school, generally at age 17.(32, 38)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Government of Peru operates a National Commission for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (CPETI), which is led by the Ministry of Labor (MOL) and meets once a month to coordinate government actions against child labor.(21) Members of CPETI include several government ministries, such as the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Justice, and the Ministry of the Interior, as well as representatives from business associations, unions, and NGOs.(21, 24) The Government of Peru also operates the National Commission Against Forced Labor, led by the MOL, and the Multi-Sector Committee Against Trafficking in Persons, led by the Ministry of Interior, which coordinate government efforts to combat forced labor and trafficking in persons, respectively.(21) In practice, however, there has been a lack of coordination and information sharing between government agencies dealing with child labor issues, including child trafficking.(21, 24)

The MOL and the National Police enforce laws regarding child labor and child exploitation.(5, 39) The MOL is responsible for carrying out labor inspections in the Lima region.(40) Regional governments maintain regional labor inspectorates which receive support from but are not under the direct control of the MOL.(40) In 2012, the MOL employed 416 inspectors nationally, an increase from 385 inspectors in 2011.(5, 39) Some regional governments employed additional labor inspectors, as well.(41) Inspectors are required to address possible child labor violations during routine inspections.(42) The MOL coordinates with municipal-level child protection offices, the Public Ministry, and the Ministry of Women and Vulnerable Populations to document and investigate complaints of violations of child labor laws. Cases of child labor are also referred to relevant social protection and legal services.(39, 42)

In general, inspectors in Peru lack sufficient resources, such as transportation and fuel, to effectively carry out inspections.(21, 42) The United Nations Committee on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights has noted that Peru's labor inspection system lacks sufficient capacity to effectively carry out its mandates.(4) In addition, many regional labor inspectorates outside of Lima and Callao are particularly understaffed and underfunded.(40)

During the reporting period, the MOL carried out 1,022 inspections, resulting in 52 employers being sanctioned for illegally employing children—an increase from 48 businesses in 2011.(21) However, the number of inspections carried out nationally is insufficient given the prevalence of child labor.(21) The law permits the MOL to fine employers that employ children in the worst forms of child labor up to $54,000 per violation.(43, 44) In 2012, fines imposed on businesses for child labor violations totaled approximately $97,000, an increase from $50,000 in 2011. Information on whether the fines were collected was unavailable. As a result of these inspections, the MOL assisted 33 children in Lima who were found to be working illegally.(21) Data on the number of children assisted in other regions was not available. Employers sanctioned for child labor violations were mainly in the mining, agriculture, fishing, and commercial sectors.(21)

The Trafficking Investigation Unit of the Peruvian National Police investigates cases of trafficking in persons and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(5) During the reporting period, the police investigated 211 reports of trafficking in Cusco, Lima, Loreto, and Madre de Dios regions, resulting in the rescue of 71 minors.(5, 21) Of those minors, 20 were reported to be victims of forced labor and nine of forced begging.(21) As a result of the investigations, 263 persons were arrested and 76 criminal groups were disbanded.(5) The police worked with the Public Ministry to place rescued minors in the care of family members or state social services.(5) The Government of Peru maintains a hotline to receive reports of trafficking in persons.(5, 12) In 2012, the hotline received 801 calls, which resulted in the rescue of nine child trafficking victims.(5)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the Government of Peru approved the National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (ENPETI) for the period 2012-2021, replacing the previous strategy which expired in 2010.(5, 45) The Strategy aims to eliminate hazardous child labor by improving the livelihoods of poor families, improving education opportunities, raising awareness about child labor, improving work conditions for adolescents, and increasing efforts to sanction violators of child labor laws.(9) The ENPETI complements the Government's wider policy for children and adolescents, the National Action Plan for Children and Adolescents for 2012-2021 (PNAIA), which includes the goal of eradicating hazardous child labor.(5, 21) One goal of the ENPETI is to improve the quality of child labor data in Peru.(9) To this end, in 2012, Peru's National Statistics Agency modified its annual National Household Survey to collect more detailed data on the occupations and number of hours worked by children and adolescents.(5)

Ministerial Resolution 215-2011-TR requires the MOL to implement the Sector Strategy on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor, which was developed jointly by the MOL and ILO.(39) The Strategy includes the objectives of increasing the availability of child labor data, raising public awareness, strengthening coordination between public and private entities on child labor issues, and improving investigations of child labor violations.(39, 40) In 2012, the MOL began implementing the Strategy, including by providing training to regional CPETI commissions to increase their capacity to foster public-private cooperation on child labor issues.(5)

Supreme Decree 052-2011-PCM requires the MOL to implement specific actions to eradicate the worst forms of child labor, including the creation of regional CPETI commissions in areas with high rates of child labor.(46) By the end of 2012, the CPETI had established regional commissions in 23 of the 25 regions in Peru.(5) However, not all of the regional commissions have plans of action against child labor in place, and some are not funded.(24, 42) During the reporting period, the Government worked with the ILO and the nonprofit organization Desarrollo y Autogestión to provide technical assistance to some regional CPETI commissions.(5, 7) In addition, in 2012 the MOL worked with Desarrollo y Autogestión to participate in a training workshop hosted by the Government of Ecuador to learn about best practices in eradicating child labor in garbage dumps.(7)

Peru is also a member of the Joint Regional Group for the Americas, which conducts child labor prevention and awareness-raising campaigns in tourism.(47)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the Government supported three new programs to address the worst forms of child labor: the Seed Project implemented in the regions of Huancavelica, Junín, and Pasco; a project in the Carabayllo district of the Lima region to address child labor in garbage dumps; and a project in the Huánuco region to improve educational opportunities for child laborers. The Seed Project is a USDOL-funded 4-year project to combat rural child labor, which targets 6,500 children and 3,000 families, providing them with education and livelihood services to reduce the incidence of child labor.(7, 19) In 2012, the Project began providing children engaged in or at risk of exploitative child labor with afterschool assistance and worked with their families to reduce child labor on family farms.(7) The Seed Project also began working with the Ministry of Social Development to study the impact of the Government's conditional cash transfer program, the Together Program, on child labor. In addition, the Project worked with an external evaluator to assess the effectiveness of some of the Project's interventions in reducing child labor.(7)

The Carabayllo and Huánuco projects are 2-year pilot projects to reduce child labor; they are funded by the Government and are subject to impact evaluations to determine their effectiveness in reducing child labor.(9) In Carabayllo, the Government will provide scholarships, education assistance, psychological help, and other services to 1,000 families and 1,500 children with the aim of reducing urban child labor, especially in garbage dumps.(5, 9) The Huánuco project seeks to improve school retention and attendance rates among child laborers in rural areas. In conjunction with the Together Program, the Huánuco program will assist approximately 25,000 children and 4,900 families by providing them with cash transfers, education, and livelihood services. To carry out the impact evaluation of this program, the Government will provide families with different packages of services to assess if there is an optimal program design or package of interventions that would more effectively reduce child labor.(5, 9) The Together Program provides cash transfers to approximately 650,000 low-income households in 14 of the country's 25 departments.(48, 49)

The Government also implements anti-poverty and education programs that benefit children and families vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The MOL runs the Peru Works Program, which offers temporary work and technical training to low-income households and requires beneficiaries to commit to withdrawing their children from child labor.(21, 39) The MOL also runs the Youth to Work Program, which provides 16-to-24-year-olds with free job training, and the Go Peru Program, which provides job training, assistance for entrepreneurs, and job placement services to the unemployed, including youth.(21) The Street Educators Program provides counseling and training to children engaged in begging and street work in 20 cities throughout Peru.(50) The Program connects working children and their families to educational and social services with the goal of withdrawing them from exploitative work and improving family welfare.(42, 50)

Although some programs target children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in urban areas, they reach only a fraction of these children. Existing initiatives to combat child labor in agriculture are also insufficient, given the scope of the problem.(21) Information is not available on specific programs to assist children working in mining and domestic work.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Peru:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Increase the level of funding allocated to the MOL and to regional governments to help ensure effective enforcement of child labor laws, particularly in regions with high rates of child labor and underfunded labor inspectorates.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase information publicly available about child labor law enforcement efforts, particularly at the regional level, including the number of children rescued from child labor and the number of fines imposed and collected for child labor violations.	2012
	Strengthen coordination and information-sharing mechanisms among government agencies dealing with child labor issues.	2012
Policies	Establish regional commissions for the prevention and eradication of child labor in all regions, develop regional plans of action against child labor, and allocate sufficient funding to implement them.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Initiate social programs to address child labor in mining and domestic service.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Expand social programs to reach a greater number of children working in hazardous occupations in agriculture and urban hazardous work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, the Philippines made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified ILO Convention 189 on Domestic Workers and passed both the Domestic Workers Act and the Expanded Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act. In addition, the Government launched the national Child Labor-Free Philippines campaign and the Child Labor-Free Barangays (Villages) program, and developed a new national Convergence Plan to reduce hazardous child labor. The Conditional Cash Transfer program was expanded to include child laborers and redesigned to include conditionality on child labor. However, there continues to be a lack of enforcement of child labor laws. In addition, a gap between the minimum age for work and the age of compulsory education continues to leave children ages 12 through 14 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Children continue to be engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in hazardous activities in agriculture and in domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in the Philippines are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including hazardous activities in agriculture and in domestic service.(3-7) Children work primarily in the production of sugarcane, as well as in coconuts, corn, rice, rubber, tobacco, bananas, and hogs. Limited evidence suggests that children also work in the production of other fruits and vegetables.(3, 4, 8) Many children in these types of agriculture work long hours in extreme weather, use dangerous machinery and tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(4, 9)

In 2012, the Government released and widely publicized the preliminary results of the national Survey on Children, which included findings on child labor. The Survey was conducted by the National Statistics Office with support from the ILO in 2011. Preliminary results indicate that 3.21 million children are engaged in child labor, of which 2.99 million work in hazardous labor.(10) The complete report is scheduled to be released in 2013.

Philippines

Children are commonly employed as domestic servants or kasambahays.(3, 4, 11-13) Many child domestics work long hours, and their isolation in homes makes them susceptible to sexual harassment and verbal and physical abuse.(4, 9, 11, 12, 14) Child domestic servants are often denied access to education.(6, 12-14) Domestic workers are sometimes subjected to nonpayment or garnishment of wages or conditions of forced labor.(9, 11, 13-15)

Children are also involved in mining and quarrying, including compressor mining to extract gold, which requires them to dive into pools of mud with an oxygen tube.(3-5, 7, 9) Mining requires children to carry heavy loads and use dangerous tools and machinery; and gold mining exposes children to mercury, acid, and cyanide.(4, 9)

Deep-sea fishing is another dangerous occupation in which children work.(3, 4, 7, 16, 17) These children may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning or entanglement in fishing nets.(4, 16-18)

Children manufacture pyrotechnics, a hazardous activity that exposes them to explosives and flammable substances.(3, 4, 19, 20) In addition, boys and girls work in factory and home-based manufacturing industries such as the production of fashion accessories, which may involve hazardous activities.(3, 4, 7, 20-22)

The commercial sexual exploitation of children including in pornography and sex tourism is a significant problem.(4, 5, 15, 20, 23, 24) In addition, children, primarily girls, are trafficked domestically from rural to urban areas for forced domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation.(12, 15, 20) Emerging reports indicate that boys are increasingly trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation, particularly for child pornography.(15) Limited evidence suggests that children are also trafficked from the Philippines internationally throughout Asia and the Middle East for forced labor.(15, 23)

Although evidence is limited, children are also known to be involved in other illicit activities such as the trafficking of drugs.(5, 21)

There are no reports of children in the government armed forces in the Philippines, but child soldiering is a problem among anti-government and terrorist organizations.(12, 15, 20, 25-27) The Moro Islamic Liberation Front and the New People's Army have indicated willingness to stop the recruitment and use of children as soldiers; however, reports indicate that children continue to be found in their ranks.(5, 12, 15, 20, 23, 25-30) Children have also been reported in the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Movement.(20, 27) The Abu

Sayyaf Group, a terrorist organization, continues to recruit and use children.(15, 20, 23, 25-29)

Despite a policy of free education, many children do not attend school, as the costs of books, uniforms, meals, and transportation are prohibitive for many families.(3-5, 31, 32) In addition, distant school locations are often not accessible for rural students, especially at the secondary school level.(31, 33)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown. (3, 4, 7, 21) Children also work as scavengers in dumpsites, where they sort garbage and risk exposure to sharp objects, toxic substances, fumes, and bacteria.(3, 4, 9, 20)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code sets the minimum age for work at 15 and the minimum age for hazardous work at 18.(22)

The Act Providing for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Affording Stronger Protection for the Working Child, Republic Act No. 9231, mandates that the Government protect and remove children from the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor, child trafficking, prostitution, pornography, and the use of a child for illicit activities.(34) It defines and prohibits the worst forms of child labor; bars children from using dangerous machinery or tools, transporting heavy loads, working underground or underwater, handling explosives or being exposed to unsafe substances; and prescribes stringent penalties for violations.(34)

In 2012, the House and Senate approved the revised domestic workers bill, Republic Act No. 10361, and An Act Instituting Policies for the Protection and Welfare of Domestic Workers was signed into law in January 2013.(5, 35) The Act, also referred to as the Domestic Workers Act or Batas Kasambahay, prohibits the employment of children below age 15 and requires that children ages 15 to 18 receive minimum wage and all benefits and protections afforded in the Act.(35) The Act also stipulates that employers allow domestic workers the opportunity to complete their basic education.(35)

In September 2012, the Government ratified ILO Convention 189, Decent Work for Domestic Workers, which requires signatory states to take specific measures to prohibit child domestic labor.(36) Specifically, ILO Convention 189 requires states to ensure that domestic workers above the legal working age are not deprived of educational opportunities and to establish a minimum age for domestic labor that is consistent with the ILO Conventions 138 and 182.(37) The Philippines ratification was only the second by an ILO member state, and served to enter the Convention into force.(36)

In 2012, Congress passed the Expanded Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2012, which was signed into law in February 2013 as Republic Act No. 10364.(38) This Act amends Republic Act No. 9208 of 2003 to establish a permanent Interagency Council Against Trafficking with a staffed Secretariat to carry out the mandate; creates a database on trafficking cases; expands provisions to protect victims of trafficking; and establishes stronger penalties for violations, including those against children.(5, 38) The Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2003, Republic Act No. 9208, prohibits trafficking in persons, including the recruitment, transfer, or harboring of children for prostitution, pornography, or forced labor.(39, 40)

The Anti-Child Pornography Act, Republic Act No. 9775, protects children against exploitation in pornography and establishes strict penalties for persons responsible for the production, distribution, and publication of child pornography.(41) In 2012, the Cybercrime Prevention Act was signed into law. The Act increases the punishment for crimes of child pornography using a computer.(20) The Comprehensive Dangerous Drugs Act, Republic Act No. 9165, prohibits the use of children in the production and trafficking of drugs.(42)

Military recruitment is voluntary at age 17 for training and at age 18 for service.(26, 43) The recruitment, transport, or use of children under age 18 in armed conflict, including as guards, couriers or spies, is prohibited in the Special Protection of Children Against Abuse, Exploitation and Discrimination Act, Republic Act No. 7610; the Providing for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor Act; and the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act.(26, 34, 39, 44)

The Enhanced Basic Education Act of 2012 was approved by both houses of Congress between November 2012 and February 2013 and was signed into law by the President in May 2013.(45) The Act extends formal education from 10 to 12 years; however the Act failed to make secondary school compulsory.(46, 47) The Kindergarten Education Act, Republic Act No. 10157, passed in 2012, extends free and compulsory education to children for one additional year, starting at age 5.(5) Primary and secondary education is free for all children; however, school attendance is compulsory only at the primary level, from ages 5 to 11.(19, 20, 32, 48, 49) Children ages 12 to 14 are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school and are not legally permitted to work.

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Child Labor Committee (NCLC), headed by the Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE) and comprising more than 15 other agencies and NGOs, coordinates national efforts to combat child labor.(19) New member agencies include the Department of Agriculture and the National Youth Commission.(5, 50) The NCLC is intended to promote information sharing at the national level; this coordinating mechanism has been replicated at the regional and provincial levels. In 2012, the NCLC conducted workshops to prioritize action plans for each member agency and held trainings on the Child Labor Knowledge Sharing System, the National Survey on Children, the Domestic Workers Act, and the modified Pantawid Pamilyang Pilipino Program conditional cash transfer program.(5)

DOLE is the primary government agency responsible for enforcing child labor laws.(19) In 2012, DOLE employed 224 labor inspectors nationwide, 30 fewer labor inspectors than in 2011, to enforce the Labor Code, including child labor laws.(5) DOLE regularly trains inspectors and regional personnel on child labor laws.(19) In 2012, DOLE conducted trainings for labor inspectors and issued a Manual of Procedures in Handling Complaints on Trafficking in Persons, Illegal Recruitment and Child Labor.(5) DOLE did not disclose the labor inspection budget for 2012.(5)

Philippines

In 2012, DOLE inspected 25,348 of an estimated total of 800,000 establishments nationwide, a decrease from the 30,727 inspected in 2011.(5) The DOLE inspection strategy focuses on compliance with core labor standards in businesses with 10 to 199 employees, and in specific sectors such as security firms, restaurants, manufacturing enterprises, and cooperatives.(19, 51, 52) However, it is not known whether this targeting is focused in sectors and establishments with high rates of child labor. Through the 25,348 workplace inspections conducted in 2012, DOLE identified only 56 children exploited through violations of child labor legislation.(5) Of these, 27 were victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation, and DOLE issued closure orders on four restaurant and karaoke bar establishments found to be employing the victims.(5, 15)

DOLE also leads a regional mechanism for rescuing children who work in abusive and dangerous situations through the Rescue the Child Laborers (SBM) Quick Action Teams.(19) SBM is composed of government agencies and law enforcement, local governments, the business community, unions, and NGOs.(19) SBM responds to reports of possible instances of child labor in the formal and nonformal sectors, and coordinates a response among the relevant agencies for each case, referring children to the Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) for rehabilitation and reintegration.(5, 19) In 2012, SBM rescued 223 child laborers across nine regions.(5, 15)

DSWD regional offices also coordinate Special Action Units to conduct rescue operations for child laborers, with social workers to manage the ongoing cases of victims.(19) In 2012, DSWD Special Action Units assisted 406 victims of child labor or trafficking of children.(5)

The Philippine National Police (PNP) and the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) reported that no child labor cases were referred to them for investigation or prosecution by DOLE or DSWD during the year; however, victims may have filed cases directly.(53) The Government of the Philippines did not resolve any pending child labor cases, nor were there any new child labor convictions in 2012.

The Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking (IACAT) coordinates, monitors, and oversees ongoing implementation of efforts to combat child trafficking. IACAT is chaired by the Department of Justice (DOJ) and co-chaired by DSWD; it comprises relevant government agencies and NGOs.(5, 15) The Government of the Philippines provided IACAT with a budget of $1.2 million in 2012.(5, 19) In 2012, 19 cases involving minors were identified through calls to the IACAT national trafficking hotline.(5)

The National Anti-Trafficking Task Force, through the IACAT and DOJ, serves as a mechanism for collaboration between the police and prosecutors, as well as social service providers, to develop strong cases against traffickers. In addition, local and regional Anti-Trafficking Task Forces, composed of officials from the DOJ, DSWD, PNP, NBI, seaport and airport police, and NGOs, serve as interagency teams to respond to cases of trafficking.(15) IACAT and DOJ provide funding and personnel to each local Task Force. In 2012, the number of local Task Forces increased from 6 to 14.(15) The DOJ/IACAT Anti-Trafficking Task Force was staffed with 19 prosecutors in 2012, an increase from 17 in 2011. Nationally, DOJ increased the number of trafficking in persons prosecutors from 58 in 2011 to 96 in 2012.(15) The DOJ is responsible for the prosecution of child trafficking cases.(19)

The PNP and the NBI are the principal law enforcement agencies for child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(15, 19) The NBI operates a national Trafficking in Persons Task Force (TIP Task Force) as well as a Task Force on the Protection of Children from Exploitation and Abuse.(15) The PNP's Women and Children's Protection Center (WCPC) leads the enforcement of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC) laws and employs 3,038 personnel nationwide.(15, 19) In 2012, WCPC conducted 37 training sessions on trafficking, including child labor legislation, for 1,737 officials.(5) WCPC also maintained a 24-hour hotline to report trafficking cases.(19) During the reporting period, the Government of the Philippines conducted 194 trainings for 2,646 government personnel to investigate and prosecute trafficking cases.(5)

In 2012, PNP investigated 89 cases of child trafficking involving 126 children; 78 of these cases involved sexual exploitation and 48 involved child labor.(5) Between April and December 2012, NBI investigated 193 new trafficking cases, prosecuted 66 cases, and closed 125 cases; however, NBI does not disaggregate data by age group, so it is not known how many of the investigated cases involved minors.(15, 19, 24) Convictions were obtained in cases involving 21 minors.(15) In addition, some of the cases investigated were likely initiated in prior years, and it is unclear whether any of the same cases were counted by both agencies.(15) During the year, the Government of the Philippines attained convictions in 12 cases of sex trafficking; these cases involved both adult and child trafficking victims. The 16 convicted traffickers received sentences in accordance with the law.(5) IACAT estimates that the average length of trafficking cases is 5 years, despite the 6-month limit imposed by the Supreme Court.(15)

The Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA) is the lead agency responsible for the enforcement of the Comprehensive Dangerous Drugs Act, Republic Act No. 9165. PDEA maintains a national hotline for reporting cases of children used in illicit activities.(5) In 2012, PDEA conducted training on handling children arrested for illegal drug activities for 35 drug enforcement officers who will serve as first responders for cases involving children.(5) In 2012, 121 minors were arrested who worked as pushers, couriers, messengers, and cultivators of illegal drugs, however no minors were convicted of those crimes during the year.(5)

The Interagency Council for the Welfare of Children, through its Subcommittee on Children Affected by Armed Conflict and Displacement, operates a monitoring and response system for situations of children engaged in armed conflict, including the recruitment and use of child soldiers.(15)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The goal of reducing exploitive child labor is included in the Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan (2011-2016). The Plan specifies government commitments to strengthen mechanisms for monitoring the implementation of child protection laws, to develop strategies to respond to child trafficking and pornography, and to implement an enhanced program for preventing children from being engaged in armed conflict.(5)

The goal of reducing exploitive child labor is mainstreamed into the Labor and Employment Plan (2011-2016).(5) Child labor is also included in the following national development agendas: Millennium Development Goals (2000-2015), Education for All National Plan (2004-2015), Basic Education Reform Agenda, and UN Development Assistance Framework (2012-2018).(19, 49, 54-56)

In addition, the Government of the Philippines has primary policy instruments to prevent and eliminate child labor. The Philippines National Strategic Framework for Plan Development for Children, 2000-2025, also known as “Child 21,” sets out broad goals to achieve improved quality of life for Filipino children by 2025.(19, 57)

The tripartite Philippine Program Against Child Labor (PPACL) Strategic Framework lays out the blueprint for reducing the incidence of child labor by 75 percent.(19, 58, 59) To achieve this goal, PPACL identifies five strategic approaches to prevent, protect, and reintegrate children from the worst forms of child labor.(58, 60) To translate this strategic framework into action, the Implementation Plan (2011-2012) identifies concrete objectives such as improving the access of children and their families to appropriate services to further prevent incidence of child labor and the reintegration of former child laborers.(19, 61) In 2012, the PPACL was extended through 2016, and Secretaries of NCLC member agencies signed an agreement to strategically scale up its implementation.(5, 50)

In 2012, the President tasked the Human Development Cabinet cluster, led by DOLE and DSWD, to develop a Convergence Action Plan, called HELP ME, to reduce the worst forms of child labor by 2016 under the PPACL.(59, 62) The directive included a funding allocation of $220,000,000 over 4 years for implementation, from 2013 to 2016.(62, 63) The Convergence Action Plan is designed to remove 893,000 children from hazardous child labor across 15,568 target barangays.(62) The HELP ME plan focuses on outcomes that include a multilevel information system, more accessible education and livelihood services, child labor agendas mainstreamed in policy development at all levels, a compilation of policies and laws, and strengthening of enforcement (including prosecution of child labor offenders).(50, 62, 63) HELP ME was launched in January 2013.(62)

In June 2012, the NCLC launched the Batang Malaya Child Labor-Free Philippines campaign.(64) Campaign objectives include the institutionalization of the Survey on Children to be regularly implemented by the Government; mainstreaming child labor into local development plans; adding child labor elimination as a conditionality in conditional cash transfer programs; strengthening the labor inspectorate to monitor child labor; improving enforcement of Republic Act No. 9231; and strengthening the NCLC through a legal mandate, budget, and dedicated secretariat.(64)

A revised National Strategic Action Plan Against Trafficking in Persons (2012-2016) was launched in December 2012 and contains specific provisions on the prevention of trafficking of children, including awareness raising and local programs to prevent children from being lured by traffickers.(5)

The Department of Education implemented a new program in 2012 that extends the education system from 10 to 12 years, ahead of the approval of the draft Enhanced Basic Education Act, which would formally legislate the extended education.(5, 20)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of the Philippines implements programs to improve the livelihoods of vulnerable families and children and to reduce child labor. Through the Pantawid

Philippines

Pamilyang Pilipino Program, DSWD provides cash transfers to households, conditional upon their children's achievement of a monthly school attendance rate of at least 85 percent and regular medical checkups and immunizations.(19, 65) In 2012, the budget was increased to $960,000, from $570,000 in 2011, benefiting 3.1 million households and 7.4 million children through age 14.(5, 53) A 2010 assessment of the Program demonstrated an increase in school enrollment and attendance among beneficiaries; however, results also showed that child labor persisted among beneficiaries.(19) In January 2013, DOLE announced that the Pantawid Pamilyang Pilipino Program would be expanded and modified through the Conditional Cash Transfer Program for Families in Need of Special Protection to specifically target households of child laborers.(63, 66) This initiative was in response to the new Convergence Action Plan under the PPACL. Child eligibility was expanded from age 14 to age 17. The additional conditionality prohibiting hazardous child labor was added to the program requirements as a mechanism to reduce the worst forms of child labor.(63, 67) The 2013 budget will be further increased to $1.08 million.(53)

The Department of Education's Alternative Learning System (ALS) Program offers nonformal education to out-of-school children, including child laborers, and offers them opportunities to attain a certificate of education equivalency.(17) However, with limited resources, representing less than 1 percent of the Department of Education's budget, and only one teacher for every 24 communities, ALS is unable to reach many out-of-school youth.(31, 55) While 77 percent of ALS students complete the coursework, of those students who take the Accreditation and Equivalency Exam, only 22 percent pass at the elementary level and 26 percent pass at the secondary level.(31) However, for many child laborers, this program may serve as one of the few available options to earn an equivalency certificate, which is required to gain access to formal institutions, such as those that provide higher education, vocational training, or workforce development. No assessment of the impact of this program on reducing child labor has been identified.

DOLE, with the National Tripartite Council in the Sugar Industry, implements the sugar industry Social Amelioration Program (SAP), which provides a cash bonus to sugar workers and funds social protection, livelihood, and education programs for sugar workers and their families through a levy imposed on refined sugar.(68, 69) In 2011, more than 26,000 adult sugar workers received support for livelihood projects.(55) Data were not available for 2012. No assessment of the impact of this program on reducing child labor has been identified. As part of the SAP, DOLE's Integrated Services for Migratory Sugar Workers Program (I-SERVE SACADAS) seeks to improve the livelihoods of migrant sugar workers and their families and increase their income.(19, 69) In 2012, I-SERVE SACADAS provided assistance valued at $7,500 to 233 children engaged in or vulnerable to child labor in the sugar industry. Services included educational materials and scholarships.(53, 55)

Under the PPACL, the Government of the Philippines is implementing a number of programs designed specifically to reduce child labor, including the DOLE Child Labor Prevention and Elimination Program (CLPEP). In 2012, DOLE launched a new Child Labor-Free Barangays campaign to transform 89 targeted villages nationwide into child labor-free communities through Barangay Councils for the Protection of Children.(5, 70) At the community level, the program implements local awareness-raising campaigns, institutes child labor monitoring mechanisms, and requires barangays to develop child labor elimination plans with short- and long-term objectives.(71) The Program encourages convergence of services from different Government agencies, including education services to child laborers and livelihood assistance to their households.(50) During the year, the Program was piloted in 6 villages, and it will be expanded to an additional 10 villages in 2013.(5) DOLE reports that between July and December 2012, 4,863 children and 1,849 households benefited from program services.(72) Most of the child beneficiaries were reportedly engaged in hazardous work, such as scavenging, deep-sea fishing, farming, mining, domestic work, hauling logs, loading ships, and production of fireworks.(72) During the year, DOLE regional offices reactivated and provided support to 171 Barangay Child Protection Committees.(72)

DOLE regional offices allocated at least 5 percent of their Workers Income Augmentation Program (WINAP) funds, approximately $295,000 in total, for implementation of CLPEP activities.(19, 53, 55, 73) WINAP improves the livelihoods of workers through training and material support for income-generation activities.(74)

DOLE's Livelihood for Parents of Child Laborers (KASAMA) program provides funds to parents of working children for projects such as raising livestock, producing souvenirs, food vending, and other service professions.(53, 55, 71) The KASAMA program is one mechanism under the DOLE's Campaign for Child Labor-Free Barangays.(71) In 2012, the KASAMA program provided livelihood support to 270 parents of child laborers, with a budget of $56,000.(53) Another initiative, Project Angel Tree, redistributed shoes, school bags, toys, and other supplies donated by private sponsors to 6,271 children at risk of, or engaged in, child labor.(19, 53, 55)

DSWD implements the new comprehensive Recovery and Reintegration Program for Trafficked Persons (RRPTP) with an allocated budget of $615,000 to provide services to victims of trafficking and to raise awareness in vulnerable communities. In 2012, 285 child trafficking victims received services through RRPTP.(15) In 2012, DSWD established a new shelter near Manila for male victims of trafficking, a critical improvement, as most centers provide services only to women and girls.(15) DSWD provided services to victims of exploitive child labor and CSEC, including crisis intervention and residential facilities.(19, 23) Supplementing wider efforts to raise awareness on trafficking, IACAT funded school-based and community-based awareness campaigns that target children.(15) Although the Government has implemented programs addressing the commercial sexual exploitation of children, particularly those in situations of prostitution, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to identify and assist children exploited for pornography.

DSWD also provided Special Social Services for Children in Armed Conflict to protect and rehabilitate children after their direct or indirect involvement in armed conflict.(75) In 2012, the budget was $60,000, and 59 children received services, including 40 who were used as couriers, medics, spies, or combatants and 19 who were affected by armed conflict through cross-fire or displacement.(53) Services include emergency evacuation and rescue; family reunification; provision of food, clothing, and shelter; and psychosocial rehabilitation.(53) However, reports indicate that children continued to be recruited into armed conflict, and the reach of this program does not appear to be sufficient to prevent children's recruitment into anti-government and terrorist organizations.

During the year, the Government of the Philippines participated in programs to reduce child labor; these programs were funded by international donors and implemented through international organizations or NGOs. USDOL funded a $4.75 million project, implemented by ILO-IPEC from 2009 to 2013. This project aims to withdraw and prevent 9,350 children from the worst forms of child labor through the provision of educational and noneducational services in Quezon, Masbate, Northern Samar, and Bukidnon.(76, 77) As of October 2012, a total of 6,533 children had been withdrawn or prevented from participating in hazardous child labor.(59) The project targets children engaged in farming, mining, fishing, and domestic service. The project developed an Internet-based information system that promotes communication on child labor issues among government and nongovernmental agencies, improved program monitoring, and automated child labor case referrals. With the NCLC, the project is assessing project models and documenting best practices to be replicated.(59)

USDOL funded a $15 million project in 2011 to reduce child labor in sugar-producing areas in 11 provinces of the Philippines, and this project will be implemented through 2015.(78) It will provide education services to 52,000 children engaged in, or at risk of engaging in, the worst forms of child labor; it will also provide livelihood assistance to 25,000 households of targeted children. The project engages the sugar industry in raising awareness of child labor among sugar workers and their families.(78) During the first year, the project provided educational services to 10,592 children working in sugarcane.(50)

In 2012, the Philippines participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In the Philippines, the project aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor; improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research; and strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(79) The project is conducting an analysis of legislation regarding worst forms of child labor, focusing specifically on child domestic labor. It is also strengthening child labor legislation enforcement mechanisms, with a focus on child domestic labor.(80) During the reporting period, the project made preparations for a national rapid situational analysis of child domestic workers as well as a gap assessment of social services for child domestic workers.(81)

The Government of the Philippines participated in a program, with $29,550 funded by the Eliminating Child Labor in Tobacco Growing Foundation, which provided educational services to 94 children and livelihood assistance to 100 parents during the year.(82) Through DOLE, the project also conducted awareness raising through activities for youth, teachers, and school administrators, as well as through comic strips and other advocacy materials.(82)

The Government, at the national and regional levels, also coordinates with the Kasambahay Program to provide immediate services to trafficking victims and child domestic workers including shelter, psychological support, and reintegration. Information on the activities, beneficiaries, and funding level in 2012 was not available.(12)

Given the scope and magnitude of child labor in the Philippines, the limited reach of these programs is not sufficient to significantly reduce child labor, especially in the agriculture and domestic service sectors.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in the Philippines:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Increase the age of compulsory schooling from 11 to 15, the minimum age for work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Ensure that child labor legislation is effectively enforced by identifying, through inspections, children who are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2012
	Ensure that identified instances of criminal child labor violations are systematically referred to law enforcement authorities for investigation and prosecution.	2012
	Prioritize child labor and trafficking cases to provide timely prosecutions and convictions and to ensure that convictions serve as a deterrent to further violations.	2011, 2012
	Disaggregate trafficking data reported by NBI by age group and ensure that trafficking data are not reported in duplicate by both NBI and PNP.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Take steps to ensure that all children have access to nearby schools and do not face prohibitive costs for education-related expenses.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Provide necessary resources for more out-of-school youth to access ALS to complete their basic education.	2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that social programs may have on child labor.	2011, 2012
	Expand programs combating child labor, especially targeting children exploited for pornography and working in hazardous activities including agriculture, fishing, mining, and domestic service, or engaged in armed conflict.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

As a result, statistics on children’s work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. In 2012, the Federation of Russia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved a National Children's Strategy until 2017 that covers issues such as child protection and access to quality education, and contains a listing of responsible agencies and timelines for its implementation. Russian law, however, still lacks provisions that criminalize the possession of child pornography. Russia also continues to lack a mechanism to coordinate nationwide efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Children in Russia continue to be found in the worst forms of child labor, including in work on the streets and in commercial sexual exploitation, and many of these children are victims of human trafficking.

These children are forced into begging or commercial sexual exploitation.⁽⁴⁾ The primary victims of commercial sexual exploitation are street children, including those who are homeless and orphaned. Child pornography remains a problem in Russia.⁽⁵⁾

Although evidence is limited, children are found working in the agricultural sector.^(5, 11, 12) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.^(13, 14)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code sets the minimum age of employment at 16. Exceptions to the minimum age exist for 15-year-olds who have completed primary education or 14 year olds with the approval of a parent or a guardian, if such work does not interfere with the child's health or welfare. Children under age 14 are permitted to work in the performing arts, if such work will not harm their health or moral development.⁽¹⁵⁾ Children under age 18 are prohibited from engaging in night work, dangerous work, underground work, or work that may be harmful to their health or moral development. This includes carrying heavy loads; gambling; working at night cabarets and clubs; and producing, transporting, and selling toxic substances (including tobacco, alcohol, and drugs).⁽¹⁵⁾

The Constitution and the Criminal Code prohibits forced labor. The Criminal Code explicitly outlaws engaging a known minor (a person under 18 years old) in slave labor.^(16, 17) Article 127.1 of the Criminal Code prohibits the purchase, sale, recruitment, transportation, harboring, and receiving of a person for the purpose of exploitation, with higher penalties imposed when the victim is a known minor. Involving a minor in the commission of a crime is punishable under article 150 of the Criminal Code.⁽¹⁷⁾ Article 228.1 of the Criminal Code prohibits using a minor to make, sell, or transport illegal narcotic drugs or other psychotropic substances.⁽¹⁷⁾

Children in Russia are found in the worst forms of child labor, including in work on the street and in commercial sexual exploitation.⁽³⁻⁵⁾ Children are engaged in work on the streets in Russia. The Government has recognized children working on the streets as a worst form of child labor in the country.⁽⁶⁻⁸⁾ Migrant families face language and cultural barriers that may make it difficult to seek or receive social assistance.^(4, 5) Regional authorities often deny school access to unregistered children, including Roma, asylum seekers, and migrants.⁽⁵⁾ The inability to access education and other social services may make children in these groups especially vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

Commercial sexual exploitation of children, especially in large cities, remains a concern.^(4, 9-11) Moscow and St. Petersburg are hubs of child trafficking and child commercial sexual exploitation.⁽⁴⁾ Children, both boys and girls, are trafficked internally from rural to urban centers and between regions.

Involving a minor in prostitution and creating or circulating pornography depicting a known minor are also punishable under the Criminal Code. Although there was a proposal to amend the Criminal Code to define and criminalize possession of child pornography in the first half of 2011, the authorities did not approve the original draft and proposed new legislation.⁽¹²⁾ The new legislation, which went into effect on February 29, 2012, includes a broader range of penalties for child exploitation and tougher penalties for crimes committed against children under age 14 and crimes that are committed against minors by their parents or other official guardians.⁽¹⁸⁾ However, the law excludes a definition of child pornography and a provision that criminalizes possession of child pornography, items which were the initial bill's main objectives.⁽¹²⁾ Lack of a definition for child pornography and failure to criminalize possession of child pornography may hamper enforcement efforts.

The Government signed the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography on September 28, 2012.⁽⁴⁾ The Government also signed the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Sexual Abuse on October 1, 2012.^(4, 19) The Conventions were not ratified during the reporting period.

The minimum age for both voluntary and compulsory military recruitment in Russia is 18.⁽²⁰⁾ Education is free and compulsory for children up to age 15.^(21, 22)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Government of Russia has not established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.

The Federal Labor and Employment Service and the Public Prosecutor are responsible for enforcing laws relating to child labor, and the two agencies formally coordinate joint inspections.⁽⁴⁾ The Ministry of Internal Affairs (MVD), the Federal Security Service, the Investigative Committee, and other law enforcement entities are responsible for enforcing criminal laws against forced child labor, trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.⁽¹²⁾ The Government of Russia also has a federal office to protect children's rights in the Office of the Children's Rights Ombudsman in all existing 83 regions.⁽¹²⁾ Regional Ombudsmen have the authority to investigate potential violations of children's rights, monitor offices dealing with minors, and evaluate legislation affecting children.⁽³⁾

The Federal Labor and Employment Service (FLES) employs approximately 1,700 labor inspectors whose responsibilities also include enforcement of child labor laws. According to FLES, the number of labor inspectors is insufficient to effectively enforce labor laws.^(4, 12) In 2011, the most recent period for which statistics are available, FLES conducted 3,600 inspections out of which 3,400 child labor violations were found. As a result of these inspections, 257 children were removed from work because of labor safety violations.⁽⁴⁾ Child labor violations resulted in fines totaling $64,530 in 2011.⁽⁴⁾ However, it is unknown whether the assessed fine is a sufficient deterrent for preventing child labor violations. Research did not reveal information on the number of labor inspections or penalties assessed in 2012.

In recent years, the Government of Russia stepped up efforts to monitor and combat child pornography, initiating several criminal cases against individuals suspected of producing and disseminating child pornography.⁽¹²⁾ In 2012, the MVD brought at least 25 criminal cases against the trade of child pornography on peer-to-peer- file sharing networks.⁽⁴⁾

In addition, the Government continues to cooperate with the private sector and nongovernment institutions to combat the dissemination of child pornography on the Internet.⁽⁴⁾ Under this initiative, cyber watch volunteers enabled the initiation of 150 criminal cases in 2012 on the distribution of child pornography and sexual abuse of children.(4)

However, official data is unavailable on the number of investigations, prosecutions, or convictions for child trafficking or other crimes relating to the worst forms of labor.(4) Based on unofficial sources, there were criminal cases prosecuting criminals for trafficking 21 child victims in 2012 under article 127.1.(23) The specific data based on type of crime and the number of minors victimized under each relevant article of the Criminal Code is lacking.(23) The ILO Committee of Experts has noted that the Government repeatedly failed to provide information on the impact of its efforts to prevent child trafficking.(24)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Russia does not have a national plan or policy that specifically addresses the worst forms of child labor, but has policies focused on child protection. In 2012, the Government established a National Children's Strategy through 2017 that covers issues such as child protection, accessibility of quality education, and the need for child-friendly healthcare, equal opportunities for children in need of special care by the State, and a child rights protection system.(4) Lack of access to quality education and other State services increases children's vulnerability to involvement in the worst forms of child labor. The Government designated responsible agencies and created tasks and timelines for its implementation.(4)

During the reporting period, the Government provided regular training designed to guide government officials in handling trafficking cases. However, there was no regular framework to direct officials on how to proactively identify trafficking victims or to refer them to available services.(23) Currently, trafficking victims cases are assessed by law enforcement on a case-by-case basis, which involves a long process before cases are adjudicated.

The Government of Russia does not collect national statistics on child labor that would enable the development of relevant policy and programs to combat the problem.(12)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Russia does not have specific programs to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, the Government continued the Child Support Fund for Children in Difficult Life Circumstances, a child welfare program it initiated in 2008. Among other goals, the Fund helps rehabilitate orphaned, disadvantaged, and homeless children through social programs and activities.(12)

Children receive assistance through some of the Fund's programs, including mobile crisis centers, psychological centers, and social and physical rehabilitation services. There is no information available on the total Fund's budget for 2012, however the Fund's budget for 2011 was approximately $32 million.(4) No assessment of these programs' impact on the worst forms of child labor has been identified.

There is no complete information available about government financial assistance for Trafficking in Person related programs in 2012 or the number of trafficking victims assisted during the reporting period.(4, 9, 12, 23) Reportedly, the Government's sole provision of funding for trafficking victims was the allocation of space for an eight-bed shelter in St. Petersburg.(23)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Russia:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Criminalize possession of child pornography.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Codify a legal definition of child pornography.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Russia

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Determine whether the assessed fine for a child labor violation is a sufficient deterrent in preventing child labor violations.	2012
	Gather, report, and make statistics on the investigation and prosecution of child labor violations publicly available, including the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase the number of labor inspectors and inspect the sites where child labor is most likely to be found.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Collect data on the nature and prevalence of child labor to guide the design of policy and programming.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Develop formal procedures at the national level to educate and guide law enforcement officials, labor inspectors, and other professionals on trafficking cases, victim identification, assistance, and referrals.	2011, 2012
	Set up the process of registration for undocumented families and children and provide easier access to the registration process.	2012
Social Programs	Assess the impact of the Child Support Fund on addressing the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement programs to combat all relevant worst forms of child labor, especially child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Fund anti-trafficking efforts that include financing to shelters for victims of human trafficking.	2011, 2012

Rwanda

In 2012, Rwanda made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In March 2013, the Government of Rwanda approved its National Policy for the Elimination of Child Labor and 5-year Action Plan to Combat Child Labor. Rwanda also adopted the Law Relating to the Rights and Protection of the Child, which includes provisions on the worst forms of child labor, and the Organic Law Instituting the Penal Code, which provides penalties for persons who recruit children for armed conflict or do not report offenses committed against children to the authorities. Despite these efforts, in 2012, children were recruited by M23 for armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. M23 is an armed group based in the Democratic Republic of Congo that the Government of Rwanda supports. Rwanda has received an assessment of minimal advancement because the Government's support for M23 in 2012 undermined other advancements made during the year to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Children continue to be engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous conditions in agriculture and domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Rwanda are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and domestic service.(3-6) Children are involved in the production of sugarcane, bananas, and tea.(3, 4, 7, 8) Although information is limited, there are reports that children also work in the production of cabbage, coffee, manioc, peas, pineapple, potatoes, sweet potatoes, corn, beans, sorghum, pyrethrum, and rice.(3, 4, 8-11) In Rwanda, children working in agriculture carry heavy loads, use dangerous tools such as machetes, and are vulnerable to insect and snakebites. These children may also work close to harmful pesticides and fertilizers.(4, 11) Although the full extent of children's involvement is unknown, children herd cattle and care for sheep, goats, pigs, and chicken. These children may work long hours and carry heavy loads of food and water.(3, 11, 12) In 2011, the latest year for which information is available, a survey conducted by ICF International found that approximately 20 percent of children tending livestock in Rwanda reported having been injured while at work.(8)

In Rwanda, children work as domestic servants.(3, 4, 10) They may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(13, 14) Children also work on construction sites and reportedly engage in strenuous manual labor such as digging pit latrines. Although evidence is limited, there are reports that children are also found making bricks.(3, 15-18) Although the extent of the problem is unknown, there are reports that children mine coltan.(15, 19, 20) Children who work in mining are at risk of eye and lung damage from stone dust.(15)

Commercial sexual exploitation of children and trafficking also occur in Rwanda. Older women sometimes coerce girls into commercial sex work in exchange for food and living quarters.(21) Loosely structured prostitution networks recruit children from secondary schools for commercial sexual exploitation.(21) Kigali City and the districts of Ginsuzu, Rusizi, and Musanze are the areas most affected by the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(22) Children are also trafficked to Asia; Europe; and North America; and to eastern, central, and southern Africa for forced agricultural labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and domestic service. Limited reports suggest that children are also trafficked into Rwanda from neighboring countries and from Somalia.(21, 23-27) There is a lack of information on the extent of child trafficking into, transit through, and from Rwanda.(28)

In 2012, children within Rwanda were recruited, some of them forcibly, by the M23 armed group, which is supported by the Government of Rwanda, for armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. These children were recruited from refugee camps and from the Nkamira transit center.(10, 18, 29-33) In addition, the UN Group of Experts reported that the director of the Rwanda Demobilization and Reintegration Commission (RDRC) forcibly recruited a small number of children from the child soldier rehabilitation center in Mutobo.(32, 33) Children associated with armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo may be forced to serve as combatants, porters, spies, domestic servants, and sex slaves.(10, 18)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(34, 35)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Rwanda's Labor Law sets the minimum age for work at 16 and the minimum age for hazardous work at 18. The Law prohibits children under the age of 18 from night work and work that is difficult, unsanitary, or dangerous. It also prohibits children from working in the worst forms of child labor, including slavery or similar practices, forced or bonded labor, armed conflict, illicit activities or commercial sexual exploitation, and any work whose nature is detrimental to the health, security, or morals of a child.(36)

Ministerial Order 2010-06 sets forth a list of the worst forms of child labor: It prohibits children from working at industrial institutions and in domestic service, mining, quarrying, construction, brickmaking, carrying heavy loads, and applying fertilizers and pesticides.(37) Penalties for violations of the Labor Law provisions on the worst forms of child labor and hazardous work are stringent, with penalties of up to 20 years of incarceration and fines.(36) However, the Labor Law covers only contractual employment, leaving most of Rwanda's working children unprotected.(36, 38)

In 2012, Mimuri sector authorities in Nyagatare District created guidelines to combat child labor in the sugar and rice sectors, and these guidelines include punitive measures for those found employing children.(39) The districts of Bugesera, Nyamagabe, Gatsibo, Gicumbi, and Nyaruguru have also enacted laws against hazardous child labor that sanction employers and parents for violations.(40)

The Labor Law also prohibits child trafficking, and the Law on Prevention and Punishment of Gender-Based Violence prohibits and provides penalties for "gender-based human trafficking."(36, 41) The Law Relating to the Rights and Protection of the Child, which came into effect in June 2012, includes provisions on the worst forms of child labor, protects children from violence and economic exploitation, and provides children with the right to rest and leisure.(10, 42) This Law also commits the Government to establishing a center for children living and working on the streets and ensuring the psychological recovery and social reintegration of children affected by armed conflict.(10, 42) In addition, the Labor Law and Presidential Orders 155/01 and 72/01 prohibit children under age 18 from being recruited for military service.(43, 44)

Rwanda

In 2012, Rwanda adopted the Organic Law Instituting the Penal Code.⁽⁴⁵⁾ This Law prohibits slavery; child trafficking; child rape; violence against children; recruitment, use, or profit from the commercial sexual exploitation of children; and use of children for armed conflict, in pornographic publications, or for illicit activities. The Law also provides penalties, including jail time and a fine, for persons who recruit children for armed conflict or do not report offenses committed against children to the authorities.⁽⁴⁵⁾ Despite this protection, in 2012, children were recruited within Rwanda by M23 for armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.^(10, 29-31, 46)

In April 2012, the Kigali City Security Council drafted guidelines on child labor, including domestic work. These guidelines have been translated into English and French and are awaiting the Prime Minister's approval.^(10, 47)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Advisory Committee on Child Labor in Rwanda coordinates government efforts related to the worst forms of child labor and is responsible for reviewing child labor laws. It also advocates for the inclusion of child labor policies in national development plans, oversees the implementation of child labor interventions, and conducts field visits to assess the prevalence of child labor and to raise awareness of child labor.^(10, 24) This Committee meets quarterly and includes representatives from the Ministry of Public Service and Labor (MIFOTRA), the Ministry of Youth, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Gender and Family Promotion (MIGEPROF), the Ministry of Local Government, the Ministry of Sports and Culture, the Rwandan National Police (RNP), the National Human Rights Commission, the RDRC, trade unions, the ILO, UNICEF, the Private Sector Federation, and Winrock International.^(10, 24, 48)

The National Commission for Children (NCC) works to monitor, promote, and advocate for children's rights, as well as to develop action plans to protect children from abuse and exploitation.^(10, 49) The NCC is an independent structure under the MIGEPROF and is supported by a board of directors and an advisory council of 14 institutions.^(10, 50) The NCC met twice during the year and had a budget of approximately $2.4 million, which includes $1.5 million for district governments to implement child protection programs. The NCC employed 49 staff members during the reporting period, including a child protection officer who is responsible for child labor issues.^(10, 51)

The Government also has established the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Rights, National Commission on Orphans and Vulnerable Children, and Child's Rights Observatory within the National Commission for Human Rights.^(10, 50) The Inter-Ministerial Committee on Children's Rights is mandated to meet at least once a year to coordinate and assess the progress of the National Integrated Child Rights Policy (ICRP) and the Strategic Plan for the ICRP in Rwanda. The National Commission on Orphans and Vulnerable Children and the Child's Rights Observatory monitor and protect the rights of children in Rwanda.^(10, 24, 44)

There are 149 local child labor committees nationwide that monitor incidents of child labor.^(10, 40) Gender-based violence committees operate at the district level, and child protection committees are active at the district, sector, and cell levels to identify and report cases of child rights violations.^(47, 52) In addition, the Kigali City Council operates a task force to combat child labor in the districts of Kicukiro, Gasabo, and Nyarugenge.^(19, 47, 53)

To enforce labor laws, including laws on child labor, the MIFOTRA employs 30 labor inspectors (one per district) who are supervised by the district authorities and work with the RNP.^(10, 54-56) At the national level, there is also supposed to be one labor inspector supervised by the Directorate General in charge of labor. However, this position remained vacant for most of 2012.^(54, 57) According to the MIFOTRA, one labor inspector per district is not enough to conduct all of the necessary inspections.⁽⁴⁸⁾ In 2012, the MIFOTRA provided labor inspectors with laptops and funds for Internet service. In addition, half of all labor inspectors received motorcycles and funds for fuel and maintenance.⁽¹⁰⁾ Despite this improvement, the MIFOTRA reports that many labor inspectors still lack transportation to carry out inspections.^(48, 57) During the reporting period, the ILO Committee of Experts was concerned that vulnerable workers, including children, may not be adequately protected, as the budget allocated to labor inspection depended on district authorities and the availability of resources.⁽⁵⁶⁾ To address this concern, in 2012, the MIFOTRA instituted an auditing mechanism to ensure that funds disbursed for labor inspectors were not reprogrammed by district officials.⁽¹⁰⁾

The MIFOTRA assesses the performance of its labor inspectors every 6 months and provides them with training twice a year on identifying and investigating child labor violations.⁽¹⁰⁾ In 2012, labor inspectors held quarterly trainings for employers and local authorities in their district on child labor issues.^(10, 48) The MIFOTRA's training budget for labor inspectors was $180,000 in 2012.⁽¹⁰⁾

In Rwanda, inspections may be conducted without prior notice, and labor inspectors may issue warnings, which must be corrected by the offender within 7 days. If the violation is not corrected within 7 days, the labor inspector may ask the authorities to temporarily close the institution under investigation.(54) However, Law No. 13/2009 permits labor inspectors to enter workplaces only during normal business hours, even though ILO Convention 81 notes that inspectors should be able to enter workplaces at all times. This practice may exclude protection for children who work irregular hours.(58) Labor inspection reports do not contain information on inspections related to the worst forms of child labor.(59) Data regarding child labor inspections, prosecutions, and penalties are not publicly available.(10, 48)

Within villages, citizens can report instances of child labor to the police or to a local volunteer officer in charge of social affairs. If the officer cannot resolve the problem, it may be referred to the village leader, who may contact the police.(57) The district authorities' personal performance contracts include targets for reducing child labor and increasing school enrollment.(10)

The RNP enforces criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Within the Commission for Criminal Investigations of the RNP, there is a Child Protection Unit with a network of investigators throughout the country who are responsible for cases of child abuse, including the use of children in commercial sexual exploitation.(10, 60, 61) The RNP also operates a free hotline to report incidences of gender-based violence; this hotline is also used for reporting child abuse, including child labor.(57, 62) Some MIGEPROF and RNP employees do not always follow government-approved procedures for screening children and referring them to services, which may impact the quality and timeliness of services provided to children.(10, 24) During the reporting period, the RNP referred some child domestics and children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation to the Isange Center within the Kacyiru Police Hospital for police assistance, legal aid, shelter, medical exams, and counseling. In 2012, five similar centers at public hospitals were open in other districts.(10) During the reporting period, police in Kigali arrested two suspects for trafficking girls to Asia and investigated one case of forced commercial sexual exploitation of a child.(18, 63)

Trafficking cases are referred to the RNP and to the Directorate General of Immigration and Emigration.(57) The Directorate General of Immigration and Emigration retains an anti-trafficking specialist, and the RNP operates an anti-trafficking unit staffed with 15 full-time officers, an increase of 12 officers from 2011.(10, 21) Despite this increase, RNP officials report that the number of officers in this unit is still insufficient to address the problem.(10) The RNP is trained on several issues, including crimes against children, and 112 police officers were trained in 2012 on transnational child trafficking. However, some officials lack awareness about the laws pertaining to internal trafficking, as they have not been trained.(10, 21) In addition, there have been indications that some members of the RNP are not sensitized to the needs of child trafficking victims, and that some children found engaged in commercial sexual exploitation were detained in transit centers for months before being released.(10, 64) There is no information on the number of trafficking investigations or prosecutions.(10)

Immigration and customs officers assist with the enforcement of child trafficking laws and receive training on document verification and passenger profiling. Standard procedure requires these officers to verify that all children transported across the border are traveling with the permission of their parents or guardians.(10, 24) During the reporting period, the RNP opened Interpol offices at 13 border crossings and at the Kigali International Airport to combat trafficking in persons.(10) The Government also created a special court for international crimes, including human trafficking, during the reporting period.(21) Research found no information about the number of children prevented from crossing the border in 2012.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In March 2013, the Government of Rwanda approved its National Policy for the Elimination of Child Labor and 5-year Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.(65, 66) The National Policy for the Elimination of Child Labor and 5-year Action Plan to Combat Child Labor aim to prevent at-risk children from entering exploitative child labor; withdraw children engaged in exploitative labor through the provision of education; rehabilitate former child laborers through counseling, life skills training, and medical care; raise community awareness on child labor; establish monitoring and evaluation mechanisms on child labor; and carry out other initiatives.(10, 38, 66, 67)

In 2012, the MIGEPROF continued to implement its ICRP and Strategic Plan (2011-2016) to address all children's issues, including child labor.(24, 44, 50) The ICRP and Strategic Plan are guided by the principles that abuse, exploitation, and violence against children are intolerable and that the Government and caretakers are accountable for the well-being of children.(44, 68) The ICRP prohibits child labor, and the Strategic Plan provides $9,000 to develop timebound programs to eliminate child labor.(44, 68) When the ICRP and Strategic Plan were adopted in 2011, all other national policies specific to children's issues were subsumed, including the National Policy for Orphans and Other Vulnerable Children, National Strategic Plan of Action for Orphans and Other Vulnerable Children, National Strategic Plan on Street Children, and National Policy for Family Promotion. However, it is unclear how the ICRP and Strategic Plan will complement the National Policy for the Elimination of Child Labor and 5-year Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.(10, 69-72) Rwanda also made policy commitments to combat child labor in its National Employment Policy and Economic Development and Poverty Reduction Strategy II (EDPRS II) (2008-2012).(48, 73-75)

The Government's National Youth Policy and Vision 2020 include child protection issues.(57, 76-78) In addition, Rwanda's National Social Protection Strategy defines social protection and outlines social development activities to assist poor households, such as providing vulnerable children with grants and free education.(79) However, it appears that no research has been conducted on whether these policies have an impact on preventing or reducing the worst forms of child labor.

In 2012, Rwanda began implementing its Twelve Years Basic Education (12YBE) policy, which provides free education for 12 years, by hiring new teachers and building schools.(10) Education is compulsory, beginning at the age of 7, until the age of 16. However, in practice, the costs of uniforms, school supplies, and unofficial school fees prohibit many families from sending their children to school.(57, 77, 80-82) Although the Strategic Plan for the ICRP in Rwanda calls for registration of the births of all children 16 years of age and younger by 2015, approximately 20.0 percent of children in Rwanda remain without birth certificates, which may make it difficult for them to access education.(44, 83)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the RDRC relocated the child rehabilitation center for former child combatants returning from the Democratic Republic of the Congo from the Muhazi District in the Eastern Province to the Musanze District in the Northern Province. The new center raises awareness of child soldier issues and provides a 3-month course to former child soldiers, including counseling, education, recreational activities, and vocational training.(10, 18, 21, 44) During the reporting period, the RDRC rehabilitated 66 former child combatants and reunited

53 with their families.(10, 18) The RDRC receives funding from UNICEF, the World Bank, and the Governments of Sweden, the Netherlands, Japan, and Germany.(21) In addition, Rwanda is working with the UN High Commission for Refugees to improve protection measures and provide access to education for children in Rwanda's four refugee camps who may be impacted by the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.(84)

The Government continued to participate in the Rwanda Education Alternatives for Children (REACH) project, which is funded by USDOL at $4.5 million from September 2009 to March 2013. The project aims to withdraw 4,800 children and prevent 3,500 children from exploitive child labor, particularly in the agricultural sector, by providing educational services, strengthening child labor and education policies, and ensuring the sustainability of these efforts.(12)

Rwanda also continued to participate in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Rwanda, the project aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor.(85, 86)

In 2012, the National Agricultural Export Board participated in discussions on child labor in the agriculture sector with companies and NGOs.(39, 47) The MIFOTRA and district authorities also raised public awareness on the importance of education and on children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor through radio shows, television announcements, and skits.(10)

Rwanda continued to collaborate with the Eastern Africa Police Chiefs Cooperation Organization in order to strengthen its ability to combat human trafficking. This organization consists of 11 East African countries and works to strengthen regional cooperation and capacities among East African law enforcement authorities.(87-89) The Government also initiated a campaign against child abuse, sexual exploitation, and human trafficking.(10)

In 2012, Rwanda continued to implement its Vision 2020 Umurenge Program, which provides direct support through cash and in-kind transfers to child-headed households and street children. By March 2012, this Program assisted 1,074 children in 25 centers across the country.(10, 79, 90, 91) The Government also continued to operate the Gitagata center for former street children; this center was located in the Bugesera District during the reporting period. The center provided education support and recreational activities to more than 700 boys, ages 7 to 19.(10, 67) In addition, the Government sustained its partnership with private organizations to support 33 orphanages that provided shelter, basic needs, and rehabilitation for 3,153 street children, orphans, and vulnerable children.(10) However, in August 2012, the MIGEPROF announced that it would begin phasing out Rwanda's orphanages and integrating children with families across the country. The MIGEPROF closed three orphanages by the end of 2012.(10, 68, 78, 92) It is too early to determine the impact that the Vision 2020 Umurenge Program and the closing of childcare institutions will have on child labor.

The WFP continued to provide meals to 350,000 children in 300 primary schools. Rwanda, in collaboration with the Government of Brazil, also began developing a home-grown school feeding program in 2012.(93, 94) In addition, Rwanda implemented the One Cup of Milk per Child program, funded by the EU, to provide milk to children in nursery and primary schools. As of January 2012, 30 schools benefited from the program.(95, 96) The question of whether the school feeding programs have an impact on the prevention or reduction of the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been studied.

Despite the many programs detailed in this section, Rwanda's social programs are not sufficient to assist the numerous children working in domestic service.(35)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Rwanda:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Ensure protection for children working in exploitative noncontractual labor activities.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Revising Law No. 13/2009 to allow labor inspectors to enter workplaces outside of normal business hours.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Improve measures to investigate, prosecute, and convict individuals involved in the worst forms of child labor by <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Ensuring that the MIFOTRA and the RNP have sufficient human and financial resources to carry out their mandates. Making information publicly available on investigations and prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor. Ensuring that the MIGEPROF and RNP provide training to staff on government-approved procedures for screening children and referring them to services. Increasing training among enforcement officials on internal child trafficking and the rights of trafficking victims and children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation. 	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012 2012 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that Government of Rwanda officials enforce the law with regard to the recruitment of children for armed conflict.	2012
	Policies	Assess the impact that policies such as the National Youth Policy, Vision 2020, and National Social Protection Strategy may have on addressing the worst forms of child labor.	2011, 2012
	Ensure that school costs, such as uniforms, school supplies, and unofficial school fees, do not diminish the impact of the 12YBE policy.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement the Strategic Plan for the ICRP in Rwanda, which requires the birth registration of all children 16 years and below by 2015.	2012
	Undertake an assessment on the extent of child trafficking in Rwanda.	2012

Rwanda

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Social Programs	Take steps to ensure that children in Rwanda are not recruited by armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.	2012
	Conduct an assessment of the impact that the Vision 2020 Umurenge Program, closing of child care institutions, birth registration programs, and school feeding programs may have on the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Develop additional social protection programs to assist child domestic servants.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Saint Kitts and Nevis made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government implemented the Child Protection Protocol and established a Special Victims Unit to assist children involved in the worst forms of child labor. All labor inspectors also received child labor training to better identify, protect, and assist children found in such conditions. However, there are some legislative gaps in protecting children ages 16 and 17 from employment in hazardous conditions. While there is no evidence to suggest it is a widespread problem, children in Saint Kitts and Nevis may be engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

While there is no evidence to suggest it is a widespread problem, children in Saint Kitts and Nevis may be engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in domestic service.(3) Child domestic labor may involve long hours of work, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(4)

Limited evidence suggests that there have been isolated occurrences of child prostitution.(5)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children (EWYPC) Act and the Employment of Children (Restriction) Ordinance set the minimum age for work at 16, including

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	C138, Minimum Age	✓
	C182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	CRC	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	No
	CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	No
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓
	Minimum Age for Work	16
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	16
	Compulsory Education Age	16
	Free Public Education	Yes

employment that is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of the employed children. Carrying heavy loads, working on ships, or in industrial undertakings fall into this category.(6) Work that constitutes industrial undertakings is defined in the Employment of Children (Restriction) Ordinance and includes mining, construction, and manufacturing. However, these prohibitions do not apply to family businesses, and children ages 16 and 17 appear to lack legal protections from employment in dangerous conditions.(6, 7) Moreover, a hazardous list, delineating the occupations and activities that children should be prohibited from engaging in, has not been established.(6, 8)

The Constitution explicitly prohibits forced or slave labor.(9) The Trafficking in Persons Act of 2008 prohibits and criminalizes human trafficking.(10, 11) The Act prohibits the exploitation of all persons, including children, for prostitution and commercial sexual use. Procuring, offering, engaging, pandering, or profiting from prostitution or child pornography is illegal.(8) However, there are currently no legal frameworks prohibiting the use, procurement, or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.(8)

The Probation and Child Welfare Board Act prohibits the infliction of non-accidental injuries on a child, especially by a caretaker. These injuries include sexual abuse or engaging the child in activities that they cannot give consent to, such as engaging the child in prostitution, photographing, or depicting the child in an indecent manner, and conducting oneself in a sexual manner that causes harm to the child's welfare.(12)

The Government's military force is jointly patrolled with the police under the Police Act of 2003. The minimum age for recruitment to the Government's security force is 18, and there is no compulsory service.(13, 14)

The Education Act of 2005 makes schooling free and compulsory until the age of 16, and attendance is strictly enforced by school truancy officers.(3, 6, 15)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Ministry of Labor (MOL) is responsible for enforcing child labor laws and works closely with the Ministry of Social Development to refer working children for services. In 2012, the MOL employed six labor officers who also served as labor inspectors.(16) The labor officers are responsible for investigating all labor violations, including those related to children. This reporting period, the inspectors received training on child labor and carried out over 70 inspections.(16)

The police force leads all criminal investigations. They work closely with the Department of Gender Affairs and Child Welfare services to assist child victims.(16) A Special Victims Unit has been created by the police and the Child Protections Services agency to carry out investigations on the worst forms of child labor. The Department of Gender Affairs has signed a Child Protection Protocol with the police force to ensure that identified victims receive the appropriate services.(16) There were no child labor violations reported.(16)

The Government continued the National Advisory Board for the Elimination of Hazardous Child Labor (NABEHCL), which implements legislation that would eradicate Hazardous Child Labor (HCL). The Labor Commissioner chairs the NABEHCL, which comprises members from other government agencies, as well as representatives from workers' groups, employers' groups, and other civil society stakeholders.(5, 16) To ensure that the proposed legislation for the hazardous list is enforceable; the NABEHCL is first tasked with developing a National Consensus Policy and then revising current laws to reflect the desired changes. Ultimately, the purpose of the legislation will be to ensure that no child under the age of 16 is employed and to legally protect those children between the ages of 16 and 18 who are able to work, from being able to do so in hazardous occupations.(15) The Government is working on developing draft legislation that will also establish a list of hazardous occupations.(16)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government's White Paper on Education Development and Policy (2009-2019) outlines the Ministry of Education's goals and objectives for the education system. These goals include, but are not limited to, improving the access and quality of education for all children.(17) An official at the Ministry of Education reports that working children are not a problem and school dropout rates are negligible in Saint Kitts and Nevis; therefore, working children are not a major concern for the Government.(18) There is no recent data, however, on the actual number of children who are engaged in economic activities. A National Census was conducted in 2011, and it is expected to contain such information.(7) Results from the Census are not available, and it is unknown when they will be published. Research was unable to discover any additional policies addressing the worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since 2009, the Government has operated the Support Services for Families of Children at Imminent Risk Program in an effort to prevent engagement in child labor activities, as well as child abuse or neglect.(13) They have also continued to support several social assistance programs that enable children to remain in school. These programs include provisions for food vouchers, school supplies, uniforms, textbooks, and a school meal program.(13) The Government continues to run Project Viola, a monetary assistance program for teenage mothers to pursue higher education.(13, 16)

The Ministry of Education offers vocational educational opportunities to at-risk children who are not doing well academically. These programs are geared at preventing child labor by providing children with alternatives.(19) However, the actual impact these programs have on child labor, especially on those engaged as domestic workers, is unknown.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Saint Kitts and Nevis:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend current laws to increase the minimum age for hazardous employment to age 18.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Extend labor provisions to cover children working in family businesses.	2011, 2012
	Adopt a list that would define work that is hazardous for children.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Draft and adopt legislation to prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2012
Policies	Publish the results for the 2011 National Census to assess the prevalence of child labor and its worst forms.	2012
Social Programs	Assess the impact that existing policies and programs may have on addressing the worst forms of child labor, especially in domestic service.	2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Saint Lucia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the amended Labor Act of 2006, raising the minimum age for employment to 15. In addition, the Government continued to support an afterschool program for underprivileged youth. Despite these efforts there is no evidence of any policies to address the worst forms of child labor and there is no indication that research has been conducted by the Government to assess the scope of the problem. Although information on the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in Saint Lucia is limited, children are reported to be engaged in dangerous activities in agriculture.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Although information on the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in Saint Lucia is limited, children are reported to be engaged in dangerous activities in agriculture.(3-5) There is some information that children in rural areas harvest bananas after school and during the holidays.(3-5) Children working in agriculture may be engaged in dangerous activities. They may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(6, 7)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(4, 5, 8)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the Government adopted the amended Labor Act of 2006, which repeals the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Law Revised Ordinances of 1957.(9-11) The amended Act sets the minimum age for employment at 15 and prohibits the employment of children who have not yet reached the minimum age for compulsory education.(9-11) The Labor Act of 2006 and the Education Act of 1999 both prohibit the employment of children under the age of 16 during the school week, unless for vocational training, but allows children above the age of 13 to be engaged in light work during the weekends and on holidays.

Saint Lucia

The Government has identified, among other occupations, car washing, delivering newspapers, cake sales, and other fundraising school activities to constitute light work.(9, 12)

The Occupational Health and Safety Act prohibits the employment of persons under age 18 in industrial undertakings.(3, 13, 14) This includes, but is not limited to, cleaning, lubricating, or adjusting any machinery while in motion; working on a steam boiler, a kiln, an oven, and other equipment that involves high temperature exposure; working on machine tools and other high speed machinery; and operating cranes, winches, and other lifting appliances. Young persons—those who have attained the age of 16 but not yet 18—are also prohibited from engagement in these hazardous activities unless they are being supervised as part of an apprenticeship or vocational training program.(3, 13, 14) Research found no evidence that there are prohibitions on hazardous work in other sectors of the economy.

Saint Lucia does not have a military force, as the police force is responsible for the security of the country. The minimum age for recruitment to the police force is 18.(15, 16)

The Constitution prohibits slavery, servitude, and forced labor for children of all ages.(17) The Criminal Code bans prostitution and the procurement of or engagement in sexual relations with any male or female under age 18.(18) The Counter-Trafficking Act No. 7 criminalizes the trafficking of children for labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 19) However, the Government lacks adequate protections for children used in child pornography and drug trafficking.(14)

The Education Act No. 41 (1999) mandates compulsory primary and secondary schooling from ages 5 to 15.(11, 12) Under the Act, tuition is free for children attending public institutions; however, other unspecified charges can be applied if approved by the Minister.(12) Although school is compulsory for all children under the age of 15, the Ministry of Education reports that truancy has led to child labor in the informal sector. In an effort to keep children from entering the labor force and in school, an additional Truancy Officer has been hired.(11) It is unknown whether this is sufficient to address the problem.(11)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence of a specific coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor in Saint Lucia.

Child labor law enforcement is the responsibility of the Ministry of Education, Human Resource Development and

Labor, and the Ministry of Health, Wellness, Human Services and Gender Relations.(3, 4) The Department of Labor, within the Ministry of Education, Human Resource Development and Labor, conducts workplace inspections to ensure compliance with the labor law.(11) Seven labor inspectors are in charge of all aspects of labor violations, including child labor. Inspectors conduct spot investigations, check records to verify compliance with the law, and take legal action against employers found employing underage workers.(3) Ministry representatives noted that the current number of inspectors is insufficient to carry out their responsibilities. The amount of funding allocated for child labor inspections is unknown.(3) During the reporting period, there were no reports of inspections being conducted regarding child labor or of penalties and citations issued for child labor violations.(3, 11)

Enforcement of all criminal laws, including those involving the worst forms of child labor, is the responsibility of the Royal Saint Lucia Police Force. They have a Vulnerable Persons Unit to investigate all cases of child abuse and neglect, including child labor, and work in collaboration with the Division of Human Services.(3, 4) The Vulnerable Persons Unit did not receive specific child labor training during the reporting period. (3)

The Government of Saint Lucia had previously established the National Coalition against Trafficking in Persons, which was meant to detect, investigate trafficking cases, and protect victims. Research found no evidence that the Coalition was in place during the reporting period.(20) No formal training was provided to the Saint Lucia police, immigration authorities, health workers, or child protection officials in recognizing trafficked victims.(21)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Research found no evidence of any policies to address the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in agriculture or street work, nor of any research conducted by the Government to assess the scope of these problems.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government supported efforts that may indirectly address child labor through initiatives to keep children in school. In particular, it continued to support an afterschool pilot program initiated in 2009 to target underprivileged children between ages 8 and 16.(22) Enacted by the Ministry of Social Transformation, Youth, and Sports, the program engages children in three poor communities in various afterschool activities. As of the writing of this report, it was expected to continue until 2013.⁽²²⁾ The impact of the program on child labor is unknown.

Research found no evidence that the Government of Saint Lucia carried out programs during the reporting period to assist children involved in dangerous forms of agriculture or street work.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Saint Lucia:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Enact prohibitions on hazardous work in sectors other than industrial undertakings for children under age 18.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Draft and adopt legislation to prohibit procuring or offering a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.	2011, 2012
	Draft and adopt legislation to prohibit procuring or offering a child for illicit activities, including drug trafficking and production.	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors so that child labor laws are adequately enforced.	2011, 2012
	Establish a specific coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide child labor and human trafficking training to relevant authorities working with vulnerable populations, including child laborers.	2012
	Make information on inspections for child labor and results of those inspections publically available.	2012
Policies	Conduct a comprehensive study to assess the nature and extent of the worst forms of child labor in the country.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Adopt policies to combat the worst forms of child labor in dangerous forms of agriculture and street work.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Determine the impact of the Ministry of Social Transformation, Youth, and Sports afterschool program on child labor.	2011, 2012
	Use the results of any studies conducted on the worst forms of child labor to assess the need for social programs to assist children working in agriculture and other identified worst forms.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In implementing the Prevention and Trafficking in Persons Act this year, the Government established a ministerial National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons. An anti-trafficking unit has also been established within the Royal Police Force. However, gaps remain in the legal framework, as the minimum age for hazardous work falls below international standards and there is no law to prohibit the use of children in the production of drugs. While the country does not appear to have a widespread child labor problem, some children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, some children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor. There is limited evidence suggesting that children are involved in dangerous activities within the agricultural sector, including the cultivation of marijuana.(3-5) Although information is limited, there are reports that children are also found working on banana plantations and in family-owned cottage industries.(5, 6) Such work may put them at risk by requiring them to use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(7, 8)

There also have been reports of trafficking in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, including children who are trafficked for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and work in agriculture.(9) Limited reports from NGO and government sources state that girls are encouraged by their mothers to engage in sexual activities with older men for money as a way to supplement the family income.(6) However, the Government has acknowledged that due to the lack of data on the prevalence of child labor, especially the sexual exploitation of children, the full extent of the problem is unknown.(10) In addition, there is limited evidence that children are involved in the trade of marijuana.(3-5)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children (EWYPC) Act establishes the minimum age for employment, including hazardous work, at age 14.(10, 11) This law does not meet the international minimum age standard of 18 for hazardous work.(10, 11) Children under the age of 18 are prohibited from working at night and in any industrial undertaking.(10, 11)

The EWYPC Act also authorizes the Governor-General to establish regulations regarding the health, welfare, and safety of children and young persons. However, there are no regulations defining or prohibiting hazardous occupations or conditions for children.(10, 11).

The Prevention of Trafficking in Persons (PTIP) Act of 2011 prohibits the sale and trafficking of all children under the age of 18. The Act prohibits the involvement of any trafficked person, including children, in forced labor, prostitution, and pornography.(12, 13) It also prohibits the use of a child in the trafficking of illicit goods.(12, 13) However, there are no legal frameworks prohibiting the use of children in the production and trafficking of illicit drugs.(10)

The Constitution (1979) prohibits all forms of forced and compulsory labor.(14)

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines does not have a national army.(15) The Royal Saint Vincent and the Grenadines Police Force is responsible for the security and protection of the people. The minimum age for voluntary recruitment into the Police Force is 19.(15, 16)

The Education Act of 1992 was revised in 2006 to offer universal access to primary and secondary schooling. The Act mandates free and compulsory education for all children between the ages of 5 to 16.(17-19)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, a ministerial-level task force coordinates the prosecution of trafficking cases.(5)

The Ministry of Labor is responsible for enforcing all child labor laws. There are five labor officers who are responsible for monitoring all labor issues for the country and the island of the Grenadines.(4-6) Inspectors investigate child labor only in response to complaints; there were no reports of inspections or violations involving child labor this reporting period.(5) The Government recognizes that there are not enough inspectors to carry out the full extent of their assigned duties and this has led to difficulties in inspecting workplaces.(20) In 2012, the Government allocated $377,777 to the Ministry for all enforcement activities. Labor inspectors did not receive training on child labor and its worst forms this reporting period.(5)

The Royal Police Force is responsible for making all criminal arrests, including those involving the worst forms of child labor and human trafficking. An anti-trafficking unit has also been created within the Royal Police Force in an effort to address the problem.(5, 21) In 2012, the budget for the police force was $650,250. This reporting period, the entire force received training on trafficking victim identification, care, and sensitization.(21) Children who are identified by the police force as victims of human trafficking or engaged in child labor are referred to the Ministry of Social Development for social services by the Ministry of Labor.(5, 21)

In 2012, the Government established a ministerial National Task Force against Trafficking in Persons.(22) The functions of the Task Force are to develop a national plan to address trafficking, to coordinate the collection of data amongst government agencies, to establish policies to enable government agencies to work with nongovernmental organizations to prevent trafficking and assist victims, as well as to coordinate and provide training for all relevant government officials and authority figures.(13, 22)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Although the worst forms of child labor do not appear to occur extensively in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, research found no evidence of policies to address existing child labor, including children working in agriculture and child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(5) According to the Government, official statistics are not available on the prevalence and scope of the worst forms of child labor.(10)

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines does not have any programs that are specifically designed to address child labor. However, several programs exist to reduce poverty, increase educational attainment, and improve the overall lives of its people.(4, 5, 18) Some of the services include free medical and health care services for children 16 years and younger, subsidization of textbooks, and school feeding programs.(18)

The Ministry of Education developed the Education Sector Development Plan to serve as a guide in the comprehensive development of the education system.(4, 18, 19) Programs, such as Children Against Poverty, were developed to address gaps in the schooling system and break the cycle of intergenerational poverty.(4, 18) This program specifically targets low achievers between the ages of 5 to 16, using innovative and integrated approaches to learning, in order to keep children engaged.(18)

The impact of these programs on the worst forms of child labor is unclear.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act to make 18 the minimum age for engaging in hazardous work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Develop a list of hazardous occupations and working conditions prohibited to children under the age of 18.	2009, 2011, 2012
	Draft and adopt legislation to prohibit procuring or offering a child for the production and trafficking of illicit drugs.	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat all worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide training to inspectors on child labor and its worst forms.	2011, 2012
Policies	Conduct a national child labor study to assess whether the worst forms of child labor are indicative of a small or hidden problem that requires further follow-up.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Develop a national plan of action to address the worst forms of child labor, particularly for children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation and in illicit activities within the agricultural sector.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on addressing the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Samoa made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Children age 15 or older can perform any kind of work and have no protections against their involvement in hazardous labor. Although data are limited and the extent of the problem is unknown, children in Samoa are reportedly engaged in the worst forms of child labor. However, the Government has not designed or implemented programs specifically to address the worst forms of child labor in which Samoan children are engaged, namely dangerous activities in agriculture and domestic service. While the Government is implementing programs to improve access to education with the help of international donors, primary education is not free by law.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Although data are limited and the extent of the problem is unknown, children in Samoa are reportedly engaged in the worst forms of child labor. The lack of official data and other information does not allow for an accurate assessment of the full nature and extent of the worst forms of child labor in Samoa.

Most boys in Samoa begin working on plantations as preteens or young teenagers planting, harvesting, and tending to domestic animals. Limited evidence suggests that children gather crops such as coconuts.(3, 4) In some cases, children working in agriculture may use dangerous machinery and tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(5, 6)

Children are reportedly employed as domestic servants.(3, 4, 7) Children working as domestic servants may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(8, 9)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(4, 7, 10)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor and Employment Act 1972 sets the minimum age for employment, including hazardous work, at 15 and allows children under age 15 to engage in “safe and light work suited to the capacity of the child.” Samoa’s labor laws do not include protections against hazardous work for children age 15 to 18. The Act prohibits children under age 15 from working with dangerous machinery, in any occupation or place where working conditions are likely to harm their physical or moral health, or on any vessel not under the personal charge of a parent or guardian.(11) The Act only applies to individuals who work in a fixed place of employment.(4) Although Samoa does not have a list of work activities considered hazardous, the Government reportedly commenced the process of drafting one in 2011.(12) Information is unavailable on whether the draft was finalized. The lack of clarity regarding hazardous work and work outside of a fixed place of employment leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

The Constitution prohibits forced or compulsory labor, but also explicitly includes an exception to this provision for work or service required by Samoan custom.(13) Research did not identify which work or service activities would be required by Samoan custom.

Though Samoa has no criminal provision targeted specifically at child prostitution, the Crimes Ordinance 1961 provides protection for girls, prohibiting the inducement of a female of any age into sexual relations through fraudulent means.(14) Soliciting or procuring a female of any age for prostitution, or benefiting from the earnings thereof, is also punishable under the Ordinance.(14) The Crimes Ordinance does not provide adequate protection against the commercial sexual exploitation of boys, since the provisions detailed above exclude males. No specific criminal provision exists regarding child pornography, but there is a provision of the Crimes Ordinance that generally prohibits the distribution or exhibition of indecent matter.(14) In 2012, parliament tabled a bill to repeal the Crimes Ordinance 1961 and replace it with the Crimes Act 2012. If passed, the Crimes Act 2012 would impose additional penalties on individuals who engage children under the age of 18 in forced labor, or commit sexual crimes against children.(15)

No comprehensive law prohibits trafficking in persons, but kidnapping any person with the intent to transport him or her out of the country, or holding the individual for service, is a crime punishable under the Crimes Ordinance. Children are also protected by the provision of the Ordinance providing that no person under age 16 may give consent to being sent or taken out of Samoa.(14) However, it is unclear whether the law provides for complete protection against domestic human trafficking.

The Education Act 2009 makes education compulsory for children under age 15. The Act stipulates that a child under age 15 cannot be involved in work of any kind at any time during which this work would interfere with the child's school attendance, participation in school activities, or educational development.(16) The Act does not provide for free education.

As there are no armed forces maintained by the Government of Samoa, there is no minimum age for conscription.(17) Research did not identify whether there are any specific laws against using children for drug trafficking.

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of Samoa has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.

The Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Labor (MCIL) is the primary government agency designated to enforce child labor laws.(10, 18) The Ministry of Women, Community, and Social Development and the Ministry of Education may be called upon to help with investigations.(7)

The MCIL's inspectors investigate Labor and Employment Act violation complaints, including complaints related to child labor violations, and refer them to the Ministry of Police (MOP) and the Office of the Attorney General for enforcement.(10, 18) In 2012, the MCIL assigned 11 inspectors to carry out inspections. No child labor violations were reported to MCIL during the reporting period.(15) No cases involving child labor were prosecuted in 2012.(4)

Trafficking-related investigations are conducted by the Transnational Crimes Unit of the MOP.(19) No information was identified on the number of trafficking-related enforcement actions or violations found during the reporting period.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Research found no evidence of any policies in place to address the worst forms of child labor, namely in dangerous activities in agriculture or domestic service.(3)

The Government did not collect information on exploitative child labor in 2012. The last official study on child labor was conducted in 2005.(15, 20)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In partnership with Australia and New Zealand, the Government operates the Samoa School Fee Grant Scheme (SSFGS), which provides free education to all primary school children enrolled in government and mission (church-run) schools.(3, 15, 21-23) Approximately 99 percent of Samoan primary school students are enrolled in schools covered by the SSFGS Program, while the remainder are enrolled in private schools. One of the Program's aims is to make school enrollment and attendance affordable to parents who are otherwise unable to pay school fees.(22)

The Government continues to implement the Education Sector Program II to create a more equitable and effective education system. The Program is designed to improve curriculum, learning materials, the national assessment system, teacher training, and educational facilities.(15, 24) Program II is being implemented with help from the Asian Development Bank and the Governments of Australia and New Zealand. It will run through a part of 2013.(15, 24)

The Strategy for the Development of Samoa 2008-2012, compiled by the Economic Policy and Planning Division of the Ministry of Finance, focuses on Samoan developmental goals and strategies for achieving them. One area of focus is on improving education standards, such as school attendance, particularly for girls. Goals included creating more water sources closer to homes to reduce the time girls spend fetching water for their households and constructing separate restroom facilities at schools for boys and girls.(25) Information was unavailable on the progress made toward these goals, and the impact of the strategy on child labor appears not to have been addressed.

Research has not uncovered evidence of any government programs specifically intended to address the worst forms of child labor in agriculture or domestic service.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Samoa:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the Labor and Employment Act 1972 to prohibit hazardous work activities for all children under age 18.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, São Tomé and Príncipe made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government held a tripartite national seminar on the worst forms of child labor, and the National Assembly ratified a new Penal Code that criminalizes human trafficking, setting steeper penalties for labor trafficking that involves minors younger than 16. However, São Tomé and Príncipe's legislation does not fully protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Further, the Government has not established a coordinating mechanism or national policy to combat the worst forms of child labor, and current Government programs do not target all sectors in which child labor occurs. Children in São Tomé and Príncipe continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in São Tomé and Príncipe are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic service.(3-10) Children employed as domestics may work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. They may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(11, 12) Some reports suggest that children may also perform unsafe tasks in carpentry and artisanal workshops.(3, 4)

The most common form of work children do in São Tomé and Príncipe is light work on farms and plantations in rural areas.(5, 6, 8-10, 13) However, there is limited evidence that some agricultural work is dangerous.(14) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(14, 15)

There is some evidence that children are engaged in fishing, though the significance of the problem is thought to be limited.(5, 13) These children may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(16, 17)

Limited evidence suggests that the commercial sexual exploitation of children is also a problem in São Tomé and Príncipe.(18, 19)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(3-6)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Law on Individual Labor Contracts sets the minimum age for work in São Tomé and Príncipe at 14 and the minimum age for hazardous work at 18.(20) The law also limits children younger than age 18 from working more than 7 hours per day and 35 hours per week.(20) In order to work legally, children ages 14 to 17 must obtain written parental consent and provide proof of school attendance.(9, 10) The legislation calls for the development of a list of hazardous occupations from which children will be prohibited, and although the Government intends to issue a list, one has not yet been developed.(21)

The Constitution of São Tomé and Príncipe and the Penal Code prohibit forced or compulsory labor.(6, 21, 22) In 2012, the National Assembly ratified a new Penal Code. The legislation prohibits engaging in a sexual act with a child younger than 14 as well as directing a child younger than 14 to engage in a sexual act, protecting some young children from sexual exploitation.(21) The Penal Code also explicitly penalizes engaging in or facilitating sexual acts with a child under 14 for profit or gain.(21) However, laws do not fully protect all children younger than age 18 from commercial sexual exploitation, and child prostitutes between 14 and 18 are viewed by the law as criminals and are subject to prosecution.(18, 19, 23) The new Penal Code proscribes human trafficking for the purposes of labor and sexual exploitation.(21) The Code sets steeper penalties for labor trafficking when the crime involves a minor under 16 years of age.(21)

São Tomé and Príncipe's law prohibits the use of a child by an adult for illicit activity.(9, 10) The minimum age for compulsory recruitment into the military is 18.(23, 24)

The Constitution guarantees the provision of free and compulsory basic education.(22) The Basic Education System Law establishes 6 years of mandatory basic education, providing free schooling to children through sixth grade or age 15, whichever comes first.(9, 10, 25) However, in practice, some students in rural areas stop attending school after fourth grade.(26) Although the extent of the problem is unknown, some schools do not provide education through the sixth grade. Those that do are largely concentrated in district capitals and are inaccessible to rural children.(18, 27) Children who stop attending school before reaching the minimum age for employment are especially vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not in school but may not legally work.

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of São Tomé and Príncipe has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, the Government is working to form a Tripartite committee to combat child labor.(13, 28) Although the body is not yet formalized, the Government has begun working informally with labor unions and the Chamber of Commerce on efforts to combat child labor, including the development of a national action plan and a list of hazardous activities prohibited for children.(29)

The Department of Labor Inspection within the Ministry of Health and Social Affairs is responsible for enforcing labor laws, including those regarding exploitative child labor.(10) Due to budgetary restrictions, the Department lacks basic equipment for conducting inspections and daily operations. It is housed in a single office, has outdated and malfunctioning computers, and does not have a vehicle.(4, 8, 10) The Department of Labor Inspection forms teams to deal with labor exploitation on an ad hoc basis. The teams comprise members from other government agencies, including immigration officials, the police, tax administration officials, social workers, and members of the social security administration.(4, 8-10) The Government employs 15 labor inspectors who work in these small teams throughout the country.(8-10, 30)

Complaints regarding the worst forms of child labor may be lodged with the Department of Labor Inspection.(8) During the reporting period, no complaints of exploitative child labor were received and no labor investigations involved children.(10)

The Ministry of Justice, Public Administration, and Parliamentary Affairs is responsible for the enforcement of criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor and trafficking in persons. During the reporting period, there were no criminal investigations or prosecutions involving the worst forms of child labor or child trafficking.(9, 10)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Research found no evidence of any national policies to address the worst forms of child labor. However, during the reporting period, the Government expressed its intention to draft a national action plan against child labor.(13, 21, 28)

Sao Tomé and Príncipe

São Tomé and Príncipe and other members of the Community of Portuguese-Speaking countries have approved four target areas in which they will focus their efforts to combat child labor. These areas consist of the exchange of information and experiences, awareness-raising campaigns, use of statistical methodologies to collect child labor data, and technical cooperation and training.(31-33)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government participates in a USDOL-funded program to combat the worst forms of child labor in five Lusophone countries in Africa. The 2-year, $500,000 project aims to foster information sharing between Brazil and targets Lusophone countries about best practices for eliminating the worst forms of child labor. The project will also provide technical assistance for countries to develop or refine national action plans on child labor.(34) Under this project, the Government held a three-day national seminar on child labor in August 2012.(13, 28, 35) The seminar included union, government, and business representatives.(13) During the meeting, participants laid the framework for a national action plan against child labor and expressed an intent to form a Tripartite Committee to combat child labor.(13, 28, 35, 36)

The Government also supports three centers that provide shelter, education, and skills training to approximately 250 at-risk children, including street children and orphans.(8-10, 26, 37) Apart from partial funding, the Government provides the centers with land, buildings, social work staff, and school stipends for beneficiaries.(9, 10) During the reporting period, the Government also continued a media campaign to prevent child labor.(38)

The Government continues to implement the Education for All Program. The Program will include an initial, comprehensive data collection to better understand the current state of education in the country. Other components will include capacity building for teachers and a campaign to sensitize parents to the importance of education.(39) The Government also runs a program to help poor mothers and provides assistance for some low-income families to keep their children in school.(6, 40) However, the question of whether these programs have an effect on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

The Government does not have programs that specifically target children in agriculture, domestic service, or commercial sexual exploitation.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in São Tomé and Príncipe:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Develop a list of hazardous occupations in which children younger than age 18 are prohibited from working.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the law to protect all children younger than age 18 from commercial sexual exploitation, including prostitution and pornography.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the law to ensure that children in prostitution are treated as victims rather than offenders under the law.	2011, 2012
	Explore ways to increase access to schooling and enforce the compulsory education law.	2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Address the resource needs of the Department of Labor Inspection to effectively conduct inspections and enforce child labor laws.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Adopt policies to address the worst forms of child labor, particularly for children working in agriculture, domestic service, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Sao Tomé and Príncipe

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Social Programs	Assess the impact of existing education programs on child labor.	2011, 2012
	Develop new and expand existing programs to reach more children in the worst forms of child labor, particularly those in agriculture, domestic service, and commercial sex work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Senegal

In 2012, Senegal made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved a National Strategy under the Interagency Committee Against Child Labor in November 2012 and allocated funding for its implementation. Senegal's laws do not fully protect children from child labor. In particular, laws contain exceptions allowing children to work in underground mines and quarries. Enforcement agencies lack adequate resources and jurisdiction to effectively carry out their work. In addition, redundancy among government agencies and interagency bodies tasked with combating child labor results in confusion about each body's scope of responsibility and impedes effective coordination and implementation of efforts. Children in Senegal continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in agriculture and forced begging.

Statistics on Working Children and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working	5-14 yrs.	14.9 (510,420)
Attending School	5-14 yrs.	53.6
Combining Work and School	7-14 yrs.	8.3
Primary Completion Rate		62.8

Primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2012.(1)

All other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from DHS Survey, 2010-2011.(2)

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Senegal are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in agriculture and in forced begging. Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply pesticides.(3-8) Limited evidence suggests that children in rural areas also work in cattle herding.(3, 5-7) Children herding livestock may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(9, 10)

While the prevalence is unknown, children also work in the fishing sector.(3-7) In Senegal, fishing sometimes involves the use of explosives to kill large quantities of fish.(11, 12) In addition to the hazards associated with using explosives, children in fishing may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(13, 14)

Children are also engaged in domestic service.(3, 4, 7, 15-17) Children employed as domestics may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(15, 18, 19) Many child domestics are victims of human trafficking. Girls as young as age 10 are brought from abroad and from rural areas in Senegal to work as domestics in the country's urban centers.(3, 6, 17, 20) Children are also trafficked domestically and internationally for work in prostitution and sex tourism.(4, 20, 21)

In Senegal, it is traditional practice to send boys to Koranic teachers called marabouts to receive education, which may include vocational training and apprenticeship. Some marabouts force their students, called talibés, to beg on the streets for money and food and to surrender their earnings.(7, 17, 22-24) Marabouts who force their talibés to beg typically set a daily quota that talibés must meet or face beatings.(7, 22, 23) Some talibés who fail to meet quotas are forced to spend the night on the street.(23) There are tens of thousands of talibés, mostly under age 12, estimated to be in situations of forced begging. These boys often live in overcrowded, unsanitary conditions; receive inadequate food and medical care; and are vulnerable to sexual exploitation.(23) According to various stakeholders, including the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the problem of forced begging appears to be increasing in Senegal.(5, 25)

Although evidence is limited, there is reason to believe some talibés are used to harvest cashews, mangoes, and oranges.(7) These children typically work long hours. In the Casamance Region, talibés working in the fields are exposed to land mines left from a 29-year conflict in the region.(7, 26) Limited evidence also suggests that talibés in Thies collect garbage from homes, sometimes carrying very heavy loads.(27) There are also reports of other children working on the streets, but information as to specific activities and hazards is unknown.(4, 6, 7, 20, 29)

Talibés typically come from rural areas within Senegal and from neighboring countries, sometimes as a result of trafficking.(3, 17, 23, 28) Senegalese children are also trafficked to Gambia and to Mauritania, where religious teachers force them to beg.(29)

Limited evidence suggests that children in Senegal may work in dangerous conditions in gold mines. Although the extent of the problem is unknown, children also work in salt mines and rock quarries.(3, 7, 16, 17, 30, 31) These children are exposed to unsafe and unhealthy working conditions such as carrying heavy loads, sifting through dirt, using mercury to attract precious metals, and working without protective gear.(7, 11, 31) Children also perform dangerous work in construction.(32)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code sets the minimum age for employment, including apprenticeships, at 15.(33) However, section L.145 of the Labor Code grants the Minister of Labor authority to waive the minimum age based on local needs.(34) Arrêtés ministériels n° 3750 and 3751 prohibit children from working in hazardous conditions and identify circumstances in which children under age 18 cannot work or can only work under certain conditions.(35, 36) An exception within these laws allows boys under age 16 to work in underground mines and quarries if they are doing “light work,” such as sorting and loading ore, handling and hauling trucks within specified weight limits, or if they are handling ventilation equipment.(3, 24, 34, 36, 37) However, limiting children of any age to “light work” in underground mines and quarries is inconsistent with the international standards set forth by ILO Convention 138.(38) Arrêté ministériel n° 3749 prohibits some of the activities considered to be worst forms of child labor, including forced labor, slavery, prostitution, begging for a third party, drug trafficking, scavenging garbage, slaughtering animals, work with dangerous products, and work that imperils the health, safety, or morality of children.(39)

The Constitution bans forced labor.(3) Senegalese law also defines slavery as a crime against humanity.(4) The minimum age for compulsory military recruitment is 20. The minimum age for voluntary recruitment is 18.(3, 40)

The Penal Code prohibits the procuring a person for prostitution and acting as an intermediary for prostitution. If the crime involves a minor younger than age 13, sentences are more severe.(41) The Penal Code also prohibits using, procuring, or offering a child for pornography.(37) Law n° 2005-06 prohibits all forms of trafficking and prescribes stringent penalties.(42) Law n° 2005-02 proscribes begging and establishes penalties for those who enable, coerce, or force others to beg for their profit.(4) Research did not find laws that fully protect children from involvement in illicit activities.

The Constitution mandates state provision of free education.(43, 44) Law n° 2004-2037 establishes compulsory education until the age of 17.(3)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Government of Senegal has established several bodies tasked with coordinating efforts to combat worst forms of child labor. The Interagency Committee Against Child Labor, chaired by the Ministry of Labor (MOL), is responsible for coordinating initiatives to address child labor.(3, 5, 6) The committee comprises employers’ organizations, 20 ministries, religious leaders, international agencies, and governors from various regions.(45) The Committee receives limited technical support from the ILO and no program funding from the Government.(6)

Senegal

The Ministry of Family (MOF) coordinates another national committee against child labor.(3) The Government also has a third body with child labor in its purview, the National Task Force Against the Mistreatment of Persons, in Particular Women and Children (NTAMP). The Task Force is charged with reporting on human trafficking in Senegal and coordinating efforts to combat the problem.(46) During the reporting period, NTAMP received only a minimal budget of $20,000.(5, 46) Redundancy between these three bodies creates confusion and hinders effective collaboration and implementation of efforts.(4, 23)

MOL is responsible for enforcing child labor laws through the Labor Inspections Office and the use of social security inspectors.(3, 27). Labor inspectors are responsible for enforcement in the formal sector, which covers state-owned corporations, private enterprises, and cooperatives.(27, 29) If an incident of child labor is found during an inspection, the inspector informs the business owner that the child should be removed from work. If the child is not removed within the specified timeframe, the case is turned over to a local tribunal for adjudication.(27) As this process does not penalize violators on their first offense, it may not deter employers from exploiting children in the workplace.

Based on the most recent data available, approximately 147 MOL employees are charged with carrying out labor inspections.(6, 27) MOL's Child Labor Unit is responsible for maintaining a database of child labor violations and for monitoring and evaluating child labor activities. However, the Unit has no full-time staff. MOL staff whose primary responsibilities are to other units work part-time for the Child Labor Unit(45, 47) No child labor violations were reported as a result of inspections during the reporting period.(3)

The Ministry of Justice and the Senegalese police are responsible for enforcing laws on child trafficking, begging, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children for illicit activities. However, these laws are rarely enforced in practice, especially those against forced begging.(3, 6, 29) With few exceptions, Koranic schools (daaras) are not subject to government regulation or inspection.(23) The Ministry of Education (MOE) has a daara inspection unit, which was intended to increase monitoring of daaras, and integrate religious schools, including daaras, into the national education system. However, the unit only inspects "modern" daaras that meet MOE's definition.(48, 49)

The Children's Unit of the Senegalese police force specializes in child protection. However, the Unit's territorial jurisdiction is limited to Dakar, and the office employs only two agents.(3, 4)

Although other police stations in Senegal are expected to report cases involving children to the Unit, research found no evidence that this occurs regularly.(4) There is also a police vice squad responsible for combating sex tourism, including sex tourism related to children. The vice squad patrols tourist areas, including beaches, hotels, bars, nightclubs, and massage parlors.(4) Local police and gendarmes (military force charged with police duties among civilian populations) are responsible for intervening in cases where children face physical abuse in forced labor situations.(3)

There were no investigations, prosecutions, or convictions involving child labor during the reporting period.(6)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In November 2012, the Government approved a National Strategy for 2012 to 2016 under the Interagency Committee Against Child Labor and allocated 8 billion FCFA of its budget to the Strategy.(6, 49) UNICEF began printing the final document in May 2013 and the President requested that the Ministry of Women, Children, and Entrepreneurship distribute the document as soon as possible in order to include discussion of the Strategy on the agenda of the next meeting of the Interministerial Council for Policy Validation.(49)

The draft National Strategy for the Protection of Children, released in 2011 by the Ministry of Women, Children, and Entrepreneurship's Office of the Rights and Protection of Children, is still awaiting approval. This policy would create a national body to coordinate social policy on child protection efforts.(5, 6, 49) Research did not identify any information about how the November 2012 Strategy will complement the National Strategy for the Protection of Children.

The Government of Senegal has a National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings. The Plan's goals include enhancing the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, effectively implementing laws, providing effective protection and care for victims, and strengthening social and educational initiatives for vulnerable children.(4, 20)

The Government has also integrated child labor issues into other relevant development policies. The Ten-Year Education and Training Program (2000-2015) aims to provide quality, universal primary education to all children by 2015. The National Social Protection Strategy (2005-2015) classifies children as a specific vulnerable group and includes provisions for their protection against harmful practices, exploitation, and violence.(3, 50-52)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Ministry of Women, Children, and Entrepreneurship continues to run the Project to Fight Against Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor. This Project is led by the MOF's Office of Protection of the Rights of Children.(5, 6) The Project aims to enhance government capacity to design and implement local initiatives to address child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor, particularly forced begging, forced labor of girls, and commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 4) At the local level, technical monitoring committees composed of public and private stakeholders oversee the implementation of the project. As a result of the program, some departmental governments have developed individual action plans to address child labor.(4)

The Government continues efforts to build and promote "modern daaras," where students receive Koranic instruction as well as courses in reading, writing, and mathematics.(5, 53) Approximately 60,000 students now attend these government-supported daaras.(16) The Government also participates in the USAID-funded Basic Education Program to improve the quality of and access to education. A key objective of the Program is to ensure talibés receive basic education.(54) However, given the rising number of talibés in forced begging, current government programs are not extensive enough to effectively combat the problem.(5, 23)

The Government of Senegal continued to participate in a 4-year, $5.2 million Spanish-funded regional project focusing on the development and implementation of national action plans to combat the worst forms of child labor. In addition, the project seeks to help government institutions, private sector actors, and civil society organizations maintain sustainable action.(55)

The Government continued to participate in two USDOL-funded regional projects. The first, a 3-year, $7.9 million project, is designed to strengthen ECOWAS's Child Policy and Strategic Plan of Action and to develop programs focusing on child trafficking as it pertains to the Strategic Plan.(56) The second, a 3-year, $5 million project, is meant to expand and extend the work of the initial project.(57)

The Ginddi Center is the only fully government-run shelter in Senegal that serves abused and vulnerable children, including runaway talibés, street children, and child trafficking victims.(7, 16, 53) The Center provides shelter, food, education, vocational training, family mediation, and medical and psychological care.(3, 4, 7, 23, 46) It also operates a toll-free child protection hotline through which the public can report violations of children's rights, including instances of child labor abuses.(4, 17) The Government of Senegal also oversees the country's NGO-run children shelters, contributing technical assistance and staff. However, these shelters are often filled to capacity and the total number of facilities is insufficient in relation to the number of children on the streets.(5, 23)

Despite the efforts discussed above, existing programs do not target commercial sexual exploitation, domestic service, or hazardous work in agriculture, mining.

Although education is free and the Senegal Basic Education Project (2009-2013) allocates grants to NGOs committed to reducing the dropout rate, some families are prevented from sending their children to school because they cannot afford to pay for books, uniforms, or other supplies.(58) In addition, some girls reportedly left school after being sexually harassed by school staff and as a result of early pregnancy.(7)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Senegal:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the Labor Code so that the only exceptions to the minimum age for employment are consistent with international standards, specifically those set out by ILO Convention 138.	2011, 2012
	Amend the law to prohibit all children under age 18 from engaging in any work in underground mines and quarries.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure laws fully protect children from all illicit activities.	2011, 2012

Senegal

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Ensure the effectiveness of coordinating mechanisms on child labor by <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Eliminating redundancy and defining distinct scopes of responsibility. Providing adequate funding and resources to relevant bodies. 	2010, 2011, 2012 2011, 2012
	Penalize labor law violators on their first offense to create a stronger disincentive to illegally employ children.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that all laws related to the worst forms of child labor are adequately and evenly enforced, including those against forced begging.	2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Act swiftly to adequately equip a daara inspection unit to increase monitoring and remediation of forced begging practices in Koranic schools in all daaras .	2010, 2011, 2012
	Expand the jurisdiction and capacity of the Children's Unit of the Senegalese police force or implement systems to connect local police forces and the unit to better track and combat child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Approve and implement the National Strategy for the Protection of Children.	2011, 2012
Social Programs	Develop new programs and expand existing programs to combat the worst forms of child labor, by <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Opening more shelters and service centers for abused and vulnerable children, including talibés, street children, and child trafficking victims. Establishing more extensive programming to address the most pressing worst forms of child labor, including forced begging, commercial sexual exploitation, domestic service, and hazardous work in agriculture, mining, and forestry. 	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assist families to ensure all children may attend school, including by expanding programs to address issues that serve as a barrier to girls' education, such as sexual harassment in schools and early pregnancy.	2011, 2012

Serbia

In 2012, Serbia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established a Parliamentary Committee on Children with the aim to review and monitor all legislation pertaining to children and their rights and align it with international standards. The Government also adopted amendments to the Law on Probate Proceedings that enabled 6,500 undocumented individuals to obtain personal documents, which are important for children to access social services. Despite these efforts, Serbia's laws fail to protect children fully from the worst forms of child labor. Serbia does not specifically prohibit the use, procurement or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Criminal Code provides insufficient minimum penalties for using children over 14 to make pornographic materials. Children in Serbia, particularly Roma children, continue to be found in the worst forms of child labor, including forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation.

Statistics on Working Children and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working	5-14 yrs.	6.0 (54,045)
Attending School	7-14 yrs.	92.5
Combining Work and School	7-14 yrs.	6.7
Primary Completion Rate		99.3

All other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS3 Survey, 2005.(2)

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Serbia are found in the worst forms of child labor as a result of being trafficked for organized begging and commercial sexual exploitation.(3-7) Victims of trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation, including children are mostly trafficked within the country. The majority of victims are Serbian nationals; most of the foreign victims of trafficking come from the region.(7)

The most vulnerable children to exploitation for labor and commercial sex include Roma children, children from impoverished rural communities, children in foster care, children from low income families, and children with special needs.(5, 6, 9, 10)

Children are engaged in farming to a lesser extent, although evidence for this is limited.(8) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(11, 12)

There are reports of children working on the streets but information as to specific activities and hazards is unknown.(8)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Constitution sets the minimum age for work at 15, and for hazardous work at 18.(13) Article 60 of the Constitution also includes a provision for special protections at work and special work conditions for young persons. The Constitution calls for the protection of a child from psychological, physical and economic harm, and from any other form of abuse or exploitation.(13) However, there are no legal provisions that outline a specific list of activities or occupations that are hazardous and prohibited to children.(10, 14)

Article 26 of the Constitution bans slavery or situations similar to slavery, including human trafficking and forced labor.(13) The Criminal Code of Serbia prohibits child prostitution, trafficking, and enslavement of children.(15) The Law on the Protection Program for Participants in Criminal Proceedings of 2006 regulates the protection of and assistance to victims of human trafficking, including children.(9)

The Criminal Code provides sentences of at least 5 years in prison for individuals found guilty of trafficking minors.(4, 16) The Law on Foreigners allows victims of human trafficking to obtain temporary visas.(17) The Government has also established the Law on Social Welfare that defines trafficking victims as a new category of beneficiaries.(16)

The Criminal Code prohibits using children to make pornography.(15) When this crime involves children under 14, the penalties are 1 to 8 years in prison; penalties for using children older than age 14 to make pornographic materials range from 6 months to 5 years.(14) This minimum penalty of 6 months for using older children to create pornography is insufficient for such a serious crime.

Article 247 of the Criminal Code prohibits giving drugs to minors for their own or another's use.(5) However, the Criminal Code does not specifically prohibit the use, procurement, or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs and other illicit activities.(5)

In 2011, the Government adopted a new Law on Temporary and Permanent Residence with the aim to provide more stable solutions for displaced persons and others who are especially vulnerable to trafficking.(7) During the reporting period, the Government adopted Amendments to the Law on Probate Proceedings that enabled 6,500 undocumented individuals, a majority of whom were Roma and displaced persons, to obtain personal documents and thereby more easily access social services.(7)

The Law on Military, Labor and Material Duty stipulates that individuals under age 18 will not be subject to compulsory military service.(18)

Article 71 of the Constitution specifies that primary education is free and compulsory. Compulsory education is mandated through age 15.(13, 19) However, economic hardship and ethnic discrimination often discourage minority groups, especially Romani children, to attend the school.(8)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Although the Government of Serbia has established the National Anti-Trafficking Office, research found no evidence of a coordinating mechanism to combat other worst forms of child labor.

The National Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons leads a team to address trafficking, which consists of representatives of multiple ministries, including the Council for Children's Rights, Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection, the Supreme Court, NGOs, and some international organizations.(16) Currently, there is no National Coordinator, as the National Coordinator position is not funded as a full-time position. However, the Office fulfills the functions of the Coordinator.(10)

A newly created Parliamentary Committee on Children has the responsibility to review all draft legislation in terms of children's rights to ensure that such legislation is aligned with international norms and standards and internal Serbian laws. In addition, the Office monitors the implementation of the child-related provisions of all laws pertaining to children.(6, 10)

In 2012, the Serbian Labor Inspectorate employed 259 labor inspectors. These inspectors lacked necessary equipment, such as computers and vehicles, to facilitate proper coverage of rural areas.(10) In the first 10 months of the reporting period, the labor inspectors completed 13,722 inspections relating to safety and health. There were no cases of child labor found in the formal sector.(6)

Serbia

The Ministry of Interior and the State Prosecutor's Office enforce laws against commercial sexual exploitation.(20) Every police directorate continues to have anti-trafficking units and some have cross-sectional teams of police, prosecutors, social workers and health workers.(7) Additionally, the Service for Fighting Organized Crime has an anti-trafficking department and works with regional police administrations to share information regarding instances of child trafficking.(9) The Government along with NGOs and international organizations continued to provide training to a variety of government officials on how to recognize, investigate and prosecute trafficking, as well as how to provide proper assistance to victims.(7)

The Ministries of Labor and Social Issues, Internal Affairs, Justice and Education, including the Office of the National Coordinator to Combat Trafficking are responsible for different aspects of combating trafficking in persons, including children.(21) The Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection (Center) that has been based in the Ministry for Labor and Social Policy acted as an independent agency in 2012, as mandated in the social welfare law that was passed in March 2011.(6, 16) During the reporting period, the Agency identified and rescued 33 child victims and potential victims of trafficking. More than half of the children were trafficked for either sexual exploitation or forced begging, while the remainder of the children were trafficked for labor, criminal acts, or forced marriages.(10) The National Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons reported that 68 criminal charges were filed for these activities.(7) However, this statistic includes trafficking crimes involving adults as well as children.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government continued to implement policies that focus on social protection for Roma children, including the 2005-2015 Decade of Roma Inclusion.(6) The aim of this initiative is to improve Roma status in the areas of housing, education, employment and health as well as to include representatives of Roma communities in the process of policy implementation.(22) In contrast, however, government authorities continued to forcibly evict Roma families from their homes or settlements for redevelopment projects without providing alternative housing, leaving some Roma families homeless.(23-26) This situation increases the vulnerability of children in such families to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

In 2010, the Ministry of Internal Affairs helped launch a program for Serbia through the United Nations Global Initiative to Fight Human Trafficking. Within this program, the Government drafted a new National Action Plan covering the period 2013-2018.(6) In 2012, the Ministry of Justice adopted the "Special Protocol on the Treatment of Trafficking Victims by Judicial Authorities," with the aim of providing judicial officials clear guidance to facilitate adequate treatment of trafficking victims.(3)

In 2012, there were no reports of victims detained, jailed and prosecuted for acts committed as a direct result of their being trafficked.(7)

A strategic document entitled "General Protocol on Child Protection from Abuse and Neglect" that was adopted under the National Plan of Action for Children of 2005 defines the general policy for children for the period until 2015.(14) Two additional protocols are also in place that focus on child protection against commercial sexual exploitation; the Special Protocol on Behavior of Law Enforcement Officers in Protecting Juvenile Persons from Abuse and Neglect, and the Special Protocol on Protection of Children Accommodated in Social Care Institutions.(14)

The impact of these policies on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the Office for Human and Minorities Rights announced a public call for project proposals with the aim to improve the position of Roma in Serbia, including the improvement of the Decade of Roma Inclusion.(6) However, proposed programs are not required to directly address the social inclusion of Roma children and address the problem of forced begging.(7) In addition, undocumented families, particularly Roma families, continue to be deprived of social benefits that are only granted to citizens.(27)

The Government continued implementing the Child Allowance Program, which provides cash benefits to poor families conditional on school enrollment for children age 7 or older.(6, 28) However, the amount of overall social spending on poor families appears to be low, with spending representing approximately 0.3 percent of GDP.(28, 29) A Ministry of Education project, Assistance to Roma Children in Education, seeks to encourage regular attendance of Roma children in school and provide training to help them learn the Serbian language to better integrate into the school environment.(9) Research found no information assessing the impact these education programs have had on the worst forms of child labor.

The National Coordinator's Office continued to maintain an anti-trafficking Website and, together with the Ministry of Interior, it publicizes Serbia's anti- trafficking hotline.(6, 16)

The Government committed to anti-trafficking efforts, especially to victim protection, by increasing the regular state budget for trafficking in persons and also included funding for the Center in its 2013 budget.(7) In addition, the Government provides free access to social and medical care for foreign and domestic trafficking victims, and provides them with witness and victim protection services.(7, 16, 30)

In 2012 under the Law on Social Welfare, the Ministry of Labor, Employment and Social Policy continued to provide a range of social services, including assistance to trafficking victims.(7) Domestic and foreign victims of trafficking receive psychological, medical, legal and other services. Although there are currently no specialized shelters devoted to trafficked children, children who are victims of trafficking are accommodated in Government-run centers for children without parental care or an NGO-managed shelter for women until foster care or other services can be arranged.(7)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Serbia:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Enact a list of hazardous activities and occupations prohibited for children.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Enact a law that prohibits the use, procuring, or offering of a minor under age 18 for the production and trafficking of drugs and other illicit activities.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the Criminal Code to stipulate a minimum punishment for the use of children over age 14 in the production of pornographic materials of no less than one year.	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Provide inspectors with the necessary tools and equipment to conduct thorough investigations on child labor related laws, especially in rural areas.	2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Implement commitments of the Decade of Roma Inclusion by providing for basic needs, such as adequate housing for Roma families that face evictions.	2011, 2012
	Conduct research on whether children are engaged in dangerous work on the street in order to inform policy and program design	2012
Social Programs	Engage Roma in the implementation process of the Decade of Roma Inclusion and address the problem of children in forced begging and working on the street.	2012
	Improve the methods of educating and guiding eligible families in need about the requirements for proper registration and documentation in order to receive social assistance.	2011, 2012
	Conduct research on the impact existing education programs may have on addressing the worst forms of child labor, especially for Roma children.	2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Seychelles made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified the CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution, and Child Pornography. Seychelles also engaged in awareness-raising programs focused on risky behaviors that can lead to the commercial sexual exploitation of children; increased spending on social security benefits for vulnerable children; and began implementing the National Social Renaissance Plan of Action, which prioritizes children's rights and protects child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. However, the Government has not established a minimum age for all hazardous work or developed a comprehensive list of hazardous work activities prohibited for children. During the reporting period, the Government did not provide services and shelter to children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation. In one case, the Government prosecuted several children rather than identifying them as victims. Although evidence on the worst forms of child labor is limited, research suggests that children in Seychelles continue to be found in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Although evidence on the worst forms of child labor is limited, research suggests that children in Seychelles are found in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.(3-9) There are reports of children, predominantly girls, being driven into commercial sexual exploitation by peers, family members, and pimps.(4, 5) Foreign tourists are believed to contribute to the demand for commercial sex in Seychelles.(4) Seychellois children engaged in commercial sex work are exploited in nightclubs, bars, guest houses, hotels, brothels, and in the street.(4) According to NGOs, drug addicts under age 18 are among those at risk for commercial sexual exploitation.(3-5)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Constitution of the Republic of Seychelles sets the minimum age for work at 15. It also stipulates that the minimum age for dangerous, harmful, and unhealthy work should be higher, though it does not specify an age.(10) The Conditions of Employment Regulations, 1991, prohibit children under age 18 from night employment and from work in the restaurant, tourism, or entertainment industries, at any time. However, children ages 15 to 17 may work in these industries and at night with the written approval of a "competent officer," although a definition for "competent officer" is not provided in the legislation.(11) Children ages 12 to 14 may engage in occasional, non-recurrent light work, provided it occurs outside of school hours.(11) The law does not specifically prohibit hazardous work for all children under 18 and the Government has not developed a comprehensive list of hazardous work activities prohibited to children.(7, 12-14)

The Constitution provides for freedom from slavery, servitude, and forced or obligatory labor.(10) The Penal Code Act of 1955 also proscribes forced labor, trafficking in slaves, or kidnapping for the purposes of involuntary confinement, slavery, or removal from Seychelles.(15) The Penal Code Act of 2005 criminalizes the prostitution and sexual exploitation of children.(15) The Act's specific provisions prohibit, domestically and internationally, the procurement, recruitment, or exploitation of girls under age 21 for the purposes of prostitution.(7, 15) The Act also criminalizes the procurement or detainment of any girl against her will with the intent to engage in sexual conduct or any woman under age 21 for the purposes of prostitution or pornography. Because these specific provisions protect girls, it is unclear whether boys are protected from being used, procured, or offered for prostitution under the law.(7, 15) The Penal Code Act also prohibits involving any child under age 18 in the production, possession, or exhibition of indecent material.(7, 15) In October 2012, the Act was amended to create steeper mandatory sentences for individuals who engage in sexual acts with children under 15.(16) In December 2012, Seychelles ratified the CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution, and Child Pornography.(17)

In Seychelles, there is no conscription into military services. Children under 18 may be voluntarily recruited with parental consent, but no minimum age appears to be specified in the law.(18)

Research did not uncover whether Seychelles has established law to protect children from involvement in illicit activities, including drug trafficking.

Education is free and compulsory through grade 10 or approximately age 16.(5, 10, 14, 19) The Government also made secondary education free until age 18.(14)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Government has a National Anti-trafficking Committee, which is composed of representatives from the police force, Attorney General's Office, and the Ministries of Social Development, Foreign Affairs, and Home Affairs.(4) However, research found no evidence that the Government of Seychelles has established a coordinating mechanism to combat other worst forms of child labor.

The Department of Social Development (DSD), under the Ministry of Social Development and Culture, leads the Government's policies against child prostitution.(4, 5) The DSD has established 25 district task forces that address social problems at the local level, including child prostitution. These task forces comprise social workers, police, community nurses, youth workers, school counselors, NGOs, and other civil society groups.(4)

The Ministry of Education, Employment, and Human Resources is responsible for enforcing child labor laws.(14, 20) The Ministry employs four labor inspectors.(21) In 2012, 1,136 labor inspections were conducted. These inspection did not uncover any cases of child labor in any sector.(14, 16) The Ministry conducted regular checks to monitor school attendance and to manage truancy.(14)

According to reports, the Government did not take legal action against those who exploited children for commercial sex during the reporting period.(4, 14). In one case, the Government prosecuted and convicted children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation in a brothel rather than identifying them as victims.(4)

Research did not find evidence that the Government collects or makes publicly available data regarding commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking of children.(5, 20)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the Government began implementing the National Social Renaissance Plan of Action (2012-16). The plan establishes a 5-year roadmap in the areas of education, health, employment, human resource development, social affairs, community development, and security.(8) It includes provisions to decrease violations of children's rights, bolster child protection, and enhance services to victims of commercial sexual exploitation, including child victims.(8) Several government agencies are engaged in the implementation and monitoring of the plan, including the Ministries of Home Affairs; Health; Community Development; and Education, Employment and Human Resources.(5)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the Government continued an awareness-raising program aimed at youth that focused on the dangers of engaging in risky behaviors that could lead to the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(4) However, according to reports, the Government did not provide protective services or shelter to child victims of commercial sexual exploitation identified during the reporting period.(4)

The National Council for Children, a partially government-funded organization, advocates for children's interests and rights through awareness-raising activities, training, and counseling. The Council's training programs are targeted at both children and adults and include a module developed to explain the provisions of the CRC.(3, 22, 23) The Council may also provide care to victims of sexual or labor exploitation.(3)

The Government engages in a number of initiatives aimed at improving children's welfare. In an effort to better support vulnerable groups, the Government's 2012 and 2013 budgets increased social security benefits, including benefits offered to orphans and other at-risk children and youth.(5, 20) The Government supports the Children's Homes Foundation, which provides housing to orphans and children whose families face financial difficulties.(24) It also continues funding a program that subsidizes bus fares for some students in need.(25)

The Government continues to administer the National Early Childhood Care and Education Trust Fund, which is intended to promote the healthy development of children.(5) Through the fund, the Government supported several projects during the reporting period. It funded the purchase of educational materials and playground equipment, as well as the training of early child care providers.(5) However, the question of whether these social and educational programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Seychelles:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Eliminate legal provisions that potentially allow for children to engage in hazardous work, including at night, if given the approval of a "competent officer."	2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the law to specifically prohibit hazardous work for all children under age 18.	2011, 2012
	Develop a comprehensive list of hazardous employment activities prohibited for all children under age 18.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Clarify the Penal Code Act to explicitly protect boys from being used, procured, or offered for prostitution	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Clarify whether Seychelles has established laws to protect children from involvement in illicit activities, including drug trafficking.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat all worst forms of child labor.	2011, 2012
	Identify and enforce laws against child commercial sexual exploitation, by <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Identifying and prosecuting those who engage children in commercial sexual exploitation. Ensuring child victims are not prosecuted as criminals. 	2011, 2012
	Collect and make data on cases of commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking of children publicly available.	2011, 2012
Social Programs	Assess the impact that social and educational programs may have on the worst forms of child labor.	2011, 2012
	Ensure children who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation are provided appropriate services and shelter.	2011, 2012

In 2012, Sierra Leone made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Special Court for Sierra Leone found former Liberian President Charles Taylor guilty of planning, aiding, and abetting crimes committed by rebel forces in Sierra Leone, including procuring and using child soldiers. The Government passed the Sexual Offenses Act, which includes penalties for child prostitution, pornography, and sex tourism. The Government also collected data on the number of street children in the country, provided temporary shelter and support to street children and victims of trafficking, and implemented a number of initiatives to improve school attendance. Despite these efforts, limited funding has been provided for enforcement and long-term support for victims of trafficking was unavailable. Children in Sierra Leone continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous work in agriculture and in mining.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Sierra Leone are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly dangerous activities in the agriculture and in the mining sectors.(3) Reports indicate that child labor in agriculture is pervasive in rural areas, including the production of coffee, cocoa and palm oil, with children as young as age 5 working in the fields.(4-9) Children in Sierra Leone are engaged in dangerous activities in agriculture. Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(10)

Thousands of children in Sierra Leone, primarily boys ages 10 and 17, work in alluvial diamond mines.(11) Alluvial diamond mining relies on labor-intensive methods to locate diamonds, such as digging and sifting through mud and sand.(12) The mining is usually performed by informal and small-scale mining operations that operate outside the regulatory framework.(13)

Children engaged in alluvial diamond mining undertake hazardous activities, such as repeatedly shoveling and transporting gravel, and are exposed to infectious and mosquito-borne diseases that thrive in alluvial mining areas.(13) The children suffer back and chest pain and fatigue as a result of the activities they perform. Children also risk injury and death from mine pits collapsing.(11) One study found that nearly half of all child miners in the Kono District, the hub of Sierra Leonean diamond mining, work 8 to 10 hours per day, while more than half work at least 6 days each week.(11) Although mine owners and operators typically do not employ girls or children under age 10 in direct mining activities, the mining sector utilizes these two groups in support roles. Young boys in this group generally provide food and water and take responsibility for less strenuous mining activities, while girls in support roles often work as vendors, hawking items such as drinks and cigarettes.(11, 13)

Children in Sierra Leone are also engaged in stone crushing in granite quarries in unsafe and unhealthy labor conditions, including carrying heavy loads and working long hours.(14) Children break granite rocks into gravel and sell it for use in cement.(15) Children sustain injuries including broken bones from falls, leg and toe injuries from using mallets and hammers, and cuts and eye injuries from gravel shards.(15)

In large dumpsites in Freetown, children as young as age 10 are engaged in digging and gathering metal scraps and recyclable material, among other items.(3, 16-18) Reports indicate that children frequent dumpsites, in which they are exposed to unhealthy and dangerous labor conditions, including chemicals, and risk injury.(17)

Although the significance is unknown, children are also engaged in the fishing industry.(3, 14) Limited evidence suggests that the worst forms of child labor are used in the production of particular types of fish, including snapper, mackerel, and herring.(19) Reports note that in addition to performing tasks, such as mending nets, children engaged in the fishing industry also work on boats to fish in the open sea for several days in a row.(19-22) Fishing exposes children to risks, including the risk of drowning and working in cramped and unsanitary shipping vessels.(23)

Some reports indicate that children are engaged in domestic labor that commonly involves exposure to physical and sexual exploitation by their employers.(3)

Sierra Leone is a source, transit, and destination country for children trafficked for the purpose of forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(27) The majority of children are trafficked from rural provinces or refugee communities to urban and mining areas.(16, 28) Reports suggest that children from Nigeria, The Gambia, Côte d'Ivoire, and Guinea may be trafficked to Sierra Leone for forced begging, forced labor, and commercial sexual exploitation.(42)

Sierra Leone has a large number of street children as a result of the 11-year civil war that ended in 2002.(24, 25) There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(16, 26) Some may be exploited into commercial sex work.(18)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Child Rights Act, enacted in 2007, sets the minimum age for employment at 15. The Act also states that children must either be age 15 or have completed basic education (whichever is later) before entering into an apprenticeship in either the formal or informal sector.(29) Children are also prohibited from performing night work between the hours of 8 p.m. and 6 a.m.(29)

The law allows children ages 13 and older to engage in light work and prohibits children under age 18 from being employed in hazardous work, defined as work that is dangerous to a child's health, safety, or morals. The law identifies the following activities as hazardous: seafaring; mining and quarrying; carrying heavy loads; and working in bars, in places in which machines are used, and in environments in which chemicals are produced or used.(29) The penalty for employing children in hazardous work or violating the age restrictions under the Child Rights Act is a fine or a prison sentence of up to 2 years.(18, 29) The Child Rights Act stipulates that the Government will intervene to protect children who are forced to beg or are exposed to moral or physical danger.(29)

The Constitution of Sierra Leone prohibits forced and compulsory labor.(30) The Anti-Human Trafficking Act criminalizes all forms of human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including profiting from child pornography and prostitution.(31) Information was not available on whether there are laws specifically regulating the use of children in illicit activities such as drug trafficking.

In August 2012, the Government of Sierra Leone enacted the Sexual Offenses Act.(18) The Act criminalizes and assigns penalties for sexual acts involving children.(18) According to the Act, child prostitution, child pornography, and sexual tourism violations result in penalties of 10-15 years imprisonment. The Act also identifies a sexual offense against a child as an aggravating factor punishable by a maximum sentence.(18) The Government began carrying out prosecutions under the Act in January 2013.(32)

The age for voluntary recruitment into the armed forces is 18.(29, 33)

Labor laws including the Employers and Employed Act (1960) and Regulation of Wages and Industrial Relations Act of 1971 in Sierra Leone are outdated.(34-36) Fines prescribed in the laws do not reflect the present value of Sierra Leone's currency.(34-36) Therefore, their prescribed penalties may not be commensurate with the severity of the crimes.

The Constitution establishes free and compulsory primary and secondary education, or until the age of 15.(30, 37) Though education is free, in some cases fees are charged for schools to pay the salaries of unregistered teachers.(38) In rural areas, some schools are too far away for children to attend.(37) Additionally, reports indicate that families may have difficulty losing the benefit of work the child may have provided during school hours.(37)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Child Protection Unit of the Ministry of Social Welfare, Gender and Children's Affairs (MSWGCA) has the primary responsibility for protecting children. Though the Ministry submitted plans and a budget to establish the inter-agency National Commission for Children to coordinate and exchange information, as mandated by the Child Rights Act, the Commission has yet to be established or funded.(18, 29) Research has not identified evidence that a mechanism to coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor is currently in place.(39)

The Ministry of Labor and Employment's Child Labor Unit (CLU) is responsible for enforcing child labor law and monitoring compliance with child labor regulations. The unit is staffed by a focal person, a factory inspector, and a labor inspector. These staff members, however, are not solely dedicated to working on child labor issues. They staff the CLU on a part-time basis. According to the Government, the CLU lacks resources to establish branch offices to monitor child labor in remote areas of the country.(34) No information was available on the CLU's 2012 budget.(18) The Ministry of Labor and Employment employs 20 full time labor inspectors and 15 factory inspectors to conduct all labor inspections, including those on child labor.(3, 16, 18) Because of funding limitations, the inspectors lack adequate equipment and transportation.(3, 16, 18) Until inspectors are provided with sufficient resources, it is unclear whether the number of inspectors is adequate. After gathering evidence in child labor investigations, inspectors refer cases to other agencies or the police for possible action.(3) Inspections for the worst forms of child labor are usually complaint driven and are referred to the Family Support Unit (FSU) of the Sierra Leone Police.(18) There were no inspections involving child labor in 2012.(18) Though inspectors are positioned to refer cases to other agencies for action, it remains unclear whether such action was taken during the reporting period. Information on whether citations or penalties were issued is unavailable.

At the district level, the Government employs labor officers that are responsible for all labor issues in the district.(29) In addition to inspections conducted by labor inspectors, district labor officers are responsible for initial investigations and enforcement of child labor provisions in the Child Rights Act, and district councils are responsible for enforcement in the informal sector.(29) Following an investigation, labor officers and district councils refer cases to the police for possible prosecution.(29) By the end of the reporting period, hundreds of village child welfare committees had been established to monitor children.(18) Chiefdom child welfare committees support these committees, and a ward committee system is being established to link villages together to reduce the current number of committees.(18) Information on the level of coordination between these committees was not available.

The Ministry of Mineral Resources, charged with enforcing regulations against the use of child labor in mining activities, has a few hundred monitors in the field who sometimes intervene if child labor is found.(40) Many local community leaders and chiefs have enacted mechanisms to punish and deter violations in the mining sector—with varying levels of success, including enacting by-laws to prohibit children from dangerous activities such as carrying heavy loads.(36, 40) Although they have the authority to do so, the Ministry of Mineral Resources has not suspended the licenses of mining operators who engage in child labor.(11, 40, 41)

The National Trafficking in Persons Task Force, co-chaired by the Ministry of Justice and the MSWGCA, meets regularly and addresses the issue of child labor.(4, 18) It includes the Ministries of Labor, Education, Internal Affairs, Information, Health, Foreign Affairs, Local Government, Youth, and Tourism.(4, 34) The task force coordinates the needs and requirements of agencies involved in providing shelter and services for victims and gathers some data on reported trafficking cases. Currently, long-term shelters and other services are unavailable.(42) The Task Force drafted guidelines for identifying trafficking in persons victims and a 3-year anti-trafficking action plan.(16) Information was not available on whether these guidelines have been issued.

The FSU of the Sierra Leone Police is tasked with investigating and prosecuting various crimes, including child trafficking. The unit also investigates and prosecutes child labor cases identified by government monitors.(4, 16, 18) During the reporting period, seven alleged human trafficking offenders faced prosecution. All seven defendants remained on trial in February 2013; however, information on whether these cases include the trafficking of children is not available.(18)

In 2004, the Government of Sierra Leone established the Human Rights Commission, which aims to coordinate efforts to protect and promote human rights through awareness raising; monitor and investigate complaints regarding human rights violations; and produce and publish annual reports.(16, 43) Research has not identified the effectiveness of the Commission on child labor issues or any related activities undertaken during the reporting period.

The Government of Sierra Leone continued to support the Special Court for Sierra Leone, which in 2012 found former Liberian President Charles Taylor, guilty of numerous charges of planning, aiding, and abetting crimes committed by rebel forces in Sierra Leone, including the procurement and use of child soldiers.(44-47)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no policy or plan specifically addressing the worst forms of child labor.(18) However, the Government's 2008-2012 Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper II (PRSP II), An Agenda for Change, includes policies to fight child labor by achieving universal primary education. The latest report on the progress of the PRSP II noted that child labor continues to be a serious challenge for the Government due to lack of resources.

The MSWGCA completed a survey of Sierra Leone's street children, in partnership with Street Child of Sierra Leone and Help a Needy Child International.(3, 41) The report found a total 49,698 children living and working in the streets of Sierra Leone.(48)

During the reporting period, the Government's statistics office, Statistics Sierra Leone, collaborated with the ILO on finalizing the National Child Labor Survey.(3) Data and a final report from this survey have not been released.

In addition, the Government of Sierra Leone has an Education Sector Plan (2007-2015) and the Primary Education Policy of 2001 implements education law.(3, 37, 49) There have been no assessments on the impact of these policies on the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Sierra Leone has a number of programs to address child labor. The Government, with support from UNICEF and USAID, has prioritized programs to improve the retention rate of girls in secondary school. The gender enrollment gap at the primary school level has narrowed as a result of these programs.(50) To improve access to education, the Government of Sierra Leone increased the number of teachers and awarded grants to girls and the disabled attending secondary school and university; it also investigated and prosecuted Ministry of Education personnel engaged in corrupt practices.(51) The Government trained primary school teachers and developed a code of conduct to improve ethical standards in schools. Teachers in all districts of the country are now familiar with the code.(52) A task force was established to oversee the effective delivery of school materials, including textbooks.(52) The Government, with WFP, implements a school feeding program that targets 300,000 children.(52) Research on the direct impact of these programs on child labor was not identified.

The MSWGCA partners with World Hope International on a program to combat child trafficking and forced child labor in Sierra Leone.(32) The Government is also raising public awareness on child trafficking. The Government supports shelters that house child victims of forced labor and trafficking.(16, 53) However, these shelters do not provide victims with long-term support, and child victims may live with social workers.(53)

The Government supports centers for street children to receive psychological support, medical care, vocational training, and help in locating their families.(53)

The Government of Sierra Leone continues to participate in the 4-year, $21.1 million, EU-funded TACKLE Project.(3, 18, 54, 55) The project aims to combat child labor through education in Sierra Leone, along with 10 other countries. The TACKLE Project also has the objective of strengthening the Government's capacity to implement and enforce policies to prevent child labor.(54, 55)

The Government supports the UNDP-funded Youth Employment and Empowerment Program that seeks to strengthen national policy, strategy, and coordination for youth employment. The Youth Employment Network, which includes a partnership between the UN, ILO and the World Bank, manages the Youth to Youth Fund for youth-led organizations to pilot innovative, small-scale youth entrepreneurship projects.(56)

The youth employment, education, and agriculture programs may reduce the prevalence of child labor; however, no assessments of the impact of these programs on child labor have been identified.(3)

Despite these programs, the Government's investment in social programs continues to be insufficient to address the scope of child labor in Sierra Leone, particularly among children working in dangerous activities in agriculture, mining, fishing and domestic labor.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Sierra Leone:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Update labor laws to ensure that penalties are commensurate with the severity of violations.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Clarify laws to prevent the use of children in illicit activities such as drug trafficking.	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Fully establish the National Commission for Children.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Issue anti-trafficking guidelines.	2012
	Fully fund and staff the Child Labor Unit of the Ministry of Labor and increase efforts to enforce worst forms of child labor laws.	2011, 2012
	Establish branch offices to monitor child labor in remote areas of the country.	2012
	Provide information on the budget of the Child Labor Unit.	2012
	Provide inspectors adequate equipment and transportation.	2012
	Ensure the Ministry of Mineral Resources revokes the licenses of operators who employ child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Publish data on worst forms of child labor inspections and prosecutions.	2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Assess the impact of Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper II and the education plan on child labor.	2011, 2012
	Make child labor data available, including the data from the National Child Labor Survey.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Develop and provide funding for social programs to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, mining, fishing, and domestic labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact of the youth employment, education, and agriculture programs on reducing the worst forms of child labor.	2011, 2012

Solomon Islands

In 2012, the Solomon Islands made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified ILO C. 182. However, education is not compulsory, and laws do not adequately protect all children from hazardous work and commercial sexual exploitation. Also, the Government has not established a body to coordinate efforts to combat child labor, and resources for enforcement are lacking. Children in the Solomon Islands continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in association with the fishing and logging industries.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Some children in the Solomon Islands are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, primarily commercial sexual exploitation.(3-6) Both boys and girls are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation associated with the logging, tourism, and fishing industries in areas near logging camps, on fishing boats, and in the capital city of Honiara.(4, 6-10) In particular, girls are trafficked within the Solomon Islands to logging camps for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation.(4) There are reports that some children are brought by their parents to foreign and local fishing ships for commercial sexual exploitation with fishermen.(4, 7) Although evidence is limited, there is some information of forced child labor on plantations.(11)

Although information is limited, there are reports that children are used in pornography.(5) Additionally, some evidence suggests that children are forced to work as domestic servants and on plantations.(4) They may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(12, 13)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In April 2012, the Government ratified ILO Convention 182.(14, 15) The Labor Act permits children as young as age 12 to work.(16) This is not consistent with international standards, which require a minimum age no lower than 14 for admission to employment. Children under age 15 are prohibited from working in the industrial sector or on ships, and children under age 16 are prohibited from working in underground mines.(16) Further, children between ages 16 and 18 are prohibited from working in mines or on ships without a medical certificate, and are prohibited from working at night without specific written permission from the Commissioner of Labor.(16) Despite these provisions, the Solomon Islands does not have a comprehensive law protecting children under age 18 from hazardous work, or a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations and activities from which children are prohibited.(6, 13) In addition, according to the Commissioner of Labor, the existing penalties and fines for employing children in hazardous conditions are too insignificant to serve as deterrents.(6)

The Constitution prohibits slavery and forced labor.(17) The Penal Code criminalizes the production and possession of obscene material if the purpose is to distribute or publicly exhibit the material.(18) It does not, however, specifically prohibit the use, procurement, or offering of a child for the production of pornography. Selling or hiring minors under age 15 and girls under age 18 for prostitution is punishable as a criminal offense.(18) However, these prostitution laws do not cover boys between the ages of 15 and 18 and therefore leave them without legal protection.(18) Laws do not specifically prohibit the use of children in illicit activities such as drug trafficking.(6, 18)

In March 2012, the Government enacted the Immigration Act of 2012. The Act prohibits and punishes all forms of trafficking in persons and provides specific legal protections against the trafficking of children. However, the Act has not been implemented, and no implementing regulations accompany the legislation.(6, 19, 20)

There are no government armed forces in the Solomon Islands. (6, 21) The law allows for forces to be drawn from the Royal Solomon Islands Police Force, if necessary. The police force has a minimum recruitment age of 18. (22)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Advisory Committee on Children advises the Cabinet on issues affecting children, coordinates the implementation of the CRC, and develops advocacy materials to promote the rights of children. (23) However, research found no evidence that the Government has established a coordinating mechanism to combat child labor. (6)

The Commissioner of Labor—the head of the Labor Division in the Ministry of Commerce, Industry, Labor and Immigration (MOCILI)—is responsible for enforcing child labor laws. (5, 6) The most recent data indicate that in 2010 the Labor Division was allocated $3,252 for all of its operations, including conducting inspections. In 2011, MOCILI employed only three labor inspectors to enforce all labor laws, including those related to child labor. (6) Additionally, the Ministry of Labor employs a desk officer to work on ILO labor standards and child labor issues. (24) Research did not uncover the number of inspections, investigations and/or prosecutions, violations, and citations and/or penalties related to child labor during the reporting period. (5, 6) Sources, including the Government, note that inadequate capacity and resources have prevented meaningful enforcement of the laws. (5, 6, 25, 26)

During the reporting period, Customs and Immigration officials arrested—and a court initiated prosecution of—a naturalized citizen and a noncitizen for forcing an unknown number of women and girls into prostitution. Those arrested were charged with offenses of living on the earnings of prostitution, aiding prostitution, and receiving funds derived from prostitution; prosecution is ongoing as of the writing of this report. (4, 20)

The Royal Solomon Islands Police Force, in partnership with the Australian-led Regional Assistance Mission to the Solomon Islands Participating Police Force, appears to be the only body responsible for enforcing laws related to trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. (6) During the reporting period, the Government of Solomon Islands did not investigate or prosecute any trafficking cases, including sex trafficking. (26) Moreover, research did not uncover the number of investigations of commercial sexual exploitation of children in 2012.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The National Children's Policy establishes the National Plan of Action for 2010-2015, which acknowledges existing gaps in legislation, enforcement, and programs for the protection of children. It commits the Government to substantially improving services and the legal framework over a 5-year period. (23) Objectives of the policy include ratifying the CRC Optional Protocols, raising the minimum age for employment to 18, achieving universal primary education, registering all births by 2015, and creating a mechanism for the coordination and enforcement of child protection laws and policies. (23) However, the National Plan does not specify relevant agencies in its intended coordination mechanism, and it is unclear that relevant agencies are participating in this coordinating mechanism for enforcement. During the reporting period, the Government did not ratify the CRC Optional Protocols or raise the minimum age for work. (23)

Education in the Solomon Islands is not compulsory. (5) In 2012, the Government continued to implement the Free Fee Basic Education (FFBE) Policy, which covers the operational costs for children to attend school, but allows for school management to request additional contributions from families such as cash, labor, and school fundraising. (3, 20, 27, 28) The FFBE Policy is intended to increase educational access by subsidizing school fees for grades one through nine. (27) In 2011, the FFBE Policy enabled the Government to provide primary schools in rural areas with $320 per child, and in urban areas with $520 per child. Further, rural community high schools (years 7 to 9) received $800 per student, and urban community high schools received $1,000 per student.(27) This policy may not sufficiently cover all costs for schools, depending on their location; additional school fees, uniform costs, book fees, and transportation needs may still prevent some children from attending school.(27, 28) Attendance and dropout rates indicate that girls in the Solomon Islands are less likely than boys to finish school.(27, 29) Research was unable to uncover details about the degree to which the Government continued to support this program in 2012.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Solomon Islands collaborated with the ILO to implement its Decent Work Program for 2009-2012.(30) The program's priorities include promoting decent employment for youth and designing an expanded social protection system.(30) Research has not uncovered whether any child labor-specific activities were implemented, or whether the program concluded in 2012.

Moreover, research found no evidence that the Government carried out programs in 2012 to combat the worst forms of child labor, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children. However, during 2011, the Government supported the American Bar Association's Rule of Law Initiative (ROLI), funded by the U.S. Department of State's Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons, to address the issue of human trafficking through workshops and training programs using multi-stakeholder solutions.(3, 20) It is unclear whether ROLI has had an impact on the trafficking of children.

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Increase the minimum age for employment and hazardous work to 14 and 18, respectively, and institute a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations and activities from which children are prohibited.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Strengthen penalties for violating child labor laws.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Adopt laws to forbid the use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, such as the production and trafficking of drugs and the production of pornography.	2011, 2012
	Establish a compulsory age for education that is consistent with the minimum age for employment to meet international standards.	2009, 2011, 2012
	Amend laws to prohibit the prostitution of boys under age 18.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement the Immigration Act of 2012 to punish all forms of trafficking in persons, including the trafficking of children.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Make information on inspections and investigations regarding the worst forms of child labor publicly available.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that relevant agencies participate in the coordination mechanism for enforcement outlined in the National Plan of Action for 2010-2015.	2010, 2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Allocate sufficient funds to ensure that enforcement agencies have adequate resources and capacity to effectively enforce laws that prevent the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Meet the goals outlined in the National Children's Policy with a National Plan of Action for 2010-2015, including ratifying the CRC Optional Protocols.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Initiate programs to address the worst forms of child labor, particularly the commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2011, 2012

Somalia

In 2012, the Federal Republic of Somalia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Prior to elections in August 2012, the Transitional Federal Government (TFG) signed the Child Soldier Action Plan and the Action Plan to End the Killing and Maiming of Children in Contravention of International Law, which are still in effect. In addition, the Somalia National Army (SNA) made efforts to identify and remove underage personnel, including through the medical screening of new recruits. However, reports indicate that children continue to be recruited and used in the SNA. Children were also used by the Ahlu Sunnah Wal Jama'a (ASWJ) militia and by al-Shabaab, a terrorist organization that is the main perpetrator of the abduction and use of child soldiers in Somalia. Somalia continued to lack nearly all elements necessary to address the worst forms of child labor, including a solid legal framework, law enforcement, policies, and programs. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, many of them in dangerous activities in agriculture and some as child soldiers.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Somalia, many of them in dangerous activities in agriculture and some as child soldiers.(3-11) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(12, 13) Children also herd livestock.(3, 10, 11) Children handling livestock may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(14)

The terrorist organization al-Shabaab engages in the widespread and systematic conscription and recruitment of children for armed groups and is the main perpetrator of the use of child soldiers in Somalia.(3-5, 7, 8, 10, 11, 15-23) Boys as young as age 8 are bribed or forcibly taken from their homes, schools, and the streets to serve as soldiers.(7, 8, 19, 21) Conscribed children plant roadside bombs and other explosive devices, operate checkpoints, serve as human shields and suicide bombers, and are trained to conduct assassinations.(3, 7, 15, 21) Some conscripted boys over age 15 are forced to fight or face execution.(10) Armed groups recruit girls through bribery or force for sexual servitude and domestic labor.(3, 7, 15, 21) Girls are also recruited to transport weapons and provide intelligence and logistical support.(3, 7, 10, 15, 21) The Government condemns the use of child soldiers. However, the UN reported that it had identified children who were associated with Somali National Armed Forces (SNSF).(23) It also reported that Ahlu Sunnah Wal Jama'a (ASWJ) militia recruited children.(23) Children were also used by Somalia's numerous clan and other militias.(24)

Although the extent of the problem is unknown, it is reported that children are forced to break rocks for gravel and perform construction work.(3-6, 10, 11) Children are also subject to commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 10, 25) Children work on the street as beggars and porters. Children who work on the street also wash cars, shine shoes, and sell cigarettes, khat (an amphetamine-like stimulant), sweets, and toothbrushes.(5, 6, 10, 26) Children working on the streets are exposed to abuse and violence, including sexual violence and being infected with diseases such as HIV/AIDS.(26)

Somalia is believed to be a source, destination, and transit country for child trafficking.(3, 21, 27) Victims are primarily trafficked within the country from Somalia’s south and central regions, to the regions of Puntland and Somaliland in the north.(24) Children are reportedly trafficked for forced labor and sexual exploitation by al-Shabaab, but children of minority clans can also be exploited by members from larger clans.(21) Children are forced into labor in agriculture, livestock herding, construction, sexual servitude, domestic service, and commercial sexual exploitation.(21, 25) Children are also reportedly trafficked to Tanzania and Kenya for commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 24) Ethiopian children travel to Somaliland seeking employment but may end up in forced begging or vulnerable to other forms of forced labor.(24, 25)

In Somalia, protracted violence has led to the breakdown of all basic services, including public education.(20, 28, 29) In addition, droughts, floods, and decades of violence have led to the displacement of over 1.5 million Somalis. These constraints, as well as the forced recruitment of children from schools by armed groups, have limited children’s access to education, as schools are either unavailable or unsafe.(7, 8, 15, 20, 29-32) The cost of tuition, the prevalence of corporal punishment in schools, and the lack of educational infrastructure also hinder children’s access to school.(28, 29, 33, 34)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During 2012, the TFG completed the Roadmap for Ending the Transition in Somalia, a document designed to create permanent political institutions in Somalia. Completion of the Roadmap included drafting a Provisional Federal Constitution, forming a National Constituent Assembly that ratified the Provisional Constitution, selecting members of a federal parliament, and holding speakership and presidential elections for a new Federal Government of Somalia.(35) Despite these changes, Somalia continues to lack a coherent central legal system.(20, 36, 37) Neither the TFG nor the newly established Government had effective control over some parts of the country, and essential governance functions were provided by regional administrations, including the self-declared Republic of Somaliland in the northwest and the semi-autonomous region of Puntland in the northeast.(7, 21, 24, 32, 35, 36) Only the laws of the internationally recognized Federal Government of Somalia are discussed in this section.

Somalia is governed by the new Provisional Federal Constitution passed in August of 2012.(11) The Provisional Constitution states that Somalis are bound first by Shari’ah law, followed by the Provisional Constitution. The newly elected Parliament did not pass any laws related to child labor or child soldiers in the months before the end of the reporting period.(11)

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	C138, Minimum Age	No
	C182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	No
	CRC	No
	CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	No
	CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	No
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	No
	Minimum Age for Work	15
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	16
	Compulsory Education Age	No
	Free Public Education	Yes

The Provisional Constitution does not establish a minimum age for employment, and the new government has not passed laws establishing a minimum age for employment or a list of hazardous activities. The Provisional Constitution states that no child may perform work or provide services that are not suitable for the child’s age or create a risk to the child’s health or development in any way.(38) The pre-1991 Labor Code establishes the minimum age for employment at 15, excluding children working for their families.(39) It also prescribes a range of minimum ages for certain hazardous activities. For example, the minimum age for employment in construction is 16, and the minimum age for work underground is 18.(39) However, it is unclear if the Labor Code still applies. The lack of labor laws providing protections for minimum age and hazardous work, and the lack of clarity regarding the status of the Labor Code, leave children unprotected from the worst forms of child labor.

The Provisional Constitution prohibits forced labor and states that every child has the right not to be used in and to be protected from armed conflict.(38) Although laws passed by the new Government do not specifically prohibit child pornography or child prostitution, the 1962 Penal Code prohibits pornography, prostitution, and the pimping or forced prostitution of others. However, research was unable to determine if this law still applies.(38, 40) It is unclear under this Code whether children involved in prostitution would be protected from criminal charges for prostitution under Somali law. No laws specifically prohibit human trafficking or the use of children in illicit activities.(21) The lack of protections against trafficking and the use of children for illicit activities leave children vulnerable to exploitation.

There is no age for compulsory education. Although the Provisional Constitution calls for free education to the secondary level, a universal free education system in Somalia is not in place.(10, 11, 38, 41, 42)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Evidence indicates that the Government lacks a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.(11) In 2011, the Transitional Federal Government appointed a Focal Point for Human Rights and Child Protection to the United Nations. The mandate of the Focal Point is to address child soldiering and other forms of child labor.(3, 9, 11) Although the TFG appointed Focal Point did not carry over in the transition to a permanent government, the new Government reportedly appointed a new Focal Point before the end of 2012.(11, 35)

The Ministries of Labor, Justice, Interior, and Security are responsible for enforcing laws relating to the worst forms of child labor.(3, 4, 11) However, in 2012, no funding was provided to agencies for inspections, and no inspectors were employed to enforce child labor laws.(11)

The Government lacks law enforcement and judicial capacity to enforce the Constitution.(11) The number of child labor, child trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation of children cases reported and investigated during the reporting period is unknown, but Puntland and Somaliland did investigate and provide some protection for children subjected to human trafficking.(24, 43) This lack of enforcement leaves children vulnerable to exploitation and the worst forms of child labor.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In July 2012, the TFG signed an UN-sponsored Child Soldier Action Plan to address the recruitment and use of child soldiers and the Action Plan to End the Killing and

Maiming of Children in Contravention of International Law. Implementation of the Child Soldier Action Plan was limited.(24) In October 2012, the Joint Technical Committee (JTC) responsible for facilitating action plan implementation was established, though it did not advance significant action. The SNSF failed to create child protection units, as called for within the Government-signed UN action plan, due to lack of funding.(24)

The Federal Government of Somalia, in partnership with UN agencies and the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM), began development of a comprehensive strategy for the screening of al-Shabaab defectors, including child soldiers, and their placement into rehabilitation and reintegration programs. The strategy has yet to be implemented.(24, 44)

Somalia does not have any policies or capacity to address other worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Under the new Federal Government, the SNA has instituted medical screening to identify and remove underage recruits through the assistance of international donors. However, reports indicate that SNA and affiliated militia outside of Mogadishu do not have access to the same medical screening and may harbor underage recruits.(24, 35, 44) Current forces undergoing training abroad were vetted by an international team which included senior SNSF generals, international military advisors, and a technical monitor.(11, 24, 35, 44) Aside from the recruitment vetting process, research found no evidence of a strategy to disarm and demobilize child soldiers already serving in the SNA. In addition research identified no other Government programs to assist children in other worst forms of child labor.

A donor-funded, NGO-operated camp in Mogadishu housed some defectors from rebel groups, including families with children.(24) UNICEF is in the process of constructing a rehabilitation facility solely for children. The facility is expected to accommodate up to 660 children when at full capacity.(45) Currently, the rehabilitation facility is able to accommodate 100 to 150 children.

In addition to construction of a rehabilitation center, UNICEF maintains a Country Program.(32) UNICEF's Country Program aims to equitably increase school enrollment, construct schools, develop curriculum, and train teachers.

The UNICEF Country Program also works to prevent the recruitment of children into armed groups and to place former child soldiers into rehabilitation programs.(32, 35) In 2012, the UNICEF Country Program received $12.5 million in funding for education and child protection programs.(11) In addition, USAID funds a child-at-risk program in Mogadishu and other locations that accepts some children at risk of finding employment in clan militias.(24)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Somalia:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Clarify which laws are in effect under the new Federal Government.	2012
	Adopt a legal framework on child labor that includes a minimum age for work and a list of hazardous work activities.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure laws protect children involved in forced prostitution from criminal charges.	2011, 2012
	Adopt laws prohibiting human trafficking and the use of children in illicit activities.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Establish an age for which education is compulsory.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Enforce the prohibition laid out in the Provisional Constitution on forced labor and enforce the protection from armed conflict for children under age 18.	2012
	Establish an infrastructure to enforce laws relating to the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Adopt a comprehensive policy and action plan to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Adopt a comprehensive policy and national action plan to provide free and compulsory education for all children.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement the strategy to disarm and demobilize former anti-Government child soldiers and develop a strategy to disarm and demobilize child soldiers already serving in the SNA.	2012
Social Programs	Apply similarly stringent vetting standards and procedures to the TFG armed forces recruits trained inside Somalia as are applied to those trained outside of Somalia.	2011, 2012
	Develop programs to prevent and address worst forms of child labor including in agriculture in all areas of the country.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

South Africa

In 2012, South Africa made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government maintained its Child Support Grants Program during the year. While the grants have mixed results regarding poverty, they have been shown to reduce the likelihood that parents will send their children away for child labor. The Government continued implementation of the National Child Labor Action Program through its national child labor coordinating mechanism. The Government also maintained its no-fee schools and school feeding programs for the country's poorest secondary schools. The Government of South Africa collects data on child labor but does not publish comprehensive reports on the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor or the results of labor and criminal investigations. The worst forms of child labor continue to exist, particularly dangerous work in agriculture and domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in South Africa are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, many in dangerous work in agriculture and domestic service.(3-5) Although evidence is limited, there are reports that children are involved in a variety of agricultural activities, including forestry and in harvesting sugarcane, mango, lychee, bananas, grapes, citrus, and other fruits.(4-7) There are reports that some of these children may be exposed to extreme heat and physical and sexual abuse.(4, 6) In addition, children in agriculture may work long hours, use dangerous tools, and apply harmful pesticides.(8, 9) Reportedly, children, especially boys, caring for livestock have been injured by the animals, which may result in being absent from school because of their work.(7) Children herding livestock may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(10, 11)

Children in South Africa are employed as domestic servants.(4) They may be required to work long hours and perform strenuous tasks without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(12, 13) Limited evidence suggests children in South Africa also scavenge in landfills and dumpsites for recyclable materials. This work involves long hours and carrying heavy loads in the midst of dangerous machinery, moving vehicles, and burning toxins.(14)

Some children in South Africa are exploited in commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, children are used by adults to commit crimes, including drug trafficking, home burglaries, and gang-related activity.(4, 15) South Africa remains a country of origin, transit, and destination for children trafficked for the purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labor.(16) Children in South Africa are trafficked from rural areas to urban areas, including Johannesburg, Cape Town, Durban, and Bloemfontein.(17) Children, especially girls, from China, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland, and Thailand are trafficked to South Africa for commercial sexual exploitation.(15) South African girls are also trafficked internally and internationally for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic service.(18) South African boys are trafficked internally for farm work, food service, begging, and street vending.(17-19)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Basic Conditions of Employment Act 75 of 1997 sets the minimum age for work at age 15 and the minimum age for hazardous work at age 18.(20) Employers may hire children younger than age 15 to work in the performing arts with permission from the South African Department of Labor (SADOL).(21, 22) SADOL regulations prohibit children younger than age 18 from hazardous activities, including the production and sale of alcohol, mining, scavenging in garbage dumps, and exposure to hazardous substances, including dust, fumes, biological agents, lead, and pressurized gases.(23, 24) The list also prohibits the employment of children in work that: takes place in cold, hot, or noisy environments; involves respiratory hazards, elevated spaces, lifting of heavy objects; or interferes with a child's access to nutrition, health care, or education.(24) In addition, the regulations provide guidelines for the employment of children in work that requires overnight separation from their parents or guardians.(19, 24)

	Free Public Education	Yes

Public education is free and compulsory under the 1996 South African Schools Act, which stipulates that children must attend school until age 15 or grade nine.(4, 25-27)

Although access to free education is mandated by law, school fees vary depending on the municipality and region.(5) The Government implements a no-fee school program that covers the poorest primary schools.(25, 28, 29) According to the Government, 81 percent of schools are “no fee.”(28, 29) The Government also provides some fee waivers to children receiving government grants.(25, 30, 31) However, some families are required to pay local school fees and all families must pay for books, uniforms, and other school-related expenses.(4, 19, 31)

The Children's Amendment Act prohibits the use of children for slavery, slave-like practices, trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and illicit activities.(32, 33) The Criminal Law Amendment Act 32 of 2007 defines and criminalizes human trafficking for sexual exploitation.(15)

The Government has drafted, but not yet passed, a comprehensive national anti-trafficking law that includes specific provisions for child trafficking.(7, 19, 34)

The Defense Act 42 of 2002 establishes age 18 as the minimum age for voluntary military service, military training, and conscription, even in times of national emergency.(35, 36)

The Child Justice Act No. 75 of 2008 allows for the diversion of child offenders from the formal criminal justice system to alternative forms of justice, such as victim-offender mediation and family councils.(37) It calls for the creation of one-stop child justice centers and for the prosecution of adults who use children for illicit activities.(37) The Child Justice Act requires court officials to consider whether an adult has compelled a child to commit a crime when determining the child's placement in the justice system.(37)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Implementation Committee on Child Labor coordinates efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. The Committee is chaired by SADOL, and members include representatives from commercial agriculture, trade unions, government agencies, and the South African Police Service (SAPS).(4, 16, 19, 38) The Committee includes provincial level child labor coordinating structures that fully participate in the Committee's efforts.(5, 39). The Committee monitors and supports advocacy and awareness raising, mainstreaming of child labor into government policies and the implementation of child labor programs, legislation, and enforcement. The Committee meets on a bimonthly basis and members compile and submit progress reports to the Cabinet on efforts to implement the country's national strategy to eliminate child labor.(39-41)

SADOL and the South African Department of Justice and Constitutional Development (SADODJ) are responsible for enforcing child labor laws.(16, 19, 41) SADOL inspectors identify suspected cases of child labor and human trafficking and forward evidence to SAPS officials, who investigate and forward cases to SADOJ for prosecution.(16, 19) In 2012, SADOL employed 1,318 labor inspectors.(5) When cases involve foreign nationals, inspectors send the cases to the Department of Home Affairs before the cases are taken on by SADOJ. Inspectors also refer these cases to social workers to determine if a child worker is in need of care or protection.(42) However, a shortage of social workers may delay this practice. The Department of Social Development (DSD) is addressing the need for more social workers by offering scholarships to students interested in pursuing that field of study.(42) In addition, SADOL does not have a central unit responsible for delivering training programs for labor inspectors, but SADOL is currently training inspectors to increase their knowledge of child labor.(5) Also, the training curriculum for newly inducted police includes chapters on child labor.(39)

The Government of South Africa provides funding to an NGO-operated hotline, which refers reports of child labor violations to government protection agencies or the police.(15, 19) In 2012, the Government spent $41.44 million on SADOL inspections and enforcement.(5) In 2012, inspectors conducted both routine and unannounced inspections, with unannounced inspections focusing on high-risk sectors such as agriculture and domestic workplaces. Inspections include but were not limited to child labor cases.(5, 43) SADOL publishes statistics on the number of inspections conducted and the number of labor complaints received and addressed, but it does not disaggregate its data by child labor violations.(44)

While a farm access protocol exists in South Africa, it requires labor inspectors to give notice prior to conducting an inspection. According to the Government, this protocol makes it difficult for SADOL inspectors to access regulated areas, such as farms, to assess compliance with national labor laws, including prohibitions against child labor.(4) Although inspectors have legal authority, they frequently do not enter farms without providing advance notice and without SAPS support because they are afraid that farmers will treat them as intruders, potentially exposing them to safety risks.(4)

Depending on the type of offense, child labor violations are tried in either a criminal or labor court.(16) SADOL reported 11 cases of child labor violations during the Government's most recent fiscal year, between April 2011 and March 2012. Of these cases, all but two are being processed. However, two guilty verdicts were handed down with fines ranging from $56 to $280 or 8 months in prison.(5) It does not appear that these fines are sufficient to deter future offenses. However, SADOL and SADOJ do not make complete statistics publicly available on the number of child labor cases opened, closed or resolved, or the number of convictions made.(16) In the beginning months of 2013, SADOL publicized a number of child labor cases through a press release to highlight the severity of child labor-related offenses.(45)

The National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) prosecutes human trafficking cases. The Sexual Offenses and Community Affairs Unit within NPA leads a Trafficking in Persons Task Team, which is composed of the SADOL, SADOJ, and the Departments of Home Affairs, Justice, and Social Development, as well as other representatives of national law enforcement.(41, 46) Among the goals of the team is the development of a national strategy against human trafficking for sexual exploitation. The Human Trafficking Desk within SAPS seeks to monitor and evaluate efforts to investigate trafficking crimes, trains human trafficking investigators, and refers human trafficking cases to provincial SAPS units.(46) However, the Government does not publish data on human trafficking cases and prosecutors and investigators lack sufficient training on how to identify human trafficking situations.(15)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The National Child Labor Action Program for South Africa, Phase II, 2008-2012 (CLPA) is the Government's primary policy instrument to prevent and eliminate child labor in South Africa.(4, 16, 47) It calls for activities across the Government and the promotion of new laws against the worst forms of child labor.(4, 16) It also includes a list of indicators to monitor the Government's efforts against child labor.(4) In 2012, SADOL submitted a progress report on Phase II of the CLPA to Parliament. In addition, the Government has drafted Phase III (2012-2016), which will be tabled for approval in Parliament in early 2013.(5) While the Government collects some data on child labor it does not collect comprehensive data on the number of children engaged in hazardous work or child labor.(48, 49)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of South Africa implements the Child Support Grant, a direct cash transfer to primary caregivers for vulnerable children. The eligibility age for beneficiaries of the Grant was raised from age 17 to age 18 on January 18, 2012.(16, 27, 30, 39, 50, 51) The purpose of the Grant is to alleviate economic pressures and lower the cost of raising a child.(16, 27, 30, 39, 50, 51). Reports assessing the impact of the Grant indicate that recipients may be less likely to send their children away for child labor.(27, 52) Reports also suggest, however, that the amount of each grant is very low, which may mean the grants have little impact on child poverty.(53)

The Government administers the Old Age Pension (Old Age Grant), a cash transfer program for eligible adults over age 60. Assessments of the Grant’s impact indicate that children’s school attendance and completion increase and child labor decreases in rural households with male pension recipients, especially for boys in households with male recipients.(51, 54) Studies also indicate a decrease in the total hours worked by children, especially among girls.(51, 54)

Other grant programs, such as care dependency grants and foster care grants, help families and children, including those vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, by encouraging children to remain in school and not enter the labor market.(19) Recipients of social grants are automatically exempt from paying school fees. However, the “no-fee” policy ends at grade nine or when a child reaches age 15.(4)

The Government funds a number of social programs that may have a positive impact on working children. In cases in which individuals are not eligible for social grants, the DSD administers “social relief of distress” to vulnerable individuals, including child laborers, based on referral from a social worker.(25, 30, 42, 49) The Government also provides a national school feeding program for children.(31, 55) The Government provides subsidies for registered organizations working on child labor to provide basic care to children.(47, 56)

The Government supports the IOM’s efforts to develop the capacity of the Government and civil society groups to deal with the problem of trafficking.(57) The NPA implements the South African Government-European Union co-funded Program of Assistance to the South African Government to Prevent, React to Human Trafficking, and Provide Support to Victims of Crime. This Program supports the Government’s National Strategy to Combat Human Trafficking through Prevention, Response and Support for Victims.(46, 58) The Government also operates Thuthuzela Care Centers that provide medical services, counseling, and legal support to victims of sexual abuse and exploitation.(15)

The Government supported a 4-year, $4.75 million regional project funded by USDOL in three countries, including South Africa.(59) In South Africa, the project conducted awareness campaigns on child labor, assisted SADOL with technical support in implementing CLPA, and targeted 4,200 children for withdrawal from or prevention of the worst forms of child labor. The project developed procedures to help police and justice officials recognize and prosecute adults who exploit children involved in illegal activities; created strategies to reduce the use of child labor in fetching water; and conducted a study on children involved in scavenging at landfills and dumpsites.(28) The project also supported the development of a child labor code of conduct for the tourist industry.(39)

The Government has identified constraints on its capacity to offer social protection for children. For example, birth certificates are required to qualify for services; yet, more than 20 percent of babies are not registered by their first birthday.(27, 30) In addition, the child protection system still lacks the skilled staff to assist the majority of children who need care.(30)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in South Africa:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Pass the draft comprehensive anti-trafficking-in-persons legislation, which includes specific child trafficking provisions.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that education is freely available and accessible to all children.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish and enforce appropriate procedures to protect the safety of labor inspectors and allow for and facilitate labor inspections in all regulated areas, including on farms.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

South Africa

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Publicly report the number of child labor cases and child trafficking cases opened, closed, and resolved, and the number of convictions or penalties assessed.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide sufficient training and systems for law enforcement personnel to identify the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking cases.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Increase the number of social workers to ensure protections against hazardous work for children of legal working age.	2011, 2012
Policies	Collect systematic data on the number of child laborers and on the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Dedicate sufficient resources to the Child Support Grants and other programs to better ensure support to children in the social protection system.	2011, 2012
	Institute programs to address the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and domestic service.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement programs to ensure that all children have birth certificates.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Allocate more resources to increase the number of service providers supporting children of legal working age.	2010, 2011, 2012

South Sudan

Because South Sudan became an independent state in 2011, 2012 is the first year of reporting on South Sudan. Therefore, no assessment was made regarding the country's efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Despite ongoing political and ethnic conflict, the Government of South Sudan renewed many of the former government's policies and participated in social programs to combat the worst forms of child labor. The Government has yet to fully enforce its child labor laws, and while progress has been made on demobilizing child soldiers, policies designed to end all forms of child association with the military and armed groups have not been fully implemented. As a result, some children remain in the ranks of rebel and militia groups in South Sudan. In addition, social programs are not sufficient to meet demand. The worst forms of child labor persist, including dangerous activities in agriculture.

Prevalence and Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in South Sudan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including dangerous activities in agriculture.(3, 4)

Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(5-7) Children in South Sudan are also engaged in cattle herding. Children herding cattle commonly work long hours and travel great distances.(3, 8-11) In addition, boys are abducted for forced labor in cattle herding and girls are abducted for forced labor in domestic service during inter-tribal and cattle rustling disputes among the Murle, Nuer, and Dinka communities in the Jonglei, Upper Nile, Lakes, and Warrab States.(8, 12-19)

In urban areas, children work on construction sites, reportedly breaking rocks. Although information is limited, there are reports children are also found making bricks.(3, 8, 9, 20) Limited reports suggest that some girls engaged in domestic labor work long hours, and also risk performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter.(3, 18, 20) These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(3, 20-22)

Some sources indicate that children are engaged in mining. Some girls around the mines are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation.(3) Multiple reports suggest that a significant and growing number of girls (some as young as 10) are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation in cities such as Juba, Bor, Torit, Wau, and Bentiu.(3, 18, 19, 26, 27) Some of these girls are trafficked to South Sudan from Uganda, the Democratic Republic of Congo, and Ethiopia.(3)

The UN and USDOS report that during the year, the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA), the Government of South Sudan's national army, did not actively recruit children into armed conflict and continued to release children from within its ranks. While the SPLA released at least 392 boys during the reporting period (and more than 20,000 children over the past 2 years), the UN reported 252 boys were still being used by the SPLA and militia forces, though there were no reports of the use of child soldiers in actual combat during the year.(3, 19, 28-32) UN observational records note that children commonly serve at checkpoints or as assistants for commanders.(27) The UN confirmed reports of children being physically abused by the SPLA during civilian disarmament exercises. Some reports also suggest instances of forced labor and sexual harassment by SPLA forces, including during the exercises.(19, 33-35)

There were no new reports of Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) abductions of South Sudanese children for engagement in armed conflict during the reporting period.(19, 36-38) The UN suggests that some children remain within the ranks of the LRA and are used as cooks, porters, concubines, and combatants. Some of these children have since been taken to other countries, such as the Central African Republic and the Democratic Republic of the Congo.(18, 27)

In 2011, the Republic of South Sudan achieved its independence from the Republic of the Sudan.(3, 8, 19) Prior to this achievement, the 2005 Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA) ended a 22-year civil war between northern and southern Sudan with a power-sharing arrangement and permanent cease-fire between the northern interim Government of National Unity (GNU) and the southern Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM).(3, 8, 19, 39) In 2012, with support from the UN and African Union, the two countries signed an MOU on nonaggression and cooperation, as well as a border security agreement.(40-45) However, the status of the Abyei Area and the demarcation of the border between the two countries are yet to be determined, resulting in violence and displacement of border communities.(19, 44, 46-49) The fighting in Sudan's southern states, Southern Kordofan and Blue Nile, has resulted in more than 200,000 new refugees into South Sudan.(19) Delivery of aid and access to education during the year was hampered by ongoing conflict and insecurity in the border regions.(19, 50-52) In addition, reports suggest that refugees, including refugee children, did not receive sufficient food, water, access to education, or protection during the year, and were at risk of violence from armed groups within refugee camps.(19, 51)

While the ILO reports that child abduction and forced labor decreased after the signing of the CPA, the ILO notes that many children remain in forced labor conditions in South Sudan.(8)

Food insecurity and high cost of living may impede access to education in South Sudan as many families may not be able to afford to send their children to school.(53-55) In addition, during the year, the Government adopted austerity measures that led to a reduced education budget, which resulted in delayed payment of teachers and a diminished quality of education. The lack of access to education and diminished quality of education may increase the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor. Despite this situation, preliminary reports suggest that, overall, access to education has increased since the CPA was signed.(56)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(23-25) Limited reports suggest that some street children are used in commercial sexual exploitation and are involved in violent armed gangs and in the drug trade.(8)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Under the CPA, the Government of South Sudan was allowed to develop its own laws.(39) The 2008 Child Act sets the minimum age for paid employment at 14.(18, 57) Children 14 years and above are afforded the right to fair compensation and 24 hours of leave per week, as well as other rights.(3) The Child Act permits children between ages 12 and 13 to perform light work if the work does not harm the child's health, development, or school attendance.(3, 57) In addition, the Child Act includes a hazardous labor list that prohibits children from working in military forces; mining and quarrying; herding animals; tobacco production; carrying heavy loads (including heavy agriculture labor); construction and industrial work; commercial sexual exploitation; and bars and hotels.(3, 57) However, the Child Act does not clearly establish a minimum age for hazardous work, which makes children under the age of 18 vulnerable to hazardous child labor.(57) During the year, the Government, with support from the ILO, held a workshop to update the hazardous child labor list.(24) However, the current law does not cover children engaged in street work or domestic labor.

The 2012 Education Bill, the Child Act, and the 2011 Transitional Constitution provide for 8 years of free and compulsory primary education, generally through age 13.(3, 57, 59, 60) However, in practice, parents must often pay fees, and many children (especially in rural areas) do not have access to schools, often due to the lack of infrastructure.(3, 52, 56, 61).

The Child Act and the 2008 Penal Code Act criminalize the sale, trafficking, abduction (and kidnapping), and transfer of control of children under the age of 18, including practices of slavery and servitude.(3, 57, 62) The Child Act and the Penal Code Act prohibit the inducement, buying, and selling of a child into prostitution.(3, 57, 62) The Child Act bars the use of children in pornographic performances and prohibits the involvement of children in the production, trafficking, or distribution of drugs and other harmful substances.(3, 57) In addition, the CPA prohibits all forms of slavery, including servitude and forced and compulsory labor.(39)

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	C138, Minimum Age	✓
	C182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	CRC	No
	CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	No
	CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	No
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	No
	Minimum Age for Work	14
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No
	Compulsory Education Age	14
	Free Public Education	Yes

The law defines the minimum age for voluntary military service in the South Sudanese army as 18.(3, 57) The Child Act and the Transitional Constitution ban the use of children in military and paramilitary positions as cooks, spies, laborers, transporters; and in sexual exploitation.(3, 57, 59) During the reporting period, the Government renewed its Action Plan to combat the use of child soldiers, which includes criminal liability of military officers who recruit and use child soldiers in their ranks.(27)

A 2012 Labor Bill is being finalized, and reports suggest that it might be passed by the National Legislative Assembly in 2013.(24)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor and Public Service established a National Steering Committee on Child Labor to coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.(60)

In January 2012, the Government approved the appointment of Chairpersons and Deputy Chairpersons for labor, human rights, and education ministries, committees, and commissions.(63) During the year, the Government's Child Protection Unit (CPU), the Disarmament Demobilization Reintegration Commission (DDRC), UNICEF, and the UN Mission continued to oversee and coordinate implementation of the 1-year Action Plan to combat the use of child soldiers.(22, 53) The UN Security Council suggests that mechanisms for monitoring and reporting on children and armed conflict be strengthened.(38)

The Government's Committee to Eradicate the Abduction of Women and Children (CEAWC) is responsible for facilitating the return of enslaved or abducted persons (including children), but it did not return abducted persons during the year, as the Government did not provide the Committee with any funding.(64) The Government's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission is responsible for implementing repatriation policies.(65)

The Ministry of Labor and Public Service is charged with developing labor policies, enforcing child labor laws, conducting workplace inspections, and overseeing the operation of vocational training centers.(3, 57, 66) The Ministry has an estimated 10 labor inspectors, which appears to be insufficient for the size of the population.(60) No child labor violations were reported to the Government during the year. Research did not uncover the number of labor inspections or prosecutions that were performed during the reporting period.(60) The Government of South Sudan established the Federal Labor Statistics and Information Center to compile statistics and publish reports, including those on labor inspection activities.(67) However, it appears that the Government did not collect, maintain, or make such information accessible to the public.(60) In addition, prosecutors and law enforcement officials are not familiar with the Child Act.(58)

The Ministries of Interior and Justice and the South Sudan Police Services are responsible for enforcing criminal laws to combat the worst forms of child labor.(3) In particular, the Ministry of the Interior is responsible for establishing and maintaining a database on crime statistics.(68) Research did not uncover additional information about the database. The Ministry of Justice is responsible for protecting citizens' rights and enforcing relevant provisions of the CPA and the Transitional Constitution.(69) Likewise, the Government's Human Rights Commission has a mandate to investigate complaints regarding human rights violations, such as human trafficking.(70) Research did not uncover the number of investigations the Human Rights Commission conducted during the year.

The Government's DDRC is responsible for the disarmament and demobilization of rebels and the reintegration of children engaged in armed conflict. The DDRC oversees implementation of the Action Plan to combat the use of children in the armed forces with the SPLA's CPU.(3, 19, 27, 71) During the reporting period, the SPLA, CPU, and DDRC supported the release of about 200 children from the ranks of the SPLA and rebel groups.(3, 72, 73) However, the Government did not provide sufficient specialized training on the worst forms of child labor to police, military, or judicial personnel during the year.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In March of 2012, the Government's SPLA renewed its commitment to an Action Plan to combat the use of child soldiers, with support from the UN.(74, 75) The Action Plan requires the SPLA and militias that join the SPLA to demobilize children within their ranks.(76) During the year, the SPLA continued to remove children from within their ranks, in part by issuing military orders for the release of such children.(3, 31, 72, 77) However, the Government has repeatedly missed its agreed-upon deadlines for demobilizing all child soldiers since the 2005 CPA; most recently, the Government missed an April 2011 deadline to demobilize child soldiers.(3, 72, 78, 79)

During the reporting period, the Government developed several other policies that pertain to the worst forms of child labor. The U.S. Embassy and the Government of South Sudan developed a roadmap to address the issue of sex trafficking.(80) The Ministry of Labor, Public Service, and Human Resource Development developed a 5-year Strategic Plan to address labor issues in the country.(81) The Governments of South Sudan and Uganda agreed to fight cross-border crimes jointly.(82) At the time this report was prepared, no additional information was available on these plans.

The Government drafted a UN Development Assistance Framework (2012-2013) for improving education access and quality. The Framework includes provisions for social protection and the reintegration of ex-combatants.(83) However, it is unclear whether the Framework was adopted or if it is being implemented.(83) The War Disabled, Widows and Orphans Commission Policy (2010-2014) aims to provide orphans with services such as education, training, and employment awareness activities.(84) However, it is unclear whether an implementation timeline and budget exist for the policy.(84) The South Sudan AIDS Commission has an HIV/AIDS Policy (2008-2012) that aims to promote the rights of orphans and vulnerable children.(85) However, research was unable to determine whether an implementation timeline and budget exist for the policy.(85)

The Governments of Sudan and South Sudan signed an MOU to allow for the voluntary repatriation of the South Sudanese from Sudan to South Sudan, with a deadline of April 8, 2012.(50) The UN reports that an estimated 350,000 South Sudanese have been repatriated to the country since the signing of the CPA.(9, 19)

During the reporting period, the Government of South Sudan publicly announced plans to fully address the issue of child soldiers and children engaged in armed conflict in the country.(19, 78, 86, 87)

During the reporting period, the Government of South Sudan, with support from UNICEF, continued to repatriate and reintegrate children formerly associated with the SPLA, LRA, and rebel and militia groups, and provided services such as vocational training.(88) The Government also donated the land for a UN-constructed training center to rehabilitate former soldiers (including child soldiers); this center has a capacity of 500 people and is jointly run by the DRR and the UN.(89) The Government continued to participate in the multi-donor funded, UNDP-implemented $122.9 million (southern and northern) Sudan DDR Program, which supports national institutions with the DDR process and reintegration of persons (including children) associated with armed conflict, through June 2012.(90) The Government also continued to participate in the multi-donor funded, UNDP-implemented, $4.79 million Promoting Access to Justice and Fostering a Culture of Human Rights in Southern Sudan project, which aims to train and build the capacity of the Human Rights Commission (which covers trafficking issues) and community-based organizations, through December 2012.(91) However, reports suggest that the level and amount of rehabilitation services provided to child soldiers are still not sufficient to meet the total need.(72, 92)

South Sudan

The Government adopted austerity measures in the form of 50 percent budget cuts from February through December 2012 as a result of the decline in oil revenues. The Government was able to pay little more than salaries and some operating expenses under the austerity measures. Reports indicated that this may have negatively impacted the Government's capacity to fund and participate in social programs.(47, 77, 93)

During the reporting period, the Government of South Sudan signed a 3-year MOU with the Government of Sudan to pay for South Sudanese secondary education examination fees (taking place in Sudan) in the amount of $885,600.(94) The Government of South Sudan participated in distribution of 9.3 million primary school textbooks to schools throughout South Sudan, with support from the British Government valued at $16 million.(95, 96) USAID contributes $40 million per year to South Sudan's education through activities focused on increasing access and quality in primary, secondary, and tertiary level education, as well as overall system wide support and policy reform. The United Kingdom's Department for International Development provided funding for school construction as part of a 3-year project that will benefit 35,000 children and teachers.(97) The EU allocated $14.3 million to improve the primary education system and build the capacity of the Ministry of Education.(98) The Government also participates in a $12 million, 3-year project, funded by Qatar, to increase the quality of and access to primary education for 25,000 children throughout South Sudan.(99) With support from the Government, UNICEF aims to improve the quality of and access to education, including the provision of teaching and learning materials to schools in 10 states.(100-102)

The Government continued to participate in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In South Sudan, the project aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to eliminate child labor and forced labor.(103) The Government of South Sudan continued to participate in the 4-year (ending in 2012), EU-funded project Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE).(104-107) This $13.5 million project combats child labor through the provision of educational services in South Sudan and 10 other countries.(104-106) In South Sudan, the project is working with the Government to develop a hazardous labor list, provide training, and help develop national action plans, among other activities.(108)

The Government of South Sudan participates in the World Bank-funded $9 million grant to improve employment and financing opportunities, focusing on youth and women. The project aims to support 50,000 small business entrepreneurs and generate 250 jobs.(109) During the year, the War Disabled, Widows and Orphans Commission distributed tricycles to vulnerable groups to encourage economic empowerment of such groups.(110) During the reporting period, the Government participated in the Sudan Productive Capacity Program, which aims to make the country food self-sufficient by 2014 by providing agricultural assistance to rural farmers, including assistance in the form of livestock, fishing gear, seeds, and other livelihood assets. The project is funded by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at an estimated $54 million, and the Government has pledged an additional $5 million.(53, 111, 112)

During the reporting period, the Government participated in projects with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, nongovernmental, and other organizations (such as IOM) to assist displaced persons and to support the voluntary return of the South Sudanese (including families and children) from the north. This included provision of food, shelter, and other support to South Sudanese refugees.(19, 50, 113) In FY 2012, USAID's Office of Disaster Assistance provided more than $94 million toward emergency reintegration and livelihoods assistance to refugees and other victims in South Sudan. USAID's Office of Food for Peace provided emergency food supplies to refugees and other victims in South Sudan, and the U.S. Department of State's Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration provided funding for multi-sectoral humanitarian assistance to refugees and other victims in South Sudan.(114) The European Commission also contributed an estimated $45 million to the relief efforts in border regions.(54, 115, 116) The impact of livelihoods, refugee support, and other programs on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been assessed.

While the Government of South Sudan attempted to address part of the child labor problem, the scope of existing programs is insufficient to address the magnitude of the problem, including in agriculture and armed conflict.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in South Sudan:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the labor code to include protections for children engaged in work on the street and in domestic labor.	2012
	Implement the Transitional Constitution and Child Act provisions that provide for free education.	2012
	Clarify a minimum age for hazardous labor for children that is in line with international standards.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Provide sufficient human resources and personnel training for effective inspection and enforcement efforts.	2012
	Expand efforts to investigate, prosecute, and enforce child labor cases.	2012
	Track and make publicly accessible information on the results of the inspections and investigations.	2012
	Fully fund the CEAWC.	2012
	Sustain efforts to demobilize and reintegrate child soldiers from the ranks of the SPLA and rebel and militia groups, while adhering to international standards regarding military codes of conduct.	2012
Policies	Reinvigorate efforts to implement existing policies, such as the Action Plan to combat children engaged in armed forces and the UN Development Assistance Framework.	2012
	Ensure that policies such as the War Disabled, Widows and Orphans Commission Policy and the HIV/AIDS Policy have appropriate budgets and implementation timelines.	2012
Social Programs	Establish and implement a program to address the lack of school infrastructure, which impedes children's access to education.	2012
	Develop and implement programs to lessen the impact that food insecurity and the high cost of living may have on rural populations.	2012
	Increase the scope of social programs to reach more children at risk of the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and armed conflict.	2012
	Assess the impact that livelihood, refugee support, and other programs have had on efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.	2012

In 2012, Sri Lanka made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government conducted an island-wide survey to determine the number of out-of-school children at risk for child trafficking and launched a project to increase primary and secondary school attendance rates. In addition, the Government continued to raise awareness about child trafficking and child labor through social media and documentaries. However, the Government's coordinating mechanism for child labor was inactive and enforcement efforts were weak, due to funding shortages and lack of institutional capacity. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in manufacturing and dangerous activities in agriculture.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Sri Lanka are engaged in dangerous activities in manufacturing and agriculture.(3-7) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(8, 9)

Children, predominantly boys, are exploited in prostitution in coastal areas as a part of sex tourism.(5, 7, 10-12) Children are also employed in domestic service, a largely unregulated and undocumented sector.(3, 5, 6, 13) Some child domestics are subject to physical, sexual, and emotional abuse; there are also reports of rural domestics in debt bondage living in third party households.(5, 10, 12) Children reportedly work in the mining, fishing, transport, and construction sectors.(4, 5, 13)

Children are trafficked internally for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(3, 10, 11) Children are also trafficked internally and abroad to work as domestic servants, primarily in Middle Eastern countries, which can leave them vulnerable to labor and sexual exploitation.(10, 14) Some child domestic workers trafficked to Colombo households are subjected to nonpayment of wages, and restrictions on their movement, along with the hazards discussed above.(3, 5, 10)

There are reports that children are subjected to bonded and forced labor on dry zone farming areas (tea estates). Although information is limited, there are reports that children are also subjected to bonded and forced labor in the fireworks and fish-drying industries.(5, 10)

Most children in Sri Lanka have access to basic education.(1) However, both the two-decade-long civil conflict and the 2004 tsunami devastated parts of the country, which has increased educational disparities in the affected areas.(15-17) In the former conflict and tsunami affected areas of the Northern and Eastern provinces, security issues, acute teacher shortages, and the charging of school fees remain a problem, primarily for children from poor families. In addition, thousands of school children remaining in Welfare Camps lack access to continuous and quality education.(18, 19)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific on hazards is unknown.(4-6, 13)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act sets the minimum age for employment at 14 and the minimum age for employment in hazardous work at 18.(3-5, 20) The Government has a hazardous work activities list that includes the 51 occupations and/or working conditions in which child labor is most prevalent, with the exception of domestic service.(4)

	Free Public Education	Yes

Children under age 14 may engage in light work on family-run farms or as a part of their technical education, as long as their employment does not prevent them from attending school.(21)

The minimum age for voluntary recruitment in the armed forces is 18; there is no conscription into the military.(22) The

Penal Code criminalizes and prescribes penalties for individuals who engage children younger than age 18 in debt bondage, forced labor, slavery, armed conflict, or trafficking.(23) The Penal Code also criminalizes and prescribes penalties for individuals who engage children younger than age 18 in pornography and prostitution.(24, 25)

Education in Sri Lanka is compulsory and free until the age of 15.(6) However, there are cases where school fees are extracted from families.(18) In addition, many schools in areas with high rates of returnees from the conflict have insufficient classrooms and teachers, damaged infrastructure, and low school attendance due to the lack of adequate transport facilities.(26) Children unable to access school are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Steering Committee on Child Labor (NSC) coordinates the implementation of the Roadmap to End the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2011-2016), the Government's key mechanism for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.(6, 7, 27) Chaired by the Secretary of the Ministry of Labor and Labor Relations (MOLRR), the NSC includes representatives from key government agencies, employer and workers' organizations, the ILO, UNICEF, and other NGOs.(6) The NSC met for the first time in January 2012; research was unable to determine the meeting outcomes. Nonetheless, funding and administrative deficits rendered the NSC inactive over the reporting period.(6)

The National Child Protection Authority (NCPA) is an independent agency under the MOLRR's Women and Children's Affairs Division. It shares responsibility with the NSC for coordinating actions to protect children, including protecting them against the worst forms of child labor.(5, 6) This body's mandate includes formulating policies and enforcing laws on child abuse and exploitation, coordinating groups that combat child abuse and exploitation, and conducting research and mobilizing resources.(4, 28) The NCPA is mandated to assist children who are victims of physical and sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, and armed conflict.(28)

The Government of Sri Lanka addresses child trafficking through the National Anti-Trafficking Task Force's (NTF) National Action Plan. The NTF is charged with coordinating governmental ministries, departments, law enforcement and civil society anti-trafficking interventions; reviewing related legislation; and recommending legal and policy reforms on the country's response to trafficking in persons.(6, 12, 29) In 2012, the NTF and Ministry of Child Development and Women's Affairs (MCDWA) established a center for victims of trafficking, engaged in monitoring child trafficking, and organized awareness-raising and training programs on child trafficking.(6, 12)

The NCPA and the Women and Children's Bureau of the Sri Lankan Police (WCBSLP) are the key agencies responsible for coordinating the efforts to combat child trafficking, forced child labor, the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the involvement of children in illicit activities.(4, 6, 28) The NCPA's Police Unit employs approximately 40 officers responsible for investigating complaints. In addition, the NCPA has child protection officers based in district-level offices that focus on the prevention of child related crimes and victim protection.(6)

The NCPA and WCBSLP work closely with the MOLRR's Department of Labor (DOL), which has legal authority to enforce child labor laws.(5, 6) The DOL's labor inspectorate employs 453 labor officers to enforce all labor laws, including those related to child labor.(6) The DOL and its district-level offices have existing mechanisms in place for the public to use when filing complaints on child labor.(6)

The WCBSLP enforces laws on child labor, child trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The WCBSLP has 45 officers and 43 branch operations throughout the country.(6) In the remaining police stations without WCBSLP representation, the officers in charge oversee functions of the division.(4, 6) Children found during inspections are referred to the Department of Probation and Child Care Services (DPCCS), under the MCDWA, by the court.(6) Under the direction of the DPCCS, case workers refer child laborers and children involved in commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking to psychosocial and protection services, including four shelters and two national training and counseling centers. These centers provide victims with medical, legal, psychosocial, life skills, and vocational skills training.(10, 12, 30)

Complaints on child labor, child commercial sexual exploitation, and child trafficking violations can be made via a hotline to the WCBSLP and the NCPA. Both the WCBSLP and the NCPA face a shortage of funds that affects their ability to carry out their mandate.(6)

During the reporting period, the DOL conducted more than 63,000 labor inspections and received 209 child labor complaints.(6) Eight children were removed or assisted as a result of the inspections. Among the complaints received and filed by the DOL, eight violated the child labor law. The outcome of these cases is still pending.(6)

The NCPA carried out four investigations on reported cases of child trafficking during the reporting period. The outcome of these cases is still pending.(12) The Attorney General also filed indictments in two complaints related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(12) Information on the total number of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation cases received by the NCPA during the reporting period was not available. The WCBSLP received 25 child trafficking complaints, but information on the number of violations incurred or cases filed was not available.(6)

The DOL conducted training of trainer programs for 80 labor enforcement officers and revised the handbook on labor laws to include hazardous labor regulations.(12) In addition, the DPCCS trained probation officers on the management of child abuse, child labor, and child trafficking cases.(12) Nonetheless, government officials maintain that DOL's capacity to enforce hazardous occupation regulations is weak; the officers need training on approaches to identifying children who are engaged in hazardous occupations.(6)

The Government of Sri Lanka acknowledges and is committed to investigating allegations of previous recruitment and the use of children in armed conflict by non-state armed forces. While some recruiters of child soldiers were killed during the conflict, research has found no evidence of prosecutions and convictions of living survivors who violated the law on children and armed conflict.(31-33)

The NCPA continues to investigate the whereabouts of missing children.(33) In addition, as of April 2012, the Family Tracing and Reunification Unit of the Northern province had registered 736 tracing applications from families of missing children since 2009, the majority of whom were recruited by the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam. Of these children, 139 have been matched and referred to the Unit; 42 have been reunited with their family.(33)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government's child labor policy is the Roadmap to End the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2011-2016). The Roadmap specifies time bound goals, including developing and/or strengthening the management, coordination, implementation, resource mobilization, and reporting of programs that will lead to the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.(7) The Roadmap also provides district-level mainstreaming strategies to address specific sectors of child labor, including armed conflict, plantations, fisheries, and tourism. In addition, the Roadmap outlines strategies to include child labor issues within social protection and education goals.(7, 34)

The formation of the Roadmap's goal of child labor elimination by 2016 relied heavily on data from a 2008-2009 government survey on child labor that excluded the Northern province of Sri Lanka.(7) Although child labor rates in the rest of the country were low, the lack of recent child labor data on the Northern province could indicate a need to coordinate additional efforts prior to achieving the Roadmap's goal of complete elimination of the worst forms of child labor by 2016.

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Education (MOE) began implementation of a National Education Sector Development Framework and Program (ESDFP) (2012-2016) to increase the equitable access, quality, and delivery of education.(6) In addition, the ESDFP aims to support accelerated learning and non-formal education for drop-outs from the formal education system.(6)

During the reporting period, the NTF developed a National Plan of Action on Anti-Human Trafficking. The NTF held several meetings with civil society stakeholders to discuss best practices on ways to better collaborate.(12)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent Child Labor

The DPCCS conducted an island-wide study to identify children at risk of being trafficked. The study results found that 32,000 children were not attending school.(12) During the reporting period, the DPCCS sought measures to reintegrate the out-of-school youth revealed through the survey into school. In addition, they worked with NGOs to provide protection services, such as shelter, to child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(5) The DPCCS is undergoing a study on the institutionalization of children subjected to human trafficking and child labor.(12)

During the reporting period, the NCPA ran an undercover operation in the Southern coastal region of the country to identify perpetrators and child victims of sex tourism. In addition, the NCPA collaborated with the Government's tourism police to conduct a national awareness raising program on child sex tourism that targeted travel guides, coastal communities near tourist destinations, and children.(5)

secretaries, labor officers, teachers, welfare officers, students, law enforcement officers; and residents and employers of plantations, exporting zones, and factories beyond export processing zones. (6, 12, 27) In addition, the Government sponsored an education and development exhibition, held in February 2012, which featured several films and documentaries on human trafficking. Approximately 500,000 people attended the exhibition.(12, 27) The Ministry of Justice and NTF continued to deliver media on safe migration and human trafficking through a docudrama, TV advertisement, and a poster developed through a 2011 U.S. Department of State project.(27, 29)

In June 2012, the World Bank launched a $100 million education project, Transforming School Education, to support the ESDFP. This project aims to increase the age of primary and secondary education completion of children ages six through 16.(6) The project appoints school attendance committees to promote school enrollment and attendance and runs school nutrition and health programs.(6)

During the reporting period, the MOE continued its efforts to improve education for the children of plantation workers, who are vulnerable to dangerous forms of child labor such as domestic work in third party homes. The MOE conducted teacher training for plantation teachers; held supplementary classes for secondary school aged children; and took steps to improve math, science, and English skills of plantation school children.(6)

The Joint Plan for Assistance for Northern Province project (JPA) is a collaborative effort among the Government of Sri Lanka, UN agencies, and local and international NGOs. During the reporting period, the Government and its partners continued to strengthen resettlement and security efforts in the conflict-affected Northern and Eastern provinces of Sri Lanka by providing support services to the recently resettled in those areas.(26, 35) One JPA program supports education services, including a sponsorship program for children who lost one or both parents during the war, and vocational training for youth unable to complete their formal education. These programs have awarded educational assistance to more than 200 children in the Northern and Eastern provinces.(26) JPA also supports construction and infrastructure development in and around schools, such as the construction of water supply systems and toilets within schools in Jaffna and Kilinochchi, which benefitted more than 2,500 children during the reporting period.(26) The issue of whether these programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Sri Lanka:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Create protections for children engaged in domestic service.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure all children have access to free compulsory education, as called for by the law.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Provide additional funding for the NCPA to adequately carry out investigations on child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2011, 2012
	Prosecute individuals who have violated laws related to children's exploitation in the armed conflict.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide labor officers with training on approaches to identifying children engaged in hazardous occupations.	2012
	Provide adequate resources for the enforcement of child labor and child trafficking laws.	2012
	Provide adequate funding to coordinate planning for the Roadmap for the Elimination of Child Labor.	2012
Policies	Conduct a child labor assessment in the Northern Sri Lanka province and incorporate findings into the Roadmap.	2011, 2012
Social Programs	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2011, 2012

In 2012, Suriname made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution, and Child Pornography. The Government also carried out a desk survey on child labor, identified and provided services to victims, and pursued prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued to expand education programs for vulnerable populations. However, Suriname has not raised the minimum age for compulsory education to equal the minimum age for employment, nor approved a national policy to combat child labor. Further, the Government does not participate in specific programs dedicated to reducing the worst forms of child labor. Children in Suriname continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.

All other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS3 Survey, 2006.(2)

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Suriname are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Children also engage in dangerous work in agriculture.(3-5) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(6, 7)

Children, predominantly boys, work in dangerous conditions in Suriname's gold mines.(3-5, 8, 9) In gold mining, children carry heavy loads and are exposed to mercury, excessive noise, and extreme heat common to Suriname. Child miners are vulnerable to being crushed by collapsing sand walls.(8)

The commercial sexual exploitation of children continues to be a problem, including in mining camps in the country's interior.(3-5, 9, 10) Limited evidence suggests girls are also trafficked within Suriname for commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 10, 11)

Although some sector-specific research has been conducted, recent information and statistics on child labor in Suriname remain limited. The Government carried out a desk survey in 2012 to compile all available data on child labor in Suriname from the past 10 years. The results of the desk review are expected to be finalized and published in 2013.(5, 12)

There are reports of children working on the streets but this phenomenon may be declining and information about specific hazards is unknown.(3-5, 9, 13-15)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code of 1963 sets the minimum age for employment at 14 and the minimum age for hazardous work at 18.(3, 5, 8, 9, 16) However, the Labor Code allows children 12 or older to work in positions that facilitate professional skill development or that, by their nature, must be performed by a child, provided the work is not physically or mentally demanding or dangerous.(8, 17) Children under age 18 are prohibited from working between 7 p.m. and 6 a.m. Children under age 15 are banned from working on boats.(3, 5, 8, 9) In addition to the Labor Code, the Safety Act also limits children's engagement in hazardous activities. It prohibits children under age 18 from engaging in activities that may be injurious to their health and safety.(16) The Government has established a list of hazardous activities prohibited for children under 18.(18)

Suriname

The Constitution bans forced or compulsory labor.(9, 19) Suriname's Penal Code prohibits prostitution as well as the use of children for the production of pornography and illicit activities.(3, 5, 9, 16) In 2012, Suriname ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution, and Child Pornography.(20)

The Penal Code also proscribes all forms of human trafficking.(9, 16, 21) The Narcotics Act prohibits the use of a child by an adult for illicit activities, including drug trafficking.(9)

The Legal Status of Military Personnel Act sets the minimum age for appointment to the military at 18.(9)

The Constitution guarantees free education at all levels and makes primary education compulsory.(19) The Compulsory School Attendance Act requires children to attend school until they are at least age 12.(5, 8, 9) Children between ages 12 and 14 are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are no longer required to attend school and are not legally permitted to work.(3)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Commission for the Elimination of Child Labor NCECL is responsible for coordinating efforts to combat child labor. It comprises 11 members, with representation from the Presidential Commission on Child and Adolescent Policy; the Ministries of Social Affairs, Education, Regional Development, Justice and Police (MJP), and Labor, Technology and Environment (MLTE); labor unions; private sector entities; academic institutions; and NGOs.(3, 5, 22) NCECL is tasked with formulating a national policy to eliminate child labor; monitoring Suriname's compliance with international child labor standards; and executing programs to raise awareness about, prevent, and combat child labor.(22)

The Department of Labor Inspections within MLTE is responsible for enforcing child labor and related laws.(4, 8, 9) MLTE employs 80 inspectors, an increase over the 63 inspectors employed in 2011.(5, 9) During the reporting period, it conducted inspections of companies to check for compliance in various areas, including child labor.(5) Information on the number of inspections and child labor violations found in 2012 is not available.(5)

MJP is responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to child labor and for monitoring and enforcing child labor laws outside of established companies, including on the streets. The Youth Affairs Police covers law enforcement involving children under age 18 and is jointly responsible for child labor-related crimes.(5, 9) However, when the Youth Affairs Police find children working on the street, these children are sometimes registered and sent home without being referred to any relevant services.(9)

MLTE chairs the Anti-trafficking Working Group, and coordinates the Government's anti-trafficking efforts.(3, 5, 9, 11) It has seven members: six from government agencies and one representing the NGO community. The Working Group's initiatives include those that target the worst forms of child labor, such as forced child prostitution.(3, 5, 9) During the reporting period, the working group met on a monthly basis.(11)

MJP's Anti-trafficking Police Unit (TIP) investigates reports and allegations of trafficking in persons nationwide, including those involving children.(9) TIP conducts bimonthly checks of brothels and night clubs to ensure children are not being exploited in prostitution or held in conditions of forced labor.(9, 23) The unit currently has 12 full-time officers.(5) Child trafficking victims are referred to shelters that provide the necessary services.(3, 5, 21)

According to the Government, there are five ongoing prosecutions involving the worst forms of child labor, all of which commenced in 2011 or 2012. They involve trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(5) One case involves a local government official accused of trafficking underage girls for prostitution.(10) Seven victims were removed from exploitation in the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.(5)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government has drafted a National Children’s Action Plan 2009-14 that addresses child labor issues, but it has not yet been approved by the Council of Ministers.(8) The Anti-trafficking Working Group also drafted a plan titled “Roadmap Suriname to Combat Human Trafficking 2012-2016.” However, the plan is currently being discussed with stakeholders and has not yet been approved and implemented.(11, 24)

Suriname’s Ministry of Transport, Communication, and Tourism participates in the Joint Group for the Elimination of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children in Tourism. The Group, which comprises members from the Ministries of Tourism of 10 Latin American countries, implements awareness-raising campaigns throughout the region.(5, 9)

Suriname is a member of the Joint Regional Group for the Americas, which conducts child labor prevention and awareness-raising campaigns in tourism and whose members include Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(25)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Suriname has implemented several programs related to child trafficking. However, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to address other worst forms of child labor, including agriculture, street work, commercial sexual exploitation, or gold mining.(5)

During the reporting period, the Government continued to work with NGO partners to provide services to trafficking victims, including children.(11) Suriname’s Child and Youth Hotline provides confidential advice to children in need, including victims of the worst forms of child labor.(4, 23) The Government also runs an anti-trafficking hotline for citizens to provide information to police about trafficking cases.(10, 11)

During the reporting period, the Anti-trafficking Working Group carried out trainings on human trafficking in the districts of Paramaribo and Nickerie for law enforcement officials, educators, judicial and immigration officials, and the Youth Parliament. It also conducted awareness-raising activities, including newspaper spots to warn young people of misleading job offers, a 1-day training for Youth Parliamentarians, and a training for government information officers.(10)

During the reporting period, the Government continued to participate in a number of education programs. In 2012, the Ministry of Education launched a free afterschool program for primary students, which offers meals and homework assistance, and continued to implement a school-based feeding program for children from low-income families.(5, 9, 12) The Government also participates in a $14 million program to improve basic education in collaboration with the Inter-American Development Bank. The project, implemented through the Ministry of Education, aims to enhance education quality and reduce student dropout rates.(5, 9) The five major project components are enacting institutional reform, updating school curricula, improving educational materials, enhancing teacher capacity, and providing technical assistance.(5) However, the question of whether these programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Suriname:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Raise the compulsory education age to at least 14, the minimum age for work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Collect and make publicly available information of labor inspections and violations related to the worst forms of child labor.	2012
	Create a mechanism to refer children discovered in exploitive labor to appropriate services, helping to prevent their return to work.	2010, 2011, 2012

Suriname

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Policies	Conduct a study to better understand the extent and nature of the worst forms of child labor in Suriname in order to design appropriate policies and programs.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Approve and implement the National Children's Action Plan.	2011, 2012
	Approve and implement the Anti-trafficking Plan of Action.	2011, 2012
Social Programs	Expand and develop social programs to assist children engaged in or vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, particularly in agriculture, street work, commercial sexual exploitation, and mining.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Swaziland made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government enacted the Children's Protection and Welfare Act and redrafted its Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor (APEC) to better align with the new law. The Government also ratified the Palermo Protocol and both of the Optional Protocols on the Convention of the Rights of the Child. Despite continuing financial constraints as a result of a severe financial crisis in 2011, the Government expanded its free education program from grade four to five. There are, however, significant gaps in the laws, including the lack of a hazardous task list and a compulsory education age. Additionally, the roles and responsibilities of coordinating agencies to combat the worst forms of child labor are not clear. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, many of them working in dangerous forms of agriculture and in livestock herding.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Swaziland, many of them working in dangerous activities in agriculture and livestock herding.(3-5) Although evidence is limited, there are reports that children pick cotton and harvest sugarcane.(5, 6) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(7, 8) Reports indicate that in addition to agriculture, working children are primarily engaged in herding.(3-6) Children herding livestock may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(9, 10) Boys who migrate from Mozambique to Swaziland to work in herding may subsequently become victims of forced labor, as their employers reportedly do not allow them to leave.(11, 12) Children also reportedly work in domestic service.(3-6) Child domestics may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(7, 13)

Children are used for illicit activities and commercial sexual exploitation. Reports suggest that children may grow, manufacture, and sell drugs and may engage in commercial sexual exploitation at truck stops, brothels, and bars in which some children serve alcohol.(5, 14)

Anecdotal evidence suggests that Swaziland is a source, destination, and transit country for child trafficking for the purposes of domestic service, sexual exploitation and forced labor in agriculture.(3, 12) Swazi girls are trafficked internally into the cities of Mbabane and Manzini, and internationally to South Africa and Mozambique for domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation.(11, 12)

While primary education is free through grade five, parents are expected to contribute to the costs of education through payment of student fees, as well as contributions for infrastructure improvements, school supplies, and uniforms.(5, 15-17) The inability to make these contributions and pay the fees charged by schools create additional challenges impacting students' ability to remain enrolled in school, increasing the potential of their engagement in child labor.(18)

Swaziland has one of the world's highest HIV/AIDS prevalence rates, affecting more than a quarter of the population. According to UNICEF's 2010 Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey, 23.6 percent of children under 18 have lost at least one parent, mostly as a result of HIV/AIDS, and are therefore at risk of entering into the worst forms of child labor.(15, 19, 20)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(4, 5)

Swaziland

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the Government of Swaziland passed the Children’s Protection and Welfare Act, which strengthened labor protections for children. The law defines a child as a person under 18 years old and sets the minimum age for employment at 15 years.(21) The law sets the minimum age for night work at 16, and prohibits the employment of children under the age of 18 in any form of hazardous work.(21) A list of activities that are considered hazardous will be adopted through regulation by the Minister of Labor and Social Security.(22) The law establishes that a child has the right to protection from exploitative labor. Exploitative labor is defined as labor that deprives or hinders access to health, education, or development.(21) The Employment Act of 1980 states that children may not work during school hours, at night, for more than 6 hours a day or 33 hours a week, or for more than 4 hours continuously.(23) The employment of a child is prohibited in places mainly used for the sale and consumption of alcohol, places in which their morals may be impaired, and in underground, dangerous, or unhealthy places.(23)

	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	18
	Compulsory Education Age	No
	Free Public Education	Yes

Swaziland lacks a compulsory education law that is consistent with the minimum age of employment.(4, 11) The lack of standards in this area may increase the risk of children’s involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

The Crimes Act criminalizes child prostitution. The draft Sexual Offenses and Domestic Violence Bill aims to provide more stringent penalties; however, the Bill has yet to be enacted.(4, 24) The General Pornography Act prohibits pornography, including child pornography.(4) The Child Protection and Welfare act prohibits the use of children from being involved in the production, trafficking, or distribution of harmful substances. In addition, the law prohibits any person from procuring or using a child to carry out illicit activities.(21)

The Trafficking and People Smuggling (Prohibition) Act criminalizes trafficking, covering both internal and international forms of trafficking and providing penalties for violators, including up to 25 years’ imprisonment for the trafficking of children for any purpose.(12, 25) The Act also provides for victim compensation through a fine on convicted offenders.(12, 25)

The Constitution prohibits slavery and forced labor. It also states that a child has a right to be protected from engaging in work that constitutes a threat to the health, education, or development of the child.(26) However, a 1998 Administrative Order, Act No. 6, granted local chiefs the power to require residents to perform work, for example agricultural work, enforceable with penalties for noncompliance. The High Court has declared the order null and void, stating that it was overridden by the constitution. However, the ILO recommends that it be repealed.(5, 27) The Umbutfo Swaziland Defense Force Act sets the minimum age for conscription and voluntary recruitment into the military at 18.(28)

During the reporting period, the Government ratified the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons, the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution, and Child Pornography, and the Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict.(29-31)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of Swaziland has established a coordinating mechanism to specifically combat the worst forms of child labor. The government established a Child Labor Unit under the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) and also maintained a National Children’s Coordination Unit under the Deputy Prime Minister’s Office. These entities are a part of the newly established National Task Team designated to develop a new child labor policy.(22) However, the distinct roles and activities of each body are not clear. In addition, community-based child labor committees are responsible for coordinating and monitoring activities to combat child labor at the local level.(32)

The Inter-Agency Task Force for the Prevention of People Trafficking and People Smuggling, established by the Prime Minister, coordinates the implementation of the recent trafficking legislation and includes representatives from multiple government and law enforcement agencies, as well as NGOs. The Task Force held regular meetings and encouraged information sharing during the reporting period.(12, 33-35) The Task Force's Secretariat is spearheading efforts to develop a national strategy and action plan.(16)

The MLSS, the Deputy Prime Minister's Office through the National Children's Coordination Unit, the Department of Social Welfare and the Royal Swaziland Police Services are the federal agencies designated to enforce child labor laws.(4) The MLSS employs 32 labor inspectors and conducted 2,100 labor inspections in the formal sector during the 2012 reporting year. Child labor issues are included on the routine labor inspection questionnaire, but no violations were reported nor were any children removed or assisted as a result of the inspections.(4, 16, 22) However, child labor occurs primarily in the informal sector.(4) While complaints regarding child labor can be made to the above mentioned entities, reports indicate that a system to record child labor complaints does not exist.(22, 36) It is not yet clear what the role and impact of the establishment of a new Child Labor Unit under the MLSS will have on efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

Within the Royal Swaziland Police Service, the Domestic Violence and Sexual Offenses Unit is responsible for the enforcement of criminal laws relating to the worst forms of child labor, including trafficking.(37) The Sexual Offences Unit also includes child-focused resources, such as a child friendly interview room.(38) The ILO-IPEC provided some training for these enforcement agencies during the period, but these trainings did not include child labor issues.(4)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the Government worked with the ILO to revise its APEC.(4) The APEC, first developed in 2008, is intended to serve as the primary policy framework for the prevention and elimination of child labor, with the goal of eradicating the worst forms by 2015.(3, 39) As originally drafted, it included specific roles for the Ministry of Education and the MLSS to ensure its implementation in national institutions; however, the policy was never implemented.(4, 32, 36, 40) The new APEC is designed to improve implementation as a result of the passage of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act. The new APEC was drafted by the National Task Team and is currently awaiting approval by the Cabinet.(4, 22). This APEC focuses on six key areas: legislation and enforcement; empowerment of vulnerable households; education and training; public awareness and social community mobilization; withdrawal, rehabilitation, and social reintegration; and institutional capacity.(4) Although the Government has conducted general labor force surveys, the surveys did not cover child labor, and the Government has not made it a policy to collect data on the worst forms of child labor.(3, 41, 42)

Although the National Plan of Action for Orphans and Vulnerable Children (2011-2015) does not explicitly address child labor, it does include child laborers as among the most vulnerable children. The Plan has nine strategic objectives, including education, psychosocial support, child protection, and research and monitoring.(16) The Plan also supports orphans and vulnerable children's (OVC's) enrollment in school.(16)

Swaziland has a National Policy on Children (2009), a National Social Development Policy (2009), a National Development Strategy, and an Education Sector Policy (2011); however, the question of whether these policies have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.(27, 43, 44)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In the beginning of 2013, the Government expanded its Free Primary Education (FPE) program to all children in grades one through five. In the previous reporting period, the FPE only extended to children in grades one through three. The goal of the FPE is to extend free education to grade seven by 2015.(22) The Government also provided free textbooks to primary school students, supported school feeding programs, and paid the school fees of OVC.(3, 4, 15, 22, 37, 45)

With the enactment of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act as part of the National Policy on Children, the National Plan for Action (NAP) for Children (2011-2015) is currently being implemented. The NAP for Children covers children engaged in harmful, hazardous, and exploitative work.(22)

In 2012, Swaziland participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Swaziland, the project aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(46)

Swaziland

During the reporting period, however, the Government continued to suffer from the remnants of a severe fiscal crisis in 2010 and 2011 that impacted its ability to provide social services.(4, 47) As a result, resources allocated to education, the fight against HIV/AIDS, and social protection programs that may combat the worst forms of child labor are still limited, and existing social programs lack components on child labor.(4, 48) In 2012, the Government continued to experience issues with temporary school closings due to teachers strikes over pay.(49)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Swaziland:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Implement the Child Protection and Welfare Act and create a list of hazardous occupations.	2012
	Establish a compulsory education age that is consistent with the minimum age of employment.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Enact the Sexual Offenses and Domestic Violence Bill to further protect children from commercial sexual exploitation and prostitution.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Repeal 1998 Administrative Order, Act No. 6	2010, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor and clarify the role and report the activities of the Inter-Agency Task Force for the Prevention of People Trafficking and People Smuggling and other child labor-related entities.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Explore mechanisms to include the informal sector within the country's enforcement process.	2011, 2012
	Develop a system to record child labor complaints.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Pass and implement the revised Action Program on the Elimination of Child Labor.	2012
	Collect data on the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the National Policy on Children, the National Social Development Policy, the Education Plan, and the National Development Strategy and their impact on the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Expand and improve programs to combat the worst forms of child labor, including <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Integrate a child labor component into existing social programs to support vulnerable children; and • Prioritize spending on education and social protection programs to avoid disruptions of children's schooling, and increase efforts to provide free primary education for children beyond grade five. 	2010, 2011, 2012 2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, the United Republic of Tanzania made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched the National Costed Plan of Action for Most Vulnerable Children II (2013-17), which includes plans to provide social services to vulnerable children, including child laborers. The Government also expanded the Tanzania Social Action Fund's conditional cash transfer program, which demonstrated an increase in school enrollment and a decrease in child labor. Despite these efforts, an updated and comprehensive list of hazardous work activities prohibited for children has not been implemented in either the mainland or Zanzibar. Gaps remain in laws regulating light work for children 12-14 and children engaging in illicit activities. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in agriculture and fishing.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The United Republic of Tanzania (Tanzania) includes mainland Tanzania and the semi-autonomous archipelago of Zanzibar. Children in Tanzania are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, many of them in dangerous activities in agriculture and fishing. In mainland Tanzania, children cultivate coffee, sisal, tea, and tobacco.(3) In Zanzibar, they work in the production of cloves.(3-5) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(6) Although evidence is limited, reports indicate that children are involved in the production of rice and sugarcane.(3, 7-16) Children, especially boys, care for livestock.(14, 17-19) Along the Tanzania-Kenya border, Tanzanian children are found working as cattle herders.(20) Children herding livestock may suffer injuries from being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(21)

Children in Tanzania are engaged in fishing, including for Nile perch.(6, 22-24) They are susceptible to diseases from standing water and heat exposure and to injury from being entangled in nets and cleaning fish with sharp tools.(9, 22, 25) Children in fishing camps are also vulnerable to sexual exploitation.

Children work in artisanal mines and stone quarries.(26) They carry heavy loads and use dangerous tools to crush stones. They also work close to dynamite and in dusty conditions and suffer from diarrhea, typhoid, and other water-borne diseases.(25) Children mining gold and Tanzanite work without safety gear and are exposed to crime, drugs, and alcohol in mining zones.(27, 28) Some children are also found in commercial sexual exploitation in mining camps.(27) Although extent of the problem is unknown, children in Tanzania reportedly make gravel and may use sharp tools to cut stones.(29) Although information is limited, there are reports that children work in the manufacturing, construction, and transportation sectors.(16)

Girls are commonly employed as domestic servants.(6, 30-32) They are sometimes forced to work long hours and may be subjected to physical and sexual abuse. Girls fleeing abusive households may be vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation.(30, 33)

Some children in Tanzania work on the streets.(7, 15, 23, 31, 34) In Tanzania, children working on the streets are vulnerable to severe weather, traffic accidents, and crime.(23, 25, 35) In urban areas, they may sustain injuries from scavenging for scrap metal and other items to sell. Children selling food and other items in the streets are vulnerable to attacks from petty thieves.(7, 23, 31, 34). Some children may be forced by adults to beg or commit crimes. Children working as porters in markets are reportedly beaten, deprived of food, and shoulder goods over long distances.(35) Children in urban areas, primarily boys, work in informal garages and are exposed to dust, oil, grease, paint, and other substances that affect their skin and respiratory systems.(25)

In Zanzibar, children work long hours in the tourism industry as guides, street vendors, and hotel cleaners. Girls employed as cleaners have been used for commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 9, 30, 31, 33) Children in mainland Tanzania are also exploited in the sex industry within tourism areas along the Indian Ocean beach hotels.(36, 37) Girls involved in commercial sexual exploitation are vulnerable to sexual assaults.(18) They may also work as barmaids, serving alcohol until late at night and sometimes falling into commercial sexual exploitation.(23, 38)

In urban areas, children affected by HIV/AIDS are at increased risk of entering into the worst forms of child labor. These children may become the heads of their households or primary caretakers to a sick parent and work to supplement household income.(25)

Trafficking for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation is a problem in Tanzania, which particularly affects poor rural children trafficked internally. (3, 31, 33, 38, 39) Some Tanzanian girls are coerced into commercial sexual exploitation in tourist areas and are forced into domestic work and childcare.(33, 40) Children are trafficked for domestic service and sex work in surrounding countries, Europe, and the Middle East.(25, 33) Children from Burundi, Rwanda, and Uganda are trafficked to Tanzania including for fishing, domestic servitude, agricultural labor, and sexual exploitation, which includes commercial sexual exploitation in brothels.(33)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Tanzania's Constitution stipulates which laws apply across the entire United Republic; labor laws are not among them. Therefore, mainland Tanzania and Zanzibar have separate legal regimes governing child labor.(41-43)

Mainland Tanzania is subject to Employment and Labor Relations Act No. 6 2004, which prohibits the employment of children younger than age 14, except in the case of light work, and prohibits children younger than age 18 from working in dangerous environments. The law also establishes criminal penalties for anyone using illegal child labor or forced labor.(42, 44) The law does not include clear provisions regulating light work for children ages 12-14.(45)

The Child Act of 2009 harmonizes all laws of mainland Tanzania pertaining to children.(29, 46, 47) The Act prohibits the employment of children in exploitative labor in the formal and informal sectors and prohibits forced child labor, children working in hazardous work, and the sexual exploitation of children.(31, 47) The act defines exploitative work as that which deprives a child of his or her health or development, exceeds 6 hours a day, and/or is inappropriate to his or her age. The act includes an incomplete list of hazardous activities from which children in mainland Tanzania are prohibited.(48)

Zanzibar is subject to Zanzibar Employment Act No. 11 2005, which prohibits the employment of children under 17, except in the case of domestic work. The law also prohibits the employment of children younger than 18 in hazardous sectors; however, it does not include a list of hazardous work activities prohibited for children.(5, 44) The Zanzibar Children's Act of 2011 prohibits child labor and any work that would inhibit a child's ability to attend school.(17) The law is similar to mainland Tanzania's Child Act of 2009; however, no information was available on its implementation.

The Government maintains a list of hazardous types of work activities in both mainland Tanzania and Zanzibar, which includes fishing and other work identified in the country's most recent integrated labor force survey.(3, 29) However, the list has not been published in the government gazette or placed into law, as it is still pending the confirmation and signature by Ministry of Labor officials.(49-51)

The Sexual Offences and Provisions Act of 1998, which applies to mainland Tanzania, includes penalties for procuring a child younger than age 18 for sexual abuse, indecent exhibition, or sexual intercourse.(52, 53) The mainland Tanzania Penal Code also prohibits knowingly living off the earnings of prostitution and sets forth penalties for doing so.(54) The Penal Code of Zanzibar includes provisions relating to the worst forms of child labor.(5) Tanzanian law does not prohibit or establish penalties for the use of children for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.(48)

The Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2008 is applicable to both mainland Tanzania and Zanzibar.(31, 33) The law covers all aspects of trafficking in persons and considers trafficking of children to be "severe trafficking," a criminal offense with heavier penalties than those for adult trafficking.(55) Compulsory recruitment of children younger than age 18 years to the military is prohibited by law.(56) Tanzania has a voluntary recruitment age of 18, though children ages 16 and 17 may volunteer with the consent of parents, guardians, or, if orphaned, that of the local district commissioner.(56) The law does not stipulate any restrictions on children ages 16 and 17 engaging in combat and therefore, it is unclear whether this law is in compliance with the provisions of ILO Convention 182.

By law, education in both the mainland and Zanzibar is compulsory for children until the age of 15.(57) However, students or their parents are required to contribute money to cover school feeding programs as well as the construction of classrooms and provision of teachers' houses.(58, 59) These requirements may prevent some children from attending school. Corporal punishment in schools is lawful in Tanzania, and reports indicated that violence in schools may increase dropouts.(25, 60)

In addition to mainland Tanzania and Zanzibar's legal frameworks on child labor, some districts have incorporated restrictions against child labor into their local by-laws.(31, 61)

Institutional Mechanisms for Monitoring and Enforcement

The Prime Minister's Office—Regional Administration and Local Government (PMORALG) oversees the National Intersectoral Committee on Child Labor, which coordinates action to bring attention to child labor issues and strengthen local structures to eliminate child labor. Committee members include government ministries and NGOs.(31) The committee met once during the reporting period to circulate child labor policies and collect regional and district-level data on the prevalence of child labor. Twenty-three District Child Labor Committees are active at the district level.(16)

In mainland Tanzania, the Ministry of Labor and Employment (Ministry of Labor) is responsible for the enforcement of child labor laws. As the lead agency on child labor issues, the Ministry of Labor works closely with the Ministry of Community Development, Gender, and Children; the Ministry of Home Affairs; the Ministry of Education; the Ministry of Agriculture; and the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare, as well as with PMORALG.(24, 30) The Ministry of Labor maintains a separate Child Labor Unit, which is responsible for enforcement of child labor laws at the national level.(16) During the reporting period, the Unit initiated three cases of criminal charges related to violations of child labor law.(16) No information was available on the Unit's budget during the reporting period. The Ministry also created the position of child labor commissioner, however, the position remained vacant during the reporting period.(24)

Tanzania

In 2012, the Ministry of Labor issued its annual labor administration and inspection report, which included data on the number of children identified and withdrawn from the worst forms of child labor, primarily from agricultural activities on tobacco farms.(16, 62) The report also summarized the Ministry's efforts to raise public-awareness. Inspectors conducted 2,401 labor inspections, issued 147 compliance orders, and brought 15 cases to court.(62) However, the number of child labor inspections conducted and violations found were not reported.

In addition to labor inspectors, the Ministry of Labor has a total of 71 labor officers in mainland Tanzania.(16, 17) Ministry of Labor regulations dictate that one or more labor officers must be assigned to each region. As of the writing of this report, labor officers were not assigned to four regions in Tanzania.(16, 31, 63) The Ministry of Community Development, Gender, and Children and the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare are responsible for the district-government-employed community development officers and social welfare officers who monitor child labor at the district and village levels and report findings to PMORALG.(24, 30)

Zanzibar's Ministry of Labor, Economic Empowerment and Cooperatives is responsible for enforcing the archipelago's child labor laws.(30, 63) The Labor Commission, under the Ministry of Labor, Economic Empowerment and Cooperatives, is responsible for matters related to labor inspections.(63) Information on the number of labor inspectors in Zanzibar was unavailable. The Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth Development in Zanzibar is responsible for all child protection issues and has created a separate Child Protection Unit.(30) In some districts, the police, social welfare and education officers, magistrates, and health workers improved child protection systems to expedite processing cases related to children.(64) Information is not available on the effectiveness and prevalence of these systems in the country.

In both the mainland and Zanzibar, the police investigate cases of child labor reported to police stations, and in some cases, refer them to labor officers or solicit the assistance of social welfare officers.(7, 30) Child labor cases are usually resolved by district courts, and children engaged in exploitative labor are referred to social welfare officers for services and support. The distance and cost of traveling to district courts may deter rural inhabitants from taking complaints to them.(7) Regulations passed in Zanzibar this year include a provision to establish the Zanzibar Dispute Handling Unit to mediate labor disputes in a similar fashion to the mainland Commission for Mediation and Arbitration.(17) However, no information is available on when the unit will be fully operational. Information was not available on whether any child labor cases were taken up in Zanzibar during the reporting period.

The Anti-Trafficking Secretariat and Committee is responsible for promoting, defining, and coordinating policy to prevent trafficking.(55) The Secretariat produced Tanzania's National Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan.(49) The Secretariat has not received a budgetary allocation for its assigned task to support antitrafficking efforts.(17, 30) The Ministry of Home Affairs is responsible for the enforcement of anti-trafficking laws. The Interpol Office of Transnational Crimes within the police force includes the position of an officer responsible for trafficking.(30) Focal points to handle child victims of trafficking are assigned in every police station.(45) The police also have an independent trafficking desk.(30, 43) New police officers, investigators, and prosecutors receive training on child labor and human trafficking.(17, 30) However, training is reportedly inadequate, as many police remain unaware of child labor laws and anti-trafficking laws. Information on whether trainings had been provided in 2012 is unavailable.(17) Child trafficking cases can be reported through the Interpol Office and NGO hotlines.(30, 31) The police anti-trafficking desk reported initiating one investigation involving child trafficking and confirmed two prosecutions in 2012. No convictions for child trafficking were reported.(16)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor for Mainland Tanzania (2009) names key stakeholders and ministries responsible for child labor interventions.(38) It proposes strategies for poverty alleviation, child labor monitoring and child protection. It also calls for capacity building for child labor law enforcement and evaluation of efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.(17, 30) Zanzibar also has a National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor (2009).(5) The plan authorizes the Zanzibar Child Labor Steering Committee, chaired by the Permanent Secretary of the Chief Minister's Office and composed of key officials from various implementing agencies responsible for child labor, to provide policy guidance on the national action plan. The Zanzibar Steering Committee exchanges information with the National Intersectoral Coordinating Committee in mainland Tanzania.(5, 30) District labor officers oversee the implementation of the national action plans in individual districts within mainland Tanzania and Zanzibar in partnership with education officers, social welfare officers, and women and child welfare officers.(5) The Government of Tanzania signed an MOU with the Government of Brazil to develop an implementation plan for the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor.(17, 65) Efforts to implement the plan have been stalled due to lack of funding.(16)

The National Strategy for Growth and Reduction of Poverty II contains provisions for improving literacy rates, promoting schooling for out-of-school children, promoting children's rights, and providing social protection interventions to assist vulnerable populations, which may include families of working children.(66) The Zanzibar Strategy for Growth and Poverty Reduction (2010-15) includes a number of specific activities to reduce child labor, including providing support for the rehabilitation and reintegration of children withdrawn from labor into the education system. It encourages district officials to adapt simple versions of child labor educational materials, establishes district-level child labor regulations, and strengthens the system for inspection and enforcement of child labor laws.(5, 67) There is no information on whether these activities have been budgeted or implemented. These poverty reduction plans are meant to contribute to the Government of Tanzania's National Development Vision of 2025.(5, 68)

A number of other government policies target child labor. The National Costed Plan of Action for Most Vulnerable Children II (2013-17) was officially launched during the reporting period.(69, 70) The plan, which includes child laborers among the most vulnerable children, aims to provide children with access to adequate care, support, protection, and basic social services.(69, 70) The National Employment Policy of 2007 requires the Government and partners to provide child labor guidelines and programs; the United Republic of Tanzania Child Development Policy has a goal of eliminating the worst forms of child labor; and the Zanzibar Child Protection Policy supports the Government's commitment to the Convention on the Rights of the Child. In addition, the National Social Protection Framework identifies child labor as a coping mechanism for families with economic risks and proposes strategies to improve sustainable livelihoods.(71-74)

Children involved in or at risk of becoming involved in child labor are identified by the Most Vulnerable Children Committees, which operate at the ward and village levels.(43)

Child labor committees also exist in some districts.(31) Districts are guided by the District Framework for Interventions on Child Labor in Tanzania, which outlines a strategic approach for district-based action against child labor.(29) Districts integrate child labor into individual district development plans and budgets, and many do this by promoting enrollment and retention of children in basic education and targeting vulnerable households in poverty reduction initiatives.(29)

The Ministry of Community Development, Gender, and Children developed a National Plan of Action to Respond to Violence against Children, which assigns responsibilities to various government agencies to address the problem and gives Most Vulnerable Children Committees, Council Multi-Sectoral AIDS Committees, and District Child Protection Teams the responsibility of implementing the plan at the local level.(25, 35) Information on the Ministry's 2010 Plan of Action to Combat Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children is not available.

The Primary Education Development Plan (PEDP) and the PRSP eliminated primary school fees in Tanzania.(52, 55, 75, 76) However, additional school-related costs increase the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

The Government has focused on training as a means to address child labor and developed a number of policies and institutions to support this effort. The Zanzibar Vocational Education and Training Policy (2005) promotes government and private job training and preparation for youth.(77) A Ministry of Education-managed alternative education program assists adults and children who have dropped out of school. The mainland Tanzania Complimentary Basic Education and Training program targets child laborers and provides child labor components in its curricula.(10) The Vocational Education and Training Authority offers skills and entrepreneurship training to rural populations and incorporates child labor targets.(5, 77-79) In 2012, the Government launched the third phase of PEDP, PEDP III, which includes the Ministry of Labor as a member of the Education Sector Development Program Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee. While PEDP III and the Secondary Education Development Program (SEDP) contribute to increased enrollments in schools, there was no mention of child labor in these plans.(65, 80) PEDP III and SEDP were launched in 2012 and their impact on child labor issues has not yet been assessed.

Tanzania

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government supports the 4-year, USDOL-funded, $10 million WEKEZA project, which began in December 2012.(16, 81) The project supports children and youth “at-risk” or engaged in child labor in the Tanga and Kigoma regions, including those in domestic service and commercial agriculture, and especially those working in the sisal and tobacco sectors. The project targets 8,000 children and 3,360 households with education and livelihood services.(81)

The Government continues to implement the 2025 Timebound Program on the Elimination of Child Labor and, with ILO assistance, has prioritized child labor in Tanzania’s Decent Work Country Program.(17)

Tanzania is also partnering with other UN agencies to address child labor. The UNICEF-supported Common Country Program (2011-15) recognizes child labor as a barrier to education and targets efforts towards achieving universal primary education in Tanzania.(82) The Government also teams with UNICEF to address the issue of violence against children, which may impact child laborers.(83) Government efforts to provide a secure and sustainable social protection system are supported by the One UN Program.

The Government supports a number of NGO-implemented programs to combat child labor. These programs include the PROSPER program, funded by the ECLT Foundation, which addresses forces that fuel child labor and strengthens local and national structures to achieve child-free tobacco production in target districts.(17, 51, 84) The Government also supports the provision of income generating activities, education materials, and other social services as a part of the Jali Watoto program.(17, 85) The Government provides logistical support to Fighting Child Labor in Zanzibar and Eradicating the Worst Forms of Labor in the Eight Mining Wards of Geita District, two EU-funded projects.(16) The Government also supported the Women Empowerment in Zanzibar program, which withdrew children from child labor and put them in school. The program ended in January 2012.(86, 87)

At the regional and policy levels, the Government of Tanzania participates in the East African Police Chiefs Cooperation Organization to strengthen regional cooperation and capacities among East African law enforcement authorities.(88) The Regional Program for East Africa covers 13 countries, including Tanzania and is funded with $38 million from the UNODC and other funding partners. The Program includes activities that support increased coordination in combating human trafficking.(88)

The Government has promoted nationwide enrollment in basic education, which involves community mobilization and increased budgetary allocations to local administrators to ensure that enrollment covers children from poor, vulnerable families.(89) The National Economic Empowerment Fund and Zanzibar Empowerment Fund support poverty reduction efforts at the regional and district levels, channeled through government and financial institutions in rural areas. The question of whether the Government’s basic education program and National Economic Empowerment Fund have an impact on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed.(29, 90) The Tanzania Social Action Fund provides grants and a conditional cash transfer program (CCT) to vulnerable populations, including children. During the reporting period, reports demonstrated an increase in child school enrolment as a result of the CCT.(63) CCT recipients in the Chamwino District reported an increase in school attendance and household savings and a decline in child labor.(91) Despite these reports, a formal study on the impact of this program on the worst forms of child labor has not been conducted.

The Government of Tanzania contributes funds to the East African Regional Training Academy for immigration officials, which provides instruction in anti-trafficking efforts.(48, 92) The Government signed an MOU with the IOM to further increase Government capacity to attend to the needs of victims of trafficking.(93)

The Government has not built on 2010 USDOL-funded efforts to address child labor in the fishing sector.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Tanzania:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Finalize and implement the hazardous list of work activities in Tanzania, which includes hazards in fishing and other dangerous activities identified by the Government.	2011, 2012
	Clarify whether the minimum age for military recruitment meets the standards established in ILO Convention 182.	2011, 2012
	Establish laws and regulations to control corporal punishment in schools across the country.	2012
	Establish penalties for the use of children for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Make available information on child trafficking violations and prosecutions in mainland Tanzania and in Zanzibar.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Conduct regular meetings of the National Intersectoral Child Labor Committee and Anti-Trafficking Secretariat and Committee and develop concrete goals for the committees to work towards.	2011, 2012
	Encourage Zanzibari labor officers to use their new authority to prosecute labor cases in order to identify and prosecute child labor cases.	2011, 2012
	Establish and assess the effectiveness of child protection systems.	2012
	Provide the number of inspections, violations of laws, and citations related to child labor, including the number of child labor cases prosecuted in Zanzibar.	2012
Policies	Ensure that child labor activities in the Zanzibar Strategy for Growth and Poverty Reduction are budgeted for and implemented and that information on the activities is made available.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that the Plan of Action to Combat Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children is implemented and information on its activities made available.	2010, 2011, 2012

In 2012, Thailand made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Ministerial Regulation on Labor and Welfare Protection for Domestic Workers, which offers protections to child domestic workers, including setting the minimum age for domestic work at 15 years. The Government also updated the list of hazardous occupations and working conditions prohibited to children and increased the minimum age for children to work in sea vessels from 16 to 18. In addition, the Government announced a new provision to extend healthcare benefits for all Thai and migrant women and children, including free healthcare for children, and continued to participate in a project to eliminate child labor in the shrimp and seafood processing industry. However, enforcement of child labor laws continues to be weak and the Government lacks current nationwide data on child labor. Children continue to be engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in hazardous activities in agriculture, and shrimp and seafood processing.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Thailand are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in hazardous forms of agriculture and in the shrimp and seafood processing industries.(3-5) Children working in agriculture are often exposed to dangerous tools and pesticides.(6, 7) Children may face such conditions in the production of sugarcane. There is also limited evidence that children face such conditions in the production of rubber, roses, and oranges.(4, 5, 8, 9)

Children process shrimp and seafood processing and are subject to long and late hours, in difficult working conditions and engage in heavy lifting.(3, 4, 10)

Children also work at entertainment venues, restaurants, markets, and gas stations.(4, 12) In these workplaces, they may be required to work at night or for long hours and, in some cases, may be exposed to high levels of noise, dust, and smoke.(12)

Children, primarily girls, work in domestic service, and may face long working hours. In some cases, they experience physical and sexual abuse from their employers and confinement in the employer's home.(4, 5, 13, 14) Children also work in manufacturing, including garment production. They work long hours and operate dangerous machines.(4, 5, 15) Children are also paid to fight in a dangerous form of boxing called Muay Thai, in which they use knees, elbows, hands, and feet to fight, with no protective equipment.(17, 18) In urban areas, there are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(16)

Children in Thailand are found in commercial sexual exploitation, including pornography.(4, 16, 19) Children from

Thailand

Burma, Cambodia, and Laos are trafficked to Thailand for commercial sexual exploitation.(20) Children are also trafficked into Bangkok or other urban areas to sell and beg on the streets and to work as domestics.(4, 20, 21)

Ethnic minority, stateless, and migrant children are the most at risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in the informal sector.(4, 13) Most migrant children lack access to healthcare and other social services, which contributes to this vulnerability, as does the fact that many migrant children lack proper supervision while their parents are at work.(22, 23) Migrant children may be subjected to forced labor such as begging, selling flowers, agriculture, garment factories, shrimp and seafood processing, deep-sea fishing, and domestic service.(3, 4, 16, 24, 25) There is limited evidence that children work in conditions of forced labor in the production of salted vegetables, brass jewelry, and fish balls.(4)

Thailand continues to experience an ethno-nationalist separatist insurgency based in the three southernmost provinces, which have a majority Malay-Muslim population. Children, teachers, and other education personnel have been killed or wounded in the conflict, which has forced the intermittent closure of schools in the region.(26-28) NGOs have reported that insurgents have trained and used children in the armed conflict.(29, 30) There are also reports of children's involvement in village defense militias.(30)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Protection Act (LPA) sets the minimum age for employment at 15 and the minimum age for hazardous employment at 18.(31, 32) The LPA provisions on minimum age were recently modified to include domestic workers in third-party households.(4, 32)

The LPA outlines hazardous working conditions prohibited to children, including exposure to chemicals and heavy equipment. The LPA prescribes penalties for employing children under such conditions.(32) In addition, the Child Protection Act prohibits the employment of children in work that might cause them physical or mental harm or hinder their development. It also prohibits the use of children in begging, criminal acts, or any other exploitative activity, and imposes strict fines for any violations.(33)

During the reporting period, the Government updated the list of hazardous occupations and working conditions prohibited to children.(5) The updated list consolidates occupations and hazardous working conditions prohibited to children in existing legislation into one comprehensive list. In addition, the Government added children working on sea fishing vessels.(5) The updated list is meant to serve as a consolidated tool for labor inspectors to use in their efforts to detect and address cases of child labor and also as the basis for raising awareness on the issue.(5)

The Ministerial Regulation for the Protection of Workers in the Agricultural Sector permits children age 13 or older to engage in agricultural work during school vacation or non-school hours, as long as they receive parental permission and the nature of the work is not hazardous. However, the number of hours or the times of day permitted for children to perform light work in agriculture is not clear.(31, 34, 35)

The Occupational Safety, Health, and Environment Act establishes the Ministry of Labor (MOL) Occupational Safety, Health, and Environment Committee and authorizes the appointment of a Safety Inspector.(36) The Act requires employers to provide protective equipment and occupational safety and health training for workers throughout the supply chain.(36) This Act impacts workers in all sectors, including children of legal working age in sectors such as shrimp and seafood processing, and penalizes employers who employ children under hazardous working conditions with a monetary fine and/or imprisonment.(5)

The Ministerial Regulation on Sea Fishing Vessels was approved by the Cabinet in 2012 and, as of this writing, was to be officially announced in the Royal Gazette in 2013. Consistent with the hazardous list of occupations and working conditions, this regulation increases the minimum age for children to work in sea vessels from 16 to 18 years.(5)

In 2012, the Government passed the Ministerial Regulation on Labor and Welfare Protection for Domestic Workers, which offers protection to domestic workers in third-party households. This regulation includes coverage for child domestics, sets the minimum age for domestic work at 15 years, prescribes weekly and annual holidays, and prohibits sexual harassment and gender discrimination in domestic service.(4) However, the regulation fails to define the number of allowable working hours.(5)

During the reporting period, the Government ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, on a Communications Procedure, which allows children to bring a complaint before the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC).(5) The Government also agreed to participate in the Global Alliance against Child Sexual Abuse.(37)

The Prevention and Suppression of Prostitution Act establishes penalties for the sexual exploitation of children.(38) The Child Protection Act prohibits the involvement of children in illicit activities, including gambling and alcohol-related activities.(33) The Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act prohibits all forms of trafficking, including trafficking for the purposes of forced labor and sexual exploitation.(39) The Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act and the Penal Code specify penalties for violations involving the trafficking of children.(39, 40)

The Constitution prohibits forced labor.(41) According to the Military Service Act, the age of voluntary and compulsory military recruitment is 18.(42) Furthermore, a ministerial regulation prohibits children under age 18 from taking part in village defense trainings.(43)

Education is compulsory until age 15 for both Thai and migrant children. The Constitution entitles all children to free education until grade 12.(3, 41) However, access to education, particularly for migrant and ethnic minority children, is limited by a variety of factors. These factors include a lack of awareness among local government officials and migrant families of migrant children's right to education; class instruction only in the Thai language; long distances to school; the costs of school lunches; burdensome student registration requirements; and pressure from families for children to work rather than attend school.(23, 30, 37, 44-46) In early 2012, the Government approved the Ministry of Education's Ministerial Regulation on Migrant Learning Centers. The regulation legalizes the provision of formal and nonformal basic education by nongovernmental organizations and/or individuals to undocumented and non-Thai persons in migrant learning centers.(5) The regulation states that each student must meet certain criteria to receive a certificate of completion from the Ministry of Education. The Government has committed to provide management, technical, and financial support through subsidies to the migrant learning centers.(5) Formerly, instruction could only be provided by government schools. This regulation will improve access for migrant children to education, including in their native languages.(5)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Committee to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor coordinates the implementation of child labor policies and plans, facilitates cooperation among various coordinating ministries and reports semi-annually to the Thai Cabinet on child labor issues.(16) The National Committee is chaired by the MOL, with representation from other government agencies, employer and worker associations, and civil society groups.(47) In addition, the National Committee oversees three subcommittees: a subcommittee that monitors the National Policy and Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2009-2014); a subcommittee that updates the list of hazardous activities related to the worst forms of child labor; and a sub-committee that works on key performance indicators to measure and eliminate the worst forms of child labor.(16, 48) During the reporting period, the subcommittees collected and presented performance data on implementation of the National Policy and Plan; updated the list of hazardous activities related to the worst forms of child labor; and developed a situational analysis on the worst forms of child labor in Thailand.(5)

As part of the MOL, the Department of Labor, Protection, and Welfare (DLPW) enforces labor laws, including child labor laws, through workplace inspections.(4, 16) In 2012, the DLPW's operational budget for the labor inspectorate was $398,513.(5) The DLPW employed 678 labor inspectors, a number that the Government recognized as insufficient to adequately monitor all workplaces covered by the law. To address this issue, the DLPW authorized the Thai Police and Thai Navy (in the case of sea fishing vessels) to conduct labor inspections.(5) The DLPW reported that, in addition to regular annual training, 212 labor inspectors participated in training specifically on the worst forms of child labor.(5)

Also in 2012, DLPW labor inspectors inspected 549 workplaces specifically for child labor violations and found 29 workplaces that were in violation of the law. The violations included failure to pay holiday wages or to keep written records of wage payments and timesheets.(5) No further information was available about penalties, if any, for these violations.(5) The DLPW continued to prioritize inspections in the garment, seafood and seafood processing industries, and, to a lesser extent, in small and unregistered businesses. The MOL also reported that it targeted inspections in workplaces with high concentrations of illegal migrant laborers and working children ages 15 to 17.(16, 49) During the reporting period, the MOL publicly announced that employers found illegally deducting wages of migrant workers or employing children under age 15 will be subject to immediate prosecution and required to pay back wages.(50) However, few Thai labor inspectors speak migrant or ethnic minority languages, which may impede their ability to conduct adequate inspections.(4, 51)

The MOL used the Child Labor Protection Action Network (CPAN) as another mechanism for oversight of labor violations. The 45,875-person network is composed of government agencies, NGOs, employers, academics, and community groups.(48, 52) Its purpose is to raise awareness, disseminate information, and provide a mechanism for reporting labor violations.(5) During the reporting period, the DLPW trained 8,060 members of CPAN on identifying child labor violations and reporting them to the DLPW.(5)

The MOL operates a 24-hour telephone hotline to receive complaints from the public about labor violations, including child labor. The Ministry of Social Development and Human Security (MSDHS) operates a separate hotline that also receives complaints from the public about trafficking in persons violations, including child pornography and human trafficking.(24) The Government expanded the list of Burmese interpreters to provide interpretation services for the trafficking hotline.(37, 53) In general, however, international organizations and NGOs believe labor law enforcement is weak and workers lack an adequate grievance mechanism to report violations, particularly in remote areas and in the informal sector.(5)

The Anti-Trafficking in Persons Committee (ATP) and the ATP Coordinating and Monitoring Subcommittee, each chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister, are Thailand's main trafficking coordinating mechanisms.(24, 54, 55) The ATP has multiple subcommittees that cover a range of topics, including data collection and implementation of the national anti-trafficking policy.(56) The various subcommittees meet regularly.(49) In 2012, the Government of Thailand allocated $3.7 million to support Anti-Trafficking in Persons (TIP) activities, and over $5.1 million to support these activities in FY13.(5, 50, 57) Of this $5.1 million, $1 million will be allocated to the Anti-Human Trafficking Division (AHTD) of the Royal Thai Police.(5)

AHTD and the Department of Special Investigations (DSI) of the Ministry of Justice have 300 officials and 20 officials, respectively, who are responsible for enforcing laws specifically related to child forced labor, trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation.(48) In 2012, the Royal Thai Police identified 305 cases of trafficking, a more than three-fold increase from 2011. These trafficking cases included 226 prostitution cases, 36 forced begging cases, and 43 forced labor cases.(58) The number of children involved in these cases, however, is unknown.

During the reporting period, 56,423 police officers nationwide continued to participate in workshops on anti-trafficking. The workshops focused on the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act and the new Preliminary Trafficked Victims Identification Process (PVIP).(59) In 2012, the Immigration Bureau standardized the screening process for potential trafficked victims (the PVIP) at provincial immigration offices, and now require these offices to conduct PVIPs without delay. In addition, the process is now conducted in collaboration with local interpreters, further increasing its effectiveness.(59) During the reporting period, immigration offices interviewed a total of 397,167 individuals, and identified 57 individuals as trafficking victims.(59) Again, however, the number of children among these victims is unknown.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The National Policy and Plan (NPP) to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor 2009-2014 is Thailand's comprehensive policy framework to address the worst forms of child labor.(3, 16, 49) It is designed to protect both Thai and non-Thai children. The strategy aims to prevent, protect, and withdraw children from the worst forms of child labor, improve legislation and law enforcement related to the worst forms of child labor, and build the capacity of officials who administer policies and programs on the worst forms of child labor.(3, 16, 49) There are five key performance indicators intended to measure the success of the NPP. These indicators include a reduction in the number of children engaging in the worst forms of child labor; increased efforts to remove children from the worst forms of child labor; increased criminal prosecutions against employers who exploit children; increased capacity and knowledge of practitioners working in this field; and increased national- and provincial-level administrative and management efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.(4) During the reporting period, the DLPW held consultations with relevant agencies on these performance indicators. The DLPW planned to begin to collect data on these indicators in mid-2013.(5)

During the reporting period, part of the Government's budget of $2.7 million assigned to the NPP was used by the various subcommittees to update the list of hazardous occupations and working conditions prohibited to children, and to provide services to support over 96,000 anti-Trafficking in Persons activities, with more than 1.3 million beneficiaries.(5)

The Government's National Policy Strategies and Measures to Prevent and Suppress Trafficking in Persons 2011-2016 is a comprehensive Anti-Trafficking in Persons Policy.(56) The Policy contains five strategies to be operationalized in annual action plans. The strategies are: prevention; prosecution; protection and assistance; development of policy and promotion mechanisms; and development and management of information.(60) The 2012 Anti-Trafficking in Persons action plan prioritized, among others, the following actions related to children: (1) victim identification; (2) investigation and prosecution of trafficking offenders and officials engaged in trafficking-related corruption; (3) labor inspection standards and procedures; (4) protection of workers in the fishing sector; (5) protection of migrant workers; and (6) ratification of the United Nations Convention on Transnational Organized Crime.(61) During the reporting period, the Thai Cabinet approved $5.1 million for the 2013 Anti-Trafficking in Persons action plan.(62) In addition, the Ministry of Tourism and Sports recently established a subcommittee to draft new measures to address child sex tourism.(63)

During the reporting period, the Government adopted the National Child and Youth Development Plan 2012-2016.(28) This plan is based on five main principles, among which include: the enforcement and implementation of the National Child and Youth Development Promotion Act of 2007 and relevant laws; the idea that every child and young person has the right to receive basic education of the highest quality; the notion that children and youth have the right to basic healthcare services with the highest standard; and the idea that children and youth have the right to play, rest, and participate in recreational activities.(50)

During the reporting period, the Government also announced a new policy to extend healthcare benefits to all Thai and migrant women and children, including free healthcare for children, pre-natal care for expecting mothers, vaccinations for children, and early child care centers.(5) In addition, the Government reduced visa fees for workers from Laos, Cambodia, and Burma to encourage workers to enter Thailand legally, and announced measures to register up to 200,000 children of migrant workers through the National Verification process, after which these children could gain legal status in the country.(23, 30)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government's National and Provincial Operation Centers for Providing Assistance to Women and Child Laborers implement the NPP. They also collect and disseminate information on the worst forms of child labor and report their activities to the National Committee.(4) In 2012, the Provincial Operation Centers removed 435 children from the worst forms of child labor. The DLPW trained 12,663 children and young workers on their basic labor rights under the LPA, ILO conventions, and other relevant Thai laws and explained how they could report child labor cases.(5, 48) The DLPW also held awareness raising events with 150,228 people in rural areas on the worst forms of child labor. DLPW worked with community leaders to organize meetings, at which their mobile units conducted community discussions on child labor and the worst forms of child labor, and explained how people could report these cases.(5, 48)

The Government continued to participate in a $9 million, USDOL-funded project to eliminate child labor in the shrimp and seafood processing industry. The project aims to strengthen policy frameworks to protect the rights of Thai and migrant children; assist the shrimp and seafood processing industry to comply with labor laws; and provide education and other services to at-risk children and families in the targeted areas.(3) During the reporting period, the project worked closely with the DLPW to design and adopt its 2011-2014 Child Labor Action Plan; the Ministry of Agriculture and Cooperatives' Department of Fisheries to develop guidelines on good labor practices for shrimp and seafood processing, as well as the fishing industry; and the Thai Frozen Foods Association, to launch its policy against child and forced labor.(5, 64-66) In addition, the Government participated in a multi-year, $3.67 million, UNODC-funded project to build the capacity of law enforcement officials in Thailand, Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam to identify and prosecute child sex offenders.(59, 67)

MSDHS' Bureau of Anti-Trafficking in Women and Children coordinates services to trafficking victims through the National

Thailand

Operation Center on the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking. The National Operation Center oversees 76 temporary Provincial Operation Centers for the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking and 9 long-term shelters.(5, 55) The Centers offer medical care, psychosocial services, education, and life skills education.(20)

In 2012, the Government worked with international organizations, universities, and NGOs to conduct baseline surveys on child labor in areas with high concentrations of migrant workers. The study found that child labor exists amongst both Thai and migrant children. As of the writing of this report, the study was to be publicly disseminated in June 2013.(5) Despite these efforts, the Government lacks current nationwide data on the worst forms of child labor.(4) In addition, current reporting and statistics on child labor often omit street children and migrant children.(30)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Thailand:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Clarify the maximum number of hours and the times of day that children age 13 to 15 may perform work in the agricultural sector.	2011, 2012
	Revise the Ministerial Regulation on Labor and Welfare Protection for Domestic Workers to define the number of allowable working hours for child domestics.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Improve mechanisms for labor complaints that workers can easily access to report labor law violations, particularly in remote areas and in the informal sector, including in shrimp and seafood processing.	2012
	Ensure, including through training, that labor inspectors speak migrant or ethnic minority languages useful for labor inspections.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide disaggregated statistics on adult and child trafficking victims.	2012
Social Programs	Reduce children's barriers to education by providing class instruction in the migrants' native language; increasing educational opportunities to reduce long distances to school; addressing the cost of school lunches; and simplifying student registration requirements.	2012
	Raise awareness of migrant children's right to education among migrant families and local government officials.	2012
	Initiate a national child labor survey.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that national reporting and statistics on child labor include children working on the streets and migrant children.	2012

In 2012, Timor-Leste made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed a new labor law that specifically prohibits forced labor and contains several provisions on light work, including an increase in the minimum age for light work from 12 to 13. The new law also provides protection for children working in family-owned businesses. The Child Labor Commission working group finalized a list of hazardous activities from which children would be prohibited and submitted it to the Council of Ministers for approval. However, Timor-Leste still lacks a mechanism to fully coordinate all Government efforts to combat child labor. Furthermore, the Government has not established any programs targeting the worst forms of child labor, which are needed especially for children in agriculture. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in Timor-Leste, particularly in dangerous activities in agriculture.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Timor-Leste are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, many of them in dangerous activities in agriculture.(3-7) Within agriculture, many children cultivate and process coffee, especially on family farms.(4, 7-9) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous machinery and tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(5, 6) Although evidence is limited, there are reports that children also work in fishing.(8) Children working in fishing may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(5, 8, 10)

Children are also engaged in domestic work.(7) These children may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(5, 11)

In a few cases, families place their children in indentured servitude or bonded labor in order to settle outstanding debts.(12-14)

Limited evidence suggests that some children can be found in commercial sexual exploitation and may be trafficked for that purpose.(7, 9)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(7, 8)

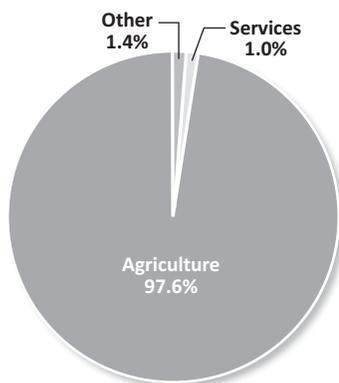

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code sets the minimum age for employment at 15, although the law creates exemptions for work done at vocational schools.(9, 14, 15) The exemption exists to allow children attending technical and artistic schools to engage in supervised, hands-on activities in school.(9) In addition, the Labor Code prohibits employing a child between ages 15 and 18 in work that jeopardizes his or her health, safety, or morals, but the Labor Code does not explicitly define hazardous activities or occupations from which children are prohibited.(15) During the reporting period, Timor-Leste's Child Labor Commission working group finalized a list of hazardous activities from which children would be prohibited and submitted it to the Council of Ministers for approval.(4, 7)

Likewise during the reporting period, the Government passed a new labor law that specifically prohibits forced labor and includes several provisions on light work. The law raises the minimum age for light work from 12 to 13 years, removes the previous exemption for children working for family-owned businesses other than farms, prohibits children from working at night, and sets the number of hours that can be worked to no more than five hours per day or 25 hours per week.(7, 16) In addition, the law provides a definition for light work that includes “not jeopardizing their schooling or participation in Government-approved vocational training programs.”(16) However, the law does not provide a list of activities that qualify as light work.(7)

The Law of Basic Education provides free and compulsory primary education for children for nine years.(7, 14) The Law requires children to start school in the year they turn 6, regardless of whether they have reached that age by the time the school year begins. As such, some children start school at age 6 and therefore finish at age 15, whereas children who begin at age 5 finish at age 14.(9) Because some children 14 years of age are no longer required to attend school and are not legally eligible to work, they may be particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

The Constitution, Labor Code, and Penal Code Article 163 forbid compulsory labor at any age.(9, 15, 17) Trafficking in persons is prohibited, and the Immigration and Asylum Act and Penal Code Article 164 stipulate aggravated penalties for those who traffic minors. Penal Code Article 175 also includes penalties for those who offer, obtain, seek, or deliver minors for purposes of child prostitution.(9, 12, 18) The Penal Code also prohibits child pornography and the use of children in illegal activities such as drug trafficking.(4)

The Labor Law prohibits forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict.(7) The minimum age for compulsory and voluntary recruitment into military service is 18.(19)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Child Labor Commission (CLC) is the primary body tasked with designing and developing policies on child labor. The Commission was created with the financial and technical assistance of the ILO and the Government of Brazil.(7, 20-22) The CLC is located within the Office of the Prime Minister, but is chaired by the Chief Labor Inspector of the Secretary of State for Vocational Training and Employment Policy.(9) The CLC comprises the Secretariats of State for Vocational Training and Employment Policy, Youth and Sports, and Promotion of Equality; the Ministries of Education, Agriculture, Finance, Justice, Health, Social Solidarity, Tourism, Public Works and Commerce, Industry, and the Environment; trade unions; the Chamber of Commerce and local NGOs.(9) The mission of the CLC is to recommend policies, raise awareness, and contribute to efforts to ratify the international conventions related to child protection.(4)

During the reporting period, members of the CLC participated in child labor conferences in both Mozambique and Guinea-Bissau.(7)

The Secretary of State for Vocational Training and Employment Policy (SEPFPOE) works in collaboration with the Ministry of Social Solidarity (MSS) and the National Police of Timor-Leste (PNTL) to enforce child labor laws.(7) In 2012, the total budget for the inspectorate directorate of SEPFOPE was $190,000 and included an allocation of $70,000 for labor inspector training. In addition, the office had two cars, one of which was inoperable during the reporting period.(7) According to SEPFOPE and the ILO the available resources are insufficient to adequately conduct inspections, particularly outside of Dili.(7)

In 2012, the Government employed 20 labor inspectors, and three had formal responsibilities both to investigate child labor cases and to enforce child labor laws. The ILO noted that this is an appropriate number of inspectors.(7, 9) SEPFOPE inspectors did not receive any specific child labor related training in 2012; however, in collaboration with the ILO-IPEC and the Brazilian Government, SEPFOPE plans to conduct a child labor specific training for inspectors in 2013. There was no information on whether this training occurred as of the writing of this report.(7) During the reporting period, SEPFOPE reportedly conducted 10 random and unannounced inspections of businesses in the formal sector and found no child labor violations.(7) The Government continues to lack a formal mechanism for filing complaints regarding hazardous and forced child labor.(13, 23) In addition, the inspectorate directorate does not publish data on the overall number of investigations.(3) Finally, research found no evidence that there is any governmental agency that supports the coordination of child labor enforcement efforts with the provision of appropriate social services for the victims of the worst forms of child labor.

The Inter-Agency Trafficking Working Group, chaired by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation, coordinates the Government's anti-trafficking efforts. The Trafficking Working Group also includes the MSS, Ministry of Justice (MOJ), the Ministry of Defense and Security, the Secretary of State for the Promotion of Equality, the SEPFOPE, and the immigration police component of the National Police (PNTL).(13)

The Ministry of Defense and Security oversees the Immigration Police, the Border Police, and the National Police Force, all of which work to enforce criminal laws against forced labor, sexual exploitation, and trafficking.(4, 7)

In 2012, three investigators from the PNTL's Vulnerable Persons Unit attended a UNICEF training on appropriately handling cases that involve children, including those children in the worst forms of child labor.(7)

The Vulnerable Persons Unit carried out three investigations involving children between the ages of 7 and 10 found in domestic service. The investigations resulted in the discovery of three violations and each of the children was referred to the MSS and returned home.(7) The three cases were referred to the Office of the Prosecutor General but legal proceedings had not started at the conclusion of the reporting period.(7, 9)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Timor-Leste Strategic Development Plan 2011-2030 includes short-term and long-term plans for the nation's development. Some of these plans include poverty alleviation and social transfer programs. The Plan also specifies commitments to improve the educational system over the next 20 years. The educational component of the Plan specifically addresses improvement of gender parity in primary schools and the prevention of school dropouts.(7, 24)

In 2008, in collaboration with the ILO and worker representatives, the Government established the Decent Work Country Program (DWCP). The Program prioritizes the improvement of youth employment conditions and opportunities.(25) In 2011, the Child Labor Commission began to develop a National Action Plan Against Child Labor.(4) The National Action Plan has not yet been completed, in part because the terms of reference of the CLC are pending approval.(9)

In early 2012, a National Plan of Action on anti-trafficking was presented to the Council of Ministers for review; however, no action was taken during the reporting period.(13)

Social Programs to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Timor-Leste supports the project for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(9) The main objective of the project is to contribute to the implementation of ILO C. 182.(4) The project has been instrumental in re-establishing the Child Labor Commission.(4, 9)

In 2012, the Government provided $15,000 in funds to a local NGO, PRADET, to support an as-needed shelter specifically to offer services for victims of trafficking; however, these funds were not used for this purpose due to a lack of victims. Instead, most of the funds were repurposed for trafficking awareness outreach, including to middle and high school age children.(9, 13) The Government funded a 2-day international conference on trafficking issues that was open to the public and delivered an anti-trafficking public service announcement through media outlets.(13)

The Government of Timor-Leste continued to fund and fully support the Mother's Purse (Bolsa da Mae), a cash subsidy provided to poor families with a female head of household, through the Ministry of Solidarity. The program aims to improve the well-being of children by conditioning the subsidy on children's school attendance and their regular medical visits.(7) The program serves an estimated 15,000 children. The Government supported a school feeding program to provide one hot meal per day to children in school, reaching around 325,000 students.(7) The question of whether these programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been specifically researched.

In 2012, Timor-Leste participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Timor-Leste, the project aims to build the capacity of the national Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor.(26)

While the Government has implemented programs that target vulnerable populations, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to specifically address the worst forms of child labor, especially dangerous forms of child labor in agriculture.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Timor-Leste:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Specify the activities considered "light work" in the Labor Code.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Approve the proposed list of hazardous work from which children are prohibited.	2012
	Establish a compulsory age for education that is equivalent to or greater than the minimum age for work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Ensure that there is a mechanism to support the coordination of child labor enforcement efforts with the provision of appropriate social services for victims of the worst forms of child labor.	2011, 2012
	Allocate enough resources to adequately conduct and carry out labor inspections.	2012
	Create a mechanism to file hazardous and forced child labor complaints.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Centrally track and publish the results of enforcement efforts, including labor inspections, criminal investigations and child victims assisted.	2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Complete and implement the National Action Plan Against Child Labor.	2012
	Approve and implement the National Plan of Action on Human Trafficking.	2012
Social Programs	Assess the impact that existing social programs may have on child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Institute programs to specifically address the worst forms of child labor, especially in dangerous forms of agriculture.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Togo

In 2012, Togo made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government intercepted a number of child trafficking victims and increased its prosecution of traffickers of children. With assistance from the ILO-IPEC, the Government continued to implement a child labor monitoring system, expanding into 48 new communities. However, the Government has not devoted sufficient resources to enforce its child labor laws effectively. Togo's social programs to combat the worst forms of child labor do not match the scope of the problem and rely largely on NGOs and international organizations for implementation. Children continue to work in dangerous conditions, especially in agriculture and domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Togo are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in agriculture and domestic service.(3-8) Almost 75 percent of all working children ages 5-14 are engaged in agriculture. Although evidence is limited, there are reports that children are found harvesting goods such as cotton, cocoa, and coffee.(2, 4, 9-11) Limited evidence suggests that children also herd cattle and produce beans and corn.(6, 11-13) Children working in agriculture may perform physically arduous tasks, risk occupational injury and disease from using cutting instruments, and exposure to insecticides and herbicides.(3, 4, 7) In addition, children working in agriculture may carry heavy loads.(6, 14)

Roughly 25 percent of working children are employed as domestic servants. The majority are girls ages 5 to 14.(2, 4, 10, 15, 16) Child domestics may be required to work long hours and perform strenuous tasks without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(6, 7, 17-21)

Children work on the streets as porters and small-scale traders.(3, 8, 11, 12, 22) Reportedly, these children carry heavy loads, which may cause severe lifelong back problems.(23) Children are also involved in commercial sexual exploitation and in the sex tourism industry in Lomé.(8, 24, 25)

Children are found in other activities constituting the worst forms of child labor, such as forced begging. The practice of sending Muslim boys to Koranic schools, or daaras, is a tradition in certain communities and is more common in Togo's Savanes region.(9, 11, 22) Some boys are forced by their teachers to beg in the streets.(8, 26)

Children in Togo are trafficked for forced labor in agriculture, domestic service, and commercial sexual exploitation.(8, 20, 26) In 2012, most children were trafficked from rural areas, especially from the Savannah, Plateaux, Centrale, and Kara regions.(27) Children in Togo are frequently trafficked to the capital, Lomé, for domestic service, market work, and commercial sexual exploitation.(8, 26, 28) The customary practice of confiage, which involves sending a child to a relative or friend for school, may place children at risk of exploitation by internal trafficking.(7, 17, 18, 26)

Children are trafficked from Togo to countries in West and Central Africa to work in agriculture. In addition, Children from Benin and Ghana are trafficked to Togo for forced labor.(26) Over the reporting period, increased efforts to secure the border between Togo and Benin appear to have reduced child trafficking to the east. However, as a result, child trafficking is reportedly on the rise along the western border.(27)

Although education is free and compulsory until age 15, access to education services is still limited in Togo.(11, 29) According to the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in 2012, there are not enough schools and many children in rural areas have no access to primary education. In 2007, the ILO reported that 39 percent of classrooms in Togo were considered in unsatisfactory condition, and children might enter the workforce at a young age due to the limited number of schools.(3, 7) In 2012, the CRC reported that half of all children in Togo are not registered at birth, despite government efforts in 2011 to register 140,000 children. Unable to prove citizenship, non-registered children are vulnerable to trafficking and may have difficulty accessing health and education services.(2, 7, 30)

In 2012, the CRC reported that sexual harassment and rape of girls in school is widespread throughout Togo.(7) According to the UN, victims of sexual violence in schools often have extended absences or drop out.(31) Reports also indicate that girls perform domestic duties, such as fetching water and laundry, for their schoolteachers.(32)

The Labor Code of 2006 sets the minimum age for employment at 15.(33) Law 1464 sets the minimum age at 18 for certain industrial and technical employment, including hazardous work. Law 1464 and the Labor Code also prohibit excessive work hours and night work for children.(33, 34) However, these laws do not establish penalties for employing children in hazardous child labor, including work at night.(11, 33, 34) In addition, according to the CEACR, although Law 1464 prohibits children from work that may harm their health, safety, or morals, the law also explicitly authorizes children 16 and above to operate dangerous tools such as winches and pulleys and to push heavy loads by wheelbarrow.(5, 7)

The Labor Code prohibits forced labor and the worst forms of child labor as defined in ILO Convention 182.(33) The Labor Code does not define forced labor and does not impose penalties sufficient to deter it. Violators of the Labor Code's forced labor provisions can receive 3 to 6 months' imprisonment, which can be doubled if it is a repeat offense, and a fine.(33)

The Child Code of 2007 further defines the worst forms of child labor, stiffens penalties for noncompliance with the minimum age law, and prohibits the trafficking of children as well as the recruitment of children into armed conflict and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The commercial sexual exploitation of children includes child pornography and child sex tourism.(11, 35) The Law for the Repression of Child Trafficking and the Child Code prohibit the trafficking of children and establish penalties for violations.(35, 36)

Decree 2008-129 established the right to free and compulsory primary education until age 15; however, in practice, the costs of uniforms and books prohibit many families from sending their children to school.(11, 29, 37, 38)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

In 2001, the Government created the National Steering Committee for the Prohibition and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor to coordinate and supervise national efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. The Child Labor Unit of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) acts as its secretariat.(3, 9, 12, 13, 39) The National Steering Committee's responsibilities include promoting child labor legislation, mobilizing resources, and collecting data. However, its actions to date have been limited to evaluating and approving NGO action programs to eliminate child labor.(13, 39) Members of the National Steering Committee attribute this shortcoming to their lack of financial resources. Its secretariat, the Child Labor Unit, is understaffed and has no budget.(3, 39)

At the regional level, child labor committees coordinate child labor efforts and raise awareness. These committees operate in a majority of Togolese villages and include representatives from several ministries, the National Council of Employers, unions, and NGOs.(9, 13, 27, 30, 40) Child labor committees coordinate efforts by sharing information with officials in Lomé about trafficking trends. Child labor committees also work with the Ministry of Social Action and National Solidarity (MASSN) to track the return of trafficking victims.(27, 30, 39)

The National Committee for the Reception and Social Reinsertion of Trafficked Children (CNARSEVT) is the focal point for trafficking information and statistics, and it coordinates actions against the worst forms of child labor. The MOL's Child Labor Unit is responsible for assisting CNARSEVT.(3, 9, 30)

The MOL is also responsible for enforcing all labor laws, including child labor laws. At the local level, parent and student associations and village development committees also monitor the child labor situation.(13) In 2012, the MOL employed 75 labor inspectors, which was an increase from 62 inspectors employed the previous year.(41) However, the MOL acknowledges that funding for inspectors is insufficient. According to the UNICEF and several NGOs, inspectors do not devote enough time to the enforcement of child labor laws.(41) Further, information is not available on the number of child labor investigations conducted by the Government in 2012.(27)

The Ministry of Justice, the MASSN, and the police's Child Protection Unit (CPU) are responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. The MASSN maintains two social workers on call 24 hours a day to assist trafficking victims.(9, 40, 42) The CPU—which consists of five police officers, two social service agents, a nurse, eight prison guards, and one psychologist—manages child trafficking cases and, with the assistance of the Ministry of Justice, refers trafficking victims to appropriate services.(22, 42) The CPU lacks resources to conduct investigations, and its employees must respond to calls in taxis and personal cars.(43) Further, knowledge of the different laws protecting children among law enforcement personnel varies from region to region. Reportedly, staff members in some regional offices do not have copies of many child labor laws.(13)

In 2012, the Government reportedly intervened on behalf of 717 victims of child trafficking: 432 girls and 285 boys. Most of these children were intercepted prior to reaching their destination. This is an increase from 2011, when the Government reported 281 victims of child trafficking.(23, 27) During the reporting period, police arrested 290 child traffickers, a significant increase from the 23 arrested the previous year. Of these, 104 child traffickers were prosecuted.(23, 27) However, research did not uncover additional information on the results of these prosecutions. The Government does not publish information on penalties for child traffickers.(27)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The National Strategy on Eliminating Child Labor through Education, Training and Apprenticeship (2006) is the primary government policy instrument to prevent and eliminate child labor in Togo. This strategy supports universal basic education and education reform, and strengthens the capacity of parents and teachers to combat exploitive child labor through awareness raising.(3, 9, 39)

Togo's National Plan of Action on Child Trafficking calls for legal and health services, including providing meals and medical support for child trafficking victims and awareness-raising activities for local communities and border officials. The plan promotes the education of children and improvement of livelihoods for families, and calls for the establishment of structures to monitor the trafficking of children.(44)

The National Labor Policy aims to raise awareness among parents, employers, and community leaders on child labor; provide labor inspectors with additional training on child labor; and calls for the adoption and implementation of the National Action Plan on Child Labor.(45, 46)

Child labor concerns are also mainstreamed into national development agendas and key policy documents including the following: Togo's Education for All Program, Decent Work Country Program, Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper, and UN Development System Framework (2008-2012).(6, 13, 47-50)

The inclusion of child labor as a priority in development goals is an important accomplishment; however, some of the policies lack concrete action plans, including time frames and budgets, making it difficult to assess the ability of these policies to combat the worst forms of child labor.(44)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, Togo continued participating in the USDOL-funded, 5 year, $5 million Combating Exploitive Child Labor in Togo Through Education Project. Launched in 2007, this project withdrew 5,434 children and prevented 5,586 children from exploitive child labor in urban informal sectors, domestic service, rural agriculture, trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation.(45) The project assisted the Government in creating and implementing a Child Labor Monitoring System (CLMS).(41, 45) Roughly 2,000 community members were trained to help monitor and report potential victims, and this information is fed into the CLMS database for use by Regional Labor Inspectors and the CPUs.(41, 45)

During the reporting period, the CLMS identified 734 children (386 girls and 348 boys) at risk of or victims of the worst forms of child labor.(41, 45) In 2012, the CLMS expanded into 48 new communities. At the close of the project, a total of 158 communities were part of the CLMS.(45)

In 2012, Togo participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Togo, the project aims to build the capacity of the national Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor.(51) In addition, the project aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research and to strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(51) During the reporting period, Togo also maintained its engagement in two additional USDOL-funded regional projects, including a 4-year, $7.95 million project and a 3-year, $5 million project. These projects are designed to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in West Africa by strengthening sub-regional cooperation through the ECOWAS.(52, 53)

In 2012, the MASSN continued its campaign to disseminate the Child Code of 2007 and managed Allo 1011, a hotline to report child abuse.(9, 23, 26, 27) The MASSN continued managing the Tokoin Community Center, which receives victims referred by Allo 1011 and is used as a temporary shelter.(23, 26, 27) In addition, the Government standardized operating procedures for shelters throughout Togo to ensure that child victims receive appropriate care.(27)

During the reporting period, the Government continued to support a pilot project to prevent child labor and child trafficking by providing families with young children, identified as high risk, with cash transfers. The Government also expanded a free school lunch program from 40,000 students to 44,000 students.(23, 41)

Togo

Despite the initiatives described here, Togo's social programs to combat the worst forms of child labor do not match the scope of the problem and rely largely on NGOs and international organizations for implementation. As a result, many of these interventions may not be sustainable over the long term.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Togo:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended

In 2012, Tonga made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The lack of information regarding the worst forms of child labor in Tonga, may be an indicator of a small or hidden problem. The country has no laws specifying a minimum age for work or defining hazardous forms of work for children under age 18, leaving children unprotected from many types of labor exploitation.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is little information available about the extent and nature of the worst forms of child labor in Tonga. However, limited reports suggest that children may be engaged in agriculture and fishing.(3, 4) Children working in agriculture may be required to use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(3, 5, 6) Children working in fishing may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(3, 7)

There have also been a limited number of reports of children working as household domestics.(3, 8) They may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter.(9) Although evidence is limited, there are also some reports of children involved in commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 8)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Tonga has no laws specifying a minimum age for work or defining hazardous forms of work for children.(3, 4) There is no comprehensive labor code in Tonga, though the government is working with the ILO toward the establishment of a new labor law in 2013.(10)

Tonga

The Constitution of Tonga prohibits slavery and servitude.(11) The Transnational Crimes Act outlaws the trafficking of children.(3) The Criminal Offenses Act prohibits the procurement of any girl under age 21 for prostitution either within or outside the country.(12) The Act does not provide the same protections for boys under 21 but it prohibits “indecent assault” on both boys and girls under age 12.(3, 12) The Act was amended in 2003 to prohibit child pornography.(13) Tongan law also criminalizes the use of children as “involuntary agents” in illicit activities.(3)

There is no military conscription in Tonga. The minimum age for voluntary service is 18; however, with parental approval, children can enlist in the military at age 16 for noncombat positions.(14) Education is compulsory to age 14.(15)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of Tonga has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.(3)

The Ministry of Commerce, Tourism and Labor (MOCTL) is responsible for the enforcement of labor laws. The MOCTL’s business license inspectors look for children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in the course of their regular inspection duties.(3) If the MOCTL receives a specific report of child labor, the Chief Labor Inspector visits the site, conducts an investigation, and requests police involvement if necessary. There were no known cases of child labor reported or investigated during the reporting period.(3)

The MOCTL, the police, and the Immigration Department enforce laws related to forced labor, trafficking, the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in illicit activities. There were no known cases of child trafficking, child forced labor, commercial sexual exploitation of children, or the use of children in illicit activities investigated during the reporting period.(3)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There does not appear to be any Government research available on the worst forms of child labor.

The Government’s Strategic Development Plan (2009-2013) sets the objective of increasing the performance of technical and vocational education services and infrastructure in the country.(16) Priority is given to women and children to strengthen competencies in agriculture, horticulture, fishing, business and marketing, plumbing, carpentry, and motor maintenance.(17) Research did not determine the extent to which children who receive this training are protected from dangerous work, and the overall impact of this Plan on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

With funding from the Governments of Australia and New Zealand, the Government of Tonga continued to implement the Tonga Education Policy Framework during the reporting period. The main goals of the Framework are to build the capacity of the Ministry of Education, improve school quality, and achieve universal primary education.(3) The impact of this policy on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Although limited evidence suggests that there may be problems in some sectors, research found no evidence of any programs to address the worst forms of child labor.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Tonga:

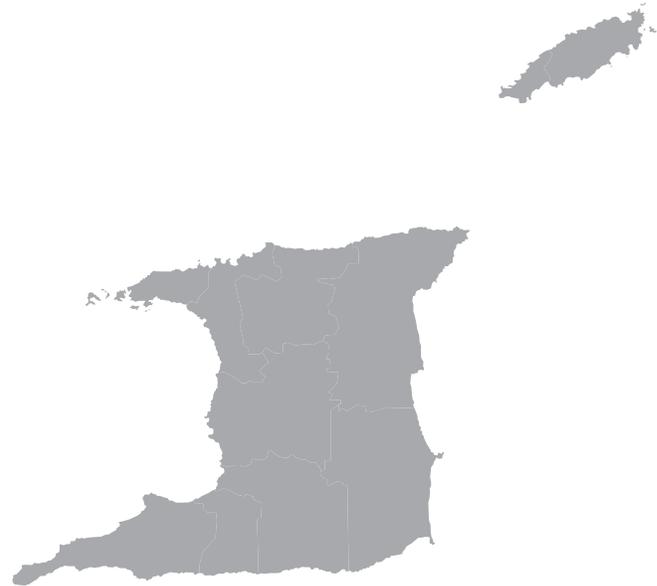

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Establish labor regulations that include a minimum age for employment of 14 years and a minimum age for hazardous work of 18 years in accordance with international standards.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Define hazardous occupations and activities forbidden for children.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend legislation to include boys as victims in prostitution-related crimes.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Conduct research to better identify the extent and nature of the worst forms of child labor in Tonga to design appropriate policies and programs.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that the vocational education curriculum under Strategic Development Plan Nine incorporates measures to protect children from dangerous tasks.	2011, 2012
	Assess the impact the existing policies may have on addressing child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Implement programs to address the worst forms of child labor in sectors in which they are occurring.	2010, 2011, 2012

Trinidad and Tobago

In 2012, Trinidad and Tobago made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Trafficking in Persons Act of 2011 was enacted, enabling enforcement officials to implement the law, and the Children Act of 2012 was adopted in an effort to strengthen legislative frameworks protecting the rights of children. The Government also created a Counter Trafficking unit to assist victims and investigate child trafficking cases. However, some policy gaps relating to child labor remain. The Government has yet to conduct the planned national child labor surveys to assess the prevalence of the problem and has not established a clear minimum age for hazardous labor. While the prevalence is thought to be small, reports indicate that children may be engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Trinidad and Tobago.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

While the prevalence is thought to be small, reports indicate that children may be engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Trinidad and Tobago. There is limited evidence suggesting that children are involved in dangerous activities within the agricultural sector.(3, 4) They may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(5, 6) There is also limited evidence indicating that children may also be engaged in prostitution and trafficked for sexual exploitation.(3, 7, 8)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Trinidad and Tobago's Miscellaneous Provisions (Minimum Age for Admission to Employment) Act (2007) sets the minimum age for employment at 16.(9) It also prohibits children younger than age 18 from working between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m., except in family enterprises.(10, 11) Current legislation does not establish a clear minimum age for hazardous work, nor is there a list of hazardous occupations, even though the Government has been developing one since 2004.(12, 13)

The Sexual Offences Act (1986), the Children Act (1925), and the Trafficking in Persons Act (2011) prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including prostitution and pornography.(14-17) The Trafficking Act also prohibits trafficking in children for the purposes of exploitation or use in illicit activities. This reporting period the Government enacted the Trafficking in Persons Act (2011), enabling enforcement officers to carry out and implement the law.(18) The Government also passed the Children Act (2012), which is meant to replace the current Children Act of 1925 and strengthen legislative frameworks that protect the rights of children. However, the Act has yet to be enacted.(4, 12, 18-21)

The Constitution guarantees the right to “life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law.” This appears to prohibit forced labor.(15, 22)

Trinidad and Tobago has no compulsory military service and the minimum age for recruitment to the armed forces is 18. However, those who are willing to join between the ages of 16 and 18 may do so with written approval from a parent or guardian.(23, 24) Although, in practice, children between the ages of 16 to 18 are not recruited, the Government is considering amending the Defence Act to set the minimum age for enlistment to 18.(25, 26)

The Education Act provides for free and compulsory schooling for children between the ages of 6 to 12.(4, 27) This leaves children between the ages of 12 through 15 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school and are not legally permitted to work.(13)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Steering Committee for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor coordinates government efforts in combating child labor. The Committee drafted a new National Plan of Action against Child Labor, but it has yet to be adopted.(4, 12, 28) The inter-ministerial National Task Force against Trafficking in Persons, established by the Trafficking in Persons Act, is responsible for coordinating efforts to combat trafficking in persons, preventing child trafficking, providing assistance to trafficked victims, and prosecuting traffickers.(14)

The amended Children’s Authority Act of 2008 empowers the Children’s Authority of Trinidad and Tobago to enforce all laws pertaining to children’s welfare, including prosecuting those who abuse or neglect children.(3, 29, 30) Under the legislation, the Children’s Authority was mandated to carry out several strategic objectives, including the coordination of social services, both preventative and curative, for all children and their families. Currently, however, the Children’s Authority is not operational.(3, 29, 30) The Government’s Child Protection Task Force was responsible for protecting children and educating communities about child abuse, including child labor. As of this reporting period, it is no longer operational.(3, 4, 10)

The Ministry of Labor and Small and Micro-Enterprise (MLSME), the Ministry of the People and Social Development (MPSD), and the police are responsible for monitoring and enforcing child labor laws. The Labor Inspectorate Unit (LIU) of MLSME investigates child labor violations in the workplace.(3, 4) It enforces hazardous labor laws through the Occupational Safety and Health Authority and forced child labor laws together with the MPSD. The LIU has 16 labor inspectors.(4) During the reporting period, the LIU conducted 1,291 labor inspections and identified no cases of child labor. Their annual budget was approximately $95,000 and general funding was provided for recurrent expenditures.(4) Resources are believed to be adequate for the scope of the problem.(4) Labor inspectors receive ongoing training on child labor and are able to carry out unannounced inspections when they have reason to believe children are working illegally.(4) However, employers are within their rights to refuse the inspectors entry into the workplace. If they do, inspectors must then apply for a warrant to enter and inspect the facility.(4, 18, 31)

The Trinidad and Tobago Police Service and the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions enforce all criminal laws, including the trafficking of children for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and engaging children in illicit activities, such as the sale of drugs.(3, 4, 7) The Counter Trafficking Unit was established this reporting period. Housed within the Ministry of National Security, the Unit is responsible for investigating trafficking cases, and for referring potential victims to shelters and social service providers.(4) There were some investigations into potential sex and labor trafficking cases, as well as the sale of illicit drugs, but none involved children. In 2012 there were no charges or prosecutions relating to human trafficking.(3, 4, 7, 18)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since 2006, the Government of Trinidad and Tobago has indicated their intent to conduct a National Youth Activity Survey. To date, however, the survey has not been carried out.(12) The Government has also indicated that it will use the survey results in the National Policy for the Prevention and

Trinidad and Tobago

Elimination of Child Labor, but until the survey is completed, the proposed Policy will remain in draft form.⁽¹²⁾ The lack of data collection on the nature and incidence of the worst forms of child labor precludes the development of policy and programs to address relevant child labor issues, including in agriculture and prostitution.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government has several programs designed to encourage children to remain in school, including a school meal program providing breakfast and lunch to children from low-income families, a book grant program, and a School Support Services

Program to aid high-risk students with homework, counseling, and other services.^(3, 4)

The MLSME continues to raise awareness about child labor and disseminates information on its negative effects through newspaper messages. The MLSME also transmits the information through its radio program, “Labor Link.”⁽⁴⁾

Suspected victims of human trafficking are offered some direct social services by the Government and through NGOs that receive government funding.⁽⁷⁾ It is not clear whether programs to address child labor in agriculture and prostitution are needed, despite limited reports of its existence, given the overall lack of information on these problems.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Trinidad and Tobago:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Clearly specify in the law a minimum age for hazardous employment and establish a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children under age 18.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Enact the Children Act of 2012 to ensure legislative frameworks protecting the rights of children are strengthened.	2012
	Raise the age of compulsory education to 16, the established minimum age for work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Operationalize the Children’s Authority, as mandated in the Children’s Authority Act of 2008, ensuring it is able to implement its strategic objectives and enforce all laws pertaining to children’s welfare.	2012
	Operationalize the Child Protection Task Force, ensuring that it is able to continue its protection and educational efforts against child labor.	2012
Policies	Adopt and implement a National Plan of Action Against Child Labor.	2011, 2012
	Conduct the planned National Youth Activity Survey to assess how best to address the worst forms of child labor in Trinidad and Tobago, especially in agriculture and prostitution.	2011, 2012
Social Programs	Assess the need to implement programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and prostitution.	2011, 2012

Tunisia

In 2012, Tunisia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Law enforcement dismantled a prostitution ring that recruited teenage girls, and the Penal Code was amended to provide for prison time and fines for persons convicted of recruiting children for “indecent behavior.” However, the country lacks a list of hazardous work forbidden to children, and child labor law enforcement has declined precipitously from the previous reporting period. Post-revolution Tunisia continued to face challenges in governance and political stability, which may have affected its ability to make progress on the worst forms of child labor. Children are reportedly engaged in the worst forms of child labor, but there remains a need for adequate data to determine the prevalence and nature of the problem.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Tunisia are reportedly engaged in the worst forms of child labor. However, the lack of official data and other information does not allow for an accurate assessment of the full nature and extent of the worst forms of child labor.

Evidence indicates that children work in agriculture.(3-5) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(3) According to a recent World Bank report, rural children in Tunisia are less likely than urban children to attend school past age 10.(6) Such children may be working instead of attending school.

There are reports that Tunisian children, mostly girls, work as domestic servants.(4, 7) Children employed as domestics may work long hours and are isolated in private homes, where they are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(3) There have been reports of girls trafficked internally to work as domestic servants or for commercial sexual exploitation.(7-9)

There are reports of children working on the street and along roadsides, but specific information about hazards is unknown.

Post-revolution Tunisia continues to face challenges in governance and political stability, which may impact its ability to make progress on the worst forms of child labor.(10, 11) Following the January 2011 revolution, Tunisia held elections that international observers deemed free and fair to seat a 217 member National Constituent Assembly, which is tasked with drafting a new constitution. While there were improvements in governmental transparency, political uncertainty exacerbated the country's poverty and unemployment.(6, 12) NGOs have reported anecdotally that child labor has become more pervasive and visible in Tunisia since the revolution.(5, 13)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Tunisia's Labor Code sets the minimum age for employment at 16, with some exceptions such as work in family run businesses. Children can also participate in light agricultural work from age 13 and in light industrial work from age 14, provided the work is not hazardous and does not interfere with their schooling.(14) The Labor Code and the Child Protection Code both bar children under age 18 from hazardous work. In addition, the Penal Code makes it a crime to engage children in commercial activities that harm their physical or psychological well-being or interfere with their education.(5, 15)

	Free Public Education	Yes

After an inspection of the workplace, the Government can authorize some children to engage in hazardous work from age 16 as long as the child's health is monitored and the work is paired with specific education and training.(16) The Labor Code gives the Ministry of Social Affairs, Solidarity, and Tunisians Abroad the authority to determine the hazardous jobs and activities in which children cannot engage.(14) However, this list has not yet been established. Children under age 16 are not legally permitted to work as domestic servants.(12) The Labor Code does not apply to the self-employed, thus it may leave children unprotected.

Education is compulsory until age 16.(5, 17) In addition, the Government of Tunisia provides free schooling beyond the age of compulsory education.(18)

Tunisian law forbids the use of forced or slave labor.(8) The Tunisian Penal Code proscribes capturing, detaining, or sequestering a person for forced labor.(9) An anti-trafficking bill was drafted in 2011, but it has not been passed into law.(11, 19) Child prostitution is forbidden under the Penal Code and the Child Protection Code, and the applicable provisions cover both girls and boys.(16) Tunisian law also criminalizes the production and distribution of child pornography.(16, 17) It offers further protection to children against forced begging and exploitation for illicit activities.(14) During the reporting period, the Penal Code was amended to provide for prison time and fines for persons convicted of recruiting children for "indecent behavior."(5, 12)

The Child Protection Code outlaws children's participation in wars or armed conflicts, and voluntary military service is set at age 18.(16) All male citizens are subject to compulsory military service at age 20.(20, 21)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Under the previous regime, the Government of Tunisia established a Child Protection Representative in each of the country's governorates to enforce the Child Protection Code.(16, 22) The Code places a special emphasis on situations that threaten a child's health or moral or physical integrity, including the worst forms of child labor. These Representatives are still in place under the auspices of the Ministry of Women.(12, 16) Nevertheless, there have been concerns that having only one delegate per governorate is inadequate.(22) Since the revolution, a new committee has been formed, called the Delegates Group for the Protection of Children, whose members are drawn from agencies within the Employment Department. This committee, headed by the Ministry of Social Affairs, is considered to be the coordinating body for Government efforts to combat child labor.(23) Reportedly, this committee did not conduct any activities during the reporting period.(12)

The Ministry of Social Affairs is also responsible for enforcing child labor laws through its inspectors, who collaborate with child protection officers and medical inspectors to identify and prevent the economic exploitation of minors. In addition, Tunisia's 380 labor inspectors collaborate with the General Union of Tunisian Labor to ensure that the Labor Code is enforced and that cases of child labor are reported and prosecuted.(11, 14, 22) Labor inspectors occasionally coordinated spot checks with Ministry of Education officials, while National Social Security Fund officials also inspected factories and industries for compliance with labor laws.(8) In 2012, the Ministry of Social Affairs reviewed 26 allegations of child labor, and while the majority of investigations revealed violations of child apprenticeship regulations, none of the cases were prosecuted, nor were any fines issued. In addition, there has been a steep decline from the previous year's enforcement figures of 485 complaints reviewed and 24 prosecutions.(5) No information was available on the level of funding provided in 2012 for child labor law enforcement.

The Ministry of Justice has established an interagency anti-trafficking in persons committee, which was made permanent in 2012. The committee submitted a draft anti-trafficking bill to the Constituent Assembly in late 2012.(5, 11) Also in 2012, the police broke up a sex trafficking ring that recruited teenage girls to prostitute in resort areas.(11)

Tunisia

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the rule of the Ben Ali regime, the Government of Tunisia did not develop any policies to combat child labor.(24) The new Government has acknowledged that child labor exists; however, authorities reportedly maintain that the problem is adequately limited by existing laws and social programs. No policies appear to have been developed to address child labor.(22, 24) The new Government has not conducted research to determine the extent and nature of child labor that may be occurring in the country.(5, 24) The Government has been upgrading its child protection database to collect information on 71 indicators, which would help identify reported cases of the worst forms of child labor. However, the list of indicators has not been formally approved, and the Government did not yet have systems in place for consistent and comprehensive data collection across relevant agencies.(25, 26)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Tunisia, in cooperation with UNICEF, continued its participation in a multiyear plan to promote quality education and achieve universal primary education.(12) The Ministry of Education trained truancy officers to look for signs that children are being compelled to perform domestic work instead of attending school.(11) The Government funds and administers a program to provide wage earning trade apprenticeships for youth ages 15 to 20, which offer an alternative to exploitative child labor.(17) The Government and UNICEF are also working with IOM to improve assistance for the particularly vulnerable children crossing the border into Tunisia from Libya.(12, 27)

The Ministry of Social Affairs implements a cash-transfer program for poor families and children on a case-by-case basis.(12) The World Bank-funded Education Quality Improvement Project, designed to facilitate the Government's efforts to promote primary and secondary education, concluded in September 2010. The Project boosted school enrollment and completion rates for children ages 6 to 18.(28) Research found no information suggesting that the Government had continued this program after Bank funding had ended. The question of whether these programs had an impact on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

The Government has undertaken activities to combat trafficking in persons through the Support and Handover of Assistance and Referral Mechanisms as well as the Exchange of Practices in Anti-Trafficking (SHARE) project funded by the USDOS to facilitate victim service provision, and has begun an awareness raising campaign to keep youth in school and discourage illegal migration that could lead to trafficking.(11) The Government also operated shelters that served street children.(11)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Tunisia:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Consider passing the drafted anti-trafficking bill into law.	2011, 2012
	Ensure that a list defining hazardous work is established and made publicly available.	2011, 2012
	Ensure protections for self-employed children to prevent their engagement in the worst forms of child labor.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Increase the number of Child Protection Representatives.	2009, 2010, 2011
	Ensure the Delegates Group for the Protection of Children is coordinating government efforts to address child labor.	2012
	Ensure that violators of child labor laws are prosecuted and punished.	2012
	Continue to make data publicly available on enforcement, and, in addition, publish information on the resolution of cases and the funding budgeted for enforcement activities.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Policies	Establish mechanisms for collecting data on indicators of child labor.	2012
	Conduct research on the worst forms of child labor to inform policy and programs.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Assess the impact that the education plan and project had on addressing the worst forms of child labor and consider continuing the project under Government auspices.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that other existing programs may have on addressing child labor.	2011, 2012

Turkey

In 2012, Turkey made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed a law that raised the age of compulsory education to 17 and conducted a national child labor survey. In addition, the Government increased the number of labor inspectors by 141 and began a new project aimed at building the capacity of local governments to address the issue of child labor. Although the Government supports a number of programs to combat poverty and address child labor, particularly in agriculture, there are no programs to combat child labor in industrial work or heavy and dangerous work in small- and medium-sized enterprises. Children continue to be engaged in the worst forms of child labor in dangerous activities in agriculture.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In Turkey, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous activities in agriculture. Children are involved in producing cotton, hazelnuts, citrus fruits, and sugar beets.(3-13) When harvesting hazelnuts, children do not wear protective gear and are sometimes cut by the dense bushes.(8) Although information is limited, there are reports that children are also found working in the production of legumes and cumin. Children working in agriculture may work long hours, lift heavy loads, and experience malnutrition, chemical exposure, and high levels of stress during periods of migration.(9, 13-16) Children may also face accidents including falling out of trees or under the weight of heavy sacks.(12, 13) With the exception of the hazelnut harvest, which occurs during school vacation, children in agriculture often migrate with their families for much of the year and may have limited access to health care and education.(4, 17-19)

Children also work in small- and medium-sized enterprises in carpentry, auto and shoe repair, food processing, and the production of furniture. Although the extent of the problem is unknown, there are reports that children are also found working in the worst forms of child labor in the production of bricks, leather goods, shoes, and textiles.(3, 20) Children working within these sectors may have to endure long working hours and work with dangerous tools, machinery, or chemicals.(3, 20, 21) In the furniture repair industry, children are exposed to dangerous chemicals and machinery.(17) The majority of child laborers are employed in small enterprises that have between one and nine workers.(17)

Both the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions have reported that children engage in dangerous work on the streets.(17)

Children are trafficked into Turkey from the former Soviet states for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(22-24) Among commercially exploited children, boys are reportedly picked up in tourist areas and train stations.(23) There is also evidence of sexual exploitation of children by criminals. These criminals also reportedly exploit children in the drug trade.(20, 25)

There are reports of children recruited by Kurdish militant groups that have been fighting for equal rights in Turkey for nearly three decades, although a cease fire declared in early 2013 remained in effect as this report went to press.(26-28)

Education in Turkey is free and compulsory.(21) Children who migrate within Turkey for seasonal agricultural work often have limited access to education.(14, 17, 20) Roma children often lack personal identification documents and, as a result, are excluded from public services including education, which may increase their risk of working in the worst forms of child labor.(22)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Turkey's Labor Law sets the minimum age for work at 15.(29) The Regulation on the Principles and Procedures Governing the Employment of Children and Young Workers, published in Gazette No. 25425 (April 2004), lays out a list of light work acceptable for children age 14, including selling newspapers, magazines, and flowers.(30) The Labor Law and Regulation on Heavy and Dangerous Work restricts children age 15 and 16 from work considered dangerous. Youth age 17 that have graduated from schools providing technical specialization can be employed in hard and dangerous work appropriate to their profession provided that their health, safety, and morality is guaranteed.(29) These include the production of ceramics, glass, iron bars, plastics, tile, bricks, and pipes.(31, 32) The Regulation on the Principles and Procedures Governing the Employment of Children and Young Workers lays out a separate list of hazardous occupations prohibited to all children under age 18, including those enumerated in the Regulation on Heavy and Dangerous Works.(30, 33)

Labor Laws do not cover agricultural enterprises employing 50 or fewer workers and small shops employing up to three persons, environments in which many children work.(14, 29, 34) These gaps in the Labor Law leave children vulnerable to dangerous labor conditions without legal protection.

Over the reporting period, a Labor, Health, and Safety Law passed, which supersedes protections provided for in the Labor Law, requiring further safety and health standards with which all employers must comply.(21, 35) The new law covers health and safety standards for all workers over age 15 and all sectors (with the exception of domestic work), including agricultural enterprises employing 50 or fewer workers and small shops employing up to three persons. The Health and Safety Law does not address prohibitions on child labor.(21, 35)

Turkey prohibits forced or compulsory labor, including by children.(20) The Turkish Penal Code prohibits prostitution for persons under age 18 and the sexual exploitation of children in the production of pornography.(23) The Code also outlaws trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labor.(23, 36) The age for military recruitment is 19.(37)

The Government lacks protections for children involved in domestic service and street work.

On March 30, 2012, Turkey passed a law that increased the period of compulsory education from 8 to 12 years.(9, 18, 21)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Disadvantaged Groups Department (DGD) of the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOLSS) is the primary agency coordinating the child labor efforts of the Ministry of Education, the Child Services Directorate General in the Ministry of Family and Social Policies (MFSP), the Ministry of the Interior, the Ministry of Justice, and NGOs. The DGD acts as the secretariat of the National Guidance Committee, which monitors child labor and Government efforts to combat the problem.(3, 38) The Child Services Directorate General within the MFSP coordinates services for children living and working on the streets.(5, 21)

Turkey

Within the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, an ambassadorial-level official serves as coordinator of the Government's Task Force on Human Trafficking. This task force includes officials from six ministries as well as representatives from NGOs, the IOM, and municipalities.(39)

The MOLSS conducts labor enforcement in workplaces that are covered by the Labor Law, including medium- and large-scale industrial and service sector enterprises.(20) MOLSS inspectors are responsible for enforcing child labor laws and are instructed to prioritize complaints alleging child labor.(40) There are 958 labor inspectors authorized to conduct inspections on child and adult labor, and in 2012, 141 additional assistant labor inspectors were selected to start work in 2013. While the number of inspectors is still considered too low to enforce all of Turkey's labor laws, the Government has made a significant effort to meet the demand, nearly doubling the size of the labor inspection force since 2008.(36) Labor inspectors receive training on child labor issues, and the ILO handbook on child labor prevention is included in the inspectors' training materials.(5, 41) In 2012, 37,522 inspections were conducted involving 2,014,931 workers, including 5,958 children. Of those, 67 children were under the legal working age.(21) Child labor penalties were levied on the 67 violations; however, there is no information on the extent to which these fines were collected. Labor inspection data regarding child labor is published in annual reports of the Labor Inspection Board.(21)

Complaints about child labor can be made by phone to a hotline operated by the Directorate General of Child Services within the MFSP or through the Prime Minister's Office Communications Center Web site.(3)

The Turkish National Police (TNP), the Ministry of Justice, and the MFSP are responsible for enforcement of criminal laws against forced child labor, trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and using children in illicit activities.(21) The TNP employs 3,500 officers tasked with addressing children's issues.(40) These officers handle all issues related to the treatment and protection of children but do not have a specific unit focused on child labor exploitation.(40) The TNP also investigates cases of human trafficking.(36) The Ministry of Justice, the TNP, and MOLSS provide anti-trafficking training to their employees.(36) These agencies then refer child victims to MFSP services.(21) The Ministry of Justice reported 78 new trafficking investigations during the period of January through September 2012. The government prosecuted 226 defendants under Article 80, which prohibits both sex trafficking and forced labor, and convicted 47 trafficking offenders.(42) It is unclear how many of these cases involved child victims.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The MOLSS, through the National Steering Committee, is the coordinating institution for Turkey's National Timebound Policy Framework, which aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015.(21, 43) The Policy Framework prioritizes reducing poverty, improving the quality and accessibility of education, and increasing social awareness and sensitivity to child labor.(3, 21) It focuses on the worst forms of child labor in Turkey, including street work, industrial work, heavy and dangerous work in small- and medium-sized enterprises, and mobile and seasonal agricultural work, except in family businesses.(5) The policy articulates objectives, indicators, outputs, target groups, activities, and responsibilities for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.(5, 21)

The Rural Development Plan (2010-2013), prepared by the Ministry of Food, Agriculture, and Livestock aims to enhance the living and working conditions of the rural population through sustainable agricultural development.(44) This policy addresses child labor in agriculture and focuses specifically on seasonal migrant labor.(41)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2012, the MOLSS launched the program Activation of Local Sources on Preventing Child Labor (2012-2014), which supports the Timebound Framework by aiming to enhance local capacity and build an effective monitoring system.(21)

During the reporting period, Turkey also participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Turkey, the project aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(45)

Seasonal agricultural workers, including children, are targeted in a MOLSS program to improve working conditions.(4, 5) This program includes workers cultivating hazelnuts and aims to ensure that workers are not trafficked or exploited and that they have appropriate housing and working conditions.(5, 21) This program also focuses on providing educational opportunities, referrals, and transportation to the children of migrant laborers and supplying them with school supplies and uniforms.(4, 5, 21, 41) The MOLSS allocated $12 million for this project in 2012.(21) Although the project is scheduled to end in 2013, the Government is exploring ways to incorporate the program into provincial social services to ensure long-term sustainability and expansion to all 81 provinces.(5) The Ministry of Education continued to implement a mobile classroom program for children who migrate for agricultural work.(18)

Children working on the streets receive rehabilitation services from the Directorate General of Child Services, which operates 37 Child and Youth Centers and six homes. At the centers, children are enrolled in education programs and have access to social, cultural, artistic, and sports activities.(5, 17, 41) Children can also receive health screenings, occupational training, and psychosocial support. Additionally, families can receive financial support to help with the child's education.(41) In 2011, the last year for which data was available, 8,424 children were assisted through the Child and Youth Centers.(5)

In the last three months of 2012 the Turkey Statistics Institute conducted a child labor workforce survey. The results of this survey will be released in 2013.(21)

Although the Government implements programs targeting children in street work and migrant children working in agriculture, sectors targeted by the Timebound Policy and Program, it does not have programs to address other targeted sectors such as industrial work or heavy and dangerous work in small- and medium-sized enterprises.(5)

In an effort to reduce poverty, the Government continued to operate its Conditional Education and Health Care Assistance Program, which included cash transfers.(5) One of the conditions for families to participate in the program is for children between ages 6 and 15 to regularly attend primary school.(3) Priority is given to the poorest 6 percent of families, many of whom work in seasonal agriculture.(12) The Government also provides milk to all primary school children and distributes books free of charge.(21) This program may influence parents to take children out of work and send them to school. However, the question of whether these poverty reduction programs have had an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

The Ministry of National Education runs training centers for children legally employed in small businesses. Children working in registered businesses are required to attend training at these centers, and the centers are required to inspect the children's workplaces.(39) As of 2009, there were 311 centers providing training in over one hundred occupations.(39) The MOLSS Labor Inspection Board offers training to enterprises at risk of hiring children in an effort to prevent them from violating child labor laws.(5)

To assist victims of human trafficking, the Ministry of Justice provides free legal services to foreign victims who choose to remain in Turkey to testify against traffickers.(39) The Ministry of Foreign Affairs also supported shelters for trafficking victims in Ankara and Istanbul. However, two shelters closed during the reporting period due to lack of funding.(25, 28, 46) The facility for a third anti-trafficking shelter in Antalya was donated by the municipality.(46, 47)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Turkey:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Revise the Labor Law to expand protections against hazardous work for children in agriculture and small businesses.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend laws to provide protections for children working on the street and as domestic workers.	2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Publish data on the number of criminal cases of child trafficking and child victims assisted.	2011, 2012
Policies	Raise public awareness on the importance of education for all children and the benefits of educating girls.	2011, 2012
	Create mechanisms to assist Roma and other populations without birth registration to enroll in school.	2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Social Programs	Develop and implement programs targeting child labor in industrial work and heavy and dangerous work in small- and medium-sized enterprises as outlined in the National Timebound Policy and Program.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing programs have on child labor.	2011, 2012
	Provide adequate funding to shelters for human trafficking victims.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Tuvalu

In 2012, Tuvalu made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Tuvalu continued to implement educational programs in order to keep children in school and target children who have dropped out for alternative training. Tuvalu also participated in the ILO's Decent Work Country Program (DWCP), which aims to strengthen laws and collect recent statistics on child labor. However, gaps remain in the Government's legislative framework. Children ages 15 to 17 are not protected from work in hazardous environments and boys are not adequately protected from commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, the Government has not collected data to determine the prevalence and nature of the worst forms of child labor in the country to inform policy and program development. Anecdotal evidence suggests that children in Tuvalu are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous activities in agriculture and fishing.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Anecdotal evidence suggests that children in Tuvalu are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in agriculture and fishing.(3, 4) There is little available information about the extent and nature of the worst forms of child labor in Tuvalu.(5) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(6, 7) Children engaged in fishing may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(8, 9)

The Government does not collect data on the worst forms of child labor and no labor survey report was published in 2012.

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Employment Act sets the minimum age for employment at 14. Tuvaluan law does not protect all children under 18 from hazardous work, and there is no hazardous work list. (10) The Employment Act prohibits boys ages 15 and younger from working on ships, underground in mines, and in industrial undertakings at night, but permits boys ages 16 to 17 to engage in these same types of work with certain restrictions. The Employment Act also prohibits children ages 14 and younger from working on ships for non-training purposes and from working in industrial undertakings.(10) However, there are no restrictions preventing girls ages 15 to 17 from performing work in underground mines, aboard ships, or during the night.(10)

The Employment Act also allows children to enter into 5-year apprenticeship programs beginning at age 14. Apprentices may legally live away from their families, increasing their vulnerability to exploitation.(10) The Labor Minister may exempt any industry from provisions of the Employment Act, including those provisions related to child labor.(10)

The Employment Act prohibits forced labor.(10) In addition, the Penal Code prohibits employers and others from enslaving a child, forcing a child to work, or otherwise constraining a child’s movement.(11, 12) The Penal Code calls for clients, facilitators, and beneficiaries of child sex work, as well as the minor’s consenting guardian(s), to be penalized.(11) The Penal Code also establishes punishments for persons who employ or use children for prostitution and for the trafficking of minors for sexual purposes. While the law protects female victims of prostitution, there are no legal protections for boys older than age 15.(11) All pornography is illegal in Tuvalu, and the Penal Code includes penalties for those who make, distribute, or possess obscene publications.(5, 11, 13) However, Tuvaluan law does not specifically address or apply higher penalties for child pornography.(4)

The Tuvalu Counter Terrorism and Transnational Organized Crime Act of 2009 provides additional protection for trafficking victims, particularly children. It expressly forbids the trafficking of children into and within Tuvalu or to another country for any purpose. It also provides trafficking victims with legal protections from criminal prosecution. Tuvaluan laws regarding sexual and trafficking offenses, including those involving minors, designate maximum but not minimum sentences; this could lead to light sentences that are not commensurate with the gravity of the crime.(11)

The Government of Tuvalu does not maintain a military force, and therefore there is no military conscription.(3)

The Education (Compulsory Education) Order makes education compulsory for children ages 6 to 15.(5, 14) However, education is free for children only until age 13.(5) Because of the gap between the age to which education is free and the minimum age for work, families of children ages 13 to 14 may be unable to afford schooling, and these children may be vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of Tuvalu has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor. The National Advisory Committee on Children (NACC) is responsible for coordinating children’s issues. The Ministry of Education chairs the NACC.(3, 5)

The Department of Labor (DOL) within the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and External Trade, Environment, and Labor (MFEL) is responsible for enforcing labor laws, including those related to child labor.(3, 5, 15) Reports indicate that DOL has limited institutional capacity to carry out its duties.(5, 16-18) An additional challenge faced by DOL is the lack of information and data concerning all forms of child labor. This hinders the Department’s ability to effectively target, carry out, and measure enforcement efforts.(16) DOL employs one officer to conduct all labor inspections. No inspections conducted during the reporting period involved child labor.(5)

The Tuvalu Police Force is the primary agency responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, including those related to child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(5) Often, immigration officers assist the police in these cases.(3) When the court has reasonable cause to suspect that a female child is being subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, it may issue the Tuvalu Police Force a warrant to search the premises and arrest the accused individual(s). Because the law does not cover male children in similar circumstances, they are not protected by the same enforcement mechanisms.(11) When a case involving the commercial sexual exploitation of a minor goes to trial, the court may appoint a guardian for a female victim, but males lack this protection.(11)

The Government did not track the number of criminal investigations related to the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period. There were no known prosecutions for these crimes in 2012.(5)

Tuvalu

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Through its education policy, the Government has achieved high primary education enrollment rates and is on track to reach universal primary education by 2015.(17, 19, 20) The Government maintains a policy of free and compulsory primary education, which covers students from ages 6 to approximately 15.(20) The Government has drafted a new strategic education plan, the Tuvalu Education Strategic Plan II (2011-2015) (TESP II), which focuses largely on education quality. TESP II targets all levels of education, from early childhood through secondary, technical, and vocational education.(21) The priority areas under the plan include improving curriculum and assessment measures, increasing student achievement, enhancing the quality and efficiency of management, developing human resources, and strengthening strategic partnerships.(21) Research could not determine whether the Government has adopted and begun implementing TESP II, or if it is currently operating under another education policy.

The Ministry of Education targets children who drop out of school through the Education and Training Sector Master Plan.(5, 20) These children are offered appropriate alternative education and training opportunities.(20)

The question of whether these policies may have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Tuvalu is one of eight Pacific Island countries that participated in an $800,000 ILO project from 2010 through 2012 to align its labor laws with current international labor standards, including ILO C. 182 and ILO C. 138.(5, 22) The project also aimed to increase the capacity of labor administrators, so that labor laws could be reviewed and enforced more effectively.(22, 23)

In 2012, the Government continued to participate in the ILO's DWCP.(16) Among its many goals, the DWCP aims to strengthen the country's labor laws, support the ratification of ILO Convention 182, and improve labor market monitoring systems by collecting recent statistics on child labor.(16, 24) The project also seeks to improve labor market information. To this end, it calls for the inclusion of child labor modules in planned household surveys.(24)

Despite these efforts, research found no evidence that the Government of Tuvalu implemented any programs during the reporting period to provide services to children in the worst forms of child labor, including in fishing and agriculture.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Tuvalu:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Provide greater legal protection to apprentices, limiting the types of work they can perform and the types of worksites in which they can work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the law to protect fully all children under age 18 from hazardous work, including developing a hazardous work list in line with international standards.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the law to protect boys ages 16 to 17 from commercial sexual exploitation.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the law to apply higher penalties for child pornography.	2012
	Establish minimum penalties for violations of child sexual exploitation and trafficking laws that are commensurate with the gravity of the crimes.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Expand free education for children up to age 14 in order to align with the minimum age for work.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Collect and publicize statistics on child labor enforcement, particularly criminal investigations and prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Dedicate sufficient resources to child labor law enforcement, particularly with regard to inspections.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Assess the impact that existing policies may have on child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Implement programs to provide services to children in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and fishing.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Conduct research to better understand the extent and nature of the worst forms of child labor in Tuvalu.	2010, 2011, 2012

Uganda

In 2012, Uganda made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved and launched the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012/2013-2016/2017) (NAP) and created a Counter Trafficking in Persons (CTIP) Office and an inter-ministerial Task Force to coordinate anti-trafficking efforts. However, gaps remain in legislation and enforcement efforts. The legal framework lacks protection for boys from prostitution. In addition, there is a gap between the age to which education is compulsory and the minimum age for work. Labor inspections are not carried out in rural areas. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, primarily in hazardous forms of agriculture and in domestic service.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Uganda are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, primarily in hazardous forms of agriculture and in domestic service.(3-8) It is estimated that the majority of children who work in Uganda are found working in agriculture to produce tobacco, coffee, and tea.(6, 8-11) Children are involved in hazardous activities in the production of rice and sugarcane, and vanilla.(8, 12, 13) Although information is limited, there are reports that children are also found in hazardous activities in the production of corn.(12) Children who work on tobacco farms in Uganda are exposed to health hazards and risk developmental defects and respiratory diseases due to long working hours and exposure to tobacco fumes.(3, 6, 9) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and be exposed to harmful pesticides.(7, 14)

Many children in Uganda are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor as domestic servants.(3, 8, 9, 15) Child domestic servants in Uganda commonly lack clear terms of service, work long hours with little or no pay, lack opportunities for education, are given insufficient food, and risk sexual exploitation and physical abuse from their employers.(11, 16-19)

Children in Uganda work in fishing.(8, 11) These children receive little or no pay, work long hours processing and smoking fish, and risk injuries from burns and fatigue.(3, 11, 12, 20, 21)

In the Karamoja region of Uganda, children herd cattle and may fall victim to involvement in cattle rustling.(8, 13) These children risk attacks by armed men, isolation, exposure to extreme weather conditions, and denial of access to schooling.(9) Children in Uganda work in hazardous activities related to the production of bricks.(8, 22, 23) Children in Uganda also burn and carry charcoal.(8, 22, 24) Although evidence is limited, there are reports that children work in hazardous activities in the production of stone.(8, 23, 25)

Children in Uganda engage in cross-border trading.(8, 26) Many children who live at border crossing towns and villages drop out of school to carry heavy loads such as merchandise on their heads to and from Ugandan border points.(26)

Children work as street vendors selling small items.(3, 8) Some of these children end up being forced to beg on the streets.(8, 27)

Children risk involvement in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, while working in bars and restaurants.(3, 9, 17) Some children as young as age 10 are victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(17) Children in the custody of pimps and brothel owners are used to produce pornographic materials. These children are also exposed to sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV/AIDS.(3, 12, 28)

Uganda is a source and destination country for the trafficking of children.(27, 28) Children are trafficked internally for sexual exploitation and forced labor in fishing, agriculture, and domestic service.(27) In some cases, Ugandan children have been trafficked to Central, East, and North Africa for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(29, 30) Children from Burundi, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Kenya, Rwanda, and Tanzania are also trafficked to Uganda for commercial sexual exploitation and agricultural work.(27)

As of 2011, there had been no reports that the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) had abducted and conscripted children within Uganda for six years; however, about 5,000 Ugandan children previously abducted by the LRA were still missing.(31)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Employment Act sets the minimum age for work in Uganda at 14. The Act permits children ages 12 to 14 to perform light work under adult supervision if it does not interfere with the child's education.(30, 32) In addition, no child younger than age 18 may be employed in hazardous work or between 7 p.m. and 7 a.m.(12, 32) During the reporting period, the Government enacted the Employment (Employment of Children) Regulations 2012. The Regulations contain restrictions on the employment of children, penalties for violations, a list of hazardous activities prohibited to children under 18, and a list of activities considered light work.(11, 23) The list of hazardous activities includes prohibitions by different age groups of tasks in a variety of areas including several agricultural sectors, construction, mining, and urban informal work.(23) The regulations also prohibit the use, procurement, or offering of a child for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.(23) The Government also provides guidelines to serve as a tool for labor inspectors to identify incidences of hazardous child labor. The guidelines define hazardous work as exposure to dangerous machinery, carrying heavy loads, exposure to harassment, including physical, psychological, and sexual abuse, and work under strenuous conditions for long hours.(12) Domestic service by children younger than age 14 is included in the list of hazardous occupations.(12)

Primary education in Uganda is free and compulsory through age 12; however, fees for school supplies and operating costs are often prohibitive for families. The law leaves children ages 12 to 14 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor as they are not required to be in school nor are they legally permitted to work in areas other than light work.(4, 8, 33, 34)

The Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act of 2009 (PTIP) prohibits child trafficking and outlines penalties for violators. The Act also provides for protection, assistance, and support for trafficking victims and reparation to victims of trafficking to and from Uganda.(33, 35, 36) The use of children to commit crimes is prohibited under the Act.(35)

The Ugandan Constitution prohibits slavery and forced labor. Procuring or attempting to procure a girl under the age of 21 for sexual intent or to become a prostitute is prohibited under the Penal Code.(37, 38) However, boys under age 18 are not protected.(38)

Prostitution, procurement, and pimping of a prostitute are illegal in Uganda. However, these laws only address female victims, leaving boys unprotected from prostitution.(38, 39) The Penal Code penalizes intermediaries but does not appear to penalize clients. In addition, the Penal Code penalizes those who engage in prostitution, which leaves room for children who are procured or offered for prostitution to be treated as offenders rather than victims.(38, 39) The production of pornography, regardless of the age of the subject, with the intent to distribute is illegal under the Penal Code and the Computer Misuse Act of 2011.(39, 40) There does not appear to be legislation specifically addressing the production or possession of child pornography.(39)

The minimum age for voluntary military service in Uganda is 18, and there is no conscription for the military.(33, 41)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Government of Uganda has a child labor steering committee in place to coordinate child labor issues. The committee includes representatives from the Ministry of Gender, Labor, and Social Development (MGLSD), the Ministry of Education and Sports, the Ministry of Local Government, the Ministry of Agriculture, the Ministry of Health, the National Organization of Trade Unions, the Confederation of Uganda Trade Unions, the Federation of Uganda Employers, the International Rescue Committee, ILO-IPEC, and other civil society stakeholders.(33, 42, 43) The committee convenes on a quarterly basis and last met in February 2013.(11, 33)

As outlined by the 2009 PTIP Act, the Government created a Counter Trafficking in Persons (CTIP) Office in February 2012 and an interministerial CTIP Task Force in March 2012.(35) The CTIP Office is charged with drafting policy, implementing public information campaigns, and establishing a database on trafficking cases. The CTIP Task Force is responsible for coordinating antitrafficking efforts among government ministries.(35, 44)

The MGLSD is the lead agency on labor issues and is in charge of enforcing all labor laws in Uganda.(8, 11, 33) Two units within MGLSD are responsible for children's issues—the Child Labor Unit (CLU) and the Orphans and Vulnerable Children Unit (OVCU). The OVCU guides programming for orphans and other vulnerable children and integrates child labor information into an OVC database.(11, 42, 43, 45) The CLU, which had one full-time civil servant during 2012, is responsible for the development of the National Child Labor Action Plan. District labor inspectors are responsible for carrying out inspections throughout the country.(8, 11, 33, 46) In 2012, the MGLSD had 36 nonspecialized labor inspectors and 23 occupational health and safety inspectors.(11) Research did not find evidence of the amount of funding available for inspections during the reporting period nor did it specify if the number of inspectors was adequate to ensure an adequate number of inspections, including in rural areas. Inspectors did not receive any training during the year.

The Ministry conducted 300 routine workplace inspections in 2012. There were no penalties or citations issued for child labor violations during the reporting period.(47) During the year, the Government carried out a child labor mapping exercise in several districts within the country to collect information on the worst forms of child labor and assess levels of awareness about child labor and compliance with relevant laws. The report of the findings has not yet been made public.(47)

The Uganda Police Force (UPF) within the Ministry of Internal Affairs has a Child and Family Protection Unit (CFPU) responsible for enforcing child labor laws. At lower-level police posts, staff members are designated as CFPU liaison officers to manage a child-related complaint system and respond to complaints.(11, 33) By the end of November 2012, the CFPU had recorded 61 cases of child labor. Eighteen cases are reported to be under investigation while two are awaiting trial. Research did not find information about the investigation of the remaining cases.(11) The Uganda Police employs 450 CFPU officers countrywide.(47)

The UPF is the lead agency for enforcing antitrafficking laws and investigating cases related to trafficking in persons. Along with its work on children's issues in general, the CFPU also provides trainings to local police regarding measures to identify and prevent trafficking.(44) All incoming police officers are required to participate in a 1-day trafficking response course provided by the CFPU. Additionally, the Ministry of Justice and the Directorate for Public Prosecutions is charged with prosecuting trafficking cases.(44) Research did not find evidence of the number of prosecutions and convictions for child labor violations during the reporting period.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the Government approved and launched the National Action Plan (NAP) for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012/2013-2016/2017).(13) The NAP operationalizes the 2006 National Child Labor Policy with the aim of reducing all worst forms of child labor in Uganda by 2016/2017.(11, 48) The NAP will strengthen the legal framework and establish enforcement mechanisms to protect children from exploitation.(33, 49)

Child labor concerns have also been mainstreamed into the Millennium Development Goals (2015) and the National Education Development Plan (2004-2015).(50-52) In addition, Uganda's National Development Plan (2010/2011-2014/2015) aims to train mining communities on child labor issues and enhance monitoring of child labor in the mining industry.(53)

The Government ratified the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa (Kampala Convention), which entered into force on December 6, 2012.(54) The Convention prohibits armed groups from recruiting children, otherwise permitting them to participate in conflict, and engaging in sexual slavery and trafficking, especially of women and children.(55)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government has participated in the implementation of programs to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the Government participated in a 4-year, $4.79 million Project of Support for the Preparatory Phase of the Uganda National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor funded by USDOL.(56) The project, which ended in September 2012, withdrew and prevented 8,733 children from exploitative child labor.(56)

In 2012, the Government also participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Uganda, the project aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(57)

The Governments of Uganda, the Central African Republic, the DRC, and South Sudan continued to cooperate to rescue abductees of the LRA. During the year, the Government of

Uganda also took steps to protect and support demobilized LRA child trafficking victims by providing services, such as shelter and food.(58)

At a regional and policy level, the Government participates in the East African Police Chiefs Cooperation Organization to strengthen regional cooperation and capacities among East African law enforcement authorities.(59) The Regional Program for East Africa (2009-2012) covers 13 countries and is funded with $38 million from the UNODC and other funding partners. The Program includes activities that support increased coordination in combating human trafficking.(35, 59)

From January 2010 to June 2012, the Government participated in the $1.1 million Community Empowerment for the Elimination of Child Labor in Tobacco Growing (COMEECA) project in Masindi and Kiryandongo districts. The work of this project and a predecessor project led to the establishment of the Uganda Technical College – Kyema, a vocational campus now run by the Ministry of Education and Sports.(60) The Government reserves 20 percent of the spaces for vocational training of children withdrawn from child labor. The Government of Uganda also supported the project by mainstreaming child labor issues into government community structures, such as district and subcounty assemblies.(60)

Since 2010, the MGLSD has implemented a cash-transfer welfare program, in partnership with UNICEF, that gives cash to vulnerable households in three districts in Uganda.(33) During 2012, the program gave funds to 32,545 households through cash transfers that benefited 172,725 individuals. The MGLSD and the ILO reported that families are putting the funds toward school fees and materials.(33, 47)

The Government continued to provide trafficking victims with short-term shelter, medical care, and food at police stations. For longer-term care, victims were sometimes referred to NGOs.(27) In Kampala, police continued to take street children to an MGLSD juvenile detention center for food, medical treatment, counseling, basic education, and to reconnect them with their families. The center was underresourced, however, and many children returned to the streets after a period of time.(27) Antitrafficking campaigns were carried out by the Government through radio programs and community discussions.(27)

Although there are a number of donor-funded projects in Uganda, Government supported efforts still fall short of reaching the large numbers of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Uganda, particularly in the agriculture and domestic service sectors.(39)

Uganda

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Uganda:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Adopt legislation that increases the age of compulsory education to 14 so that it is commensurate with the minimum age for work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Ukraine

In 2012, Ukraine made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the National Program for Combating Human Trafficking and Councils for Combating Human Trafficking at Oblast (provincial level) were operational in most regions of Ukraine. The Government also ratified the Council of Europe's Convention on the Protection of Children Against Sexual Exploitation and Abuse. The administrative reform involved a significant bureaucratic reshuffling of specific work portfolios, which may threaten the coordination of child protection systems that include child labor issues. Furthermore, the Criminal Code does not prohibit the possession of child pornography and lacks clarity regarding the age of consent for sexual relationships. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in dangerous agricultural tasks, as well as in prostitution and pornography.

Statistics on Working Children and Education

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Ukraine engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in agriculture, prostitution, and pornography.(3-5) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(4, 6) The Office of the Ombudsman for Children's Rights conducted a study on child labor trends during the reporting period. The study, which included more than 4,000 children and 1,000 parents, found child labor in agriculture (30 percent), sales activities in kiosks and in the distribution of advertising leaflets (25-30 percent), construction (19 percent), and other unskilled positions.(5) The survey is not nationally representative and did not include children in the informal sector.(5)

Commercial sexual exploitation of children, including prostitution and pornography, remains a serious problem in Ukraine.(5, 7, 8) Children as young as age 10 are used in prostitution and the production of pornography.(9) According to Ukrainian and international law enforcement authorities, a large amount of child pornography on the Internet comes from Ukraine.(7)

Children are also trafficked for sexual and labor exploitation in and out of Ukraine as well as within the country.(8, 10) Girls are trafficked in and out of Ukraine.(9) These children are trafficked into domestic service, agriculture, street work, and commercial sexual exploitation.(9) Children trafficked within Ukraine are often forced to work as beggars or prostitutes.(11, 12) Homeless, orphaned, and poor children are at high risk of being trafficked and are targeted by recruiters for child pornography.(10, 12)

Children may be found working on the surface of informal coal mines, where they load, transport, and sort coal.(3, 5) Reports of children working in such mines, however, are isolated and unconfirmed.(13)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but information regarding specific activities and hazards is unknown.(3, 14)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code sets the minimum age for employment at 16; children who have reached age 15 can work with the permission of a parent.(3, 5) The minimum age for hazardous work is 18. The Labor Code allows children in secondary or vocational schools to perform light work at age 14 with parental consent, provided that work does not interfere with their education and is not harmful to their health. However, provisions for determining what qualifies as light work are not included in the law.(15) The Ministry of Health prohibits heavy work and types of work under harmful and hazardous conditions at all establishments, regardless of what that activity is, for children under age 18.(16) Minors in vocational training programs for hazardous occupations are permitted to perform hazardous work for under four hours a day beginning at age 14, as long as occupational health and safety standards are met.(15, 16) Ukraine's minimum age for such work is 2 years below the international minimum age for entering hazardous vocational training, which is 16. (15)

The law “On Childhood Protection,” serves as the primary legal framework for combating child labor. The law forbids the involvement of children in the worst forms of child labor that are defined according to ILO Convention 182.(5) Article 150 of the Criminal Code outlaws the exploitation of children. Article 304 provides penalties for using a child for begging.(9, 17) Articles 304 and 309 of the Code prohibit the engagement of children in illicit activities, including the production, purchase, storage, or transport of drugs. Article 302 outlaws the use of children in prostitution.(17) Domestic law does not specifically define an age of consent for sexual relations though it is generally understood to be 16.(5) In some courts, children ages 16-17 are being prosecuted as offenders rather than victims of sexual exploitation.(5)

The Parliament adopted the Law on Amendments to Some Legislative Acts of Ukraine on Combating the Distribution of Child Pornography.(18) However, there is no law that prohibits the possession of child pornography.(5)

Forced labor is prohibited in the Constitution and in the Criminal Code.(5, 19) Article 149 of the Criminal Code prohibits trafficking in persons for sexual service and for labor.(12, 17) This article is applicable to both internal and international trafficking and increases penalties for trafficking if the victim is a minor.(12, 17)

In 2012, the Government ratified the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Sexual Abuse.(5, 12)

The compulsory military recruitment age is 18.(5, 20)

Education is free and compulsory until age 18.(21, 22) Nevertheless, access to education is limited for rural and Roma minority children. In areas with low population density, some schools have closed due to the lack of school-aged children, forcing children to travel to distant villages for school.(7)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Ministry of Social Policy is responsible for coordinating and implementing state policy to protect the rights and interests of children, including policies aimed at eliminating the worst forms of child labor.(5, 12, 18) The Interagency Council on Family, Gender Equality, Demographic Development, Prevention of Violence in the Family, and Counter Trafficking Issues is also partially responsible for coordinating the enforcement of criminal laws related to victims of child labor.(5) Reportedly, the Council met only once although the requirements call for a meeting every 3 months.(5) The Office of the Ombudsman for Children's Rights that was opened in 2011 is responsible for monitoring the rights of children, including the issue of child labor, ensuring that Ukraine abides by international obligations regarding children's rights. The Office of the Ombudsman for Children's Rights is also responsible for coordinating the development of laws on child protection.(3, 5) The Office has seven staff members.(3, 5)

In 2011 the Ministry of Family, Youth, and Sports that previously was responsible for coordinating efforts to combat human trafficking at the national level was merged with the Ministry of Science and Education; its Department of Adoption and Children's Rights Protection moved to the Ministry of Social Policy.(3, 5) The Ministry of Social Policy is the current National Coordinator on Combating Human Trafficking.(12, 18) Since 2012, Oblast (provincial level) Councils for Combating Human Trafficking have been created and have been operating in almost all regions of Ukraine.(18)

It is unknown what responsibilities the Ministry of Science and Education has after the administrative reform. The administrative reform involved a significant bureaucratic reshuffling of specific work portfolios, which may threaten the coordination of child protection systems that include child labor issues.(3, 5, 23)

Several agencies were responsible for enforcing hazardous child labor laws during the reporting period, among which the Ministry of Social Policy's State Labor Inspectorate and Department of Adoption and Children's Rights Protection; the Ministry of the Interior's Criminal Police for Children's Affairs and Department on Combating Cybercrimes; the Ministry of Science, Education, Youth, and Sport; the Prosecutor General's Office; and the Security Service of Ukraine.(3, 5, 13) The Ministry of Social Policy and the Ministry of Internal Affairs are responsible for identifying children in the informal sector involved in the worst forms of child labor.(7) The State Labor Inspectorate in the Ministry of Social Policy is the lead agency responsible for enforcing child labor laws.(7)

The State Labor Inspectorate employs 706 labor inspectors.(5) Funding for inspections is limited; inspectors lack offices, transportation, and travel budgets.(24) No training for labor inspectors on child labor was conducted in 2012.(5)

Labor inspectors must notify employers at least 10 days in advance of an inspection and a warrant must be issued in the event that an unscheduled inspection will take place.(25) These provisions may hamper the inspectors' ability to detect child labor law violations.

In 2012, the State Labor Inspectorate conducted regular inspections at 540 enterprises, including agricultural enterprises.(18) Violations were discovered at 230 enterprises where the Inspectorate found 1,036 minors working in violation of the labor law. There were 28 children ages 14-15 years, 149 children ages 15-16 years, and 859 children ages 16-18 years.(5, 18) Of these children, 18 worked in hazardous conditions.(5, 18) There were 30 minors who worked beyond the accepted working time length and 24 minors worked night, overtime, and on the weekends.(5, 18) It is unknown whether the children counted as working in hazardous conditions are included in the numbers of children counted as being involved in working hours violations.

In addition, during the "thematic" inspections, which occurred in February and March 2012 at 314 enterprises in the sectors likely to employ children, the Inspectorate found 589 working minors.(5) Most of the children found working were age 16 and older.(5) Three children were ages 14 to 15 years, and three children were in hazardous labor.(5) Most of the violations pertained to children working beyond allowed time-limits; on holidays, weekends, or nights; with delayed payments; and without an employment contract.(5) The Inspectorate filed 289 orders of both types of inspections to business owners to eliminate these violations.(5) Statistics on whether fines or other penalties were enforced is not available.(5)

The Criminal Police for Children's Affairs (CPCA) is the primary agency to which children involved in criminal activities are referred.(3, 5)The CPCA employs approximately 3,000 officers throughout the country.(3, 5) The Cyber Crime and Counter-Trafficking Division (CTD) works to combat human trafficking and cybercrimes and employed 550 officers before its most recent reorganization.(3, 5, 13) In addition to conducting raids on brothels, the Criminal Police verifies the legality of photography studios, modeling agencies, night clubs, massage parlors, and hotels to prevent sexual exploitation of children.(26) Under the current administrative reform, CPCA was reorganized into a unit under the Criminal Police Department of the Ministry of Interior and CTD was reorganized as the Counter Trafficking Division under the Criminal Investigation Department and Cyber-Crime Division.(5) The reform resulted in the departure of specialty trained detectives and a reduction in time spent on trafficking investigations.(13)

In 2012, the IOM trained 189 law enforcement officers in trafficking issues.(5) Judges, however, do not receive adequate training and some do not appear to know how to properly adjudicate child trafficking cases.(5) Hotlines have been established to accept reports of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of minors on the Internet.(8)

In 2012, there were 16 newly identified minor victims of trafficking. Sixty-two minors were reintegrated and provided services by IOM. (12) The majority of them were taken away from their parents due to lack of parental care and the parents' involvement in the trafficking of their own children.(12)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The National Action Plan to Implement the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (2010-16) (NAP) outlines action steps for putting the country's legal framework that protects children's rights into practice.(8) The NAP covers a variety of topics relating to child protection, including economic exploitation, rehabilitation of victims found in the worst forms of child labor, access to education, and creating a child labor monitoring system.(5)

The Government allocated only 10.0 percent of planned funding for 2011 and 2012 to the NAP, including funding for the mandated child labor monitoring system elaborated in the plan.(3, 5) Due to a lack of funding, the implementation of the monitoring system did not move beyond the implementation of a pilot program in two locations and research found no evidence of additional actions under the NAP during the reporting period.(5) The lack of sufficient funds hampers the ability of the Ministries to implement the policy for better child protection through plans such as the NAP.(3, 14)

In March 2012, the Government adopted the National Program for Combating Human Trafficking Until 2015 to implement the Law on Combating Human Trafficking from 2011. This Program set up several regulations to guide the work of the National Coordinator on Combating Human Trafficking, including Procedures to Identify Status of Human Trafficking Victims, Approval of Payment of One-time Financial Assistance to Victims of Trafficking, National Mechanisms of Interagency Cooperation to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings, and the Establishment of a State Registry for Human Trafficking Crimes.(12, 18)

In 2012, the Government implemented a State Program on Poverty Reduction.(3, 5) It is too early to evaluate the impact this program may have on child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Office of the Ombudsman for Children's Rights conducted and released the results of a study on child labor trends in Ukraine in 2012.(5) The Government, together with the ILO, anticipates conducting a new survey on understanding child labor in 2013. In 2012, Ukraine participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Ukraine, the project aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(27)

The Ministry of Social Policy is responsible for the social protection of both domestic and foreign victims by providing approximately 67 shelters and 51 social-psychological rehabilitation centers for children.(12) However, the current capacity is insufficient to cover the extent of the problem.(5)

The main providers of services for trafficking in persons (TIP) victims were 742 Centers for Social Services for Family, Youth, and Children. The Centers are responsible for assessing TIP victims' needs and drafting rehabilitation plans.(12) However, these Centers experienced a large turnover of staff due to an excessive workload and low pay.(12) This may restrict the Centers in their ability to address the main needs of trafficked victims efficiently.

The Government partners with international organizations on a number of anti-trafficking programs. Posters and information cards about child sex tourism and human trafficking were also distributed at border crossings.(28) In addition, the Ministry of Education and Science partnered with international organizations to develop guidelines to assist teachers in discussing human trafficking issues with their students. The Ministry also continued a school program for grades 7 to 11 to raise awareness on the issue.(28) The Government, together with OSCE, implemented the Multiplication of Anti-Trafficking National Referral Mechanism in Ukraine project. Since 2011, the Government, in partnership with IOM, has also been implementing the "Establishment of Multidisciplinary Interaction Mechanism to Assist Victims of Human Trafficking" project in several cities.(18)

The Government collaborates with USAID on the Families for Children Program, which targets children living outside of family care. The program focuses on developing a continuum of family-based care services that provide effective alternatives to long-term institutionalization or life on the streets for children, including those who are affected by HIV.(29)

Ukraine

The Government worked together with ILO to promote inclusivity within the social protection system, among other goals, under the Decent Work Country Program for the 2012-2015 period, which was signed in June 2012. The Program incorporated the results of the evaluation from the previous 2008-10 Decent Work Country Program of Ukraine.(30)

The aim of the social protection component of the program is to improve the social status of migrant workers, develop and implement a national occupational safety and health program, and strengthen the labor inspection system. The Decent Work Country Program will also contribute to the implementation of two programs, Ukraine for People and the Program of Economic Reforms for 2010-14—Prosperous

Society, Competitive Economy, Effective State. Both programs aim to achieve national objectives set under the Millennium Development Goals.(30)

The Government continued providing free school lunches to certain categories of children including those from families with many children, families of Chernobyl victims, low-income families, and families in some rural areas.(14) However, as noted above, access to school for some rural and Roma children remains a problem.

The question of whether the Decent Work, school lunch, and/or other related programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Ukraine:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the Labor Code to include guidance on how “light work” is determined as it applies to children.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the Labor Code to prohibit all children younger than 16 from working in hazardous occupations in vocational training.	2011, 2012
	Ensure that children victims of sexual exploitation of age 16 and above are not prosecuted as offenders.	2012
	Amend the Criminal Code to prohibit possession of child pornography.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Regularly convene meetings of the Interagency Council on Family, Gender Equality, Demographic Development, Prevention of Violence in the Family, and Counter Trafficking Issues to carry out its mandate of examining policies and legislation on issues of child protection.	2009, 2011, 2012
	Closely monitor the effects of the recent administrative reform and ensure that child protection remains a priority.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide labor inspectors with appropriate resources to complete inspections.	2011, 2012
	Amend the labor regulations to allow for unannounced inspections that include visits in agriculture, mining, and informal sectors and consider ways to streamline the labor inspection process.	2011, 2012
	Provide the number of violations and information available on penalties assessed for child labor violations.	2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Provide sufficient funds necessary to implement the National Action Plan for Child Protection, including the mandated child labor monitoring system.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that the State Program on Poverty Reduction may have on child labor.	2011, 2012

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Social Programs	Assess whether the capacity of staff in the Centers for Social Services for Family, Youth, and Children is sufficient to ensure that victims of human trafficking are provided the amount of quality services they require.	2012
	Assess children's access to rural schools and develop programs to facilitate school attendance.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that Decent Work and related programs may have on child labor.	2011, 2012

Uruguay

In 2012, Uruguay made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government continues to implement the national plan focused on addressing the commercial sexual exploitation of children, as well as the national plan to combat child labor in garbage dumps. Numerous advocacy campaigns against child labor were also implemented this reporting period to raise awareness. However, the country lacks a comprehensive national child labor policy, and programs to assist and prevent child labor are limited. Children in Uruguay are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Uruguay are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.(3-6) The 2009 National Child Labor Survey found that 11.6 percent of children between the ages of 5 and 17 were involved in some form of economic activity, of which 8.5 percent was considered hazardous work. Engagement in such work is more likely to occur in rural areas than in urban areas.(3) Approximately 22.2 percent of all working children can be found engaging in various activities within the agricultural sector, including raising livestock.(3) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(7, 8) Children herding livestock may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(9) Children are also found working in fishing.(3, 5) Children working in fishing may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(10)

Within urban areas, the most common occupation for child laborers were sales and services, with a 23 percent participation rate for children between the ages of 5 and 17, followed by construction and manufacturing, which had a 21.1 percent participation rate.(3, 6) There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(4-6, 11, 12)

Children, primarily girls, are found employed as domestic laborers. There are limited reports that some families voluntarily offer their children to work in forced domestic service.(3-6) These children may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. They may also be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(13)

Children engage in commercial sexual exploitation, especially in tourist areas and near the borders of Argentina and Brazil. There are limited reports that minors engage in prostitution as a way to assist their families.(4-6) Children also are trafficked internally for sexual exploitation and there is some evidence that they are engaged in child pornography.(11, 14, 15)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Code for Children and Adolescents sets the minimum age for employment at 15. Minors between the ages of 15 and 18 are required to have work permits and must undergo yearly physical exams.(4, 11, 12, 16) Only those who have completed 9 years of compulsory schooling or who are currently enrolled in school are able to obtain work permits. Work permits are not granted for hazardous work, work identified as causing fatigue, or work performed during the night.(4, 11, 12) The Adolescent Labor Division within the Institute for Adolescents and Children (INAU) grants minors between the ages of 13 and 15 permission to engage in light work. The Government of Uruguay has not yet drafted a list of what occupations constitute light work.(4, 16)

Resolution 1012/006 was developed by INAU and defines hazardous activities, as well as hazardous occupations, as those that might put children under the age of 18 in imminent risk for sexual, emotional, or physical abuse.(17) Some occupations that have been identified as hazardous for children include agricultural work, domestic service, garbage collecting, and street vending.(17) However, research did not identify any potential penalties for violations of the Resolution.

Decree 321 also identifies the agricultural sector as hazardous and prohibits the engagement of children under the age of 18 in this sector. It also stipulates penalties for any infractions.(18) It is unknown, however, how effective the Government is in enforcing this order.

Uruguay's Constitution prohibits forced or compulsory labor, as well as debt bondage.(19) The law also forbids the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including pornography and prostitution.(12, 18) The Migration Act comprehensively prohibits the trafficking of persons into or out of the country for the purposes of forced labor or sexual exploitation. The law also lists trafficking of children as an aggravating circumstance.(20, 21) However, it does not cover internal trafficking. The amended Drug Act prohibits the use, procurement, or solicitation of minors for illicit activities, including the sale and production of drugs.(22-24)

Education is free and compulsory through secondary school, which ends at approximately age 15.(5, 25) Service in the armed forces is voluntary and begins at age 18.(4, 26)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

INAU has the primary responsibility of implementing policies to prevent and regulate child labor. It is the lead agency responsible for children's issues in Uruguay and assists all children, including those who are employed within the informal sector.(4, 27) The Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (CETI) coordinates efforts between law enforcement bureaus and NGOs to develop a plan of action for child laborers and their families.(27) CETI is chaired by the National Inspector from the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS). The Committee is composed of government agencies, industry representatives, labor groups, and NGOs.(4, 28)

MLSS is also responsible for enforcing child labor laws and conducting all labor inspections. There are 140 MLSS inspectors who conduct all investigations and assess any penalties associated with labor violations, including child labor.(5, 27) When MLSS receives a complaint regarding child labor via its hotline or other means, it shares this information with INAU, which then investigates and assists the children who might be affected. MLSS classifies hotline complaints under child labor only if the phrase is specifically mentioned, which may result in the misclassification of child labor cases.(5) INAU also operates a hotline to receive complaints about child labor, but it does not keep current statistics on reported cases. INAU conducts most of its inspections in the capital of Montevideo, although the National Child Labor Survey indicates that most child labor occurs in rural areas.(5) During this reporting period, INAU employed 11 child labor inspectors and conducted approximately 3,200 labor inspections with the MLSS.(4) It is unknown how many children were assisted, as no information was available on the number of child labor violations uncovered or sanctions imposed as a result of MLSS inspections.

The National Committee for the Eradication of Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONAPEES) is led by INAU and composed of representatives from several government agencies, NGOs, and UNICEF.(4, 5) The Ministry of Social Development (MIDES) chaired the interagency committee that coordinates Uruguay's anti-trafficking efforts. MIDES worked closely with the IOM to train labor inspectors, raise awareness, and increase intergovernmental capacity to combat trafficking.(4, 5)

The Ministry of the Interior (MOI) investigates all organized crimes, including child trafficking, the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in narcotic operations. The Government has two judges and two public prosecutors who operate a Specialized Court for Organized Crime.(5, 15, 29) These individuals have the ability to mandate police investigations.(5, 29) However, this court only reviews criminal cases involving three or more individuals, which excludes many human trafficking and child labor cases.(30) Children identified as victims of the worst forms of child labor through MOI investigations can be placed under the protection or custody of INAU.(5, 29) Generally, it takes 1 to 2 years to resolve a case involving the commercial or sexual exploitation of children and the same amount of time before penalties called for in the law can be applied in practice.(5, 29)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Research found no evidence of the existence of a comprehensive policy aimed at combating the worst forms of child labor. There are, however, strategic plans in place to address child labor in certain occupational sectors.

CONAPEES has a national plan of action against the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The goals of this plan include strengthening victims' rights, improving protection measures for victims and witnesses, keeping children in school, reintegrating those children who had previously left school, and developing alternative income strategies for families.(4, 5) This year, CONAPEES and the Government of Uruguay have renewed their commitment to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents. They intend to develop and carry out an extensive public awareness campaign before the end of 2013.(4) In an effort to deter potential offenders, the campaign will focus on the legal ramifications of undertaking such illicit activities and on changing public perceptions related to the child being an active participant in the exploitation, instead of a victim.(4) In 2010, CONAPEES proposed the creation of three teams of service experts that could be sent to various regions of the country to assist child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(5) It is unknown, however, whether this plan received approval during the reporting period.

In 2011, MLSS and MIDES implemented a National Plan of Action to combat child labor in garbage dumps. The plan includes specific projects that involve education, health, housing, and law enforcement agencies.(5) As part of the plan, CETI intends to collaborate with other countries in the region in order to exchange best practices to address this worst form of child labor.(5) CETI aims to develop a formal structure within the garbage sorting and collection industry. The timeline for this initiative is unknown.(4)

The Government of Uruguay and other MERCOSUR countries continue to carry out the Southern Child (Niña Sur) Initiative to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region. The Initiative includes public campaigns against commercial sexual exploitation, trafficking, and child labor; mutual technical assistance in raising domestic legal frameworks to international standards on those issues; and the exchange of best practices related to victim protection and assistance.(31-33) During the reporting period, MERCOSUR member countries, including Uruguay, conducted a joint awareness campaign called "A United MERCOSUR against Child Labor." The campaign advocated for the eradication of dangerous activities in domestic work and the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents.(4) It also promoted the protection of adolescents who are employed.(4) Approximately 3,000 informational pamphlets were produced; radio ads were also purchased to implement the campaign.(4)

Uruguay is a member of the Joint Regional Group for the Americas. The Joint Group, whose members also include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Suriname, and Venezuela, conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America.(34, 35)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Pro-Child (Pro-Niño) is a program run by Fundación Telefonica and focused on the prevention and eradication of child labor. Established in 2000, the program has more than 10,000 active youth participants nationwide.(4, 36) This reporting period, they ran several advocacy campaigns against child labor, conducted a survey to assess the prevalence of child labor among Afro-Uruguayan children, and created a manual calling for the end of child labor that was presented to the President.(4, 36)

In an effort to improve current working conditions for child adolescent workers and raise public awareness, CETI has created a manual to inform employers, child laborers, and social organizations about the occupations in which children between the ages of 15 and 17 can be engaged in. They also provide information on how children can coordinate with INAU to receive legal work permits.(36) CETI intends to distribute the manual to educational institutions, employment centers, and various labor organizations. The manual is set to be published and distributed in late 2013.(36)

Previously, the Government of Uruguay had implemented an emergency social assistance program, PANES, which ended in 2007. The program was assessed and its impact on school attendance and child labor was documented.(37) Results indicate that the PANES program did not have an effect on either school attendance or child labor. It is believed that the size of the cash transfer was not generous enough to prevent school attrition.(37) PANES was immediately replaced with a comprehensive National Plan of Equality, which established the Family Allocations Program.(37, 38) Similar to PANES, Family Allocations is a conditional cash transfer program implemented to reduce national poverty levels and to assist working families with children, as well as families in need. Run by the Institute for Social Security, the program is still operational and mandates that beneficiaries have their children attend school and receive medical services.(39) The impact this program is having on child labor has not yet been assessed.

The Government of Uruguay participated in an initiative, completed this reporting period and funded by the Inter-American Development Bank, to address child labor, reduce school attrition rates, and comprehensively improve children's ability to perform in school. Of the 1,400 initiative beneficiaries, 40 percent of the children enrolled in school and were no longer engaged in child labor.(4)

Plans to address child labor in garbage dumps, as well as the commercial sexual exploitation of children, have been adopted but programs to assist these children have not been established. Research also found no evidence of any existing or planned programs to assist working children in other sectors. More programs are needed to reach those who are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including those who work in the agricultural sector and in commercial sexual exploitation.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Uruguay:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Establish penalties for violations of Resolution 1012/006.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Draft and adopt a list of light work occupations.	2012
	Draft and adopt legislation that addresses the trafficking of persons and that provides protections for victims trafficked internally.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Institute systematic recordkeeping of child labor cases at the INAU.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide more comprehensive guidelines for MLSS hotline operators to allow for the proper classification of calls regarding child labor.	2011, 2012
	Increase the number of inspections in rural areas.	2011, 2012
Policies	Draft and adopt a comprehensive national plan of action to address the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Approve and enact the CONAPEES proposal to send expert teams in the field to assist with researching cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2011, 2012

Uruguay

Uzbekistan

In 2012, Uzbekistan made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Notwithstanding initiatives to reduce child labor, Uzbekistan has received this assessment for the Government's complicity in the use of forced child labor. While the Government issued a 2012 Decree and Action Plan on Additional Measures to address the worst forms of child labor, worst forms of child labor persist, particularly in the cotton harvest. Reports indicate that in 2012, unlike in prior years, the Government did not systematically close primary classes forcing young children to harvest cotton. However, authorities continued the practice of closing secondary schools and mobilizing children ages 15 through 17 to work in the cotton fields to meet Government-mandated harvest quotas.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Uzbekistan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, primarily in the annual cotton harvest.(3, 4) During the autumn harvest, children continue to be forced to work due to a governmental system that requires local administrators and farmers to meet cotton harvest quotas.(3-8) Each spring during the preharvest season, children also work long hours sowing cotton, followed by weeding through the summer months.(9-12)

In 2012, the Government, along with local administrators, for the first time made a concerted effort to keep primary-level students in school and out of the fields during the harvest.(4, 6, 11, 13) Unlike in prior years, reports indicate that most primary school students under age 15 (grade nine) were not mobilized for the 2012 harvest. However, a credible mechanism to monitor child labor during the harvest period does not exist and reliable statistical data on the reduction of child labor during the harvest is not available.

The Government continues to publicly deny the use of child labor or forced labor in the cotton harvest.(14, 15) NGO and U.S. Embassy reports indicated that in 2012, some incidences were reported of primary school classes closed and children as young as 10 sent to harvest cotton.(4, 11, 13, 16) In addition, reports indicate that officials continued to close secondary schools (colleges and lyceums) during the harvest and forced children ages 15 to 17 to pick cotton to reach the mandated quotas.(4, 6, 11, 13, 16) Reports indicate that the harvest quotas were between 110 and between 175 pounds per day for older children, and 45 to 110 pounds for younger children.(4, 13) The Government's forced mobilization of older children is reported to have increased in several regions during the 2012 harvest.(4, 13, 17)

While harvesting cotton, children may not have access to sufficient food, clean drinking water, or sanitation facilities.(4, 6, 11, 13) Some children resort to drinking water from irrigation drainage canals.(5, 6, 18) In addition, children are paid little and may have food or other expenses deducted from their wages.(3, 4, 6, 11, 13, 16, 19) They work long hours (usually 9 to 10 hours per day and sometimes in extreme temperatures), carry heavy loads, and may be exposed to dangerous pesticides.(4, 6, 8, 11, 19) Children forced to work in the cotton harvest miss weeks of school every year, which may negatively impact their learning.(3, 4, 18) Students who refuse to participate in the cotton harvest risk physical abuse, receiving low grades, or expulsion; their parents may also be threatened by local authorities or assessed fines.(3, 4, 7, 11, 13, 17, 20)

Children have been reported to be working in the cultivation of silkworms, although the extent of the problem is unknown.(9, 21-24) Harvesting silkworm cocoons may require children to gather mulberry leaves to feed the worms and remove their waste at strict intervals seven times a day, working long hours from 4 a.m. to midnight. This strict schedule may deprive these children of sleep and contribute to excessive school absences.(21-23) Silk production has been driven by government quotas imposed on farmers based on the size of the farm, which is similar to those imposed for cotton.(9, 21-23) Reports indicate that families are forced to meet government quotas for silkworm cultivation under threat of fines or losing the lease on their land. In addition, reports indicate that local officials may enforce the quota through threat of delayed payments to farmers or violence.(21-23) These conditions may increase the vulnerability of families and their children to conditions of forced labor.

There are reports that children are trafficked internally and abroad, primarily to destinations across Asia for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation.(14, 17, 28)

There are reports of children working on the streets, but information as to specific hazards is unknown.(11, 25-27)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labor Code of Uzbekistan and the Law on the Guarantees of the Rights of the Child, as amended in 2009, establish the minimum age for work at 16 and the minimum age for part-time light work at 15.(26, 29, 30) The Labor Code also prohibits hazardous labor for minors under age 18.(18)

The Decree on Adoption of the List of Occupations with Unfavorable Working Conditions to Which it is Forbidden to Employ Persons under Eighteen Years of Age presents a list of hazardous activities forbidden for children younger than age 18.(18, 26, 31) This list specifically includes the manual harvesting of cotton. The Decree on Approval of Provision on Requirements on Prohibition of Use of Minors' Labor further bars employers from using children to work under a list of hazardous conditions. These include working underground, underwater, at dangerous heights, with dangerous equipment, or doing work that requires lifting or moving heavy loads.(26, 32) This Decree also grants authority to parents and labor inspectors to cancel the employment contracts of workers younger than age 18 if the work involved could endanger the child's health or well-being.(32)

The Constitution and the Labor Code prohibit forced labor(18, 33) and the Criminal Code states that the forceful deprivation of liberty is punishable by a fine or imprisonment.(34) The Law on the Guarantees of the Rights of the Child prohibits the prostitution, trafficking, and use of children for illicit activities.(30) The Criminal Code penalizes commercial sexual exploitation of children, including child prostitution and pornography.(34) The 2008 Law on Trafficking and the Criminal Code prohibit human trafficking.(34, 35)

On March 26, 2012, the Cabinet of Ministers adopted the Decree on Additional Measures in 2012-13 for Implementation of the Convention on Forced or Compulsory Labor and the Convention on the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (Decree on Additional Measures).(36) A 2012-13 Plan of Action is incorporated in the Decree to assign specific responsibilities to the Ministries of Labor and Social Protection (MOL) and to Foreign Affairs for the implementation of these additional measures.(36)

According to the Law on Education, children have the right to free and compulsory education for 12 years, generally completed from ages 6 to 18.(37) However, as noted above, in practice, many high schools were closed for weeks or months during the annual cotton harvest, thus depriving children of this right.

Uzbekistan

Men are required to serve for one year in the military, with compulsory conscription at age 18.(38, 39)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The tripartite Interagency Working Group (IWG), established in 2011 and led by the MOL, serves as a coordinating mechanism to address labor relations issues, including child labor.(40-42) Objectives of the IWG include reporting to the ILO on the Government's implementation of ratified conventions, preventing forced labor, and protecting working minors.(40, 41, 43-45)

The Government's Interagency Commission on Combating Trafficking in Persons is charged with overseeing efforts to combat trafficking.(14, 27) The Prosecutor General chairs the Commission, with representatives from other government entities such as the Ministries of Labor and Social Protection, Interior (MOI), Foreign Affairs, the National Security Service, and the State Customs Committee.(14) Similarly, local interagency committees to combat trafficking have been established at the provincial, regional, and municipal levels.(14)

The MOL is responsible for carrying out labor inspections, including inspections for compliance with child labor laws.(26, 42) Labor inspectors are not known to inspect the agriculture sector, state-owned enterprises, or unregistered businesses.(42) The MOL reported that a total of 296 labor inspectors were employed in 2012 and that they have received training on child labor.(42, 45) In 2012, the Government reported that inspections of 1,851 workplaces resulted in 448 reported infractions related to child labor. Of these infractions, 432 citations were issued. In addition, 36 employers were fined a combined total of approximately $6,265.(42, 45-47) The Government did not identify, investigate, prosecute, or convict officials complicit in forced child labor during the cotton harvest.(14, 47)

The Decree on Additional Measures requires the MOL to monitor cotton fields each year from August to October to ensure that children are not working.(15, 36, 44) It is not clear how the Decree alters the current duties of the MOL or whether this monitoring system was established for the 2012 harvest.

The Government reported that a June 26, 2012 joint resolution of the Ministry of Secondary Education and the Ministry of Higher Education's Center for Secondary Specialized and Professional Education called for monitoring elementary through secondary students to prevent forced child labor. Government reports indicate that a special working group was formed in August 2012 to prevent the involvement of elementary and middle school students in the cotton harvest and that directives were issued from the Ministry of Public Education prohibiting the use of children through grade 8 in the harvest.(45)

Limited reports indicate that in 2012, some local administrators formed child labor monitoring teams to prevent children under age 15 from working in the cotton harvest.(6, 11, 15) However, it is not known whether these local monitoring mechanisms were established in all cotton growing areas.

Additionally, the Government reported that no cases of forced labor or hazardous child labor were found by these monitoring systems in 2012.(42, 45, 47)

During the 2012 cotton harvest, U.S. Embassy and NGO reports indicate that authorities responded to publicly reported incidences of schoolchildren under age 15 mobilized to work in the fields. NGO follow-up reports indicated that those children had been returned to class.(6, 13, 42) Research did not identify responses to protect children ages 15-17 from hazardous or forced labor during the cotton harvest and to return them to class.

The Government again refused to allow a high-level ILO tripartite mission to observe the cotton harvest and to fully assess the situation of children's engagement in the cotton sector.(4, 8, 13) UNICEF was allowed to observe the cotton harvest and did not identify any children under age 15 subjected to forced labor; UNICEF did note that children ages 15 to 17 were actively mobilized by the Government to work 9 to 10 hours per day to meet a daily quota of 65 to 155 pounds of cotton. However, UNICEF's limited observations were not designed to substitute for the type of comprehensive observation the ILO would conduct.(6, 42)

The Prosecutor General's Office and the MOI are responsible for investigating and prosecuting criminal violations of the worst forms of child labor laws, including trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(14, 26) The MOI's Office for Combating Trafficking is charged with investigating crimes related to trafficking in persons, which may then be prosecuted by the Prosecutor General's office.(14) In 2012, the Government identified 50 child trafficking victims.(48) Although the Government investigated 1,013 criminal trafficking cases and prosecuted 419 cases that resulted in 626 convictions, data on trafficking cases were not disaggregated to indicate how many of those cases involved the trafficking of children.(47, 48)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The 2011-12 National Action Plan for the Application of ILO Conventions (NAP), updated in 2011 by the IWG and approved by the Deputy Prime Minister, serves as a national policy on child labor issues.(26, 36, 44) In addition, the Decree on Additional Measures serves as a policy and action plan for the efforts to address worst forms of child labor.(36) The Decree outlines additional activities to be implemented in 2012-13 in response to ILO Convention requirements, including awareness-raising activities on the worst forms of child labor targeting government ministries, international organizations, students, parents, and employers.(36, 44, 49) No information is available regarding the implementation of these plans during 2012.

Government policies in the cotton sector mandate harvest quotas and authorities organize and enforce forced labor of children and adults.(5, 8) Reports indicate that in 2012, the Government issued and enforced a new internal communication prohibiting the mobilization of primary school children under age 15 to harvest cotton.(8, 15, 42) However, this policy fails to protect children age 15 to 18 from the worst forms of child labor and this internal communication has not been made public.

The Government is implementing the National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons 2011-12, which included awareness-raising activities, victim support services, and interagency coordination.(14, 27)

The Government has other child-focused policies, including the National Program on Improving Quality and Efficiency of Education 2008-12.(50) The question of whether these policies have had an impact on the worst forms of child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

As part of the National Action Plan to Increase the Effectiveness of Combating Trafficking in Persons, the Government supports a shelter in Tashkent for trafficking victims, including children.(14, 27, 28) The shelter provides medical, psychological, legal, and other support services.(14, 27) The Government runs hotlines to report incidents of human trafficking.(14, 48) During the year, the Government conducted awareness-raising campaigns on trafficking, some specifically targeting youth.(14)

The Government reported that in August 2012, a working group convened to plan awareness-raising activities to prohibit the recruitment of primary schoolchildren to work in the cotton harvest.(15) The MOL, in collaboration with the Association of Private Farmers and the Committee of Women of Uzbekistan, conducted awareness-raising seminars for farmers on the ILO conventions in all regions.(8, 15)

The Government of Uzbekistan, however, has not made efforts to implement other programs to combat the worst forms of child labor, especially for children mobilized to work in the cotton harvest. The Government has not conducted research or made information available regarding forced child labor in the harvesting of cotton or silkworms.

The Government provides social protection programs, such as family and child allowances; however, reports indicate that in December 2012, the Government announced that the value of child allowances was reduced for families, and children over age 14 would no longer be eligible for benefits.(51-55) The Government participates in a number of educational, health, and livelihood programs implemented by international organizations.(44, 52, 56-59) The question of whether these programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Uzbekistan

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Uzbekistan:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Coordination and Enforcement	Strictly enforce legislation that prohibits worst forms of child labor in the cotton harvest for all children until age 18.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Target labor and criminal inspections in areas where hazardous child labor is known to occur, especially in the cotton sector.	2011, 2012
	Establish a cotton harvest monitoring system, as mandated in the 2012 Decree, and expand community child labor monitoring teams to all cotton-growing areas.	2012
	Implement recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies, including seeking ILO technical assistance and inviting the ILO or other credible third parties, to observe cotton harvests.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Publish information on criminal investigations and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor and trafficking of children and disaggregate data on trafficking statistics related to children.	2011, 2012
Policies	Cease the practice of closing schools and mobilizing children under age 18 to work in the cotton harvest.	2011, 2012
	Revise policies that mandate cotton harvest quotas to prohibit the forced involvement of all children under age 18 in the cotton harvest.	2012
	Publish and make publicly available official communications regarding child labor policies, including internal communications prohibiting the closure of schools and the mobilization of children for the cotton harvest.	2012
	Assess the impact that existing child and education policies may have on addressing child labor, particularly in the cotton sector.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Expand programs to address the worst forms of child labor, with a particular focus on the cotton harvest.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Conduct research on the prevalence and hazards of children working on the street and of forced or exploitative child labor in the cultivation of cotton and silkworms in order to inform policy and enforcement.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on addressing child labor.	2011, 2012

In 2012, Vanuatu made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the Government began implementing a policy to mandate National Minimum Standards in Education, a key component of which is child protection. Vanuatu also continued participating in the ILO Decent Work Country Program (DWCP) and the Pacific Policy, Advocacy, Planning, and Evaluation Program (PAPE). However, the Government lacks a complete preventive legal framework; Vanuatu has not established a minimum age for hazardous work or developed a list of hazardous activities prohibited to children. Vanuatu has not established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor and does not implement programs to combat the problem. Children engage in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and are found in commercial sexual exploitation.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Vanuatu engage in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and are found in commercial sexual exploitation. Many children engage in agricultural work.(3, 4) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(5, 6) There are reports that some children engage in commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 7)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Employment Act establishes the minimum age for employment at 15. It permits children under age 12 to perform light work on farms owned and managed by a family member, although it does not define what constitutes "light work."(8)

Children ages 12 through 14 may perform light domestic or agricultural work if a family member is employed with the child. Agricultural work is also permitted for children between the ages of 12 and 14 if it is done collectively by the community.(8) The Act prohibits children under age 18 from working on ships; however, with the permission of a labor officer, a child at age 15 is allowed to work on a ship.(8) The Act also prohibits children younger than 16 from working at night and provides restrictions on night work for children between ages 16 and 18. The Government has not established a minimum age for hazardous work, nor does it have a list of hazardous activities or occupations prohibited to children.(8)

The Penal Code prohibits the use, procurement, or sale of a child for prostitution.(9) It also prohibits the use, procurement, or offering of a child for the production of pornography.(9) Together, the Employment Act and the Penal Code prohibit slavery, forced or compulsory labor, and trafficking.(8, 9)

Information was not available on whether there are laws that regulate the use of children in illicit activities such as drug trafficking.

Through the DWCP, the Labor Department has requested financial assistance from the ILO to prepare new regulations on child labor and to translate the revised Employment Relations Bill into local languages.(10) The Government has also made labor law reform a key priority, and has drafted the new legislation to replace the current Employment Act.(11) No information on the progress of these efforts was available at the time of reporting.

Vanuatu has no national army, therefore there is no military conscription.(12)

The Education Act establishes that for children between ages 6 and 14, it is “the duty of the child’s parents to ensure that the child attends a school.”(13) However, education is not compulsory at any age.(4, 14)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of Vanuatu has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.

The National Children’s Committee (NCC) is charged with coordinating Government efforts to improve children’s well-being, including eliminating the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The NCC is also responsible for monitoring child protection issues and for creating a comprehensive and integrated agenda for children’s rights.(15, 16) The Government has also formed a National Child Protection Working Group, which builds community-based child protection systems for prevention, promotion, and response.(17)

The Government participates in the Tripartite Labor Advisory Council, which also includes workers and employers. The Council has an official mandate to provide recommendations and proposals for government policies on employment and labor issues.(18)

The Labor Department is the primary federal agency responsible for enforcing provisions set forth in the Labor Code, including child labor laws. The most recent data from 2011 indicate that the Department employs four labor inspectors.(4, 14)

The Vanuatu Police Force is responsible for enforcing all criminal laws, including those regarding trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The police also collaborate with the Customs, Immigrations, and Labor Departments.(14) Based on the most recent data available, the Police Force employs 50 investigators.(14)

Research did not find evidence that the Government of Vanuatu collects or publicizes data on investigations, violations, or prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Vanuatu has a free and universal education policy. However, in practice, school fees and lack of physical access to schools are significant barriers to education.(4, 13, 19, 20) The lack of standards in this area may increase the risk of children’s involvement in the worst forms of child labor.(13, 21)

In collaboration with international partners, the Government has adopted the Vanuatu Education Road Map (VERM), which establishes a comprehensive strategic direction for the country’s education sector and specifically supports the goal of achieving universal primary education by 2015. VERM has three strategic goals: (1) increase equitable access to education for all people at all levels of education in Vanuatu, including by increasing government grants and phasing out parental contributions; (2) improve the quality of education in Vanuatu; and (3) improve and strengthen the management of the education system.(22)

Nine schools in Vanuatu are implementing child protection policies, reaching more than 2,000 students. Resulting efforts have included trainings for more than 200 teachers and the implementation of codes of conduct for both teachers and students.(17) Trained teachers have also begun conducting trainings with community members and parents on child abuse and protection. Attendance in the implementing schools has improved.(17) In 2012, the Government also began implementing National Minimum Standards in Education. The standards require all primary schools to develop and implement Safe School Policies that cover child protection and emergency preparedness.(17)

The question of whether these education and child protection policies have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the Government continued to implement the DWCP, which specifies the improvement of youth employment conditions as a priority and establishes the number and quality of labor inspection reports filed as measurement toward that goal.(10)

The Government also participates in UNICEF's PAPE Program (2008-12). This regional program supports the development of evidence-based social and economic policies promoting the rights of children.(23) PAPE also provides technical assistance for collecting data on children's issues.(23, 24) Information on specific accomplishments during the reporting period was not available at the time of reporting.

Despite these efforts, the Government does not appear to have programs that specifically address the worst forms of child labor in Vanuatu, namely dangerous agricultural work and commercial sexual exploitation.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Vanuatu:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Define "light work" in the Employment Act.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Set the minimum age for hazardous work at 18 and establish a list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited to children.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Establish a compulsory age for education that is equal to or older than the minimum age for work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2012
	Collect and make publicly available data on investigations, violations, and prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2012
Policies	Explore ways to increase access to schooling and fully implement the policy of free, universal education.	2012
	Assess the impact that existing education and child protection policies may have on addressing child labor.	2012
Social Programs	Implement programs to address the worst forms of child labor, specifically dangerous work in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.	2012

In 2012, Venezuela made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government's current policies and programs aim to alleviate poverty and improve conditions for older working children. However, the Government has not created initiatives to protect children from the worst forms of child labor in domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation. The Government collects some data on the prevalence and nature of the worst forms of child labor, but these data are incomplete and do not address young children. Venezuela also lacks a comprehensive list of hazardous work prohibited to children. Children in Venezuela continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in agriculture.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Venezuela are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in dangerous activities in agriculture.(3-6) Children, primarily boys, are found working in agriculture and may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(3, 4, 7, 8) Girls often work as domestic servants.(3, 5, 6) They may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(8)

National statistics quantifying the current scope of child labor are unavailable. However, the prevalence of children working on the street continues to be a serious problem for the country.(9) According to a Venezuelan NGO, an estimated 15,000 children live and work on the streets in Caracas and other Venezuelan cities.(5) There are reports of children working on the streets selling flowers or other small merchandise, transporting items, and being forced to work as street beggars.(6, 10, 11) These children often carry heavy loads and suffer from respiratory and skin diseases as a result of exposure to unsanitary conditions on the street.(10)

Children are also engaged in dangerous activities at garbage collection sites. They forage through trash for recyclable materials such as aluminum, copper, bronze, paper, and plastic.(6) They are paid very little despite the value of the collected items, frequently work long hours, and are exposed to violence and dangerous conditions.(6)

Children, especially girls, are trafficked within the country for the purpose of sexual exploitation and prostitution.(6, 11, 12) They may be sent to urban areas, such as Caracas and Maracaibo, or to resort destinations, such as Margarita Island.(11)

Venezuela

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Organic Labor Law (LOT) and the Organic Law for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (LOPNA) set the minimum age for work at 14.(13, 14). The LOT allows children between the ages of 14 to 16 to work if consent from their legal guardian is obtained. It also stipulates that children between the ages of 12 to 14 can work with authorization from the National Institute for Minors, if the children continue their studies and the work is commensurate with their physical abilities.(14) The LOT prohibits children under age 18 from working in mines, on ships, or in welding, and from engaging in other dangerous activities that endanger their lives or health, threaten their intellectual or moral development, or delay their physical development.(14, 15) A comprehensive list defining hazardous activities and occupations prohibited to children has not been established.(6, 16)

The LOT also establishes other measures that regulate the employment of minors, including mandatory pre-employment and periodic health screenings, limits on the number of working hours, and conditions of remuneration. Under the LOT’s provisions, children who work as street vendors must carry an identification card that indicates the name of the school they attend and their school’s hours.(14)

The Constitution and the LOPNA prohibit forced labor, debt bondage, slavery, and the trafficking of persons, including children.(13, 17) The LOPNA forbids all forms of sexual exploitation and states that the Government must offer free assistance to children who have been victims of such acts.(17) The Special Law against Computer Crimes prohibits the creation and distribution of electronic pornography involving children, while the LOPNA makes it illegal to photograph or videotape minors for pornographic scenes.(13, 18) Venezuelan law also forbids the solicitation of minors for engagement in sexual acts, including prostitution.(5) The Drug Act prohibits the use, procurement, and offering of a child for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.(19)

Venezuela does not have compulsory recruitment into the armed forces. The minimum age for voluntary recruitment is 18.(20, 21)

The Constitution and the Organic Education Law mandate compulsory primary and secondary education.(17, 22) The LOPNA and the Organic Education Law guarantee free schooling for all children and adolescents.(13, 22) Children generally attend school from age 5 to age 15, but many stop their formal education after the ninth grade.(6, 23)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The System for the Protection of Children and Adolescents is charged with coordinating and protecting children’s rights and addressing child labor issues. The system comprises several representatives from civil society, government ministries, and government councils.(13)

The Ministry of Popular Power for Labor and Social Security (MINPPTRASS) enforces labor laws, including child labor laws.(6, 24) Although the Government has stated that the National Institute for Prevention, Safety, and Health at Work (INPSASEL) and MINPPTRASS carry out child labor inspections in the formal and informal business sectors, there was no publicly available information regarding the number of inspections conducted or the sanctions applied during the reporting period.(6, 25)

Cases of trafficking in persons are handled by the Ministry of Popular Power of the Interior, Justice, and Peace’s (MPPRIJP) Criminal Investigative Division and by the MPPRIJP’s Scientific, Penal, and Criminal Investigative Corps (CICPC).

The CICPC is also responsible for enforcing laws related to sexual exploitation and other illicit activities.(6) There was no information publicly available on the number of identified victims, convictions, or prosecutions for trafficked or sexually exploited children.(6, 11)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Simón Bolívar First Socialist Plan (2007-2013) provides an economic- and social- development roadmap aimed at eradicating extreme poverty by improving access to health care, education, and housing.(26) There is no evidence that the impact of this Plan on the worst forms of child labor has been evaluated.

The Government has a National Plan of Action against the abuse and commercial exploitation of women (PANAESC). Its objectives include preventing the sexual exploitation of children under the age of 18, protecting children from such exploitation, and rehabilitating child victims of sexual exploitation.(27) Similarly, the Government has a National Plan to combat trafficking, which focuses on rehabilitating child victims and providing them with direct assistance for social reintegration.(27, 28)

The Government of Venezuela and UNICEF have a Plan of Action (2009-2013) for children and adolescents that focuses on education, violence prevention, and children's rights protection. While the Plan does not specifically target child labor, it does highlight the paucity of child labor data and identifies child labor indicators as one of its evaluation and monitoring components.(29) As part of its annual work plan, the Venezuelan National Institute of Statistics will be collaborating with UNICEF to create a centralized system that will allow users to report violations of the rights of children and adolescents. The 2011 census data should have included the number of children above the age of 9 employed in the formal sector, but will not capture information on children engaged in the informal economy or those engaged in economic activities between the ages of 5 and 9.(6, 27, 30). The results of the 2011 census have not yet been published.

Venezuela continued its participation in MERCOSUR's Southern Child Initiative to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region. The initiative includes public campaigns against commercial sexual exploitation, trafficking, and child labor; mutual technical assistance activities focused on raising domestic legal frameworks to international standards on those issues; and the exchange of best practices related to victim protection and assistance.(31-33)

Venezuela is a member of the Joint Regional Group for the Americas. The Joint Group, whose members also include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Suriname, and Uruguay, conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America.(34, 35)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government continued to implement the Program to Dignify Working Children and Adolescents (PRODINAT). It aims to eradicate exploitative working conditions and establish healthy and safe business environments in which children above the legal working age may work.(6, 16, 36) Research was unable to confirm how many young workers were assisted through PRODINAT in 2012.

The Government continued to operate the “Negra Hipólita Mission,” which was created to coordinate, promote, and assist vulnerable groups, including street children. One of the Mission's objectives was to rehabilitate and socially integrate children engaged in the worst forms of labor, including those working at garbage collection sites and on the street, back into society.(9, 37) Since the inception of the Mission in 2006, more than 50,000 children have been assisted.(37) The “Children of the Barrio Mission” focused on providing services to at-risk and under-privileged children, including child laborers. Its primary goal was to eradicate exploitation, abuse, and the psychological and physical mistreatment of children.(6, 38) It is unclear how effective the Mission has been at meeting its goals.

Research did not identify any programs targeting children who work in other worst forms of child labor, particularly in agriculture, domestic service, and commercial sexual exploitation.

Venezuela

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Venezuela:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Develop a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited to children.	2009, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Make information on enforcement of child labor, human trafficking, and other laws related to the worst forms of child labor publicly available.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Assess the impact of the Simón Bolívar First Socialist Plan in addressing the worst forms of child labor.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Conduct additional surveys on the worst forms of child labor, particularly in agriculture, domestic service, and commercial sexual exploitation, and make the results publicly available.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Ensure that child labor censuses cover all children under age 18.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Expand existing programs and develop additional programs targeted to children involved in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in agriculture, domestic service, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Yemen

In 2012, Yemen made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government's Central Statistical Office coordinated with ILO-IPEC to release the results of the 2010 National Child Labor Survey. However, gaps in laws, enforcement, policies, and programs to combat child labor remain. Laws on the minimum age for work are contradictory, there is no information available on whether enforcement actions were taken during the period, and the child labor policy has not been implemented for more than 5 years. Both the Yemeni army and rebel groups continue to recruit and use children in combat roles in the country's internal conflict. No evidence was found of government efforts to end the recruitment of children or to provide demobilization and rehabilitation services to children. In addition to child soldiering, children in Yemen are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous activities in the fishing industry and agriculture.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Yemen are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in dangerous activities in the fishing industry and agriculture, and in armed conflict.(3-8)

According to the 2010 National Child Labor Survey (NCLS), approximately 1,309,000 Yemeni children are child laborers, 56.1 percent or 734, 349 of whom are engaged in agriculture.(8) (Data from this survey were not available in time for analysis prior to the release of this report and are not included in the data table above.) Although the extent of their involvement is unknown, children, mainly boys, engage in dangerous agricultural work activities around the production of qat, a mild narcotic legal in Yemen, and in the production of cereals, fruits, and vegetables.(5, 7-9) Through this work, they are exposed to pesticides, injuries related to the usage of tools and machinery, excessive working hours, and heavy equipment.(5, 7) Children engaged in fishing are exposed to extreme temperatures, dangerous tools, and the risk of drowning.(6, 9)

Children in Yemen are vulnerable to recruitment and engagement in the ongoing civil conflict.(3, 4) During the reporting period, children were observed in the ranks of the Central Security Forces, the Republican Guard, and the First Armored Division.(10) Both the Yemeni army and tribal-based factions continued to recruit and deploy children as soldiers, porters, and spies in internal struggles in the north and south.(11-19) Rebel groups have been reported as using children as human shields.(20) Although determining precise ages is a problem due to the low number of birth registrations, reports have indicated that military units have recruited children as young as age 11.(21)

Children are engaged in dangerous work in rock quarries and mines.(5) They also work in welding and glass shops, where they are subject to injury from tools and equipment.(5) Some children work in construction and auto shops, where they risk injuries from tools and equipment.(5, 8) Children working in waste dumps are exposed to numerous health risks, including bodily injury, disease and parasite infections, and tetanus.(22) According to the NCLS, 500,000 children work in the streets.(23) The specific activities performed by these children and the hazards they may face are unknown.

Children, primarily girls, work in domestic service in which they face long hours of work, the inability to leave their employer's home, as well as physical and sexual abuse. Children who work in restaurants also are at risk of sexual abuse.(5, 8)

Yemeni children are trafficked to Saudi Arabia for commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and the smuggling of qat, which is illegal in Saudi Arabia. Once in Saudi Arabia, these children are exposed to a variety of dangers, including work as qat vendors and beggars, and are at risk of commercial sexual exploitation.(24-26) Yemeni children are also trafficked to Saudi Arabia for forced begging.(27) Some Yemeni children in transit to Saudi Arabia have reportedly been abducted by Yemeni rebel groups to serve as combatants.(28)

There are reports of rural children who are trafficked within Yemen to hotels in Aden, Sana'a, Taiz, Hudeidah, and other cities for commercial sexual exploitation.(25, 28) Citizens from Saudi Arabia and other Gulf countries further fuel the demand for commercial sexual exploitation of children in urban areas.(25) Saudi tourists marry Yemeni girls in fake marriages, which can last up to a few months before the tourist either deserts the girl and returns to his country, or takes her back to Saudi Arabia where she is subjected to sex trafficking or abandonment on the streets.(26, 28, 29) Children are also trafficked internally to Aden and Sana'a for forced labor, domestic service, begging, street vending, and to work as unskilled laborers.(25)

Access to education in Yemen remains a serious problem. According to UNESCO, Yemen has a gross enrollment rate of 72 percent, making it one of the 10 countries in the world with the lowest enrollment.(30, 31) Cultural norms and lack of access deter enrollment among children from poor rural areas.(32) Poor rural girls are the most vulnerable to early drop out.(31, 33) Gender inequity in Yemen is apparent in the public schools. For example, according to a recent Save the Children Sweden study, less than half of all boys attend secondary school while only slightly more than 25 percent of girls attend.(26) Parents often pull girls out of school so they can get married, and they rarely finish their education after marriage; there is no minimum age for marriage in Yemen.(34, 35)

In June 2011, Global Communities (formerly CHF International) reported that the internal conflict further reduced enrollment rates through the premature closure of schools at the end of the academic year. Many children have not yet returned to school due to high levels of violence, the nonexistence or destruction of school buildings, the takeover of schools by progovernment and antigovernment forces, and internal displacement of persons in the south.(9, 36) Furthermore, a recent study by Oxfam reported that a significant number of households admitted to pulling their children out of school and putting them to work due to household economic and food security concerns.(37)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Law No. 45 on Child Rights sets the minimum age for employment at 15, requires that all working children ages 15 to 18 have a formal contract and medical coverage, and stipulates that they should not work more than 6 hours a day.(14, 38, 39) Ministerial Order No. 56 (an amendment to Law No. 45) includes a list of hazardous work that identifies 57 types of jobs banned to children under age 18.(38)

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓
	Minimum Age for Work	15
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	18
	Compulsory Education Age	15
	Free Public Education	Yes

However, Labor Law No. 5 sets different limits which appear to contradict Ministerial Order No. 56 of 2004 and it is unclear which law takes precedence.(40) Labor Law No. 5 sets the maximum hours for working children under age 15 at 7 hours a day and 42 hours a week and establishes a minimum age for hazardous work at 15. It also prohibits children under that age from engaging in arduous work, work in harmful industries, or work that is socially damaging.(39, 41) Labor Law No. 5 requires employers to get written consent from a parent or guardian before employing someone under age 15.(41, 42)

Ministerial Order No. 56 prohibits the use of children under age 18 in pornography, forced labor, illicit activities, and human and drug trafficking.(13) Both the Child Rights Act and Ministerial Order No. 56 prohibit the incitement of a child into prostitution.(13, 39) Ministerial Order No. 56

stipulates prison sentences for those who force children into prostitution.(13)

The Child Rights Act and Ministerial Order No. 56 prohibit the involvement of children in armed conflicts.(13, 26) Yemen does not have compulsory military recruitment, and the voluntary recruitment age is 18.(26, 43)

Education is compulsory and free from age 6 until age 15.(44)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The National Steering Committee to Combat Child Labor coordinates child labor issues in Yemen. This committee consists of representatives from the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor (MOSAL), the Higher Council for Motherhood and Childhood (HCMC), the Chamber of Commerce, ILO-IPEC, and local NGOs.(45) The last Steering Committee meeting, held in September 2011, focused on how to secure future funding to combat child labor.(46)

The MOSAL Child Labor Unit (CLU), the Ministry of Interior (MOI), and the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) are all responsible for the enforcement of child labor laws.(47) CLU conducts inspections and informs MOI of any violations.(47) The police investigate cases brought to MOI, and MOJ prosecutes and adjudicates. Research was unable to determine the numbers of inspections or child labor violations found during the reporting period. In the past, inspectors have indicated that they lack adequate finances to conduct their work, including for traveling outside of urban areas.(47) It is not clear whether MOSAL and other national government entities made efforts to enforce child labor laws during the reporting period.

The Technical Committee on Combating Child Trafficking, comprised of the Higher Council of Motherhood and Childhood, relevant ministries, the UN, and local NGOs, coordinates efforts to combat child trafficking and smuggling.(25)

The Ministry of Human Rights, MOJ, the Ministry of Legal Affairs, Parliament, and the Social Fund for Development (SFD) all have supporting roles in combating child trafficking.(25) However, nearly all ministries have had their funding severely curtailed in order to fund attacks against tribal insurgencies, which has hindered the Government's efforts to combat child trafficking.(25, 46, 48)

Research found no information on the number of arrests, investigations, and prosecutions for offenses related to the criminal worst forms of child labor, including trafficking.

Despite legislation that stipulates army recruits must be age 18, both government and tribal forces have systematically violated the law.(26, 49) Government forces have reportedly turned a blind eye to the falsification of child recruits' ages on formal documentation.(12, 50) Research has not identified any instances of arrests or prosecutions for use of children in armed conflict.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2005, the National Policy and Program Framework for the Eradication of Child Labor and Elimination of Its Worst Forms was developed by MOSAL, ILO-IPEC and the HCMC.(39) Although the Government has this comprehensive child labor policy, its implementation has been delayed by more than 7 years due to a lack of funds and poor coordination.(39)

A National Strategy for Addressing Trafficking in Persons was ratified by the Council of Ministers in 2009; research did not reveal any information on its implementation.(25)

Co-led by MOSAL and UNICEF, the Child Protection Sub-Cluster (CPSC) addresses the impacts of the internal strife between government forces and tribal combatants on Yemen's children.(51) The primary responsibilities of the CPSC are to report on child rights violations, assess risks and trends faced by children in the crisis, build capacity among civil society organizations responding to children's needs, and coordinate child protection working groups in all conflict-affected areas.(51) Reports indicate that the Government acknowledges the use of child soldiers and claims it is committed to addressing the problem.(21) However, there is no information on the current status of CPSC efforts, and no evidence of other government policies to address the issue of children involved in armed conflict.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government's Central Statistical Office collaborated with ILO-IPEC, UNICEF, and SFD on a child labor survey, and the Government released the results of the survey in November 2012.(46, 52)

Because of political upheaval during the first half of the reporting period, it is unclear whether the Government, in collaboration with UNICEF and NGOs, continued to operate two reception centers in Sana'a and Haradh for the rehabilitation of child labor trafficking victims.(28) Efforts to combat trafficking in persons in Yemen are hampered by lack of government funding.(21) Other than this effort to assist trafficking victims, research did not identify any social programs to eliminate or prevent the worst forms of child labor.

In an effort to assess child vulnerability trends in response to the crisis, in June 2011, the Ministry of Education partnered with UNICEF to launch a social protection monitoring system that routinely collects household data.(53) Members of the CPSC, including the MOSAL, were designing a plan to send out-of-school children back to school while assuring their protection in 2011. At the midpoint of the reporting period, 857 children from conflict-affected schools were enrolled in “catch-up” lessons in Taiz, and by the end of the reporting period, 24 of 35 schools in Aden had been restored and reopened.(53-55) Despite these efforts, programs to get out-of-school children into temporary learning facilities or their newly rehabilitated schools are lacking. Furthermore, the Government does not appear to have any disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration programs for children affected by armed conflict.

The SFD works with various ministries to achieve poverty reduction through economic and social development in Yemen.(56) Special needs groups, including child laborers and street children, are targeted under the SFD for social protection and education programs in partnership with the Ministry of Education, MOSAL, and the Ministry of Planning and International Cooperation.(57) The SFD has built the capacity of the government and NGOs to implement programs such as improving centers for street children and developing safe child health and educational services.(57) Phase IV of the SFD, which runs through 2015, has received significant funding ($153 million) from the United Kingdom’s Department for International Development (DFID).(58)

The Government’s Social Welfare Fund (SWF) cash transfer program, created to shield low-income households from price and income shocks, currently reaches almost 1 million poor and vulnerable Yemeni households.(59) Among other services, the SWF provides beneficiaries with vocational skills and economic opportunities, including small and micro-enterprise development, in order to eventually graduate from the cash transfer program.(59) DFID provided support of up to $2.3 million in direct cash transfers for 10,000 chronically poor and food-insecure households in 2011.(60) Due to the security situation, DFID scaled down its operation in Yemen during the first half of the reporting period but increased the targeted number of recipients for the 2012-2013 period.(61, 62)

In the past, the Ministry of Youth has collaborated on Middle East Partnership Initiative projects that offer business training for high school youth, which may encourage decent work for youth and reduce their vulnerability to worst forms of child labor. One such project targets youth in Sana’a and Aden for business training, internships, and innovative challenges.(63, 64) Research did not identify whether this collaboration continued during the reporting period, and the issue of whether these social protection programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Yemen:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend Ministerial Decree No. 56, Labor Law No. 5, and Law No. 45 on the Rights of the Child (Child Rights Law) to provide coherence and consistency in the law and to comply with international standards.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Ensure there is sufficient funding for inspections to be carried out in nonurban areas and that inspections are targeted in the sectors where the worst forms of child labor are prevalent.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Record and make public the numbers of inspections, investigations, arrests, and prosecutions for child labor and trafficking-related offenses.	2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Discontinue the use of children in armed conflict and institute criminal penalties for violations of the law.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Zambia

In 2012, Zambia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government has continued implementing its Child Labor Policy. However, there continues to be a lack of enforcement of child labor laws, and limited budgetary and human resources are dedicated to eliminating the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) was moved two times within the reporting period, further hampering efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by reducing the political will and attention to address child labor issues. In addition, the Government has yet to adopt into law the draft statute on hazardous forms of child labor. Although the Government passed the Education Act making education compulsory, it did not include specific ages, which may leave children under the legal working age vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous conditions in agriculture and in mining.

Statistics on Working Children and Education

Children	Age	Percent

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Zambia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous activities in agriculture and in mining.(3-5) There are reports that the worst forms of child labor are used in the production of tobacco. Although information is limited, reporting suggests that children are also used in the production of cotton, maize, coffee, and tea.(3) Children working in these sectors may be exposed to dangerous pesticides and fertilizers, and injuries from carrying heavy loads and using dangerous tools and machinery.(3) Children are also engaged in fishing, although the prevalence of the problem is unknown, and raising livestock. Children working in fishing are susceptible to risks such as drowning or falling ill to water-borne diseases.(3) Children herding livestock may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(6, 7) Children are also engaged in charcoal production, which involves operating baking ovens and being exposed to heavy lifting and unsafe working environments.(3)

Children in Zambia work in mining, primarily in small artisanal and traditional mines where they extract gemstones.(3-5) Limited evidence suggests children extract amethysts, emeralds, aquamarines, and garnets, as well as mine and process lead, zinc, iron ore, and copper. Children reportedly crush stones, quarry rock, conduct rudimentary mine drilling, and scavenge mine dump sites for residual gems.(3-5) These children may work long hours without protective gear, perform night work, be exposed to extreme heat and dangerous chemicals, and suffer injuries and illnesses including cuts and broken bones from flying rocks and tools, impaired vision from wounds, and silicosis and other respiratory problems from contact with dust.(3, 4)

Children are also involved in construction, domestic service, and commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 5) Children working in construction may be exposed to heavy lifting, unsafe working environments, and long hours using basic tools without protective gear.(3) Children working in domestic service may be required to work long hours, performing strenuous tasks, without sufficient food or shelter. These children may be isolated in private homes and are susceptible to physical and sexual abuse.(8, 9) Children of sex workers sometimes become sex workers as well.(10) In urban areas, many orphans and vulnerable children work and beg in the streets.(11, 12) Children working on the streets may be exposed to multiple dangers, including violence, sexual exploitation, and trafficking.(11, 12)

Child trafficking continues to be a problem in Zambia. Some children in agriculture, cattle herding, and domestic service fall victim to internal trafficking, sometimes in exchange for money, goods, and gifts to family members.(13) Children from rural areas are trafficked into forced labor and domestic servitude in urban areas, where some may be beaten and physically and psychologically abused.(3, 12, 13) In urban areas, girls engaged in domestic service are led to believe that they will be allowed to attend school in exchange for their work, but they are often prevented from going to school and denied pay.(3, 13) There are limited reports of boys being used by gangs to load stolen copper from mining dump sites onto trucks.(14)

A number of constraints increase the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Zambia does not provide public schools in every village, so some communities must contribute their own labor and resources to fill this gap. While government primary schools are free, schools are understaffed and parent-teacher association and other associated fees prohibit some students from attending.(3, 15) In addition, Zambia's high HIV/AIDS rates impact child labor, as children orphaned by HIV/AIDS must work to survive, or those with a parent or relative infected with the virus must work to support their family.(13, 16)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Constitution and the Employment Act set the minimum age for employment at 15.(17, 18) The Apprenticeship Act regulates the employment of minors as apprentices, but does not specify the types of work that apprentices can perform. The Employment of Young Persons and Children Act bars children under age 18 from engaging in hazardous labor.(19, 20) While the Government has drafted a statutory instrument that would define the types of hazardous labor prohibited to children, it has yet to be adopted.(3, 21) The Government provides free education up to the ninth grade, and the Education Act of 2011 stipulates that education is compulsory for children of school-going age.(3, 22) However, the act does not provide a specific age or definition of school-going age, which may allow children to leave school before they are legally able to work. The Government has reported to the UNESCO Institute of Statistics that education is compulsory until age 14.(23)

Zambian law prohibits the use of children in military hostilities, and children under 18 years cannot be recruited into the military. However, children over age 16 can be recruited with the consent of a parent, guardian, or the local District Secretary.(3, 24, 25)

The Employment of Young Persons and Children Act specifically prohibits the worst forms of child labor, including child prostitution; slavery; forced military recruitment of children; use of children in illicit activities; and work harmful to the safety, health, or morals of children and young people.(17, 19) The Constitution, the Penal Code, and the Anti-Human Trafficking Act of 2008 prohibit forced labor and the trafficking of children, while the Constitution and Penal Code both prohibit slavery.(3, 12, 17, 26) The Penal Code also prohibits pornography, prostitution, and the sexual harassment of a child in the workplace.(26) However, the penalties for child prostitution violations in the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act are different from those in the Penal Code.(27)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The MLSS is the lead agency for coordinating government efforts on issues of the worst forms of child labor.(3) The MLSS Child Labor Unit (CLU) coordinates with District Child Labor Committees (DCLCs) in 19 of Zambia's 102 districts to combat child labor, increase local awareness of child labor, and mobilize communities against the worst forms of child labor and human trafficking.(3) These committees create awareness of the worst forms of child labor and monitor the implementation of child labor programs at the district and community levels. The CLU has stated its intention to establish DCLCs in all 102 districts but currently lacks the resources to do so.(3) The Government added one new DCLC during the reporting period.(3) The MLSS underwent a number of changes in 2012. The MLSS was moved under two other ministries, including its budget allocations, before again being established as an independent ministry.(3) This reshuffling appears to have impeded efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Zambia by reducing the political will and attention placed on child labor issues.(3)

The Government's Ministry of Home Affairs is in the process of establishing an Inter-Ministerial Committee on Human Trafficking, which will coordinate and share information on trafficking issues among government agencies.(27, 28) Nominated members are from the Zambian Police Service (ZPS) and the Department of Immigration from the Ministry of Home Affairs, the Ministry of Justice, the MLSS, the Ministry of Health, and the Ministry of Community Development Mother and Child Health (MCDMCH).(4, 13, 27, 29) The National Secretariat has been performing these tasks on an interim basis pending the Committee's formation, and is responsible for developing strategies to implement the National Plan of Action Against Human Trafficking.(27) During the reporting period, the Government continued to provide anti-trafficking training to law enforcement officials.(12)

CLU is the primary government agency responsible for implementing and enforcing child labor laws.(3) The CLU

and ZPS partner with the Ministry of Justice; the Ministry of Education, Science, Vocational Training, and Early Education; the MCDMCH's Child Protection Unit, and District Street Children Committees; the Ministry of Gender and Child Development's Child Protection Unit; and the Drug Enforcement Commission.(3) The ZPS Child Protection Unit (CPU) works with MLSS officials to identify and remove vulnerable children from the streets.(30) The ZPS CPU also works with 72 District Street Children Committees to place street children in the worst forms of child labor with families, in foster care, or in children's homes.(27, 30) In addition, the CPU works with immigration officials to combat child trafficking, with local officials regarding crimes against children, with schools to educate and sensitize children about abuse, and collaborates with the Ministry of Justice to investigate and prosecute child labor cases.(29, 30) Enforcement actions were not carried out effectively in some cases as a result of overlapping responsibilities and communication lapses.(30)

The MLSS allocated $900,000 in the 2012 budget to carry out labor inspections.(3) There were 48 labor inspectors during the reporting period. The MLSS reportedly intends to hire additional inspectors in 2013 due to the inadequate number of inspectors in 2012.(3) Due to a lack of transportation and inspectors, regular inspections were not conducted. The MLSS conducted 1,300 labor inspections in 2012.(3) In addition, MLSS conducted labor inspections in public institutions only and did not conduct any in the private sector where child labor is more likely to be found. No child labor cases or prosecutions were recorded in 2012.(3) Violators of child labor laws received mediation or counseling.(3)

The ILO, UNICEF, and IOM collaborated with the Government of Zambia to provide training to inspectors in the past.(30) Although inspectors are aware of the hazardous forms of child labor, there is no official and specific training for labor inspectors regarding the enforcement of child labor laws.(3)

The ZPS Victim Support Unit handles the enforcement of laws against trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and/or use of children in illicit activities.(3) The ZPS CPU enforces child labor-related trafficking laws.(3) No information was available on the number of child trafficking violations and enforcement in 2012; however, the one trafficking conviction in the country involved child trafficking.(3, 29) The CPU employed 12 child protection officers in the Province of Lusaka (up from 10 the previous year) and 70 in the entire country.(3) Inspectors reportedly lacked sufficient office facilities, transportation, fuel, and other necessary resources and therefore could not conduct inspections or investigations.(3)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Zambia continued carrying out the Child Labor Policy which establishes an action plan and designates responsible agencies to address child labor issues.(3) DCLCs and Community Child Labor Committees have been created to help implement the policy. The MLSS continued implementation of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour.(3) This plan identifies five specific priorities for Government focus: improving and enforcing existing laws and policies on child labor, protecting all children from hazardous labor, strengthening institutional capacity, raising awareness, and establishing monitoring and evaluation systems. Efforts to implement the Child Labor Policy reportedly have been restricted due to inadequate funding.(3)

The country's 2011 Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper, Sixth National Development Plan (2011-2016), and National Employment and Labor Market Policy (2006) include the eradication of the worst forms of child labor as a goal.(30, 31) The Government's National Employment and Labor Market Policy proposes interventions to eliminate the worst forms of child labor through services provided in the agriculture, health, and education sectors. In addition, the Policy focuses on providing skills and education to prepare young people for decent and productive work.(20) In accordance with the Sixth National Development Plan, the UN Development Assistance Framework for Zambia includes the prevention, protection, and rehabilitation from the worst forms of child labor as a policy outcome (2011-2015).(32)

The Government also began implementing a 2012-2015 National Anti-Trafficking Plan of Action developed in March 2012 after completing its 2011-2012 National Action Plan on anti-trafficking efforts.(12, 14)

The Government conducted a Labor Force Survey in 2008 that was released by the Central Statistics Office in August 2011.(30, 33) The survey provides statistics on the general labor force and the informal sector; however, information on child labor and forced labor will be published in different reports that were not released during the reporting period.(34)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Zambia participated in the European Commission-funded TACKLE Project (tackling child labor

through education), which included 12 countries and was extended until August 2013. The project includes ILO training on child labor issues for government officials and teachers; the implementation of four Action Programs to assist children exposed to or at risk of child labor, especially those living in vulnerable communities; and raising awareness of child labor through education initiatives.(3, 30, 35, 36) In addition, the project aims to strengthen the capacity of national and local authorities to implement and enforce child labor policies.(3)

In 2012, Zambia participated in the USDOL-funded, 4-year Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, which is active in approximately 40 countries. In Zambia, the project aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(37)

Zambia's MCDMCH operates a pilot social cash transfer program, which provides funds on the condition that parents send their children to school rather than to work.(3) Due to a lack of funding, the scale of the social cash transfer program is not sufficient to reach all Zambian children engaged in or vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Sports and Youth announced the re-launching of skills training camps for youth through the Zambia National Service.(3) The camps will provide life skills training to at-risk youth, including victims of the worst forms of child labor and children living and working in the streets.(3, 30)

The Government of Zambia has programs to combat child trafficking and provides counseling and protection to trafficking victims.(12, 13, 30) While not specifically focused on child trafficking, the Government, with the IOM, conducted a training of trainers for law enforcement officers using a newly developed counter-trafficking training handbook.(38, 39)

With support from the UN Joint Program, the Government of Zambia participates in its "Breaking the Chain of Human Trafficking" campaign that mobilizes local leaders on anti-trafficking efforts and conducts public awareness campaigns. Coalitions were created in 10 districts to continue awareness-raising efforts.(12, 14)

Existing Government programs do not sufficiently address some of the most common worst forms of child labor in Zambia, particularly children engaged in dangerous work in the agriculture and mining sectors and those working on the streets.

Zambia

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Zambia:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Adopt the draft statutory instrument that enumerates the hazardous occupations prohibited for children and apprentices.	2009, 2011, 2012
	Harmonize legislation to ensure that penalties for child commercial sexual exploitation are consistent.	2009, 2011, 2012
	Revise the Education Act to include specific ages, or determine through statutory instrument the school-going age for compulsory education.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish District Child Labor Committees in remaining districts.	2011, 2012
	Implement the planned increase in labor inspectors to effectively enforce child labor laws	2012

Zimbabwe

In 2012, Zimbabwe made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Zimbabwe ratified the CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography and released a Child Labor Survey Report. Zimbabwe maintained large-scale social programs, including Phase II of the National Action Plan for Orphans and Vulnerable Children and the Basic Education Assistance Model Program. However, the Government has not sufficiently funded these efforts. In addition, Zimbabwe continues to lack specific social programs targeting sectors in which the worst forms of child labor are most prevalent. Education is not compulsory or free, which may increase children's vulnerability. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of labor, particularly in hazardous activities in agriculture and in mining.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in Zimbabwe are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, primarily in hazardous activities in agriculture and in mining.(3-8) Although evidence is limited, some children reportedly work in the production of tea, cotton, tobacco, and sugarcane. A Government survey in Zimbabwe stated that children working in agriculture may be exposed to toxic chemicals, use dangerous machinery and tools, lack protective gear, and carry heavy loads.(3, 4, 6, 8-10) While evidence is limited, it is reported that children in Zimbabwe also work in cattle herding.(3, 8) Children herding livestock may suffer injuries such as being bitten, butted, gored, or trampled by animals.(11, 12) In addition, there are isolated reports of children engaged in cattle herding being exposed to sexual abuse.(3)

Although information is limited, there are reports of children working in gold, chrome, and tin mines, and extracting material from underground passages and quarries.(3, 5-7, 13) Children engaged in mining work long hours and use dangerous chemicals, such as mercury, cyanide, and explosives.(3, 4, 13)

While information is limited, children are also reported to be involved in fishing and fishing-related activities.(3, 10, 14) Children in fishing may work long hours, perform physically demanding tasks, and face dangers such as drowning.(15, 16)

According to the UNICEF, approximately 100,000 of Zimbabwe's 1.3 million orphans survive on their own in child-headed households. There are reports of children working on the streets, but specific information on hazards is unknown.(3, 4, 7, 8, 17) Although information is limited, there are also reports that children living on the streets engage in illicit activities, such as drug smuggling, gambling, and commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 4, 18, 19)

Children are trafficked within Zimbabwe and to border towns and neighboring countries in which they are forced to work in agriculture and domestic service and to engage in commercial sexual exploitation.(18, 19) Children working as domestic servants may work long hours, without any days off, and are at risk of harassment and sexual abuse.(4) There are reports of Zimbabwean children being sexually exploited by taxi and truck drivers in exchange for transportation to and across unofficial border crossings with South Africa.(18, 20)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Labour Relations Act of 2002 sets the minimum age for employment at 15 years.(3, 21) However, children ages 13 to 15 may work as apprentices or perform work in a school or a technical or vocational institution.(3, 4, 21) The Labour Relations Act prohibits employers from hiring a person younger than age 18 to perform hazardous work, which is defined as any work likely to jeopardize that person's health, safety, or morals.(3, 21) Hazardous work is also defined in the Children's Protection and Adoption Amendment Act of 2001 (Adoption Act) as any work that jeopardizes or interferes with the education of a child. According to the Adoption Act, hazardous work involves contact with hazardous substances; underground mining; exposure to extreme heat, cold, or noise; night work; and the use of electronically powered hand tools, cutting tools, or grinding blades.(22) The National Service Act of 1979 prohibits persons younger than age 18 from either compulsory or voluntary military service.(23)

International Conventions and Selected Laws on Child Labor and Education

	C138, Minimum Age	✓
	C182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	CRC	✓
	CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	No
	CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	No
	Minimum Age for Work	15
	Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	18
	Compulsory Education Age	No
	Free Public Education	No

Zimbabwe's Constitution and Labour Relations Act prohibit forced labor. The Labour Relations Act includes exceptions in some cases, including the fulfillment of court orders and armed service requirements.(21, 24)

The Criminal Code prohibits engaging a child in the use or dealing of dangerous drugs and bars sexual relations with children younger than age 16.(3, 25) Laws do not prohibit sexual relations with children between the ages of 16 and 18.

Provisions of the Sexual Offenses Act, the Children's Act, and the Censorship and Entertainment Control Act prohibit sexual offenses against children, such as child pornography, prostitution, and other forms of child sexual abuse. The Sexual Offenses Act and Children's Act prohibit procurement of an individual for prostitution inside the country and transporting a person outside of the country with the intention of engaging them in prostitution.(3, 18, 25) Although traffickers can be prosecuted under the aforementioned laws and other immigration and abduction laws for commercial sexual exploitation, there is no legislation in Zimbabwe specifically prohibiting trafficking in persons for purposes other than sexual exploitation.(3, 13, 18) During the reporting period, the Attorney General's Office drafted a more comprehensive piece of legislation that would cover trafficking in persons for both sexual and labor exploitation. However, the bill has not been presented to Parliament. (3, 13, 18)

Zimbabwean law does not provide free schooling or establish a compulsory age for education for children.(3, 8, 26) The lack of free and compulsory education may put children at risk for the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are also not legally permitted to work. School fees are often prohibitively expensive and limit access to education.(27)

In February 2012, Zimbabwe ratified the CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.(28)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Welfare chairs the Government's national steering committee to address the worst forms of child labor. The committee includes several government ministries, international organizations, and civil society groups, such as worker and employer organizations.(27) However, due to a lack of funding, this committee did not meet during the reporting period. A separate committee composed of government ministries related to children's issues met on a quarterly basis.(3) The Government also has an inter-ministerial task force on trafficking in persons. Research did not find evidence that the task force was active during 2012.(18)

The Department of Social Welfare within the Ministry of Labor (MOL) is responsible for enforcing labor laws. The MOL employs approximately 123 labor inspectors for investigating labor-related violations, including those violations involving child labor laws, although many of the labor inspector positions are unfilled due to high turnover.(3) However, the MOL reports that labor inspectors lack the necessary resources to carry out inspections, such as office facilities for maintaining records, transportation, and fuel.(3) While the funding and training labor inspectors receive has increased, these resources remain inadequate for the inspectors to be able to inspect, investigate, and prosecute violations of child labor laws.(3) In addition, the MOL does not disaggregate labor violations by age. Therefore, the number of violations related to child labor is unknown.(3) The MOL did not report any child labor investigations during the reporting period, but stated that violators would face harsh fines and risked the closure of their business.(3)

The Zimbabwe Republic Police (ZRP) shares responsibility with the MOL and the Ministry of Justice and Legal Affairs (MOJ) for enforcing laws against the worst forms of child labor of a criminal nature.(3, 18) The ZRP has Victim Friendly Units in every district. The Victim Friendly Units are trained to address issues related to child labor. In addition, the ZRP has an anti-trafficking desk at the Interpol National Central Bureau office to conduct transnational trafficking investigations.(3) However, according to the most recent reporting available, it appears the ZRP did not investigate any such cases.(18) The lack of investigations relative to the scope and prevalence of child trafficking in Zimbabwe suggests inadequate enforcement. The MOJ oversees all courts, including labor courts. Victim Friendly Courts also address trafficking and child victim cases.(29)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government launched a National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor (Child Labor Action Plan) in 2011, and in 2012, the Government released a Child Labor Survey Report as a part of the Child Labor Action Plan.(3) The Child Labor Action Plan includes activities aimed at strengthening the analysis of child labor issues and the creation of an entity to coordinate responses to the findings of the analysis of child labor issues.(9, 29). However, a member of the national steering committee reports that resources have not been allocated to implement the plan and no further action has been taken during the reporting period.(3, 30) In addition, research did not demonstrate that the results of the Child Labor Survey have been used to inform policies and programs in Zimbabwe.

In 2012, the Government participated in the World Day Against Child Labor.(3) The Government of Zimbabwe also continued to address child labor in its broader poverty reduction, education, and social policy efforts.(3) These efforts occurred in part through the implementation of Zimbabwe's ongoing UN Development Assistance Framework 2012-2015.(31) In the framework, support is provided to the Government regarding the utilization of the Child Labor Survey in development planning.(31)

In 2011, the Government launched Phase II of the National Action Plan for Orphans and Vulnerable Children (2011-2015) (NAP OVC II). The NAP OVC II includes a focus on equity and access to quality education for children.(32-34) It aims to assist 80,000 people, including by providing protection services to 25,000 children.(32, 34) The policy prescribes a three-pronged approach to assisting at-risk children, including: providing child protection and health services, delivering conditional cash transfers, and continuing the Basic Education Assistance Module (BEAM) program.(7, 29, 35) The BEAM program provides basic financial assistance to its enrollees for costs such as tuition and examination fees.(36)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Research found no evidence that the Government of Zimbabwe implemented programs that specifically address the worst forms of child labor. However, the Government participates in a few key social programs that assist vulnerable children and increase educational access, and could potentially have an impact on reducing the worst forms of child labor.

The NAP OVC II provides a cash transfer program that encourages families to keep children in school. The Government of Zimbabwe, with funding from the European Commission and the Governments of the Netherlands, Sweden, and Britain, provided immediate food and health services to high-risk families, including child-headed households.(32, 34) The NAP OVC II also provides for protection services for child victims of abuse, violence, and exploitation.(34, 35) The BEAM program, which aims to keep children in school and to recruit children to enroll who lack access to school as a result of economic hardship, was also continued through the NAP OVC II.(13, 34) However, while international donors continued supporting primary school children, the Government failed to meet its obligation of supporting secondary school students with school fees. The Government only funded the first of three school terms for secondary students during the reporting period.(3)

Additionally, the UNICEF reports that a gap remains in the full national coverage of the program.(3, 37)

The overall impact of these programs on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor is unknown.

With funding from the USAID, the Government of Zimbabwe implemented the Building National Response Capacity to Combat Human Trafficking in Zimbabwe project. The project supports awareness-raising efforts and works to strengthen the national referral system for protection and victim reintegration services, with a special focus on children.(38)

Despite these efforts, Zimbabwe's social programs do not specifically target children working in the worst forms of child labor, such as in agriculture and mining.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Zimbabwe:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Enact the current anti-trafficking legislative proposal to bar trafficking of children for both sexual and labor exploitation.	2009, 2011, 2012
	Establish an age or specified length of study for free and compulsory education that is consistent with Zimbabwe's minimum age for work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Revise laws to prohibit sexual relations with a person below the age of 18.	2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Ensure the steering committee and the inter-ministerial task force on trafficking in persons actively coordinate to address the worst forms of child labor and trafficking in persons.	2011, 2012
	Collect, analyze, and disseminate information on inspection activities to combat child labor and their results.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Provide adequate resources for child labor inspections, combatting child trafficking, and implementing enforcement efforts.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Provide free education to children until they have reached the minimum age to work.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Allocate appropriate resources to implement the Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Utilize the results of the Child Labor Survey Report to inform policies and programs.	2012
Social Programs	Assess the overall impact that existing programs such as those under the NAP OVC II may have on the worst forms of child labor and address any gaps to ensure full national coverage.	2011, 2012
	Create programs that address the worst forms of child labor, particularly in mining and agriculture.	2010, 2011, 2012

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

There is limited information regarding the prevalence and distribution of the worst forms of child labor in non-independent countries and territories eligible for GSP, AGOA, and CBTPA benefits. (1) Statistics on child work and school attendance are often not available from the sources used in this report. In some cases, there is no evidence to suggest that the worst forms of child labor exist in certain non-independent countries and territories. In these cases, when laws appear to meet the guidelines called for in ILO Convention 182 and embodied in the TDA, no recommendations for action have been included.

These non-independent countries and territories generally are not eligible to become members of ILO, so the organization's Minimum Age Convention (No. 138) and the Worst Forms of Child Labor Convention (No. 182) do not apply to the majority of them. (2, 3) Territories are generally subject to the laws of the sovereign country.

Assessments

Evidence suggests that the worst forms of child labor are an issue in some non-independent countries and territories. These entities are assessed in the same manner that all other countries included in this report are assessed. Other non-independent countries and territories do not appear to have a problem with the worst forms of child labor. These entities fall into three types.

The first type of non-independent country and territory involves one in which the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (under 50). For this reason, OCFT does not write profiles on these territories. The three territories that fit this category are Heard and McDonald Islands, the Pitcairn Islands and the British Indian Ocean Territories/Chagos Archipelago. The Heard and McDonald Islands are uninhabited, and the population of the Pitcairn Islands is less than 50 people. (4) The British Indian Ocean Territories is inhabited by U.S. and U.K. military personnel. (5)

The second type of non-independent country and territory is one with no evidence of a worst form of child labor problem and with a good legal and enforcement framework. Such entities will be marked "No assessment". Given the lack of a demonstrated problem, along with the presence of a preventive legal and enforcement framework, OCFT does not include recommendations for these territories. OCFT would likewise not assess these territories' efforts. (There are currently seven territories that fit this category. If new evidence emerged that showed the worst forms of child labor had been eliminated in certain countries, it would be theoretically possible for such countries, as long as they had a good legal framework, to fit into this category.)

The third type of non-independent country and territory is one in which there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem, but that lacks a good legal and enforcement framework. The lack of such a framework is a gap in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. For this reason, such non-independent countries and territories are assessed as "No advancement." In cases in which such a non-independent country or territory receives a suggested action for the first time, however, it is given "no assessment."

Anguilla

In 2012, Anguilla made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the Government participated in a number of activities to improve child protection, including a child abuse awareness campaign where it distributed informational materials and ran radio and television announcements. It also published and distributed a booklet of policy guidelines for safeguarding children. However, the Government appears to lack a list of hazardous work prohibited to children and has not developed an institutional framework or targeted programs to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Although evidence is limited, children are reportedly involved in commercial sexual exploitation in Anguilla.

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Some children in Anguilla are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, specifically in commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 2) Children reportedly perform sex acts in exchange for money and gifts.(1) Evidence suggests that, in some cases, these transactions occur with the knowledge, consent and, sometimes, initiation of the child's parent.(1) However, information about the nature and prevalence of the problem remains limited.

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Education Act sets the minimum age for employment at 14. It also prohibits children of compulsory school age (up to age 17) from working during school hours.(3, 4) The Employment of Children (Restriction) Act prohibits children younger than age 12 from working in any capacity, including light work. Under the Employment of Children (Restriction) Act, children ages 12 to 14 may not work during the school day, and there are limitations on work times and the total number of hours they may work.(3, 5) In addition, they are prohibited from work that may be physically hazardous or requires heavy lifting.(5)

The Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act prohibits all children younger than age 17 from working in industrial undertakings or at night. This provision may leave children age 17 vulnerable to dangerous work in industrial undertakings or at night.(3) The Governor of the Territory has the authority to expand restrictions on child labor.(5) Research did not identify whether Anguilla has a comprehensive list of hazardous work prohibited for children.

The Constitution prohibits slavery and forced labor.(6) The Criminal Code prohibits the prostitution and abduction of children, and the publishing or circulation of indecent materials. The Code also prohibits the use of children for illicit activities.(3, 7) During the reporting period, the Government began drafting legislation that would strengthen protections against child abuse. However, the legislation has not yet been passed, and it is unclear how it may address the worst forms of child labor.(8)

Defense in Anguilla is the responsibility of the United Kingdom (UK). There is no military conscription, and the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is 16.(9, 10)

The Education Act makes education compulsory to age 17.(3, 11) The law also guarantees free education until age 17.(12)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Anguilla has formed a multiagency Child Protection Steering Committee to implement the Child Protection National Action Plan.(13) The Ministry of Health and Social Development (MHSD) is the main coordinating agency responsible for child protection in Anguilla. The MHSD employs social workers to manage and investigate child protection cases.(14) It also works with the Royal Anguilla Police Force to investigate cases involving child abuse, although it is not clear what responsibility the Police Force has for enforcing laws against the worst forms of child labor, particularly commercial sexual exploitation.(15) Research found no evidence that the Government of Anguilla has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

The Employment of Children (Restriction) Act designates the Labor Commissioner as responsible for enforcing child labor laws. The Act authorizes the Labor Commissioner to investigate work sites where children are believed to be employed, and to prosecute, conduct, or defend any information, complaint, or other proceeding arising under the Employment of Children (Restriction) Act.(5)

Research found no evidence that the Government of Anguilla collects data related to cases involving the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government has developed a Child Protection National Action Plan, which calls for the establishment of a child protection protocol and legislative and institutional frameworks to address issues impacting children and their families.(16) The Government has developed Safeguarding and Child Protection Protocols and Procedures that assist in the development of future legislation on child protection, designates clear responsibilities for government agencies, and serves as a guide for recognizing and referring child protection cases.(15, 17) The question of whether this policy has had an impact on the commercial sexual exploitation of children does not appear to have been addressed.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Anguilla continued to participate in Safeguarding Children in the Overseas Territories (SCOT) Program through the program's completion in October 2012. SCOT was sponsored by the UK's Department for International Development.(8, 13, 15) Through the SCOT Program, participating governments received support to implement policies, procedures, and best practices to ensure children's health and safety. In Anguilla, the SCOT program has helped the Government develop child protection protocols, including partnerships with civil society organizations.(13, 18) Additionally, under the SCOT Program, joint training has occurred among the police force, social workers, health workers and teachers to encourage effective reporting and management of child abuse cases.(19) During the reporting period, the Government published policy guidelines for safeguarding children from abuse in Anguilla. The booklet was distributed to government employees, teachers, and other stakeholders that work closely with children.(8, 17) It includes information on how to report child abuse.(17)

During the reporting period, the Government participated in various other activities to address physical, emotional, and sexual abuse of children, including an awareness campaign that distributed informational material and ran radio and television announcements.(8, 20)

The question of whether these programs have an impact on the commercial sexual exploitation of children does not appear to have been addressed. Research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to directly combat commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Anguilla:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the law to ensure that children age 17 are protected from dangerous work in industrial sectors.	2011, 2012
	Clarify whether Anguilla has codified a list of hazardous activities prohibited for children under age 18.	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Collect, analyze, and disseminate information regarding the enforcement of relevant laws protecting children from commercial sexual exploitation.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Assess the impact that the Child Protection National Action Plan and Safeguarding and Child Protection Protocols and Procedures may have on addressing commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2010, 2011, 2012
Social Programs	Collect, analyze, and disseminate information regarding the prevalence and nature of the commercial sexual exploitation of children and other worst forms of child labor to guide the development of policies and programs to address the problem.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact of existing social programs on the commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement programs to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2011, 2012

British Virgin Islands

For the 2012 reporting period, no assessment has been made regarding the British Virgin Islands' efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor because this 2012 report is the first year suggested actions are included for the British Virgin Islands. While there is no evidence of a problem, it is unclear whether the Government has developed a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no evidence that children in the British Virgin Islands are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The minimum age for employment under the Labor Code of 2010 is 16. Children younger than age 18 are prohibited from hazardous work, as determined by the Minister of Labor. (1) Children age 14 to 16 may perform light work with approval from the Minister of Labor. Children younger than age 18 are prohibited from night work. (1) Children between ages 16 and 18 may operate heavy machinery if they receive sufficient training and supervision. The Labor Code holds both employers, and parents or guardians with knowledge, liable for employing a child in contravention of the Labor Code. (1) The Labor Code also provides for the removal and rehabilitation of children subjected to the worst forms of child labor. No information was found on whether the Government has developed a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children. (1)

The Constitution prohibits slavery and forced labor. (2) Under the Criminal Code, trafficking, enslaving, and bonding children are illegal. The Criminal Code also prohibits the production, publication, and possession of child pornography. (1, 3, 4) The Labor Code prohibits child prostitution and the use of a child for illicit activities. (1)

Defense in the British Virgin Islands is the responsibility of the United Kingdom. There is no military conscription, and the minimum age for voluntary recruitment is 16. (5, 6)

Education is free and compulsory until age 16. (7, 8)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for a coordinating mechanism to address the worst forms of child labor. The Commissioner of Labor may appoint inspectors to enforce the provisions of the Labor Code.(1)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address the worst forms of child labor.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the prevention of the worst forms of child labor in the British Virgin Islands:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Clarify whether British Virgin Islands has codified a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children under age 18.	2012

Christmas Island

For the 2012 reporting period, no assessment has been made regarding the Christmas Island's efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor because there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and the country has a good legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address the worst forms of child labor.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no evidence that children on Christmas Island are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(1)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Christmas Island is subject to the child labor laws of the state of Western Australia.(1) The Western Australia Children and Community Services Act 2004 prohibits the employment of children younger than age 15 in a business, trade, or for-profit occupation.(2) The Department of Child Protection can issue an order to stop a child from working if there is a risk of harm.(1) No information was found on whether any laws define hazardous work or establish a minimum age for it.

The Western Australia Prostitution Act of 2000 prohibits inducing a child to act as a prostitute.(3, 4) Both the Western Australia Children and Community Services Act and the federally enacted Commonwealth Criminal Code Act 1995 of Australia proscribe the possession, production, and distribution of child pornography.(2, 5, 6) The Commonwealth Criminal Code Act 1995 of Australia also criminalizes all forms of slavery, forced labor, the use of children for illicit activities, and trafficking in children.(6)

Defense of Christmas Island is the responsibility of the Australian Defense Force, which has a voluntary recruitment age of 17 and a minimum combat age of 18.(7-9)

Public education is free on Christmas Island. The Western Australia School Education Act makes education compulsory until age 17.(1, 10-12)

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for a coordinating mechanism to address the worst forms of child labor.

The Australian Federal Police, the Department of Immigration and Citizenship, and the Department of Regional Australia enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 4, 11)

The Australian Federal Police is responsible for investigating the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including pornography.(4)

The Australian Federal Police has jurisdiction in trafficking matters and its Human Trafficking Teams investigate human trafficking for the purpose of transnational sexual and labor exploitation.(1, 5) The Australian Federal Police Child Protection Operations Team performs an investigative and coordination role for multijurisdictional and international online child sex exploitation issues.(1, 4, 5)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address the worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address the worst forms of child labor.

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address the worst forms of child labor.

Cook Islands

In 2012, the Cook Islands made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of the Cook Islands passed the Employment Relations Act 2012, which sets a minimum age for work in the territory for the first time. The Government established a Committee for Children. It also began developing a new National Plan on Children during the reporting period. Although information is limited, anecdotal evidence suggests that some children may be involved in commercial sexual exploitation in the Cook Islands.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Although information is limited, anecdotal evidence suggests that some children may be involved in commercial sexual exploitation in the Cook Islands.(1, 2) However, there is no data on the problem and information about the nature and prevalence of the problem remains limited.

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Cook Islands is a self-governing territory of New Zealand.(1) The territory follows a combination of its own laws and some of the laws of New Zealand and the United Kingdom that date prior to self-government in 1965.(1, 3) In December 2012, the Cook Islands enacted the Employment Relations Act 2012, which replaces the Industrial and Labor Ordinance of 1964.(4, 5) The new Act attempts to bring local labor laws in closer alignment with international standards on minimum age and dangerous occupations. The new Act prohibits children under 13 years of age from any employment.(5) A school-aged person, defined as 13 to 16 years old, is prohibited from working during normal school hours, for more than 10 hours per week, or for work other than light work. Light work is defined as work that does not threaten the child's health and safety, or hinder the child's education or vocational orientation and training.(6) The new law does not include any provisions regarding hazardous work at night; however, a New Zealand law, the Health & Safety in Employment Act 1992, has these provisions which may still apply. The Employment Relations Act 2012 prohibits children under age 18 from working in hazardous occupations. However, research indicates that a list of hazardous occupations has not been developed.

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

Forced labor and compulsory labor are criminal acts under the Cook Islands Prohibition of Forced and Compulsory Labor Ordinance and Amendment Acts.(7-9) Trafficking in persons cross-border is illegal under the Cook Islands Crimes Amendment Act of 2004, but it is not clear that internal trafficking is addressed in the Act.(10, 11)

The Cook Islands Crimes Act of 1969 prohibits prostitution. The Act criminalizes brothel-keeping; living on the earnings of the prostitution of another person; procuring a girl to have sex with a man who is not her husband; and selling, distributing, or otherwise exhibiting indecent documents.(10, 12) The Cook Islands law does not currently address child prostitution or child pornography.(13) In 2010, the Government of the Cook Islands began a comprehensive review of the Crimes Act with the assistance of the Australian Attorney General's Office. The review recommends amendments to many provisions of the Act, including criminalizing child prostitution and child pornography.(1, 13) During the reporting period, the Government consulted with government ministries and NGOs to canvass their views on updating the Act.(13)

No information was found to suggest laws exist prohibiting the use of children for illicit activities.

Defense is responsibility of New Zealand in consultation and at the request of the Cook Islands and at its request.(14) There are no armed forces or military conscription in the Cook Islands. The minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is 17. Children under age 18 are completely protected from engagement in combat.(15-18)

Under the Education Act of 2012, education is compulsory to age 16.(19) The Government provides free primary and secondary schooling.(19-21)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Child and Family Division of the Ministry of Internal Affairs holds primary responsibility for monitoring the development and protection of children.(10) Following recommendations from the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Child and Family Division has established a Committee for Children to monitor all aspects of the development of children guided by the CRC.(5, 6) In 2012, the Ministry of Health assumed coordinating responsibility for national efforts to comply with the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, including its two optional protocols.(6)

The Labor and Consumer Affairs Division of the Government monitors the implementation of child labor laws in the Cook Islands. The Chief Censor has responsibility for issues of pornography.(10) The Ministries of Tourism, Culture, Education, Foreign Affairs, Health, and Justice, as well as the police also play roles in protecting children.(10)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Past reporting indicated the Government of the Cook Islands collaborated with nongovernmental organizations to develop a National Plan of Action on the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children.(10, 22, 23) During the reporting period, the Government decided instead to prioritize the development of a broader National Plan on Children affecting a wide range of issues. In May 2012, the Government received assistance from UNICEF to develop a national policy on children and a national monitoring mechanism. The policy is still in development.(5)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

A new Social Impact Fund, jointly funded by the Cook Islands and New Zealand governments, was established in 2012 to support NGOs that carry out social programs, including programs for the safety and protection of children.(5)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in the Cook Islands:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the Cook Islands Crimes Amendment Act 2004 to clarify that the prohibitions extend to internal trafficking in persons.	2011, 2012
	Develop a list of hazardous occupations.	2012
	Amend the Crimes Act to specifically address and apply higher penalties for child prostitution and child pornography.	2012
	Clarify whether a law exists that prohibits the use of children in illicit activities.	2011, 2012
Policies	Continue to develop and implement the National Plan of Action on Children.	2012
Social Programs	Collect, analyze, and disseminate data regarding the prevalence and nature of commercial sexual exploitation of children to guide the development of policies and programs to address the problem.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Falkland Islands (Islas Malvinas)

For the 2012 reporting period, no assessment has been made regarding the Falkland Islands' efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor because this 2012 report is the first year suggested actions are included for the Falkland Islands. Although there is no evidence of a problem in the territory, the Government does not have a sufficient legal framework to protect all children from human trafficking for the purposes of labor exploitation.

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no evidence that children in the Falkland Islands are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Falkland Islands Employment of Children Ordinance prohibits the employment of children younger than age 16. It also makes it illegal to employ children ages 16 to 18 during school hours; if the work may harm their health, safety, or morals; or if the work involves lifting, carrying, or moving items that may injure them.(1) The United Kingdom Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act makes it illegal to employ children in work that exposes them to physical, psychological, or sexual abuse. It also protects children from work that is underground; underwater; at dangerous heights or in confined spaces; or that requires the use of dangerous machinery, equipment, or tools without training and supervision.(1, 2) Children younger than age 18, including those who have completed compulsory schooling, may not work at night in any industry.(2, 3) No information was found on whether the Government has developed a more comprehensive list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children.

The Falkland Islands Constitution Order 2008 prohibits slavery and forced labor.(4) The Sexual Offenses Act prohibits procuring a child under 18 for prostitution, or causing or inciting a child under 18 to engage in prostitution or pornography. The Act also makes it a crime to take, show, or possess indecent images of children.(5) The Child Abduction Act of 1984 makes it a crime to take or send a minor under 16 out of the country without parental or guardian consent.(5, 6)

The Sexual Offenses Act prohibits both internal and cross-border trafficking of persons for the purposes of sexual exploitation. However, it is unclear whether the law similarly protects children, particularly those older than 16, from internal and cross-border trafficking for labor exploitation.(5)

Defense in the Falkland Islands is the responsibility of the United Kingdom. There is no military conscription, and the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is 16.(7, 8)

The Education Amendment Ordinance of 2008 makes education free and compulsory to age 16.(1, 9)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for a coordinating mechanism to address the worst forms of child labor.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address the worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address the worst forms of child labor.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the prevention of the worst forms of child labor in the Falkland Islands:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Ensure that the list of hazardous activities prohibited to children is comprehensive.	2012
	Ensure the law protects all children under 18 from trafficking for any purpose, including labor exploitation.	2012

Gibraltar

In 2012, Gibraltar made a significant advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. While there is no evidence of a problem, the Government has made meaningful efforts to strengthen its preventive legal framework to protect children from exploitative labor. The Government enacted the Crimes Act of 2011, which includes child labor provisions. The new Act outlines prohibitions on human trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation and broadens protections from commercial sexual exploitation of children to cover both boys and girls. The law does not appear to protect children ages 16 and 17 from hazardous work.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no evidence that children in Gibraltar are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(1, 2)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Gibraltar follows the child labor laws of the United Kingdom.(1) According to the British Children and Young Person's Act of 1933, a child can start working part-time at age 14 and full-time at the end of the school year in which the child will be age 16. The Government of Gibraltar's Working Time Act prohibits children under age 16 from performing activities that are dangerous to their life, health, or morals.(3, 4) The law does not appear to protect children ages 16 and 17 from hazardous work.

The Gibraltar Constitution Order of 2006 prohibits slavery and forced and compulsory labor.(5) In November 2012, the Government enacted the Crimes Act of 2011. The Act explicitly prohibits cross-border human trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation. (2, 6) It is unclear whether the law similarly prohibits cross-border trafficking for the purposes of labor exploitation. Unlike the previous Crimes Act, which has been repealed, the new Act protects both boys and girls from commercial sexual exploitation, including in the forms of prostitution and pornography.(2, 6) No information was found to suggest that laws exist prohibiting the use of children in illicit activities.

The recruitment age for the Royal Gibraltar Regiment is 16.(7)

Education is compulsory through age 15. Primary and secondary education is free to all residents of Gibraltar.(8, 9)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for a coordinating mechanism to address the worst forms of child labor.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address the worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address the worst forms of child labor.

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the prevention of the worst forms of child labor in Gibraltar:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended

	Clarify whether laws exist regarding the use of children for drug trafficking or other illicit activities.	2011, 2012

Montserrat

In 2012, Montserrat made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. While the Government continued to participate in the UK-sponsored Safeguarding Children in the Overseas Territories (SCOT) Program to enhance child protection efforts, no institutional mechanisms to coordinate efforts have been created to combat commercial sexual exploitation. Further, the laws do not protect boys from prostitution, and the Employment Act does not protect children ages 15 to 18 from performing dangerous work. Although limited, there is evidence that some children in Montserrat are involved in commercial sexual exploitation in exchange for money and material goods.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There are reports that some children in Montserrat are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation in exchange for money and material goods.(1, 2) Information about the nature and prevalence of the problem remains limited.

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The minimum age for employment under the Montserrat Employment Act is 14. Children younger than age 15 are prohibited from industrial undertakings, unless the work is not dangerous and only family members are employed in the same undertaking by the company.(3) Therefore, the law does not protect children ages 15 through 17 from dangerous activities, and research found no evidence of a comprehensive list prohibiting children from hazardous work.

The Montserrat Penal Code prohibits the prostitution of girls.(4) The prostitution of boys is not specifically prohibited under the law. Child pornography is illegal in Montserrat.(4)

The Constitution of Montserrat prohibits slavery and forced labor.(5) Abduction and kidnapping are punishable under the Penal Code; these provisions may be used to prosecute traffickers.(4) No information was found on whether laws exist regarding the use of children for drug trafficking or other illicit activities.

Defense of Montserrat is the responsibility of the United Kingdom (UK). There is no military conscription, and the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is 16.(6, 7)

The Education Act of 2004 makes education compulsory to age 16. The Government provides free education from nursery through secondary school.(8, 9)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Research found no evidence that the Government of Montserrat has established a coordinating mechanism to combat commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Royal Montserrat Police Service has primary responsibility for enforcing laws involving children. The Department of Social Services employs social workers who work on child protection issues.(10)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Research found no evidence that the Government has established a policy to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Montserrat.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the Government of Montserrat continued to participate in the SCOT Program, which concluded at the end of 2012. The Program was sponsored by the UK's Department for International Development.(11, 12) Through the SCOT Program, participating governments received capacity building and advisory support to implement policies, procedures, and best practices to ensure children's health and safety.(11) The question of whether the SCOT Program had an impact on the commercial sexual exploitation of children does not appear to have been addressed. Research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs targeting the worst forms of child labor, specifically commercial sexual exploitation.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Montserrat:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Raise the minimum age for all types of dangerous work to 18 and establish a list of hazardous work that children are prohibited from engaging in.	2011, 2012
	Ensure that laws against commercial sexual exploitation protect all children, regardless of gender.	2009, 2011, 2012
	Clarify whether laws exist regarding the use of children for drug trafficking or other illicit activities.	2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2010, 2011, 2012
Policies	Establish a policy to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Montserrat.	2012
Social Programs	Collect, analyze, and disseminate information regarding the prevalence and nature of the commercial sexual exploitation of children to inform the establishment of policies and programs to address the problem.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
	Assess the impact the SCOT Program may have on addressing commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Implement programs to address the worst forms of child labor, specifically commercial sexual exploitation.	2011, 2012

Niue

For the 2012 reporting period, no assessment has been made regarding Niue's efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor because there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and the country has a good legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no evidence that children in Niue are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(1)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Niue Public Service Regulations 2004 prohibit the employment of children under the age of 16. Research did not reveal whether the law defines a minimum age for employment in hazardous work or establishes a list of hazardous activities prohibited to children.(1)

The Terrorism Suppression and Transnational Crimes Act makes trafficking in persons a crime.(1) No information was found on whether laws exist regarding the use of children for drug trafficking or for other illicit activities. The Niue Act prohibits brothels and prostitution.(1) Research did not reveal whether there are laws that specifically address child prostitution and other forms of commercial sexual exploitation of children, such as pornography.

There is no military in Niue, as defense is the responsibility of New Zealand. There is no military conscription, and the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is 17.(1-3) Children under age 18 are completely protected from engagement in combat.(4)

Education in Niue is free, and the Education Act makes school compulsory through age 16.(1)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for a coordinating mechanism to address the worst forms of child labor. The National Coordinating Committee for the Convention on the Rights of the Child (NCCCRC) coordinates and monitors implementation of national policies related to children's rights and protections.(1) The NCCCRC is chaired by the Minister of Health and includes representatives from the Departments of Education, Crown Law, Community Affairs, Justice, Statistics, and Environment.(1)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address the worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address the worst forms of child labor.

Norfolk Island

In 2012, Norfolk Island made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. While there is no evidence of a problem, the Government lacks a complete preventive legal framework. Legislation fails to prescribe a minimum age for employment, prohibit hazardous work for children, and fully protect minors under 18 from exploitation in prostitution. However, in November 2012, the Government of Norfolk Island, through the Legal Service Unit, began preparing legislative amendments to address these gaps.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no evidence that children on Norfolk Island are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(1)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no minimum age for employment on Norfolk Island. Children younger than age 15, however, are subject to limitations under the Norfolk Island Employment Act of 1988.(1, 2) Children younger than age 15 may not work more than 20 hours a week, at night, or during school hours.(3) Parental consent and written agreement is required to employ persons younger than age 18.(3) Information is limited, but it does not appear that Norfolk Island has restrictions on hazardous child labor. However, employers have a duty to provide a safe working environment and, without any charge to their employees, the required safety equipment and clothing.(2) No information was found on whether the Government has developed a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children.

Australia's Commonwealth Criminal Code Act 1995, which applies to Norfolk Island, criminalizes all forms of slavery and forced labor, trafficking in children, forced prostitution, and child pornography. The Norfolk Island Criminal Code Act 2007 prohibits sexual servitude, child pornography, and the provision of a controlled substance to children for sale or distribution.(3, 4) The Criminal Law Amendment Act 1993 makes it illegal to employ a person younger than age 16 for the purposes of prostitution.(3) Therefore, the law fails to fully protect children ages 16 to 18 from prostitution.

Defense of Norfolk Island is the responsibility of the Australian Defense Force, which has a voluntary recruitment age of 17 and a minimum combat age of 18.(5-7)

Public education is free.(8) The Norfolk Island Education Act makes education compulsory through age 15.(1, 2)

In November 2012, the Government of Norfolk Island, through the Legal Service Unit, began preparing legislative amendments to address gaps in its legal framework to enhance protections for children vulnerable to exploitative labor.(1, 9) Research does not indicate that such amendments have been passed or implemented.

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for a coordinating mechanism to address the worst forms of child labor.

Employment inspectors and child welfare officers, in accordance with the Child Welfare Act of 1937, monitor the employment of young workers and take action with regard to their protection.(2, 9) The Australian Federal Police enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(3) The Australian Federal Police Human Trafficking Teams investigate human trafficking for the purpose of transnational sexual and labor exploitation.(2) The Australian Federal Police Child Protection Operations Team performs an investigative and coordination role for multijurisdictional and international online child sex exploitation issues.(3)

During the reporting period, the Government of Norfolk Island began to actively implement the Child Welfare Act of 2009.(10) The Act protects children under the age of 18 from sexual and financial exploitation by allowing officials to take children at risk of harm or injury into safe custody.(9, 11) Further details are not available.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address the worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address the worst forms of child labor.

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the prevention of the worst forms of child labor in Norfolk Island:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Establish a legal minimum age for employment.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Establish laws to prohibit children under age 18 from engaging in hazardous work.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Amend the Criminal Law Amendment Act 1993 to protect all children younger than age 18 from prostitution.	2010, 2011, 2012

da Cunha. While there is no evidence of a problem, the Government may lack legislation prescribing a minimum age for non-hazardous employment.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no evidence that children in Saint Helena, Ascension, and Tristan da Cunha, are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(1, 2)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

It is unclear whether the law sets a minimum age for work. The Education Ordinance prohibits children of compulsory school age from working during school hours.(3) The Welfare of Children Ordinance sets the minimum age for hazardous work at 18 years of age. It prohibits children from being employed in activities that may be detrimental to their health, education, or development.(2, 4) It also prohibits children under age 15 from employment on vessels other than those that employ family members only.(4) No information was found on whether the Government has developed a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children.

The Constitution prohibits slavery and forced labor.(1) No information was found on whether laws exist regarding the use of children for drug trafficking or other illicit activities.

Defense in Saint Helena is the responsibility of the United Kingdom (UK). There is no military conscription, and the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is 16.(5, 6) In Saint Helena and Tristan da Cunha, the Education Ordinance makes education free and compulsory to age 15.(7) In Ascension, education is free and compulsory to age 16.(7, 8)

Saint Helena, Ascension, and Tristan da Cunha (formerly called Saint Helena)

For the 2012 reporting period, no assessment has been made regarding Saint Helena, Ascension, and Tristan da Cunha's efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor because this 2012 report is the first year suggested actions are included for Saint Helena, Ascension, and Tristan

Institutional Mechanisms of Coordination and Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for a coordinating mechanism to address the worst forms of child labor. The Department for Employment and Social Security is responsible for employment issues.(9)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address the worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the Government continued to participate in the Safeguarding Children in the Overseas Territories (SCOT) Program, which concluded at the end of 2012. The Program was sponsored by the UK's Department for International Development.(2) Through the SCOT Program, participating governments received capacity building and advisory support to implement policies, procedures, and best practices to ensure children's health and safety.(10)

Based on the reporting above, the following action would advance the prevention of the worst forms of child labor in Saint Helena, Ascension, and Tristan da Cunha (formerly called Saint Helena):

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Clarify a legal minimum age for work.	2012

Tokelau

For the 2012 reporting period, no assessment has been made regarding Tokelau's efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor because there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and the country has a good legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no evidence that children in Tokelau are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(1)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

New Zealand legislation does not apply to Tokelau, unless it is extended with Tokelauan consent. No evidence was obtained to indicate that New Zealand laws against the worst forms of child labor have been extended to Tokelau. No information was found on whether the law establishes a minimum age for employment or engagement in hazardous work in Tokelau.(1)

The Tokelau Crimes, Procedures, and Evidence Rules Act of 2003 prohibits prostitution and the possession, sale, or exhibition of pornography.(2) No information was found on whether laws exist regarding forced labor and trafficking in

Turks and Caicos Islands

In 2012, the Turks and Caicos Islands made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. While there is no evidence of a problem, the Government lacks a complete, preventive legal framework. The Turks and Caicos Islands have not established a minimum age for performing hazardous work, leaving children under 18 vulnerable.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no evidence that children in the Turks and Caicos Islands are engaged in the worst forms of child labor. However, anecdotal evidence suggests that the islands' 2,000 stateless children may be vulnerable to trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation.(1)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Although the Turks and Caicos Islands is a territory of the United Kingdom (UK), it writes its own legislation and does not follow UK laws.(2, 3)

The minimum age for employment in the Turks and Caicos Islands is 16.(4) Children younger than age 16 may be employed with the written consent of a parent or guardian. Research found no evidence of a minimum age for hazardous work or a comprehensive list prohibiting children from hazardous work.

Slavery and forced labor are prohibited by the Constitution.(3) No information was found on whether laws exist regarding the use of children for drug trafficking or other illicit activities.

Defense in the Turks and Caicos Islands is the responsibility of the UK, and there is no military conscription. The minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is 16.(5, 6)

Education is compulsory through age 16.(7) Research did not find complete information on the question of whether education is free.

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for a coordinating mechanism to address the worst forms of child labor.

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address the worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Turks and Caicos continued to participate in the Safeguarding Children in the Overseas Territories (SCOT) Program through the program's completion in October 2012.(8) The SCOT Program was sponsored by the UK's Department for International Development. Through the SCOT Program, participating governments receive capacity building and advisory support to implement policies, procedures and best practices to ensure children's health and safety.(9)

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the prevention of the worst forms of child labor in the Turks and Caicos Islands:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Establish a minimum age for hazardous work and a comprehensive list prohibiting children from hazardous work.	2011, 2012
	Clarify whether laws exist regarding the use of children for drug trafficking or other illicit activities.	2011, 2012

Wallis and Futuna

For the 2012 reporting period, no assessment has been made regarding Wallis and Futuna's efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor because there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and the country has a good legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

There is no evidence that children in the Wallis and Futuna Islands are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(1, 2)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

French law applies in the Wallis and Futuna Islands.(3, 4)

The French Labor Code prohibits employment for persons younger than age 16, with some exceptions for apprenticeships and other alternative education programs, light work during holidays, and work within the entertainment industry.(5-7) Minors younger than age 18 are prohibited from certain dangerous jobs and from working more than 7 hours a day or 35 hours a week. Prohibited dangerous jobs include working in plants, factories, construction sites, and workshops.(6, 7)

The French Penal Code prohibits slavery, forced labor, and the use of children in illicit activities such as transporting or selling drugs.(8) The Penal Code prohibits trafficking in children and provides for appropriate penalties for offenders.(6) Procuring and prostituting a child is also prohibited under France's Penal Code and such offenses carry appropriate penalties.(6)

Under the French Penal Code, it is unlawful to take, record, or send a pornographic image of a minor with the intention of circulation. Such a crime carries appropriate penalties, as does the crime of distributing a pornographic image of a minor through import or export.(8)

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

The minimum age for admittance into the French Armed Forces is 17.(9, 10) There is no mandatory conscription.(11)

Education is free and compulsory through age 16.(2, 12)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for a coordinating mechanism to address the worst forms of child labor. French officials report that no violations of child labor were found or investigated during the reporting period.(2)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address the worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Since there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address the worst forms of child labor.

West Bank and the Gaza Strip

During 2012, the Palestinian Authority (PA) made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the areas of the West Bank under PA control. The PA amended the Children's Law to include stiff penalties for child labor violations. While the PA may have started some initiatives to generally address the social protection of vulnerable children, there is no evidence of any targeted programs for children working in dangerous activities on the streets or in agriculture. The PA continued to lack an adequate number of inspectors and child protection officers to enforce child labor laws. Although the PA solicited donor support to hire additional inspectors and expand vocational programs for youth, it did not receive such funding. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in dangerous activities in agriculture and on the streets.

Prevalence and Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Children in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, many of them in dangerous activities in agriculture and on the streets.(3-9) Limited evidence suggests that some children working in agriculture help to cultivate dates.(4, 8, 10) Children working in date cultivation may work in trees for long hours. There is limited evidence that children work in the farming of fruits and vegetables such as peppers and tomatoes.(4) Palestinian children working in agriculture apply harmful pesticides.(9) Some may also use dangerous tools and carry heavy loads.(3) During the reporting period, the PA compiled reports of children trafficked to, from, and within the West Bank for work in Israeli agricultural settlements in the West Bank and sites located within Israel.(7)

Children engage in street vending, which involves working long hours standing in the sun and traffic, and working as a porter, which may involve carrying heavy loads. (5, 7, 11) The PA's Ministry of Labor (MOL) reports that many children working on the street do so all day, often without food or water. (6, 12) Children working in the streets are vulnerable to harassment and assault.(6, 11, 13) Some children work in auto body shops and are exposed to unsafe tools and machinery.(14, 15) Children also collect metals and other salvageable materials from garbage dumps and structures demolished from the on-going conflict. This scavenging exposes children to harmful and unsanitary materials, as well as to potential hazards from unexploded ordnance or structures that may collapse.(5, 9, 11, 16)

Children in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip collect pebbles and gravel for construction purposes, and limited evidence suggests that children may also perform other activities in construction.(5, 7, 9, 10, 13, 15-18) This work often takes place in dangerous areas that put the children in the middle of ongoing conflict.(16-18).

A study of 780 children working in various activities by local and British academics and government representatives published in 2011 found that there was an association between working long hours and depression in the Gaza Strip.(19)

In the Gaza Strip, a limited number of Palestinian children work in underground tunnels that run between the Gaza Strip and Egypt, smuggling food and other goods, including chemicals, and digging and laying wire for electricity and pipelines for fuel.(5, 6, 9, 13, 20-23) Some children may work up to 10 hours at a time in the tunnels, with only a short break.(13) Many of these children use stimulant drugs to decrease pain and increase stamina during long shifts in the tunnels. Some Palestinian children have died in the tunnels as a result of Israeli attacks, which attempt to block the smuggling.(7, 22, 24)

Reports indicate that children have been used as human shields and as informants in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.(16, 25) There is limited evidence that children are trained as combatants by Hamas.(26)

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

No unified and comprehensive set of child labor and education laws exists for all of the Occupied Palestinian Territories.(27) Since the 2007 takeover in Gaza by Hamas, the PA no longer has jurisdiction, including enforcement capabilities, in the Gaza Strip. In the West Bank, under the terms of the Oslo-era agreements between the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Israeli Government, the PA has civil law enforcement authority in the area of the West Bank that is designated Area A and Area B. In Area C, the Israeli Government has control.(7, 26) This report discusses only the efforts of the PA in the areas it controls. For more information, see the USDOS's 2012 Human Rights Report at <http://www.state.gov>.(26)

Unified Labor Law No. 7 of 2000 and the Palestinian Child Law No. 7 of 2004 (PCL) prohibit the employment of any person under age 15. The former also requires that children ages 15 to 18 receive medical examinations every 6 months while working.(28) The Labor Law prohibits children ages 15 to 18 from working more than 4 consecutive hours at a time and requires employers to give these children a 1-hour break during their shift.(27, 28) In addition, the Labor Law states that these children are prohibited from work night shifts, which are from 8 p.m. to 6 a.m.(28, 29) The Labor Law includes an exception to the above restrictions for children who work for and are directly supervised by relatives, as long as the work does not negatively impact the mental and physical development of the child or the child's education.(28)

The Labor Law prohibits children under age 18 from being employed in industries that the Minister of Labor (MOL) identifies as dangerous or unhealthy. It also prohibits children from working night shifts and overtime, performing piece work, and working in remote areas.(26, 28) The PCL prohibits the employment of children in the drug, tobacco and alcohol industries, the use of children in begging, and the use of children in armed conflicts.(28)

In December 2012, the PA adopted amendments to the PCL that include explicit penalties for child labor violations.(7, 26) For example, exposing children to dangerous work conditions is subject to fines up to approximately $2,800. The law calls for the doubling of fines and closure of work facilities upon repeated child labor violations.(7, 26, 30)

While there is no regular military force in the West Bank or in Gaza, recruitment for government service, including security services, is voluntary beginning at age 18.(28, 31)

The PA Labor Law does not expressly prohibit forced and compulsory labor, and research found no evidence of laws against trafficking.(6, 28)

The PA reports on the Implementation of the CRC states that the PCL prohibits sexual exploitation of children.(27) . In addition, the PCL prohibits creating or possessing materials that will induce delinquency in children.(28) Based on historical ties with Jordan, Jordanian Law No. 16 of 1960 remains the Penal Code in effect in West Bank.(28) According to Jordanian Law No. 16, sexual intercourse and engaging in lewd acts with a child younger than age 15 are criminalized, as is allowing a child less than 16 to frequent or reside in a house of prostitution.(28) Rather than applying higher penalties, Law No. 16 applies the same penalties for rape and sexual assault of 15-to-18-year-olds as it does for such crimes committed against adults.(32)

Article 37 of the PCL obliges the state to provide free and compulsory education for all children. The law requires the Government to take action to encourage student attendance, eliminate discrimination, and promote the dignity of students.(27) Education in PA-controlled areas is compulsory from age 6 through age 16. Most students finish compulsory education by age 16 after completing 12 academic years.(26, 27, 33) The West Bank and the Gaza Strip lack adequate schools to serve all children. Children often travel long and dangerous distances to attend schools, in some instances, due to Israeli restrictions on access and movement and the Israeli separation barrier. Schools are sometimes poorly equipped and unhygienic.(34)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

Although the Ministry of Social Affairs (MOSA) is charged with coordinating efforts to protect children's rights, research found no evidence that the PA has established a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor in the PA-controlled areas of the West Bank.(27)

MOSA, working with UNICEF, is currently leading the work of eight Child Protection Networks (CPNs) in eight districts in the West Bank. The CPNs are comprised of relevant ministries and key NGOs working in child protection.(35) These CPNs have specific annual work plans that guide their work with children affected by violence or at risk of becoming subject to violence, abuse, neglect and exploitation. One of the main tasks of the CPNs is to protect children from child labor.(35) Within this initiative, there is an on-going campaign directed toward children, families, employers and others against child labor through communicating the damaging impact on child development and well-being, as well as making clear the legal implications for adults involved.(35) However, it is unclear if there is a coordinating mechanism in place across all PA-controlled areas.

The MOL's Inspection and Protection Administration is responsible for enforcing child labor laws.(7, 36) The MOL employed 43 labor inspectors, 6 of whom are specifically assigned to monitor child labor conditions.(7) Government officials describe the MOL as understaffed and in need of at least 300 labor inspectors in order to cover most of the private establishments in which children often work.(7, 26)

Over the last few years, MOL inspectors engaged business owners on child labor laws in an effort to raise awareness on minimum age requirements for work eligibility.(7, 13) In 2012, the MOSA and the police made visits to homes of children found working on the street to obtain commitments from parents that the child would not continue to work.(37) No current or reliable data were found on the precise number of child labor investigations conducted or violations reported during the reporting period. However, between 2007 and 2011, the MOL referred only 10 people to the Attorney General for employing children under age 15 in dangerous work; further information on the result of these referrals, fines imposed, or other penalties is not available.(13) The Government also reported that numerous people were fined for child labor violations, although the exact nature of the violations is not known.(13)

The PA has established a National Child Protection System through which the MOSA coordinates with the police, Attorney General, and nongovernmental organizations to provide appropriate services for vulnerable children, including those exploited in the worst forms of child labor.(27) The Child Protection Department within the MOSA is responsible for preventing the abuse and sexual exploitation of children, as well as for assisting victims of such maltreatment. Since 2010, the MOSA has attempted to register all employed youth in an effort to improve the monitoring of working conditions.(27) In cooperation with the local police force, MOSA Child Protection Officers are responsible for investigating cases of sexual exploitation. The most recent data available indicate that the MOSA had employed fewer than 13 child protection social workers in the West Bank and 8 in Gaza.(27) Child Protection Officers receive reports of both child labor and child abuse, but lack the resources to follow up on the large case load of child labor violations.(7)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The PA has recently revised and updated its national plan of action on children. In its report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the PA has prioritized monitoring all workplaces in illegal settlements in which children are employed.(27) Due to the lack of data regarding monitoring and enforcement efforts, research did not uncover whether the Government had achieved this goal during the reporting period.

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Palestinian Authority Ministry of Social Affairs (MOSA) undertook social assessments of children's families and included poor families in the ministry's social protection program (cash assistance, health insurance, free education) with the goal of preventing families from resorting to child labor. The MOSA and Ministry of Education (MOE) took efforts to ensure that children who recently dropped out of schools were sent back to school. Lastly, the CPN teams have also worked to build the capacity of the MOL and MOSA child protection workers and inspectors in managing cases of child laborers.(35)

The PA reported in 2010 that it was working with UNICEF to examine matters of child labor, including the means of monitoring child laborers and eliminating the illegal use of children.(27) However, research did not identify any activities carried out through this collaboration.

Save the Children and the PA published a report in 2010, discussing MOSA-supported vocational centers for children who dropped out of school or were considered poor and child protection programs to reduce the risk of economic exploitation of children.(27) However, the same report evaluated these programs, indicating that they are outdated, poorly resourced, and ineffective. The current status of these vocational center and programs is unclear.(27) In the past, the PA has solicited donor support to expand vocational programs for youth but did not receive the funding.

Palestinian children can use the free Palestinian Child Protection Helpline 121 as part of Child Helpline International, a network of child helplines that aims to provide free support and counseling to children and adolescents to protect them from abuse, neglect, violence, and exploitation. Started by a civil society organization, SAWA, government officials work with the Helpline to provide services to victims of violence, including children.(38, 39) Save the Children Sweden provides funding for the Helpline.(38)

The UN Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) is working to improve education in the West Bank through such efforts as encouraging better school management and community participation in education as well as providing remedial education services for children in the West Bank. The UNRWA provides microfinancing to a variety of groups, including women and those who own small businesses, which support family investments in education, among other needs.(40-42) Research found no studies that demonstrate the impact of this microfinancing on child labor.

Lower than expected international donor support has contributed to a reduction in the PA's enforcement efforts and social programs.(7) In addition, Israel withheld the PA's customs and Value Added Tax (VAT) revenues collected on imported goods destined for the West Bank and Gaza via Israeli points of entry. This lack of revenue negatively impacted the PA's ability to implement social protection efforts, including those to combat child labor, in late 2012 and early 2013(7, 43) Israel announced the resumption of these revenue transfers on March 25, 2013.(44)

Given the scope and magnitude of child labor in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, the limited breadth of these programs is not sufficient to combat child labor, especially in dangerous activities in agriculture and on the streets.

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the law, possibly through establishing a united criminal code, that would: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Expressly prohibit forced and compulsory labor as well as trafficking. 	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012
Coordination and Enforcement	Provide sufficient resources and staff to the MOL and the MOSA to enforce child labor laws adequately.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Collect and distribute current data on the enforcement of child labor laws.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Clarify whether the Child Protection Networks (CPNs) constitute a national coordinating mechanism, and if not, establish such a mechanism.	2012
Policies	Establish a new children's policy that includes provisions to protect children from the worst forms of child labor	2012
	Implement programs to address child labor, particularly in street work and agriculture.	2011, 2012
Social Programs	Update, expand, and improve the resources for programs offered by MOSA that address the worst forms of child labor.	2010, 2011, 2012
	Improve educational access by increasing the number of well-equipped and hygienic schools available for students.	2011, 2012
	Research the impact of microfinancing programs on the worst forms of child labor.	2012

Western Sahara

In 2012, Morocco made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Western Sahara. During the reporting period, the Government of Morocco provided specialized training to inspectors dedicated to child labor issues. Although the Moroccan-controlled territory is subject to the 2004 Labor Code, there are exemptions that compromise its effectiveness. The latest draft bill to protect domestic servants and a separate draft bill to prohibit child labor in traditional artisan or handicraft sectors were not yet adopted. Children continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, particularly in dangerous work in agriculture.

Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Some evidence suggests that children in Western Sahara are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in dangerous work in agriculture.(1) Children working in agriculture may use dangerous tools, carry heavy loads, and apply harmful pesticides.(2, 3) Information about the nature and prevalence of the problem remains limited.

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Moroccan-controlled territory of Western Sahara is subject to Moroccan laws.(1) The Popular Front for the Liberation of the Polisario Front, a Sahrawi national liberation movement, controls fifteen percent of the territory, and information on the laws applicable in this area is unavailable.(1, 4)

In the Moroccan-controlled territory, the minimum age for employment is 15, as established by the Labor Code of 2004. The Labor Code of 2004 prohibits night work for children age 15.(5) However, the law exempts certain types of agricultural work from this prohibition, potentially exposing any children involved in this exempted agricultural work to hazardous labor. Since children 16-17 are not prohibited from agricultural night work, they may also potentially be exposed to hazardous labor.(5)

The Labor Code prohibits hazardous activities for children younger than age 18, although children working on family farms are not protected by the provisions of the Labor Code, and therefore may not be protected from involvement in hazardous activities.(5) The Ministry of Employment and Professional Training (MOEPT) updated its list of occupations that qualify as “hazardous work” for children.(6, 7) The list addresses some work in agriculture, including hazards such as use of pesticides and sharp blades.(8)

Multiple versions of bills have been drafted to provide protections to domestic workers since the 2004 Labor Law was approved; however, legislation has not yet been enacted, which leaves children in domestic service without basic protections.(9) In October 2011, a bill on setting the minimum age for domestic service at 15 years old was submitted to Parliament for approval.(10, 11) In 2012, the draft bill to clarify Article 4 of the Labor Code regarding child labor in traditional artisan or handicraft activities was revised to incorporate comments from the National Department for Artisanal Works and was submitted to the Secretary General for approval. As of the end of the reporting period, neither bill had been passed.(10, 12)

Forced or compulsory labor is prohibited under the Labor Code and the Penal Code.(13, 14) The commercial sexual exploitation of children, including pornography and prostitution, is prohibited under the Moroccan Penal Code. In addition, it is specifically prohibited under the Penal Code to incite, procure, or facilitate the prostitution of a minor. Sex tourism is also criminalized under an amendment to the Penal Code.(13)

According to Moroccan law, education is compulsory through age 15 and is free through university.(15, 16)

The minimum age for voluntary recruitment to the military is 18. There is no compulsory military service.(17)

Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

The Government of Morocco administers its laws in Western Sahara through Moroccan institutions.(14)

The Government of Morocco’s Ministry of Social Development, Family, and Solidarity (MOSDFS) coordinates child labor efforts and oversees the National Plan of Action for Children (PANE), which addresses child labor, in cooperation with other ministries.(10, 11)

The Government of Morocco’s MOEPT enforces the Labor Code and implements child labor laws.(11) The MOEPT Director of Work heads the Child Labor Task Force to coordinate this effort.(11, 18) The MOEPT employs 51 focal point inspectors dedicated to child labor issues, all of whom receive training on child labor issues. These inspectors also received specialized training during the reporting period.(12) Labor inspectors and child focal point inspectors cover Western Sahara as well as Morocco.(11)

The Government of Morocco’s Ministry of the Interior (MOI) is responsible for enforcing the Penal Code’s prohibitions on prostitution and trafficking.(11, 18)

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Morocco has initiated child protection and development policies that extend to Western Sahara.

The MOSDFS is carrying out the broad PANE 2006-2015, which focuses on children’s health, protection, participation, and education.(10, 11, 18) PANE includes the issue of child labor and sexual exploitation of children, and calls for pilot programs focusing on street children and domestic child labor.(10, 11, 18) In May 2011, the MOSDFS held a conference to review PANE and begin developing the second phase of the policy.(11)

The issue of child labor has been incorporated into the Government’s policies, such as the King’s National Initiative for Human Development second phase 2012-2015 (NIHD2).(12, 19) This initiative serves as a framework to reduce poverty through improved education and health facilities, access to electricity and drinking water, attention to the needs of girls and women, and income and employment initiatives such as microfinance.(11, 18, 20, 21) Reducing child labor is one of the goals of the initiative.(11, 22)

Under a United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), during the reporting period the Government began implementing a new antipoverty action plan (2012-2016) that addresses education, health, socioeconomic development, democratic governance, and protection of the environment. Budgeted at $32 million, the plan includes a focus on equal access to education for vulnerable children.(12, 23)

Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government of Morocco has initiated programs against child labor and for livelihood that extend to Western Sahara.

Through PANE, the Government of Morocco continued to fund programs against child labor, which were implemented by local NGOs in 2012.(10, 12, 24) Research did not identify the scale of these programs, or whether they address child labor in agriculture.

Under the first phase of the NIHD program (2005-2011), the Government implemented programs in Western Sahara designed to reduce poverty in rural areas and to decrease instability for those living in extreme instability.(25) NIHD2 builds on the first phase, investing nearly twice as many resources countrywide. It allocates resources directly to communities based on poverty and social exclusion criteria, which includes child workers.(19, 26, 27) Western Sahara receives more funding per capita under the NIHD program than does Morocco proper.(28, 29)

In 2012 under a UNDAF, the Government of Morocco continued cooperating with UNICEF and UNDP on a $32 million program focusing on education for vulnerable children, health services for mothers, and socioeconomic development; the program will run through 2016.(12, 23, 30) Research did not identify which specific UN programs have been implemented in Western Sahara.

The question of whether NIHD2 or UN programs have an impact on child labor does not appear to have been addressed.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Western Sahara:

Area	Suggested Actions	Year(s) Action Recommended
Laws and Regulations	Amend the Labor Code to protect children from engaging in hazardous work on family farms.	2009, 2010, 2011, 2012

Appendix II

TDA Criteria and Corresponding Guidance Questions

1. Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of the Worst Forms of Child Labor

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- Although not explicitly discussed in the TDA conference report, any government that supports the use of forced child labor cannot be said to be implementing commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

Guidance Question

1. *Was the government complicit in the use of forced child labor?

2. Laws and Regulations on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- “Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor;”
- “Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures;”

Guidance Questions

1. Did laws meet the following international standards:
 - a. a minimum age for admission to employment in line with ILO Convention 138
 - b. a minimum age for admission to hazardous work in line with ILO Convention 138 and 182
 - c. a minimum age to which education is compulsory in line with ILO Convention 138
 - d. ratification of ILO Convention 182
 - e. prohibitions on each of the worst forms of child labor as established in ILO Convention 182?
2. If the country’s constitution and laws are not compliant with international standards embodied in ILO Conventions 138 and 182, has there been any change in the constitution or laws that brings the country closer to being fully compliant?

3. If laws were not comprehensive in their prohibitions of all variations of a particular worst form, has there been any change in the constitution or laws that brings the country closer to being comprehensive?
4. *Were there aspects of laws that are contrary to international standards and likely to increase children’s vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor? This question would apply both to countries with child labor problems as well as countries in which there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and when the country has gaps in its legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

3. Institutional Mechanisms for Coordination and Enforcement

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- “Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor;”

Guidance Questions

1. Was an agency or committee created to coordinate government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor? Did such an agency or committee meet more regularly and take more action, or did it meet less regularly and take less action?
2. Was there an increase or reduction in inspections to enforce child labor laws and regulations? Was the number of inspections an improvement or decline, given the incidence of child labor in the country?
3. Was there an increase or decrease in the funding and resources to enforce child labor laws and regulations? Was the amount an improvement or decline, given the incidence of child labor in the country?
4. Did the country increase or decrease training offered to child labor inspectors?
5. Did the government create or improve a mechanism for filing complaints regarding child labor?
6. Was there an increase or reduction in child labor inspections? Were inspections targeted to sectors in which child labor occurs more or less frequently? Was the number of inspections an improvement or decline, given the incidence of child labor in the country?
7. Did the government establish or improve a process for information sharing among enforcement authorities?

8. Did the judiciary uphold existing laws and penalties regarding child labor? Was there an improvement or decline in the quality or quantity of criminal prosecutions of crimes related to child labor?
9. *Were there any aspects to the country's enforcement practices that likely increase children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor?

4. Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- "Whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor;"

Guidance Questions

1. Did the government establish any new policies or plans that specifically address the worst forms of child labor or any one of the worst forms of child labor?
2. Did the government incorporate the worst forms of child labor specifically as an issue to be addressed in poverty reduction, development, educational or other social policies, such as Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers, etc?
3. Did the government establish any poverty reduction, development, educational or other social policies, such as Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers, etc., that did not explicitly address the worst forms of child labor or any one of the worst forms of child labor, but that might have had an impact on them or it? If so, have any studies been conducted to assess the impact of such a policy on the worst forms of child labor?
4. If the country established any of the above plans, do they designate responsible agencies, establish actions to be taken, timelines, and other concrete measures?
5. Using the criteria in Question 4, did implementation of existing policies improve or worsen compared with the previous year?
6. *Were there on-going country policies or were they any changes to the country's policies that likely increase children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor?

5. Social Programs to Eliminate or Prevent the Worst Form of Child Labor

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- "Whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor, and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor;"

Guidance Questions

1. Were any child labor specific programs or social protection programs that target child labor created?
2. Were any social protection programs established that target children and could reasonably be expected to have an impact on child labor? Were any other social protection programs established that were shown, through research, to have an impact on child labor?
3. Are new programs sufficient to combat particular forms of child labor given the scope and magnitude of those problems?
4. Do new programs provide services directly to children?
5. Do new programs adequately target at-risk populations?
6. Were new programs fully funded?
7. Are new programs meeting their goals?
8. Are new program efforts sustainable?
9. Using the criteria in questions 4-8, did existing government programs improve or worsen compared with the previous year?
10. *Were there any changes to the country's programs that likely increase children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor?

* A yes response to questions with an asterisk indicates a country that would likely receive an assessment of minimal or no advancement.
