Vision 2020 (2000)*	Aims to transform agriculture into a productive, market-oriented, and high- value sector. Calls for the protection of children and provides educational opportunities to children who drop out of secondary school.(13, 61)
National Social Protection Strategy (2011)*	Defines social protection and outlines social development activities to assist poor households, such as providing vulnerable children with grants and free education.(62)
National Youth Policy (2005)	Seeks to address concerns facing youth, including economic exploitation and education.(13, 63)
Economic Development and Poverty Reduction Strategy (2013–2018)	Describes the social policies and programs necessary to promote growth and reduce poverty. Supports access to education and seeks to eliminate child labor.(64)
National TVET Policy (2008)*	Aims to establish a well-trained and adaptable workforce and provides educational alternatives to children who have dropped out of school.(65)
UNDAF Rwanda (2013–2018)	Enhances government efforts to protect children from exploitation.(66)
Trafficking in Persons Action Plan	Aims to improve government efforts to combat human trafficking through awareness raising, research, poverty reduction strategies, improved service provision, enforcement, and collaboration. Developed by the Consultative Forum on Human Trafficking, Drug Abuse, and Gender-Based Violence.(17, 67)
12YBE Policy*	Provides free education for 12 years and aims to improve access to education by hiring new teachers and building schools.(28)
Education Sector Strategic Plan (2013/14-2017/18)	Aims to increase access to primary education, enhance quality of education and training for children, and ensure that trainings are correlated to meet labor market demands.(68)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

During the year, the ILO produced a report, “Mainstreaming Child Labor Concerns Into Social Protection Planning and Programming: an Assessment of the Opportunities of Rwanda” that assessed the impact of the Government’s social programs such as cash transfers to impoverished households and subsidized medical insurance on the prevalence of child labor. The report indicated that the social programs had a positive impact but further research was needed to quantify the results.(1) It is unclear how the Integrated Child Rights Policy (ICRP) and its Strategic Plan are coordinated with the National Policy for the Elimination of Child Labor and the 5-Year Action Plan to Combat Child Labor. In addition, current budget allocations may not be sufficient for the full implementation of the ICRP.(58)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Rwanda funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Rwanda Demobilization and Reintegration Commission (RDRC) Child Rehabilitation Program and Center	RDRC-operated center in the Musanze District of the Northern Province for former child combatants returning from the Democratic Republic of the Congo that raises awareness of child soldier issues and provides a 3-month course to former child soldiers, which includes counseling, education, recreational activities, and vocational training.(8, 12, 35, 45).
Rwanda Education Alternatives for Children in Tea-Growing Areas (2013–2017)	$5 million, USDOL-funded, , 4-year project implemented by Winrock International targets 4,090 children engaged in or at risk of entering exploitative child labor in Rwanda with a focus on the tea sector, and 1,320 vulnerable households for sustainable livelihoods promotion. With support from MIFOTRA, aims to train labor inspectors on child labor issues and develop and eventually operate a mobile-phone child labor monitoring system.(69) In February 2015, Winrock International and MIFOTRA launched a Child Labor Monitoring System (CLMS) in 12 districts that gave citizens a mechanism to report child labor violations. During the year, 88 Community Activists were trained on how to use the CLMS.(1) The CLMS recorded 346 cases of suspected child labor and these cases were referred to MIFOTRA and district social services for intervention.(1)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor in Rwanda.(70)
Youth and Workforce Development (Advancing Youth Project)	USAID funded program support training youth ages 14 and above to develop skills to find jobs. The program also connects graduates to internship and employment opportunities.(71)
Child Labor Awareness Raising†	MIFOTRA program to raise public awareness of the worst forms of child labor through radio shows, television announcements, and skits. Also implements awareness-raising campaigns to combat commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking in persons.(8, 17)
Friends of the Family (Incuti Z'Umuryango) Program	Government social assistance and reporting program that supports child welfare and combats child trafficking and child labor. Trains volunteers to provide social services to families and children, as well as connect at-risk families to government support programs, while reporting children at risk for trafficking or forced labor to district governments and the RNP. Intended to identify child domestic workers and those subjected to other forms of forced labor. Establishing monitoring committees at the village, cell, sector, district, and national levels.(17) During the year, provided training to over 6,000 community volunteers to identify children at risk of trafficking or forced child labor in 10 of the 30 districts. Each volunteer was given a cell phone to report any suspected cases of trafficking to the MIGEPROF.(7)
Positive Parenting to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Drug Abuse†	MIGEPROF campaign that partners with churches and civil society organizations to teach parents and community leaders to recognize risk factors for human trafficking and to report identified victims.(17)
Eastern Africa Police Chiefs Cooperation Organization (EAPCCO)	Government program to combat human trafficking by collaborating with 11 East African countries to foster regional cooperation and build the capacity of East African law enforcement authorities.(73, 74)
Vision 2020 Umurenge Program†	Government cash and in-kind transfer program for child-headed households and street children.(10, 62, 75, 76)
Gitagata Centert	Government-operated center for former street children in the Bugesera District that provided education support, vocational training, and psychosocial counseling to street children, and when able to do so, reunites them with their families.(8, 77)
One Cup of Milk per Child Program	EU-funded school feeding program that provides milk to children in nursery and primary schools.(50, 78, 79)

† Program is funded by the Government of Rwanda.

Although Rwanda has programs that targets child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem of child labor in domestic work and agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that relevant child labor laws and regulations apply equally to children working in non-contractual and contractual employment.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that labor law enforcement personnel have sufficient human and financial resources to enforce child labor laws.	2009 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the number of labor inspections, violations, and penalties pertaining to child labor.	2009 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Disaggregate the number of complaints that relate to child labor to the police hotline.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into Vision 2020, the National Social Protection Strategy, 12YBE Policy, and National TVET Policy.	2011 – 2015
	Allocate funds for the ICRP to ensure its implementation.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in construction and fishing to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that school costs, such as uniforms, school supplies, and unofficial school fees do not diminish the impact of the 12-year education policy.	2010 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem in domestic work and agriculture.	2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Saint Lucia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government drafted a National Action Plan to address human trafficking, developed standard operating procedures for the National Inter-Agency Task Force, and funded human trafficking training workshops for enforcement and NGO officials. However, although research is limited, children in Saint Lucia are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Saint Lucia also continues to face legislative gaps. The law does not fully protect children from illicit activities.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children are engaged in child labor in agriculture and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation in Saint Lucia.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Saint Lucia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	7.5 (2,017)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	99.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	8.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		107.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2007, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2012.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* including harvesting bananas* (5, 6)
Services	Street vending,* including selling food and handicrafts in markets* (2, 7)
	Washing cars* (2)
	Domestic work* (7, 8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation* (9, 10)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Limited evidence indicates that children sometimes engage in commercial sexual exploitation with the knowledge or encouragement of parents in situations of financial need.(11) Saint Lucia lacks current data on the prevalence of child labor, including its worst forms.(12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Saint Lucia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

* No conscription (20)

† No standing military (20)

Article 23 of the Employees (Occupational Health and Safety) Act prohibits the employment of persons under age 18 in industrial undertakings, which may include working with machinery and in extreme temperatures. While this Act permits young persons between the ages of 16 and 18 to engage in industrial undertakings if they are supervised as part of an apprenticeship or vocational training program, it does not specify the procedures required for protecting the health, safety and morals of children engaged in these activities. (15) This provision may expose these children to hazardous work. In addition, although the Criminal Code prohibits the use of children in some illicit activities, including commercial sexual exploitation and street work, the use of children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited.(18)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

One of the mechanisms specifies the referral process for child trafficking victims.(11) During the reporting period, the Government provided training to police officers on providing assistance to human trafficking victims.(11)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Ministry of Health, Wellness, Human Services, and Gender Relations	Coordinate investigations of child labor cases and ensure the use of established protocols in collaboration with the Royal Saint Lucia Police Force.(5)
Trafficking in Persons Task Force	Coordinate the identification and referral of human trafficking cases among law enforcement, social service, and immigration officials pursuant to the Counter-Trafficking Act. Comprised of public servants, police, and victim services NGOs.(5, 17) In 2015, drafted the Basic Guiding Principles for Counter-Human Trafficking Efforts of the National Inter-Agency Task Force, a standard operating procedures and terms of reference guide.(11) Also worked to develop a National Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking with the participation of the IOM.(9)

ILO Decent Work Country Program for Saint Lucia (2010–2015)*	Promoted economic development and legislative strengthening in Saint Lucia that is consistent with international labor standards, including those on child labor.(26)

*Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the IOM and the Trafficking in Persons Task Force drafted a National Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking, which was submitted to the Cabinet and is pending approval.(11)

There are no policies that address the worst forms of child labor, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Saint Lucia funded programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved the National Plan of Action Against Human Trafficking, which establishes procedures to eradicate human trafficking. However, although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Gaps remain in the legal framework; the minimum age for hazardous work falls below international standards and there is no law to prohibit the use of children in the production of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3) Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Domestic work* and begging* (5-7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation* (8, 9) Production of marijuana* (8)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

† No standing military (13)

* No conscription (12, 13)

The minimum age of 14 for hazardous work is not in compliance with international standards. Furthermore, laws related to illicit activities are not sufficient as the use of children in the production of drugs is not criminally prohibited.(11, 15)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforce child labor laws and refer victims to appropriate social services.(2)
Royal Police Force	Make criminal arrests, including those involving the worst forms of child labor; specifically address human trafficking through the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Unit; and refer victims to appropriate social services.(2)
Ministry of Social Development	Maintain Child Protection Unit, which includes Child Protection Officers who report cases of child abuse.(6)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, inspectors indicated that the labor inspectorate’s resources were inadequate.(7) Ministry of Labor employees, including labor inspectors, were trained on human trafficking issues by the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Unit (ATIPU).(17)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

In 2015, ATIPU trained 120 officials in the police department and other related agencies on human trafficking issues.(17) A source indicates that ATIPU employed three or four people in 2015.(7) The Government also employed a social worker to be the primary liaison among the various agencies that enforce anti-trafficking laws.(17)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons	Develop a national plan to address human trafficking, coordinate the collection of data among government agencies, establish policies to enable government agencies to work with NGOs to prevent trafficking and assist victims, and provide training to all relevant government officials and authority figures. Chaired by the Prime Minister.(2, 11, 18)

† Program is funded by the Government of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines.

Samoa

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Samoa made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the Labor and Employment Relations Regulations which strengthen prohibitions on the engagement of children in hazardous work. Through Samoa's Decent Work Country Program, labor inspectors participated in a training to strengthen the inspectorate's capacity to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Samoa are engaged in child labor, including in street vending.

The Government does not have a mechanism to coordinate interagency efforts to address child labor and lacks data on the prevalence and nature of child labor in the country. There is no referral mechanism between labor authorities and social service providers to ensure that children identified in situations of child labor receive appropriate support. Additionally, the Government did not implement programs to specifically address child labor in the sectors in which it is prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Samoa are engaged in child labor, including in street vending. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Samoa. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting, harvesting, and gathering coconuts,* other unspecified fruit,* and unspecified nuts* (7-9)
	Tending domestic animals* (7-9)
Services	Domestic work* (7-9)
	Street vending (1-4)
	Garbage scavenging* (10)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

Traditional Samoan culture includes a system of service through which a village elder (matai) may compel others to perform work in service to the family or to the community.(9) Limited evidence indicates that under this system, some children are required to work on village farms.(7, 9)

The Government of Samoa lacks data to determine the nature and extent of child labor in all relevant sectors.(11) A survey on child labor in street vending was conducted in 2014, but during the reporting period the Government did not make the results of this study publicly available.(12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Samoa has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

In July 2015, the Government of Samoa adopted the Labour and Employment Relations Regulations, which contains a new provision to regulate the conditions of employment for children under age 18 and stipulates a penalty for employers who violate the law.(12, 15) The Regulation prohibits the involvement of children in work that is hazardous to a child's health, mental, spiritual, or social development; work in direct hostilities; work in environments that may subject a child to harm; and any work for which a child does not have adequate capacity.(15) Samoan law prohibits certain hazardous activities, such as operating heavy machinery; however, street vending, an activity in which children are known to work long hours and into the night, is not prohibited for children under 18. The Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Labor has drafted a list to more comprehensively define the types of hazardous work unsuitable for children, but this list remained in draft form during the reporting period.(12)

In addition, the law allows children ages 12 through 14 to engage in light work for a limited number of hours, but it does not specify the conditions under which light work may be undertaken, nor does it define the activities that are permitted, as called for under international standards.(15)

Samoa

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Section 82 of the Crimes Act prescribes a penalty of up to 7 years of imprisonment for certain crimes related to child pornography; however, this section of the law defines a child as a person who is 16 years old or younger.(17) As a result of this definition, the law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, as the possession of pornography featuring 17-year-old children is not criminally prohibited.(19) Research also found no evidence of laws banning the use, procurement, or offering of a child for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.

The Education Act requires that children attend school from ages 5 to 14 or until they have completed the work of Year 8, whichever occurs sooner.(14) Because children start school at either age 5 or age 6, children could complete compulsory education at age 13. Children ages 13 through 14 who are no longer required to attend school but are not yet legally permitted to work are vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.(20)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Labor (MCIL)	Investigate potential child labor law violations in response to complaints. Refer cases to the Ministry of Police and the Office of the Attorney General for enforcement.(8)
Ministry of Police	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor.(8)
Office of the Attorney General	Prosecute criminal cases of the worst forms of child labor.(8)
Ministry for Women, Community, and Social Development	Assist in MCIL investigations as needed. Mandated to protect children, including those working on the street.(8, 21, 22)
Ministry of Education, Sports, and Culture	Assist in MCIL investigations as needed.(8, 22)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Samoa took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, labor inspectors participated in a foundational skills course on conducting labor inspections, facilitated by the ILO.(24)

Also during the reporting period, the Ministry of Education, Sports, and Culture and the Ministry of Police strengthened efforts to enforce provisions in the Education Act that mandate a child's school attendance through age 14. Research indicates that teams of officials monitored areas in the Apia township and surrounding villages in which child street vending is known to occur.(3) Police officers found two child labor violations involving children selling goods during school hours.(23)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Samoa took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms. Although Samoa does not have a documented child trafficking problem, the Samoa Interpol and Transnational Crime Unit monitors transnational crimes, including human trafficking.(26) Member agencies include the Ministry of Police, Samoa Immigration, the Prime Minister's Office, the Central Bank of Samoa, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade, the Customs Services, the Office of the Attorney General, and the Ministry of Finance.(8, 26)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Samoa has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy for Children of Samoa (2010–2015)	Aims to address the needs of disadvantaged children, to provide child protection, and to combat poverty. Prioritizes the protection of child street vendors through awareness raising and increased enforcement of compulsory education laws.(2, 27)
Strategy for the Development of Samoa (2012–2016)*	Seeks to improve the quality of life for all Samoans through economic growth, social policies, improved infrastructure, and environmental protection. Access to education and training at all levels is targeted as a key outcome.(28) As part of the strategy, the Government has committed to developing a Medium-Term Expenditure Framework to ensure that education programs currently funded by international donors are sustainable.(28)
Samoa School Fee Relief Grant Scheme*	Aims to make school enrollment and attendance possible for children who are unable to pay school fees.(29) Provides free education to all primary school children enrolled in government schools and mission (church-run) schools. Also offers free education at the secondary level for students in government schools and reduced fees for secondary-level students in mission schools.(8) Covers approximately 99 percent of Samoan primary school students. Jointly funded by the Governments of Samoa, New Zealand, and Australia.(8)
Education Sector Plan (2013–2018)*	Calls for improved access to education for all children in early childhood, primary, and secondary schools. Monitors the Samoa School Fee Relief Grant Scheme to ensure that children do not face financial barriers that prevent them from attending school.(30)
UNDAF Pacific (2013–2017)*	Promotes sustainable development and economic growth for vulnerable groups in 14 Pacific Island countries and territories: Cook Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, Fiji, Kiribati, Marshall Islands, Nauru, Niue, Palau, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu.(31) In Samoa, the policy aims to strengthen implementation of policies related to children and improve mechanisms to protect children from violence and exploitation.(31)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Samoa funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Samoa Decent Work Country Program (2013–2016)†	ILO and Government program that promotes decent work in Samoa by focusing on three priority areas: (1) legal reform and improved implementation of labor laws, including those related to child labor; (2) increased access to information and employment services for youth; and (3) strengthened capacity of trade unions. Includes an activity to assess potential challenges in extending the application of labor laws to the informal sector.(32) In 2015, conducted a 5-day training focused on strengthening the skills of labor inspectors to perform their duties in line with the Labour and Employment Relations Act and the Occupational Safety and Health Act.(33)
Pacific Sub-Regional Child Labor and Trafficking Program	ILO-supported program that expands the work and lessons learned from its Tackling Child Labor through Education program in Fiji to Kiribati, Samoa, and Solomon Islands.(34, 35) Activities include facilitating meetings, conducting research, raising awareness, providing trainings, and building government capacity to address child labor.(36) In April 2015, representatives from Samoa participated in the Sub-Regional Child Labor and Trafficking Program forum, which brought together national policy makers from five countries to discuss best practices for addressing child labor and human trafficking issues.(34, 35)

In July 2015, Samoa participated in the ILO Sub-Regional Skills and Livelihood Training for Older Out-Of-School Children in Child Labor or At Risk in the Pacific. The training focused on highlighting opportunities for skill development for children under age 18 who are at risk for child labor, as well as identifying opportunities for mainstreaming skill development initiatives into existing social programs.(37)

Research found no evidence of programs to specifically address child labor in the service sector, especially in street vending.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. São Tomé and Príncipe

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, São Tomé and Príncipe made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government assessed the impact of a social program on eliminating and preventing child labor. However, children in São Tomé and Príncipe are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work and street work. The types of hazardous work prohibited for children are not comprehensive, and social programs do not target every sector in which children work. Law enforcement agencies lack sufficient resources to adequately enforce child labor laws.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in São Tomé and Príncipe are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work and street work.(1-5) Results from a 2014 study conducted by the Government and ILO indicate that 8 percent of children between the ages of 10 and 17 work; however, the study results have not been made publicly available.(6, 7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in São Tomé and Príncipe.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	15.4 (6,218)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	68.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	13.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		92.4

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

On the island of São Tomé, some families engage in a cultural practice known as Mina Quia, in which children perform domestic activities including washing clothes, cooking, and childcare in the home of another family.(1) Some children are permitted to attend school if they can also conduct their domestic duties. Limited evidence suggests that many children who work in Mina Quia are victims of sexual abuse and domestic violence.(1)

There is a high loss of students between the first (first through fourth grades) and second levels (fifth and sixth grades) of primary education. Evidence indicates that additional costs and a lack of schools that offer fifth and sixth grades are barriers to accessing education.(2, 11, 12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

São Tomé and Príncipe has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 55 of the Constitution; Article 6(1) of the Basic Education System Law (18, 19)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (17, 18)

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working outside of a formal labor relationship, such as children who are self-employed.(13, 17)

The Legal Regime of Individual Employment Conditions prohibits children under age 18 from engaging in heavy work carried out in unhealthy or dangerous conditions. It also prohibits underground and night work; however, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover street work, an unhealthy environment that exposes children to hazardous substances, agents, or processes.(13) In 2014, the Government completed a draft list of hazardous activities for children and submitted it to the National Assembly for review; the list awaits final approval.(7, 20)

The Basic Education System Law establishes a mandatory 6 years of free primary education, which may be completed as early as age 12.(17, 18) Children who stop attending school before reaching the minimum age for employment are especially vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor because they are not in school, but they also may not legally work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

During the reporting period, the Department of Labor Inspection received two child labor complaints; one of these cases was referred to the Prosecutor's Office for investigation.(5)

Children found by the Department of Labor Inspection are referred to the Department of Social Services in the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs for counseling and integration into recreational and educational activities.(5, 7, 21)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in São Tomé and Príncipe took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Anti-Child Labor Committee	Raise awareness to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2016 and all forms of child labor by 2020.(20) Representatives include government institutions, ILO, NGOs, labor unions, the Chamber of Commerce, and UNICEF.(7) In March 2015, the Committee conducted a child labor awareness-raising campaign with primary school children in Mé-Zóchi and Água Grande districts.(22)
Department of Social Protection and Solidarity, Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs	Carry out support programs for families to ensure children attend school. Administer the Social Integration Assistance program, which provides funds to the Disadvantaged Mothers program (Mães Carenciadas). ⁽¹⁾

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of São Tomé and Príncipe has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Poverty Reduction Strategy (2012–2016)	Outlines social protection strategies to combat child labor and commercial sexual exploitation of children. Aims to ensure that all children complete basic education by 2016.(23)
National Plan for Education (2002–2015)*	Aims to provide free basic education to all children. States that education is free and compulsory for 6 years.(24)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

The draft National Action Plan on Child Labor, including the list of hazardous activities for children, was finalized in 2014 and is awaiting final approval.(5)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of São Tomé and Príncipe participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Support Centers†	Government-funded centers, run by NGOs with social work staff for approximately 210 orphans and at-risk children.(5, 7) Three centers operate in areas with high concentrations of poor families, orphans, and street children. Work with parents of at-risk children, provide stipends to families to keep children in school, and teach income-generating skills to children.(5)
Disadvantaged Mothers Program (Mães Carenciadas)†	Government program that provides funds to female-led households to encourage basic education for children. Scholarships are given to children from low-income households to assist in continuing their studies.(1)
XIV Government Program (Programa do XIV Governo)†	Government program that seeks to improve the quality of education by providing infrastructure, educational opportunities, and technical and professional training for students in primary and secondary education.(1)

† Program is funded by the Government of São Tomé and Príncipe.

In 2015, the Government, in consultation with the ILO, completed a study to assess the impact of the 2014 Workshops for Awareness of the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(5)

Research found no evidence of programs designed to specifically address children engaged in domestic work and street work in São Tomé and Príncipe.

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Senegal

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Senegal made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government amended its hazardous work legislation to prohibit all children under age 18 from engaging in hazardous activities and prosecuted and convicted a marabout under the Law Concerning the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons. In addition, the Government doubled the budget of the National Program of Family Assistance Bursaries social safety net program to $32 million and provided support to 200,000 families. However, children in Senegal are engaged in child labor, including in gold mining, and also in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging. Criminal and labor law enforcement agencies lack adequate resources to effectively carry out their work, and redundancy among coordinating bodies to combat child labor hinders effective collaboration.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Senegal are engaged in child labor, including in gold mining. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging. (1-14) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Senegal.

	Begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 4-14, 18, 26, 27, 29)
	Forced labor in garbage collection* (30)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Child trafficking to neighboring countries is not as prevalent as child trafficking within Senegal. As a result of being trafficked, boys are most commonly forced to beg and girls are forced into domestic work or to engage in commercial sexual exploitation.(12, 26, 27) In Senegal, it is a traditional practice to send boys to Koranic schools, called daaras, for education. However, instead of receiving an education, many students, known as talibés, are forced to beg by their teachers, known as marabouts.(7, 9, 10, 27, 31-35) The marabouts take the talibés' earnings and often beat those who fail to meet the daily quota.(4, 9, 11, 13, 32, 34-36) The talibés often live in overcrowded, unsanitary conditions; receive inadequate food and medical care; and are vulnerable to physical and sexual abuse.(7, 9, 13, 30, 31, 35) They typically come from rural areas within Senegal and from neighboring countries, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(9, 10, 13, 31, 33, 35-37) A 2013 study of daaras in the Dakar region conducted by the National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP) found over 30,000 talibés who are forced to beg.(3, 13, 28, 38-41) However, there is little comprehensive data on the number and condition of daaras and talibés outside of Dakar, and some sources indicate that the problem is getting worse.(3, 13, 35)

Access to education in Senegal may be limited by the unavailability of schools and the lack of resources, particularly in rural areas.(2, 10, 31, 42) There are also not enough teachers in Senegal; moreover, both students and teachers are frequently absent, sometimes due to strikes.(2, 42-44) School-related fees and competing economic opportunities further undermine the incentives for poor families to send their children to school.(2, 10, 31) Additionally, students who do not have birth registration certificates are unable to take primary school exit exams.(43) Some girls reportedly leave school after being sexually harassed, including by teachers, or as a result of early pregnancy.(2, 14, 31)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government adopted revisions to the Ministerial Orders Determining and Prohibiting the Worst Forms of Child Labor, Determining the Types of Hazardous Work Prohibited for Children and Youth, and Determining the Categories of Business and Work Prohibited to Children and Youth to prohibit all children under age 18 from engaging in hazardous work.(18, 41) A revision of the Labor Code that is also being considered by the National Assembly includes an amendment to raise the minimum age of work from age 15 to 16 and to establish harsher penalties for subjecting children to the worst forms of child labor.(53, 56)

A law was drafted in 2013 to improve the regulation of daaras as part of the Daara Modernization Program, which would require schools to submit to state inspections, adhere to a basic education curriculum, and formally halt the practice of forced begging. However, the law was withdrawn from consideration due to concerns expressed by some religious groups; the Ministry of Education is attempting to address those concerns.(12, 13, 30, 35, 41, 57) Furthermore, the Penal Code punishes begging with 3 to 6 months of imprisonment, and the Decree Establishing the Scale of Penalties for Violations of the Labor Code and Associated Rules for Application penalizes child labor violations with a fine of $4 to $31.(51) Government officials, the UNODC, UNICEF, and local NGOs have stated that these measures may not be severe enough to deter employers from exploiting children, particularly since the penalties are rarely enforced.(3, 58)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Social Dialogue, Professional Organizations, and Institutional Relations (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws through the Labor Inspections Office and by using social security inspectors.(3, 31) In the case of the Directorate General of Labor and Social Security's Task Force for the Coordination of the Fight Against Child Labor, also known as the Child Labor Unit, monitor and evaluate child labor activities.(17, 59, 60)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Enforce all laws, including those on child trafficking and forced labor, and prosecute violations.(18) Train police and judiciary on laws related to human trafficking and forced begging.(13) House the Department of Correctional Education and Social Protection (DESPS), which helps to develop draft texts in the field of social protection and juvenile delinquency; strengthens the capacity of stakeholders to care for children; and shares responsibility for providing social services to vulnerable children with the Ministry of Women, Family, and Children (MWFC).(29, 41, 58, 61, 62)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of the Interior and Public Security	Oversee all law enforcement agencies, including the local and national police officials who intervene in cases of human trafficking, and arrest perpetrators of the worst forms of child labor. Refer cases to social services providers.(18, 26, 53, 63) House the Children's Unit, located in Dakar, which employs three officers who specialize in child protection, victim identification, and reinsertion.(26, 29, 53) Through its Children's Unit, receive assistance from the Vice Squad in child protection cases.(44)
Ministry of Women, Family, and Children (MWFC)	Contribute to the creation and implementation of child protection policies, and provide services to victims of exploitative child labor.(64) Operate the GINDDI center for vulnerable children and a toll-free child protection hotline through which the public can report child labor abuses.(12, 29, 30) Share responsibility with the DESPS for providing social services to vulnerable children.(58)

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

All new labor inspectors are trained at the National Administration School, which includes a module on the worst forms of child labor and a consultation with members of the National Committee Against Child Labor.(18, 26) Additionally, all regional inspectorates receive yearly refresher training from the MOL Directorate General of Labor and Social Security.(18) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Senegal should employ approximately 158 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country. The MOL acknowledges that the current number of labor inspectors is insufficient; it also noted that a high turnover rate and significant reduction in its funding level had further hindered its ability to fulfill its mandate.(18, 65-67)

Research indicates that enforcement in the informal sector, in which most children are employed, is inadequate.(12, 18, 31) Although Article L. 241 of the Labor Code grants inspectors the authority to assess penalties for all offenses, they typically only do so for minor offenses and refer the more serious infractions to the courts for determination of penalties.(18, 45, 56) Courts may require violations to be resolved through conciliation at the Labor Inspectorate or refer cases to a tribunal for judgment.(18) In practice, however, child labor issues are primarily resolved at the community level and cases seldom rise to the attention of the police.(58) Between April 1, 2014, and March 31, 2015, the MWFC's child protection hotline received 2,583 calls concerning children in exploitative situations or seeking additional information.(12) However, research indicates that this hotline is not always staffed, so some calls go unanswered.(44) It is not clear how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of these calls.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Senegal took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

In August 2015, judges, prosecutors, and police officials attended a training on human trafficking, which was organized in partnership with the UNODC. Two prosecutors also attended an ILEA-sponsored training on human trafficking in Gaborone, Botswana.(68) In addition to the Children's Unit and the Department of Correctional Education and Social Protection, the Ministry of Education's daara inspectorate employs two inspectors.(13, 30, 44) However, the entities responsible for enforcing laws against the worst forms of child labor are primarily concentrated in Dakar and Thiès, thus enforcement is limited outside of the capital.(13, 58) Although police stations in Senegal are expected to report cases involving children to the Children's Unit, research found no evidence that this occurs regularly.(44, 58) During the reporting period, the GINDDI center provided support to 142 boys who were victims of child trafficking.(26)

The Government reports that existing laws are sufficient to effectively prosecute and punish individuals who use talibés for personal profit.(1, 13, 26, 30, 70) However, the courts have had limited success in prosecuting cases related to forced begging, partly due to a perceived lack of political support, cultural norms, and pressure from influential Koranic teachers who support this practice, particularly in rural areas.(56, 68) Additionally, some courts and law enforcement officials are not aware that the Law Concerning the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, which prohibits forced begging, does not conflict with the Penal Code, which permits begging for religious purposes on specific days.(51, 56, 68) Most daaras also are not subject to government regulation or inspection, since they are private institutions, and the Government has made little progress with the 2013 draft law to improve daara oversight.(10, 13, 18, 26, 30, 40, 70) A lack of coordination, resource constraints, and powerful Muslim leaders have further hindered the Government's efforts to prohibit forced begging.(26, 40) In an effort to better enforce the Law Concerning the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, the MOJ released a directive instructing prosecutors to seek the maximum penalties for human trafficking violations during the reporting period.(26) In 2015, a marabout in Saint-Louis was prosecuted and convicted for shackling a student under the Anti-trafficking Law.(1, 13, 26) Although the Anti-trafficking Law punishes forced begging and related offenses by imprisonment of 2 to 5 years, the marabout received a sentence of 3 months.(26, 50)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee Against Child Labor	Coordinate initiatives, policies, and partnerships with civil society organizations to address child labor, including the National Action Plan on the Prevention and Abolition of Child Labor in Senegal (PCNPETE). Chaired by the MOL and includes representatives from the MWFC, the MOJ, the Ministry of Education, the police, and elected officials.(26, 69, 71, 72) In 2015, assisted in amending the laws governing hazardous work to prohibit all children under age 18 from engaging in hazardous work as part of the National Action Plan on the Prevention and Abolition of Child Labor in Senegal.(18, 41)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Commission	Coordinate implementation of the National Strategy on Child Protection and its related action plan.(3)
National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP)	Report on human trafficking in Senegal, with a focus on women and children; coordinate the implementation of the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Persons and other efforts to prevent human trafficking, prosecute perpetrators, and protect victims.(41, 53, 73-75) Chaired by the MOJ and employs five staff members.(13, 26, 41) In 2015, screened a film on child begging for law enforcement and judicial officials, and continued to conduct training on the national trafficking database for law enforcement. Also convened donors and civil society organizations to validate a new National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings and held two workshops to publicize the results of its daara mapping project.(26)
Senegalese Human Rights Committee	Coordinate human rights entities and submissions to the UN and the African Union and make recommendations on laws related to human rights.(76) Operates with an annual budget of approximately $125,000.(75) Composed of 29 members, including government entities, private sector organizations, and NGOs.(76)
Office of the President's Childhood Protection Unit (CAPE)	Coordinate government efforts related to child protection, including through the implementation of the National Strategy on Child Protection.(41, 77) Reports directly to the President of Senegal.(44) Contribute to the creation and implementation of child protection policies; develop a national system for collecting and disseminating data about vulnerable children. Advocate on behalf of all entities working on issues related to child begging, violence against children, and child labor.(77)

Despite its activities in 2015, the CNLTP acknowledged that its efforts to coordinate anti-human trafficking activities were hindered by funding constraints and a lack of support from all levels of the Government.(26, 27, 63) Redundancy among the activities of the coordinating bodies also creates confusion and obstructs effective collaboration and implementation of efforts. (53, 63, 72)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Senegal has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Prevention and Abolition of Child Labor in Senegal (PCNPETE) (2012–2016)	Aims to raise awareness of child labor issues, reinforce the capacity of law enforcement officials and civil society organizations, increase educational and training opportunities for youth, and improve the legal framework on child labor, including its worst forms.(1, 17, 25, 75, 78-80) In 2015, implemented new identification requirements for miners to combat child labor in artisanal mines, and established internship and apprenticeship programs for youth.(18) Also aims to implement a pilot cash transfer program by 2016; includes a budget of approximately $2.7 million.(20, 25, 78)
National Strategy on Child Protection (SNPE)	Aims to establish an integrated national social protection system and specifically identifies the issue of child begging.(17, 30) Implemented through Child Protection Committees (CPDE), currently established in 24 prefectures.(26, 29) CPDEs refer victims to social services and assist law enforcement with reintegrating child trafficking victims.(26) Includes an action plan with a recommended budget of $18 million.(17) In 2015, prefects, parliament members, and local stakeholders were trained on SNPE's objectives and implementing instruments, and seven CPDEs were trained on the use of a trafficking database.(26)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings (2015–2017)†	Aims to strengthen the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, build capacity by training enforcement officials and working with religious leaders, provide protection and judicial remediation for victims, and improve monitoring and evaluation of the National Action Plan.(26, 81) Implemented by the CNLTP.(28)
National Framework Plan for the Eradication of Child Begging (2013–2015)	Aimed to combat child begging by regulating daaras, providing services to children removed from the street, and enforcing penalties for individuals who force children to beg.(1, 17, 30, 75)
Roadmap to Combat Human Trafficking†	Created during a workshop organized by the CNLTP, this joint agreement to combat human trafficking was signed with the Government of Guinea-Bissau.(26)

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Economic and Social Development (SNDES) (2013–2017)*	Includes goals such as promoting youth employment and entrepreneurship, increasing access to social services, and improving the quality of education. Establishes a 10-year education cycle and commits to increasing employment opportunities for youth.(42) Through the 10-Year Education and Training Program (2012-2025) included in the SNDES, aims to improve the education system by mobilizing human and financial resources to enhance educational quality, improve physical infrastructure, and promote vocational training.(2, 42)
Program to Improve the Quality, Equality, and Transparency of the Education Sector (2013–2025)*	Led by the Directorate of Planning and Education Reform, incorporates the objectives of EFA, the Millennium Development Goals, and the SNDES. Aims to improve the quality of teaching; establish basic universal education; promote the teaching of science, technology, and innovation; and adapt vocation training to better suit the needs of youth and adults.(82)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Senegal funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project to Fight Against Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2013–2016)†	MWFC program that aims to raise awareness about forced begging and assist victims of child labor.(29, 37) In 2015, the Government allocated $183,000 to the MWFC for projects to address child labor, including forced begging, an increase of almost $100,000 from the 2014 budget of $86,000.(26, 44)
National Program of Family Assistance Bursaries (2013–2017)†	Part of PCNPETE, a social safety net program that provides conditional cash transfers to vulnerable families who keep their children in school.(18, 25, 75, 83) In 2015, doubled the program budget to approximately $32 million and served 200,000 families.(18)
Daara Modernization Program†	$18.5 million Government-funded program implemented by TOSTAN and RADDHO which aims to regulate, inspect, and fund daaras and eliminate forced begging.(84, 85) Completed a project to map daaras in the Dakar area in 2014; the CNLTP is conducting an assessment to expand the mapping project to other regions in Senegal.(26, 41) Ministry of Education signed an accord with the Senegalese Association of Koranic Schools to rehabilitate and equip 90 daaras ; its Funds for Koranic Schools program also developed a secular curriculum and works with religious institutions to remove children from street begging and exploitative situations.(29, 31) MWFC provided training to Koranic teachers on children's rights, child protection, and improvement of living conditions.(5, 29) In 2015, the Government implemented the first phase of the project, committing approximately $17,000 to build 32 public daaras and 32 community-led daaras in seven regions.(86)
Partnership for the Rescue and Rehabilitation of Street Children†	Government and NGO program that aims to withdraw children from the street and reinsert them into family settings.(29) Partners include government officials, NGOs, private-sector entities, religious organizations, and the media.(70)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan on Child Labor (2012–2015)	Aimed to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015 through the implementation of a regional action plan with 14 other ECOWAS countries.(87)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan to Eradicate Street Children (2015–2017)*	Based on the UN CRC and ECOWAS's 2020 Vision, this regional initiative aims to develop an approach to withdrawing children from the street and creating a protective environment for vulnerable children. Aims to assist governments in implementing existing laws and developing new ones where necessary.(88) In 2015, ECOWAS launched the project at a workshop in Dakar.(26)
GINDDI Center†	MWFC-run shelter that serves abused and vulnerable children, including runaway talibés, street children, and child trafficking victims.(29-31, 61, 63) Provides food, education, vocational training, family mediation, and medical and psychological care.(5, 26, 31, 36, 61, 63)
Children's Halfway Houses†	MOJ-run transit houses in Dakar, Pikine, and Saint-Louis that provide monitoring, education, and rehabilitation and reintegration services for victims of child trafficking.(26)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Senegal.

Although the Government of Senegal has implemented programs to address child trafficking and forced begging, research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to assist children in domestic work, agriculture, or mining. Resource constraints further hampered the Government's efforts to fully implement existing programs.(10, 14, 18, 30, 63, 79)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
66. UN. "World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex." (2012); http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

Serbia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Serbia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted changes to the Inspection Surveillance Law, which grants the Labor Inspectorate broader and increased authority to inspect unregistered business entities. However, children in Serbia are engaged in child labor, including in begging. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking. The Government lacks a national policy to combat child labor. The Council for Combating Trafficking in Human Beings did not meet during the reporting period, and, although the National Council for Children's Rights held two meetings, these did not result in substantive action to reduce child labor in the country.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Serbia are engaged in child labor, including in begging. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Serbia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	6.0 (54,045)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	6.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		101.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2005.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Industry	Manufacturing,* activities unknown (8)

	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 7, 11, 13)
	Use in the production of pornography* as a result of human trafficking* (1, 11)
	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking* (2, 3)
	Use in illicit activities, including in petty crime* (3, 11)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2015, more than 500,000 irregular migrants and asylum seekers, of whom the Ministry of the Interior (MOI) reported 96 percent were Syrians, Afghans, and Iraqis, transited through Serbia.(3, 15, 16) The Government identified one migrant as a victim of human trafficking and received anecdotal reports of child migrants being trafficked and subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(3, 11) Asylum seekers and individuals granted asylum are allowed to access primary and secondary education for free; however, asylum-seeking children residing in the Asylum Centers were not being enrolled in school during the reporting period.(12) Children of migrant and asylum-seeking families and unaccompanied children were vulnerable to trafficking for labor exploitation, including child labor, particularly if they were not enrolled in school.(11, 15) Serbian child trafficking victims, particularly those from Roma communities, were trafficked internally, often by family members, to engage in the worst forms of child labor.(2) Other than child trafficking victims, children who are most vulnerable to child labor include children from the Roma population; those from low-income families, particularly in poor, rural communities; and those who the Government has placed into foster care because they are at risk of re-engaging in child labor in the future.(17)

Individuals at risk of statelessness, particularly Romani parents and their children, often lack birth registration and documentation, which restricts their access to basic social services such as health care and education.(7, 12, 18) Economic hardship; ethnic discrimination against minorities; language barriers; and placement in special, non-mainstream schools discourage some children from attending school, especially Romani girls.(7, 12, 18) Although a technical working group exists to streamline complex registration procedures for undocumented minorities, including the registration of children whose parents are not registered, judges, registrars, and social workers still need to be trained to implement the revised procedures properly.(7, 19)

Constitutional and legal protections prohibit discrimination in education against individuals with disabilities.(7, 18, 20) However, individuals with disabilities remained one of the most vulnerable social groups in Serbia and faced difficulty accessing education, partly due to deeply entrenched social prejudices. More than 50 municipalities in the country lacked adequate funding to support inclusive education for children with disabilities.(7, 18) Children who do not have access to education are at an increased risk of exploitation in the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Serbia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓

 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 112 and 183–185 of the Criminal Code of the Republic of Serbia (22)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 388 of the Criminal Code of the Republic of Serbia (22)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Article 71 of the Constitution of the Republic of Serbia; Articles 94 and 98 of the Law on the Foundations of the Education System (20, 27)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 71 of the Constitution of the Republic of Serbia; Article 91 of the Law on the Foundations of the Education System (20, 27)

‡ Age calculated based on available information.

In 2015, the Government amended the Inspection Surveillance Law to broaden and increase the Labor Inspectorate’s authority to conduct inspections of unregistered business entities.(11)

According to Article 84 of the Labor Law, all children under age 18 are prohibited from strenuous physical work underground, underwater, or at excessive heights, work that may expose them to toxic substances or other health hazards, and activities that are judged by a competent health authority to be harmful. In addition, all children under age 18 may not work longer than 35 hours per week or during the night, with some exceptions.(21)

Article 71 of the Constitution makes primary education mandatory for all children. As defined by the Law on the Foundations of the Education System, primary education lasts eight years, beginning between age 6 and 8.(20, 27) Because children most commonly begin school at age 7, compulsory education is typically completed at age 15.(28)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, Veteran and Social Affairs Labor Inspectorate	Enforce labor laws and conduct inspections, including those related to child labor.(29)
Ministry of the Interior (MOI)	Enforce laws prohibiting commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking through the Organized Crime Police Force and the Border Police Force. Oversee the General Police Directorate, which consists of 27 local police directorates, all of which have dedicated anti-trafficking units.(3, 30, 31)
State Prosecutor’s Office	Lead investigations on human trafficking cases and exchange information through a network of 27 local prosecutors and two NGOs.(30) Provide financial support to the Center for Human Trafficking Victims’ Protection by collecting fees from defendants in minor criminal cases.(32)
Ministry of Labor, Employment, Veteran and Social Affairs’ Center for Human Trafficking Victims’ Protection	Identify and rescue child trafficking victims and children at risk of being trafficked, conduct needs assessments, and refer victims to social services. Maintain records on its beneficiaries and the services they received through a database, and contribute to research projects that relate to trafficking.(3) Includes the Agency for Coordination of Protection of Trafficking Victims and the Urgent Reception Center for Trafficking Victims. In 2015, this center distributed new indicators of trafficking in persons to social protection providers and criminal law enforcement personnel.(3) The Center for Human Trafficking Victims’ Protection resolved a legal dispute over physical property of the Urgent Reception Center, although the timeline for when its planned renovation will be completed and availability to human trafficking victims remains unclear. When fully operational, the Urgent Reception Center will provide temporary accommodations for child trafficking victims; however, it is not a specialized shelter for children.(3)

Organization/Agency	Role
Parliamentary Committee on Children	Review all draft legislation pertinent to children's rights to ensure that legislation is aligned with international norms and standards. Monitor the implementation of the child-related provisions of all laws.(17) Report to the UN CRC.(17)
Deputy Ombudsman for Children's Rights, Office of the Protector of Citizens	Monitor and conduct research on the situation of children's rights in Serbia. Produce reports on child begging, promote inclusive education of children and legal prohibition of corporal punishment, and manage the drafting of a comprehensive law on children's rights for parliamentary approval.(25)

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, the Labor Inspectorate completed 36,841 labor inspections and 18,555 security and health inspections, totaling 55,396 inspections. According to the Serbian Business Registers Agency, Serbia has 338,186 business entities, which means that each inspector covers 1,398 business entities.(11) Research found that the Labor Inspectorate generally lacked funding to provide specialized training and the necessary equipment, such as computers and vehicles, to facilitate adequate enforcement of laws prohibiting child labor.(6, 11, 35)

The Labor Inspectorate reported 36 child labor violations involving children between age 15 and 18 who were working without required parental or guardian approvals or health certificates. Research did not determine whether these children were involved in hazardous work.(11) If children are identified in situations of exploitative labor, they may be referred to receive social services at a center for social work, found in every locality.(11, 31)

Research found that inspectors were sometimes denied the right to enter a workplace to conduct inspections, especially in new private enterprises.(36)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Serbia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

The curriculum for internal police training programs and seminars, which includes basic police training, incorporates information on combating human trafficking. Police officers and consular and border officials who process immigration cases are also provided with training on human trafficking.(3) In 2015, the Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection partnered with the IOM to provide training on human trafficking to professionals assisting migrants in Presevo, Miratovac, and other parts of the country, training a total of 445 officials.(3)

Criminal law enforcement personnel responsible for investigating cases of human trafficking dedicated the majority of their time and resources to cases of human smuggling related to the migration crisis, which diminished their ability to investigate and prosecute human trafficking cases.(3) Although 17 of the 27 police directorates in the country have established teams comprising police, prosecutors, social workers, health workers, and local NGOs to combat human trafficking and to provide support to potential victims, a source reported that many of these teams were inactive during the reporting period.(3, 38)

The Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection worked to formally identify child trafficking victims. Social Welfare Centers, the primary provider of social services to human trafficking victims, had mandatory involvement in cases of child trafficking victims.(3) Both entities worked together to draft a protection plan in consultation with the victim. However, a source reported that both the Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection and the Social Welfare Centers lacked specialized care for child victims.(3)

In 2015, the Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection either returned child trafficking victims to their families, placed these children into foster care, or provided accommodations to them in one of two Centers for Children without Parental Care, based in Belgrade and Novi Sad. In practice, Social Welfare Centers were unable to remove children from their families, even in cases where there was evidence that the child had been trafficked or exploited by family members.(3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Council for Children's Rights	Coordinate government efforts to address and prioritize children's issues in Serbia, including child labor, by monitoring and evaluating government institutions' activities; providing monthly reports to the government on child labor and other children's rights issues; and suggesting policy solutions. The Council includes representatives from international organizations and various government ministries.(33)
National Council for Combating Trafficking in Human Beings	Chaired by the MOI, this council sets government policies against trafficking in persons. The National Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons (National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator) acts as the Secretary of the Council and manages the work of the Implementation Team.(3) Members of this team include the Ministers of the Interior; Finance; Labor, Employment, Veteran, and Social Affairs; Health; Justice; Economics; Education, Science, and Technical Development; and Youth and Sport, as well as other government representatives from the Republic Public Prosecutor's Office, the Office for Human and Minority Rights, the Security Information Agency, the Commissariat for Refugees and Migration, the Social Inclusion and Poverty Reduction Team, and the Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection. The Government intends for civil society organizations to participate as equal partners in the work of the Implementation Team through the appointment of five NGO officials and one Serbian Red Cross official.(3) In 2015, the Government appointed a new president for this council.(11, 16)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator	Implement the policies of the Council for Combating Trafficking in Human Beings and coordinate the day-to-day efforts of the Implementation Team to combat human trafficking. Based in the MOI.(3, 30)
Office for the Coordination against Trafficking in Persons*	Created by the MOI, this office will be a part of the General Police Directorate. Although the Government did not hire staff, provide resources, or outline the office's mandate during the reporting period, it intends to appoint the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator to be this office's director.(3)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, the Council for Children's Rights was ineffective in coordinating government efforts to address child labor. The two meetings this body held in 2015 did not lead to substantive action on reducing child labor in the country.(11) In addition, while the Council established a working group in November 2014 that would be responsible for developing an action plan to address the issue of children who beg on the streets, this working group did not hold any meetings during the reporting period.(11, 33) The Council for Combating Trafficking in Human Beings also did not meet in 2015.(3)

Research found that the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator was not provided with a budget or a formal work plan and also holds a position as the head of migration for the MOI's Border Police Department. Although the Coordinator was active throughout the reporting period, these constraints on time and financial resources limited the scope of work and prevented the Coordinator from addressing issues such as police investigations, prosecutions, or the protection of trafficking victims.(3, 30) In addition, as an MOI official, the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator's independence is limited because the Cabinet of the Minister of the Interior must provide approval before the Coordinator can work or meet with non-Serbian government officials or organizations.(3, 30)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Serbia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Strategy for the Improvement of the Status of Roma in the Republic of Serbia (2009–2015)*	Aimed to improve the status of Roma people in Serbia in housing, education, employment, and health.(39) Sought to include representatives from Roma communities in the process of policy implementation. Resulted from the signing of the Declaration of the Decade of Roma Inclusion (2005–2015) in 2005.(39)
Anti-Discrimination Strategy and Action Plan (2013–2018)	Seeks to prevent discrimination and improve the situation of nine vulnerable groups, including children and ethnic minorities. Targets children subjected to multiple forms of discrimination, such as Roma children, refugees and internally displaced children, and victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, including those used in the production of pornography.(40, 41) In 2015, the Government formed a council for monitoring the Action Plan, and established and trained key points of contact for this work at the ministry- and local-level.(38)
Special Protocol on the Treatment of Trafficking Victims by Judicial Authorities	Aims to provide judicial officials with clear guidance to facilitate adequate treatment of trafficking victims.(42)
National Plan of Action for Children and General Protocol on Child Protection from Abuse and Neglect (2005–2015)*	Established policies to promote a quality education for all children and to protect children from abuse, neglect, exploitation, and violence. Associated protocols included the Special Protocol on Behavior of Law Enforcement Officers in Protecting Juvenile Persons from Abuse and Neglect and the Special Protocol on Protection of Children Accommodated in Social Care Institutions.(25)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

During the reporting period, the Government continued to draft the National Strategy for Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Persons for 2014–2020 (National Strategy) and its accompanying Action Plan for 2014–2015; however, the National Assembly did not adopt either the National Strategy or the Action Plan in 2015.(3, 30, 32, 33) The Government reported that the new National Strategy and its Action Plan will incorporate policy positions from the previously proposed National Strategy to Prevent and Protect Children from Trafficking and Exploitation for Pornography and Prostitution (2012–2016).(8) There has not been an up-to-date National Strategy in place since 2011.(11)

Serbia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

According to census data from 2011, the most current data available, 147,604 individuals of Roma ethnicity, or 2.05 percent of the total population, reside in the country.(43) Research found that although the Government of Serbia has formulated strategies in the context of the Decade of Roma Inclusion, its commitment to implementation of these strategies has been low. In particular, the Strategy for the Improvement of the Status of Roma in the Republic of Serbia did not sufficiently address housing issues for Romani people in Serbia who have been forcibly evicted or are at risk of eviction from informal settlements.(33, 44-46)

National Plan of Action for Children and General Protocol on Child Protection from Abuse and Neglect (2005–2015) expired on December 31, 2015, and research found no indication that the Government started developing a new one during the reporting period.(11)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Serbia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Allowance Program†	Government cash benefits program for poor families, conditional on school enrollment for children ages 7 and older. Provides a regular allowance of approximately $25 per child, and $32 per child with single parents. There is also an allotment for parents equal to $351 for single child families, $1,372 for families with two children, $2,471 with three, and $3,294 for four or more.(25, 38, 47)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR)*	USDOL-funded capacity building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve legislation addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards; improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor; develop, validate, adopt, and implement a National Action Plan on the elimination of child labor; and enhance the implementation of national and local policies and programs aimed at the reduction and prevention of child labor in Serbia.(48)
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Serbia, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity of the Government to conduct research in this area.(49) In 2015, the project identified and provided training to an implementing partner in preparation for conducting a rapid assessment of child labor in the Roma community.(49)
Assistance to Roma Children in Education†	Ministry of Education program that seeks to improve the school attendance rate of Roma children. Includes a Serbian language training component to help Roma students integrate into the school environment.(25)
Programs Under the Social Security Law†	Government program that provides a range of social services, including assistance to trafficking victims.(50) Requires Social Services Centers in 140 communities to maintain 24-hour duty shifts in order to protect children from abuse and neglect, including Roma children.(8, 51)
Local Communities Against Trafficking†	$180,000 IOM and Swiss Development Agency-funded project, implemented by the MOI in collaboration with NGOs. Establishes multisector anti-trafficking teams to improve prevention and protection efforts at the local level.(52) Teams consist of representatives from local police departments, the Higher Public Prosecutor's Office, the Social Welfare Center, the Red Cross, various health institutions, the local branch of the National Employment Agency, schools, civil society organizations, and other local authorities.(14, 31) There are 17 teams total throughout the country, however a source reported many of these teams were inactive in 2015.(38)
Strengthening the Identification and Protection of Victims of Trafficking	IOM, Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection, and Ministry of Internal Affairs project that contributes to the implementation of the National Anti-Trafficking Strategy by improving mechanisms for the prevention and identification of victims of human trafficking. Establishes general and specific monitoring indicators.(14)
Anti-Trafficking Efforts†	Government programs that provide support to victims of human trafficking, including through maintaining a national anti-trafficking Web site and hotline; providing foreign and domestic trafficking victims with access to social services and medical care, as well as witness and victim protection services; and providing accommodation for child trafficking victims in two Centers for Children Without Parental Care.(17, 31, 53) Government officials reported that during 2015, migrants in Asylum Centers in Presevo and Subotica received informational materials on their rights and ways to report violations, including those involving human trafficking, from the Ministry of Labor, Employment, Veteran, and Social Affairs, and the Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection.(11)
Protection for Street Children†	Government programs that establish teams within local centers for social services to provide protection for children living and working on the streets.(29) Teams include representatives from the MOI, health care professionals, educators, and social workers.(29) A total of 32 local governments established 92 teams; preparations for an additional 35 teams were ongoing.(29)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Serbia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Enforcement	Ensure that labor inspectors have the necessary training, tools, and equipment to conduct thorough investigations on laws related to child labor.	2010 – 2015
	Make information regarding child labor and criminal law enforcement, including the amount of funding for the Labor Inspectorate, the number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed, whether unannounced inspections are permitted or conducted, the number of criminal law investigations conducted, and the number of criminal prosecutions initiated, publicly available.	2015
	Ensure that the Labor Inspectorate has the ability to enter and inspect any registered or unregistered workplace for child labor violations, as guaranteed by law.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that local teams of police, prosecutors, social workers, health workers, and local NGOs to combat human trafficking are used in the police directorates in which they have been established.	2015
	Ensure that staff members at the Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection and Social Welfare Centers have sufficient capacity to address the specific needs of child trafficking victims.	2015
Coordination	Ensure that coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms, such as the Council for Children's Rights and the Council for Combating Trafficking in Human Beings, fulfill their mandate.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator has sufficient resources to effectively address key coordination issues such as police investigations, prosecutions, and the protection of trafficking victims, and increase the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator's independence.	2015

	Address barriers to education, including problems with safety; access and discrimination for children with disabilities; and access for migrant and minority populations, particularly unaccompanied minors, asylum seekers, and Roma, due in part to a lack of birth registration documentation, to reduce these children's vulnerability to trafficking and labor exploitation.	2014 – 2015
	Improve methods of educating and guiding families in need about the requirements for proper registration and documentation in order to receive social assistance; ensure that the revised registration procedures are implemented efficiently and properly.	2011 – 2015

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Seychelles made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established a Child Protection Team within the Police Department and continued to fund social programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. However, although research is limited, there is evidence that children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Seychelles. The Government has not established a minimum age for hazardous work nor has it determined hazardous occupations or activities prohibited for all children. In addition, law enforcement agencies do not have sufficient resources to adequately enforce child labor laws.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Seychelles.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Seychelles. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		112.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(6)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis, 2015.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2-5)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Seychelles, predominantly girls, are induced into commercial sexual exploitation by peers, family members, and pimps. Migrant workers and foreign tourists contribute to the demand for commercial sex, particularly on the main island of Mahé.(3, 4, 8, 9) Seychellois children engage in commercial sexual exploitation in nightclubs, bars, guesthouses, hotels, brothels, and on the street. Children under age 18 who are addicted to drugs are vulnerable to being forced into commercial sexual exploitation.(3-5, 8)

Limited evidence suggests that the lack of school infrastructure and limited availability of teachers impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(10, 11)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Seychelles has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 251 of the Penal Code; Articles 3–4 of the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons Act (14, 15)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 4 of the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons Act (15)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 152 and 245 of the Penal Code; Articles 2–4 of the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons Act (14, 15)

* No conscription (19)

Laws related to child labor are not completely consistent with international standards. Article 31(b) of the Constitution stipulates that the minimum age for dangerous, harmful, and unhealthy work should be higher than the minimum age for work of 15 years, although it does not specify an age.(12) Article 22(4) of the Conditions of Employment Regulations allows children ages 15 to 17 to work in the restaurant, tourism, or entertainment industries and at night with the written approval of a “competent officer,” although the legislation does not define “competent officer.”(3, 13)

The Attorney General’s office has established a committee to bring Seychelles’ national laws into harmony with ILO C. 182 on the worst forms of child labor.(20, 21) A more specific list of hazardous child labor activities that includes a provision to establish a minimum age for hazardous work at 18 has been developed but was not approved during the reporting period.(21-23)

The minimum age of 12 for light work is not in compliance with international standards. In addition, the law does not determine activities in which light work may be permitted, prescribe the number of hours per week for light work, and specify the conditions in which light work may be undertaken.(13, 22) A legal amendment to the Conditions of Employment Regulations that increases the minimum age for light work to 13 and includes specific light work provisions has been developed but was not approved during the reporting period.(22, 23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Resources Development's Labor Monitoring and Compliance Unit	Enforce child protection and child labor laws, investigate complaints, and conciliate disputes between employers and workers.(24-26)
Police Department's Family Squad	Investigate criminal cases involving minors, including issues of commercial sexual exploitation. (3, 24, 27, 28)
Police Department's Child Protection Team*	Collaborate with the Department of Social Affairs to ensure that child abuse cases are addressed. Police officers and social workers may conduct investigations and begin legal proceedings against parents who put their children at risk for abuse.(5)
Department of Social Affairs' Child Protection Unit	Develop and implement programs to protect vulnerable children and monitor alleged violations of child labor laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(3, 24, 27, 28)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Seychelles took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Reports indicate there is a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to effectively conduct criminal law enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor.(31, 32)

In May 2015, the Government developed standard operating procedures and a referral mechanism to help law enforcement officials identify human trafficking victims and refer them to the appropriate social service providers.(31)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordinating Committee on Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate actions against trafficking in persons and guarantee protection of victims at the national level. Committee members are appointed by presidential order.(3, 4) The Committee is chaired by the Ministry of Social Affairs and includes representatives from the Police Force, Immigration, and Civil Status Department; the Attorney General's Office; and the Ministries of Labor and Human Resource, Foreign Affairs, and Customs. Also includes non-governmental stakeholders.(15) During the reporting period, the Committee met multiple times to develop a victim assistance tool and implement awareness raising campaigns on human trafficking.(4)
National Council for Children	Monitor the implementation of government policies to protect the rights of children and coordinate social programs for victims of child abuse.(20, 24) The Council is a semi-autonomous body established by the National Council of Children Act of 1981.(26, 33) Board members are appointed by the President and include representatives from government ministries and civil society organizations.(24) In November 2015, the Council participated in a meeting organized by the Government to review progress on implementing the UN CRC.(5)
National Commission for Child Protection	Implement, coordinate, and monitor government efforts on child protection.(28) The Commission is chaired by the Ministry of Social Affairs and includes representatives from the Attorney General's Office, Health Department, Police Force, Family Tribunal, and Ministry of Education and Youth. Also includes non-governmental stakeholders. The Commission met regularly during the reporting period (2, 23, 34)

During the reporting period, the National Coordinating Committee on Trafficking in Persons did not receive dedicated funding, which affected its ability to implement the National Action Plan.(4)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Seychelles has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategic Framework and Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2014–2015)	Aimed to raise awareness, prosecute perpetrators, improve victims' access to protection and assistance services, build capacity of stakeholders, and strengthen cooperation among relevant stakeholders to prevent and combat trafficking in persons.(35)
National Social Renaissance Plan of Action (2012–2016)	Establishes a 5-year roadmap in the areas of education, health, employment, human resource development, social affairs, community development, and security.(1) Includes provisions to decrease violations of children's rights, bolster child protection, and enhance services to victims of commercial sexual exploitation, including child victims.(1) Implemented and monitored by the Ministries of Home Affairs; Health; Community Development; Education; and Labor and Human Resources Development, among other agencies.(36)

Policy	Description
National Employment Policy and Strategies	Incorporates policies to increase employment opportunities for youth and expand programs to assist women, children, and vulnerable groups.(24, 37, 38) Also aims to develop a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children. Implemented and monitored by the Ministry of Labor and Human Resources Development.(37)
Education Sector Strategic Plan (2013–2017)*	Sets out a comprehensive roadmap to improve the quality of, and access to, primary and secondary education. Overseen by the Ministry of Education.(38)
Social Security Benefits*	Provides periodic payments to vulnerable children, including orphans.(39)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Seychelles funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children Awareness Raising†	Government program that implements awareness-raising activities aimed at youth. Focuses on the dangers of commercial sexual exploitation.(4)
Juvenile Project of Child Rehabilitation†	Joint effort by the Ministry of Education and the Department of Social Development to serve vulnerable children, including school dropouts. Provides a package of services, including education and psychological care.(20)
Transportation Subsidy†	Government-funded program that subsidizes bus fares for vulnerable students who live more than three kilometers from school buildings.(9, 28)
Technical and Vocational Education and Training Program†	Government-implemented training program for secondary school students 16 years and older who have difficulty with traditional school curricula. Aims to deter students from dropping out of school.(20)

† Program is funded by the Government of Seychelles.

Although the Government has a program to address commercial sexual exploitation, the scope of this program is insufficient to address the full extent of the problem, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children associated with tourism.(20)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure the law specifically prohibits hazardous work for all children under age 18.	2011 – 2015
	Determine hazardous occupations or activities prohibited for all children in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2009 – 2015

	Ensure the law criminally prohibits the use, procurement, and offering of a child in the production and trafficking of drugs.	2015
	Raise the minimum age for light work to 13 and ensure that the law's light work provisions determine activities in which light work may be permitted, prescribe the number of hours per week for light work, and specify the conditions in which light work may be undertaken to comply with international standards.	2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available regarding the labor inspectorate's funding; training for criminal investigators; and the number of investigations undertaken, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions achieved.	2011 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Sierra Leone

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT REGRESSION IN POLICY THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Sierra Leone made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Sierra Leone is receiving this assessment because it implemented a regression in policy that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Girls who were pregnant were prohibited by a Government policy from taking secondary and post-secondary school entrance exams or attending regular public schools during the reporting period, making them more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by launching its National Ebola Recovery Strategy and finalizing its human trafficking database and a National Referral Mechanism to assist victims of human trafficking. Children in Sierra Leone are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in diamond mining. Sierra Leone's laws do not adequately protect children from involvement in hazardous work and the country does not have an approved national action plan on child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Sierra Leone are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1, 2) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in diamond mining. Children working in the mining sector load, carry, and wash and sieve gravel.(1) Other children in this sector hawk or deliver goods, perform errands, or are exploited in commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 3)

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	51.3 (897,142)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	67.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	43.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		69.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from the Demographic and Health Survey, 2013.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming of coffee, cocoa, and palm oil, including clearing fields, planting, weeding, harvesting, and transporting these products (6-10)
	Fishing,* including deep-sea fishing,† mending nets, and working on boats in the open sea*† (1, 3, 11)
Industry	Mining† for alluvial diamonds, sand,* gold,* including loading gravel* in sacks or basins, carrying sacks on their heads,* washing,* and sieving* (1, 10, 12-14)
	Quarrying† and crushing stone,* including granite, and transporting gravel* (1, 3, 10, 15, 16)
	Construction, activities unknown (1, 2)
	Manufacturing,† activities unknown (2)
Services	Scavenging scrap metals and recyclable materials from dumpsites (1, 10)
	Domestic work (1, 10)
	Street work, including begging, trading, and selling goods (1-3, 10, 17)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Portering, including carrying heavy loads† (1, 10, 17)
	Working as apprentices,* including in auto-repair shops and on transportation vehicles (poda poda) (1, 2)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 10, 18)
	Forced domestic work,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (18, 19)
	Forced stealing* (1, 10)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 10, 20)
	Forced labor in agriculture* and at granite* and alluvial diamond mines, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 10, 18, 20)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Sierra Leone is a source, transit, and destination country for children trafficked for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 20) Children are trafficked mostly from rural to urban areas for commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, and petty trading.(3) Children are also trafficked internally for forced labor in agriculture and diamond mines and for begging.(3) Children from neighboring West African countries are trafficked to Sierra Leone for begging, forced labor in mining and portering, and commercial sexual exploitation.(3) Sources indicate that during the reporting period, cross-border human trafficking increased, including trafficking of girls from Sierra Leone to Guinea for labor exploitation and of boys and girls to The Gambia for “cultural dancing.”(21)

According to the Education Act, the Government has established the right to free basic education; however, in practice, families pay for their children’s uniforms, supplies, transportation, and other school costs.(1, 10, 22, 23) Some children work part-time to help cover these costs.(22) Other factors that limit children’s access to education are a lack of schools, early pregnancy, motherhood and marriage, sexual abuse from teachers, and poor school conditions.(1, 10, 24–26) Although the Persons with Disability Act prohibits discrimination in education, children with disabilities in Sierra Leone are less likely to attend school than other children due to discrimination and inadequate school facilities, which may make them more vulnerable to involvement in child labor.(10, 26, 27)

In 2015, the Government continued to redirect its resources to address an outbreak of Ebola Virus Disease (EVD), which adversely affected thousands of children in the country.(18) Although Sierra Leone reopened its public schools on April 14, 2015, after a 9-month closure due to the EVD outbreak, the Government implemented a policy that prohibits pregnant girls from taking secondary and post-secondary school entrance exams or attending regular public schools. This policy was carried out despite a significant increase in pregnancies among girls during the EVD outbreak.(28) The policy may make pregnant girls more vulnerable to involvement in child labor, including its worst forms. Other children in Sierra Leone have not returned to school since the reopening because they are working or because their families can no longer afford the costs of schooling.(29)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Sierra Leone’s hazardous work prohibitions are not comprehensive. The types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not adequately cover children’s work in sectors in which child labor is known to occur, including in agriculture, construction, domestic work, transportation, street work, auto repair shops, and dumpsites, all of which may be undertaken in conditions that harm children’s health, safety, or morals.(1) The Government has developed a list of hazardous work prohibited for children under age 18; however, the list has not be submitted for Cabinet approval.(21, 36)

In 2013, the Government prepared a National Action Plan on Human Trafficking that included a goal for strengthening provisions of its Anti-Trafficking Law, including those prohibiting domestic human trafficking; in 2014, the Government set up a task force to review and revise the law.(19, 38) Research did not find whether additional actions were taken on the Anti-Trafficking Law in 2015.

The Child Rights Act sets the minimum age for light work at 13 years; however, it does not specify the hours and conditions under which light work may be undertaken or limit the number of hours for light work.(30)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS)—Child Labor Unit	Supervise implementation of ILO C. 138 and 182 and formulate, implement, and monitor compliance with child labor regulations.(39) MLSS District Labor Officers are responsible for enforcing labor laws in the formal sector.(18)
Ministry of Mines and Mineral Resources	Enforce regulations against using child labor in mining. Authorized to suspend licenses of mining operators engaged in child labor.(10, 32)
Ministry of Social Welfare, Gender and Children's Affairs	Serve as lead agency to ensure child protection in country and in criminal law enforcement.(1, 18) Head National Trafficking In Persons Secretariat.(18)
Sierra Leone Police, Family Support Unit (FSU)	Investigate and prosecute various child labor crimes identified by monitors.(18)
Transnational Organized Crime Unit (TOCU)	Responsible for enforcing human trafficking cases and providing statistics and information on cases of human trafficking.(40)
District Councils	Enforce child labor laws in the informal sector.(1)
Village Child Welfare Committees	Promote awareness on child rights and report child welfare concerns to village and Government officials who are responsible for children's issues. Provide recommendations and instructions on the maintenance and support of specific village children. Address complaints and concerns of adults or children in the village.(30)

The Child Rights Act requires the establishment of a child welfare committee in every village, chiefdom, and district; however, these committees have only been established in a few parts of the country.(18, 30)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Sierra Leone took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) had 18 labor inspectors.(42) These inspectors were largely responsible for enforcing laws in factories; however, less than 1 percent of children work in factories.(2) This year, the Government established regional child labor units in cities in the North (Makeni), East (Kenema), and South (Bo) and assigned a factory inspector to each unit, although most inspectors are still assigned to the Western Area of the country which has the lowest number of child laborers of any region in the country.(18, 42) According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, the Government of Sierra Leone should employ about 180 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(43-45) In addition, although the MLSS was provided with additional donor funds to purchase vehicles in 2015, the MLSS reported that it had insufficient funding, including resources for transportation, to adequately carry out its duties.(18)

In December 2015, the MLSS trained 40 newly recruited staff and other staff members on general labor administration, including child labor monitoring; however, officials reported that they did not believe this training was adequate.(18) Although the Government has a complaint line for issues related to child protection, it does not receive child labor complaints.(12)

Although the Ministry of Mines and Mineral Resources can conduct inspections of mines and revoke licenses from license holders who are found to be using child labor, reports indicated that the government did not effectively enforce these laws in the diamond mining sector.(20, 32)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Sierra Leone took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Reports indicate that criminal law enforcement in Sierra Leone, particularly to address human trafficking, is hampered by a lack of coordination, limited funding, and a lack of training among law enforcement personnel and the judiciary.(21) During the reporting period, most government agency resources, including those used for enforcing laws on human trafficking, forced labor, and commercial sexual exploitation, were diverted to address the EVD outbreak.(21)

According to one source, the Transnational Organized Crime Unit (TOCU) investigated nine cases of cross-border child trafficking for labor exploitation involving 16 victims in 2015, while the Sierra Leone Police, Family Support Unit (FSU) investigated two cases of trafficking of children for both labor and sexual exploitation.(47) In addition, both TOCU and the FSU reported investigations involving the trafficking of children to Guinea to be domestic servants, and the attempted trafficking of children to be “cultural dancers” in The Gambia. Comprehensive criminal enforcement statistics from other agencies are unavailable.(47) Research could not determine whether the District Councils conducted enforcement visits in other areas of the informal sector in 2015 in which child labor is prevalent.(47)

The courts handle human trafficking cases inefficiently, and cases are often dropped before completion because of pressures and other difficult circumstances that victims face.(21)

In 2015, in an effort to improve its data collection efforts, the Government finalized its database on human trafficking and a National Referral Mechanism to better serve human trafficking victims.(21) The Government also made a reported 74 referrals to private shelters during the reporting year.(21)

The Government of Sierra Leone collaborated with the Governments of Liberia and Guinea in addressing human trafficking during the reporting period and with the U.S. Government in the training of Sierra Leonean diplomats on child labor issues.(21)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Technical Steering Committee on Child Labor	Meet ad hoc to discuss major issues on child labor as they arise.(12, 39)
National Trafficking in Persons Task Force	Coordinate the needs and requirements of agencies involved in providing shelter and services for victims, gather data on reported trafficking cases, and meet regularly to develop policy and address the issue of child trafficking.(12, 48) Task Force is headed by the Ministry of Social Welfare, Gender and Children's Affairs.(49)
National Commission for Children	Coordinate and exchange information in accordance with the Child Rights Act. Advise the Government on ways to improve the condition and welfare of children in Sierra Leone.(30) By the end of 2015, only 11 of the 12 members of the Commission were named.(18)

The National Technical Steering Committee met every quarter in 2015.(18) The National Trafficking in Persons Task Force did not operate during the first 4 months of the year due to the EVD outbreak, but resumed operations in May.(21) After it resumed operations, the Task Force implemented an awareness-raising campaign on human trafficking and submitted two draft reports to the Cabinet, including one for a proposed anti-migrant smuggling law and another on ratifying the Economic Community of West African States Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters.(21) The National Commission for Children began operating in February 2015, with a budget of $47,000 and a staff of 12.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Sierra Leone has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Human Trafficking	Includes strategies to address human trafficking through prevention, victim identification, protection and referral, training, and government coordination and monitoring.(38) In 2015, the Government approved the updated National Action Plan and the new Trafficking in Persons Reporting Framework.(21)
Agenda for Prosperity (2013–2018)	Addresses child labor, including its worst forms, through strategies to expand and strengthen the capacity of the country's social protection system and improve education access, equity, and quality for children.(50)
Education Sector Plan (2014–2018)*	Implements the Education Act and includes provisions to increase access, equity, completion, quality, and relevance of basic education.(51)
National Ebola Recovery Strategy (2015–2017)†	Includes strategies to address the impact of Ebola Virus Disease (EVD) as it relates to the economy, education, gender, health, and labor.(18) Addresses child labor, including its worst forms, through strategies to care for and protect orphans and other vulnerable children, provide livelihood support for families, and return children to schools.(52)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The Government drafted the National Action Plan against the Worst Forms of Child Labor, but it has yet to be approved.(53)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Sierra Leone funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2015)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010.(39, 54) Aims to build the capacity of the Government and develop strategic policies to eliminate child labor.(54) In 2015, the project trained 40 labor officials.(54)
Program to Combat Recruitment of Child Soldiers, Child Soldier Prevention in Local Schools	Child Soldier Initiative-funded, 5-year program provides child protection training for the police and army. Implements an education program, run by former child soldiers, in 45 schools across 5 districts of Sierra Leone to teach children about their legal rights, child soldiering, and tactics used to recruit children.(55) The program aims to make child rights training mandatory for the local police and armed forces, and outlines standards on how troops must engage with children in combat.(55)

Program	Description
Human Trafficking and Sexual Violence Prevention Program (2013–2016)	USDOS-funded project, implemented by World Hope International, provides the only shelter for human trafficking victims in Sierra Leone. Identifies and provides care, recovery, and reintegration services for victims of human trafficking and exploitation, and works to build the Government's capacity to combat human trafficking in a sustainable manner.(18)
Building Law Enforcement Capacity to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2013–2015)	USDOS-funded, $500,000, 2-year project implemented in collaboration with the Sierra Leone Labor Congress, and in conjunction with the Solidarity Center and the International Trade Union Confederation, Africa, to combat trafficking in persons and child labor in the informal sector. In 2015, the project worked with unions in the informal sector to identify and eliminate trafficking in persons and trained the Sierra Leone Police in how to investigate and prosecute these types of cases.(18)
Shelters	Government program that refers child trafficking victims to private shelters that house child victims of forced labor and trafficking.(19)
Observational Interim and Interim Care Centers†	Centers operated by the Government to assist children adversely affected by EVD. Interim Care Centers provided protection and care to children orphaned by Ebola while Observational Interim Care Centers, operated until November 2015, assisted children who were at high risk due to exposure to family members and other people affected by EVD.(21)
Awareness-raising programs on EVD	Government awareness-raising effort to prevent the spread of EVD. In 2015, the Government included information about trafficking in persons in its awareness-raising programs on Ebola in local communities.(21)
Revitalizing Education Development in Sierra Leone (2014–2017)	World Bank-funded, $23.4 million project that aims to strengthen the education system in Sierra Leone. Adds resources to support the initiation of a school feeding program, helps eliminate informal school fees, supplies books to children in grades 1 to 3, and supports local councils with school infrastructure needs, among other activities.(56, 57)
UNICEF Country Program (2015–2018)*	Aims to address the worst forms of child labor, increase access to basic education, reduce child marriage and adolescent pregnancies, and address other children's needs.(26)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Sierra Leone.

Sierra Leone has insufficient shelters and safe houses for children who have been withdrawn from working on the streets or in forced labor.(3)

This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
44. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, the Solomon Islands made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established a National Action Plan on Human Trafficking and People Smuggling and dedicated significant funding for its implementation. The government also formalized the Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee to improve coordination of government efforts to address human trafficking, including the trafficking of children. In collaboration with Save the Children, the National Advisory Committee on Children launched a new program to protect children from involvement in commercial sexual exploitation. However, children in the Solomon Islands are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Gaps remain in the country's legal framework. Neither the minimum age for employment nor the minimum age for engagement in hazardous work meet international standards. In addition, education is not compulsory and laws do not adequately protect all children from engagement in commercial sexual exploitation. Resources for the enforcement of laws against child labor remain insufficient.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Solomon Islands are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Solomon Islands. Data on some of these key indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting* and collecting* palm oil fruits on plantations* and sea cucumbers* (1, 5)
Industry	Alluvial mining* (1) Construction on roads and buildings,* including making bricks* (1)
Services	Domestic work* and work as cooks,* including in logging camps* and on fishing boats* (1, 2, 6) Scavenging for cans* and metal* in garbage dumpsites, streets, and streams* (1, 7) Selling cooked food and fruits* (6) Working in nightclubs,* casinos,* and motels* (1, 6)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 6-11) Use in the production of pornography* (2) Use in illicit activities, including in the cultivation* and trafficking of drugs* (1, 7, 9) Forced domestic work and forced work as cooks, including in logging camps and on fishing boats (2, 6, 11, 12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

Solomon Islands

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Both boys and girls are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation in areas near logging camps, near or aboard commercial fishing vessels, and in the capital city of Honiara.(2, 8, 10) There are reports that some family members put their minor children up for “informal adoption” in order to pay off debts or offer them in marriage to loggers and miners; subsequently, the children may be forced into domestic work or commercial sexual exploitation.(6, 11) Some logging or fishing workers engage male children in a practice known as solair, in which boys work as intermediaries to procure young girls for commercial sexual exploitation.(6)

Although the Government’s Fee Free Basic Education Policy provides free education for children in grades one through nine, additional school fees, uniform and book costs, and transportation limitations make it challenging for some children, particularly girls, to access education.(1, 2, 13)

There is no nationally representative data available on the prevalence and nature of child labor in the Solomon Islands.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Solomon Islands has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	12	Article 46 of the Labor Act (14)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	15	Article 47 of the Labor Act (14)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 47–49 of the Labor Act (14)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 6 of the Constitution; Articles 251 and 256 of the Penal Code; Part 7 of the Immigration Act (15-17)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Part 7 of the Immigration Act (17)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 144, 149, 150, 173, and 174 of the Penal Code (16)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A†
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A†
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	No

† No standing military (18)

The minimum age for work is not in compliance with international standards because the Labor Act permits children as young as age 12 to work.(14) In addition, the Solomon Islands lacks a comprehensive minimum age to prohibit all children under 18 from involvement in hazardous work. According to the Labor Act, children under age 15 are prohibited from working in the industrial sector or on ships, and children under age 16 are prohibited from working in underground mines.(14) Male children between the ages of 16 and 18 may be permitted to work in mines, on ships, or during the night in industrial undertakings with a medical certificate or with specific written permission from the Commissioner of Labor.(14) While the law defines the hazardous activities prohibited for children in the industrial sector, it does not specify hazardous activities in the agricultural or service sectors, where there is evidence that children are employed.

Although the Immigration Act prohibits transnational trafficking in persons, laws in the Solomon Islands are not sufficient to address child trafficking, as domestic trafficking is not a criminal offense.(17, 19) In an effort to close this legal gap, the Solomon Islands Law Reform Commission has prepared an amendment to the Penal Code, but the parliament did not adopt it during the reporting period.(20)

Gaps in legislation leave some children vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation. The law does not criminally prohibit the use of children, the procuring of boys 15-17, or the offering of children 15-17 for prostitution. In addition, the law does not criminally prohibit the use, procurement, or offering of a child for the production of pornography or pornographic performances.(12, 16) While the law criminalizes the production, distribution, and possession of pornography, it does not contain heightened penalties for child pornography. Additionally, laws do not prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, such as in the production and trafficking of drugs.(16, 21)

The Solomon Islands has not established a legal compulsory age for education, which increases the risk of children's involvement in child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Commerce, Industry, Labor, and Immigration (MOCILI)	Enforce child labor laws.(21) The Immigration Division within MOCILI leads efforts to combat human trafficking, including the trafficking of children.(20, 22)
Royal Solomon Islands Police	Enforce criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.(12) Work in partnership with the Australian-led Regional Assistance Mission to Solomon Islands on human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation cases.(21)
Trafficking in Persons Technical Investigation Team	Monitor and investigate cases of transnational human trafficking, specifically in the logging industry. Comprises representatives from the Immigration Division, the Royal Solomon Islands Police, Customs, and Forestry.(20)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in the Solomon Islands did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Sources, including the Government, noted that inadequate resources and lack of technical capacity among enforcement agencies hinder meaningful enforcement of labor laws.(12, 23)

In 2015, law enforcement officials participated in an anti-human trafficking training organized by the IOM and the Solomon Islands Immigration Division.(20) Also during the year, the Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee and the Solomon Islands Immigration Division developed and published standard operating procedures (SOPs) on victim identification, protection, and referral. The SOPs provide guidance for law enforcement officials on how to communicate with victims of human trafficking and to ensure that they are referred to appropriate services.(20) Currently, the Immigration Division refers trafficking in persons victims to the National Disaster Management Office, the Solomon Islands Red Cross, or the IOM for assistance with temporary accommodation and other support services.(20)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on trafficking in persons, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee (Under MOCILI)	Coordinate efforts to address human trafficking across the Government.(20) Chaired by the Immigration Division, the Committee comprises representatives from the Royal Solomon Islands Police Force; the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions; and the ministries of Labor, Foreign Affairs and Trade, Justice, Customs, and Social Welfare, as well as various NGOs.(20, 24) In 2015, the Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee finalized its terms of reference and was recognized as a formal entity. The Ministry of Commerce, Industry, Labor, and Immigration allocated funding to support the Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee's coordination efforts.(20)

The Government of the Solomon Islands has established the National Advisory Committee on Children to advise the Cabinet on general issues affecting children, coordinate the implementation of the UN CRC, and develop advocacy materials to promote the rights of children. Members of the Committee include the Social Welfare Division; the Ministry of Health and Medical Services; the Ministry of Women, Youth, and Children Affairs; and the Ministry of Education and Human Resource Development.(25) Research found no evidence that the Committee functions as a coordinating mechanism to specifically address child labor issues.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Solomon Islands has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Human Trafficking and People Smuggling (2015–2020)†	Provides a framework for national anti-human trafficking efforts. In 2015, included a budget of $36,770 for monitoring and inspection activities.(20)
National Children's Policy with National Action Plan (2010–2015)	Committed the Government to substantially improving services and the legal framework for child protection over a 5-year period.(25) Objectives of the policy included ratifying the UN CRC Optional Protocols, raising the minimum age for employment to 18, achieving universal primary education, registering all births by 2015, and creating a mechanism for the coordination and enforcement of child protection laws and policies.(25)
Fee Free Basic Education Policy*	Aims to increase educational access by subsidizing school fees for grades one through nine.(26)
National Youth Policy (2010–2015)*	Developed a strategic action plan to address six key issues related to the well-being of youth in the Solomon Islands, including career development, participation in governance, youth and well-being, youth and peace building, youth and sustainable development, and youth mainstreaming.(1)
UNDAF for the Pacific Region (2013–2017)*	Promotes sustainable development and economic growth for vulnerable groups in 14 Pacific Island countries and territories: Cook Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, Fiji, Kiribati, Marshall Islands, Nauru, Niue, Palau, Samoa, the Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu.(27) In the Solomon Islands, aims to strengthen policy, legislation, and programs to protect children from exploitation and to improve access to education for children in remote areas.(28)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the Immigration Division hosted three capacity-building workshops to train members of the Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee, service providers, and law enforcement officials on implementation of the newly endorsed National Action Plan on Human Trafficking and People Smuggling.(20)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of the Solomon Islands participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Pacific Sub-Regional Child Labor and Trafficking Program	ILO-supported program that expands the work and lessons learned from its Tackling Child Labor Through Education (TACKLE) program in Fiji to Kiribati, Samoa, and the Solomon Islands.(7, 29) Activities include facilitating meetings, conducting research, raising awareness, providing trainings, and building government capacity to address child labor.(30) In April 2015, representatives from the Solomon Islands participated in the Sub-Regional Child Labor and Trafficking Forum, which brought together national policy makers from five countries to discuss best practices for addressing child labor and human trafficking issues.(7, 29)
Child Protection Program*	EU-funded program, implemented by Save the Children Solomon Islands in collaboration with the National Advisory Committee on Children, which aims to prevent and protect children from engagement in commercial sexual exploitation in Guadalcanal, Western Province, and Choiseul. Trains teachers and community educators to improve advocacy campaigns targeting children at risk of commercial sexual exploitation and educates parents and caregivers on the issue.(31, 32)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

In July 2015, the Solomon Islands participated in the ILO's Sub-Regional Skills and Livelihood Training for Older Out-of-School Children in Child Labor or At Risk in the Pacific. The training focused on highlighting opportunities for skills development for children under age 18 who are at risk for child labor, as well as identifying opportunities for mainstreaming skills development initiatives into existing social programs.(33)

Solomon Islands

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Somalia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT REGRESSION IN POLICY THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Somalia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Somalia is receiving this assessment because it implemented a regression in practice that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. The Somali National Army recruited and used children in armed conflict during the reporting period. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by ratifying the UN CRC and taking steps to implement the National Action Plan on Sexual Violence in Conflict. Children in Somalia are also engaged in child labor, including in street work. Laws do not identify hazardous occupations or activities prohibited for children, and child trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation is not criminally prohibited. In addition, the Government did not employ labor inspectors and conducted no inspections.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Somalia are engaged in child labor, including in street work.(1-5) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict.(6-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Somalia. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (7, 15, 16)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Due to poverty and the inability to provide for all family members, some Somalis willingly turn over custody of their children to extended family members. Some of these children may be used in commercial sexual exploitation and for forced labor.(7) Research also found that many of these children are trafficked to Europe and North America.(17) Internally displaced persons, including children, are vulnerable to human trafficking for sex and labor exploitation. Trucks transporting goods to Somalia return to Kenya with girls who are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation in brothels in Nairobi, Mombasa, and destinations outside of Kenya.(7) Children are trafficked to Saudi Arabia through Djibouti, where their traffickers force them to beg on the streets. Research found that children seeking refuge in Kenya to avoid recruitment by the terrorist organization al-Shabaab were subsequently trafficked for labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(7)

In 2015, al-Shabaab engaged in the widespread and systematic conscription and recruitment of children for use in armed conflict.(4, 6, 7, 9) Al-Shabaab forcibly recruited children at mosques, Koranic schools, and facilities for neglected children.(7) Children plant explosive devices, act as human shields, conduct assassinations and suicide attacks, carry loads, and gather intelligence; girls were forced into sexual servitude.(4, 7) Research found that the Ahlu Sunnah Wal Jama’a militia, which to date has not yet integrated into the Somali National Army (SNA), recruited children; Somalia’s numerous clan militias also use child soldiers.(9) The Federal Government of Somalia (FGS) condemns the use of child soldiers; however, there were reports of children associated with the SNA and its allied militia during the reporting period.(9) Limited evidence found that the National Intelligence and Security Agency used children formerly associated with al-Shabaab for intelligence purposes.(13)

As of February 2015, there were 1.1 million people internally displaced, mainly in the south and central regions of Somalia.(18) In addition, the protracted violence has contributed to the shortage of all basic services, including public education.(19, 20) Attacks on schools have resulted in the forced recruitment of children, military occupancy of schools, and damaged facilities.(9, 20, 21) The lack of educational infrastructure further hinders children’s access to education.(12, 20)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Somalia has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

In October 2015, Somalia ratified the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.(22)

Somalia lacks a coherent central legal system.(19, 23, 24) The FGS does not have effective control over some parts of the country, and most essential governance functions were provided by regional administrations, including the self-declared independent

Somalia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT REGRESSION IN POLICY THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Republic of Somaliland in the northwest and the semi-autonomous Federal State of Puntland in the northeast.(5, 7, 23, 25) Only the laws of the internationally recognized FGS are discussed in this section.

The FGS has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 93 of the Labour Code (26)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 90 of the Labour Code; Article 29 of the Provisional Constitution (26, 27)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 455 and 464 of the Penal Code (28)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 403 and 404 of the Penal Code (28)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 29 of the Provisional Constitution (27)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 29 of the Provisional Constitution (27)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 30 of the Provisional Constitution (27)

In 2014, Parliament issued a public statement on a commercial contract, in which it cited pre-1991 laws, suggesting that the FGS continued to recognize relevant historic laws; however, no official determination has been issued by the Government.(29) The Provisional Constitution does not provide a minimum age for employment. However, the pre-1991 Labour Code establishes 15 as the minimum age.(4, 26) Additionally, although the Labour Code establishes a minimum age of 12 years for light work and describes the conditions under which light work may be undertaken, it does not determine the activities in which light work may be permitted nor does it prescribe the number of hours per week for light work.(26)

Although the Labour Code allows the Secretary to prescribe the types of work that are prohibited to children under age 18, legislation prohibiting hazardous occupations and activities for children does not appear to exist.(26)

Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient as debt bondage is not criminally prohibited.(27, 28)

Although the Penal Code criminally prohibits distributing and possessing pornography, the law does not appear to criminally prohibit using, procuring, offering, or financially benefitting from a transaction involving the sexual exploitation of a child for prostitution, pornography, and pornographic performances. The Penal Code requires extensive updating. Many fines in the Code equal less than $1 today, which does not serve as an effective deterrent.(4, 28) Furthermore, it appears that under Article 405 of the Penal Code, children involved in prostitution would not be protected from criminal charges.(28)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The FGS has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that law enforcement agencies in Somalia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Somali National Police	Investigate and enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(4)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, the FGS did not employ labor inspectors and conducted no inspections.(4)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Somalia did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

Table 6. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

■ Initial Training for New Employees	No (4)	No (4)
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	N/A
■ Refresher Courses Provided	No (4)	No (4)

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (4)	0 (4)
Number of Convictions	0 (4)	0 (4)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (30)	Yes (7)

In 2015, the Somali National Police remained understaffed, undertrained, and lacked the capacity to investigate or enforce laws on the worst forms of child labor.(4)

During the reporting period, the SNA recruited children for use in armed conflict, even though General Order No. 1 prohibits military personnel from recruiting and employing child soldiers.(7, 31) Research found no information that the Government investigated or prosecuted SNA officials who employed child soldiers.

During the reporting period, the SNA detained more than 300 children for alleged association with armed groups.(9) Research found that the existing referral mechanism for victims of the worst forms of child labor only addresses children in armed conflict.(7)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the FGS has established the Child Protection Unit, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Protection Unit	Raise awareness of child soldier issues, work with UNICEF to implement the standard operating procedures of protecting children associated with armed conflict, and monitor Somali National Army (SNA) troops for cases of child soldiers.(12, 17, 32) Coordinate with Ministry of Defense officials through the Children Associated With Armed Conflict Working Group to implement the Child Soldier Action Plan and the Action Plan to End the Killing and Maiming of Children in Contravention of International Law.(17, 32) In March 2015, the Ministry of Defense nominated six officers to serve as regional military focal points within the Child Protection Unit.(15, 34) These focal points arrange site visits for the Child Protection Unit to raise awareness of child soldiers and monitor SNA troops for child recruitment; in mid-2015, one military focal point conducted workshops in Baidoa and the Bay region for military personnel on ending the SNA's use of children.(34) In December, the UN trained 22 members of the Child Protection Unit and Ministry of Defense on child protection.(34)
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs	Refer victims of child abuse and exploitation to social service providers.(33)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The FGS has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Children, Not Soldiers Campaign	Aims to prevent and eliminate the recruitment and use of children by the SNA by 2016. Launched jointly by the Special Representative for the Secretary General for Children and Armed Conflict and UNICEF, the campaign supports eight countries through negotiating and implementing action plans.(34)

Somalia

Policy	Description
Child Soldier Action Plan	Establishes a strategy for the reception and stabilization of children found within the SNA, and for the prevention of child soldiers through education of soldiers and monitoring of military camps.(17)
Action Plan to End the Killing and Maiming of Children in Contravention of International Law	Commits the SNA and allied militia to end the killing and maiming of children.(35, 36) Aims to properly investigate cases in which children are killed or maimed and ensure that perpetrators are prosecuted.(36)
General Order No. 1	Issued by the Somali Armed Forces Chief of Staff in 2011.(31) Requires all Somali military personnel to prevent recruitment, training, employment, deployment, or providing equipment to any child under age 18. States that any member of the Somali National Armed Forces may be punished for violation of the Order.(31)
National Action Plan on Sexual Violence in Conflict	Aims to establish a unit within the SNA to handle sexual violence and exploitation complaints and referrals, increase the number and capacity of Somali National Police officers to enforce laws regarding sexual violence, and establish a Sexual Offences Law.(37) In September 2015, the steering committee met to discuss plans for implementation.(4)
United Nations Integrated Strategic Framework (2014–2016)	Aims to prevent underage recruitment and ensure the release of children associated with armed forces and groups. Prioritizes the need to implement a national program to disengage combatants, particularly children associated with armed conflict.(38)

Although the FGS has adopted policies on children in armed conflict, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the FGS participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
UNICEF Country Program (2011–2015)	In cooperation with the FGS, aimed to equitably increase school enrollment, construct schools, develop curriculum, and train teachers. Program also coordinated reintegration programs for children formerly associated with armed conflict and children vulnerable to recruitment.(25) In 2015, 749 children associated with armed conflict received community-based reintegration services. In addition, the FGS assisted in the transfer of 79 children formerly associated with al-Shabaab from a government-run rehabilitation center to NGOs for community reintegration services.(9)
SNA Soldiers Pay Screening Plan	Government of the United States and Italy-funded program that establishes a screening process whereby soldiers' identity and age are verified before they receive their pay. Screening teams are comprised of African Union officers, local Somali tribal elders, and high-ranking SNA soldiers.(39)
Strengthening the National Criminal Justice Response to Trafficking in Persons Through Legislative Assistance and Capacity Building in Somalia	$750,000, USDOS-funded, 3-year project implemented by UNODC to enhance the criminal justice response to trafficking in persons within the territories of the FGS and Somaliland. Aims to strengthen legal frameworks to meet international standards; and develop and provide training on victim identification, conducting investigations, and prosecuting human trafficking cases.(8)
Go-2-School Initiative	$117 million, European Union, USAID, and UK Department for International Development-funded, 3-year project implemented by UNICEF, WFP, UNESCO, and international NGOs in partnership with the FGS that aims to expand and improve school infrastructure, train teachers, and provide vocational training.(4, 40)

Although the FGS has implemented programs to address child soldiers, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children in other forms of child labor, including its worst forms. Existing programs fail to address the scope of children in armed conflict.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 10. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter

In 2015, South Africa made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government developed regulations to enforce the 2013 Prevention and Combatting of Trafficking in Persons Act, which increased the penalty for forced labor to $7,692, with a maximum sentence of life imprisonment. The Government also expanded the Child Support Grant program by reaching additional beneficiaries and increasing the amount of funding for caregivers. However, children in South Africa are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work. Government social programs to address child labor do not match the scope of the problem, and barriers to education access remain. In addition, the Government does not collect data on child labor or make criminal enforcement data publicly available.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in South Africa are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-3) Data on key indicators on children’s work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

South Africa

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Government reported that girls are more likely than boys to engage in child labor.(14) However, the Government does not collect comprehensive data on child labor.(2, 7, 15) There are some reports that children in South Africa are trafficked from rural to urban areas in Bloemfontein, Cape Town, Durban, and Johannesburg. Girls are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work, and boys are forced to work in agriculture, begging, food service, and street vending.(3, 9, 10) Orphaned children in South Africa are especially vulnerable to human trafficking, including children with disabilities who are victims of forced begging.(3, 7)

According to Chapter 2, Article 5, of the South African Schools Act, education is free through the primary level, but some schools charge fees that vary by municipality and region.(1, 2, 16) Children are required to be registered within 30 days of birth.(8) Children who are unable to prove citizenship are vulnerable to child labor because they cannot qualify for free government services, including education, health care, and financial grants. Birth registration has been inconsistent, especially among unregistered foreign nationals living in remote rural areas.(2) The Government implements a no-fee school program that covers the poorest primary schools.(1, 17, 18) According to the Government, 81 percent of schools are no fee.(1) The Government also provides some fee exemptions and reductions to children receiving government grants.(19, 20) The Government provides books and stationery; however, all families must pay for uniforms and other school-related expenses, which may affect children's access to education.(8, 19, 21, 22)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the 2013 Prevention and Combatting of Trafficking in Persons Act came into effect, and the Government developed regulations to aid enforcement of the law. The Prevention and Combatting of Trafficking in Persons Act increased the penalty for forced labor to $7,692, with a maximum sentence of life imprisonment.(31) The 2015 regulations (Regulations Relating to Prosecutor’s Referral of Suspected Victims of Trafficking in Persons regulations, Aug. 21, 2015) require prosecutors to refer suspected victims of trafficking to the appropriate provincial department of social development.(31) During the year, the Government amended the National Norms and Standards for School Funding and declared the poorest schools (in quintiles 1–3) to be no-fees schools in 2015 subsidizing the cost for schooling so that students do not have to pay for school books.(32)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
South African Department of Labor (SADOL)	Enforce child labor laws.(1, 33) Identify via inspectors suspected cases of child labor and human trafficking and forward evidence to South African Police Service (SAPS) officials, who investigate and forward cases to the South African Department of Justice and Constitutional Development for prosecution. Coordinate a report titled State of Child Labor in South Africa.(21)
South African Department of Justice and Constitutional Development	Enforce criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.(1, 33)
National Prosecution Authority	Prosecute criminal cases, including human trafficking cases.(1)
South African Police Service’s (SAPS) Human Trafficking Desk	Monitor and evaluate efforts to investigate human trafficking crimes, train investigators, and refer human trafficking cases to provincial SAPS units.(1)
Labor Centers	Serve as field offices for inspectors to investigate child labor violations. Operated by Child Labor Intersectoral Support Groups.(1, 21)
Department of Social Development (DSD)	Provide child protection and social services to vulnerable children, including victims of human trafficking.(22)

Although labor inspectors have civil servant status to ensure job security, their low salaries promote high turnovers and transfers to other agencies.(34) However, labor officers at the provincial level received training on child labor during the year.(31)

Labor Law Enforcement

‡ Data are from the Government of South Africa for the period from April 1, 2015, to March 31, 2016.

In 2015, a limited number of sources indicated that labor inspectors do not inspect farms without an invitation due to concerns over safety and about entering private property, which may leave children working in agriculture unprotected.(1, 21, 35). The South African Department of Labor (SADOL) lacks a central unit to administer training programs for labor inspectors.(1) Inspectors send cases that involve foreign nationals to the Department of Home Affairs, which then transfers the cases to the South African Department of Justice and Constitutional Development. Inspectors also refer cases that may involve child labor to social workers who provide welfare needs, such as child protection and care.(1, 31, 36) However, the current shortage of social workers may delay this practice. The Department of Social Development has acknowledged the shortage of social workers and is working to address this need by offering scholarships to students interested in pursuing studies in social work.(21, 36) The Government funded an NGO-operated hotline that refers child labor complaints to government protection agencies or the South African Police Service.(1) However, it is unknown how many complaints related to child labor were made to the government-funded hotline, and the labor inspection data is not disaggregated by child labor violations.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in South Africa took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Implementation Committee on Child Labor	Monitor and support advocacy and awareness raising; mainstreaming of child labor into government policies; and the implementation of child labor programs, legislation, and enforcement.(1, 33) Chaired by SADOL, members include representatives from commercial agriculture, trade unions, and government agencies, including SAPS.(1) Includes provincial-level child labor coordinating structures.(6) Met quarterly throughout 2015.(31)
Child Labor Intersectoral Support Groups	Facilitate the prevention of all types of child labor, including children scavenging and child labor that occurs as a result of human trafficking. Established by SADOL and managed by child labor coordinators in each province, members include multiple government agencies; members include SADOL Head Office, SADOL Provincial Child Labor Coordinators, Department. of Justice, National Prosecuting Authority, Dept. of Home Affairs (DHA), Department of. Social Development and the Department of Education, NGOs and labor federations.(1, 21)
Trafficking in Persons Task Team	Coordinate the Government’s anti-human trafficking efforts. Including overseeing strategy and policy decisions made on the provincial level in Gauteng, Mpumalanga, Kwazulu-Natal, Western Cape, Limpopo and Eastern Cape. Led by the National Prosecution Authority’s Sexual Offenses and Community Affairs Unit and South Africa Department of Justice’s Victim Support Directorate, members include SADOL, the DSD, and the DHA, as well as other representatives of national law enforcement.(1, 7)

In 2015, the Implementation Committee on Child Labor met on a quarterly basis. However, no reports were published about the progress to implement the National Child Labor Program of Action for South Africa.(31)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of South Africa has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Program of Action for South Africa, Phase III (2013–2017)	Serves as the primary policy instrument to prevent and eliminate child labor in South Africa.(35, 37) Promotes government activities and calls for the promotion of new laws against the worst forms of child labor.(1, 37) Also includes a list of indicators to monitor the Government’s efforts against child labor.(37)
South African Education Action Plan to 2014*	Serves as the first phase of a comprehensive national education plan through 2025. Focuses on addressing 27 education goals, including ensuring that all students stay enrolled in school through age 15.(38)
National Development Plan 2030*	Provides a comprehensive development plan for South Africa, including economic development, education, and social protection.(39)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In 2015, SADOL’s deputy minister, labor federations, municipality councilors, the ILO, and the U.S. Mission to South Africa signed a pledge to combat the worst forms of child labor.(31) Although the Government drafted a new anti-human trafficking national action plan in 2013, it has yet to be approved.(7, 8)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of South Africa funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Support Grant†	Government program, led by the DSD and the South African Social Security Agency, that provides monthly direct cash transfers to primary caregivers who have vulnerable children.(1, 21, 40-43) Helps alleviate economic pressures and lower the cost of raising a child.(1, 41-43) Reaches more than 10 million children.(21) Sources have indicated that as a result of the Child Support Grant, recipients may be less likely to send their children away for child labor and children are more likely to have positive educational outcomes.(1, 21, 22, 44) In 2015, the Government increased payment by 79 cents per month. In addition, there was an increase in the number of beneficiaries by 4.5 percent, with the overall number of recipients increasing from 11.1 million to 12.3 million.(31)

Program	Description
Old Age Pension†	Government-program that provides cash transfers to eligible adults over age 60. Several assessments of the program's impact indicate that children's school attendance and completion rates increase and child labor decreases in rural households with male pension recipients, especially for boys in households with male recipients.(1, 43) Studies also indicate this program led to a decrease in the total hours worked by children, especially among girls.(1, 43)
Care Dependency Grants and Foster Care Grants†	Government program that encourages children to remain in school, as a preventive technique to combat child labor, including its worst forms.(1)
Social Services Program†	DSD program that administers social services to vulnerable individuals, including child laborers, based on referrals from social workers.(1, 15)
National School Nutrition Program†	Government program funded through a conditional grant that provides school meals to vulnerable children. Targets primary and secondary students.(19, 21, 45)
Food Relief Program†	Food relief program of the DSD and the South African Social Security Agency to assist vulnerable and orphaned children, and child-headed households with insufficient income.(31, 35) The Government continued to fund and support the program throughout the year.(31)
Shelters and Care Centers†	DSD program that funds 13 shelters and oversees 17 NGO-operated temporary safe care centers for victims of abuse and human trafficking, including children.(7)
Awareness Raising Campaigns†	Government program that conducts training on anti-human trafficking initiatives.(7) In 2015, DSD held four two-day training sessions on the PACOTIP implementing regulations governing social service providers. DSD trainers reached 114 DSD provincial officials, two officials from the Commission for Gender Equality and 35 NGO social service providers.(3)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, which was established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research.(46)

† Program is funded by the Government of South Africa.

The Government has identified constraints on its capacity to offer social protection for children. For example, the child protection system still lacks a sufficient number of skilled staff to assist the majority of children in need of care.(36) Although South Africa has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient, including in agriculture and domestic work.(1)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, South Sudan made efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, but was also complicit in the use of forced child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, South Sudan is receiving an assessment of no advancement because its national army—the Sudan People’s Liberation Army—recruited, sometimes forcibly, children to fight the opposition group led by former Vice President Riek Machar. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by removing soldiers from the grounds of 26 schools, demobilizing child soldiers from an armed group during its reintegration with the national army, and acceding to the UN CRC. Children in South Sudan are also engaged in other worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government neither brought to justice those who recruited or used children in armed conflict, nor held accountable perpetrators of any other form of child labor. It also failed to convene its National Steering Committee on Child Labor, conduct any labor inspections, or demobilize children from the national army.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in South Sudan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in South Sudan.

Women recruit girls from poor rural areas, with promises of work in Juba, but they subsequently place the girls in brothels for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. Girls are also recruited, abducted, and purchased from non-UN internally displaced persons camps for the same purpose.(1) Children from Eritrea, Ethiopia, Kenya, Uganda, and the Democratic Republic of the Congo migrate to South Sudan with the promise of work in hotels and restaurants, but instead they are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation. Kenyan and Ugandan children are also subjected to forced labor in construction, street vending, and domestic work.(1)

In 2015, the national army—the Sudan People’s Liberation Army (SPLA)—and its aligned forces recruited child soldiers as young as age 13, sometimes forcibly or with the aid of community leaders, to fight against the SPLA-In Opposition (SPLA-IO)—led by former Vice President Riek Machar—and its aligned militias.(4-7, 30) A total of 15,000 to 16,000 children are estimated to have been recruited since the conflict began in December 2013; as of December 2015, between 13,000 to 15,000 child soldiers were still being used by parties to the conflict, including 500 to 1,500 children within SPLA forces and 10,000 to 15,000 children within the SPLA-IO and its aligned militias.(1, 4, 7, 27, 31, 32) Although most recruitment during the reporting period occurred in Jonglei, Lakes, Unity, and Upper Nile states, more recent violence in Western Equatoria state has also led to the recruitment of boys into militia groups; these groups, known as the Arrow Boys, are engaged in fighting against the SPLA.(1, 7, 27, 30) In October 2015, the SPLA-IO recruited an estimated 400 South Sudanese children from Kharasana refugee camp, which is located in Sudan’s Western Kordofan state.(30)

Children were forcibly recruited for use in armed conflict, including through abduction at gunpoint from their homes and schools. Children who joined willingly to protect their communities or after the loss of family members or shelter were ultimately unable to leave the groups at will and instead were used in combat roles.(1, 4, 31, 33) Some children were forced to march for days, while others were beaten or held captive as punishment or to prevent their escape.(4) Children were also directly ordered to kill civilians and loot homes.(30) Other boys did not fight, but cooked, collected firewood, herded cattle, washed clothes, carried water and ammunition, or served as bodyguards; some boys performed such roles for commissioners or other Government officials who were not members of fighting forces.(4, 5, 34) During Government offensives in opposition-held areas between April and September 2015, at least 1,600 women and children were abducted as a form of “wages” for members of government-allied militias in Unity state; as a result, some children were forced to carry looted property or herd stolen cattle and goats.(8, 29, 34, 35)

The ongoing conflict diminished the Government’s ability to deliver aid, provide education, and address the worst forms of child labor.(3) Although the Constitution and the Child Act provide for free primary education, in practice many families cannot afford to send their children to school as parents often pay teachers’ salaries, a cost that is prohibitive for many families.(36, 37) Uniform costs, chronic food insecurity, and low levels of birth registration may also impede access to education in South Sudan. (2, 38-42) Many children, particularly those in rural areas, do not have access to schools, often because of the lack of infrastructure, such as roads and school buildings.(36, 37, 43) During the reporting period, there were numerous incidents of attacks on schools in Jonglei, Upper Nile, Unity, and the three Equatoria states that resulted in lootings, destruction of learning materials and infrastructure, and military occupancy.(34, 44) The UN verified 10 attacks on schools by the SPLA in 2015 that involved destruction, damage, looting, or recruitment of children.(30) At least 45 schools have been used for military purposes by the SPLA, the South Sudan National Police Service, or Government-aligned militias since the conflict began, in addition to a number of schools being occupied by the SPLA-IO in opposition-held areas. Despite 36 schools being vacated during the year, in December 2015, 25 schools were still being used for military purposes.(4, 27, 30, 44, 45) Some schools were also rendered inoperable by the Government’s decision to stop paying teachers’ salaries in opposition-held areas, or as a result of displaced people taking up residence within the schools.(4) During the conflict, 70 percent of schools in Jonglei, Upper Nile, and Unity states were closed for months, resulting in some 413,000 children having no access to schooling.(4, 46) The lack of access to education may increase the risk of children’s involvement in the worst forms of child labor.(1) There has not been a comprehensive child labor survey in South Sudan.(47)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

South Sudan has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

In January 2015, the Government completed the accession formalities for the UN CRC; however, it did not deposit the necessary documents to accede to the two optional protocols, despite the national Legislative Assembly’s passage of a bill in 2013 allowing it to do so.(48-50)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

South Sudan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In South Sudan, the minimum age provision for work in the Child Act does not apply to children outside of a formal employment relationship, such as to children performing domestic work.(51, 52) Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient, since debt bondage is not criminally prohibited. Further, the law does not sufficiently prohibit child commercial sexual exploitation, since the distribution, selling, and possession of child pornography is not prohibited. The laws related to illicit activities are not sufficient, since the offering or procurement of children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited. Children are only required to attend school until age 13.(49, 56, 57) This standard makes children between ages 13 and 14 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, considering they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.(49) In 2013, the Government drafted an updated list of hazardous work for children, but the list has not yet been finalized.(58)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Public Service, and Human Resource Development (MOL)	Develop labor policies, enforce child labor laws, conduct workplace inspections, and oversee the operation of vocational training centers.(51, 59) Through its Child Labor Unit, investigate cases of child labor; however, the Unit was inactive throughout 2015.(1, 3)
Ministry of Gender, Child, and Social Welfare	Coordinate activities on children's rights and act as the focal ministry for child protection.(60)
Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) Child Protection Unit	Headed by a Brigadier General. Prevent the recruitment of children into the army, monitoring barracks, identify and assist with the release of child soldiers, investigate allegations of child soldiering, and provide training on children's rights to child protection officers and members of the SPLA.(1, 4, 61) Serve as liaison between the SPLA and the international community.(4) Despite ongoing conflict in 2015, between January and April, campaigned with Ministry of Defense funding and backing of UNICEF and the UN Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS) to remove soldiers from schools, resulting in Government forces vacating the grounds of 26 schools in Central Equatoria, Eastern Equatoria, Lakes, Upper Nile, and Warrap states. Local commanders provided security escorts for the team in some areas.(4, 27)
Ministry of Interior	Enforce criminal laws to combat human trafficking and maintain a database on crime statistics.(62)
Ministry of Justice	Protect citizens' rights and enforce the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the Constitution, including child protection provisions in those laws.(63)
South Sudan Police Services	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(49)
Human Rights Commission	Raise awareness of human rights, monitor the application of human rights in the Constitution, and investigate complaints regarding human rights violations, such as human trafficking.(64, 65)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in South Sudan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

All child labor violations found in 2015 were related to the identification and removal of children associated with armed groups carried out by other Government entities, in partnership with the UN.(3, 67, 69) Officials from the Ministry of Labor, Public Service, and Human Resource Development (MOL) reported that they lacked sufficient resources, such as vehicles for transport, to conduct labor investigations during the reporting year.(3, 11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in South Sudan did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor.

During the reporting period, the SPLA recruited children, at times by force, for use in armed conflict, even though the Child Act sets the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment at 18.(4-7, 51) Although both the Joint Action Plan to Combat the Use of Child Soldiers and the September 2014 Punitive Order commit the SPLA to holding its military officers accountable for the recruitment or use of children, research found no indication that the Government had neither investigated nor prosecuted the officers who had allegedly committed such crimes.(1, 4) SPLA commanders have received standing instructions to conduct yearly refresher training on child soldiering and human rights for their units, but that training likely has not occurred because of ongoing civil conflict, poor communication, and lack of capacity.(1)

In August 2015, the SPLA and SPLA-IO signed the Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in South Sudan, in which they committed to immediately and unconditionally release all child soldiers under their command or influence to UNICEF; however, neither group released any associated children in 2015.(1, 71) In mid-2015, the SPLA denied the UN Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS) access to two SPLA training camps in Eastern Equatoria state to monitor for the presence of child soldiers.(32) Between January and April 2015, David Yau Yau's South Sudan Democratic Movement/Army-Cobra Faction released 1,755 children—1,750 boys and 5 girls—in the Greater Pibor Administrative Area in Jonglei state as part of its integration process with the SPLA.(4, 45, 67, 68) Prior to each release, UNICEF and the National Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Commission (NDDRC) screened and verified each child before transporting the children to an interim care center, tracing the children's families, and reuniting the children with their families.(45, 67, 69) However, many children were subsequently witnessed carrying out military functions in the Greater Pibor Administrative Area, having been newly recruited or recruited anew to supervise checkpoints and serve as bodyguards to their commanders.(27, 34) David Yau Yau transferred four boys between ages 2 and 4 who had been abducted by the Murle tribe to the Ministry of Gender, Child and Social Welfare; the Ministry was able to reunite three of the children Owith their families.(34)

South Sudan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Criminal law enforcement officials failed to investigate any other violations related to the worst forms of child labor and, in some cases, perpetrated such crimes themselves. Some Government officials subjected girls to domestic servitude.⁽¹⁾ The Government continued to indiscriminately arrest and imprison child victims of human trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation; however, one NGO service provider reported that the police informally referred for care at least 15 girls arrested for criminal prostitution during the reporting period.⁽¹⁾ Girls rescued from brothels in Juba reported that the police had provided security for the brothels, and that SPLA soldiers or other Government officials were frequent clients of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.⁽¹⁾ It is unclear whether service providers referred the suspected cases of child labor violations to law enforcement officials for investigation.

South Sudan's justice system faces enormous challenges such as low capacity, funding shortages, interference by the Government and SPLA, and a scarcity of judges, prosecutors, and defense attorneys.^(1, 4) Prosecutors and law enforcement officials are not familiar with the Child Act's prohibitions on the worst forms of child labor, since the Act has not been adequately disseminated.^(49, 60, 72)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor across government ministries; led by the MOL. ⁽³⁾
National Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Commission (NDDRC)	Oversee and coordinate the implementation of the Joint Action Plan to Combat the Use of Child Soldiers and reintegrate children formerly engaged in armed conflict. ⁽⁷³⁾ In 2015, the Government signed an extension to its 2014 recommitment to the Joint Action Plan. The NDDRC and UNICEF partnered to release child soldiers from a militia faction. ^(45, 69) Despite this, neither the Government nor the SPLA-In Opposition (SPLA-IO) has made significant progress in honoring commitments to release child soldiers from armed conflict. ^(1, 71)

The National Steering Committee on Child Labor did not convene or coordinate activities to combat child labor in 2015.^(1, 3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of South Sudan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Joint Action Plan to Combat the Use of Child Soldiers	Requires the SPLA to demobilize children within its ranks. ⁽⁷⁴⁾ Aims to improve efforts to verify the age of new recruits and provide reintegration services, such as vocational training, to demobilized children. ^(16, 75, 76) In June 2014, the Government signed an agreement of recommitment to the implementation of the Joint Action Plan, followed by a work plan in August 2014 detailing the implementation steps for the agreement, which were to be completed by July 2015. ^(70, 77) Since the Government took no action to stop recruiting or to release its child soldiers after signing the recommitment agreement, in mid-2015, the National Technical Committee and the Country Task Force for Monitoring and Reporting adopted an extension of the agreement and strategy that includes screening and registration, disarmament and release, interim care, family tracing and reunification, and community reintegration. ^(1, 45) In December 2015, the SPLA-IO signed an action plan with the UN but did not immediately appoint an official to work with the UN to monitor and end child recruitment. ^(1, 4, 30)
Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in the Republic of South Sudan	Establishes the structure of a Transitional Government of National Unity and outlines actions to be taken by signatories. Article 1.7.3 prohibits the recruitment and use of child soldiers by armed forces or militias. Article 1.10 requires warring parties to immediately and unconditionally release all child soldiers under their command or influence. ⁽⁷⁸⁾
MOL's Policy Framework and Strategic Plan (2012–2016)	Aims to eliminate child labor and support workplace best practices in occupational safety and health. ^(79, 80)
UNDAF (2012–2016)	Seeks to improve access to and quality of education; includes provisions for social protection and the reintegration of child ex-combatants. ^(11, 81)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of South Sudan participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded ILO project in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in South Sudan.(82) Activities suspended in December 2013 due to the security situation, but resumed in mid-2015 with the hiring of a consultant to review national laws and regulations on child and forced labor.(82)
UNICEF Country Program (2012–2015)	UNICEF-funded program implemented by the Government that aimed to develop child protection systems, with an emphasis on birth registration, a child-sensitive justice system, and reintegration services for children affected by armed conflict.(83, 84) Reunified 3,883 unaccompanied, separated, or missing children with their families since December 2013. Continues to provide financial support to over 80 percent of these children.(85)
Children, Not Soldiers Campaign	Ministry of Defense program to raise public and SPLA awareness of child protection principles, and to hold perpetrators accountable for recruiting child soldiers. Also aims to end the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict by the end of 2016.(74) No activities carried out under this program in 2015.(66)
Transition Center	Ministry of Social Development-administered, UNICEF-funded center in Yambio that provides interim care and support to children and mothers rescued from the Lord's Resistance Army.(1) Unclear whether it was operational during the year, given the deteriorated security situation in the area.(66)

Although South Sudan has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the scope or extent of the problem, including in commercial sexual exploitation and child soldiering. Reports suggest that the reintegration and rehabilitation services provided to child soldiers are insufficient to meet the total need.(1, 3)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Complete ratification of the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict and UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography by delivering the necessary documents to the UN. Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2013 – 2015
	Extend the protection for minimum age of work to all children.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure that the compulsory education age is equivalent to the minimum age for work.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that debt bondage, child commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children for illicit activities are sufficiently defined and criminalized in relevant laws.	2015
Enforcement	Ensure the Child Act's minimum age of 18 years for voluntary military recruitment is enforced by ending all recruitment and use of children under age 18 by the SPLA, the SPLA-IO, or associated militias. Stop providing weapons or other assistance to armed groups, including local militias that conscript or use children under age 18.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure that the NDDRC and the SPLA Child Protection Unit are able to screen SPLA and SPLA-IO barracks and other military sites to remove child soldiers from the army.	2014 – 2015
	Cease all military use of schools and school compounds.	2015
	Provide sufficient human and financial resources, as well as train personnel for effective inspection and enforcement efforts. Ensure that prosecutors and law enforcement officials are familiar with the Child Act's prohibitions on the worst forms of child labor and are trained in implementing all laws related to child labor. Institutionalize training for labor inspectors and criminal law enforcement personnel, as well as new employees.	2012 – 2015

South Sudan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Strengthen the inspectorate's role to include onsite investigations of worksites, conducting unannounced inspections, and initiating targeted inspections based on analysis of data related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents. Make publicly available information on the number of labor inspectors, whether inspections are conducted routinely, and whether the inspectorate is authorized to assess penalties.	2015
	Establish a mechanism to receive child labor complaints.	2015
	Establish referral mechanisms for labor inspectors, criminal law enforcers, and social services providers to facilitate effective enforcement of labor and criminal laws and to implement social programs that address child labor issues.	2014 – 2015
	Prosecute perpetrators of child labor violations, including Government officials. Stop incarcerating child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, protecting brothels that employ such children, and Government officials' direct exploitation of children in commercial sexual exploitation.	2015
	Track and make publicly accessible information on the number of child labor investigators; types of investigations; areas of investigations; and citations, penalties, prosecutions, and convictions for crimes involving child labor, including its worst forms.	2012 – 2015
	Investigate, prosecute, and punish, as appropriate, officers in all former warring parties responsible for the recruitment or use of children in armed conflict. Pending investigations, suspend from their positions any commanders who are credibly alleged to have recruited and used child soldiers or who have allowed soldiers to occupy schools.	2013 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure that the National Steering Committee on Child Labor convenes and is able to coordinate activities to combat child labor.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Ensure that policies, such as the Joint Action Plan to Prevent the Use of Child Soldiers and Article 1.10 of the Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in South Sudan, are implemented.	2012 – 2015
Social Programs	Strengthen efforts to lessen the potential impact of food insecurity and the high cost of living on rural populations' ability to educate children.	2012 – 2015
	Improve access to education by addressing the lack of school infrastructure in rural areas and registering all children at birth.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure that children complete their primary education by subsidizing or defraying the cost of school uniforms and teachers' salaries. Resume paying teacher salaries in areas that have been under the control of opposition forces during the conflict.	2014 – 2015
	Conduct a national child labor survey including research to determine the activities carried out by children, in order to inform policies and social programs.	2013 – 2015
	Cooperate with child protection agencies, pursuant to Article 1.10 of the Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in South Sudan, to disarm and immediately release children within armed forces and aligned militias, and transfer them to appropriate civilian rehabilitation and reintegration programs that include education and vocational training, as well as necessary counseling. Ensure that the rehabilitation services provided to child soldiers are sufficient.	2014 – 2015
	Increase the scope of social programs to reach more children at risk of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.	2012 – 2015

- UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary. Total. [accessed December 16, 2015]; <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and underaged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. In 2015, Sri Lanka made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons and launched the Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II project. However, children in Sri Lanka are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and in domestic work. There are no laws regulating employment in third-party households, which leaves children ages 14 to 18 employed as domestic workers vulnerable to exploitation. The Government's enforcement efforts also continued to be weak, particularly with regards to hazardous child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Sri Lanka are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Sri Lanka.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	9.2 (302,865)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	97.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	10.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Child Activity Survey, 2008–2009.(4)

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

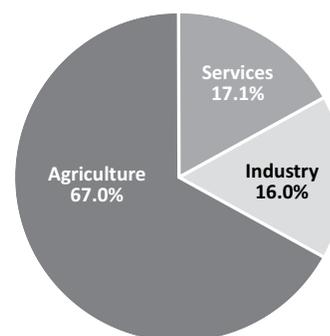

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* activities unknown (1, 2, 5) Fishing* (2, 5)
Industry	Manufacturing,* activities unknown (1, 2) Mining,† including gem mining† (2, 6, 7) Construction,* activities unknown (2, 8) Production of fireworks*† (9)
Services	Domestic work* (2, 10, 11) Transportation,* activities unknown (2, 8) Street vending* and begging* (2, 8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 12) Forced labor in domestic work* and begging,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 13) Forced labor in farming,* fish-drying,* and fireworks* production (12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Sri Lanka

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

There are reports of children being employed as domestic workers due to debt bondage and of children from tea estates being trafficked internally to perform domestic work in Colombo, for which their payments are withheld and movements are restricted.(2, 12) Some child domestic workers are subject to physical, sexual, and emotional abuse.(2) There are reports that children are subjected to bonded labor and forced labor in farming.(12) Children, predominantly boys, are trafficked internally for commercial sexual exploitation in coastal areas as part of the sex tourism industry.(2, 12)

There is a lack of current data on child labor, particularly in the agricultural sector and in manufacturing; there is also a lack of data on child labor in the Northern Province, which was excluded from the Government's 2008/2009 Child Activity Survey because of civil conflict in the region.(14) However, in 2015, the Department of Census and Statistics launched a new Child Labor Survey that will cover all the provinces, including the Northern Province. The results are expected to be released in 2016.(15)

Most children in Sri Lanka have access to basic education.(3) However, barriers to accessing education include difficulties traveling to school in some regions, lack of sanitation and clean water, and an inadequate supply of teachers. This is particularly true in the Northern and Eastern Provinces, which have been affected by the civil conflict that ended in 2009.(16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Sri Lanka has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

On June 15, 2015, the Government of Sri Lanka ratified the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Refer cases involving the worst forms of child labor to the police and National Child Protection Authority (NCPA).(23) Conducts special investigations in relation to child labor through the Women and Children's Affairs Division. (24)
Children and Women's Bureau of the Sri Lankan Police	Enforce laws on child labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in illicit activities.(8)

Sri Lanka

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Since the nationwide implementation of the Labor Inspection System Application in 2014, the labor inspectorate has increased its capacity to reliably and accurately collect data on the labor inspections that are conducted.(36)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Sri Lanka took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

The Children and Women’s Bureau of the Sri Lankan Police (CWBSLP) is staffed by 45 officers in 36 of the country’s 460 police stations. In police stations without CWBSLP representation, the officer in charge oversees all the functions of the CWBSLP.(8) The National Child Protection Authority Special Police Investigating Unit has approximately 40 police officers who investigate complaints involving children, including child labor. The agency also has approximately 250 child protection officers based in the districts who are tasked with preventing child exploitation and victim protection.(8, 29) Both the CWBSLP and the National Child Protection Authority face a shortage of funds that affects their ability to carry out their mandate.(8)

The Government of Sri Lanka has committed to investigating allegations of previous recruitment and use of children in armed conflict by non-state armed forces. Although some recruiters of child soldiers were killed during the conflict, research has found no evidence of prosecutions and convictions of living recruiters who violated the law on children and armed conflict.(38-40)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate the implementation of the Roadmap to End the Worst Forms of Child Labor, the Government’s key policy document for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the Secretary of MOLLR and includes representatives from key government agencies, employer and workers’ organizations, ILO, UNICEF, and NGOs.(23) In 2015, the National Steering Committee on Child Labor drafted an action plan for eliminating child labor through educational achievement and submitted it to the Ministry of Education for approval.(24)
National Child Protection Authority	Coordinate and monitor activities related to the protection of children, including activities to combat the worst forms of child labor. Consult with the relevant government ministries, local governments, employers, and NGOs, and recommend policies and actions to prevent and protect children from abuse and exploitation.(41)
National Anti-Trafficking Task Force	Coordinate interagency efforts to address all human trafficking issues, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor. Led by the Ministry of Justice and includes representatives from a range of government agencies, including the Ministry of Social Services, Ministry of Women and Child Affairs, Labor Secretariat, NCPA, Department of Probation and Child Care, Police Criminal Division, and Bureau for the Prevention of Abuse to Women and Children.(13)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Sri Lanka has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Sri Lanka's Roadmap 2016 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2011–2016)	Specifies time-bound goals, including developing or strengthening, or both, the management, coordination, implementation, resource mobilization, and reporting of programs that will lead to the elimination of the worst forms of child labor by 2016.(42) Provides district-level mainstreaming strategies to address specific sectors of child labor, including armed conflict, plantations, fisheries, and tourism. Outlines strategies to include child labor issues within social protection and education goals. (42)
National Human Resources and Employment Policy for Sri Lanka	Provides an overarching umbrella framework to several existing national policies related to employment and human resources formulated by different ministries. Sets the elimination of child labor in hazardous activities as a priority and goal of zero tolerance for the worst forms of child labor by 2016.(43)
National Plan of Action on Anti-Human Trafficking	Plans the implementation of anti-human trafficking activities for each member of the Anti-Trafficking Task Force on an annual basis.(44)
Standard Operating Procedures for the Identification and Protection of Trafficking Victims	Guides all government agencies, especially the police, in the procedures for identifying and protecting victims of human trafficking, convicting offenders, and providing assistance and reintegration services. (37) In 2015, police units and officers of the Ministry of Women and Child Affairs received training on the standard operating procedures for referrals and case management for victims of human trafficking.(13)
National Education Sector Development Framework and Program II (2012–2016)*	Aims to increase the equitable access, quality, and delivery of education. Supports accelerated learning and non-formal education for dropouts from the formal education system.(45, 46)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

The Government has not yet approved the draft National Child Protection Policy. This policy is intended to ensure effective coordination among all organizations and individuals working for the protection and development of children in Sri Lanka. It also outlines key policy recommendations, including strengthening and expanding non-formal education opportunities for vulnerable children (including child laborers) in geographic locations with the highest concentrations of vulnerable households.(47) It recommends measures to prevent and eliminate the trafficking of children, including through improved detection and identification of traffickers and victims, and to provide greater protections to child victims.(47)

In 2014, the National Steering Committee on Child Labor drafted a new national child labor policy, with technical assistance from the ILO; however, information on the current status of the draft policy is unavailable.(30) The draft policy aims to end the worst forms of child labor by 2016 through a variety of activities, including effective enforcement of relevant laws and the integration of child labor into key development policies and programs.(8)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Sri Lanka funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Free Zone by 2016†	Local government initiatives that seek to eliminate child labor through the identification of children engaged in child labor, a rehabilitation program, assistance to families of children at risk of engaging in child labor, and an awareness-raising campaign. Operated by the district secretariats, with assistance from MOLLR, and with technical and financial support from the ILO.(48) The program was piloted in Ratnapura in 2013, and expanded to the Kegalle and Ampara districts in 2014.(48-51)
Shelter for Victims of Human Trafficking	IOM-funded Ministry of Child Development and Women's Affairs shelter that provides victims of human trafficking, including children, with safe shelter and access to medical, psychological, and legal assistance. In 2015, staff members received training on the standard operating procedures for identifying and protecting human trafficking victims and the newly established shelter guidelines.(13, 37)

Program	Description
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II)*	USDOL-funded capacity building project implemented by Winrock International and partners Verité and Lawyers Without Borders in at least 8 countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to: (1) improve legislation addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards, (2) improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor, (3) implement a National Action Plan on the elimination of child labor, and (4) enhance the implementation of national and local policies and programs aimed at the reduction and prevention of child labor in Sri Lanka.(52)
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2017)	ILO technical assistance project detailing the policies, strategies, and results required to make progress toward the goal of decent work for all. Includes four strategies to reduce the worst forms of child labor: (1) capacity building for mainstreaming worst forms of child labor into sectorial plans and programs, (2) area-based integrated approach within districts, (3) strengthening institutional mechanisms for improved coordination and monitoring, and (4) development of a knowledge base for tracking progress.(53)
UNDAF (2013–2017)	Agreement-tying UN assistance to Sri Lanka’s long-term development priorities, with the goal of sustainable and inclusive economic growth and with equitable access to quality social services, strengthened human capabilities, and reconciliation for lasting peace. Stipulates that UN agencies will support national efforts to strengthen justice for children and will achieve the goal of zero tolerance of the worst forms of child labor, including the trafficking of children for exploitative employment.(54)
Transforming School Education	A $100-million, World Bank-financed, 5-year education project to support the Education Sector Development Framework and Program. Objectives include promoting access to primary and secondary education, improving the quality of education, and strengthening governance and delivery of education services.(55) Appoints school attendance committees to promote school enrollment and attendance; runs school nutrition and health programs.(23)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Suriname

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Suriname made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government provided training to criminal law enforcement officers and raised awareness on human trafficking. However, children in Suriname continue to engage in child labor in mining and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Existing social programs are insufficient to address child labor, including its worst forms. Additionally, Suriname has not raised the compulsory education age to extend to the minimum age for employment and does not collect or publish data on child labor inspections and violations.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Suriname are engaged in child labor, including in mining. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-11) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Suriname.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	6.4 (6,671)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	95.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	6.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		93.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(12)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010.(13)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting crops,* applying pesticides,† carrying heavy loads† (1, 3, 8)
Industry	Mining, particularly gold mining (1-6, 8, 10, 11, 14)
Services	Street work, including vending (1, 3, 5, 6, 8, 15)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 5-11, 16, 17)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Suriname, predominantly boys, work in small-scale gold mines carrying heavy loads and risking exposure to mercury, excessive noise, extreme heat, and collapsing sand walls.(4, 8, 14) Children from Suriname, Guyana, Brazil, and the Dominican Republic are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation in Suriname, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, including in informal mining camps in the country’s remote interior.(1, 3, 5, 6, 9, 10, 15-17)

Although primary school enrollment rates are above 90 percent for boys and girls in Suriname, these rates drop to close to 52 percent for males and 63 percent for females at the secondary school level.(18)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Suriname has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 17 of the Labor Code (1, 3-6, 19, 20)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 20 of the Labor Code (1, 3-5, 19, 20)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 2 and 3 of the Decree on Hazardous Labor; Articles 20 and 21 of the Labor Code (20-22)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 15 of the Constitution; Articles 253 and 307 of the Penal Code (6, 19, 23)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 307 and 334 of the Penal Code (6, 19)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 298, 306, and 334 of the Penal Code (1, 3, 5, 6, 19)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 9 of the Legal Status of Military Personnel Act (24, 25)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12	Article 39 of the Constitution; Article 20 of the Law on Basic Education (4, 6, 23, 26)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 38 and 39 of the Constitution (23)

* No conscription (24)

Article 20 of the Law on Basic Education requires children to attend school until they are at least age 12.(26) This leaves children between ages 12 and 14 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are no longer required to attend school but are not yet legally permitted to work.(1, 4) Although the Constitution guarantees free public education for all citizens, sources indicate that some children born in Suriname are not entitled to citizenship and remain ineligible to receive free public education. (23, 27, 28) The Penal Code established penalties for the production and trafficking of drugs but does not appear to specifically prohibit the use, procurement, and offering of a child in the production and trafficking of drugs.(19)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Ministry of Labor, Technology, and Environment (MLTE)/ Department of Labor Inspections	Enforce laws related to child labor in the formal sector.(4, 5, 11)
Ministry of Justice and Police	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor. Monitor and enforce child labor laws in the informal sector, including on the streets.(3, 5, 6, 11) The Youth Affairs Police covers law enforcement involving children under age 18 and is jointly responsible for child labor-related crimes.(3, 5) The Police Trafficking in Persons Unit investigates reports and allegations of trafficking in persons and forced sexual exploitation nationwide, including cases involving children.(5, 6)
Prosecutor's Office	Investigate and prosecute human trafficking cases.(8)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Suriname took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

The Government of Suriname does not collect or publish data on child labor inspections and violations. Labor inspections are mainly conducted near coastal areas and do not provide adequate coverage to ensure the enforcement of labor laws, particularly in agricultural areas, fisheries, and in the country's interior, which is difficult to reach or monitor.(9, 30)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Suriname took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the Government increased resources, including office space, for the Police Trafficking in Persons Unit of Police.(9) However, according to the Prosecutor's Office, investigations are initiated only as a result of complaints filed and are limited by a lack of resources, especially for travel to the interior of the country.(29, 31) Law enforcement efforts are also limited by the lack of formal processes for victim referrals. When the Youth Affairs Police finds children working on the street, these children are sometimes registered and sent home without referrals to any relevant services.(5, 6, 31) Child trafficking victims may be referred to shelters operated by NGOs; however, there are no dedicated shelters for human trafficking victims in Suriname and some children were placed in juvenile detention facilities due to lack of space in existing shelters.(1, 3, 9, 32)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Elimination of Child Labor (NCECL)	Coordinate efforts to combat child labor, including by researching different forms of child labor, advising on policy related to combating child labor, and formulating an action plan.(6) Represent 11 members, including the Presidential Commission on Child and Adolescent Policy; labor unions; private sector entities; academic institutions; NGOs; the MLTE; and the ministries of Social Affairs, Education, Regional Development, and Justice and Police.(1, 3, 6)
Anti-Trafficking Working Group	Coordinate the Government's anti-trafficking efforts.(1, 3, 5, 6) Provide care to victims of trafficking through government-supported NGOs.(6, 33) Comprised of seven members, six from government agencies and one representing the NGO community. Initiatives include those that target the worst forms of child labor, such as the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(3, 5, 6) Inactive throughout most of the reporting period. In December, the Minister of Justice and Police reorganized and reactivated the group, designating the Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Justice and Police as the head.(8)

The National Commission for the Elimination of Child Labor (NCECL) mandate expired in January 2015 and has not been renewed. The NCECL has been inactive since 2014 and there are no current plans to reestablish the commission.(8)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Suriname has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation to eradicate child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Suriname at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(34, 35)
Roadmap to Combat Human Trafficking in Suriname (2014–2018)	Outlines a policy to combat trafficking in persons through 2018.(29)

The Government of Suriname is in the initial stages of developing a new National Action Plan to eliminate child labor.(36) Research found no evidence that the Roadmap to Combat Human Trafficking in Suriname has been implemented.(8, 9)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Suriname funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Suriname

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Country-Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR) (2013–2017)	USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build the local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor in Suriname; will implement a National Action Plan on the elimination of child labor and support a national child labor survey.(36, 37)
Child and Youth Hotlinet	Government-run hotline that provides confidential advice to children in need, including victims of the worst forms of child labor.(29) Calls during the reporting period included inquiries on the definition of human trafficking.(8)
Anti-Trafficking Hotlinet	Government-sponsored hotline through which citizens can provide information to the police about trafficking cases.(10, 16, 29)
Human Trafficking Awareness Program†	Government-funded anti-trafficking awareness campaign for press, radio, television, Internet, and social media. In 2015, activities included publishing awareness-raising ads in local newspapers.(6, 8, 26, 33)
Second Basic Education Improvement Program (2015–2040)*	$20 million IDB, 25-year loan implemented by the Ministry of Education to develop curriculum and textbooks, provide teacher training, renovate classrooms, build housing for teachers in the interior, and build a center for teacher training and professional development. Will benefit 90,000 students and 6,500 teachers.(8, 38)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Suriname.

While the Government continues to support initiatives to eradicate child labor, existing social programs are insufficient to fully address the problem. In particular, Suriname lacks programs to assist children who are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation or who work in mining or agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Swaziland

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2015, Swaziland made efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, but was also complicit in the use of forced child labor. While the Government continued its Free Public Education Program by paying school fees for children to attend primary school and expanded this program to cover grade seven, Swaziland is receiving an assessment of no advancement because the Minister of Education and Training closed schools for 7 days and forced more than 30,000 children and adults to carry out national duties, including weeding the King's fields. In addition, local chiefs forced children to engage in agricultural work throughout the year. Penalties for refusing to perform this work included evicting families from their village, confiscating livestock, and withholding family wages. Children in Swaziland are also engaged in child labor, including in domestic work and herding cattle. Significant gaps in laws remain, including the lack of a compulsory education age, and social programs do not adequately address child labor in domestic work and livestock herding.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Swaziland are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work and herding cattle.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Swaziland.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	11.7 (35,368)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	13.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		79.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Growing corn,* picking cotton,* and harvesting sugarcane* (1, 3, 4)
	Herding cattle* and other livestock* (1, 3, 4, 7)
Services	Domestic work (1, 3, 4, 7)
	Serving alcohol *†(4)
	Street work, including as vendors, bus attendants, taxi conductors, portering, and washing cars (2-4, 7-9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in livestock herding,* domestic work,* farming,* and market vending,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 10)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 10)
	Use in illicit activities, including growing, manufacturing, and selling drugs* (11)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Since 2000, the Government closed schools as part of the Incwala ceremony so that children, ages 13 and older, and adults could weed the fields of King Mswati III. (12-15) From January 20–27, 2015, the Government once again closed schools and required more than 30,000 children and adults to weed the King’s field with their bare hands during morning hours. (12, 16-18) Private schools that were open on January 13, 2015, were ordered to close so that children could weed the King’s fields. The Government maintains a register of all workers and provided food and a token, referred to as the imbasha, after the work was completed. Children and adults who refused to weed the fields were threatened with high fines, eviction from their village, and the confiscation of livestock. (15, 17, 19)

Act No. 6 of the 1998 Administrative Order gave local chiefs the authority to force residents to perform agricultural work and other essential tasks. The Swaziland High Court declared this law null and void in 2000, but it has yet to be formally repealed. (20) In 2015, local chiefs and their inner councils required residents, including children, to perform agricultural and other work deemed necessary. (10, 14, 18, 20) Residents who refused to perform this work were threatened by the local chiefs with eviction, confiscation of livestock, and wage withholding. (15, 16)

Children in Swaziland, especially girls and orphans, are trafficked within the country and externally to South Africa for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in agriculture and domestic work. Some Mozambican boys migrate to Swaziland to conduct street work or to work in herding livestock, and subsequently become victims of human trafficking. Local NGOs explained that child abuse cases, including child labor, frequently occur in regions such as Manzini and Lubombo.

Swaziland has one of the world’s highest HIV/AIDS prevalence rates, affecting more than a quarter of the population. According to the UNICEF 2010 Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey, 23.6 percent of children under age 18 have lost at least one parent, mostly as a result of HIV/AIDS. (21-23) A source also indicates that orphans face unfair and unequal treatment in schools. Although the Government paid school fees for some vulnerable children to attend primary school under the Free Primary Education Program, top-up fees required by school officials create barriers to education that further increase children’s vulnerability to exploitative labor.

Although the Government has conducted general labor force surveys, these surveys did not cover child labor; the Government also has not made it a policy to collect data on the worst forms of child labor. (24-26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Swaziland has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Sexual Offenses and Domestic Violence Bill is still under review in Parliament and has yet to be passed into law. Sections 13–15 and 23–28 of the bill would criminalize using, procuring, and offering a child for commercial sexual exploitation.(30) Section 97 of the Employment Act applies minimum age protections to children working in industrial undertakings, but it does not cover children working in domestic and agricultural work.(34) Under Articles 233, 236, and 237 of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, children are prohibited from engaging in hazardous work in industrial undertakings, including in mining, manufacturing, and doing electrical work; however, these prohibitions do not extend to children in domestic and agricultural work; evidence indicates that children may be working long hours, using dangerous machines, carrying heavy loads, receiving exposure to harmful pesticides, and working alone in remote areas.(4, 27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security	Enforce child labor laws and promote relations between labor, government, and business through tripartite dialogue.(1, 35)
Royal Swaziland Police	Enforce child labor laws.(1, 35) The Domestic Violence and Protection Unit primarily focuses on addressing child labor by educating police officers on how to identify child labor violations and the obligation to report violations. Enforce child labor laws.(1, 35)
Department of Social Welfare	Enforce child labor laws and look out for the interests of vulnerable populations, including orphans, children, and elderly people.(1, 35)

* The Government does not make this information publicly available.

The Royal Swaziland Police Domestic Violence and Child Protection Unit trained police officers using the Children's Protection and Welfare Act orientation package for police officers that was developed in collaboration with UNICEF to clarify the role of police officers in addressing child labor.(7)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Trafficking in Persons Secretariat	Coordinate, monitor, and implement programs to combat trafficking in persons, with the assistance of the Anti-Human Trafficking Task Force.(37)
Anti-Human Trafficking Task Force	Exchange information on cases of human trafficking between relevant stakeholders, including the police, immigration, social services, and prosecutors. Comprises a conglomerate of NGOs and government entities, including the Royal Swaziland Police; Director of Public Prosecutions; Attorney General's Office; Department of Social Welfare; Department of Health; Ministry of Foreign Affairs; and MLSS.(1, 38)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Swaziland has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action for Children	Implements the Children's Protection and Welfare Act mandate by developing a plan to address child labor, especially in hazardous work.(32)
National Children's Policy	Represents the policy framework of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act.(32)
National Plan of Action for Orphans and Vulnerable Children	Provides strategic objectives, such as providing education, psychosocial support, child protection, research and monitoring, and support to help orphans and vulnerable children enroll in school. Identifies child laborers as a vulnerable group of children.(36)
National Strategic Framework and Action Plan to Combat People Trafficking	Assigns responsibilities to relevant Government agencies on trafficking in persons.(36)
UN Development Assistance Framework (2011–2015)*	Improved access to social services, especially for women, children, and disadvantaged groups.(37)
National Social Development Policy*	Provides protections for children, including orphans and vulnerable children, street children, children with disabilities, and others.(32)
Education Sector Policy*	Seeks to provide equitable access to education.(32)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Although the National Task Team drafted an Action Program on the Elimination of Child Labor (APEC) in 2008 and made additional changes in 2012, it has not been approved. APEC includes the legal protections outlined in the Children's Protection and Welfare Act.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Swaziland participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project, implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research in Swaziland.(41) During the year, IPEC-SIMPOC reviewed the data collected, in collaboration with the Swaziland national statistical office in preparing a report on the findings.(42)
Decent Work Country Program (2010–2017)	ILO program seeking to raise awareness of and provide training programs on international labor standards, with the aim of developing national laws related to the ratified ILO conventions. (38, 39)
Free Primary Education Program (2009–2015)†	Government program provided free primary education to children. In 2015, the program was extended from grade six to grade seven.(3)

† Program is funded by the Government of Swaziland.

Government resources allocated to education, the fight against HIV/AIDS, and other social protection programs that may affect the worst forms of child labor are still limited. The Government, in collaboration with NGOs, provided trafficking victims with basic necessities, such as food, clothing, shelter, toiletries, counseling, and medical care.(18) Although Swaziland has programs that target child labor, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs specifically designed to assist children working in livestock herding and domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Swaziland (Table 11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, the United Republic of Tanzania made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government, in coordination with the ILO, continued to conduct a National Child Labor Survey and support programs on the elimination of child labor. The Government also passed implementation regulations for the Anti-Trafficking In Persons Act. However, children in Tanzania are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in quarrying, fishing, and domestic work. In addition, gaps remain in the laws regulating children's engagement in illicit activities and legal protections for children engaging in domestic work. Although the Government has coordination mechanisms to monitor child labor and undertake child protection, concrete goals and a unified approach are lacking. The National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor remains under-funded, as do enforcement mechanisms that detect and protect children from child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Tanzania are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in quarrying, fishing, and domestic work. Children also are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Tanzania.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	25.1 (3,157,442)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	74.1

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Tanzania is a source, transit, and destination country for child trafficking.(6, 33) Trafficking of children for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation is a problem in Tanzania, which particularly affects children trafficked internally (31, 33, 34). Children from poor families as well as those residing in rural areas or affected by HIV/AIDS face the greatest risk.(33, 35) Trafficking often involves family members, friends, or brokers, who promise rural families jobs or assistance with their children’s education in the urban areas of Arusha, Dar es Salaam, and Mwanza.(33) Girls are often trafficked for domestic servitude or commercial sexual exploitation, including along the Kenya-Tanzania border and in touristic areas in the country.(6, 11, 31, 32) Children from Burundi and Kenya are trafficked to Tanzania for mining, domestic work, and agricultural labor.(6, 34)

Access to education and public services is limited for some children in Tanzania. While the Primary Education Development Plan makes primary school education free, students or their parents may be required to contribute money to pay for books, school feeding programs, or uniforms.(11, 36, 37) Globally, Tanzania has one of the lowest levels of birth registrations.(38) Lack of birth registration is a barrier to accessing education, health care, and other social services, all of which may increase children’s vulnerability to child labor, including its worst forms, in Tanzania.(38)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Tanzania has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Tanzania's Constitution stipulates which laws apply across the entire United Republic, but does not cover child labor laws.(43) Therefore, mainland Tanzania and Zanzibar have separate legislation governing child labor.(1) In addition to the legal frameworks of mainland Tanzania and Zanzibar on child labor, some districts have incorporated restrictions against child labor into their local bylaws.(9)

Mainland Tanzania and Zanzibar have different laws for the minimum age for work and governing hazardous labor.(39-43, 46) Article 77 of the Law of the Child Act sets the minimum age for work on mainland Tanzania at 14.(39, 40) In comparison, Article 98 of Children's Act sets the minimum age for light work in Zanzibar at 15. In addition, Articles 99 and 100 of the Children's Act prohibit hazardous work in Zanzibar for children under age 18. (41, 42, 47)

While the Constitution and mainland Tanzania's Employment and Labor Relations Act, the Law of the Child Act, Zanzibar Children's Act, and Zanzibar Employment Act prohibit forced labor, the National Defense Act and the Constitution include exceptions for forced labor through compulsory national service.(39, 41-43, 46, 47) Mainland Tanzania's law does not explicitly prohibit child domestic work.(39, 41)Although the Zanzibar Children's Act sets the minimum age for work at 15 it does not specify whether its protections cover children engaged in domestic work.(41, 42)

Mainland Tanzania does not clearly provide penalties for using children for illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs. Zanzibar prohibits the use of children for illicit activities; however, it does not specify the types of activities, such as production and trafficking of drugs.(42)

Tanzania

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Although Tanzania's age for voluntary military recruitment is 18, children younger than age 18 may volunteer with the consent of parents, guardians, or (if orphaned) that of the local district commission.(46, 48)

Tanzania does not have a law requiring free public education, but it does have an education policy that provides for free education. (49) The National Education Act of 1978 requires that children enroll in primary education at age 7, with primary education lasting for 7 years; thus, the compulsory education age is 14.(36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE, mainland)—Labor Administration and Inspection Section	Coordinate labor inspections carried out by the area offices and prepare, review, and recommend guidelines on labor inspection services and compliance with labor legislation. Provide legal guidance upon request, disseminate information to employers and employees on their rights and obligations, and assist area offices in conducting labor inspections.(50)
MOLE (mainland)—Labor Officers	Inspect locales for suspected violations of child labor laws.(1) Assigned to each region of Tanzania. Respond to reports of child labor violations, issue noncompliance orders, and report incidents to local police authorities and other responsible ministries.(1) Accept complaints about violations of child labor law.(1)
Ministry of Community Development, Gender, and Children	Enforce child protection laws and regulations, employ community development officers to monitor child labor at the district and village levels, and report findings to the Regional Administration and Local Government (PMORALG).(2, 16) Coordinate all children's issues as a result of the Child Development Policy of 2008. Key advocate for the primary education agenda at the community level.(49)
Ministry of Health and Social Welfare	Implement, monitor, and evaluate health and social welfare policies, including those pertaining to children.(51) Support vulnerable groups of children through the National Costed Plan of Action for Most Vulnerable Children.(49, 51) Employ Social Welfare Officers at the district level to monitor child labor at the district and village levels, and report findings to the PMORALG.(52)
Ministry of Labor, Economic Empowerment and Cooperatives—Labor Commission (Zanzibar)	Enforce Zanzibar's child labor laws and administer the provisions of the Zanzibar Labor Act, including inspections.(1, 9, 25) Investigate reports of child labor reported by the police and refer cases to social welfare officers for support.(1, 9, 47, 50)
Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth Development (Zanzibar)—Child Protection Unit	Ensure compliance with child protection laws, including those pertaining to child labor.(51)
Tanzania Police Force (mainland)	Investigate cases of child labor reported to police stations, and in some cases, refer them to labor officers or solicit the assistance of social welfare officers; includes a Trafficking desk and Gender and Children's desks to handle cases pertaining to children.(9, 31, 53)
Zanzibar Police Force (Zanzibar)	Investigate and compile reports of incidents of child abuse, child labor, human trafficking, rape, and other forms of child endangerment.(9, 31)
INTERPOL Criminal Investigation Department—INTERPOL National Central Bureau for Tanzania	Investigate various priority crimes, including trafficking in persons and illegal immigration. Headed by a Commissioner of Police, is staffed by 23 police officers, and includes focal points responsible for trafficking.(9, 54)
Ministry of Home Affairs (mainland)	Enforce anti-trafficking laws, including those pertaining to child trafficking, laws prohibiting commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities.(9)
Ministry of Health and Social Welfare (Zanzibar)	Enforce anti-trafficking laws, including those pertaining to child trafficking.(9)

Previously, the mainland Ministry of Labor attempted to establish a formal child labor unit; it has yet to be formed. However, under the Prime Minister's Office Policy, Parliamentary Affairs, Labor, Employment, Youth and Disabled, there are labor officers that are responsible for enforcing child labor laws. In December 2015, the change in presidential leadership led to ministerial restructurings which consolidated several ministries and decreased the total number of cabinet ministers from 30 to 19.(10) Table 5 presents the agency structure for the majority of the reporting period.

‡ Reported number of labor inspections up to June 2015

Ministry of Labor and Employment Development regulations dictate that one or more labor officers be assigned to each region. However, research was unable to determine whether each region had a dedicated labor officer during the reporting period.(10) There are reports that 21 additional mainland and no new Zanzibar labor inspectors were hired in the reporting period.(10) Sixty-four mainland labor officers received training through the WEKEZA project and sources indicate the ILO provided training to an unspecified number of mainland labor officers during the reporting period.(10, 56) The Government of the United Republic of Tanzania did not report data on the number of child labor trainings they provided. Inspections on the mainland were carried out in previous years, in sectors such as agriculture, mining, domestic work, hotels, trade, industry and commerce, construction, and fishing.(4) However, no inspections data were provided for the reporting period. Complaint and referral mechanisms have been reported to lack investigative and enforcement capacity.(10, 13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Tanzania took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

While the total number of criminal prosecutions is unknown, the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions reported one case involving child trafficking which led to prosecution and conviction during the reporting period. The convicted was ordered to serve a one year jail sentence after being unable to pay a USD $5,000 penalty, in accordance with the Anti-TIP Act.(55) The GoURT has made efforts to sanction recruiting agencies outside of the country, prosecute offenders, and prevent known perpetrators from entering the country, but the total number of efforts related to child-specific violations remains unknown.(57, 58)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Inter-Sectoral Coordination Committee (NISCC)	Oversee interagency child labor policy coordination, provide guidance on the overall implementation of child labor activities, and strengthen local structural capacity to address child labor.(4, 59) Chaired by the Prime Minister's Office—PMORALG; members include the Ministries of Labor, Community Development, Gender and Children, and Health and Social Welfare, as well as NGOs.(1, 4)
Anti-Trafficking Secretariat and Anti-Trafficking Committee	Promote, define, and coordinate policy to prevent trafficking.(16, 31, 33, 44)
Regional Task Force on Human Trafficking and Illegal Immigration	Maintain a list of service providers to which trafficking victims can be referred.(60, 61)
National Education Task Force on Child Labor (NETFCL)	Review education sector policies, existing laws, regulations, and strategies related to child issues, including the National Action Plan. Review existing curriculum and programs, identify gaps, and suggest strategies to resolve barriers to education access as a result of child labor.(10, 62)
District Child Labor Committees	Coordinate and oversee the implementation of efforts to eliminate child labor at the district level. Members include the District Executive Director, Commanding District Officer, District Community Development Officer, District Education Officer, District Medical Officer, Social Welfare Officer, District Trade Officer, Legal Officer, Cooperative Officer, Planning Officer, representatives from regional affiliations, and representatives from NGOs and community-based organizations that deal with child labor.(2, 4) There are 14 District Child Labor Committees.(7)
Village Child Labor Committees	Coordinate and oversee efforts related to child labor at the village level.(4)
Zanzibar Child Labor Steering Committee	Coordinate various implementing agencies responsible for child labor. Provide policy guidance on the Zanzibar National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor. Exchange information with the mainland Tanzania NISCC.(9)
Most Vulnerable Children Committees	Identify children involved in or at risk of becoming involved in child labor at the ward and village levels, and refer children to social services.(2, 51)
Multi-Sector Task Force on Violence Against Children	Implement the 3-year National Plan to Prevent and Respond to Violence Against Children and enforce the Law of the Child Act.(63, 64)

In July 2015, the National Education Task Force held the first of four planned meetings to review existing laws, regulations, and the National Action Plan and to synergize with educational opportunities.⁽¹⁰⁾ The National Inter-Sectoral Coordination Committee convened during the reporting period.⁽¹⁰⁾ In May 2015, a national conference on child labor in the agriculture sector was held in Dar es Salaam.⁽⁵⁶⁾ Research could not determine whether Zanzibar coordinating bodies convened during the reporting period. While mainland child labor and child protection coordinating bodies exist, research could not determine whether coordination across bodies exists. Mechanisms appear to lack a coordinated, unified approach to address child labor issues, which could be facilitated through greater NISCC involvement.⁽¹⁰⁾

In January 2015, the Government passed the implementing regulations to the 2008 Anti-Trafficking In Persons Act.⁽³³⁾ The Anti-Trafficking Secretariat and Anti-Trafficking Committee met to draft an updated National Action Plan which would incorporate anti-trafficking in persons provisions.⁽³³⁾ The Anti-Trafficking Secretariat received a budget allocation of approximately $40,000, which is $5,000 less than the previous reporting period.^(33, 58)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Information was not available on the amount of funding budgeted toward the implementation of the National Action Plans for the Elimination of Child Labor in mainland Tanzania and Zanzibar.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Tanzania funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has funded and participated in other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Targets 8,000 at-risk children and 3,360 households with education and livelihood services. The Government sits on the WEKEZA National Project Advisory Council.(2)
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (2013 – 2017)	USDOL-funded, 4-year research project implemented by the ILO and in 10 countries, including Tanzania, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in child labor. Expanding the Evidence Base and Reinforcing Policy Research for Scaling Up and Accelerating Action Against Child Labor (2010 – 2016)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 7 countries, including Tanzania, to accelerate country level actions to address child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, building capacity of governments to conduct research in this area, and supporting governments, social partners and other stakeholders to identify areas of policy intervention against child labor.(87) The National Bureau of Statistics, in collaboration with the ILO, conducted the survey during the reporting period.(13)
Community Empowerment for Elimination of Child Sexual Exploitation; Prevention and Rehabilitation of Children withdrawn from CSEC (2014-2015)	$958,781 Terre des Hommes-funded, 2 year programs to eliminate child labor, including withdrawing children from the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Artisanal Gold Mines in Kahama and Mara, and in other sectors in Mtwara. The Community Empowerment for Elimination of Child Sexual Exploitation project in the mining and fishing villages in Mara Region reached 1000 children and the Prevention and Rehabilitation of children withdrawn from commercial sexual exploitation in Mtwara program reached 700 girls. Interventions include withdrawal, counselling, vocational and entrepreneurial training, child rights clubs, training of and coordination with government officials at district, ward and village level, as well as linking in with national level fora.(55)
2025 Timebound Program on the Elimination of Child Labor	Provides a plan to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Tanzania by 2025 and facilitates the formation of child labor committees at the district and regional levels to develop the capacity of Child Labor Monitoring System.(88, 89) Currently, the ILO has a child labor elimination project in Tabora region to examine existing district level child labor elimination/prevention mechanisms, including child labor committees or district child protection committees.(55)

Promoting Sustainable Practices to Eradicate Child Labor in Tobacco (PROSPER Program) (2011 – 2015)	$4.75 million Eliminating Child Labor in Tobacco Growing (ECLT) Foundation-funded, 4-year project implemented by Winrock International that targets 7,800 children and aims to reduce child labor in Tanzania's tobacco industry through targeted interventions to address social and economic factors that fuel child labor in the target districts of Sikonge and Urambo. Strengthens local and national structures to achieve child-free tobacco production in target districts.(93, 94)
Support Program for Child Domestic Workers/Wote Sawa (2011 – 2015)	$975,000 Terre des Hommes/Anti-Slavery International/Mama Cash-funded, 6-year program that withdraws and trains child domestic workers, and establishes child domestic worker committees in Mwanza. Decent Work Country Program (2013 – 2016)	ILO-supported program that identifies four objectives of decent work: (1) creating jobs, (2) guaranteeing rights at work, (3) extending social protection, and (4) promoting social dialogue. Includes, as an outcome, improving the operational environment for the elimination of child labor and its worst forms.(102, 103)
Education Fund†	Government program that supports the improvement of quality and equity, and increased access to education at all levels in mainland Tanzania and higher education in Tanzania and Zanzibar.(104)
Big Results Now Initiative†	Government program to improve the quality and availability of education. Supports teacher training, provision of learning materials, and school incentive grants to high-performing schools; includes efforts to construct schools, particularly at the secondary school level. However, due to constraints on resources for school construction, the Government has also encouraged communities to build and run their own schools while it provides teachers and capitalization grants once schools are established.(105)

Program is funded by the Government of Tanzania.

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Thailand made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved the second phase of the National Policy and Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor, which aims to eradicate child labor in Thailand by 2020, and includes a 3-year action plan toward the achievement of this goal. In an effort to strengthen criminal legislation against the commercial sexual exploitation of children, the Government adopted an amendment to criminalize the production, distribution, and possession of child pornography. Additionally, the Government took steps to improve the investigation and prosecution process for human trafficking cases, including those related to child trafficking, by establishing a specialist anti-human trafficking division within the Criminal Court of Justice and a specialist department of prosecutors under the Office of the Attorney General. However, children in Thailand are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in the shrimp and seafood processing sector and in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government continues to struggle to effectively enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor, particularly in the fishing, agriculture, manufacturing, and home-based business sectors. Some children in Thailand face challenges in accessing education, which increases their vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Thailand are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in the shrimp and seafood processing sector and in commercial sexual exploitation. (1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Thailand. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Children are trafficked to and within Thailand for commercial sexual exploitation and labor exploitation. Commercial sexual exploitation of children commonly occurs in establishments such as massage parlors, bars, karaoke lounges, and hotels, as well as in private residences.(36) Sources report that the majority of child sex trafficking victims are Thai, Lao, and Burmese nationals.(12, 34) Some trafficked children are forced to sell flowers and candy, beg on the streets, or work as domestic servants in Bangkok and other urban areas.(3, 21, 27)

During the year, ethno-nationalist separatist insurgency activity continued in Thailand’s four southernmost provinces. In recent years, there have been reports that separatist groups recruited children to commit acts of arson, serve as scouts or informants, and sometimes participate in combat.(3, 33, 35) Students, teachers, and other education personnel have been killed or wounded in the conflict, which has disrupted education in the region.(33, 37)

Child labor and forced child labor exist in the shrimp and seafood processing sector in coastal regions of the country.(4, 5, 9, 10) Research found that child laborers in the shrimp and seafood processing sector are twice as likely to incur an injury in the workplace as children in other industries, and 44 percent report that they lack personal protective equipment.(11)

Some children in Thailand, particularly migrants and ethnic minorities, face challenges in accessing education. Barriers to education include a lack of awareness of migrant children’s right to an education among local government officials and migrant families; language barriers, including class instruction, teaching materials, and school applications available only in Thai language; and the long distances children must travel to attend school.(2, 12, 30, 38, 39)

The Department of Labor Protection and Welfare (DLPW) reported that the National Statistical Office collected nationally representative data on working children, including child labor and hazardous work, in December 2015 as part of its regular labor force survey. The results and methodology had not been publicly released by the close of the 2015 reporting period.(12) In Thailand, generally, reporting and statistics on child labor often omit street children and migrant children.(2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Thailand adopted several new laws and regulations to strengthen its legal framework on the worst forms of child labor. The revised Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act, enacted on April 29, 2015, amended the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons Act and permits the government to close a workplace and fine the offender where trafficking violations are found, and take other necessary measures to prevent the offense from occurring.(12, 50) On December 7, 2015, an amendment to the Penal Code took effect, which distinguishes between child and adult pornography and specifically criminalizes the production, possession, and distribution of child pornography.(12, 46) Also in 2015, the revised Regulation on Criminal Proceedings and Comparison to Offenders under the Labor Protection Act and the Occupational Safety, Health, and Environment Act took effect. Sources indicate that the regulation streamlines the criminal investigation process for child labor cases by allowing labor inspectors to file complaints directly with the police if they identify child laborers, particularly those working in the fishing and seafood industry or in seasonal agriculture.(34, 51)

On November 14, 2015, the Government enacted the Royal Ordinance on Fisheries. The ordinance requires all fishing vessels 10 tons or larger to undergo port in–port out inspections, in which the vessel’s owner or master must submit documentation of vessel registration, a fishing license, and employment contracts for all workers.(52) Owners must also demonstrate that an appropriate system is in place to ensure the occupational safety, hygiene, and well-being of the workers on board. The ordinance stipulates fines ranging from 400,000 to 800,000 babt for seafood processing facilities found to be violating the Labor Protection Act.(12, 52). In addition, in 2015, the Ministry of Labor drafted a ministerial regulation to prohibit employers from hiring children under age 18 to work in seafood processing factories and establishments, which went into effect in January 2016.(12, 53)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor Protection and Welfare (DLPW) of the Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce labor laws, including the Labor Protection Act and Occupational Safety, Health, and Environment Act, through workplace inspections.(26) Operate Hotline 1546 to answer questions regarding working conditions and receive complaints from the public about child labor.(12, 56)
Fishing Coordination Centers (operated jointly by the Department of Employment, the DLPW, and the Marine Police)	Compile registration records and work permit information for migrants working on fishing vessels and work with vessel owners to ensure that undocumented migrant workers are registered. Monitor and coordinate inspections of working conditions on fishing vessels.(12) Provide trainings on labor protection for both employers and employees. Receive human trafficking complaints and coordinate with other agencies to provide assistance, remedy, and rehabilitation services for victims.(12)
Command Center for Combating Illegal Fishing*	Coordinate Government efforts to resolve cases of human trafficking and illegal fishing. Establish 28 Port In-Port Out Centers and One-Stop Service Centers for fishing vessels in every coastal province.(12) Carry out inspections in the fishing and seafood industry at port, at sea, and on land. Verify the employment contracts, work permits, and identification documents of all workers on board fishing vessels on arrival and departure from port.(34) The Chief of Staff of the Royal Thai Navy acts as commander and reports to the Prime Minister.(34) Agencies involved include the Royal Thai Navy, the Ministry of Agriculture and Cooperatives, the Ministry of Transport, the Ministry of the Interior, the MOL, and the Royal Thai Police.(34)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division of the Royal Thai Police	Enforce laws related to forced labor, human trafficking, child pornography, and commercial sexual exploitation of women and children. Operate Hotline 1191 to receive complaints regarding human trafficking and violence against children and women.(12)
Department of Special Investigations in the Ministry of Justice	Investigate complicated human trafficking crimes, including those related to government officials' complicity and transnational or organized crime. (38, 57, 58)
Anti-Human Trafficking Department under the Office of the Attorney General*	Enforce laws against human trafficking crimes under the Criminal Code, Transnational Organized Crime Act, and Anti-Human Trafficking Act.(12) Investigate or co-investigate human trafficking offenses and issue reports in order to improve prosecution of trafficking in persons cases.(59)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division under the Criminal Court of Justice*	Enforce the Anti-Human Trafficking Act.(12) Prosecute trafficking in persons cases, focusing specifically on sex trafficking, forced labor, slavery, and the illegal trade of human organs.(59)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

In 2015, the DLPW collaborated with 31 civil society, public, and private sector representatives to develop and distribute operational guidelines to inform the work of multidisciplinary inspection teams consisting of labor inspectors, police, and NGO representatives. The guidelines contain information on national child labor laws and international child labor standards.(12, 26)

On August 10, 2015, five government agencies signed an MOU aimed at increasing intergovernmental information-sharing on human trafficking cases and improving coordination on cases among prosecution and witness protection-focused agencies.(59) In addition, Thai immigration police worked to strengthen screening procedures for potential human trafficking victims among migrants and deportees, especially women and children, by establishing 16 identification centers along key migration routes.(34)

In addition to the DLPW labor inspectorate, 316 government officials from various agencies are authorized to inspect workplaces associated with seafood production.(12) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Thailand should employ roughly 2,608 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(60-62) Acknowledging that the total number of inspectors is not sufficient, the DLPW submitted an official request in 2015 to the Office of Civil Service Commission to hire an additional 419 inspectors.(12) The DLPW provides 3 to 5 days of orientation for new labor inspectors, which includes limited instruction on laws related to child labor and human trafficking, as well as basic training on inspection and enforcement techniques.(55) During the year, labor inspectors and government officials in 22 coastal provinces also received training on child labor, hazardous child labor, and forced labor, with a focus on the protection of workers in the fisheries sector.(12)

During inspections, language barriers continue to limit the ability of labor inspectors to interview migrant workers, including working children. In 2015, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) took steps to address this issue by hiring 40 new interpreters to serve provinces with large populations of migrant workers.(12) However, there is still a shortage of interpreters due to budget limitations and laws that prevent the Government from recruiting interpreters who are not Thai nationals.(12) Interpreters may also lack training on national labor laws, the rights of migrant workers, and interviewing techniques for unbiased and accurate translation.(55)

Enforcement of the list of hazardous work prohibited for children is concentrated in the formal sector, despite the fact that an estimated 56 percent of the labor force are in informal sector employment.(38, 63) Under the Home Workers Protection Act, the DLPW has the authority to inspect home-based workplaces, but in practice, it is challenging for labor inspectors to safely access an individual's property to monitor the welfare of child domestic workers or other children in home-based employment.(38, 64) Additionally, at times, labor inspectors are afraid of being sued by employers, as neither the law nor the institutional policies provide adequate protection or financial assistance to labor inspectors who are sued.(12, 26)

During the reporting period, the MOL increased efforts to inspect workplaces in the informal sector and found child labor violations in a variety of activities, including food and beverage services, construction, manufacturing, and seafood processing. As a result of inspections, 22 children were removed from unlawful employment.(12, 30)

There continued to be concerns that penalties for child labor violations are infrequently applied in accordance with the parameters prescribed by law.(12) In November 2015, the Permanent Secretary of Labor issued an administrative order calling for the maximum penalty rates prescribed in the Labor Protection Act to be applied for all law violations related to child labor, forced labor, and debt bondage.(12) Since the order was announced, there has been one case in which a labor inspector issued the maximum fine to an employer found using child labor on a fishing boat.(55)

Various government agencies operate hotlines to receive labor complaints, including those related to child labor. From January through November 2015, the Ministry of Social Development and Human Security's 24-hour 1300 hotline received 174 calls related to human trafficking and 4 related to child labor.(12) For callers who do not speak Thai, 85 trained volunteer interpreters are available to assist in 7 relevant languages. In addition, the DLPW maintains the 1546 hotline, with a staff of 21 interpreters and 3 full-time operators for English, Burmese, and Cambodian languages.(12, 30) In 2015, the 1546 hotline received 639 calls from individuals seeking to report child labor law violations or requesting information on child labor laws and regulations.(55)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Thailand took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

‡ Data are from October 1, 2014 to September 30, 2015.

In 2015, the authorities responsible for enforcing criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor included approximately 400 police officials from the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division, 30 officials from the Department of Special Investigations, and 17 public prosecutors under the Office of the Attorney General.(12) The Government of Thailand provided anti-human trafficking training for roughly 2,640 officials, including police officers, prosecutors, judges, labor inspectors, social workers, and navy officials. Trainings topics included instruction on forced labor and debt bondage; the prevention of human trafficking, child labor, and forced labor in the fishing industry; and child-friendly investigation and referral procedures.(34)

Throughout the year, the Royal Thai Police conducted criminal investigations related to forced child labor, child trafficking, and the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including use in the production of pornography.(34) The Department of Juvenile Observation and Protection also investigated cases related to the use of children in the production and trafficking of drugs.(51) Public prosecutors prosecuted 242 individuals on trafficking in persons charges in 177 cases, and courts convicted 241 of these defendants in 2015. However, information is not available on how many of these prosecutions and convictions are specifically related to the trafficking of children.(30, 34)

During the reporting period, the Prime Minister issued the Administrative Measures to Prevent Public Officials' Involvement in Human Trafficking, which establishes a procedure for heads of government agencies to monitor, report on, and take disciplinary action against officials who are complicit in human trafficking crimes.(34) In 2015, at least one official was convicted and sentenced for the trafficking of children.(30) However, there continued to be reports that some corrupt Thai officials are complicit in crimes related to child trafficking, with officials allegedly purchasing sex with underage girls or taking bribes to protect brothels and karaoke bars employing children.(3, 26, 34)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The National Committee to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate the implementation of child labor policies and plans, facilitate cooperation among various coordinating ministries, and report annually to the Thai Cabinet on child labor issues.(12) Chaired by the MOL, with representation from other government agencies, employer and worker associations, and civil society groups.(65) Oversee three subcommittees that monitored the National Policy and Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor Phase I (2009–2014); updated the list of hazardous activities prohibited for children under age 18; and developed the National Policy and Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor Phase II (2015–2020).(12) In 2015, convened three times and approved a situation report and recommendations for a plan of action on the worst forms of child labor.(12)
National Policy Committee on Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Illegal, Unreported, and Unregulated Fishing	Coordinate anti-trafficking in persons policies and activities and is chaired by the Prime Minister. Includes five subcommittees to drive policy, including the Subcommittee on Child Labor, Forced Labor, and Migrant Workers, chaired by the Minister of Labor.(12, 66) Also includes the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Committee and the Policy Committee on the Resolution of Migrant Labor and Human Trafficking Problems.(66)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division	Coordinate anti-human trafficking activities, including those involving forced child labor, child trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation. Located under the Ministry of Social Development and Human Security. Monitor the work of 76 Provincial Operation Centers for the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking, which serve as the frontline implementers of anti-human trafficking activities.(12, 38) Formerly known as the National Operation Center.(12)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Thailand has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy and Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor Phase II (2015–2020)†	Establishes the goal of removing and preventing children from becoming involved in the worst forms of child labor by 2020. Contains a 3-year action plan that focuses on five strategic areas: (1) preventing the worst forms of child labor, (2) rescuing and protecting children from the worst forms of child labor, (3) developing and enforcing relevant laws, (4) enhancing interagency cooperation, and (5) developing management and monitoring systems.(12, 55) In 2015, Mahidol University finalized an MOL-commissioned evaluation of the first phase of the National Policy and Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(12, 55) Researchers found that Phase I helped to facilitate increased coordination among relevant organizations and government agencies, but that insufficient funding hindered the effective implementation of activities.(67) The MOL incorporated recommendations from this evaluation, as well as input received during a public hearing and consultation process, into Phase II.(12) Approved by the cabinet in December 2015, with implementation due to commence in 2016.(12)
The National Policy, Strategy, and Measures for the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons (2011–2016)	Sets forth five strategies to address human trafficking, including prevention, prosecution, protection and assistance, policy development, and improved information management.(68)
Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Convention Against Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (ACTIP) (2015)†	Establishes a regional anti-human trafficking framework among 10 ASEAN Member States, including Thailand, to improve coordination on the investigation and prosecution of trafficking in persons cases and the enhancement of assistance for victims. Unanimously adopted in June 2015, the Convention was signed by the relevant heads of state on November 21, 2015.(69, 70)
National Child and Youth Development Plan (2012–2016)*	Seeks to advance four principles: (1) the enforcement and implementation of the National Child and Youth Development Promotion Act and relevant laws; (2) the idea that every child and young person has the right to basic education of the highest quality; (3) the notion that children and youth have the right to basic health care services of the highest standard; and (4) the idea that children and youth have the right to play, rest, and participate in recreational activities.(71, 72)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Thailand funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Aimed to strengthen policy frameworks to protect the rights of Thai and migrant children, assist the shrimp and seafood processing industry to comply with labor laws, and provide education and other services to at-risk children and families in targeted areas.(74) A total of 5,412 children engaged in, or at high-risk of entering, child labor received educational or vocational services, and 3,535 households received livelihood services.(74, 75)
Government Shelters for Trafficking Victims†	Ministry of Social Development and Human Security program that operates 76 temporary shelters to provide emergency assistance and protection to human trafficking victims, including children.(34) Nine long-term shelters offer medical care, psychosocial services, education, and life skills education for human trafficking victims.(30, 34) As of November 2015, provided services to 198 child trafficking victims, including 71 children under the age of 15 and 127 children ages 15 to 18.(12)
Asia-Australia Program to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2013–2018)	$45 million Australian Aid-funded, 5-year ASEAN regional and national-level project to build capacity and strengthen access to criminal justice for trafficking victims.(26) In Thailand, projects focus on creating specialized investigative units; increasing interagency cooperation among public prosecutors, police, and the Department of Special Investigations; creating a specialized unit on human trafficking in the Office of the Attorney General; and developing training curriculum for law enforcement, prosecutors, and judges.(26)
Migrant Learning Centers†	NGO-operated centers that provide basic education to children in migrant communities. Ministerial regulations under the National Education Act specify that these centers are permitted to operate and are eligible to receive government subsidies and accreditation.(12) As of February 2015, there were approximately 95 migrant learning centers, with 17,161 students attending in Thailand.(12)
Child Support Grant (2015–2016)*†	Government pilot program that provides low-income parents or caretakers with a monthly stipend of approximately $11 (400 baht) per child for children ages 0 to 1 year old. Approximately 135,000 children are anticipated to benefit.(76, 77)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Thailand.

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
61. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
62. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Timor-Leste made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Secretariat of State for Professional Training and Employment Policy significantly increased the number of labor inspections conducted throughout the country, from 10 inspections in 2014 to 991 in 2015. In addition, the Government released the results of the second Timor-Leste Integrated Labor Force Survey, which included data on child labor for the first time. With technical support from the International Labor Organization, the Government engaged in the design of a national child labor and forced labor survey that will provide detailed information on the prevalence and nature of these issues in Timor-Leste. However, children in Timor-Leste are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Although the National Commission against Child Labor drafted a decree-law specifying the occupations and activities prohibited for children, the decree-law has not yet been enacted, leaving children vulnerable to engagement in hazardous work. Limited financial and human resources make it challenging for inspectors and investigators to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor, especially in more remote areas of the country.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Timor-Leste are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Timor-Leste.

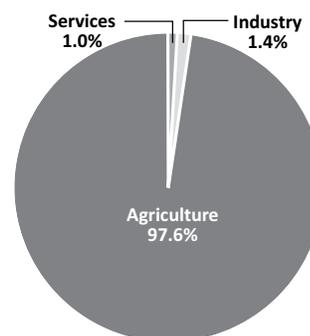

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Timor-Leste

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In Timor-Leste, some girls are trafficked from rural areas to the capital city, Dili, and subjected to commercial sexual exploitation or forced domestic work.⁽⁹⁾ In a few cases, Timorese families have placed their children in bonded domestic work and agricultural labor to settle outstanding debts.^(9, 10) There is also limited evidence that girls are trafficked transnationally to Indonesia for labor exploitation.⁽¹⁰⁻¹²⁾

In April 2015, the Ministry of Finance and the Secretariat of State for Vocational Training, Policy and Employment released the results of the second Timor-Leste Integrated Labor Force Survey.⁽¹³⁾ The survey provides information on several social and economic indicators and, for the first time, includes limited data on child labor.^(6, 14)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 11 of the Education System Framework Law (19)
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 59 of the Constitution of the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste; Article 11 of the Education System Framework Law (19, 20)

During the reporting period, the National Commission against Child Labor (NCCL) drafted a decree-law for the adoption of a list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children. The decree-law is awaiting approval by the Council of Ministers.(21, 22) In its current state, the legal framework in Timor-Leste is not completely consistent with international standards regarding hazardous child labor. While the Timorese Labour Code does prohibit children from involvement in hazardous work likely to jeopardize their health, safety, and morals, the law does not specify the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.(15) The Labour Code and the Penal Code both define a minor as a person less than age 17.(15, 17) This standard leaves 17-year-old children vulnerable to involvement in hazardous work and other worst forms of child labor. In addition, the Labour Code specifies the conditions under which children ages 13 to 15 may be permitted to perform light work and limits the number of hours for light work, but it does not indicate which specific activities qualify as light work.(15)

In 2015, parliamentary approval was still pending for legislation against human trafficking that was originally drafted in 2012.(11, 23-25) The proposed law seeks to rationalize the country's disparate legal provisions that define and prescribe penalties for the crime of human trafficking.(11, 14)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

The Secretariat of State for Professional Training and Employment Policy (SEPFPOE)	Enforce laws related to child labor. Administer the General Labor Inspectorate Directorate, which is responsible for investigating incidents of forced labor.(1)
Timor-Leste National Police (PNTL)	Enforce criminal laws against forced labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking. Includes the Vulnerable Persons Unit, the Immigration Police, and the Border Police.(1)
The Ministry of Social Solidarity (MSS)	Enforce laws related to child labor. Receive referrals from agencies responsible for conducting child labor investigations and provide child victims with appropriate support services.(1) Maintain at least one technical officer in each of the country's 13 districts and two child protection officers in each of the 65 subdistricts, all trained to follow the Government's standard operating procedures.(11, 25, 26)

† Data are from January 1, 2015 to October 31, 2015.

The Secretariat of State for Professional Training and Employment Policy (SEPFOPE) lacks the financial and human resources necessary to effectively enforce child labor laws throughout the country. In 2015, the budget allocated for the labor inspectorate decreased, and the both the ILO and SEPFOPE noted that the number of inspectors is insufficient.(14, 22, 27) The majority of inspectors are based in Dili, and, therefore, inadequate transportation outside the capital city limits the Inspectorate's ability to conduct inspections in outlying districts.(14) Despite these challenges, the Labor Inspectorate significantly increased the number of labor inspections conducted during the year, compared with 2014.(22) If children are identified in child labor situations, inspectors may refer them to the Ministry of Social Solidarity (MSS) for support services.(1, 14, 26) During the reporting period, two labor inspectors attended refresher training courses on child labor and forced labor.(22)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Timor-Leste took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the Vulnerable Persons Unit of the Timor-Leste National Police (PNTL) had a staff of 89 investigators charged with the enforcement of criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(22) During the reporting period, a local NGO provided government-funded human trafficking training for 152 members of the border police. Two members of the PNTL also participated in a course on human trafficking and child exploitation at the International Law Enforcement Academy in Bangkok, Thailand.(9) The overall budget for the PNTL was $28 million, but research indicates that the agency continues to face challenges in carrying out investigations due to limited funding and human resources.(22)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission against Child Labor (NCCL)	Facilitate information sharing on child labor issues among government agencies and serve as the overall coordinating mechanism for filing and responding to child labor complaints.(14) Develop child labor policies, raise awareness, and contribute to efforts to ratify and implement international conventions related to child protection.(1) SEPFOPE will serve as the Technical Secretariat of NCCL for a 3-year term. Comprises representatives from 23 additional members, including the Ministries of Education, Agriculture, Finance, Justice, Health, Social Solidarity, and Public Works; Trade Unions Confederation; the Chamber of Commerce and Industry; and Eyes on Human Rights Forum (Tau Matan).(14) In 2015, conducted awareness-raising activities throughout the municipalities to educate employer, worker and civil society organizations and school directors on child labor and forced labor concepts and laws.(28)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The Inter-Agency Trafficking Working Group	Coordinate the Government's efforts to combat human trafficking, develop a national action plan against human trafficking, and promote the development of comprehensive anti-trafficking legislation. Chaired by the Ministry of Justice, with participation from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation, the MSS, Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Interior, the Secretary of State for the Promotion of Equality, SEPFPOE, the PNTL, the Prosecutor General's Office, and the Public Defender's Office.(26)

The Inter-Agency Trafficking Working Group was not active in 2015; however, at the end of the reporting period, consensus determined that the group would begin meeting again in 2016, chaired by the Ministry of Justice.(24, 25)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Timor-Leste has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Timor-Leste Project for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Aims to strengthen implementation of ILO C. 182 by establishing the Child Labor Commission Working Group, developing a national list of work deemed hazardous and prohibited for children, and developing a national action plan against child labor. Launched in 2009 in partnership with the ILO and the Government of Brazil.(14)
The Timor-Leste Strategic Development Plan (2011–2030)	Provides short-term and long-term plans for the nation's development, including the eradication of the worst forms of child labor, poverty alleviation, and implementation of social transfer programs. (1, 29) Specifies commitments to improve the educational system over the next 20 years, including addressing gender parity in primary schools and preventing school dropouts.(29, 30)
National Education Strategic Plan (2011–2030)*	Identifies three strategic priority areas for national education reform: (1) access, including enrollment and retention, (2) quality, and (3) management. Includes specific strategies and activities to promote equal access to 9 years of basic education for all children, including building and renovating schools and instituting social inclusion tools, especially to promote education for girls.(31)
Child and Family Welfare System Policy*	Develops a framework to strengthen the social protection system for children and their families in Timor-Leste. Focuses on providing support services to children in vulnerable situations, including those living in poverty and those at risk of abuse, violence, neglect, or exploitation.(12, 32)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In 2015, the National Commission against Child Labor continued drafting the National Action Plan Against Child Labor, a process which has been ongoing since 2011. At the close of the reporting period, the Action Plan was not finalized.(8, 25, 33) In addition, the Council of Ministers did not approve the draft National Plan of Action on Trafficking in Persons during the reporting period.(8, 25, 26)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Timor-Leste funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Timor-Leste.(34) In June 2015, held a workshop with relevant government agencies to initiate the design of a national child labor and forced labor survey.(21)
Child Labor Education and Outreach Program†	The SEPFPOE and the NCCL education and awareness-raising program targeted at children in five primary schools in Dili who have been identified as at risk for involvement in child labor.(14) In 2015, reached over 500 students in two municipalities outside Dili.(25)

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Togo

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Togo made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Togo adopted a revised Penal Code that increased penalties for human trafficking violations and established penalties for the worst forms of child labor violations. Additionally, the National Committee for the Reception and Social Reinsertion of Trafficked Children officially endorsed a Protective Policy Document on Child Domestic Work and launched programs to assist vulnerable children and improve access to education. However, children in Togo are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Government has not devoted sufficient resources to combat child labor, and enforcement of laws related to child labor remains weak. In addition, Togo's social programs to combat the worst forms of child labor do not match the scope of the problem and rely largely on NGOs and international organizations for implementation.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Togo are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Togo.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	35.7 (616,132)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	85.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	35.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		85.1

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Working in agriculture, including exposure to pesticides,* harvesting cotton,* cocoa,* and coffee* (4, 7, 9, 11) Raising* and herding* cattle*† (3, 4)
Industry	Working in quarries and sand mines, including excavating,* crushing rocks,* sifting gravel,* and carrying heavy loads*† (1, 4, 10, 14-16) Working in carpentry* and tailoring* (17) Construction, activities unknown (1, 11, 18)
Services	Domestic work† (1, 5, 6, 8-12, 16, 18, 19) Carrying heavy loads and small-scale vending in markets (1, 3, 4, 9-11, 16, 18) Begging*† (3) Operating motorcycle taxis,* auto and motorcycle repair* (1, 17, 18) Garbage scavenging* (1, 18)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced begging* (2, 4) Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-4, 11, 16, 18) Forced labor in agriculture, domestic work, quarries,* and markets, including carrying heavy loads, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2-4, 12, 20)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some boys, known as talibés, are sent to Koranic schools for education and subsequently forced by their teachers to beg in the streets.(2, 4, 21) Children were also victims of human trafficking to neighboring countries, although the majority of child trafficking victims were exploited within the country.(2, 3, 11, 12, 19, 20, 22) The customary practice of confiage, which involves sending a child to a relative or friend to attend school in a larger town or city, may place children at risk of exploitation by internal human trafficking.(4, 9, 11, 16) Parents are often complicit in child trafficking as a result of confiage, and many traditional chiefs and leaders do not discourage the practice.(12, 20)

Research found that many children in Togo are unable to access education due to a lack of schools and teachers, particularly in rural areas.(9, 23) During the 2014–2015 academic year, prolonged strikes prevented students at the primary and secondary levels from attending school for approximately 2 months.(24) Although education is free and compulsory by law, parents are responsible for paying associated fees and buying uniforms and school supplies, which makes education prohibitive to many families.(23, 25, 26) Approximately 20 percent of all children in Togo are not registered at birth due to the high cost, inaccessibility of registration centers, and the lack of awareness of its importance.(9, 20, 25, 27-29) Unable to prove their citizenship, nonregistered children are vulnerable to human trafficking and may have difficulty obtaining an education.(6, 9, 30) Research also found that children face widespread physical and sexual abuse in school.(9, 31, 32)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In November 2015, the Government adopted a revision of the Penal Code that extended anti-human trafficking protection to adult victims, and significantly increased penalties for violators, ranging from 10 to 20 years in prison and fines ranging from $43,320 to $173,310 if the victim is a child.(20) The revision also established penalties ranging from 5 to 10 years in prison and fines ranging from $8,250 to $33,000 for the worst forms of child labor as defined by the Labor Code.(18) Order N° 1464 MTEFP/DGTLs Determining the Work Prohibited to Children sets the minimum age for employment in most hazardous activities at 18, with two exceptions. Children ages 16 and 17 may operate pulleys and winches, and girls ages 16 and 17 may be employed in external displays in stores, both of which may make children vulnerable to exploitative child labor.(36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment and Social Security (MOL)	Enforce all labor laws, including child labor laws.(11) The Unit to Combat Child Labor (CELTE) in the MOL is responsible for withdrawing children from child labor situations, raising awareness, and collecting data.(4)
Ministry of Justice and Government Relations	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking.(20, 21) The Anti-Trafficking Cell serves as a resource for law enforcement agencies combating child trafficking and collects information from prosecutors as part of Togo's annual report to ECOWAS.(20)
Ministry of Social Action, Promotion of Women and Literacy (MASPFA)	Raise awareness, enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor, and act as the lead on human trafficking issues.(14, 20, 25) Provide technical assistance to regional and prefectural offices. The Directorate General for Child Protection in MASPFA designs, coordinates, and evaluates the Government's child protection efforts. The Directorate also raises awareness about children's rights and educates parents to ensure their children's well-being.(11, 40) Operate the Allo 1011 hotline for reporting child abuse, including child trafficking.(2, 9, 11, 18, 40)
Child Protection Brigades	Investigate crimes involving child victims, including child trafficking. Present in all five regions of Togo and operates as part of the National Police.(14, 41)
National Commission of Human Rights	Receive complaints of human rights abuses, including the violation of children's rights and forward such complaints to the children's court.(25, 42)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Togo took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

The Labor Code makes labor inspectors responsible for reconciliation and arbitration in collective disputes, which may detract from their primary duties of conducting inspections and enforcing the Labor Code.(33, 43) Both NGOs and the Ministry of Labor (MOL) believe that the current number of labor inspectors is insufficient, despite the increase of 23 inspectors since 2014 and an additional 31 inspectors who are in the final stages of training at the National Administration School.(7, 18)

The MOL also acknowledges that it lacks resources for transportation, which hinders its ability to conduct investigations; however, it was able to carry out some inspections through site visits in 2015, although these primarily focused on the formal sector in urban areas, which excludes the majority of working children.(18, 20, 25, 26, 44) The National Committee for the Reception and Social Reinsertion of Trafficked Children (CNARSEVT) coordinates with the police and other agencies to refer child victims to shelters for assistance, including victims who were returned from abroad.(2, 7, 14) It is unknown how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of calls to the Allo 1011 hotline.(18)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Togo took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

Inspectors and law enforcement officials often lack the necessary resources and skills to effectively enforce the law. Research also indicates that some law enforcement officials in regional offices do not have copies of existing child labor laws.(4, 14, 17, 25)

Research indicates that it is rare for cases involving child trafficking to be heard in court because prosecutors often have difficulty gathering evidence. Judges may be reluctant to impose fines or prison sentences for parents due to a fear of perpetuating the poverty that originally led them to violate child trafficking laws.(9, 18, 20) In December 2015, the Government repatriated 20 victims of child trafficking who had been sent to Gabon for forced labor.(20)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Reception and Social Reinsertion of Trafficked Children (CNARSEVT)	Serve as the primary focal coordinating agency for child trafficking issues, maintaining a presence in all regions, prefectures, and villages.(11, 14, 26, 45, 46) Compile information and statistics on trafficking, raise awareness of child trafficking issues, and coordinate actions against the worst forms of child labor.(20) MOL's CELTE functions as the CNARSEVT's secretariat.(11) In 2015, officially endorsed the Protective Policy Document on Child Domestic Work, which will be integrated into the National Action Plan on Child Labor. Recommendations in the document include passing a decree to allow labor inspectors access to households or a decree to protect child domestic workers.(47, 48)
National Steering Committee for the Prohibition and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CDN)	Led by the CELTE, the CDN includes 13 ministries, NGOs, and private sector organizations combating child labor. Coordinate and oversee all government efforts to combat child labor, including the approval of all action plans for the abolition of child labor.(11, 14) Raise awareness, promote child labor legislation, and collect data.(4)
Local Vigilance Committees	Child Protection Committees and Local Committees Against Child Trafficking located throughout Togo to raise awareness at the community level. Committees identify child victims or children at risk, and share information on human trafficking trends and prevention efforts with the MASPFA, which enforces laws regarding child labor.(7, 11, 20)

In 2015, an overall lack of funds hindered efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor and record keeping was inadequate in many government agencies.(20) The Unit to Combat Child Labor (CELTE) and the CNARSEVT had limited ability to carry out activities due to limited funding and were unable to fulfill their coordination role as a result.(29) Although some Local Vigilance Committees were very active during the reporting period, those that lacked regular engagement with the Government were less effective.(20)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Togo has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Child Labor (2012–2015)	Served as the primary government policy instrument to prevent and eliminate child labor in Togo.(14, 49)
National Strategy on Elimination of Child Labor Through Education, Training, and Apprenticeship	Aims to reduce child labor through education, training, and apprenticeship.(50)
National Employment Policy (2013–2017)	Aims to eliminate child labor, build the capacity of the labor inspectorate, and increase vocational training and apprenticeship opportunities in support of the Decent Work Program.(16, 51, 52) Includes a pilot cash transfer program for 8,000 vulnerable children.(51) The accompanying Strategic Plan on Youth Employment (PSNEJ) aims to maintain children in the education system and reduce their early entry into the labor force by improving the employability of youth and their access to funding.(16, 52, 53)
National Plan of Action on Child Trafficking	Improves services for victims of child trafficking and conducts awareness-raising activities for local communities and border officials.(4) Promotes the education of children and improvement of livelihoods for families, and calls for the establishment of structures to monitor the trafficking of children.(54)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan on Child Labor (2012–2015)	With 14 other ECOWAS countries, implemented a regional action plan on child labor, especially its worst forms. Aimed to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015 and continue progress toward the total elimination of child labor.(55, 56)

Policy	Description
Bilateral and Multilateral Agreements to Combat Child Trafficking	Quadripartite Agreement among the Governments of Benin, Ghana, Niger, and Togo works to prevent child trafficking along the countries' shared borders, and facilitate the repatriation of trafficked children and the extradition of traffickers.(11, 20, 46) Multilateral accords for West and Central Africa promote cooperation among regional states to combat child trafficking.(11, 20)
Strategy to Increase Growth and Promote Employment (SCAPE) (2013–2017)	Serves as the primary national anti-poverty plan, which includes components on child labor and education.(11, 14, 57)
Education Sector Plan (2010–2020)*	Aims to achieve universal quality primary education by 2020 through the elimination of school fees, improving educational quality, providing school meals, providing school kits to impoverished families, and offering alternative educational opportunities.(11, 16) Aims to halve the illiteracy rate among people ages 15–45, with priority given to out-of-school youth ages 9–14, through the development of alternative models of non-formal education.(16)
Social Protection Policy of 2012	Aims to improve the employability of youth ages 15 to 17, prevent children from entering the labor force before the minimum working age, and promote decent work for youth. Aligned with SCAPE.(16)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Although numerous policies have been passed in the last 3 years, many have yet to be fully institutionalized, and only policy documents specific to labor and social protection include indicators related to child labor.(16)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Togo funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to eliminate child labor, improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research, and strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers.(58)
Cash Transfer Program for Vulnerable Children in Northern Togo (2013–2017)†	$2.55 million World Bank-funded, 5-year program implemented by the MASPFA that aims to prevent child labor and child trafficking in rural communities in Northern Togo by providing conditional cash transfers to high-risk families with young children.(18, 20, 59, 60) Participating families must attend training sessions and ensure that their children have birth certificates and attend school. Between September 2014 and October 2015, 8,918 beneficiaries in 121 villages in the Kara and Savanes region received 13 monthly transfers of $10 per month.(18, 20, 29, 51, 61) In 2015, the Government wholly funded 96 conditional cash transfers.(18)
Forum of Traditional and Religious Chiefs of Togo on the Harmful Social and Cultural Practices That Affect Children†	MASPFA-funded program that educates local leaders on child labor issues and the importance of education through training workshops at the community level.(18, 20) Works to eliminate traditional practices that may contribute to child trafficking.(20)
Decent Work Program (2010–2015)	Promoted decent work conditions with a focus on creating job opportunities for youth and extending social protection for all.(62)
Monitoring Children's Rights (2015–2018)*	$393,000 Plan-Sweden-funded, 3-year project implemented by Plan-Togo, the MASPFA, and four civil society organizations that aims to strengthen the institutional capacity of these organizations to better protect children in Benin, Burkina Faso, and Togo.(63, 64) This project supports SCAPE through the collection of information and the monitoring of vulnerable children.(65)
Shelters for Vulnerable Children†	MASPFA-funded centers that provide shelter and services for victims referred by the Allo 1011 hotline.(2, 20, 25, 40) The Tokoin Community Center temporarily shelters children until they are transferred to NGO-managed centers; a variety of NGOs provide legal, medical, and social services, and temporary housing and psychological care.(2, 20, 40)
National Fund for Inclusive Finance†	Government program that provides loans of up to approximately $60 to small groups of men and women for income-generating activities.(18, 66) Loans target villages in rural Northern Togo, with a secondary effect of reducing child labor.(18, 20)

Program	Description
Togo Community Development and Safety Nets Project (2012–2016)	$14 million World Bank-funded, 5-year program that aims to improve access to socioeconomic infrastructure and provide social safety nets for vulnerable populations.(67)
National School Feeding Program (2014–2022)†	Ministry of Primary and Secondary Education and Professional Training; Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry, and Water; and World Bank-funded program that aims to improve access to education, particularly for girls, and increase retention rates by providing free school lunches.(68) Aligned with the Education Sector Plan.(16)
National Plan for Registering Births in Togo (2013–2017)†	Aims to increase documentation of births by simplifying the process, educating families on the importance of birth registration, and increasing accessibility to birth registration in rural areas.(45, 69)
Education and Institutional Strengthening Project 2 (2015–2018)*	$27.8 million World Bank-funded 3-year program that aims to improve the quality of teaching and learning in primary schools, and strengthen access to primary education, particularly in areas with poor educational infrastructure.(23, 70)
Gender-Sensitive and Violence-Free Education	Plan International Togo and Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency-funded, 3.5-year project that aims to reduce violence in schools by eliminating corporal punishment and promoting children's rights in the Central and Plateau regions.(32) In 2015, developed community charters for the promotion of education and the protection of children against abuse.(71)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Togo.

Although Togo has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(9, 26) Many programs rely largely on NGOs and international organizations for implementation. As a result, many of these interventions may not be sustainable over the long term.(20)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Tonga made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Although research is limited, there is evidence that children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work. Gaps in the legal framework remain; the country has no laws specifying a minimum age for work or defining hazardous forms of work for children under age 18, leaving children unprotected from labor exploitation. The Government has not established a coordinating mechanism, policy, or program to address child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Tonga are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Tonga. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Tonga has ratified one key international convention concerning child labor (Table 3).

Tonga has not established a minimum age for work or for hazardous work, nor has it been determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.

Tonga's law prohibiting child trafficking is insufficient because it does not specifically prohibit trafficking children domestically.(6) The law also does not criminally prohibit forced labor, debt bondage and slavery unless they also involve trafficking.(1, 6)

While the Criminal Offences Act prohibits the procurement of women and girls under age 21 for prostitution, the Act does not criminalize procurement of boys for prostitution.(8) While the Criminal Offences Act prohibits distributing, publishing, producing, and possessing child pornography of children under age 14, the Act does not prohibit the use, procurement, and offering of children for the production of pornography and for pornographic performances.(7)

According to the Criminal Offences Act, a child can be deemed an "involuntary agent" if that child is used to conduct illegal activities; however, the act does not specifically prohibit using children in illicit activities, particularly for producing and trafficking drugs.(8, 11)

The Education Act 2013 does not guarantee free primary education for all children; however, the Tonga Education Policy Framework provides free education to all children between the ages of 6 and 14.(12)

The Government has drafted an Employment Relations Bill that would establish a minimum age for nonhazardous and hazardous work and prohibit the categorical worst forms of child labor.(13-15) The parliament has yet to pass the Bill.(15)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence of programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Tunisia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Tunisia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted and began implementation of the Child Labor National Action Plan (2015-2020), participated in the Global Research Project on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development, and engaged in discussions about conducting a national child labor survey. However, children in Tunisia are engaged in child labor, including in street work, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work as a result of human trafficking. The number of children dropping out of school, which may make them vulnerable to child labor, remains high. The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are engaged in work in the informal sector, and the Government has not enacted a law prohibiting child trafficking.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Tunisia are engaged in child labor, including in street work.(1-5) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work as a result of human trafficking.(4-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Tunisia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	3.0 (50,364)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking* (4, 6)
	Use in illicit activities, including smuggling and drug trafficking (4, 6, 14)
	Forced labor in seasonal agriculture,* activities unknown (5)
	Domestic work and begging,* each as a result of human trafficking (4-6)
	Recruitment for use in armed conflict by non-state armed groups (16-18)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The Government declared Ansar al-Sharia a terrorist organization in 2013.(16, 19, 20) In 2015, Ansar al-Sharia recruited school-age children, sometimes by setting up preaching tents on school campuses, leading some students to withdraw from school to join the group.(16-18) These children may be vulnerable to becoming child soldiers.

Child labor, including begging, has become more pervasive and visible in Tunisia since the January 2011 revolution.(2, 9, 11) Children are engaged in child labor in the informal sector, predominantly in seasonal agriculture, smuggling, drug trafficking, domestic work, handicraft work, street vending, and garbage scavenging.(5, 14) The Child Labor National Action Plan estimates that 80 percent of children do not receive remuneration for their work.(14) Child migrants from sub-Saharan countries and those fleeing conflict in Libya and Syria, as well as young girls from Tunisia's northwest region, are particularly vulnerable to human trafficking.(4, 6)

Based on one study, fifty percent of child domestic workers from Bizerte and 93 percent from Jendouba dropped out of school.(12) Approximately 62 percent of families in Bizerte and 30 percent of families in Jendouba, respectively, use unlicensed intermediaries to place children as domestic workers; however, in nearly 10 percent of the cases, children are placed in homes in which older sisters are already working.(12) None of the children interviewed had employment contracts, and reports show that these children work long hours.(12) Fifty percent of the children are victims of violence or harassment, either from employers or family members, and 70 percent claimed to have occupational health issues.(12)

Approximately 100,000 children, particularly those from rural and remote areas, have dropped out of school every year since 2011.(9, 21-23) Dropouts are largely found working in agriculture, which disproportionately affects children from families with a large number of children. Child dropouts were also found working in illicit activities and in street work.(9) Direct causes of the increasing dropout rates are household poverty, religious customs, and recruitment for violent extremism.(3, 9, 12, 16, 17, 21) Girls in Tunisia face additional barriers to education, including limited transportation options, security concerns while commuting, and parents prioritizing boys' education.(12, 18, 21, 24, 25) Moreover, schools lack resources to accommodate children with disabilities.(26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Affairs (MSA)	Carry out labor inspections.(27) Monitor compliance with the minimum age laws by examining the records of employees.(5) Maintain a database of human trafficking victims and work with the Ministry of Justice to ensure that victims of human trafficking are not prosecuted for trafficking crimes.(37) Coordinate with the Ministry of Health to provide full and free medical care to human trafficking victims.(31)
Ministry of Education	Collaborate with the MSA to identify children vulnerable to child labor.(5)
National Police's Child Protection Service	Address the commercial sexual exploitation of children through prevention and investigation.(38)
Ministry of the Interior	In the cases of child labor complaints that are not covered by the labor inspectorate's mandate, including complaints in the informal sector, the Ministry is responsible for investigating the complaint as a criminal violation.(14) Its Crisis Unit aims to prevent terrorist groups from recruiting children.(6)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Tunisia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the labor inspectorate of the Ministry of Social Affairs (MSA) employed 347 inspectors, including 176 women. The Government reports that the number of labor inspectors was not adequate to meet its target goal of 30,000 inspections of the formal economy.⁽¹⁴⁾ The labor inspectorate also needs more vehicles and fuel, particularly to conduct inspections in remote areas of the country.⁽¹⁴⁾

Since 2014, the labor inspectorate has provided comprehensive training, including training on child labor, to 25 new inspectors. Labor inspectors conducted 2,367 inspections through visits, with 367 of those taking place at worksites.⁽¹⁴⁾ Inspections conducted during the reporting period identified 1,601 children engaged in child labor and 61 child labor violations. The labor inspectorate did not remove any of these children; however, inspectors issued citations in these cases, which usually require only administrative corrections.⁽¹⁴⁾

Government ministries that receive child labor complaints direct them to the point of contact at the MSA, who is responsible for alerting the labor inspectorate. The labor inspectorate conducts expedited inspections on complaints of child labor.⁽¹⁴⁾ Although a formal referral mechanism between criminal authorities and social services does not exist, the Ministry of the Interior, the MSA, and the Ministry of Women, Family, and Childhood's Delegate for the Protection of Children coordinate informally to refer children to social services.^(14, 31)

The Labor Code authorizes labor inspectors to make unannounced inspections in industry, commerce, and agriculture sectors.⁽²⁷⁾ However, inspectors cannot inspect sites in the informal sector, including in private homes, without permission from the owner of the property or a court order.⁽¹⁴⁾ Although social workers are allowed to access private homes in which the head of the household has declared a domestic worker, in practice, many child domestic workers are not declared.^(6, 28, 31, 38)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Tunisia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2015, some law enforcement personnel received training on trafficking in persons, including UNODC training for the Interagency Anti-Trafficking in Persons Committee; UNODC and the Higher Institute of the Judiciary training to National Guard officers in Tunis on both trafficking in persons and migrant smuggling; and Superior Magistrate Institute, UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, and IOM training for 160 magistrates and judges. Additionally, some of the Government's law enforcement, immigration, and social services personnel received training on best practices for identifying victims of trafficking among high-risk populations.⁽³¹⁾ However, the Government reports that adequate training was not available to all agents due to the lack of sufficient resources.⁽¹⁴⁾ Enforcement agencies do not effectively distinguish between human smuggling and human trafficking, which has hindered the Government's ability to investigate human trafficking offenses, convict offenders, and identify victims.(42)

The Ministry of the Interior investigated 41 cases of children engaged in forced begging.(41) Although victims of human trafficking are referred to social services, it is unknown if referrals included victims of other criminal violations of child labor laws.(31)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee for the Implementation of the Child Labor National Action Plan	Coordinate efforts to combat child labor. Led by the MSA, members include the Ministries of Interior; Social Affairs; Justice; Women, Family, and Childhood; Education; and Vocational Training and Employment; as well as the General Union of Tunisian Labor; the Tunisian Employers Union of Industry Trade and Handicrafts; and the Tunisian Union of Farmers and Fishermen. Supported by the ILO.(14, 39, 43, 44) In 2015, this body convened all national stakeholders to draft and adopt the Child Labor National Action Plan. The steering committee is responsible for fully implementing this plan and continuing coordination with relevant stakeholders on existing efforts to combat child labor.(14)
Interagency Anti-Trafficking in Persons Committee	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking, raise awareness, and follow up on the enactment of the draft law to prohibit trafficking in persons. Comprised of representatives of trafficking in persons points of contact from relevant ministries, including the Ministries of National Defense; Transportation; Economy and Finance; Social Affairs; and Education, as well as civil society experts. Met four times during the reporting period to revise the National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons.(11, 31, 42)
Inter-Ministerial Working Group To Combat Human Trafficking	Coordinate anti-human trafficking policy; share information and best practices. Chaired by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, representatives from the Ministries of Interior; Justice; Women, Families, and Childhood; Culture; Education; Social Affairs; Vocational Training and Employment; Defense; Health; and Religious Affairs are also members.(31, 45) In 2015, met four times to draft the National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons. Invited representatives of international organizations and local civil society groups to participate in these meetings.(31)
UNICEF	Support the Government's prevention and assistance programs for children, including some victims of child labor.(14)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Tunisia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Child Labor National Action Plan (2015–2020)†	Aims to achieve this goal by raising awareness, building the capacity of stakeholders, and encouraging action from the NGOs and the public. In 2015, the National Steering Committee for the Implementation of the Child Labor National Action Plan drafted and adopted this plan, which outlines a strategic framework with the goal of eliminating child labor in Tunisia by 2020.(14, 38, 43)
Action Plan of the Country Program (2015–2019)	Decreases dropout rates and improve education quality and access to early education, teach life skills to adolescents, and improve access to information in order to improve child protection against violence and economic exploitation.(46, 47)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2015–2017)	Mandates passing the draft anti-human trafficking bill; building capacity of civil society to address human trafficking; boosting public awareness of human trafficking; and training police, customs, and penitentiary officials in identifying victims of human trafficking.(37, 48) Revised by the Interagency Anti-Trafficking in Persons Committee in 2015, the Government began implementing the plan in 2014.(31, 38)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Tunisia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)*	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Tunisia, to increase the knowledge base of child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity of the Government to conduct research in this area. The MAP project is engaging in discussions with the MSA and the National Statistical Office of Tunisia about conducting a national child labor survey.(14, 49)
MSA Services for Victims of Human Trafficking†	Provide victims of human trafficking with lodging, food, clothing, and psychological services. Unaccompanied child victims were eligible to receive aforementioned services, in addition to schooling, in dedicated centers for minors.(31)
Taking Action Against Child Domestic Labor in Africa and the Countries of the Union for the Mediterranean (2011–2015)	$1.3 million Government of France–funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO-IPEC to combat child domestic labor.(50)
Support Efforts to Combat Human Trafficking (2014–2017)	USDOS-funded 3-year project implemented by IOM to carry out anti-human trafficking activities in collaboration with the Ministries of Justice; Interior; Social Affairs; and Women, Family, and Childhood. Includes three objectives: 1) build the capacity of relevant institutions and agencies to identify and assist victims of trafficking based on their individual needs, 2) strengthen cross-sector cooperation and the sharing of information through the implementation of a national referral mechanism, and 3) conduct an awareness-raising campaign to keep children in school and discourage illegal migration that could lead to human trafficking.(38)
Centers for Social Defense and Integration	Nineteen centers provide assistance to children who are homeless, have had trouble with the law, dropped out of school, or experienced domestic trauma.(14)
Centers for Social Protection	Provide material and moral support to vulnerable children.(14)
Universal Primary Education	UNICEF-funded program supported by the Government that promotes quality education with a goal of achieving universal primary enrollment.(51)
School Drop-Out Prevention Program†	Ministry of Education program that maintains over 2,300 social protection units in schools and mobile units in rural areas to monitor students and prevent school dropout.(52)
Social and Educative Centers	Develop educational programs and activities for at-risk children.(14)
Assistance to Needy Families†	MSA program that provides support to poor families and children through cash transfer and access to health care to ensure school attendance.(51, 53)
National School Feeding Program†	UN-funded program that provides technical support to the Ministry of Education to create and implement a national school feeding program. Provides improved access to education and aims to reduce dropout rates in all public primary schools. The Memorandum of Understanding between the Ministry of Education and WFP was signed in January 2014.(54)
Trade Apprenticeship†	Government program that provides wage earning and trade apprenticeships to youth between the ages of 15 to 20, as an alternative to exploitative child labor.(55)
Shelters for Street Children†	Government-operated shelters to serve children at risk of human trafficking.(42)
Child Protection and Youth Center Network†	Government program that maintains 21 youth centers and 67 child protection institutions that are able to serve up to 6,000 children engaged in or at risk of child labor.(38, 52)
Shelters for Victims of Human Trafficking†	MSA-operated shelters for victims of human trafficking.(37) Services include lodging, food, clothing, psychological services, legal aid through a network of pro bono lawyers, and free medical care in collaboration with the Ministry of Health. Unaccompanied child victims are placed in dedicated centers for minors, where they receive schooling in addition to the same services offered to adults.(45)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Tunisia.

Although Tunisia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(14)

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Turkey made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government implemented a project in cooperation with the ILO that provided services to more than 1,000 children working in commercial hazelnut production and amended the Labor Law to provide protections for children working in the arts and commercial advertising. However, children in Turkey are engaged in child labor in street work and mobile seasonal work in agriculture. The Government does not have laws that protect children working in agricultural enterprises employing fewer than 50 workers. Although the Government took important steps to increase Syrian refugee children's access to education and other services nationwide, many Syrian refugee children in urban areas of Turkey had low or no access to education and other social services, leaving significant numbers at increased risk of exploitation in the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Turkey are engaged in child labor, including in street work and mobile seasonal work in agriculture.(1-27) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Turkey.

Agriculture	Production of cotton, hazelnuts, citrus fruits, sugar beets, cumin, peanuts, pulses, apricots,* melons,* and cherries* (1-17, 26, 27)
Industry	Production of furniture, bricks,* shoes,* leather goods,* and textiles* (11, 13, 19, 21-23, 26, 30-35) Auto repair*† (11, 13, 21) Mining*† (12, 36)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

A range of sources reported an increase in child labor in Turkey in 2015, primarily as a result of the growing number of Syrian refugees in the country, more than 2.5 million of whom had relocated to Turkey by the end of the reporting period.(12) Poverty in the refugee community and a lack of legal employment opportunities caused some parents to rely on children as major or primary contributors to the family income, making these children extremely vulnerable to child labor.(20, 44, 45) Some refugee children may be subject to a range of abuses, including child labor, sexual exploitation, human trafficking, and begging.(24, 44, 46, 47) Monitoring and collecting data on child labor in refugee communities remained a challenge, and NGOs in Turkey reported difficulty in conducting independent research on the conditions of Syrian refugees, including children.(12)

Due to the seasonal nature of agricultural work throughout the country, farmworkers often migrate with their families for up to seven months of the year. Significant numbers of children engaged in seasonal agricultural work, as well as children whose parents are seasonal migrant workers, may have limited access to health care and education.(1, 5, 8, 9, 14, 21, 30) Research found that children of Syrian refugee families were particularly vulnerable to exploitation in this sector and tended to receive lower pay and live in worse conditions than Turkish workers.(14)

Evidence suggests that the number of child laborers involved in manufacturing has considerably declined over the past decade. However, in 2015 there were increased reports of children, particularly Syrian refugees, engaged in manufacturing work such as the production of shoes, furniture, and textiles.(12, 13, 23, 31, 34, 35) Children engaged in child labor in the manufacturing sector often work long hours and earn wages as little as half of what an employer would pay an adult.(23, 31, 35)

Some children have been reportedly recruited by Kurdish terrorist groups that have been fighting in Turkey for nearly three decades. A ceasefire in place since March 2013 broke down in July 2015, leading to an escalating cycle of conflict between the Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK) and its affiliates and Turkish security forces that continued at year's end.(48) Government and media reports indicated that the recruitment and use of children under age 18 continued in 2015.(40-43) Research did not find a reliable estimate of the current number of child soldiers in Kurdish terrorist groups.

The Government of Turkey continued to make significant progress in educating hundreds of thousands of Syrian children, enrolling roughly 350,000 in formal education, a large increase over the year prior.(49) However, an estimated 650,000 Syrian refugee children are not formally enrolled in schools, including between 75 and 85 percent of Syrian children living in Turkish cities.(13, 35) The Government has taken several important steps to increase Syrian refugee children's access to education. These have included, among others, opening the Turkish public school system to Syrian children with government-issued IDs, lifting residency permit requirements for children to register in school, providing stipends to Arabic-language teachers for Syrian children, and accrediting a system of temporary education centers that offer a Syrian curriculum.(12, 13) As a result of these efforts, approximately 90 percent of school-aged Syrian children living in refugee camps regularly attend school.(13) However, the barriers to education access for the 85 percent of Syrian refugee children who live in urban areas remain significant. Some schools for Syrian children charge tuition fees or transportation costs that many families are unable to afford.(13, 19, 35) Many Syrian children struggle with integrating into Turkish schools due to the language barrier and do not have access to accelerated Turkish language programs.(13) Many families have not received sufficient information on how to enroll their children in Turkish schools, and some schools refuse entry to Syrian children despite national directives requiring that Syrian children be provided with education.(13)

‡ Age calculated based on available information

In April 2015, Article 71 of the Labor Law was reportedly amended to institute regulations for children’s work under the age of 15 in arts, culture, and commercial advertising. The amendment reportedly requires that children under age 15 working in these sectors receive permission from both a guardian and the MoLSS, and specifies acceptable conditions of work.(12)

As stated in Article 4 of the Labor Law, the provisions of the Labor Law do not apply to children working in agricultural enterprises employing 50 or fewer workers.(50) This gap in the law leaves children vulnerable to exploitative conditions without legal protection.(21, 27)

Although the Penal Code prohibits the use of another person in the commission of a crime, and the production and trafficking of drugs is criminally prohibited, the law does not explicitly prohibit the use or procuring of children for the production and trafficking and drugs.(59)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

* The Government does not make this information publicly available.

† Data are from January 1, 2014 to September 31, 2014.

In 2015, the number of labor inspectors authorized to conduct inspections remained insufficient. According to the ILO's recommendation of one labor inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Turkey should employ approximately 1,960 labor inspectors to fully enforce the country's labor laws.(49, 60, 61) The Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOLSS) in 2015 initiated a recruitment drive to hire additional inspectors. The impact of the recruitment drive, which continued after the end of the reporting period, should be clearer in 2016.(12) Labor inspectors spend the first 3 years of their careers as assistant inspectors. They receive on-the-job training that includes modules to raise their awareness of child labor and of the legal provisions and enforcement mechanisms to address it.(57)

In 2015, employers who violated prohibitions were subject to administrative fines of approximately $400. Fine amounts are adjusted annually but are widely believed to be insufficient to deter violations.(12)

Although there is no formal referral mechanism, research found that children discovered to be in child labor situations during the course of inspections were referred for social services.(12, 57)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research found that the enforcement of laws against child trafficking, particularly pertaining to identification of victims, was insufficient.(24, 62) The Department for Protection of Victims of Human Trafficking, which assumed principal responsibility for identifying victims of human trafficking from the Police during the reporting period, reported an increase in number of identified victims in 2015. Of 108 victims identified in 2015, 26 were children.(40)

In 2015, the Government reported that 989 Directorate General for Migration Management (DGMM) employees and 880 police officers received training on issues related to trafficking in persons, including victim identification, provision of support to victims, and the legal framework on human trafficking.(40)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee (NSC) on child labor issues	Coordinate and monitor implementation of the Time-bound National Policy and Program Framework for the Prevention of Child Labor, including programs and projects initiated under the auspices of this framework.(12) Chaired by the MOLSS; includes senior government officials, workers, employers, and NGOs.(12)
Advisory Board on Child Labor Issues	Develop solutions for preventing child labor and ensure that institutions share information regarding their work on child labor. Chaired by MOLSS and composed of representatives from government ministries, workers' unions, employers' organizations, NGOs, and universities, as well as ILO and UNICEF representatives who participate as observers.(12)
Child Labor Branch of the Employment Policies Directorate within MOLSS	Coordinate all child labor programs and efforts of the Ministry of Education, the Child Services Directorate General in MFSP, the Ministry of the Interior, the Ministry of Justice, and NGOs.(12)
The Child Services Directorate General Within MFSP	Coordinate services for children living and working on the streets.(12)
Directorate General for Migration Management (DGMM)	Coordinate the implementation of migration law, including laws related to irregular migration, refugees, and human trafficking.(63, 64)
National Task Force on Combating Human Trafficking	Coordinate policy on human trafficking. Chaired by the DGMM, which plans to transition the task force to a national commission under the Ministry of Interior.(24, 40)

The DGMM suffered from inadequate capacity in 2014, its first year of functioning.(63) During the reporting period, however, the DGMM took steps to develop its infrastructure and increase its capacity, including opening offices in each of Turkey's 81 provinces. The DGMM efficiently registered Syrian refugees through provincial offices, with an estimated 90 percent of Syrians registered by year's end.(33, 40)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Turkey has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Time-bound National Policy and Program Framework for the Prevention of Child Labor (2005–2015)	Aimed to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015. MOLSS, through the NSC, is the coordinating institution.(46) Prioritizes reducing poverty, improving the quality and accessibility of education, and increasing social awareness and sensitivity to child labor.(46) Priority target groups included children working on the streets, in heavy and dangerous work in small- and medium-sized enterprises, and in mobile and seasonal agricultural work, except in family businesses. Articulated objectives, indicators, outputs, target groups, activities, and responsibilities for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.(46) An updated policy for 2016 – 2023 is expected to be finalized in 2016.(12)
Second National Action Plan on Combating Human Trafficking	Outlines Turkey’s strategy for the prevention of human trafficking. Identifies children as an exceptionally vulnerable group and calls for special security precautions for children at shelters for victims and increased international cooperation on preventing child trafficking.(47, 65)
National Employment Strategy (2014–2023)	Aims to identify and solve labor market issues, with the goal of job creation and sustained economic growth. Includes the prevention of child labor, especially hazardous work in agriculture, as a focus of the plan, and advocates for increased access to education and strengthened social services as a means of preventing child labor.(66)
Tenth Development Plan (2014–2018)	Identifies Turkey’s strategy and goals for economic development. Includes the priorities of alleviating child poverty and increasing equal opportunity in education.(67) Includes provisions for the prevention of the worst forms of child labor.(57)
National Child Rights Strategic Document and Action Plan (2013–2017)	Sets out the framework and actions for promoting services for children in fields such as health care and education.(68) Includes a section addressing child labor issues.(44, 57)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Turkey funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Piloting the USDA Guidelines in the Hazelnut Supply Chain in Turkey*	USDOL-funded project implemented by the Fair Labor Association in partnership with Nestle and its main hazelnut suppliers in Turkey. Aims to pilot a sustainable program to implement the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s Guidelines for Eliminating Child and Forced Labor in Agricultural Supply Chains in 1,000 hazelnut plantations in Ordu and Sakarya, with a particular focus on preventing migrant children from entering into child labor in hazelnut production.(69)
Integrated Model for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Seasonal Agriculture in Hazelnut Harvesting (2012–2017)*	ILO and MOLSS-implemented project funded by the Association of Chocolate, Biscuit, and Confectionery Industries of Europe (CAOBISCO). Takes an integrated approach to preventing children from working by increasing access to education and improving living conditions of children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor in hazelnut harvesting; building capacity of local and national institutions to prevent child labor, and raising awareness of industry stakeholders and the public.(12) In 2015, the project provided 1,165 children with services. 202 families received individual or group counseling, and 719 children were transitioned from work to school and provided with clothing, school supplies, and school lunches. The project also engaged with local leadership and employers to raise awareness about the worst forms of child labor.(12)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research in Turkey.(70)
Conditional Education and Health Care Assistance Program†	Government program that aims to reduce poverty through cash transfers.(71) Requires children between ages 6 and 15 of participating families to regularly attend primary school.(72) Provides milk to all primary school children and distributes books free of charge.(73)
Shelters for Victims of Trafficking†	Government-funded, NGO-operated shelters for human trafficking victims in Ankara, Antalya, and Istanbul. Provides psychological, medical, and legal services to human trafficking victims.(47, 57)
Protecting Victims of Human Trafficking (2014–2016)	$1.9 million EU-funded project co-managed by the DGMM and the IOM. Focuses on improving the Government’s ability to identify victims of human trafficking through training and capacity-building.(40)

Program	Description
Project for Combating Human Trafficking and Organized Crimes	EU-funded project implemented by the DGMM and the International Center for Migration Policy Development. Provided basic training on human trafficking and data analysis to the DGMM and law enforcement through August 2014, and now focuses on improving victim identification and protection by strengthening national referral mechanisms.(40)
Improving Social Integration and Employability of Disadvantaged Persons†	$34 million project jointly funded by the EU and the Government of Turkey. Aims to address poverty, lack of education, unemployment, and housing problems for socially vulnerable and disadvantaged citizens through services and grants, including a specific allocation of grant funding for projects targeting the Roma population.(57, 74, 75) Includes the goal of combating child labor by supporting the entry of working children's parents into the labor market.(74, 75)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Turkey.

The Activation of Local Sources on Preventing Child Labor project, which was implemented from 2012–2014, provided services to more than 2,000 children at risk of entering child labor, and conducted direct interventions with almost 800 parents of working children.(57) The project was not implemented in 2015, leaving a major gap in Turkey's programming to address child labor. In 2015, the MOLSS proposed a second phase of the Activation of Local Sources on Preventing Child Labor project, which would take place in 2016-2018 and incorporate an expanded geographical scope and increased budget. Consideration of the proposal remained ongoing at year's end.(12)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
61. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Tuvalu made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government drafted a new Labor and Employment Relations Bill, which includes provisions to bring national legislation into alignment with international labor standards related to the worst forms of child labor. However, although research is limited and the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Tuvalu are engaged in child labor in fishing. Gaps remain in the Government's legislative framework. Children ages 15 through 17 are not protected from hazardous work and children are not adequately protected from commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, the Government has not collected data to determine the prevalence and nature of the worst forms of child labor in the country to inform policy and program development.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited and the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Tuvalu may be engaged in child labor in fishing. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Tuvalu. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		93.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(4)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Fishing,* activities unknown (1-3)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

Tuvalu lacks data to determine the prevalence and nature of child labor, including its worst forms, in the country.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Tuvalu has ratified one key international convention concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

During the reporting period, the Government of Tuvalu drafted a new Labor and Employment Relations Bill, which includes provisions to bring national legislation into compliance with international labor standards related to the worst forms of child labor.(12, 13) As it currently stands, Tuvalu’s Employment Act does not clearly establish 18 as the minimum age for hazardous work in accordance with international standards.

Tuvalu’s law does not adequately prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Although the Penal Code prohibits the procurement, use, and offering of girls under age 18 and boys under age 15 for prostitution, boys 15 through 17 are left unprotected.(7, 14) In addition, although pornography is illegal in Tuvalu and the Penal Code includes penalties for those who make, distribute, or possess obscene publications, it does not specifically address obscene publications featuring children, nor does it criminalize the use, procurement, or offering of a child for pornography or pornographic performances.(7, 15, 16) In addition, laws related to illicit activities are insufficient. The law criminalizes the procurement of children younger than 15 for unlawful and immoral purposes, but fails to criminalize the use, procurement, or offering of all children for the production and trafficking of drugs.(7)

Child trafficking is prohibited in Tuvalu; however, the law prescribes a harsher punishment for individuals involved in the trafficking of adults than for those involved in the trafficking of children.(9)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that law enforcement agencies in Tuvalu took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Information was not available on the specific amount of funds allocated for this purpose, although reports indicate that the Government does not have sufficient resources to formally monitor and enforce child labor laws.(13, 18)

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Tuvalu did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The National Advisory Committee on Children, chaired by the Ministry of Education, is responsible for coordinating general children's issues across government agencies. The Committee monitors and reports on the Government's efforts to fulfill its commitments under the UN CRC.(12) However, research found no evidence that the Committee functions as a coordinating mechanism to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Tuvalu has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Sustainable Development (Te Kekeega II) (2005–2015)*	Seeks to promote sustainable livelihoods by developing the private sector and promoting the effective use of public resources. Focuses on improving the access to and the quality of education for Tuvaluan children.(17, 19)
Tuvalu Education Strategic Plan II (2011–2015)*	Aims to enhance the quality of education at all levels, from early childhood through secondary, technical, and vocational education. Priority areas include improving curriculum and assessment measures, increasing student achievement, enhancing the quality and efficiency of management, developing human resources, and strengthening strategic partnerships.(20)
Education and Training Sector Master Plan*	Offers alternative education and training opportunities for children, especially those who have dropped out of school.(21) Implemented by the Ministry of Education.(16, 21)
Free Education Policy*	Establishes free education for children ages 6 through 13.(20-23) Free education in Tuvalu is not guaranteed by law.
National Youth Policy*†	Establishes a framework for youth engagement in national decision making processes, especially related to climate change.(24)
UNDAF for the Pacific Region (2013–2017)*	Promotes sustainable development and economic growth for vulnerable groups in 14 Pacific Island countries and territories: Cook Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, Fiji, Kiribati, Marshall Islands, Nauru, Niue, Palau, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu.(25) In Tuvalu, aims to increase children's access to health, education, and social protection systems.(26)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Tuvalu funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program	ILO-implemented program that aims to strengthen Tuvalu's labor laws, support the ratification of ILO C. 182, and improve labor market monitoring systems by collecting recent statistics on child labor. Seeks to improve labor market information and calls for the inclusion of child labor modules in planned household surveys.(27)
Education for All Program	Australian Government-funded program to improve access to quality education in Tuvalu. Objectives include increasing capacities in education planning and administration, teacher training, and early grade literacy.(23) Since 2012, has helped more than 18 vocational teachers throughout Tuvalu to graduate from the Australian Pacific Technical College in courses related to training and assessment, and to early childhood education.(23)
Community Post-Primary Vocational Programs†	Ministry of Education program that provides vocational training to children in the outer islands. Frequency of training sessions depends on the availability of trainers.(23)
High School Vocational Training Program†	Government-funded vocational training program at Motufoua Secondary School that provides Fiji National University-accredited vocational training to students starting at year 13.(23)

† Program is funded by the Government of Tuvalu.

In July 2015, Tuvalu participated in the ILO's Sub-Regional Skills and Livelihood Training for Older Out-Of-School Children in Child Labor or At Risk in the Pacific. The training focused on highlighting opportunities for skill development for children under 18 who are at risk for child labor, as well as identifying opportunities for mainstreaming skill development initiatives into existing social programs.(28) Research found no evidence of programs to specifically address child labor in the agricultural sector.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 10. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Uganda made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government introduced a bill to prohibit hazardous work for children and establish a minimum age for work of 16. The Government also trained more than 1,000 criminal law enforcement officers on issues related to the worst forms of child labor, approved a National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, and expanded its cash transfer program to allow more children to stay in school. However, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of tea and commercial sexual exploitation. Law enforcement agencies lack adequate funding, training, and resources to adequately enforce child labor laws. In addition, gaps in the legal framework persist, including the gap between the ages for compulsory education and minimum age for employment.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Uganda are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of tea and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Uganda.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Child trafficking is particularly common in the impoverished Karamoja region.(6, 29) These children are trafficked to towns in Eastern Uganda for animal herding and domestic work.(36) They are also trafficked and willingly migrate to Kampala where they engage in domestic work and begging, sometimes by force, and in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities.(5, 6, 20, 36) In some cases, Ugandan children have been trafficked to East African countries for commercial sexual exploitation and use in illicit activities. Children from Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Kenya, Rwanda, Tanzania, and South Sudan are subject to forced agricultural labor and commercial sexual exploitation in Uganda.(8)

Although the Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA) has not abducted children in Uganda to serve as soldiers since 2006, some Ugandan children remain captive with LRA elements in the DRC, Central African Republic, and South Sudan.(8)

Section 10(3)(a) of the Education Act calls for 7 years of free, compulsory education; however, school fees and the cost of school supplies are often prohibitive for families.(2, 37-39)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Uganda has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

Uganda has ratified the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa (Kampala Convention).(40) The Convention prohibits armed groups from recruiting children or allowing them to participate in conflict in any manner.(41)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

* No conscription (47)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (37)

In 2015, the Government introduced a bill to align the Children Act with existing laws that relate to child protection. The bill prohibits employment of a child in any activity harmful or hazardous to health, or physical, mental, spiritual, moral, or social development; and establishes a minimum age for work of 16.(48)

The law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation because the offering of a child for prostitution and the use, offering, and benefitting from a monetary or in-kind transaction involving the sexual exploitation of a child for the production of pornography and pornographic performances are not criminally prohibited.(49)

Section 10(3)(a) of the Education Act states that education is compulsory for children ages 6 and above and lasts for 7 years; however, the law leaves children age 13 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as children are not required to be in school nor are they legally permitted to work in areas other than light work.(37)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Gender, Labor, and Social Development (MGLSD)	Enforce labor laws throughout the country.(31) The Child Labor Unit works with partners to implement national awareness campaigns and serves as a resource to labor inspectors, including occupational safety and health inspectors.(50) The Industrial Court makes judgments on labor dispute cases, which are referred to the court by labor officers.(9)
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MIA)	Enforce criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.(51) The Uganda Police Force's Child and Family Protection Unit (CFPU) investigates forced labor cases, the Special Investigations Division and the Anti-Human Trafficking Desk investigate cases related to human trafficking and the use of children in illicit activities, and the Sexual Offenses Desk investigates commercial sexual exploitation.(9) Liaison officers handle child labor complaints and overall child protection issues at police posts that do not have a CFPU officer.(51) The Immigration Department assists in identifying potential human trafficking victims.(52)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Local Government	Oversee district labor officers who refer cases to the Industrial Court.(9) Deploy community development officers at the district level when district labor officers are not available.(31)
Directorate of Public Prosecutions in the Ministry of Justice and Constitutional Affairs	Prosecute criminal cases related to the worst forms of child labor that are referred by the Uganda Police Force.(50)

A report indicates that due to weak coordination among the various agencies responsible for child labor law enforcement, the Industrial Court heard few child labor cases during the reporting period. The Industrial Court, however, is advocating for the Ministry of Gender, Labor, and Social Development (MGLSD) to supervise district labor officers with the hope that it will increase the number of child labor case referrals.(9) A report notes that there are not enough judges in the Industrial Court. As a result, the High Court and the Magistrates' Courts heard labor dispute cases.(5, 31)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Uganda took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The Labor Inspectorate lacks office resources, transportation, and fuel to conduct labor inspections. Although the number of labor inspectors increased to 55 in 2015, each of Uganda's 112 districts is supposed to have at least 1 district labor officer responsible for addressing all labor issues, including child labor.(9) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries, Uganda should employ roughly 464 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(9, 54-56) In November 2015, the ILO sponsored a 5-day training for 28 district labor officers on child labor inspection skills and the legal framework for child labor. However, the Government found training for labor law enforcement officials to be inadequate.(9)

In 2015, inspections were conducted in 60 districts in the mining, agriculture, processing, services, and construction sectors; however, there were no inspections conducted during the last quarter of the year and the Government found the overall number of inspections conducted to be inadequate.(9)

During the reporting period, the National Child Helpline registered 108 child labor complaints. District labor officers also receive walk-in complaints from community members, NGOs, and police officers.(53)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Uganda took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

According to the Government, the number of criminal law enforcement officials responsible for investigating child labor, including its worst forms, is inadequate. The Uganda Police Force lacks vital resources to carry out investigations, such as transportation and fuel.(9)

In January 2015, the Anti-Human Trafficking National Taskforce trained 50 police officers on anti-human trafficking measures; an additional 392 officials, including police officers and magistrates, were trained on the identification and management of trafficking victims and investigation procedures.(8) In July 2015, the Child and Family Protection Unit (CFPU) trained more than 800 police officers on case management regarding violence against children.(9) The Coordination Office to Combat Trafficking in Persons (COCTIP) trained 144 police officers, Immigration Department officials, and members of the Directorate for Public Prosecutions on investigation, prosecution, and child offense cases.(9) However, training is inadequate as some criminal law enforcement officials were not aware of key human trafficking laws, and police officers do not understand the evidence needed to prosecute child labor cases.(8, 9, 35, 57)

During the reporting period, criminal law enforcement officials removed 119 children from child labor in fishing, stone quarrying, and agriculture; some of these children were reunited with their families.(9) In 40 cases, children were removed from households, bars, and farms where they worked.(9) There were 11 girls who worked in bars who were reunited with their families, including two foreign nationals who were repatriated. A total of 21 children who were removed from child labor were enrolled in school.(9)

Research found that street children, including potential human trafficking victims, are routinely arrested and detained by police. Some of these children are held for up to 3 months at a MGLSD juvenile detention center.(8, 10) Although children received food, medical treatment, and other services, some children were required to clean the detention facilities.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on the Elimination of Child Labor	Coordinate child labor issues and implement the National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012/2013–2016/2017). Led by the MGLSD and includes members from several ministries, trade unions, development organizations, civil society, and media agencies.(38) In 2015, the Committee started planning for the next phase of the National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(9)
Stop Child Labor Partners Forum	Coordinate, monitor, and evaluate child labor-related programs and policies in Uganda. Led by the National Council for Children (NCC), with representatives from several ministries, CFPU, and civil society groups.(38) In 2015, held four meetings to discuss the elimination and prevention of child labor and establishing Child Labor-Free Zones in Entebbe, Hoima, and Kabale.(9, 53)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Coordination Office to Combat Trafficking in Persons (COCTIP)	Coordinate, monitor, and oversee implementation of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act.(31) Through June 2015, COCTIP assisted 61 child trafficking victims, most of whom had been trafficked for use in illicit activities. Officials located victims' families and provided food and medical treatment before referring children to NGOs for additional services.(9, 53)
Anti-Human Trafficking National Taskforce	Coordinate anti-trafficking efforts among government ministries, draft policy, implement public information campaigns, and establish a database to track human trafficking cases. Led by MIA's Counter-Trafficking in Persons Office, and includes 30 members from several ministries and government directorates, police, INTERPOL, and other security organizations.(36, 38) In 2015, the Taskforce developed regulations for the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act and coordinated an awareness campaign targeting potential victims through broadcast media, billboards, and community outreach to schools.(9, 35)
National Child Protection Working Group	Monitor the quality of services provided to orphans and vulnerable children, and coordinate the Alternative Care Framework, which aims to reunite vulnerable children with their families. MGLSD leads the working group and members include the ministries of Education and Sports, Health, and Justice and Constitutional Affairs; the CFPU; the NCC; and a number of local civil society organizations.(9) Met regularly in 2015.(9)
NCC's Inter-Ministerial Coordination Mechanism	Ensure effective inter-departmental coordination on children's issues, including child labor. Work to ensure that member organizations integrate child labor concerns into their policies and budgets. Members include MGLSD; MIA; the Ministries of Education and Sports, Health, Local Government, Agriculture, Defense, and Water and Sanitation; the Office of the Prime Minister; and the Justice Law and Order Sector.(9) Met regularly in 2015.(9)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Uganda has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012/2013–2016/2017)	Aims to reduce the worst forms of child labor in Uganda by 2017, by increasing enrollment and completion of primary education; increasing households' access to social protection and assistance; increasing public awareness; strengthening the legal and policy framework; withdrawing children from the worst forms of child labor and providing them with rehabilitation services; and enhancing tripartite collaboration among the Government, employers, and labor unions.(4)
National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking†	Aims to align the legal framework to address both domestic and international trafficking in persons, enhance institutional capacity to counter human trafficking, provide protection and assistance to victims, and prevent human trafficking through awareness-raising campaigns.(58)
National Development Plan (2015/2016–2019/2020)†	Aims to eradicate all forms of child labor by 2025, by promoting inclusive and sustainable economic growth, productive employment, and decent work for all. In 2015, a review of the National Development Plan (2010/2011–2014/2015) indicated that absolute poverty was reduced from 24.5 percent in 2009 to 19.7 percent by the end of 2013, while per capita income increased from $665 to $788 over the same period.(59)
UNDAF (2016–2020)†	Outlines actions and strategies of the UN that align with the Government's National Development Plan. Plans to conduct a child labor survey.(60)
Education Sector Strategic Plan (2004–2015)*	Supported expansion of the basic education system to include programs for disadvantaged children and youth.(61) During the reporting period, the Government began drafting a new plan.(9)
National Strategy for Girls' Education in Uganda (2015–2019)	Establishes a framework for the identification, implementation, and coordination of interventions to promote girls' education.(62) Identifies child labor, particularly domestic work, as a key barrier to girls' participation in education and calls for action to address such barriers.(62, 63)
Skilling Uganda Strategic Plan (2011–2020)*	Provides a strategic plan for business, technical, and vocational education and training, including for youth who drop out of school.(64)
National Strategic Program Plan of Interventions for Orphans and Other Vulnerable Children (2011/2012–2015/2016)	Aims to monitor and protect children from child labor.(65)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Research found that the Government has contributed limited funding to the National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor, which may have resulted in its limited implementation during the reporting period.(9)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Uganda funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2015)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aimed to improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research in Uganda.(66) During the reporting period, the program assisted in the development of a report that focuses on vulnerable youth in need of second-chance opportunities.(67) The report also includes reasons for early school dropout, including child labor.(68)
Country-Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor Project (CLEAR) (2013–2017)	USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve legislation addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards; improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor; and develop, validate, adopt, and implement a national action plan on the elimination of child labor in Uganda.(69)
African Youth Empowerment and Development Initiative (AYEDI) (2013–2017)	$3 million, USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by World Education, Inc. that promotes education, vocational training, and decent work opportunities for youth ages 15–17. The program also provides livelihood support to youth and their families, and encourages youth to take on leadership roles in their communities.(70) In 2015, the project provided 1,453 children engaged in or at risk of entering child labor with education services; 3,099 households with livelihood services; and enrolled 2,090 youth, of which 43 percent were female, in 64 AYEDI Clubs.(71)
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2017)	ILO-implemented program that outlines strategies for promoting decent work in Uganda. Priorities include youth employment and improved social protection for both formal and informal workers; also includes a focus on prevention and elimination of the worst forms of child labor.(72)
Hazardous Child Labor in Tobacco Growing Project (2015–2017)*	$3 million, Elimination of Child Labor in Tobacco Foundation-funded project implemented by the ILO that aims to develop global guidance on hazardous child labor and occupational safety and health in tobacco growing, and strengthen social dialogue in Malawi, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Uganda to combat child labor in agriculture.(73)
Strategic Plan for the Implementation of the Amnesty Act of 2000 (2013–2015)	Continues activities to disarm, demobilize, and reintegrate former Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) rebels, including child soldiers. Implemented by MIA, along with other government agencies.(9, 36) Between January and June 2015, MIA processed 28 cases, 17 of which were for LRA returnees. In June 2015, the Government extended parts of the Act for 2 years.(9)
National Awareness Strategy on Trafficking	Focuses on the prevention of human trafficking.(52) During the reporting period, the Anti-Human Trafficking National Taskforce and IOM coordinated to raise public awareness about the dangers of human trafficking through radio and television, press conferences, and posters at immigration points.(9)
Coordinated Response to Human Trafficking in Uganda	IOM project providing support to children trafficked from the Karamoja region for exploitive street work in urban areas of Uganda; builds capacity of service providers in Karamoja and elsewhere in Uganda.(74)
Uganda Youth Development Link	NGO-implemented program in coordination with the Government that focuses on protecting the rights of children, including from the worst forms of child labor. The program provides rehabilitation and livelihood skills training to victims through five drop-in centers and outreach posts in a Kampala slum; one drop-in center in Kitega, Mukono District; and one rehabilitation transit center at Masooli in Wakiso District.(75)
Realizing Livelihood Improvement Through Savings and Education	NGO-implemented program with technical assistance from the Government that provides assistance to victims of child labor. In 2015, Uganda Women's Efforts to Save Orphans, the implementing NGO, conducted a mid-term review of the program.(9) They found that since 2013, the program has removed 5,940 children from child labor, of which 240 were trained in vocational skills.(9)
Skilling Uganda Program	Donor-funded program implemented by the Ministry of Education and Sports that provides vocational training to youth who drop out of school.(64) The program has established 26 vocational training institutions.(9)
Youth Venture Capital Fund†	Government program that aims to reduce youth unemployment through enterprise development, job creation, and business skills training.(9)
Uganda Social Assistance Grants for Empowerment†	$49 million, donor and Government-funded project implemented by MGLSD that provides direct income support of approximately $8 per month to poor and vulnerable households in 19 districts to allow children to stay in school.(9, 38) In 2015, the program assisted 123,153 beneficiaries and in December, the Government announced that it would expand the program to 40 districts by 2020.(9)
Combating Child Labor Through Education (2010–2015)	Government of the Netherlands-funded program implemented by the Ministry of Education and Sports that operated a 3-hour afterschool education program in areas where children are unable to attend school for a full day.(38, 76)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Uganda.

Uganda

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, the Government funded a study which identified existing gaps and issues to be addressed by amending the Employment Act.(9, 77) Some of the issues include coordination problems in labor administration, and the need to regulate the employment of domestic workers.(77)

Although Uganda has programs that address child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that the offering of a child for prostitution and the use, offering, and benefitting from a monetary or in-kind transaction involving the sexual exploitation of a child for the production of pornography and pornographic performances are criminally prohibited.	2015
	Ensure that the law requires free, compulsory education to age 14 so that it is commensurate with the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure coordination between MGLSD and the Ministry of Local Government so that labor dispute cases are referred to the Industrial Court. Also ensure that the Industrial Court has a sufficient number of judges.	2015
	Make information on the Labor Inspectorate funding, training for new labor inspectors, number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review, number of child labor violations found, and the type of labor inspections conducted publicly available.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure adequate funding, training, and resources for law enforcement agencies so that child labor inspections and investigations can be properly conducted.	2013 – 2015
	Develop mechanisms for referring street children, including potential human trafficking victims, to social services, and prevent these children from being detained by the police.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Education Sector Strategic Plan and the Skilling Uganda Strategic Plan.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that sufficient resources are provided to the National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor to allow adequate implementation.	2015
Social Programs	Ensure that all children are able to attend school regardless of their ability to pay school fees and other related costs.	2012 – 2015
	Expand existing social programs to address the scope of the child labor problem, particularly in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Ukraine made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Ukraine is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a law that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Ukraine enacted legislation in 2014 that required the State Labor Service to request approval from the Cabinet of Ministers before conducting any inspection not related to a criminal investigation. This bureaucratic restriction effectively imposed a moratorium on inspections during the reporting period. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by providing training to a significant number of law enforcement personnel on the application of laws against child trafficking, adopting a new State Program for Countering Human Trafficking, and developing a comprehensive curriculum on human trafficking prevention for use in schools. Children in Ukraine are engaged in child labor, including in street work and in the worst forms of child labor, including in pornography. The legal framework lacks prohibitions on possessing child pornography or benefitting from its proceeds, and the age of consent for sexual relationships is not clearly defined, which puts children at risk of prosecution in cases of commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, national policies related to child labor lack sufficient funding for effective implementation. Ukraine's armed conflict with Russian-backed separatists in the east of the country continued, which may have impacted the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ukraine are engaged in child labor, including in street work.(1-3) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation, including pornography.(1, 3-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ukraine.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.4 (182,714)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	96.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	5.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		110.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2012.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (1-3)

Services	Street work,* including distributing advertising leaflets,* washing cars,* sales activities in kiosks,* and begging* (1-3)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Use in the production of pornography (1, 3-5) Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 8, 11, 12) Use in armed conflict by non-state armed groups (13-17)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced begging sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 4, 8, 12, 18)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2015, Ukraine’s armed conflict with Russian-backed separatists in the east of the country continued, which may have impacted the Government’s ability to address the worst forms of child labor.(13, 19) The conflict in eastern Ukraine had created an estimated 1.4 million Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs), including more than 170,000 children.(20) The inability of many IDP families to access adequate shelter and available social benefits puts children at increased risk of exploitation in the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking.(21) The Ministry of Social Policy (MSP) noted an increased vulnerability to both domestic and international human trafficking among the IDP community, and there have been reports of kidnapping of girls from conflict-affected areas for commercial sexual exploitation and labor exploitation.(8, 18) In addition, authorities have, in some cases, refused to grant Roma IDPs the same level of assistance as other IDPs, putting Roma children at an even greater risk of exploitation.(22) An estimated 10,000 Roma people have been displaced by the conflict.(23)

During the reporting period, a variety of sources, including the OSCE Special Monitoring Mission in Ukraine, reported that children as young as age 15 continued to take part in active combat as part of Russian-backed militant groups.(13, 14, 16, 17, 24) Reports indicate that children ages 15 to 17 were actively recruited to participate in militarized youth groups that teach children to carry and use weapons. Children who excel in this training are encouraged to form their own reconnaissance and sabotage groups and begin to fight.(25) A Ukrainian government official reported that one children’s battalion associated with this training program, the St. George the Victor Battalion, may include children as young as 12 years.(16, 25, 26) The recruitment of children by militant groups took place both on territory not under the control of the central Government and in areas where the Government was unable to enforce national prohibitions against the use of children in armed conflict.(13) Russian-backed militants also continued to use children as informants and human shields during the reporting period.(13)

Children from Ukraine are trafficked both transnationally and domestically for commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging.(12, 18) Homeless, orphaned, and poor children, especially those living in state-run institutions, are at high risk of being trafficked and are targeted by recruiters for child pornography.(3, 11, 12) Commercial sexual exploitation of children, including for pornography, remains a serious problem in Ukraine.(2, 5)

Although Ukraine’s Constitution and Law on General Secondary Education guarantee free universal education, a reduction of educational facilities associated with the decreasing population of school-age children may limit access to education for children living in rural areas, for Roma children, and for children with disabilities.(5) Due to discrimination, Roma children are also sometimes denied access to education, placed in segregated schools exclusively for Roma children, or erroneously placed in special education schools.(2, 27, 28)

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 53 of the Constitution of Ukraine; Article 2 of the Law on General Secondary Education (32, 38)

‡ Age calculated based on available information. (38)

In Ukraine, the minimum age for work is 16. However, the Labor Code allows children to be employed at age 15 with parental consent. In secondary or vocational schools, students may perform light work at age 14 with parental consent, provided that the work does not interfere with their education and is not harmful to their health.(30) Research found that children in vocational training programs for hazardous occupations are permitted to perform hazardous work for less than 4 hours a day, beginning at age 14, as long as occupational health and safety standards are met.(1, 39) Moreover, the CEACR noted that the minimum age for such work is 2 years below the international minimum age of 16 for entering hazardous vocational training.(39)

The Law on General Secondary Education states that children should begin school at age 6 and continue for 11 years of compulsory education. As a result, most children are 17 when they complete compulsory education.(38)

Existing criminal laws in Ukraine continue to have gaps in fully protecting children from the worst forms of child labor. While the Criminal Code prohibits commercial exploitation of children, it does not specifically define an age of consent for sexual relations, which has contributed to the prosecution of children ages 16 and 17 for the crime of prostitution.(1) In addition, there is no law that prohibits the possession of child pornography or benefitting from its proceeds.(1)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Criminal Police for Children's Affairs	Identify and investigate the involvement of children in the worst forms of child labor.(1, 2) Refer children determined to be in need of assistance during criminal investigations to social services offered by the MSP.(40) Transferred from the Ministry of Internal Affairs to the Juvenile Prevention Division in the Department of Preventive Activity of the newly formed National Police during 2015.(41)
Criminal Juvenile Police	Address crimes committed by minors and against minors.(1) Transferred from the Ministry of Internal Affairs to the Department of Preventive Activity within the newly-formed National Police during 2015.(41)

Coordinate the development of laws on child protection.(42) Inform the public of children's rights.(42)
National Referral Mechanism	Identify victims of human trafficking, including children, and refer victims to appropriate government agencies for assistance and the provision of services. Led by the MSP.(8)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

In February 2015, the State Labor Inspectorate and the State Service of Mining Supervision and Industrial Safety were combined into one agency, the State Labor Service (SLS).(43, 44) This change came as part of a government-wide initiative to improve efficiency among executive agencies, including those responsible for inspection. The SLS retains the full legal mandates of the State Labor Inspectorate, including enforcement of child labor laws.(43, 44)

During the reporting period, the Government began enacting a program to reform criminal law enforcement.(13, 45) As part of this program, the Government established a new police force in July 2015.(45) A source reported that laws regulating crimes against children continued to be enforced after July, and that the structure of the new police force will be subject to continued reform in 2016.(13)

Although the budget for the SLS is unknown, a source reported that funding levels were inadequate. Significant cuts to the SLS's budget resulted in involuntary furlough days for inspectors, some of whom worked as little as one week per month during the reporting period, leading to an increase in resignations and a significant decrease in the number of labor inspectors.(13) The SLS reported that the number of labor inspectors was insufficient to adequately enforce child labor laws. Insufficient funding for supplies, such as vehicles and fuel, also negatively impacted labor inspection.(13) According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 20,000 workers in transitioning economies, Ukraine should employ roughly 870 labor inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(47-49)

Two laws adopted in December 2014 also significantly restricted the ability of the SLS to carry out inspections during the reporting period.(13) During the first six months of 2015, the SLS and most other regulatory agencies were required to request approval from the Cabinet of Ministers before conducting any inspection not connected to a criminal investigation.(13, 50, 51) Regulatory agencies were also required to seek approval from the Cabinet of Ministers to conduct an inspection of any business with an annual income less than $750,000 throughout the reporting period. The Government estimates that about 80 percent of businesses are covered under this provision, which will remain in force through the end of 2016.(51, 52) Due to these substantial bureaucratic barriers, inspections nearly ceased in 2015.(13)

No fines were imposed for the use of child labor during the reporting period; however, the SLS reported that fines established for labor infractions, which range from $35 to $115, are too low to serve as effective deterrents.(1, 13, 46)

Criminal Law Enforcement

During the reporting period, the IOM trained 135 police officers, investigators, and social workers on combating child trafficking and victim referral, in cooperation with the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MOI) and the MSP.(13) In cooperation with the MOI and the Prosecutor General's Office, the IOM also trained an additional 196 law enforcement personnel, including prosecutors and investigators on human trafficking.(13)

Ukraine

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In the past, concerns have been raised that the training of judges was not adequately sensitive to the situation of child trafficking victims who may have been used to commit crimes while being trafficked.(1) In 2015, 101 judges received training on the application of current legislation in court hearings on trafficking-related cases, including procedures for victim and witness protection during trial, application of current child labor laws, and understanding the vulnerability of victims.(13, 41) However, these trainings may have been insufficient to address this concern on a systemic level.

Children who are discovered to be in dangerous situations during the course of criminal investigations are referred to the MSP system of Shelters and Centers for Socio-Psychological Rehabilitation of Children.(1) Although the National Referral Mechanism (NRM) for victims of trafficking continued to operate, the MSP lacked sufficient authority and financial resources to establish and run the NRM efficiently.(8)

During 2015, the National Police identified six child trafficking victims.(13) Data on child trafficking and other crimes related to labor exploitation of children are not disaggregated from overall law enforcement statistics; therefore, full data on the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions were unavailable.(11)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Social Policy (MSP)	Lead the Government's efforts to combat child labor and human trafficking, including by drafting legislation and government regulations on these issues.(1, 11)
Interagency Council on Family, Gender Equality, Demographic Development, Prevention of Violence in the Family, and Counter-Trafficking Issues	Coordinate efforts to address the worst forms of child labor, including the trafficking of children. Chaired by the MSP. Members include representatives from the ministries of Justice, Education, Security, Health, and Foreign Affairs, and from international and local NGOs.(1, 53)
Interagency Working Group to Protect the Rights of Civilians, Including Women and Children, During the Anti-Terrorist Operation in the Eastern Regions of Ukraine	Protect Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) and other civilians from the negative consequences of the ongoing military operations in Ukraine, including the increased rates of domestic and transnational human trafficking. Established by the MSP, members include representatives from the Secretariat of the Verkhovna Rada Commissioner for Human Rights, the Authorized Representative of the President of Ukraine for Children's Rights, and other government agencies and NGOs.(21) The group met four times in 2015. Accomplishments include finalizing the new State Program for Countering Human Trafficking and conducting a review of the application process for victim status.(18)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Ukraine has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan (NAP) to Implement the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (2010–2016)	Aims to protect children, including from labor exploitation, through raising awareness, rehabilitating victims found in the worst forms of child labor, providing access to education, and creating a child labor monitoring system.(1, 40, 54)
State Program for Countering Human Trafficking (2016–2020)†	Guides the work of the National Coordinator on Combating Human Trafficking and contains specific actions and timetables for preventing, protecting, and prosecuting trafficking crimes.(18)
USAID Country Development Cooperation Strategy (2012–2016)	Aims to support the development of democratic practices, economic growth and development, and increased integration into European structures. Includes a special objective on countering trafficking in persons that involves piloting a National Referral Mechanism (NRM) for victims of human trafficking and improving methods for rehabilitation and reintegration of victims, including children.(55)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

A lack of sufficient funding hampers the ability of the ministries to implement actions called for under the National Action Plan to Implement the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and the State Program for Countering Human Trafficking.(1, 8)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Ukraine funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research in Ukraine.(56) In 2015, the project assisted the State Statistical Service in analyzing data and preparing a draft report based on the National Child Labor Survey conducted in 2014. The project also conducted a rapid assessment of street children during the reporting period.(56)
Shelters and Centers for Socio-Psychological Rehabilitation of Children†	MSP-operated program to provide protection in 18 short-term shelters and 75 long-term rehabilitation centers for children in need, including street children. Short-term shelters provide accommodation for up to 90 days and rehabilitation centers offer accommodation for up to 12 months.(1, 8, 11, 18, 21) The rehabilitation centers also provide regular social, medical, psychological, and other types of services for non-residents.(8, 18)
Centers for Social Services for Family, Youth, and Children†	Government-run program to provide services for victims of human trafficking, among other populations in need. As of 2015, 656 shelters were available to assess victims' needs and draft rehabilitation plans.(1, 18)
Anti-Trafficking Awareness-Raising Programs*†	In 2015, the Ministry of Education and Science developed a comprehensive human trafficking prevention curriculum for use in schools, which was made available to educators during the reporting period. Secondary and vocational school students also attended trainings on human trafficking prevention, which were reportedly also made part of the required school curriculum during the reporting period.(18)
Multiplication of the Anti-Trafficking National Referral Mechanism in Ukraine†	Joint program by the MSP and the OSCE to train officials in several regions of Ukraine to identify and provide services to trafficking victims. Involves collaborative work among local agencies and non-governmental partners.(11)
Countering Trafficking in Persons Project (2004–2018)	USAID-funded project implemented by the IOM to reduce trafficking in persons by building the capacity of Ukrainian institutions to address the problem by strengthening the NRM and increasing government funding for counter-trafficking efforts.(57)
Free School Lunches†	Government-sponsored program that provides free school lunches to certain categories of children, including those from families with many children, families of Chernobyl victims, low-income families, and families in some rural areas.(58)
Decent Work Country Program (2012–2015)	Government and ILO 3-year joint program that included a social protection component to improve the social status of migrant workers, develop and implement a national occupational safety and health program, and strengthen the labor inspection system.(59)
Strengthening and Protecting Children's Rights in Ukraine (2013–2015)	$670,000 project funded by the Government of Norway and implemented by the Council of Europe in partnership with the Government of Ukraine. Aimed to strengthen the protection of human rights in Ukraine through the prevention of violence against children, including commercial sexual exploitation.(60, 61)
UNICEF Country Program (2012–2016)	Aims to decrease social exclusion and disparities affecting children and ensure that socially excluded children benefit from quality health care and social services.(62)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Ukraine.

Ukraine has a variety of service providers for victims of human trafficking; however, the MSP must confer the official status of “victim of trafficking” on child trafficking victims in order for them to access available government services.(8, 11, 18) Research found delays in this practice often result from the insufficient provision of documentation to the MSP by local administrations, although the trafficking victim status application rejection rate significantly decreased in 2015.(8, 11, 18)

During the reporting period, the MSP and the IOM conducted a seminar for heads of Child Welfare Services on the responsibilities of their agencies in the identification and referral of child trafficking victims who are placed in Centers for Psycho-Social Rehabilitation of Children and other state institutions. The goal of this training was to build the capacity of these agencies to proactively identify and refer child trafficking victims.(18)

Although the MSP provides services for children in shelters and social-psychological rehabilitation centers, the current availability of shelters and trained personnel is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem.(63) The Centers for Social

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Services for Family, Youth, and Children have historically experienced a large turnover of staff due to an excessive workload and low pay.(64) In addition, the centers remain understaffed after budget cuts enacted in 2014 resulted in the layoff of 12,000 social workers.(65) This restricted the centers in their ability to efficiently address the main needs of trafficking victims in 2015. Likewise, high turnover in the regions, where local agencies are responsible for identifying trafficking victims under the NRM, has hampered the provision of services to victims.(11)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws prohibit all children under age 16 from working in hazardous occupations during vocational training.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that laws treat children ages 16 and 17 as victims of commercial sexual exploitation rather than as offenders.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure that laws prohibit possessing child pornography and benefitting from its proceeds.	2012 – 2015
Enforcement	Increase the budget of the SLS, in order to increase the number of inspectors, and make information on the budget publicly available.	2011 – 2015
	Provide labor inspectors with appropriate training, including by institutionalizing periodic refresher training for all inspectors, and provide them with the resources required to carry out inspections, such as adequate transportation and fuel.	2011 – 2015
	Address legal provisions that have created obstacles to conducting labor inspections. Strengthen the Labor Inspectorate by initiating targeted inspections based on analysis of data related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents, and ensure that inspectors have sufficient ability to conduct both complaint-based and targeted inspections as needed, including unannounced inspections.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that fines are imposed for violations of child labor laws, and that they are sufficient to effectively deter employers from violating child labor laws.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that judges treat children who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation and other worst forms of child labor as victims and not as offenders.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that the MSP has the necessary funding and authority to effectively establish and operate the National Referral Mechanism.	2014 – 2015
	Track and make data on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and implemented penalties related to violations of all criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor publicly available.	2014 – 2015
	Provide sufficient funds to implement the National Program for Combatting Trafficking and the NAP, including implementing the mandated child labor monitoring system.	2010 – 2015
	Government Policies	Ensure that all IDPs are aware of the resources available to them and that internally displaced children are able to access adequate shelter and receive available social benefits, regardless of their ethnicity.
Social Programs	Assess children's access to rural schools and develop programs to facilitate access to education for Roma children, disabled children, and children in rural areas.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that all children who are victims of human trafficking are able to access government services available for victims. Ensure that all reasonable efforts are made to obtain needed documentation when considering whether to grant trafficking victim status to children.	2013 – 2015
	Increase the number of shelters and socio-psychological rehabilitation centers for children and the number of trained personnel staffing these shelters, in order to fully meet the demand for their services. Provide sufficient funding to return the number of social workers to the level prior to budget cuts.	2013 – 2015
	Take steps to reduce turnover in the Centers for Social Services for Family, Youth, and Children and in local agencies that are part of the National Referral Mechanism to ensure that victims of human trafficking are provided with the services they require.	2012 – 2015

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
49. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Uruguay made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government published and distributed a resource guide for police and investigators on responding to cases of human trafficking and child commercial sexual exploitation. The Anti-Trafficking Interagency Committee drafted an action plan for Ministry of the Interior officers and the Government continued to fund existing social programs to address the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Uruguay continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in garbage scavenging and commercial sexual exploitation. The Government does not collect or publish comprehensive labor and criminal law enforcement statistics or implement sufficient programs to prevent and eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Uruguay are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in garbage scavenging and commercial sexual exploitation. (1-12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Uruguay.

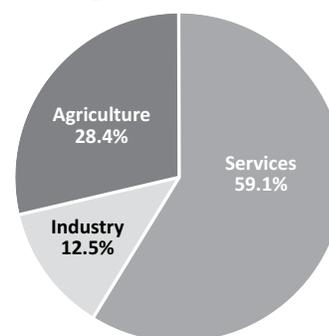

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	6.1(31,955)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	97.8

Uruguay

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The 2009 National Child Labor Survey found that 11.6 percent of children between ages 5 and 17 were engaged in some form of economic activity, and of these children, 8.5 percent were engaged in work considered to be hazardous. Children are more likely to work in rural areas, and children of Afro descent are more likely to be engaged in work, particularly hazardous work, than children of other ethnic groups in Uruguay.(1, 22, 23) Children from rural areas and Afro-descendant children are also subjected to discrimination in the education system and have high secondary school dropout rates.(15)

The Ministry of Social Development (MIDES) and the National Statistics Institute have estimated that approximately 20,000 children work with their parents in recycling activities derived from collecting and sorting garbage in the streets and at home.(17, 24) A March 2013 MIDES report revealed that children in 1,211 homes in Montevideo, where families sort garbage and recyclables, live in unsanitary and unhealthy conditions. More than 70 percent of these children live in chronic poverty.(5, 17)

Children are victims of commercial sexual exploitation, especially in tourist areas and near the borders of Uruguay with Argentina and Brazil. There are limited reports that minors engage in prostitution as a way to help provide income for their families.(2-4, 6) The Government identified the provinces of Canelones, Cerro Largo, Colonia, Lavalleja, Maldonado, Paysandú, Rio Negro, Rocha, San Jose, and Treinta y Tres, as well as the capital, Montevideo, as the primary areas of recruitment for trafficking in persons.(25)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Uruguay has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

* No conscription (40)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (11, 37-39)

In July 2015, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs signed a cooperative memorandum with the IOM to draft a comprehensive anti-human trafficking law.(41)

Uruguay's General Education Law establishes compulsory education for children from age 4 through secondary school. The Government of Uruguay has indicated that education is compulsory up to age 17, if the student does not fall behind.(11, 37, 39) Article 165 of the Code for Children and Adolescents allows the Institute for Adolescents and Children (INAU) to grant permission to children ages 13 to 15 to engage in light work. However, the Government of Uruguay has not specified what occupations constitute light work, or the hours and conditions in which this work can be undertaken.(20, 26) The Code for Children and Adolescents establishes a general prohibition against hazardous work for children under age 18, and Decree No. 321 identifies the agricultural sector as hazardous, prohibiting children under age 18 from working in this sector. Although Decree No. 321 establishes penalties for violations related to underage work in agriculture, research did not find information on penalties related to underage hazardous work outside the agricultural sector.(28, 29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS)	Monitor the overall enforcement of labor laws and compliance with labor regulations, and issue penalties for violations. Responsible for the legal protection of workers, including identifying locations and conditions in which child labor may occur.(5, 17, 42-44) Inspectors refer child labor cases to the Institute for Adolescents and Children (INAU).(11)
INAU	Lead government efforts to assist children in Uruguay, including those employed within the informal sector.(2, 45) Enforce and implement policies to prevent child labor and provide training on child labor issues.(44) Evaluate permit requests and grant work permits, ensuring that children under age 18 are not employed in hazardous work. Support child welfare and protection, and coordinate services for children found in child labor.(5, 17, 44, 46) Work with the MTSS and the National Insurance Bank to investigate child labor complaints, and with the Ministry of the Interior (MOI) to prosecute cases when legal violations are found.(47) The responsibilities of INAU's Department of Child Labor include (1) preventing and monitoring the participation of minors in work activities that might adversely affect welfare and development; (2) monitoring work conditions and environment, as well as legislation on minors; (3) investigating all accidents and complaints of irregularities at the national level; and (4) proposing amendments and regulations of current legislation regarding child labor.(48)
MOI	Investigate all organized crimes, including child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in narcotics operations. Gather evidence for a judge to make a ruling.(3, 21, 47) Children identified as victims of the worst forms of child labor through MOI investigations can be placed under the protection or custody of INAU.(3)
Specialized Court for Organized Crime	Mandate police investigations for cases related to organized crime. Operated by two judges in Montevideo and two public prosecutors.(3, 21, 49-51)

Information regarding 2015 funding levels and training for the labor inspectorate will be released in 2016. The Government does not collect annual statistics related to the number of child labor violations, penalties, investigations, prosecutions, or convictions due to their low incidence.(11) The Ministry of Labor and Social Security classifies hotline complaints under child labor only if the phrase “child labor” is specifically mentioned, which may result in underreporting of child labor cases.(3)

The high number of inspections that each inspector conducts may compromise the effectiveness of the inspections. In addition, INAU conducts the majority of its inspections in Montevideo, the capital, despite evidence from the National Child Labor Survey indicating that most child labor occurs in rural areas.(3, 11, 17, 53)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Uruguay took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children are not investigated and prosecuted effectively in Uruguay.(15) In 2015, the Ministry of the Interior updated operational plans and drafted protocols for specialized police units to address human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. During the reporting period, the Government also published and distributed a resource guide for police and investigators on responding to cases of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (CETI)	Coordinate efforts between law enforcement bureaus and NGOs to develop a plan of action for child laborers and their families.(45) Led by the MTSS and INAU, chaired by the Inspector General, and coordinated by the Sub-Inspector General of the MTSS. Composed of government agencies, industry representatives, labor groups, and NGOs; meets every 2 weeks.(2, 17, 54, 55)
National Committee for the Eradication of Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONAPEES)	Implement actions to combat the sexual exploitation of children and adolescents.(2, 3) Develop public policies and a national plan of action on the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents, taking into account Uruguay's existing norms and international commitments. Led by INAU and composed of representatives from several government agencies, NGOs, and UNICEF.(54)
Interagency Committee to Prevent and Fight Human Trafficking	Coordinate Uruguay's anti-human trafficking efforts. Chaired by the Ministry of Social Development (MIDES).(2, 3, 41) In May 2015, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and MOI sponsored a conference for 60 officials from both agencies to exchange experiences and discuss how to integrate their response to human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. In August 2015, began working with a consultant to draft the new anti-human trafficking law.(41)

In 2015, increased coordination between the Ministry of Labor and Social Security and INAU resulted in systematic information sharing, including interconnected databases.(11)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Uruguay has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Plan to Combat Child Labor (2010–2015)	Includes a range of programs intended to affect child labor. Major focus areas include social and labor inclusion, citizen participation, social and educational inclusion, awareness raising, and programs giving special benefits to youth and populations at risk.(11, 20) Implemented by MIDES.(11)
MERCOSUR Social Labor Declaration of 2015†	Aims to promote decent work and sustainable development in the five member states of MERCOSUR, in part through commitments to uphold core labor standards, including the elimination of forced labor, the prevention and elimination of child labor, and the protection of adolescent work. Signed in Brasilia, Brazil in July 2015.(56, 57)
MERCOSUR United Against Child Labor Campaign	Develops public awareness about the need to combat child labor in MERCOSUR. Addresses child labor in agriculture, domestic work, and sexual exploitation, with particular emphasis on communities along country borders.(58)
MERCOSUR Southern Child Initiative	Aims to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region by raising awareness and seeking coordination among member states regarding child labor, including child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and migrant labor by harmonizing country legal frameworks with international conventions affecting children and by exchanging best practices.(59)
Second Presidential Declaration on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor in MERCOSUR	Promotes greater articulation among governmental agencies, levels of government, and civil society for MERCOSUR members.(60)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Uruguay at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(61, 62)

Policy	Description
Declaration of Cancún and Plan of Action (2015)†	In 2015, the Government of Uruguay participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas, held in Cancún, Mexico. Participating countries adopted the declaration, which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(63, 64) Participating countries also adopted the Plan of Action, which prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(63, 65)
National Action Plan to End Child Labor in Garbage Scavenging	Seeks to combat child labor in garbage dumps through specific projects that involve education, health care, housing, and law enforcement agencies. Launched by CETI and implemented by government agencies, including the MTSS and MIDES.(5, 17) CETI members are finalizing a draft protocol of action for the detection and assistance of child laborers in garbage collection. In 2014, the plan was expanded to study child labor in rural areas to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in agriculture.(20)
CONAPEES National Plan for the Eradication of Commercial and Non-Commercial Child and Adolescent Exploitation	Works to eliminate the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Focuses on goals that include strengthening victims' rights, improving protection measures for victims and witnesses, keeping children in school, reintegrating children who had previously left school, and developing alternative income strategies for families.(2, 3)
Presidential Decree: Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents: Obligations of Tourism Operators	Requires tourism operators to raise awareness, take preventive actions, and report incidents of commercial sexual exploitation of children to the Ministry of Tourism and CONAPEES.(25, 66)
National Strategy for Childhood and Adolescence (2010–2030)*	Identifies goals to be achieved by 2030. Developed by government agencies, political parties, civil society, and private-sector organizations; recognized as a roadmap for policies on children.(2, 67)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, members of the Anti-Trafficking Interagency Committee drafted an action plan for Ministry of the Interior officers. The plan is currently under ministerial level review.(41, 68)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Uruguay funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Pro-Child (Pro-Niño)†	Program implemented by Telefónica Foundation focused on prevention and eradication of child labor. Established in 2000; has more than 10,000 active youth participants nationwide.(2, 69)
MIDES Youth Affairs Bureau Programs†	MIDES Youth Affairs Bureau implements three programs intended to help eliminate the worst forms of child labor: (1) Participation, Citizenship, and Culture; (2) Education and Educational Integration; and (3) Training and Work.(20)
Regional Project to End Child Labor in Latin America (2011–2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 3-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor.(70)
Uruguay, a country of good treatment (2014–2015)	Ministry of Tourism and NGO Claves joint awareness-raising campaign to eliminate commercial sexual exploitation of children and educate on the rights of children and adolescents, while promoting their protection in tourist areas.(71)
Southern Child Initiative/ MERCOSUR (Niñ@ Sur)	MERCOSUR initiative that includes public campaigns against child labor, including child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children; mutual technical assistance in raising domestic legal frameworks to international standards on those issues; and the exchange of best practices related to victim protection and assistance.(72, 73)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Américas)	Regional program that conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(72, 74)
National Plan of Equality†	Institute for Social Security program that mandates that beneficiaries have their children attend school and receive medical services. Established the Family Allocations Program, a conditional cash transfer program to reduce national poverty levels and assist working families with their children, as well as families in need.(75-77)

† Program is funded by the Government of Uruguay.

Although the Government of Uruguay has adopted plans to address child labor in garbage scavenging, agriculture, and commercial sexual exploitation, research did not find evidence of any existing or planned social programs to assist working children in these or other sectors.(17, 20) In particular, there are insufficient programs and services available to assist child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(10) In 2015, the Government continued to fund social programs to eliminate poverty and increase social inclusion to eliminate child labor, however, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(20)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the laws governing light work identify the activities that children between ages 13 and 15 can undertake, and regulate the hours and conditions permissible for light work to ensure that children are not exposed to hazardous labor.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure there are legal penalties for violations related to all hazardous occupations prohibited for children.	2010 – 2015
Enforcement	Make publicly available information on the labor inspectorate's funding, the training system for labor inspectors, the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review, and the number of child labor violations found and for which penalties were imposed and collected.	2015
	Institute systematic recordkeeping of child labor cases.	2009 – 2015
	Provide MTSS hotline operators with more comprehensive guidelines to allow proper classification of calls regarding child labor.	2011 – 2015
	Employ sufficient labor inspectors who are responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor to provide adequate coverage of the workforce without compromising the quality of inspections.	2013 – 2015
	Increase the number of inspections in rural areas where child labor violations are likely to occur.	2011 – 2015
	Make publicly available information on the training system for criminal investigators as well as the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2015
	Strengthen government capacity to identify, investigate, and prosecute cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor prevention and elimination strategies into the National Strategy for Childhood and Adolescence.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the nature of activities carried out by children working with livestock, in fishing, and in manufacturing to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Implement programs to eliminate discrimination in the education system and promote secondary school completion for children from rural areas and Afro-descendant children.	2015
	Implement programs to provide assistance to child laborers, including those engaged in agricultural work, garbage scavenging, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Uzbekistan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2015, Uzbekistan made efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, but was also complicit in the use of forced child labor. While the Government participated in an ILO-led Third Party Monitoring exercise that covered ten regions of Uzbekistan, conducted its own Coordination Council-led monitoring of the remaining regions, and carried out a national campaign to raise awareness of the prohibition on forced child labor in the cotton harvest, Uzbekistan is receiving an assessment of no advancement because some local officials continued to mobilize children to pick cotton in multiple regions of the country, including children studying at colleges in numerous districts of the Jizzakh and Khorezm regions. The Government also maintained policies in the cotton sector that mandate regional harvest quotas and set crop prices at levels that create incentives for local administrators to forcibly mobilize labor, creating an ongoing risk of forced child labor. Children in Uzbekistan are engaged in harvesting cotton and cultivating silk cocoons. There is an overall lack of current data on child labor in Uzbekistan and existing social programs are insufficient to fully address the extent of the known child labor problem. The Feedback Mechanism for reporting labor violations in the cotton harvest did not become operational until mid-way through the harvest and was sometimes inaccessible to callers, indicating flaws in the system for receiving and processing child labor complaints. In addition, members of civil society who attempted to conduct independent monitoring of child labor in the cotton harvest reported experiencing surveillance, intimidation, and detention by the local government authorities.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

There is a lack of current data on child labor in Uzbekistan. To date, the Government has not conducted a national survey on child labor. However, while evidence from independent sources shows that progress was made towards eliminating forced child labor in the 2015 cotton harvest, some local officials continued to mobilize children to pick cotton, in contravention of the national government's official prohibition.(1-10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Uzbekistan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.3 (244,095)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	84.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	5.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(11)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(12)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cultivating* and harvesting cotton† (1-10, 13-23)
	Cultivating silk cocoons* (16, 24-26)
Services	Street vending and street begging* (21, 27, 28)
	Collecting scrap metal* (10, 29-32)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (22, 33)
	Forced labor in cultivating* and harvesting cotton (1, 2, 4-10, 15-17, 21, 22, 34-40)
	Forced labor in collecting scrap metal* (10, 29-32)
	Forced labor in cultivation of silk cocoons* (16, 24-26)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Reports of the forced mobilization of children continued in the cotton sector in 2015, although occurrences were less numerous and confined to a smaller geographic area compared with the previous year. While monitoring exercises conducted by the ILO and the Coordination Council on Child Labor Issues (Coordination Council) did not find widespread evidence of forced child labor, multiple reports from credible, independent sources documented the mobilization of children by local government officials in more than an isolated incident.

In 2015, neither the ILO-led Third Party Monitoring (TPM) nor the Coordination Council-led monitoring found evidence of a systematic use of child labor for the cotton harvest.(41, 42) While a few children were found in the fields by TPM and Coordination Council monitors, these children did not appear to have been forcibly mobilized. However, there were indications that the TPM and Coordination Council did not identify the full scope of child labor violations that occurred.(41, 42) The TPM report states that monitors were unable to verify the ages of an unknown number of young people, presumed to be children, who ran away before monitors could verify their ages.(42) There were also reports that the presence of government officials on each monitoring team prevented them from speaking candidly about labor violations.(10, 42) TPM visits were unannounced and the location of each monitoring visit was intended to be known only by the ILO representative leading each monitoring team. However, reports that students, teachers, and medical workers participating in the harvest were moved from field to field to avoid ILO monitors and that cotton pickers were coached on how to respond to questions from monitors suggest that local officials may have known about monitoring visits in advance.(10, 42) In addition, while independent observers of the harvest confirm that there was no evidence of a centrally-coordinated, forced mobilization of children in 2015, observers identified a number of mobilizations of children for the harvest by local government officials, which were not captured by the TPM or Coordination Council monitoring.(5, 6, 10, 23, 43, 44)

As it has done since 2009, the Uzbek-German Forum for Human Rights coordinated efforts by 22 local human rights advocates, farmers, teachers, and other community members to observe and report on labor practices across six cotton-growing regions. (10) Both Uzbek-German Forum-affiliated monitors and other independent observers reported on multiple incidents of local government officials mobilizing children for cotton harvesting and cultivation. Regional government officials in Jizzakh reportedly mobilized students ages 16 to 17 from seven districts, and students ages 15 to 17 from rural areas throughout the region, to harvest cotton.(8, 10, 23) One school in the Jizzakh region reportedly also mobilized students ages 14 to 16 to weed cotton fields at the direction of district government officials.(7) In the Khorezm region, students ages 15 to 17 were reportedly mobilized to pick cotton and were required to sign a statement that they were participating voluntarily.(8, 23) In the Kashkadarya region, officials from at least one school and one college reportedly mobilized students ages 15-17.(45) In the Andijan region, officials at one elementary school reportedly mobilized all students, ages 6 to 14, although parents were able to take the place of younger students.(45) In the Bukhara region, students ages 16 to 17 were reportedly required to sign statements verifying their willingness to voluntarily participate in the cotton harvest, although it is unclear if these children were mobilized.(4) In addition, an unknown number of 17-year-old students were included in class-wide mobilizations of third-course college and lyceum students, a majority of whom are 18.(9)

The Uzbek-German Forum also reported an unprecedented level of harassment of independent monitors during the reporting period.(10) Credible sources have documented that at least four human rights advocates attempting to monitor the 2015 harvest were hampered by intimidation, harassment, detention, and arrest by authorities, as well as physical violence and damage to personal property.(6, 8, 10, 46-48)

The TPM found a high risk of forced labor in the 2015 harvest and noted in its monitoring report that forced labor is more widespread than the monitoring process alone suggests.(42) As in 2014, sources reported that the lack of systematic mobilization of children in the 2015 harvest was offset by compulsory mobilization of adult labor, especially healthcare workers, teachers, and adult students.(10, 49, 50)

Uzbekistan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Despite the widespread mobilization of teachers, sources indicate that for the majority of the harvest period, most local administrators kept primary schools (for students ages 6 to 15) open, although in many cases the mobilization of teachers disrupted class schedules.(6, 9, 10, 42) Due to the mobilization of teachers, many children under 15 experienced shorter school days, larger class sizes, and occasional days of canceled classes. The TPM reported that some colleges were closed for the harvest, leaving children ages 15 to 17 without access to education during these closures.(10, 42, 45) This negatively impacted the quality of education for children studying at these institutions and left children who were not in school more vulnerable to participation in the cotton harvest.

Limited evidence suggests that children in Uzbekistan are also involved in the cultivation of silk cocoons, the protective casing silkworms spin around themselves before undergoing metamorphosis, which is processed to produce silk thread. The Government imposes a silk cocoon production quota on farmers, who face fines or the loss of their farming land and intimidation by local authorities if they do not meet the quota or do not agree to cultivate silk cocoons.(16, 24, 26) Because some adults are reportedly unable to meet mandatory silk cocoon quotas without the participation of their children, these government policies contribute to forced child labor in silk cocoon cultivation.(16, 24-26) Because silkworms are cultivated in May, the month of final exams in the Uzbek school system, this work reportedly disrupts some children’s school attendance.(24) Due to the intensive care required to cultivate silkworms, the work also requires some children to work late at night and early in the morning.(16, 24, 25)

Additionally, there were reports in 2015 that children in at least two regions of Uzbekistan were required to collect and submit a quota of scrap metal determined by the school, or to submit an equivalent monetary payment, in order to continue attending classes.(29-32) Sources report children often did not attend school while gathering scrap metal to meet quotas set between 33 and 110 pounds.(31, 32)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Uzbekistan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

‡ Age calculated based on available information (63)

While the Law on Guarantees of the Rights of the Child requires that the State protect children from involvement in prostitution, the law does not criminally prohibit the use, procurement, or offering of children in prostitution or benefiting from a transaction involving the prostitution of a child.(52, 54, 60) In addition, although the production and distribution of child pornography are criminally prohibited, laws related to commercial sexual exploitation of children are not adequate, as possession of child pornography is not criminally prohibited.(60)

The Law on Education makes education compulsory for 12 years, beginning at age 6 or 7. As a result, children typically finish compulsory education at age 18.(63)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Protection (Ministry of Labor)	Conduct labor inspections, including inspections for compliance with child labor laws.(64)
Ministry of Interior Office for Combating Trafficking	Investigate crimes related to child trafficking, which may then be prosecuted by the Prosecutor General's Office.(65)
Prosecutor General's Office	Prosecute criminal violations involving the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking, forced labor, and commercial sexual exploitation.(65)
Ministry of Public Education, Ministry of Higher and Secondary Special Education, and Center for Secondary and Vocational Education	Monitor elementary through secondary school students to prevent forced child labor, including in cotton. Monitor employment of all graduates of all educational institutions for two years after graduation.(66, 67)

During the reporting period, the Government-supported Coordination Council conducted monitoring during the fall cotton harvest in the three provinces not subject to the ILO-led Third Party Monitoring (TPM) exercise. The ILO played a supporting role in the Coordination Council monitoring in 2015 by training monitors and advising on the methodology for monitoring.(71)

From September 14 to October 31, the remaining 10 of Uzbekistan's 13 provinces were covered by the-ILO-led TPM exercise for child labor and forced labor. The TPM was established in 2015 to monitor for child labor and assess the risk of forced labor in the cotton harvest in regions housing current World Bank projects.(42) The monitoring exercise included 10 monitoring teams, each consisting of 6 members. Each team included representatives from the ILO, the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy (MLSP), the Federation of Trade Unions, the Chamber of Commerce, the Women's Committee, and a government-accredited NGO.(42) Monitors conducted 1,100 site visits and 9,620 interviews, and identified seven children who were working in the cotton fields during the harvest in violation of Uzbekistan's labor laws.(42) Monitors did not identify any cases in which an entire school class was mobilized.(42)

Differences previously noted between monitoring results reported by the TPM and reporting by independent observers indicate that the current monitoring and enforcement does not sufficiently investigate, identify, and punish the range of reported violations. Among the reported violations not addressed by the TPM are the mobilization of entire classes of schoolchildren, the potential involvement of local or regional government authorities in such mobilization, and the use of children in weeding cotton fields, which takes place outside of the TPM time frame.(1, 7, 8)

In 2015, the Coordination Council established a Feedback Mechanism in cooperation with the MLSP and the Federation of Trade Unions, as part of the World Bank requirements to monitor for the use of child and forced labor in World Bank project areas. Under the auspices of the Feedback Mechanism, the Federation of Trade Unions and the MSLP each set up its own hotline to receive complaints.(42) The Coordination Council reported that the Feedback Mechanism received 207 complaints, close to 20 of which were related to the mobilization of children for the harvest.(72, 73) The Government did not confirm forced mobilization of children in any of these cases, but did subject two brigade leaders to administrative penalties for allowing children to participate in the harvest in their free time.(72, 73)

According to the ILO TPM report, the use of the Feedback Mechanism was low during the harvest, in part due to a lack of public awareness of the mechanism, as well as fear of reprisals for reporting a complaint among individuals who were aware of the mechanism’s availability.(10, 42) Several individuals who provided information to the hotlines reported receiving pay cuts and facing intimidation as a result of making a complaint.(9) During the reporting period, Feedback Mechanism hotline numbers were displayed on materials distributed to raise awareness about the bans on child labor and forced labor.(9, 42) However, the Federation of Trade Unions maintained a number of pre-existing regional hotlines, in some cases causing confusion about which number complainants should call. Some individuals reported calling the central hotline, being referred to a regional hotline number, and then receiving no response when calling the regional hotline.(23) In addition, the Feedback Mechanism hotlines only became operational midway through the harvest and the MLSP hotline had limited hours of operation.(9)

In addition, according to the ILO’s recommendation of one inspector for every 20,000 workers in transitioning economies, Uzbekistan’s labor inspectorate should employ roughly 880 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(74-76)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Uzbekistan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (67)	Unknown
Number of Convictions	Unknown (67)	Unknown

In 2015, the Ministry of Interior investigated 696 human trafficking cases, prosecuted 344 criminal cases involving 496 trafficking victims, and issued convictions related to 320 cases of human trafficking. However, the Government did not provide disaggregated data on how many of these cases involved child victims.(70)

During the reporting period, the National Interagency Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons conducted training on identification of trafficking victims for law enforcement officials in cooperation with the OSCE. The OSCE also provided funding for a training on interagency cooperation on combatting trafficking among law enforcement and transportation officials.(70)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Uzbekistan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Coordination Council on Child Labor Issues (Coordination Council)	Coordinate efforts to address child labor issues, including monitoring of the cotton harvest.(13, 77) Comprised of representatives from the Federation of Trade Unions (which serves as its Chair); the Chamber of Commerce and Industry; the Ministries of Labor and Social Protection, Public Education, Foreign Affairs, Health, and Interior; the Employer’s Union; the Women’s Committee; the Center for Human Rights; the Board for Secondary and Vocational Education; and NGOs.(13, 67, 77) In 2015, the Coordination Council led child labor monitoring activities in three provinces, assisted in creating after-school activities to keep children out of the fields during the cotton harvest, and collaborated with the ILO on the implementation of the Decent Work Country Program.(9)
Interagency Working Group	Coordinate efforts to address labor rights issues, including child labor.(64, 78, 79) Report to the ILO on the Government’s implementation of ratified conventions, and its efforts to prevent forced labor and protect working minors. Headed by the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection.(78-81)
National Interagency Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Oversee efforts to combat trafficking, including by improving interagency cooperation, raising public awareness, and drafting legislation.(70) Chaired by the Prosecutor General and includes representatives from other government entities, such as the Ministries of Labor and Social Protection, Interior, and Foreign Affairs, and the State Customs Committee.(65) In 2015, the Commission developed a handbook on human trafficking to help teachers provide students information on seeking safe and legal employment abroad.(70)
Local interagency committees	Monitor human trafficking at the provincial, regional, and municipal levels.(65)

Despite the existence of the Coordination Council, national prohibitions on child labor continued to be implemented inconsistently at the local level. This suggests the need for improved coordination between the national, regional, and district governments to ensure that local governments are both aware of and committed to implementing the laws and policies prohibiting child labor in cotton production and other sectors.(1-10, 13-22)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Uzbekistan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Memorandum of Understanding Between the International Labor Organization and the Republic of Uzbekistan (2014–2016)	Establishes terms of agreement between the ILO and the Government on cooperation to implement a Decent Work Country Program in Uzbekistan from 2014-2016.(82) This agreement represents an important step toward implementation of recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies, including utilizing ILO technical assistance and continuing to work with the ILO or other credible third parties to observe cotton harvests.(34, 83)
National Action Plan for the Application of ILO Conventions	Establishes a framework for implementing ILO Conventions 138 and 182 by coordinating the activities of ministries, departments and local government authorities. Also aims to strengthen cooperation with international and voluntary organizations on child labor.(9) Included a goal of updating the prohibitions of hazardous occupations for children in 2015, however an updated list had not been completed by the end of the reporting period.(84)
Resolution of the Cabinet of Ministers No. 132 on Additional Measures to Ensure the Implementation of ILO Conventions (2014–2016)	Establishes actions and efforts to be taken to address the worst forms of child labor and forced labor. Outlines additional activities to be implemented in 2014 –2016 in response to ILO convention requirements, including awareness-raising, monitoring of the cotton harvest, legal reform, data collection, and activities on the worst forms of child labor targeting government ministries, international organizations, students, trade unions, and employers.(85) Ministry of Labor and Social Protection is charged with implementation.(67)
Plan of Measures regarding preparatory works aimed at provision of free hiring of pickers by farming enterprises through labor market facilities and non-admission of cases of child labor and forced labor during the cotton season (2015)†	Establishes a system for identifying and hiring unemployed individuals and other workers who may be interested in joining the harvest voluntarily and prohibits the engagement of teachers and healthcare workers. Prescribes an awareness-raising campaign to place other promotional materials explaining the prohibition of forced and child labor in health facilities, educational institutions, and government workplaces.(42, 86) Includes provisions for training of brigade leaders to improve pickers’ awareness of ILO conventions and national legislation on working conditions in the cotton harvest. Encourages the recruitment of students over 18, and requires student lists be broken down by age to identify students over 18 who can legally be involved in cotton picking. Also requires the development of standing committees at the district level to systematically monitor students’ school attendance, and of a text message notification system to track school attendance.(42, 86)

Policy	Description
Action Plan on Improving Working Conditions, Employment, and Social Protection of Workers in Agriculture (2016–2018)†	Demonstrates the Government's commitment to increased mechanization of agriculture; improving conditions for hiring of workers in agriculture; strengthening the Feedback Mechanism and national monitoring to prevent child and forced labor; increasing provision of information and guidance in order to advance decent work; and social protection of workers in agriculture.(42, 87)
Cabinet of Ministers Order 909F†	Outlines steps to ensure decent working conditions in Uzbekistan, including by preventing child and forced labor. The order lays out the Government's intentions to improve monitoring and feedback mechanisms, as well as to continue working with the ILO and World Bank to develop informational materials and conduct public awareness campaigns about child and forced labor.(9)
National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons (2015–2016)†	Includes activities to conduct public awareness-raising; assist and protect victims; and strengthen the capacity of government agencies and NGOs working on trafficking issues.(70) In 2015, over 83,000 awareness-raising activities were conducted under the auspices of the plan, and close to 3,000 banners were displayed in transportation areas.(70, 88)
Education Sector Plan (2013–2017)*	Defines a 5-year development strategy for the education sector and aims to ensure equal opportunities and quality education for all.(89)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the national Government maintained cotton production policies that mandate harvest quotas and set crop prices at levels that offer strong incentives for local administrators to mobilize forced labor, which creates an ongoing risk that children may be mobilized.(9, 42, 47)

Several positive efforts were taken during the reporting period based on the Plan of Measures adopted in July 2015. In cooperation with the World Bank, almost 53,000 posters and over 700 large banners were distributed throughout the country to raise awareness about national prohibitions on child and forced labor.(70) Regional governors, district and local-level officials, agency heads, and farmers received training on ILO Conventions.(70) The text message notification system to track school attendance was put in place in 10,000 elementary schools and 1,500 secondary schools in Tashkent and Namangan regions.(90) However, prohibitions on the mobilization of teachers for the cotton harvest included in the Plan of Measures were not enforced, which negatively impacted the quality of education and increased the vulnerability of children to participation in the cotton harvest.(10, 42, 45)

The Plan of Measures also required the maintenance of attendance registers for students and teachers, as well as lists of the ages of cotton pickers. Evidence indicates that this documentation was not always available or complete.(42)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Uzbekistan funded and participated in programs that included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
After-School Programming	Ministry of Public Education-implemented program during the cotton harvest to provide extracurricular sports and hobbies for students in order to prevent child labor.(9, 77)
Support for the Decent Work Country Program in Uzbekistan	USDOL-funded $6 million project awarded in December 2014 to the ILO to enhance the capacity of the Government and workers' and employers' representatives to prevent and reduce child and forced labor, and to promote decent work in Uzbekistan.(77, 91) In 2015 the project provided training and technical assistance to the Coordination Council monitors.(71)
Global Partnership for Education	Multilateral initiative to coordinate the efforts of developing countries, donors, international organizations, teachers, NGOs, and the private sector to secure universal access to quality education in developing countries.(92, 93) In 2014, the Partnership endorsed the Government's Education Sector Plan and awarded a $50 million grant to Uzbekistan for its implementation in coordination with UNICEF and the World Bank. The program will promote child literacy and math skills; develop teachers' classroom skills; expand access to quality early childhood care and education in rural areas; raise the quality of secondary education; and increase the capacity of the Ministry of Public Education to monitor the education system.(92)

Program	Description
School Assistance†	Ministry of Public Education program that provides winter clothes and other educational resources to needy families to support their school attendance.(9, 94)
Family Support Assistance†	Government of Uzbekistan program that provides an allowance to low-income families to be paid if their children continue their education up to age 18.(9, 94)
Child Protection Assistance	UNICEF program that engages with the Government of Uzbekistan to support the development of a national child protection system that will prevent and respond to children who are at risk of or have been subject to child abuse, exploitation, and violence.(95)
Child Rights Monitoring	UNICEF program that partners with local and regional governments, NGOs, and civil service training institutions to strengthen Uzbekistan’s application and monitoring of obligations under the UN CRC.(96)
National Rehabilitation Center†	MLSP-operated shelter for trafficking victims that provides victims with medical, psychological, legal, and vocational training.(70, 97) In 2015, the Government allocated approximately $156,000 to the Center.(70)
Awareness Raising of Labor Rights†	Effort undertaken in collaboration with the World Bank and the ILO to develop and disseminate posters and banners publicizing the government’s prohibition of child labor in the cotton harvest, as well as to conduct seminars on the implementation of ILO Convention 182. In 2015, sources reported that awareness-raising materials were not distributed until the third week of the harvest or later.(9)
Human Trafficking is a Modern Issue†	National Interagency Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons-led program, which carried out more than 61,500 awareness-raising activities that reached 4.1 million citizens, including 1 million children.(70, 88)
Cotton Harvesters†	Government program that rents harvesting machines to farmers to help reduce the need for human cotton pickers.(66, 67) Observers noted a limited number of harvesters were in use during the 2015 harvest.(9)

† Program is funded by the Government of Uzbekistan.

Although the Government has implemented programs to combat child labor in the cotton harvest and to address human trafficking, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Strengthen protections against the commercial sexual exploitation of children by criminally prohibiting the possession of child pornography, and use, procurement, offering, and benefitting from the sexual exploitation of a child for prostitution.	2015
Enforcement	Allow independent observers unrestricted access to monitor child labor during the cotton harvest through unannounced site visits, and punish officials who threaten or detain observers in order to suppress information about labor violations.	2014 – 2015
	Make information on the Labor Inspectorate funding, training for inspectors, number and quality of inspections conducted, number of child labor violations found, and number of penalties collected publicly available.	2015
	Ensure that the Feedback Mechanism and other mechanisms for receiving child labor complaints are operational and consistently answered year round, including for the full duration of the cotton harvest; are well-publicized and accessible to the public; have clear instructions about which hotline is appropriate to call; and do not carry any risk of penalty for individuals who make use of these mechanisms.	2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2015
	Target labor and criminal inspections, including unannounced inspections, in areas where hazardous child labor is known to occur, especially in the cotton sector.	2011 – 2015
	Establish a comprehensive cotton harvest monitoring and enforcement system that investigates worker complaints and third-party reports of school closings and mobilization of children under age 18 to work in the cotton harvest or other forms of child labor, and applies penalties against responsible individuals, including local or regional government authorities (such as hokim or town mayors), who are involved in the mobilization of children.	2012 – 2015
	Publish disaggregated information on investigations, prosecutions and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor and trafficking of children.	2011 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Coordination	Increase coordination efforts directed at regional and district governments to ensure local governments are both aware of and committed to implementing the laws and policies prohibiting child labor in cotton production and other sectors.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Education Sector Plan.	2014 – 2015
	Revise policies that mandate cotton harvest quotas and set purchase prices below market value to help prevent forced involvement of children under age 18 in the cotton harvest.	2012 – 2015
	Enforce the prohibition on the involvement of teachers in the cotton harvest, in order to maintain education quality during the harvest and prevent students from becoming vulnerable to participation in the harvest.	2015
Social Programs	Strengthen recordkeeping in educational institutions and maintain up-to-date records of cotton workers' ages on district lists.	2013 – 2015
	Conduct research to determine the prevalence of child labor, including the nature and extent of children's involvement in silk cocoon cultivation and scrap metal collection.	2013 – 2015
	Expand programs to address the worst forms of child labor, with a particular focus on children involved in cotton production.	2009 – 2015

- UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary. Total. [accessed December 16, 2015]; <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
76. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Vanuatu

NO ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Vanuatu made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, limited evidence suggests that children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation. Vanuatu's minimum ages of 12 for work and 15 for hazardous work are not in compliance with international standards. A mechanism to coordinate government efforts to combat child labor has not been established. Vanuatu does not have any social programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Vanuatu are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Vanuatu. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		93.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(2) Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Forestry,† farming, activities unknown (4, 5)
Services	Street vending* (4)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation* (1, 4)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3 (a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

There have been no national surveys of child labor in Vanuatu to determine the nature and prevalence of the problem.(5)

The Vanuatu Education Road Map establishes a policy to make primary education, grades one to six, free to all children by 2015.(6) However, school fees and lack of physical access to schools continue to be significant barriers to education.(5, 7)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Vanuatu has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

	Convention	Ratification
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Section 38 of the Employment Act (8)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	15	Section 40 of the Employment Act (8)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Section 40 of the Employment Act (8)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Section 7 of the Employment Act; Section 102 of the Penal Code; Section 35 of the Counter Terrorism and Transnational Organized Crime Act (8-10)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 35 of the Counter Terrorism and Transnational Organized Crime Act (10)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 101B, 101C, 101D, and 147B of the Penal Code (9)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Section 35 of the Penal Code (9)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A†
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A†
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	No

† No standing military (11)

The minimum age of 15 for hazardous work is not in compliance with international standards because it fails to protect children ages 16 and 17 from work that could jeopardize their health and safety.(8) While children ages 12 and 13 are permitted to work in agricultural light work, the law does not specify the activities and hours per week that are allowed for work.(8)

Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient as debt bondage is not criminally prohibited.(8, 9)

While the Penal Code prohibits the incitement of another person to commit any criminal offense, the law is not sufficient as it does not include heightened penalties for inciting children to engage in criminal activities.(9)

There is no compulsory age for education, increasing the risk of children's involvement in child labor.(12)

The Government has yet to pass the Employment Relations Bill of 2012 that prohibits the engagement of children under the age of 18 in hazardous work.(12)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor	Enforce provisions set forth in the Employment Act, including child labor laws.(4)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Vanuatu took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although a committee exists to improve the well-being of children, research found no evidence that the committee functions as a coordinating mechanism to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Children's Committee	Coordinate government efforts to improve children's well-being, including eliminating the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Monitor child protection issues and create a comprehensive and integrated agenda for children's rights.(5, 14)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Vanuatu has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
UNDAF for the Pacific Region (2013–2017)*	Promotes sustainable development and economic growth for vulnerable groups in 14 Pacific Island Countries and Territories: Cook Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, Fiji, Kiribati, Marshall Islands, Nauru, Niue, Palau, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu.(15) Includes initiatives to prevent and respond to abuse and exploitation of children in Vanuatu.(16)
Vanuatu Education Road Map*	Establishes a comprehensive strategic direction for the country's education sector and specifically supports the goal of achieving universal primary education by 2015. Vanuatu Minimum Quality Standards for Primary Schools*	Includes a requirement that all primary schools develop and implement Safe School Policies that cover child protection and emergency preparedness.(17)

*Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Although the Government of Vanuatu has policies related to child labor, research found no evidence of a policy addressing child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence of programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Vanuatu (Table 10).

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Venezuela made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor Plan of Action prioritizing the elimination of child labor and maintained policies and programs that aim to alleviate poverty and improve conditions for some working children. However, children in Venezuela are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Government has not made a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children publicly available, and does not make information on the enforcement of child labor laws publicly available. In addition, information is not available on the effectiveness of the Government's coordinating body on child labor, and the Government does not have sufficient efforts in place to protect children in key sectors where child labor is prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Venezuela are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-7) The Government's 2011 census found approximately 262,000 children and adolescents between ages 10 and 17 working in Venezuela, but research could not determine the extent to which the survey encompassed the informal sector or whether there are studies that target the worst forms of child labor.(8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Venezuela.

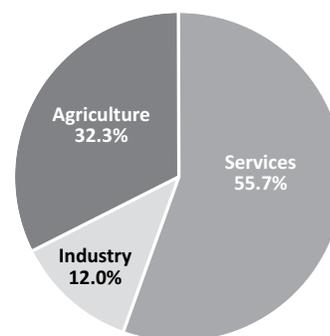

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10-14 yrs.	5.1 (138,641)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	96.0

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in domestic work and begging (2, 4-6, 13-15, 23-25)
	Selling drugs, sometimes as a result of forced labor (13-15)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-7, 24, 26, 27)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are sometimes trafficked to urban areas, such as Caracas and Maracaibo, or to resort destinations, such as Margarita Island, for commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 4, 7, 24, 25) Indigenous children work in illegal gold mines in the Upper Orinoco, Casiquiare, and Guainia-Rio Negro river basins and are vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(7) Civil society groups estimate that more than 200,000 children are exploited by criminal organizations, and more than one million children work in the informal sector.(15)

Children from rural areas, indigenous children, Afro-descendant children, children with disabilities, pregnant girls, and adolescent mothers face barriers to accessing education; many students stop their formal education after completing the ninth grade.(3, 6, 28) Although Article 6.2.k. of the Education Law guarantees that no student’s academic documents may be withheld, according to NGOs, Colombian children living in Venezuela without a Venezuelan identification card are sometimes prevented from receiving diplomas, certifications, and credentials from formal educational institutions.(6, 29, 30) These children may be vulnerable to labor exploitation due to their irregular migration status. The practice of withholding their academic documents may discourage them from completing their education, increasing their vulnerability to labor exploitation.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Venezuela has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

‡ Age calculated based on available information (15, 30, 32, 34)

Venezuela’s Constitution establishes compulsory education for all children from preschool through grade nine. (15, 30, 32, 34)

The Government has not made publicly available a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children under age 18.(1, 14, 40, 41) Articles 79 and 80 of the Regulations on Occupational Safety and Health Conditions prohibit activities considered dangerous or unhealthy for children under age 18, but reference a list that is not included in the publicly available version of the Regulations. Similarly, Article 96 of the Law for the Protection of Children and Adolescents prohibits children under age 18 from working in activities prohibited by law, but does not specify which activities are considered hazardous or prohibited for minors.(32, 33)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Popular Power for Labor and Social Security (MINPPTRASS)	Enforce child labor laws and conduct child labor inspections in formal and informal business sectors. Develop policies and projects regarding child labor.(14, 20, 42)
National Institute for Prevention, Safety, and Health at Work (INPSASEL)	Assist MINPPTRASS in enforcing labor laws and conditions of work in Venezuela, including by conducting child labor inspections in formal and informal business sectors. Help develop labor inspection apparatus and implement national labor policies.(14, 43)
Municipal Councils for the Protection of Children and Adolescents	Manage MINPPTRASS Registry for Adolescent Workers to ensure that employed students of legal working age balance their education and employment and that employers adhere to labor laws.(15)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role and Description
System for the Protection of Children and Adolescents	Coordinate and protect children's rights and address child labor issues through policies and programs at the national and state levels. Comprised of several government ministries, government councils, and representatives from civil society and mandated by the Law for the Protection of Children and Adolescents.(32, 44)

Although the Government has established the System for the Protection of Children and Adolescents, this body does not provide adequate coordination, monitoring, and evaluation of institutions to ensure that children are protected from the worst forms of child labor, and research could not determine to what extent the body was active during the reporting period.(7) The Ministry of Popular Power for Labor and Social Security's ability to address exploitative child labor is limited because government offices at the municipal and national levels do not share information sufficiently with each other.(15) Research could not determine whether the Government maintains a coordinating body that addresses the trafficking of children, including for commercial sexual exploitation.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Venezuela has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Seeks to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through the signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Venezuela at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(45, 46)
Declaration of Cancún and Plan of Action (2015)†	In 2015, the Government of Venezuela participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas, held in Cancún, Mexico. Participating countries adopted the declaration, which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(47, 48) Participating countries also adopted the Plan of Action, which prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(47, 49)
MERCOSUR Social Labor Declaration of 2015†	Aims to promote decent work and sustainable development in the five member states of MERCOSUR, in part through commitments to uphold core labor standards, including the elimination of forced labor, the prevention and elimination of child labor, and the protection of adolescent work. Signed in Brasilia, Brazil in July 2015.(50, 51)
Second Presidential Declaration on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor in MERCOSUR (2012)	Promotes greater coordination between governmental agencies, levels of government, and with civil society among MERCOSUR members.(52, 53)
MERCOSUR's Southern Child Initiative	Aims to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region by raising awareness and seeking coordination among member states regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking and pornography, child labor, and migrant labor. Improves country legal frameworks to harmonize them with international conventions affecting children, and facilitates exchange of best practices.(54–56)
National Plan of Action Against Abuse and Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Addresses the prevention of commercial sexual exploitation of children under age 18 and the rehabilitation of victims.(57)
Second Socialist Plan for the Economic and Social Development of the Nation (2013–2019)*	Provides a roadmap for reducing poverty by improving economic opportunity, access to health care, education, and housing.(58)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Venezuela

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Although the Government of Venezuela has adopted poverty reduction strategies, as well as policies that target the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, research did not find evidence of a national policy that targeted other forms of child labor, such as domestic work and street work.(7)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Venezuela funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Children of the Barrio Mission (Misión Niños del Barrio)†	National Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (IDENA)-administered program that provides services to at-risk and underprivileged children, including child laborers. Primary goal is to eradicate exploitation, abuse, and psychological and physical mistreatment of children from birth to age 17.(8, 20, 59)
Negra Hipólita Mission (Misión Negra Hipólita)†	Government program that provides assistance to vulnerable groups, including street children.(60) Assists children engaged in child labor, including those working at garbage collection sites and on the street.(61) In 2015, 14 out of 38 centers were closed and approximately 200 people received benefits from the remaining centers.(15)
Program to Dignify Working Children and Adolescents†	IDENA-administered program that aims to eradicate exploitative working conditions and establish safe business environments in which children above the legal age may work.(14, 40, 62)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Américas)	Conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(63, 64)
Human Trafficking Awareness Campaign†	Government program to raise public awareness of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation through the dissemination of public service announcements, advertisements, posters, and pamphlets in airports and tourist areas.(25)
Communal Centers for Comprehensive Care†	IDENA-supervised centers that provide meals and educational assistance to at-risk children from birth to age 12. Also partners with the Ministry of Popular Power, Health, and Social Development to provide medical and dental care to children.(65)
National Day Camps†	IDENA-administered program under the Community Vacation Plan that provides summer day camps to children, with a focus on athletic, artistic, and cultural activities.(8, 14, 15)

† Program is funded by the Government of Venezuela.

During 2015, the Government maintained programs that aim to alleviate poverty and improve conditions for some working children. However, research indicates that the Program to Dignify Working Children and Adolescents has limited efficacy due to a continued lack of governmental funding.(14) While the Ministry of Popular Power for Interior and Justice and the Child Protection Council have trained psychologists and physicians to provide psychological and medical examinations to victims of human trafficking, follow-up social services to assist victims are limited.(25) Overall, existing government programs are insufficient to protect children in key sectors in which child labor is prevalent.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Make publicly available a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children.	2009, 2011 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that all children without identifying documentation receive their diplomas, certifications, and credentials in the formal education system.	2015
	Ensure that all children are able to obtain identity documents to increase their access to education and reduce their vulnerability to labor exploitation.	2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Yemen

NO ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Yemen made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The armed conflict and economic crisis in Yemen exacerbated child labor problems, including its worst forms. Children in Yemen are engaged in child labor, including in fishing, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict. Due to ongoing armed conflict and political instability caused by the Houthis taking control of state institutions, the Republic of Yemen Government remained in exile in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, during this period and had limited operational control of its ministries in the capital, Sana'a. As a result it was unable to enforce the minimum age protections of the law. Non-state armed groups recruited and used children in combat during this period. Given that the Republic of Yemen Government remained outside the country in 2015, it was unable to provide demobilization and rehabilitation services to children who have been involved in armed conflict.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Yemen are engaged in child labor, including in fishing. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict.(1-5) According to the 2010 National Child Labor Survey, the majority of working children were in the agricultural and domestic work sectors.(4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Yemen.

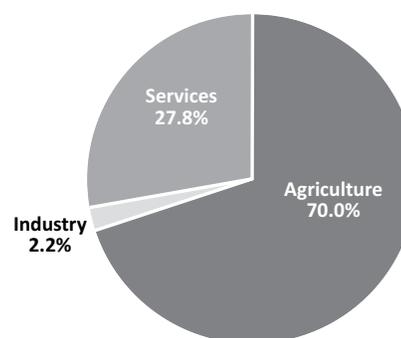

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	13.6 (834,866)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	68.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	10.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		69.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from National Child Labor Survey, 2010.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5, 11, 12)
	Use in illicit activities, including in the smuggling of drugs*(12)
	Begging as a result of trafficking* (11, 13)
	Forced domestic work* and forced begging* (12)
	Use in armed conflict by non-state armed groups, sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment (9, 12, 14-17)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The crisis in Yemen escalated in the beginning of 2015 with the abrupt departure of the President and senior Republic of Yemen Government officials from the capital. By the end of the reporting period, non-government forces had extensive control over the north-west regions of Yemen, including Sana’a, rendering the government incapable of addressing non-essential matters.(5) Many government institutions, including around 1,094 schools, remained closed due to the conflict, notably in the Sa’ada and Taiz Governorates.(18)

Girls are trafficked within Yemen to hotels in Aden, Sana’a, Ta’iz, and other cities for commercial sexual exploitation.(12) In addition, some children are trafficked to Saudi Arabia for commercial sexual exploitation, forced begging, and smuggling of drugs.(11-13) There is evidence that Yemeni children, mostly boys, migrate to Sana’a, Aden, and Saudi Arabia, where they are engaged in forced labor in domestic work, begging, or working in small shops.(12) Tourists, including those from Saudi Arabia, enter into temporary marriages with Yemeni girls as a form of commercial sexual exploitation. At times, Saudi tourists take these girls with whom they entered into a temporary marriage back to Saudi Arabia where the girls are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation or abandoned.(11, 12)

Various armed groups recruited and used child soldiers, including the Houthis, Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula, the Popular Committees, tribal militias, and government forces.(9, 12, 14) In 2015, the Houthis increased recruitment of child soldiers. Some children served as guards or fighters, carried food and ammunition to the front line, provided first aid, or helped retrieve killed or wounded fighters.(14) The UN reported that sometimes recruitment was a result of coercion or deception.(19) Some children are recruited as young as age 7.(16) Child soldiers may receive payment, meals, and qat, a mild narcotic that is legal in Yemen.(15, 16, 20) A UNICEF official estimated that a third of fighters engaged in the armed conflict are children.(21) Limited evidence suggests that boys 12 to 15 who are married in northern tribal regions are considered adults, and therefore are obligated to show their allegiance to their tribes by participating in the internal conflict, including in fighting.(22) Likewise, tribal communities may associate manhood with the ability to use weapons, which encourages children to become involved in fighting.(20)

Enrollment rates in schools have been seriously affected by the internal conflict in Yemen, high levels of violence, and internal displacement. In spring 2015, approximately 3,600 schools were temporarily closed due to airstrikes and street fighting.(18, 23, 24) Although 14,500 schools reopened for the new academic year in November, nearly 1,100 schools remained closed due to damage to their building or a lack of security. Also, 216 schools remained closed because they were being used as shelters for internally displaced persons.(18, 24) The UN reported attacks on schools and military use of schools, which hindered access to education.(25) With attendance rates ranging from 35 percent to 90 percent, depending on the location of the school, at least 1.8 million school-aged children were out of school, increasing their risk of involvement in the worst forms of child labor.(18)

Among the Muhamasheen (“marginalized”) minority group, generally of sub-Saharan African origin, illiteracy rates are high and child labor is prevalent in begging and entertainment at weddings and other ceremonies.(9) Syrian refugee children are also engaged in begging.(12)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Article 18 of the General Education Law (29)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 87 of the Child Rights Law (28)

* No conscription (30)

‡ Age calculated based on available information

Research did not find any legal prohibition of debt bondage and slavery. The legal framework does not appear to explicitly prohibit forced labor.

Research could not determine whether the legal framework adequately prohibits the use, procurement, offering or benefiting from a children in pornography and pornographic performances, or whether it prohibits using a child in prostitution, because a public version of Ministerial Order No. 11 of 2013, which replaced Ministerial Order No. 56 of 2004 containing some protections, was not available.

Based on available information, Ministerial Decree No. 11 of 2013 does not appear to explicitly include all phases of child trafficking, such as harboring, transporting, and transferring children for exploitation.(27)

A new constitution was drafted in January 2015, explicitly prohibiting slavery, forced labor, and human trafficking; establishing a minimum age for marriage of 18; and reiterating age 18 for recruitment or engagement in armed conflict.(31) The draft

Constitution has not yet been adopted, considering the circumstances of the armed conflict by the Houthis and the Republic of Yemen Government remaining in exile in Riyadh for most of 2015.(32)

Article 18 of the General Education Law makes education compulsory for nine years, starting from age six. Children are therefore 15 when they finish compulsory education.(29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Republic of Yemen Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor Child Labor Unit	Enforce child labor laws, conduct inspections, inform the Ministry of the Interior of any violations, and refer children found during inspections to appropriate social services. Receive complaints of child labor.(5)

Ministry of Justice	Enforce child labor laws, and prosecute and adjudicate child labor cases.(5)
Ministry of Human Rights, Ministry of Legal Affairs, Parliament, and the Social Fund for Development	Maintain supporting roles in combating child trafficking.(5)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, law enforcement agencies in Yemen did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6). As a result of widespread violence and instability in Yemen in 2015, the Republic of Yemen Government had limited operational control of its ministries.(5)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Republic of Yemen Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee to Combat Child Labor	Coordinate child labor issues in Yemen. Comprises representatives from the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor, the Higher Council for Motherhood and Childhood, the Chamber of Commerce, the ILO-IPEC, and local NGOs.(5)
Technical Committee on Combating Trafficking in Persons	Develop a national strategy to combat human trafficking. Established in 2012, comprises government officials and representatives of IOM, meets weekly.(35)
National Network for Child Protection	Established by the Higher Council for Motherhood and Childhood to implement training programs and media awareness campaigns, and advocate progress on children's issues.(5)
Joint Technical Committee to Prevent Recruitment of Children in the Yemeni Armed Forces	Implement and monitor the Action Plan to end and prevent the recruitment of children by the Yemeni Armed Forces. Comprises the Ministry of Defense, the Higher Council for Motherhood and Childhood, the Civil Status and Registration Authority, and UN representatives.(36)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Republic of Yemen Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Action Plan to End and Prevent the Recruitment of Children by the Yemeni Armed Forces	Signed in May 2014 by the Minister of Defense, the Action Plan was designed to ensure that national laws comply with international standards, prohibit the recruitment and use of children in armed forces, investigate allegations of violation, and facilitate UN access to monitor compliance. (37) Due to political instability, the Republic of Yemen Government could not implement the Action Plan in 2015.(5)
National Basic Education Development Strategy (2003–2015)*	Aimed to increase enrollment in basic education (grades 1–9) to 95 percent for children ages 6 to 14, particularly girls in rural areas.(38)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Although the Republic of Yemen Government has adopted the Action Plan to End and Prevent the Recruitment of Children by the Yemeni Armed Forces, research found no evidence of a policy on other forms of child labor. In 2014, the Ministry of Human Rights drafted a National Strategy for Combating Trafficking in Persons, with an aim to raise awareness, increase cooperation between Yemen and neighboring countries, train officials to identify victims, and create protection procedures for victims of human trafficking. The strategy has not been finalized.(12)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Republic of Yemen Government participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Phase IV of the Social Fund for Development (SFD) (2011–2015)	$154 million Government of United Kingdom-funded, 5-year project implemented by the SFD to improve access to education, create employment opportunities, and reduce vulnerability for disadvantaged groups.(39) Special needs groups, including child laborers and street children, were targeted under the SFD for social protection and education programs in partnership with the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor, and the Ministry of Planning and International Cooperation.(40)
Second Basic Education Development Project (2013–2018)	$66 million World Bank-funded, 5-year project implemented by the Ministry of Education to improve student learning and increase access to basic education in selected areas.(38) The World Bank suspended activities in March 2015.(41)
Social Welfare Fund Institutional Support Project (2010–2017)	$10 million World Bank-funded, 7-year project, implemented by the Social Welfare Fund to support the delivery of social services, including those related to children's health and education through improving the cash transfer program.(42, 43) In May 2015, the World Bank suspended operations, but until then, limited support activities continued, including the consolidation of beneficiary databases.(44)
Child Protection Sub-Cluster (CPSC)	Led by UNICEF, the CPSC provides psycho-social support, including sports and arts, in community-based and mobile centers. In 2015, UNICEF provided psycho-social support to more than 348,000 children; provided information to 408,000 individuals, including children, on how to avoid physical injury in conflict areas; and documented more than 1,000 cases of grave child rights violations.(18)
Education Cluster	$6.8 million program implemented by UNICEF, in cooperation with the Republic of Yemen Government, provides educational support activities and services. In the Back to School campaign in 2015, the program supported 555,000 out-of-school children to reintegrate into the education system, including by providing backpacks, books, and school supplies; and served more than 31,000 children by providing temporary learning spaces and repairing school buildings.(18) The Ministry of Education and UNICEF trained school teachers and staff, parents, and community members on psychological support for children affected by conflict.(18, 45)

In 2014, the Civil Status and Registration Authority, in cooperation with UNICEF, carried out a campaign to issue birth certificates for children who lacked them. The program was not continued in 2015.(5)

Research found no programs intended to remove, rehabilitate, and reintegrate children engaged in armed conflict.(19) Although Yemen has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in fishing.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Zambia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Zambia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the Employment Amendment Act to prohibit casual employment in the informal sector, which may have an indirect effect on child labor. The Government also approved a new youth policy that includes education and empowerment strategies for youth and continued to incrementally scale up its Social Cash Transfer Program. However, children in Zambia continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of tobacco and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Gaps also remain in the current legal framework related to children; for example, the Education Act does not include the specific age at which education is compulsory, and the Government has not defined what the school-going age is as required in the law, which may leave children under the legal working age vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Zambia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of tobacco and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Zambia.

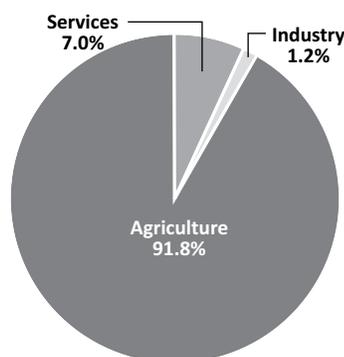

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	28.1 (992,722)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	65.2

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children trafficked inside Zambia are primarily trafficked from rural to urban areas for domestic work and agriculture.(1, 12, 15) Some children in Zambia are forced to load trucks with stolen copper ore by Jerabo gangs, which are illegal mining syndicates in the Copperbelt province.(2, 12, 15) Along Zambia’s borders, the commercial sexual exploitation of children is common.(12) The Government has yet to release information on child labor from its 2008 Labor Force Survey, although the general Labor Force Survey results – which did not include data on child labor – were released in 2011 and 2014.(3, 16, 17)

Long distances to schools create a barrier to education.(6) Costs also occur for basic education, including fees for school supplies, that prevent some children from attending school.(2, 6, 14)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Zambia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Zambia has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, although commercial sexual exploitation of children continues to be a problem in the country.(12)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 15 of the Education Act, 2011 (25)

* No conscription.(24)

During the reporting period, the Government passed the Employment Amendment Act which aims to reduce child labor by addressing exploitation in casual labor.(3, 26) The Government also passed the Gender Equality and Equity Act, which seeks to reduce school dropout rates among girls.(27) However, gaps remain in the legal framework. Penalties for child prostitution violations in the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act are different from those in the Penal Code.(28) While the Penal Code treats child prostitution as a felony, with a minimum 20-year jail sentence, the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act treats it as a civil penalty and imposes a fine of $35 to $165 and possible discretionary prison time. In practice, the heavier statute of the Penal Code would be applied; however, research did not uncover any such prosecutions in recent years.(29)

The Education Act requires the Government to provide free education up to the seventh grade, and stipulates that education is compulsory for children of “school-going age.”(1, 25, 30) The Act, however, does not set a specific age or define “school-going age,” which may allow children to leave school before they are legally able to work.(25) The lack of standards in this area may increase the risk of children’s involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) Child Labor Unit (CLU)	Implement and enforce child labor laws.(1, 11) Plays advisory role for different Government agencies. Is also responsible for the regulation of child labor laws.(17)
Zambia Police Service Child Protection Unit	Work with MLSS and Ministry of Youths, Sports, and Child Development to identify and remove vulnerable children from the streets. Work with 72 District Street Children Committees to rescue street children from child labor, including the worst forms, and place them with families, in foster care, or in children’s homes.(3, 16) Work with immigration officials to combat child trafficking, with local officials, regarding crimes against children and with schools to educate and sensitize children about abuse. Collaborate with the Ministry of Justice to investigate and prosecute child labor cases.(16, 31)
Zambia Police Service Victim Support Unit	Handle the enforcement of laws against human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and use of children in illicit activities.(1, 11, 16)
Ministry of Justice	Investigate and prosecute child labor cases.(16, 31)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Zambia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) employed 81 labor inspectors, which is an increase from the 58 employed in 2014.(32) According to the ILO recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Zambia should employ roughly 172 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(3, 11, 33-35) The MLSS reported that it conducted training in the Western province, but research was unable to determine what type of training was conducted, who was trained, and whether it included child labor issues. The Child Labor Unit was allocated approximately $35,800 for 2015.(3) The funding amount represents an increase in funding in the local currency but a decrease in funding based on the value of the currency, compared with the $46,000 allocated for 2014.(3, 11) The MLSS stated that the budget, training, and transportation were inadequate to conduct inspections.(3) The MLSS is authorized to conduct labor inspections in registered private institutions only; it does not conduct investigations in unregistered institutions, as allowed by law, in which child labor is more likely to be found.(1, 36) While no labor officers were employed in 2015, a referral mechanism does exist through District Child Labor Committees that allows labor officers to refer cases to NGOs; however, not all districts have a committee.(11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Zambia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Zambia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Department of Immigration provided training to 106 law enforcement officers during the reporting period.(37) In addition, it was previously reported that the Zambia Police Service Child Protection Unit employed seven investigators, but that their training was inadequate.(11) Inspections are carried out based on complaints only and include site visits.(11)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MLSS	Coordinate Government efforts on issues of child labor, including its worst forms.(1)
MLSS-CLU	Coordinate with District Child Labor Committees in 26 of Zambia's 102 districts to increase local awareness and mobilize communities against child labor, including its worst forms.(1, 11)
Ministry of Youths, Sports, and Child Development Child Development Department	Coordinate legislation on child labor.(3)
Zambia Police Service Child Protection Unit	Coordinate with the Ministry of Community Development, Mother, and Child Health to protect children from general abuse, including the worst forms of child labor.(1, 3)
District Child Labor Committees	Respond to child labor complaints at the local level and file complaints to the MLSS. Serve as the main referral mechanism for social welfare services, a mechanism that is reported to be improving. Comprises the Zambia Police Service, the MLSS, the Ministry of Community Development, Mother, and Child Health, and civil society stakeholders.(1) The Government intends to establish Committees in all districts, but lacks the resources to do so. DCLCs serve as the main referral mechanism for social welfare services, and it was reported that these mechanisms have been improving.(1, 11)

Due to overlapping responsibilities and communication lapses, individual agency mandates may not be carried out effectively in some cases.(16)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Zambia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Policy	Establishes an action plan and designates responsible agencies to address child labor issues.(1, 30)
National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2010–2015)	Identifies five specific priorities for the Government to focus on: (1) improve and enforce existing laws and policies on child labor, (2) protect all children from hazardous labor, (3) strengthen institutional capacity, (4) raise awareness, and (5) establish monitoring and evaluation systems.(1, 30)
Revised Sixth National Development Plan (2013–2016)	Includes the eradication of the worst forms of child labor as a goal, and places emphasis on early childhood education and a child's right to education.(1, 11, 38)
National Employment and Labor Market Policy	Contains the elimination of child labor as a goal.(16, 39)
UNDAF (2011–2015)	Seeks to prevent the worst forms of child labor, protect children, and rehabilitate offenders who engaged in the worst forms of child labor, in accordance with the Revised Sixth National Development Plan.(40)
Education Policy and Education Act, 2011*	Establishes the rights of children, including the right to free education, and provides for the reentry of teen mothers into school.(1, 25)
National Youth Policy*† (2015–2019)	Includes education and empowerment strategies for youth.(3)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Efforts to implement the National Child Labor Policy have been restricted by inadequate funding.(30)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Zambia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Achieving Reduction of Child Labor in Support of Education I (2012–2016)	A $1.6 million 5-year project that provides strategies to reduce the worst forms of child labor in tobacco-growing communities.(41, 42) A project evaluation highlighted progress in raising awareness on child labor.(37)
Achieving Reduction of Child Labor in Support of Education II (2015–2018)*	JTI-funded, 3-year global training program that provides strategies to reduce the worst forms of child labor in tobacco-growing communities in Brazil, Malawi, Tanzania, and Zambia.(43)
Program to Reduce the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Tobacco-Growing Communities in Zambia (2011–2015)	JTI-funded, $4.5 million 4-year project that aims to reduce child labor in tobacco-growing communities in Brazil, Malawi, and Zambia. Promotes educational access, economic empowerment, and improved regulatory frameworks around child labor in the tobacco sector.(44)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2016)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research in Zambia.(45)
Social Cash Transfer Program†	Government program, provides funds to families and has been shown to increase school enrollment. Scaled up by the Government over time.(3, 11, 46, 47)
Government child labor sensitization efforts†	National and district government programs to sensitize the public to child labor through implementing partners and awareness campaigns.(1, 3)
Strengthening Social Dialogue as an Effective Tool to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labour	Irish Aid-funded, five-country project, promotes social dialog with the aim of reducing child labor.(48)
Testing Methodologies to Support Informal Economy Workers and Small Producers to Combat Hazardous Child Labor	Irish Aid-funded, 1-year project, builds capacity of informal economy workers and small producers to address hazardous child labor in Benin, Ghana, India, Malawi, and Zambia.(49)
Decent Work Country Programme (2013–2016)	Government program, emphasizes human development, including social protection, child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking.(50)
Protecting Migrant Children from Trafficking and Exploitation (2013–2015)	EU-funded $2.7 million, 3-year program implemented by UNICEF, the IOM, the UNHCR, and the Government to combat child trafficking, largely in migrant communities.(3, 11, 51)
Zambia National Service Skills Training Camp†	Government program, provides life-skills training camps for at-risk youth, including for victims of the worst forms of child labor.(16, 30)
Youth Empowerment Fund†	Government program, provides start-up capital for youth to start businesses, based on their skills.(1)
School Feeding Program†	Ministry of Education program, initiated by the WFP, provides meals for children who attend school.(1, 52)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Zambia.

Although Zambia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly for children working in agriculture and mining, and those working on the streets.

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
34. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
35. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex, 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Zimbabwe

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Zimbabwe made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Zimbabwe passed the Labor Amendment Act to increase the minimum age for work from 15 to 16 years, and the minimum age for apprenticeships from 13 to 16 years. The Government also established an inter-ministerial anti-trafficking committee to create a national action plan on trafficking in persons and promote the reintegration and rehabilitation of trafficking victims, including children. However, children in Zimbabwe continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and mining. Zimbabwe continues to lack specific social programs targeting sectors in which child labor is most prevalent. Gaps remain in the country's legal framework against child labor, such as the lack of prohibitions of hazardous activities for children, and education is not compulsory or free, which increases children's vulnerability.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Zimbabwe are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and mining. The Government's 2014 Child Labor Survey report, released in 2015, determined that the number of children engaged in child labor between the ages of 5 and 17 increased from 341,000 in 2011 to 1.6 million in 2014.(1-4) Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Working (% and population)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of tea,* cotton,* tobacco,corn, and sugarcane* (2, 3, 7-10)
	Fishing,* including casting nets,* hauling fish loads,* and sorting fish* (2, 3, 7, 8, 11)
	Forestry,* such as dragging logs from felling sites and loading logs for transport (2, 10)
	Cattle herding* (2, 3, 7)
Industry	Mining gold,* chrome,* and extracting material from underground passages and quarries*† (2, 3, 7, 12, 13)

	Domestic work (2, 3, 8, 10, 15)

	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 7, 10, 14, 16)
	Working in agriculture and domestic work, each as a result of human trafficking* (7, 16)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3 (d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Zimbabwean children are trafficked to South Africa, Mozambique, and Zambia, where they become victims of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in domestic work. Zimbabwean children, especially orphans, are lured by family members with the promise of education or adoption, but instead are recruited to work within the country as domestic workers or forced to work in mining, drug smuggling, or other illegal activities.(17) During the reporting period, an NGO hotline, Childline, reported that 134 boys and 146 girls sought assistance after being sexually, physically, and sometimes verbally abused by their domestic work employers. (2) There are also reports of Mozambican children subjected to forced labor in Zimbabwe, including in street vending. (17)

According to UNICEF, approximately 100,000 of Zimbabwe's 1.3 million orphans survive on their own in child-headed households.(18) The breakdown of the family unit and poverty are major factors in children's vulnerability to child labor.(7, 11, 18, 19) Citizenship is derived from birth, but many children, especially orphans and children living in rural areas, are not registered due to poverty and lack of awareness of the requirements. (3, 7, 19) Children are unable to sit for exams and move on to secondary school without a birth registration, leading some to enter the workforce at a young age.(7, 19) School fees are often prohibitively expensive and limit access to education.(8, 11, 19). The deterioration of Zimbabwe's economy and manufacturing sector has also led to a recent increase in child labor.(8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Zimbabwe has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Zimbabwe

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Both Zimbabwe's Constitution and Children's Act state that children under the age of 18 should be protected from child labor unless working as a part of a course in a technical or vocational school. In addition, the 2015 Labor Amendment Act raised the minimum age for work from 15 to 16 and the minimum age for apprenticeships from 13 to 16.(21) Zimbabwean law does not mandate free schooling or establish a compulsory age for children's education.(27) The lack of a basic education may increase the risk of children's involvement in child labor.(3, 7, 19) Section 19 (3)(a) – (b) of the Constitution addresses child labor by requiring legislation to protect children from exploitative labor practices and from work that is inappropriate for their age or could harm their well-being, education, physical or mental health, or spiritual, moral, or social development.(7, 22)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Welfare (MPSLW) and Department for Child Welfare and Probation Services	Enforce labor laws and investigate labor-related complaints, including complaints involving child labor. Responsible for child protection services, including investigating, intervening in, and reporting on child abuse cases.(7, 10)
Zimbabwe Republic Police (ZRP)	Enforce laws relating to the worst forms of child labor in conjunction with the MPSLW and the Ministry of Justice and Home Affairs.(7) Address issues related to child labor through victim-friendly units in every district. Conduct transnational trafficking investigations through an anti-trafficking desk at Zimbabwe's INTERPOL office.(7)
Ministry of Justice and Legal Affairs	Oversee all courts, including labor courts. Address trafficking and child victim cases through victim-friendly courts.(7)

During the year, the Department for Child Welfare and Probation Services (DCWPS), under the Ministry of Public Service, Labor and Social Welfare (MPSLW), trained 9,000 child care workers to identify victims of child labor and report suspected child labor violations.(2)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Zimbabwe did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Address the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the MPSSLW and includes several government ministries including the Ministries of Health and Child Care, Primary and Secondary Education, and Youth, Indigenization, and Economic Development. Also includes international organizations and civil society groups, such as workers' and employers' organizations.(28, 29)
Ministry-level Committee on Children's Issues	Coordinate government ministries' efforts related to children's issues, including child labor. Meets on a quarterly basis. The Committee includes the MPSSLW and the Ministries of Education, Women's Affairs, and Youth, Indigenization, and Economic Development.(7, 10, 29)
National Task Force on Street Children	Outline strategies to combat child labor, including feeding street children at drop-in centers, reuniting children with their families, and offering counseling sessions. Chaired by the MPSSLW and includes NGOs that work on street children's issues.(7, 29) Also includes the Ministry of Home Affairs, represented by the ZRP. Meets quarterly. (7, 29)
Anti-Trafficking Inter-Ministerial Committee*	Create a national action plan on trafficking in persons and promote the reintegration and rehabilitation of trafficking victims, including children.(2, 30)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

The National Steering Committee did not meet during the reporting period, and research did not find evidence that the task forces listed in Table 8 were active during 2015.(2)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Zimbabwe has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Zimbabwe

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor (NAP)	Strengthens understanding about child labor issues creates an entity to coordinate responses to the findings of this analysis. Consists of three focus areas: education assistance, poverty assistance through a cash transfer scheme, and health assistance.(7)
UNDAF (2012–2015) *	Outlines the key issues that the Government should address, including women’s empowerment and gender equality; universal access to HIV/AIDS treatment; access to social protection services for vulnerable households; and access for all to basic social services, including education. Supports major data collection operations, including the Child Labor Survey, and aids in the development, planning, implementation, and monitoring of child labor issues.(31)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Although the MOL, in collaboration with the ILO, previously conducted a child labor rapid assessment that prompted the development of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor, the government took no action to operationalize the plan, and did not use the results of the assessment to inform policies or programs.(2)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Zimbabwe funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Phase II of the National Action Plan for Orphans and Vulnerable Children (NAP OVC II) (2011-2015)†	UNICEF Child Protection Fund program that includes a focus on equity and access to quality education for children and providing child protection services. Provides a cash transfer program that encourages families to keep children in school.(14, 32, 33) With funding from the European Commission and the Governments of the Netherlands, Sweden, and the UK, provides food and health services to high-risk families, including child-headed households. Also provides protection services for child victims of abuse, violence, and exploitation.(14, 32, 33). During the year, the Government continued its financial support by compensating officials that manage the program and by providing program oversight. (2, 32, 33).
Child- Labor- Free Zones	Hivos-funded program that establishes child-labor-free zones through the Coalition Against Child Labor in Zimbabwe (CACLAZ). The CACLAZ includes the African Network for the Prevention and Protection Against Child Abuse and Neglect, Progressive Teachers Union of Zimbabwe, and the General Agriculture and Plantation Workers Union in Zimbabwe. In 2015, the CACLAZ established child-labor-free zones in two wards of the district of Chiredzi. Teachers, labor inspectors, police officers, and other stakeholders support this initiative by sending child laborers back to school.(34)
Basic Education Assistance Module†	Government program, supported by the UK Department for International Development, which provides basic financial assistance to families for education costs, such as tuition and examination fees. Aims to keep children in school and to enroll children who lack access to school as a result of economic hardship.(33, 35, 36)

† Program is funded by the Government of Zimbabwe.

Although Zimbabwe has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Zimbabwe (Table 11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Non-Independent Countries and Territories

There is limited information regarding child labor and government efforts to combat it in non-independent countries and territories eligible for GSP benefits. Obtaining data on the prevalence and distribution of the worst forms of child labor is difficult, and statistics on child work and school attendance are often not available from the sources used in this report. In some cases, there is no evidence to suggest that the worst forms of child labor exist in certain territories. In these cases, when laws appear to meet the guidelines called for in ILO C. 182 and embodied in the TDA, and the territory has a good enforcement framework, no suggested actions have been included.

In regard to ratification of key international conventions concerning child labor, these non-independent countries and territories generally are not eligible to become members of the ILO. Even though they are not members of the ILO, ILO C. 138 and ILO C. 182 may extend to some of them.^(1, 2) Similarly, ratification of other conventions, such as the UNCRC, may also apply to some of them.

Across non-independent countries and territories, research indicates a variety of legal structures that govern laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms. Some territories are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense. Domestic laws in the Metropoli do not generally apply to these territories, unless explicitly extended. In other territories, certain domestic laws of the Metropoli apply, and in a few territories, all domestic laws in the Metropoli apply.

Research found some information on the efforts of non-independent countries and territories in the areas of laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and programs, but this information in many cases was limited.

Assessments

Evidence suggests that the worst forms of child labor are an issue in some non-independent countries and territories. These entities are assessed in the same manner that all other countries are assessed in this report. Other non-independent countries and territories do not appear to have a problem with the worst forms of child labor. These entities fall into three types.

The first type of non-independent country and territory is one in which the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (under 50). For this reason, ILAB does not write profiles on these territories. The three territories that fit this category are Heard and McDonald Islands, the Pitcairn Islands, and the British Indian Ocean Territories/Chagos Archipelago. The Heard and McDonald Islands are uninhabited, and the population of the Pitcairn Islands is less than 50 people.⁽³⁾ The British Indian Ocean Territories/Chagos Archipelago is inhabited by U.S. and U.K. military personnel.⁽⁴⁾

The second type of non-independent country and territory is one with no evidence of a worst form of child labor problem and with a good legal and enforcement framework. Given both the lack of a demonstrated problem and the presence of a preventive legal and enforcement framework, ILAB does not assess the efforts of or include suggested actions for these territories. Such entities will be marked “No Assessment.” Wallis and Futuna was the only territory not assessed in 2015.

The third type of non-independent country and territory is one assessed by advancement. A country or territory in this group received an assessment of advancement indicating whether it was making significant, moderate, minimal, or no advancement in its efforts to prevent or eliminate the worst forms of child labor. For 2015, Cook Islands and Western Sahara received an assessment of Moderate Advancement; Anguilla, Falkland Islands (Islas Malvinas), and the West Bank and the Gaza Strip received an assessment of Minimal Advancement; and the British Virgin Islands, Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Island, Montserrat, Niue, Norfolk Island, Saint Helena, Ascension and Tristan da Cunha, and Tokelau received an assessment of No Advancement.

Most of the areas covered in the summary report are considered non-metropolitan territories and are therefore ineligible to become members of ILO. While ILO still does not have an official definition for “non-metropolitan territory,” in earlier versions of the ILO Constitution, “colonies, protectorates and possessions which are not fully self governing” was used in place of this term. An ILO member can submit a declaration to ILO requesting that these conventions apply to their non-metropolitan areas. Please see the chart regarding ratifications of international conventions and selected non-independent country and territory laws at the end of this discussion.

In 2015, Anguilla made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the Government, in consultation with the Department for International Development and the Safeguarding Children in the Overseas Territories Project, developed the Safeguarding Children in Anguilla Guidelines to increase the government's capacity to address child protection issues. The Government also signed the Inter-Agency Child Protection Protocol to facilitate interagency collaboration on child protection issues. However, although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Anguilla are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, specifically in commercial sexual exploitation. The law in Anguilla does not appear to prohibit children ages 14 to 18 from engaging in dangerous work or provide a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children. The Government's laws also fail to prohibit the use of children in illicit activities. Additionally, social programs do not address the scope of the problem concerning commercial sexual exploitation of children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Anguilla are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 2) Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Source for primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Research has found no evidence that the Government of Anguilla collects or disseminates information regarding the prevalence and nature of the commercial sexual exploitation of children and other worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

British Overseas Territories (BOTs) are territories under the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United Kingdom (UK), but they do not form part of the UK. They are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense. Domestic UK law does not generally apply to BOTs, unless explicitly extended, and conventions ratified under UK law need to be officially extended to BOTs.

The following convention has been extended to Anguilla (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

* No conscription (9)

Article 3 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act prohibits children under age 14 from working in industrial undertakings such as mining, manufacturing, and construction. Article 2 of the Employment of Children (Restriction) Act prohibits children under age 14 from engaging in any occupation likely to be injurious to their health or safety.(5, 6) Although Anguillan law prohibits some hazardous work for children under age 18, it allows children over age 16 to engage in night work in industrial undertakings in the manufacturing of raw sugar.(6)

Although the Criminal Code prohibits the use of a child for prostitution, it does not address the use of a child for the production of pornography. Additionally, research could not determine whether Anguillan law prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, such as drug trafficking.(8)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that law enforcement agencies in Anguilla took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms, during the reporting period (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor of the Ministry of Finance, Economic Development, Investments, and Tourism	Enforce child labor laws through the Labor Commissioner, pursuant to the Employment of Children (Restriction) Act.(5, 12)
Department of Social Development of the Ministry of Social Development	Safeguard the well-being of children and investigate reports of child abuse.(13, 14)
Royal Anguilla Police Force	Investigate child protection cases.(13, 14)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Social Development	Implement child protection efforts and ensure Anguilla complies with the CRC.(15, 16)

The Government of Anguilla coordinates child protection issues through the Ministry of Social Development.(16) However, the extent to which the Ministry addressed the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period, particularly the commercial sexual exploitation of children, is unclear.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Anguilla has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Child Protection National Action Plan*	Calls for the development of the Child Protection Protocols. Implemented by the Ministry of Social Development in consultation with UNICEF.(15, 17, 18)
Safeguarding and Child Protection Protocols and Procedures*†	Provides guidance and support on identifying, reporting, investigating, managing, and prosecuting child abuse cases. Developed by the Ministry of Social Development in conjunction with UNICEF.(13, 14, 16) Aims to address legislative gaps in the protection of children.(17, 19)
Inter-Agency Child Protection Protocol*†	Provides a framework for interagency collaboration on child protection issues. Signed by representatives of the Ministry of Social Development's Departments of Social Development, Education, and Probation, as well as by the Royal Anguilla Police Force and the Health Authority of Anguilla. Developed in consultation with UNICEF.(20, 21)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Anguilla funded and participated in social programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Safeguarding Children in Anguilla Project†	Ministry of Social Development media campaign that engages civil society groups on child protection issues.(16, 22)
Department for Youth and Culture Programming†	Department for Youth and Culture program that provides a range of cultural activities for children ages 11 to 18 during summer months; facilitates development of youth centers where young people can participate in educational activities.(16)
Child Safeguarding in the Overseas Territories Regional Project (2014–2016)	A $1.2 million, 3-year project funded by the United Kingdom's Department for International Development in collaboration with UNICEF to increase the Government's capacity to safeguard children in the Eastern Caribbean.(23)

† Program is funded by the Government of Anguilla.

Research could not determine whether these initiatives have an impact on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Research also found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs that specifically address the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO PREVENT THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Prevent Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, the British Virgin Islands made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. Although information suggests that the worst forms of child labor are not a problem, the Government appears to lack a complete preventive legal framework to protect all children. The Government has not determined the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the British Virgin Islands.(1, 2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

British Overseas Territories (BOTs) are territories under the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United Kingdom (UK), but they are not part of the UK. They are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense.(3) Domestic UK law does not generally apply to BOTs, unless explicitly extended to them, and conventions ratified under UK law need to be officially extended to BOTs.(3)

While the Labor Code specifies that hazardous work is to be defined by the Minister, the government has not yet determined the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The Government plans to establish a committee of officials from the Ministry of Education and Culture, the Ministry of Health and Social Development, the Ministry of Natural Resources and Labor, and the Deputy Governor's Office to develop a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children.(1)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even though there is no evidence of a problem, the UK Government has established an institutional mechanism for the enforcement of labor laws for the British Virgin Islands (Table 3).

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

Child Protection Programs	Government-initiated actions, with assistance from UNICEF, related to the protection of children. Actions include efforts by the Ministry of Health to identify the barriers and bottlenecks inhibiting the full implementation of children's rights in health, education, and child protection, as well as two initiatives involving budgeting resources for children's issues.(1)

Christmas Island

NO ADVANCEMENT

NON-INDEPENDENT COUNTRIES AND TERRITORIES

In 2015, Christmas Island made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including the worst forms, exists in Christmas Island, a gap in the legal framework for light work leaves children vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists on Christmas Island.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Christmas Island Act 1958 and the Acts Interpretation Act 1901 provide that Christmas Island is included as part of the territory of Australia, as denoted by law.(2, 3) Accordingly, all legislation of the Federal Parliament applies to this territory, unless specifically excluded, including Australia's ratification of conventions.(4)

Because Australia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor, the following conventions apply to Christmas Island (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Christmas Island is subject to the child labor laws of the state of Western Australia.(1) The Government of Western Australia has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2).

Table 2. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Section 16 of the Western Australia Prostitution Act; Section 192 of the Western Australia Children and Community Services Act; Sections 271.2–271.7 of the federally-enacted Commonwealth Criminal Code Act of Australia; Crimes Legislation Amendment Act (5, 8-12)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17‡	Section 6 of the Western Australia School Education Act (14)
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 98 of the Western Australia School Education Act (14)

* No conscription (13)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (14)

According to the Western Australia School Education Act, education is compulsory until the end of the year in which a child reaches age 17 years and 6 months; until the child finishes the minimum requirements for secondary school graduation under the Curriculum Council Act of 1997; or until the child reaches age 18, whichever comes first.(14)

The Children and Community Services Act sets the minimum age for light work in delivery employment at 10 years. This is not in compliance with international standards, which set the minimum age for light work at 13.(5)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although there is no evidence of a problem, the Government of Australia has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms, which apply to Christmas Island (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Australian Federal Police, the Department of Immigration, and the Department of Regional Development	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(11, 15)
Australian Federal Police	Investigate the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including pornography.(11)
Australian Federal Police: Human Trafficking Teams	Investigate human trafficking for transnational sexual and labor exploitation.(12, 15)
Australian Federal Police: Child Protection Operations Team	Coordinate and investigate online and multijurisdictional online child sex exploitation issues, including child pornography.(11, 12, 15)
Department of Child Protection	Issue orders to stop a child from working if there is a risk of harm.(8, 16)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO PREVENT THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, a suggested action is identified that would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Christmas Island (Table 4).

Table 4. Suggested Government Actions to Prevent Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Raise the minimum age for all light work to 13 to comply with international standards.	2015

Cocos (Keeling) Islands

NON-INDEPENDENT COUNTRIES AND TERRITORIES

NO ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, gaps exist in the legal framework to prevent children from involvement in the worst forms of child labor, including a minimum age for light work that is below international standards.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the Cocos (Keeling) Islands.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Cocos Keeling Islands Act 1955 provides that the Cocos (Keeling) Islands are included as part of Australia, as denoted by law.(2) Accordingly, all legislation of the federal parliament applies to these territories, unless specifically excluded, including Australia's ratification of conventions.(3) Because Australia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor, the following conventions apply to the Cocos (Keeling) Islands (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Cocos (Keeling) Islands are subject to the child labor laws of the state of Western Australia.(4, 5) The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2).

Table 2. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Section 190 of the Children and Community Services Act (6)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Sections 2.28 and 10.4 of the Mine Safety and Inspection Regulations; Section 121(10) and (11) of the Liquor Control Act (7, 8)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Section 192 of the Children and Community Services Act; Sections 2.28 and 10.4 of the Mine Safety and Inspection Regulations; Sections 10, 11, and 121 of the Liquor Control Act (6-8)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Sections 270.6 and 270.7 of the Commonwealth Criminal Code Act; Crimes Legislation Amendment Act (9, 10)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Sections 271.2–271.7 of the Commonwealth Criminal Code Act; Crimes Legislation Amendment Act (9, 10)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Section 16 of the Prostitution Act; Section 192 of the Children and Community Services Act; Sections 271.2–271.7 of the Commonwealth Criminal Code Act; Crimes Legislation Amendment Act (6, 9-13)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 309 of the Commonwealth Criminal Code Act (9)

Free Public Education	Yes		Section 98 of the Western Australia School Education Act (15)

* No conscription (14)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (15)

According to the Western Australia School Education Act, education is compulsory until the end of the year in which a child reaches the age of 17 years and 6 months; until the child finishes the minimum requirements for secondary school graduation under the Curriculum Council Act of 1997; or until the child reaches the age of 18, whichever comes first.(15)

The Children and Community Services Act sets the minimum age for light work in delivery employment at 10 years. This is not in compliance with international standards, which sets the minimum age for light work at 13 years.(6)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although there is no evidence of a problem, the Government of Australia has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms, which apply to the Cocos (Keeling) Islands (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Australian Federal Police	Investigate the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including pornography. In the case of the Department of Immigration and the Department of Regional Development, enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(13) In the case of the Human Trafficking Team, maintain jurisdiction in trafficking matters and investigate human trafficking for transnational sexual and labor exploitation. (11) In the case of the Child Protection Operations Team, coordinate and investigate online and multijurisdictional online child sexual exploitation.(11, 13)
Department of Child Protection	Issue orders to stop a child from working if there is a risk of harm.(13)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO PREVENT THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, a suggested action is identified that would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Cocos (Keeling) Islands (Table 4).

In 2015, the Cook Islands made a moderate advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government joined the ILO, finalized a youth policy, and released the results of a study on youth, including their employment activities. The Government continued its participation in the UN Development Assistance Framework for the Pacific Region, which includes youth initiatives related to access to education and security in the Cook Islands. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the Cook Islands, gaps in the Government's legal framework may make children more vulnerable to engaging in prostitution and pornography or being used in illicit activities.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the Cook Islands.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Cook Islands is a self-governing territory in free association with New Zealand.(4) The territory follows a combination of its own laws and some of the laws of New Zealand and the United Kingdom that were enacted prior to self-government in 1965. There are no armed forces in the Cook Islands.(5, 6) New Zealand is responsible for the Cook Islands' defense at its request and in consultation with the Cook Islands.(5)

Since 1988, no treaty signed, ratified, accepted, approved, or acceded to by New Zealand extends to the Cook Islands, unless New Zealand acted expressly on behalf of the Cook Islands.(7)

The Cook Islands joined the ILO in June 2015 and has ratified one key international convention concerning child labor (Table 2).

In 2012, the Cook Islands enacted the Employment Relations Act, which prohibits children younger than age 13 from being employed.(9, 16) The Act also prohibits a school-aged person, defined as ages 13 to 16, from working during normal school hours, working for more than 10 hours a week outside of school hours, or doing work that is not considered light work.(9)

The Crimes Act and the 2004 Amendment prohibit prostitution, but do not address child commercial sexual exploitation, including child pornography.(12, 17, 18) In 2010, the Government began a comprehensive review of the Crimes Act to amend provisions to include criminalizing child prostitution and child pornography.(17, 19, 20) The Act has yet to be modified.(1) A draft Family Law Bill, which will include legislation on child protection, has been pending since 2014.(1)

Laws specifically prohibiting the use of children for illicit activities do not exist.(1)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even though there is no evidence of a problem, the Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms in the Cook Islands (Table 4).

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Labor and Consumer Affairs Division of the Government	Implement child labor laws in the Cook Islands.(21)
Cook Islands Police Service	Enforce child labor laws.(1)
Ministry of Internal Affairs and Social Services, Employment and Labor Relations Office	Provide child services.(1)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address the worst forms of child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even though there is no evidence a problem, the Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Cook Islands National Youth Policy (2015–2020)	Identifies priority areas for youth, including education and work opportunities, health, and youth risk and resilience.(22)
UNDAF for the Pacific Region (2013–2017)	Promotes sustainable development and economic growth for vulnerable groups in 14 Pacific Island countries and territories: the Cook Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, Fiji, Kiribati, Marshall Islands, Nauru, Niue, Palau, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu.(23) In the Cook Islands, includes different youth initiatives related to access to education and safety.(23, 24)

In 2015, the Government released a youth study that was published in conjunction with the UN Population Fund. The study indicated that children and young adults ages 15 through 24 were employed as laborers and in restaurants, accommodations, offices, and other areas in the Cook Islands; however the report did not specifically address whether children under age 18 were involved in child labor, including its worst forms.(25)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 6. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Falkland Islands (Islas Malvinas)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

NON-INDEPENDENT COUNTRIES AND TERRITORIES

In 2015, the Falkland Islands made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government's Safeguarding Children Board coordinated child protection efforts, including efforts to prevent the sexual abuse of children. Although there is no evidence that suggests the worst forms of child labor are a problem, the minimum ages for work and hazardous work do not meet international standards. The Government appears to lack a complete preventive legal framework to protect all children from trafficking for the purposes of labor exploitation. It also is unclear whether the use of children in drug production and trafficking is prohibited. These gaps leave children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the Falkland Islands.(1, 2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

British Overseas Territories (BOTs) are territories under the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United Kingdom (UK), but they are not part of the UK. They are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense.(3) Domestic UK law does not generally apply to BOTs, unless explicitly extended, and conventions ratified under UK law need to be officially extended to BOTs.(3)

The following conventions have been extended to the Falkland Islands (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Education Amendment Ordinance (9, 10)

* No conscription (11)

The Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Ordinance of 1968 (as amended in 2006) (the EWYPC Ordinance) and the Child and Young Persons Act extend to the Falkland Islands.(6) The EWYPC Ordinance makes it illegal to employ children under age 14 in work that exposes them to physical, psychological, or sexual abuse.(10) The EWYPC Ordinance protects these children from night work, work underground, work underwater, work at dangerous heights, and work in confined spaces, as well as from work that requires using dangerous machinery, equipment, or tools without training and supervision.(4, 6) Research did not find whether the Drug Trafficking Ordinance prohibits adults from using, procuring, and offering a child in the production and trafficking of drugs.(4, 6)

Although child trafficking has not been identified as a problem in the Falkland Islands, the UK legal system and Falkland Islands Ordinances do not appear to protect children, specifically young people older than age 16, from internal and cross-border trafficking for labor exploitation.(4, 7, 8)

The Government of the Falkland Islands passed the Children Ordinance of 2014 with the aim of providing additional legal protection for children on the islands.(12) Research did not find whether this law addresses child labor, including its worst forms.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even though there is no evidence of a problem, the Government has established an institutional mechanism to monitor the implementation of child labor laws in the Falkland Islands (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Royal Falkland Islands Police	Enforce laws protecting children against abuses, including sexual abuses.(13)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although there is no evidence of a problem, the Falkland Islands has established a mechanism to prevent the worst forms of child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Chaired by the Director of Health and Social Services, members include the Education Department, the Attorney General's Chambers, Social Services, Royal Falkland Islands Police, healthcare professionals, members of the Legislative Assembly, and a representative from the military community.(14) In 2015, the Safeguarding Children Board continued to raise awareness about child protection, including the need for prevention of child sexual abuse.(14)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Falkland Islands (Table 5).

In 2015, Montserrat made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. Although no information suggest that the worst forms of child labor are a problem, a gap in legislation prohibiting the use of children in illicit activities may leave children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Montserrat.(1)

Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Montserrat. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

British Overseas Territories (BOTs) are territories under the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United Kingdom (UK), but they are not part of the UK. They are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense.(4) Domestic UK law does not generally apply to BOTs, unless explicitly extended, and conventions ratified under UK law need to be officially extended to BOTs.(4)

The following convention has been extended to Montserrat (Table 2).

Table 2. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

While the Montserrat Labor Code prohibits the employment of children under age 16, it includes an exception allowing the employment of children older than age 14 in light work. In addition, children under age 18 may not be employed at night or in occupations designated as hazardous.(5) The Minister of Labor for Montserrat is entrusted with the responsibility of deciding what constitutes hazardous work.(5) Research did not find any law or regulation prohibiting the use of children in illicit activities.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Royal Montserrat Police Service	Enforce laws involving children.(12)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

The Government of Montserrat participated in a program that may include the goal of preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Niue made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. While there is no evidence of a child labor problem, the Government has not established adequate legal protection to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The law does not criminally prohibit the possession, distribution, and sale of child pornography or the use of children for illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs. In addition, Niue lacks a law that prohibits hazardous occupations and activities for children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Niue.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Niue is a self-governing territory of New Zealand and does not follow New Zealand laws. There are no armed forces in Niue, as New Zealand is responsible for Niue’s defense.(2-4)

Since 1988, no treaty signed, ratified, accepted, approved, or acceded to by New Zealand extends to Niue, unless it was done expressly on behalf of Niue.(1)

Niue has ratified one key international convention concerning child labor (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Although Niue's Public Service Regulations prohibit the permanent employment of any person under age 18 in public service, minimum age protections do not apply to children working in the private sector.(9) In addition, Niue has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.(1, 10)

Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient as only trafficking in persons, and not debt bondage or slavery, is prohibited. Laws prohibiting child trafficking are also insufficient because they include a force, abduction, fraud, or coercion element.(6) Commercial sexual exploitation of children, including the use or offering of a child for prostitution or pornography, is not criminally prohibited. In addition, the possession, distribution, or sale of child pornography is not criminally prohibited. Research also has not identified laws regarding the use of children for illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even though there is no evidence of a problem, the Government has established institutional mechanisms to monitor the implementation of child labor laws in Niue (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Niue (Table 6).

In 2015, Norfolk Island made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Norfolk Island, gaps in the legal framework fail to prevent children from involvement in the worst forms of child labor. Legislation also does not prescribe a minimum age for employment, prohibit hazardous work for children, or fully protect minors under age 18 from commercial sexual exploitation.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms exists on Norfolk Island.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

According to the Government of Australia, the extent to which legislation, including laws implementing Australia’s treaty obligations, applies to the external territories varies. In relation to Norfolk Island, legislation of the Federal Parliament applies only if it is clearly stated to do so or if it is obvious from the legislation in question that it was intended to do so. The territory follows a combination of its own laws and some of the laws of Australia.(2)

Evidence suggests that Australia’s ratification of conventions applies to Norfolk Island (Table 1).

In 2015, Australia passed the Norfolk Island Legislation Amendment Bill, which establishes that New South Wales (NSW) state laws will eventually apply to Norfolk Island following Commonwealth government consultation with Norfolk Island businesses and workers. While this legislation has the potential for improving legal protections for children engaged in child labor, including its worst forms, it is unclear whether all New South Wales laws will apply to Norfolk Island.(11)

Currently, there is no minimum age for employment on Norfolk Island. Children younger than age 15, however, are subject to limitations under the Norfolk Island Employment Act of 1988.(4) Children younger than age 15 may not work more than 20 hours a week, at night, or during school hours.(4) Parental consent and written agreement are required to employ persons younger than age 18.(12) Information is limited, but it does not appear that Norfolk Island has restrictions on hazardous child labor, and the Government has not developed a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children. However, employers have a duty to provide a safe working environment as well as the required safety equipment and clothing, without any charge to their employees.(13)

Section 93N of the Criminal Law Amendment Act makes it illegal to employ a person younger than age 16 for the purposes of prostitution.(8) Therefore, the criminal laws currently in force fail to fully protect children ages 16 to 18 from commercial sexual exploitation.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even though there is no evidence of a problem, the Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Employment inspectors and child welfare officers	Monitor the employment of young workers and take action with regard to their protection, including the production of child pornography.(13)
Australian Federal Police	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(14) In the case of Human Trafficking Teams, investigate human trafficking for the purpose of transnational sexual and labor exploitation. (13) In the case of the Child Protection Operations Team, perform investigations and coordinates efforts to address online international child commercial sexual exploitation, child pornography, and child commercial sexual exploitation in the tourism industry.(14, 15)

In 2015, Norfolk Island employed approximately two labor inspectors to conduct regular workplace inspections.(12)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although there is no evidence of a problem, Norfolk Island is included in Australia’s Interdepartmental Committee on Human Trafficking to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interdepartmental Committee on Human Trafficking	Chaired by the Attorney General’s Department, deals with child labor issues from a human trafficking perspective and consists of 10 government agencies including the Australian Federal Police; the Office for Women; the Department of Immigration and Border Protection; the Australian Crime Commission; the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade; Fair Work Ombudsman; Fair Work Building and Construction; the Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet; the Department of Education; and the Department of Employment.(3, 16)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO PREVENT THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Norfolk Island (Table 5).

Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha (formerly called Saint Helena)

NO ADVANCEMENT

NON-INDEPENDENT COUNTRIES AND TERRITORIES

In 2015, Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Although information suggests that the worst forms of child labor are not a problem, gaps exist in the legal framework to prevent children from involvement in the worst forms of child labor. The Government lacks legislation prescribing a minimum age for work, and the minimum age for work on vessels, which the government has identified as hazardous, is too low. There are legislative gaps in the prohibition of trafficking of children for labor exploitation and the use of children for commercial sexual exploitation. These gaps make children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha.(1, 2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

British Overseas Territories (BOTs) are territories under the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United Kingdom (UK), but they are not part of the UK. They are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense.(3) Domestic UK law does not generally apply to the BOTs, unless it is explicitly extended to them, and conventions ratified under UK law need to be officially extended to the BOTs.(3)

The following conventions have been extended to Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification

	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2).

* No conscription (10)

† No standing military (3, 10)

‡ Age calculation based on available information

Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha do not have laws establishing a minimum age for work.(11) The minimum age of 15 for work on vessels is not in compliance with international standards because the government of Saint Helena has reported that work on fishing vessels is hazardous.(1, 4).

The laws prohibiting forced labor in Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha are not sufficient as debt bondage and slavery are constitutionally, but not criminally, prohibited.(7) While the UK Sexual Offences Act 2003, which is applicable to this territory, prohibits trafficking for sexual exploitation, there are no laws prohibiting the trafficking of children for labor exploitation.(6, 12)

The compulsory education age is ambiguous for Ascensión Island; the Ascensión Island Education Policy notes that education is compulsory from age 5 until children take their General Certificate of Secondary Education exams.(9)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO PREVENT THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha (Table 3).

In 2015, Tokelau made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. While there is no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms exists in Tokelau, it is unclear whether the Government has laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Tokelau.(1) Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Tokelau is a dependent territory of New Zealand; however, international treaties are applied only with the consent of the Government of Tokelau.(2) New Zealand's ratification of conventions does not apply automatically to Tokelau (Table 1).(1, 2) It is unknown which international treaties Tokelau has consented to.

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2).

* No conscription (7)

The Schedule of Transtok Tokelau Corporation Rules allows for children between ages 16 and 18 to work on ships as an apprentice and with parental consent. However, this law is not in compliance with international standards because it fails to require that children receive adequate training and does not codify the measures necessary to protect the health, safety and morals of these children.(3) The Government also has not established laws related to forced labor, including debt bondage, child trafficking, and slavery.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even though there is no evidence of a problem, the Government of New Zealand has established institutional mechanisms to address complaints related to child labor in Tokelau (Table 3).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although there is no evidence of a problem, the Government of Tokelau has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO PREVENT THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Tokelau (Table 5).

Wallis and Futuna

NO ASSESSMENT

NON-INDEPENDENT COUNTRIES AND TERRITORIES

For the 2015 reporting period, no assessment has been made regarding Wallis and Futuna's efforts to advance the prevention of the worst forms of child labor, because there is no evidence of a worst form of child labor problem and the country has a good legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Wallis and Futuna. Wallis and Futuna has a population of 12,200 inhabitants, 3,430 of whom are children.(1) The population has decreased by 18 percent since 2003.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Wallis and Futuna is considered a French Overseas Collectivity and, therefore, Wallis and Futuna cannot ratify international conventions; however, France's ratification of such conventions applies to Wallis and Futuna.(2) France has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

French law applies in Wallis and Futuna.(1, 3) The Government of France has established laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms. These laws and regulations apply to Wallis and Futuna (Table 2).

Table 2. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article L4153-1 of the Labor Code (4-6)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article R234-6 of the Labor Code (5)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article R234-6 of the Labor Code; Decree No. 2013-915, Relative to Work That Is Prohibited and Regulated for Young People Less Than 18 Years (5-7)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 212-1, 224-1, 225-4-1, 225-14-1, and 711-1 of the Penal Code; Article 2 of Law No.52-1322 (6, 8)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 225-4-1 to 225-4-9, and 711-1 of the Penal Code (6, 8)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 225-5 to 12 and 711-1 of the Penal Code (6, 8)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Article 227-15 to 227-28-3, and 711-1 of the Penal Code (8)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Combat: Yes	18	Article L121-1 and Book II, Article L5 of Law on National Service Reform (9)
	Non-combat: Yes	17
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Articles L131-1 and L.161-1 of the Education Code (10)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles L132-1, L132-2 and L.161-1 of the Education Code (10)

* No conscription.(11, 12)

While Wallis and Futuna's Penal Code does prohibit forced labor and slavery, it does not criminally prohibit the use of children in bonded labor. The Penal Code also does not prohibit the use of children in the production of drugs.⁽⁸⁾

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even with no evidence of a problem, the Government of France has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Service of Labor and Social Affairs Inspection of Wallis and Futuna	Enforce labor laws and report violations involving children to local social assistance personnel. ⁽¹⁾
Defender of Rights	Promote children's rights, including through the prohibition of child labor. ⁽¹³⁾
French National Police	Oversee the health and safety of children. ⁽¹⁾

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for social programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

Legal Framework	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the use of children in bonded labor.	2015

West Bank and the Gaza Strip

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

NON-INDEPENDENT COUNTRIES AND TERRITORIES

In 2015, the Palestinian Authority made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the areas of the West Bank under its control. To improve enforcement of minimum age protections, the Palestinian Authority increased the number of labor inspectors and child protection officers. However, children in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and street work. Labor and criminal law enforcement agencies lacked sufficient funding. Programs to prevent or eliminate child labor in agriculture and street work are insufficient.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and in street work.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Evidence points to military training of children as young as age 13 by Hamas.(20-22) There are also reports of child trafficking from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip into Israel, primarily for forced begging.(1, 17)

Children are vulnerable to child labor in the agricultural sector, partly because the Palestinian Authority (PA) does not have jurisdiction to enforce laws in Area C's agricultural fields and Israeli settlements in the West Bank. There are reports of child labor in Israeli agricultural settlements in the Jordan Valley, where children work in excessive heat and are exposed to dangerous pesticides.(6, 18)

The West Bank and the Gaza Strip lack a sufficient number of schools to serve all children. Children often travel long and dangerous distances to attend schools, in some instances because of Israeli restrictions on access and movement.(23) Insecurity also hinders children's access to schools.(24, 25) In the 2014 conflict between Israel and Hamas, about half of the Gaza Strip's 520 schools were damaged or destroyed, including the only facility for children with disabilities.(26) Schools are overcrowded, poorly equipped, and at times unhygienic or susceptible to weather conditions.(23, 27, 28) Violence and discrimination by teachers against students who work, as well as the cost of transportation, contribute to a school dropout rate of 16 percent.(29, 30) The Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics found that approximately 56-80 percent of working children between the ages of 10 and 17 either did not attend school in 2014 or only attended part of the year due to seasonal agricultural work.(1, 31)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The PA has Non-Member Observer status at the UN. In April 2014, PA officials presented letters of accession to 15 UN treaties to UN officials. The PA acceded to the UN CRC and the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	N/A
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	N/A

The PA has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Although human trafficking is on the hazardous work list, the law does not criminally prohibit all stages of trafficking, trafficking for forced labor or commercial sexual exploitation, or domestic and international trafficking in accordance with international standards.(33, 34)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The PA has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Labor Inspection Office	Enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor.(31)
Ministry of Social Affairs (MOSA) Child Protection Department	Protect children's rights, including through the provision of services to children found involved in the worst forms of child labor.(38)
Police	Investigate violations of criminal laws, including provisions against commercial sexual exploitation of children.(38)
Office of the Attorney General	Prosecute cases of child exploitation, including child labor.(38)

In the West Bank, under the terms of the Oslo-era agreements between the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Israeli Government, the PA has civil law jurisdiction in the areas of the West Bank designated Area A and Area B, which represent approximately 39 percent of the West Bank's land area and contain approximately 94 percent of the Palestinian population. The Israeli Government has control over the city of Jerusalem and Area C; the latter represents 61 percent of the West Bank's land area and is home to an estimated 297,986 Palestinians, as well as the vast majority of the West Bank's agricultural areas where many Palestinian children work.(31, 39-41) Since the 2007 takeover in the Gaza Strip by Hamas, the PA has not had enforcement capabilities in the Gaza Strip despite the creation of the PA interim consensus government in 2014.(31, 39, 42)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, PA law enforcement agencies in the West Bank took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, MOL inspectors investigated only officially registered businesses. MOL reported that they are unable to inspect 100,000 businesses per year as required by the Labor Law, due to insufficient funding.(1) Each directorate (local PA ministry field offices) had only one car to share among ministries, and some staff used public transportation at their own expense to conduct inspections. Despite the fact that MOL employed inspectors dedicated to child labor issues, all of its inspectors were permitted to inspect for compliance with child labor laws.(1) MOL increased the number of routine inspections in agricultural fields during the harvest season, when children are likely to be engaged in child labor.(1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, PA criminal law enforcement agencies in the West Bank took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the Ministry of Social Affairs (MOSA), which is responsible for the provision of services to children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, employed 15 child protection officers, compared to 13 in 2014.(1, 18) Despite the increase, MOSA reported that it was unable to manage its large caseloads effectively.(1) MOSA coordinated with its district-level Child Protection Networks to conduct 9 inspection campaigns, which resulted in the identification of 97 children engaged in child labor; these cases were referred to the Attorney General. The number of individual inspections conducted in the nine campaigns is not known.(1)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The PA has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms, in the West Bank (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on Child Labor	Create national policy on child labor. Led by MOL and includes representatives from the Ministries of Social Affairs, Education, Health, and Justice, as well as from the ILO, UNICEF, and Save the Children.(15) Met regularly in 2015.(1)
MOSA Child Protection Networks	Coordinate at the district level between service providers, law enforcement, and the Attorney General to protect vulnerable children, including those involved in child labor.(38, 44) Composed of MOSA, the police, the Attorney General, UNICEF, and NGOs, with specific annual plans that guide their work with children affected by, or at risk of, exploitation and violence. The role of some agencies is to provide services to vulnerable children, while others ensure that crimes against children are prosecuted in accordance with the law.(38, 44)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The PA has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms, in the West Bank (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Development Plan (2014–2016)	Aims to improve the living standards of residents, including through alleviating poverty and reducing unemployment. Includes components to better regulate the economic activities of working children and remove more child laborers from the labor market.(45)
Education Development Strategic Plan (2014–2019)*	Aims to ensure free and safe enrollment, improve educational achievement, build the capacity of teachers, and reform the education curricula at all levels.(46)
Policy of Nonviolence and Discipline in Schools*	Aims to reduce violence and improve discipline in schools.(30, 47)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the PA funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
MOSA Social Protection Programs†	MOSA programs in the West Bank that provide cash assistance, health insurance, and free education.(44) Families are assessed for eligibility; one of the goals is to prevent families from resorting to child labor. MOSA and the Ministry of Education also make efforts to ensure that children who have dropped out are sent back to school.(44)
MOSA Vocational Centers†	MOSA program in the West Bank that operates 13 vocational centers for children who have dropped out of school.(38)
Palestinian Child Protection Helpline 121	Save the Children, Sweden-funded program in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip implemented by Sawa, a civil society organization.(48, 49) Provides free support and counseling to children and adolescents to protect them from abuse, neglect, violence, and exploitation.(48, 49)
Programs of the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA)	Educational support for children and youth in refugee camps, and microfinance and other forms of support to families in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.(50)
Teacher Education Improvement Project (2010–2015) and Additional Financing for Teacher Education Improvement Project (2015–2019)*	$5 million World Bank-funded, 5-year project implemented by the Ministry of Education and Higher Education to improve the skills of primary school teachers (grades 1–4) and consequently improve student learning. (51, 52) Since 2010, the project provided school-based practice to more than 750 pre-service teachers and additional capacity-building training to more than 2,000 underqualified teachers in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.(53) In 2015, the World Bank provided $3 million in additional financing for the next phase of the project (2015–2019), aimed at project sustainability, expanding services to additional institutions, bringing teacher education into alignment with international best practices, and supporting ultimate implementation of curriculum reform for primary education.(54)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is partially funded by the PA.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, MOSA provided financial assistance to families of child laborers under the condition that the children return to school, but the program was only partially successful and was insufficiently funded. MOSA indicated that additional educational programs are needed in order to address child labor, but it lacked sufficient funding to implement them.⁽¹⁾ Although the West Bank and the Gaza Strip have programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested

	Make information publicly available on the funding of the labor inspectorate, the numbers of child labor violations found and penalties imposed, and whether penalties were collected.	2010 – 2015
	Provide sufficient resources and staff to MOL and MOSA to conduct inspections.	2010 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the number of convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2015

	Expand programs to further combat child labor, specifically in agriculture and street work.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Morocco, which currently administers most of the territory of Western Sahara, made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Western Sahara. The Ministry of Moroccans Living Abroad and Migration Affairs drafted an anti-trafficking in persons law that is intended to be consistent with the Palermo Protocol, and the Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs drafted a domestic worker law forbidding employment of domestic workers under the age of 16 and strictly limiting the employment of children between the ages of 16 and 18 for domestic work. The Government formally adopted the Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children, which incorporates the National Plan of Action for Children from 2006 to 2015. Although research is limited, there is evidence that children are engaged in child labor in Western Sahara, including in agriculture. The number of labor inspectors is insufficient to effectively enforce child labor laws. Although the Government of Morocco has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children are engaged in child labor in Western Sahara, including in agriculture.(1) In general, research has not been conducted on the extent of child labor in Western Sahara, nor has research explored education levels. Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.(2)

Commercial sexual exploitation of migrant girls occurs, especially in fishing villages and on fishing boats. Some children with disabilities beg in the streets.(3) Sahrawi children are vulnerable to child labor due to barriers limiting their ability to access educational opportunities.(4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The territory of Western Sahara is currently subject to Moroccan laws.(5-8) The Popular Front for the Liberation of the Saguia el-Hamra and Río de Oro (Polisario Front), a Sahrawi national liberation movement, controls 15 percent of the territory; information on the laws applicable in this area is unavailable.(1, 6, 9) Morocco has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor, which extend to the areas in Western Sahara administered by the Government of Morocco (Table 1).

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Morocco has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs (MOESA) Child Labor Task Force	Enforce child labor laws and oversee programs on child labor. Employ labor inspectors in 53 sectors across Morocco; one inspector in each sector dedicated to child labor.(1, 15, 16) Establish satellites in nine regional centers throughout the country to provide occupational health and safety services, administer social security, organize labor inspections, and provide employment services.(16)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforce prohibitions on prostitution and other exploitive crimes involving minors, as established in the Penal Code.(15, 17)
Ministry of Justice and Liberties	Ministry of Justice and Liberties Prosecute criminal offenses against children, such as commercial sexual exploitation and child trafficking, and violations of labor laws.(15, 18) The Ministry's Child Labor Units process cases involving women and children in the court system.(19)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Morocco has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MOESA, Office for the Fight Against Child Labor	Coordinate policies and efforts to combat child labor.(16, 20) Provide guidance and limited funding to NGOs working against child labor.(21)
Ministry of Solidarity, Women, Family, and Social Development (MSWFSD)	Contributed to the drafting of the Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children. Responsible for coordinating the implementation of this policy.(15, 22) Establish continuity of child protection efforts, increase access to education, and eliminate child labor.(17, 23)
National Observatory for Children's Rights	Register complaints related to child welfare and refer them to labor inspectorate units and law enforcement officials. Operate a toll-free hotline available to child victims of violence, including commercial sexual exploitation.(21) Operate 96 Child Reception Centers that provide services to child victims of violence, sexual abuse or neglect.(8)
Inter-Ministerial Delegation for Human Rights	Establish policies that promote child protection and coordinate efforts against trafficking in persons.(15, 16) This special ministerial commission formalized in 2014 and chaired by the Head of Government, met in 2015 to formally adopt the Integrated Public Policy for the Protection of Children.(8, 15, 22)
Ministry of Moroccans Living Abroad and Migration Affairs	Coordinate efforts to reduce the migrant population's vulnerability to child labor. Promote access to public education facilities for migrant children in order to decrease their vulnerability to child labor and human trafficking.(16)
Ministry of National Educational and Vocational Training (MONEVT)	Provide education and job training to former child workers, including former child domestic workers.(15)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Morocco has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
MSWFSD Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children	Adopted in 2015, promotes an interdisciplinary approach to respond to child exploitation, among other issues.(15, 16, 22) Includes the 2006–2015 National Plan of Action for Children.(8) The implementation of this policy in 2015 included coordination with Internet providers to protect children from sexual exploitation; a Ministry of Tourism communication strategy on child protection; and a mechanism to sensitize and educate tourism companies on the rights of children against all forms of exploitation, in line with the Moroccan Charter on Sex Tourism and based on the World Tourism Organization's Global Code of Ethics.(8, 22)
National Migration Strategy*	Establishes policies that promote a human rights-based approach to migration. Facilitates the integration of legal immigrants. Provides services, including expanding access to public education facilities for migrant children, thereby decreasing their vulnerability to child labor and human trafficking.(16, 19, 21)
UNDAF (2012–2016)*	Promotes education, health, and socioeconomic development to alleviate poverty. Focuses on providing equal access to education for vulnerable children.(24, 25)

*Child labor elimination and prevention strategies to not appear to have been integrated in this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Morocco funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms, that extended to Western Sahara (Table 6).

Table 6. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
MOESA Partnerships with NGOs Working Against Child Labor*†	From January to November 2015, work with eight NGOs resulted in prevention efforts that reached 1,037 children, the removal of 1,069 children under age 15 from work and the distribution of education assistance to their families, the improvement of the work and living conditions of 1,067 children between ages 15 and 18, and the mobilization and capacity building of stakeholders in child labor prevention benefitting 9,672 persons.(8)
Tayssir Conditional Cash Transfer Program	MONEVT program that provides direct cash transfers of $7 to $16 a month to qualifying families whose children meet school attendance criteria. Provides transportation and student housing through a program with Entraide Nationale.(16, 17) Aims to increase school enrollment and reduce dropout rates, particularly in rural areas.(17, 26-28) The program helped 828,400 students during the 2015–2016 school year with a budget of $91.9 million, compared to $86.4 million during 2014–2015 school year, an increase of 6 percent.(8, 22)
Social Welfare Program	UNDAF program that addresses education, including equal access to education, especially for vulnerable children. Also addresses children's health and socioeconomic development.(21)
Rural Social Service Support†	Royal family-funded, Mohammed V Foundation for Solidarity program provides funding to NGOs that improve living conditions of very low-income populations.(16)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Morocco.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Report Guide

RESEARCH METHODS, ORGANIZATION AND CONTENT OF COUNTRY PROFILES, & FRAMEWORK FOR COUNTRY ASSESSMENTS

1. RESEARCH METHODS

1.1 Data Collection and Sources

Information was gathered for this report through desk research, U.S. embassy reporting, and limited field work. Information was also received from some foreign governments. Desk research consisted of an extensive review of mostly online materials, which included both primary and secondary sources. The sources included academic and independent researchers, media outlets, NGOs, international organizations, foreign governments, and U.S. Government agencies. Information was also collected from U.S. Government-funded technical assistance and field research projects.

Examples of sources used in this report are the latest editions available of country laws relevant to child labor, national-level child labor surveys, NGO reports on the nature of child labor in various countries, and UN reports, including direct requests and observations by the ILO Committee of Experts.(1)

USDOS and U.S. embassies and consulates abroad provided important information by gathering data from contacts, conducting site visits, and reviewing local media sources. A request for information from the public was published in the Federal Register, and a copy of the request was mailed to the Washington, DC-based foreign embassies of the countries covered in this report.(2) Data were also gathered through site visits to certain countries covered in this report, which included the collection of additional documents, as well as key informant interviews.

1.2 Analysis of Information

The existence of child labor, particularly in its worst forms, often involves violations of laws and regulations, including serious criminal violations in some egregious cases. Information on child labor may be intentionally suppressed. The victims of the worst forms of child labor may be too vulnerable or politically underrepresented or marginalized to claim their rights or even communicate their situations. These factors make information on the worst forms of child labor often difficult to obtain. Therefore, in order to compile a credible and comprehensive report, ILAB used the following criteria to assess information:

1. Nature of the information. Whether the information about child labor and government efforts to combat it gathered from research, public submissions, or other sources is relevant and probative, and covers the “worst forms of child labor” and “government efforts” as used in this report (See “Key Definitions”). Specific evidence of government efforts was preferred where it was available.
2. Date of the information. Whether the source information about child labor is no more than 5 years old. More current information was given priority, and ILAB used sources published during the reporting period to the extent possible. Information older than 5 years was generally not considered.

However, in the case of child labor statistics, certain factors contribute to less frequent generation of new data. Because government and other efforts to address exploitative child labor take time to have an impact on national-level rates of child labor, children’s involvement in such activities does not change dramatically from year to year. Child labor surveys are carried out infrequently, in part, because the child labor picture does not change frequently (although there have been recent increases in the number of surveys carried out). In order to present an overall picture of children’s work in as many countries as possible, ILAB used statistics in some cases that are more than 10 years old as of the writing of this report (from 2005). For more information on the statistics used in this report, see the “Child Labor and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions” section in Appendix II.

In addition, in cases in which previous editions of this report have asserted that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods, and in the absence of evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated, sources older than 5 years may be used. This practice makes the report’s information on such forms of child labor consistent with USDOL's List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor as mandated by the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2005 (TVPPRA). Statements that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods will be removed when there is evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated.

3. Source of the information. Whether the information, either from primary or secondary sources, is from a source whose methodology, prior publications, degree of familiarity and experience with international labor standards, and/or reputation for accuracy and objectivity warrants a determination that it is relevant and probative.
4. Extent of the corroboration. Whether the information about the use of child labor is corroborated by other sources.

1.3 Limitations

While data on the worst forms of child labor and information about government efforts to provide remediation are improving, data are still insufficient to provide a complete understanding of the problem. A lack of information may create the impression that a country has less serious problems with the worst forms of child labor than it has in reality. At the same time, this dearth of information may create the impression that a government is doing less than it should, when, in fact, efforts to combat the worst forms exist, but are simply unreported or unpublicized. Although countries with open and available information may sometimes appear to have larger problems relative to other countries, this may not be the case. In fact, countries that collect information on child labor are in a better position to eliminate the problem than those countries where such information is suppressed, because they can target their policies and programs at identified problem areas in order to achieve maximum impact.

Although information was requested from the public, including governments covered in the report, only 10 governments out of the 137 countries submitted information in response to the request.⁽²⁾ In addition, the lack of in-country data collection and access to other in-country sources of information in the majority of the countries may have also impacted the reporting.

Due to the inability to travel to each country covered in the report, ILAB relies on U.S. embassies and Internet research to gather primary and secondary sources of information. For countries where Internet access and technology is limited, there may be less information available online. Countries with more closed government processes and less civil society participation may also have less information readily available. When ILAB was unable to find information about the major topics of discussion, including the content of important laws or enforcement efforts, this was noted.

Most of ILAB's online research was conducted in English; however, some research was conducted in Spanish, French, and to a limited extent, Portuguese, Russian, and Arabic. Materials written in other languages were generally not reviewed.

Despite ILAB's best efforts to cover relevant topics as comprehensively as possible, the report cannot cover every salient issue that may affect children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor. For example, there are many factors that impact whether a household will send its child to school, to work, or to both. A lack of available information, however, limits the discussion of these issues for some countries. In these cases, we note that the profile's discussion is incomplete. Furthermore, ILAB chose to limit its discussion of education to the issue of access, and generally does not discuss education quality as research on the relationship between education quality and child labor is lacking.

2. ORGANIZATION AND CONTENT OF COUNTRY PROFILES

ILAB organized country profiles to track the types of efforts outlined in the TDA Conference Committee report. In this report, the Conference Committee indicated that the President should consider certain criteria when determining whether a country has met its obligation under the GSP program to implement its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.⁽³⁾ Each country profile contains information regarding these criteria: an introductory paragraph that provides an assessment of government actions to advance efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor, six sections that describe the problem and different aspects of government efforts to address it, and a set of suggested actions.

The content of the six sections comprising a country profile is described in detail below.

2.1. Content of Country Profiles

Each country profile begins with an overview for 2015 in a single paragraph, beginning with a statement identifying the assessment level assigned to the country for 2015. See for a more detailed discussion on the criteria used to determine a country's assessment.

Following the statement of assessment, the paragraph offers a summary of key findings in the country profile. The narrative includes any meaningful efforts taken by a government to implement its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The narrative also notes the most common or egregious forms of child labor found in the country and highlights areas in which key gaps in government efforts remain. In addition, the narrative identifies countries that, regardless of meaningful efforts made in relevant areas, experienced delays in advancing the elimination of the worst forms of child labor as a result of (1) establishing a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice during the reporting period, or (2) failing to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice that was established in previous years. Finally, ILAB also identified countries that had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident at the national, regional, or local level.

Section 1: Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of Child Labor

The first section of each country profile attempts to provide, to the extent that information is available, a comprehensive picture of the worst forms of child labor in the country. This section begins with a review of available data on working children and school attendance, followed by a presentation of the most common sectors and activities in which children are engaged. It provides information about the nature and conditions of the work when such information is available.

Section 2: Legal Framework for the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The second section of each country profile provides information on two criteria established in the TDA Conference Committee report: "1) whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor," and "2) whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures."³ Accordingly, this section describes a country's legal framework with regard to the worst forms of child labor and assesses the adequacy of that legal framework by comparing it, in general, to the standards called for in C. 182 and C. 138, as well as in other international instruments, including the Palermo Protocol and the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols. In line with the ILO Committee of Experts, ILAB considered any law that could be used to prohibit child labor, including its worst forms. ILAB also considered whether the country had ratified key international instruments related to child labor.

In this section, ILAB observed whether laws were comprehensive in their prohibitions of all variations of a particular worst form. It is important to note that ILAB focuses on legal protections against the worst forms of child labor regardless of whether a problem exists in a country. This is to ensure that legal frameworks also serve as preventive mechanisms. For example, even if a country does not have a problem with the use of children in illicit activities, if there are no laws that exist to prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, the report points out a gap when comparing laws on this issue against international standards.

With these general parameters in mind, most reports contain some combination of the following assessments. With regard to forced child labor, ILAB assessed whether a country's laws comprehensively prohibit all manifestations of the problem of forced child labor, including trafficking in persons, and debt bondage. With regard to child trafficking specifically, ILAB reviewed the adequacy of existing legal protections related to the international and domestic trafficking for both commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor against the Palermo Protocol's standard for child trafficking, including whether they prohibit the five stages of the trafficking in persons process – the recruitment, harboring, transportation, transfer, and receipt of persons.

In all cases in which countries maintain a military force, ILAB assessed whether the minimum age for compulsory military recruitment is 18 and whether the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is at least 15 years. In countries where there is an ongoing armed conflict, ILAB also examined whether the law prohibits voluntary recruitment of children by the government's armed forces, as well as other armed groups.

On the issue of commercial sexual exploitation of children, ILAB assessed whether a country's laws criminally prohibit the recruitment, use, sale of, and benefiting from monetary or in kind transactions involving children for prostitution, the production, distribution/sale of, benefiting from, and possession of child pornography, and for pornographic performances. Regarding illicit activities, ILAB assessed whether the law criminally prohibits the use, procuring, or offering of a child in both the production and trafficking of drugs.

ILAB assessed whether the types of hazardous work a country has prohibited were comprehensive, based on whether there was evidence that children were engaging in work where, according to ILO R. 190, the work may be hazardous. Because the standards on the minimum age for work in ILO C. 138 provide a foundation for protections against the worst forms of child labor, ILAB used the standards embodied in that convention to assess each country's minimum age for admission to work and the age up to which education is compulsory.⁽¹⁾ ILO C. 138 establishes that countries should set a minimum age for work of 15, or 14 for countries with less-developed economies where the country has specified an age of 14 upon ratification. It also indicates that if countries have a light work framework, they should set a minimum age for light work at 13, or 12 for less-developed economies, and that legislation related to light work should determine the activities which may be permitted, prescribe the number of hours per week, and specify the conditions in which light work may be undertaken. According to ILO C. 138, the minimum age for work shall not be less than the age for compulsory education. ILAB recognizes that the Convention calls upon member states to avoid the establishment of a minimum age for work lower than the compulsory school age. However, the opposite situation—in which the minimum age for work is higher than the minimum age for compulsory schooling—should also be avoided. It is possible that a low (or no) compulsory school age may encourage children below the legal age of employment to work because they are not required to attend school. Because such work is illegal, it may be more hidden from public view than other forms of work, thus increasing the possibility of exploitation through involvement in hazardous work or other worst forms of child labor. Therefore, the section notes when a country's minimum age for compulsory education falls below the minimum age for employment. It also notes whether a country has free public education.

Section 3: Enforcement of Laws on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The third section of each country profile addresses the third criteria included in the TDA Conference Committee report: “3) whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor.”⁽³⁾ This section describes the roles of government agencies in enforcing laws relevant to child labor, including its worst forms, and reports on labor law and criminal enforcement efforts made during the reporting period.

In this section, ILAB analyzed whether or to what degree the country had defined enforcement agency roles and had investigated and addressed complaints related to allegations of the worst forms of child labor. Because ILO C. 182 discusses enforcement to a limited extent, other international standards and practices were also considered as general evaluating guidelines, including those from ILO Conventions 81 and 129 on Labour Inspection and Labour Inspection in Agriculture, respectively. To the extent possible, ILAB assessed whether the country had:

- Established labor inspection systems;
- Provided sufficient funding and resources to enforce child labor laws and regulations;
- Employed a sufficient number of inspectors according to the ILO's recommendation to enforce the country's child labor laws and regulations;
- Provided sufficient training to inspectors, including initial training for new employees, training on new laws related to child labor, and refresher courses;
- Developed and implemented an adequate labor inspection strategy that allowed for different types of on-site inspections of worksites (for example, routine, targeted, complaint-driven, and unannounced inspections), and conducted inspections with sufficient frequency and in all relevant sectors;
- Provided sufficient authority to the labor inspectorate to sanction child labor violations and follow through with sanctions where appropriate; and
- Published information on specific inspection results and fines or sanctions imposed for violation of child labor laws and regulations, including its worst forms.
- A complaint mechanism for labor violations.
- A reciprocal referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services.

Although ILAB researched and requested law enforcement information in each of the above areas for this year's report, this information was not available in all cases. For example, in many cases, ILAB did not have enough information to determine whether numbers of inspectors were sufficient in the country. Only in certain situations, where the government acknowledged they did not have a sufficient number of labor inspectors or ILAB obtained information indicating that the number of labor inspectors was small relative to the size of the country's workforce, did ILAB make findings of insufficiency. In the latter situation, ILAB considered the ILO's recommendation that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach 1:10,000 in industrial market economies, 1:15,000 in industrializing economies, 1:20,000 in transition economies, and 1:40,000 in less developed countries in determining whether a finding should be made.(4)

Additionally, ILO R. 190 states that countries should criminally prohibit the categorical worst forms of child labor, in Articles 3(a)-(c). Therefore, the report also assessed whether for criminal law enforcement the country had:

- Established criminal investigation systems;
- Provided sufficient funding and resources to enforce worst forms of child labor laws and regulations;
- Provided sufficient training to investigators, including initial training for new employees, training on new laws related to child labor, and refresher courses;
- Conducted an adequate number of investigations related to the worst forms of child labor;
- Published information on specific investigation results and violations, prosecutions and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.
- A reciprocal referral mechanism between criminal authorities and social services.

Section 4: Coordination of Government Efforts on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The fourth section of each country profile also addresses the third criterion included in the TDA Conference Committee report: "(3) whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor."(3) This section provides information on institutions charged with coordinating overall efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms, in the country. Although the Conference Committee report speaks only to whether such mechanisms are in place with regard to investigation and complaints of the worst forms of child labor, ILO C. 182, Article 5, states that "[e]ach Member shall, after consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, establish or designate appropriate mechanisms to monitor the implementation of the provisions giving effect to this Convention." ILAB applied this concept of monitoring to all provisions of the Convention, not just those directly related to enforcement of child labor laws. However, since the term "monitor" is often associated exclusively with enforcement activities, ILAB uses the term "coordinate" to describe this function.

Section 5: Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The fifth section of each country profile provides information on the fourth criterion in the TDA Conference Committee report: "whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor."(3) This section describes a country's policies and plans to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

ILAB used the framework provided in ILO R. 190, Article 15(f), which illustrates measures that countries might take to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as "encouraging the development of policies by undertakings to promote the aims of the Convention."(5) In ILO C. 182 and in comments from the ILO Committee of Experts, the terms "programs" and "plans of action" are often used interchangeably. Indeed, it is difficult to distinguish, in some cases, among a policy, a plan, and a program.(6) For purposes of the TDA Report, a policy on child labor is defined as a framework that lays out general principles that are intended to guide a government's actions on child labor. Although policies may call for the passage of new laws and the establishment of new programs, for the purposes of the TDA Report, whether laws are adopted or programs are implemented is discussed in the "Legal Framework for the Worst Forms of Child Labor" section or the "Social Programs to Address Child Labor" section, respectively.

Specifically, ILAB assessed whether governments had done the following:

- Established specific child labor policies, any related development policies that explicitly incorporate the issue of child labor, or any related development policies that do not explicitly target child labor but that could have an impact on the problem. (ILAB determined that because so few governments distinguish between worst forms of child labor and child labor, any policy on child labor, whether targeted to worst forms of child labor or not, would be discussed.)

- Ensured that these policies included specific action plans, assigned responsibilities, established goals, and set timetables.
- Implemented its established policies and plans.

Section 6: Social Programs to Address Child Labor

The sixth section of each country profile provides information on the fifth criterion in the TDA Conference Committee report: “whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.”⁽³⁾ As in the section on policies, this section describes both programs focused on the worst forms of child labor and those focused on all forms of child labor, because countries often do not distinguish between the two in child labor programs. Also, as in the policies section, this section discusses programs that focus on child labor specifically, as well as programs that address poverty, education, and other related matters that could have a beneficial impact on child labor. Only programs launched or implemented during the reporting period are included in this section.

ILAB generally considered the implementation of projects through international organizations to be government efforts because the projects can only be carried out with the consent of the government and such efforts are sometimes considered part of national budgets.

ILAB applied standards embodied in Articles 6 and 7 of ILO C. 182 to assess country programs to combat child labor. ILO R. 190 was also used in determining the kinds of efforts that governments might make, such as giving special attention to girls, providing training to employers and workers, and raising awareness. With this in mind, ILAB assessed whether governments had:

- Participated in any social programs to combat child labor, including programs aimed at directly preventing and withdrawing children from child labor;
- Implemented social programs with sufficient resources to combat the scope and magnitude of the child labor problem at issue;
- Targeted at-risk populations; and
- Implemented social programs successfully and sustainably.

SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The last section of each country profile is a set of suggested actions. These suggested actions serve as a roadmap of efforts that individual countries can follow to more fully address the worst forms of child labor. The year in which a suggested action was first provided is listed in the table followed by every year the action was included in the report and not addressed.

3. FRAMEWORK FOR COUNTRY ASSESSMENTS

3.1 Objective for Country Assessments

ILAB is using an assessment tool to clearly indicate and highlight the status of efforts by each country benefiting from U.S. trade preferences to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

3.2 Research Question Guiding Country Assessments

The research question that ILAB is asking in its assessment of an individual beneficiary country is, “To what extent did the beneficiary country advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period?”

3.3 Scope of Country Assessment

As discussed, the TDA Conference Committee report outlines the following six criteria that the President is asked to consider in determining whether a country is implementing its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor:

1. Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor;
2. Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures;
3. Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints related to allegations of the worst forms of child labor;

4. Whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor;
5. Whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor, and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor; and
6. Whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.

The country assessment tool is intended to inform the sixth criterion listed above: “whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.” In preparing the assessments, ILAB evaluated the first five criteria listed above, grouping them into the same five areas addressed in the individual country profiles: laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. The assessment is based on an analysis of the status of each country’s efforts in these five areas considered as a whole and compared to their own prior efforts. The assessments do not take into account the impact of the government actions on the problem, or whether they have a documented effect in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. This type of analysis would require rigorous impact evaluations and assessments based on data from solid research designs, which is beyond the scope of this report. Importantly, the assessment is not intended to reflect a determination of “whether a country has implemented its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.” That determination is reserved for the President.

3.4 Method for Determining a Country Assessment

Each country profile presented in this report identifies a set of suggested actions for governments to take in order to advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The implementation—or lack of implementation—of these suggested actions establishes a baseline, or point of reference, from which to assess a country’s advancement. These actions, in combination with other efforts undertaken by a country, were considered when assessing the level of a country’s advancement during the current reporting period compared with the previous reporting period.

Once a country’s efforts were identified, ILAB assessed (1) the significance of efforts—actions that could have an impact in eliminating the worst forms of child labor—undertaken during the reporting period, and (2) the extent to which these efforts addressed the first five TDA criteria, outlined above, in a limited or meaningful manner during the reporting period. In addition, ILAB reviewed whether there were delays in advancing the worst forms of child labor as a result of a government (1) establishing a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice during the reporting period, or (2) failing to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice that was established in previous years. Finally, ILAB also examined whether countries had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in forced child labor in more than an isolated incident at the national, regional, or local level.

To promote consistency and transparency, and to operationalize those first five TDA criteria, each country’s efforts were analyzed according to a uniform set of guidance questions related to the five general areas of laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. These guidance questions are presented in Appendix II.

As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

CHILDREN'S WORK AND EDUCATION STATISTICS: SOURCES AND DEFINITIONS

Approximately 122 country profiles in this report include a statistical table (Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education) with data on the percent of working children, school attendance rate, percent of children who combine school and work, and/or primary completion rate. For a smaller set of profiles, the percent of children who work by sector is provided in a chart in each profile.

This section provides definitions and describes the sources for these data. This section also discusses some of the strengths and weaknesses of these data. While in a few cases more current sources of data may be available than those used here, the report uses the most reliable, standardized sources available to date to allow for cross-country comparisons. Because reliable child labor surveys are not available for many countries, in some cases, USDOL uses statistics from child labor surveys that are more than 10 years old (data from 2005) at the time of writing this report. In the event that data did not exist from the sources described below, no other reliable and publicly available source of data exists for a country, or data exists but had not been analyzed to allow for cross-country comparisons, the report concludes that the statistics are "unavailable."

WORKING CHILDREN (CHILDREN IN EMPLOYMENT)

Many of the statistical tables in the country profiles in this report present data on the percentage and number of working children (children in employment) in the country in question. Data presented in the current report may differ from data that were presented in previous reports because more updated data have become available.

Definition

Working children or children in employment are those engaged in any economic activity for at least 1 hour during the reference period. Economic activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production (principally the production of goods and services for own use). The work children perform may be in the formal or informal economy, inside or outside family settings, for pay or profit. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child's own household for an employer (paid or unpaid). This definition is in accordance with the Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labour (Resolution II) adopted by the 18th International Conference of Labour Statisticians (ICLS) in 2008 and the report, Marking Progress Against Child Labour, published by the ILO in 2013.(1, 2)

Children in Employment Versus Child Labor

This report presents statistics on working children rather than children involved in child labor (for the precise definitions of these terms, please see the "Definitions Related to Child Labor" section). The definition of working children does not vary among countries. For this reason, statistics on working children are comparable across countries. In contrast, child labor statistics are based on national legislation, including, for example, the minimum age for work, which vary from country to country. As a result, child labor data are not comparable across countries.

Data Sources and Limitations

Data are from UCW project analysis of primarily four survey types: (1) ILO's SIMPOC surveys; (2) UNICEF's Multiple Indicator Cluster Surveys (MICS); (3) World Bank-sponsored surveys, including Living Standards Measurement Surveys (LSMS), Priority Surveys, and others; and (4) other types of survey instruments including Labor Force Surveys (LFS) and Demographic and Health Surveys (DHS).(3) The first three survey programs are commonly recognized as being the primary sources for data on children's work and child labor and, therefore, generally received priority over all other available data sources.(4)

According to UCW researchers, typical surveys on children's work do not collect enough detailed information on children's activities to accurately measure economic activity.(5) This sentiment was echoed in December 2008 at the 18th ILO International Conference of Labor Statisticians. A resolution was adopted at the conference that provides guidelines for governments on collecting child labor data. Specifically, the guidance indicates that countries may choose to use a broad framework to measure children's work and child labor that encompasses unpaid household services or that countries may use a narrower definition of children's work that excludes such services, as long as the definition used is clearly specified.(6) This resolution is contributing to the collection of more comparable data on children's involvement in non-market activities.

In analyzing the data from the above-mentioned surveys, UCW attempted to apply a standard definition of children's work. Although UNICEF MICS and ILO SIMPOC reports, for example, each use a different definition of work (as of the writing of this report, MICS survey reports include household chores in their definition of work, while SIMPOC reports do not), to the extent possible UCW applied a common definition of work to the micro-data described. To date, this has resulted in the individual analysis of more than 152 data sets. While every attempt was made to present a standardized child work statistic, there are differences across surveys that have the potential to affect the comparability of statistics across countries and across years. Some of these differences are explained in greater detail here but in general include differing age groups, questionnaire content and wording, purpose of the survey, sample design, non-sampling errors, and year of data collection.

In general, data are presented for children ages 5-14, but some of the profiles present a work statistic for children ages 6-14, 7-14, or 10-14, depending on the age categories used in the original survey. The wording of work-related questions may also impact results. For example, the question on work in these surveys usually refers to work in the past 7 days; however, some surveys may refer to work activities in the past 12 months and are therefore likely to capture a higher proportion of working children than surveys with 7-day timeframes. The purpose of the survey—whether the survey is designed specifically to measure children's work and child labor (SIMPOC surveys) or to measure the impact of poverty reduction programs (World Bank's LSMS)—may affect estimates of children's work. In addition, sample design may impact survey results. For example, children's work is often geographically clustered, and SIMPOC surveys are designed to capture children's work in such geographic areas. As a result, estimates of working children based on SIMPOC data are typically higher when compared to estimates based on LSMS surveys, which do not use the same sample design.⁽⁷⁾ The ILO and UCW continue to investigate the effects of these survey differences on estimates of children's work.

As noted, some country profiles also include the sector in which children reportedly work. For some surveys, sector of work was not reported by the entire sample of working children. Therefore, the distribution of children working by sector (i.e., agriculture, industry, and services) represents children with non-missing data for sector of work. For more information on the sectors of work reported in the chart, see Table 1 in "Formats".

PERCENT OF CHILDREN ATTENDING SCHOOL

The percentage of children attending school is the share of all children within a specified age group that reported attending school. The UCW project data described above in the section "Working Children" are used to develop country-specific school attendance statistics. To be consistent with estimates of child work, the age group for which attendance statistics are calculated for children is generally ages 5-14 years. In some cases, however, different age categories are used, usually ranging from ages 6-14 years or 7-14 years.

PERCENT OF CHILDREN COMBINING SCHOOL AND WORK

The percentage of children who combine school and work is the share of all children within a specified age group reporting both working and attending school. The UCW project data described above in the section "Working Children" are used to develop country-specific statistics on children combining school and work. The age group for which these statistics are calculated is usually for children ages 7-14 years.

PRIMARY COMPLETION RATE

This report uses the "gross intake ratio in the last grade of primary" as a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades.

Data Sources and Limitations

Unlike the other statistics presented in the country data tables, which are all based on UCW analysis as described above, primary completion rate data are from the UNESCO Institute for Statistics. The data were downloaded on December 16, 2015, and are available at <http://www.uis.unesco.org/Pages/default.aspx?SPSLanguage=EN>. For more information on this statistic, please see the UNESCO Institute for Statistics Glossary at <http://glossary.uis.unesco.org/glossary/en/home>.

UNESCO uses population estimates from the United Nations Population Division (UNDP) to calculate some of the rates it publishes, including the gross intake ratio to last grade of primary. These population estimates change over time.

(The last revision that affected the statistics used in this report was in 2015.) All population-based indicators, including gross intake ratio to last grade of primary, for all years are re-calculated using these latest estimates. For some countries/years, when the new UNDP population estimates are found to be inconsistent with education data, related indicators are removed. All updates made to UNESCO data on gross intake ratio to last grade of primary are reflected in the primary completion rate statistic included in this report.

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

Basic Education

Article 7(c) of ILO C. 182 requires countries to “ensure access to free basic education.” According to the International Standard Classification of Education (ISCED), basic education corresponds to the first nine years of formal schooling and is comprised of primary and lower secondary education. Primary education is considered to be the first stage of ‘basic education’ and covers six years of full-time schooling with the legal age of entrance normally being not younger than five years or older than seven. It is designed to give pupils a sound basis in reading, writing, and mathematics along with an elementary understanding of other subjects, such as history, geography, natural science, social science, religion, art, and music. Lower secondary education is more subject-focused and requires specialized teachers. It corresponds to some three years of schooling and marks the end of compulsory education where it exists. Basic education can also include a wide variety of non-formal and informal public and private educational activities offered to meet the defined basic learning needs of groups of people of all ages.

Article 13 of the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR) indicates that primary education should be compulsory and free to all. Secondary education, including technical and vocational education, should be available and accessible to all, and free education should be progressively introduced. Article 28 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child affirms the right of the child to education and the State’s duty to ensure primary education is free and compulsory.

Bonded Labor

Bonded labor or debt bondage is “the status or condition arising from a pledge by a debtor of his personal services or those of a person under his control as security for a debt if the value of those services as reasonably assessed is not applied towards the liquidation of the debt or the length and nature of those services are not respectively limited and defined,” as defined in the UN Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956).

Bonded labor typically occurs when a person who needs a loan and has no security to offer, pledges his/her labor, or that of someone under his/her control, as a security for a loan. In some cases, the interest on the loan may be so high that it cannot be paid. In others, it may be deemed that the bonded individual’s work repays the interest on the loan but not the principal. Thus, the loan is inherited and perpetuated, and becomes an inter-generational debt.

Bonded labor is identified as one of the worst forms of child labor in ILO C. 182.

Child Domestic Worker

Child domestic workers or domestics are children who work in third party private households under an employment relationship. Child domestic workers engage in a variety of tasks, including cleaning, cooking, gardening, collecting water, and caring for children and the elderly. Child domestic workers sometimes have live-in arrangements, whereby they live in their employer's household and work in exchange for room, board, and sometimes education. Child domestic workers are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including sexual, physical, and verbal abuse, in large part because they often depend on their employers for basic needs and work in locations hidden from public view.

Child Labor Elimination Projects

Since 1995, USDOL has funded over 301 projects in 93 countries. ILAB currently oversees more than $270 million of active programming to combat exploitative child labor. To date, USDOL-funded child labor elimination projects have rescued approximately 1.9 million children from exploitative child labor and have improved livelihoods for more than 28,000 vulnerable families to reduce their reliance on child labor.

Child Trafficking

The Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children provides a commonly accepted definition of human trafficking. With regards to child trafficking, it states: “the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of a child for the purpose of exploitation shall be considered ‘trafficking in persons’ even if this does not involve any of the means set forth in subparagraph (a) of this Article.” Therefore, there does not need to be abuse of power, control, coercion, or fraud present in order to constitute child trafficking, as the definition for adults requires. It states: “(a) ‘trafficking in persons’ shall mean the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring, or receipt of persons, by means of the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability, or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. Exploitation shall include, at a minimum, the exploitation of the prostitution of others or other forms of sexual exploitation, forced labor or services, slavery or practices similar to slavery, servitude or the removal of organs.”

The trafficking of children is identified as a worst form of child labor in ILO C. 182, Article 3(a).

Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children

Based on the 1996 Declaration and Agenda for Action of the First World Congress Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC) is defined as “sexual abuse by the adult and remuneration in cash or kind to the child or third person or persons.” The remuneration dynamic distinguishes CSEC from the sexual abuse of a child where commercial gain is absent, although sexual exploitation is also abuse. CSEC includes:

- Prostitution in the streets or indoors, in such places as brothels, discotheques, massage parlors, bars, hotels, and restaurants, among others;
- Child sex tourism;
- The production, promotion, and distribution of pornography involving children; and
- The use of children in sex shows (public or private).

ILO C. 182 Article 3(a) prohibits the sale and trafficking of children and the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution or for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Convention on the Rights of the Child spells out basic rights of children, such as the right to survival; to develop to the fullest; to protection from harmful influences, abuse, and exploitation; and to participate fully in family, cultural, and social life. The Convention protects children's rights by setting standards in health care, education and legal, civil, and social services. According to Article 32 of the Convention, children have the right "to be protected from economic exploitation and from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child's education, or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral, or social development."

Education 30 Framework for Action

In May 2015, the Incheon Declaration was adopted at the World Education Forum, committing the global community to a renewed education agenda by 2030 which is tied to Goal 4 of the SDGs which aims to "Ensure inclusive and equitable quality education and promote lifelong learning opportunities for all". The agenda is led and coordinated by UNESCO, but is implemented through country-led initiatives, with the support of multi-stakeholder partnerships and financing.

Hazardous Work

Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182 defines hazardous work as "work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children." Countries must determine what type of work is considered hazardous work by law or regulation. ILO R. 190 includes items countries may wish to consider in determining which types of work are hazardous.

ILO's Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work Branch (FUNDAMENTALS)

In 2013, the ILO's International Program on the Elimination of Child Labor, created in 1992 to help countries build their capacity to combat child labor, was combined with the Department for the Promotion of the Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work (DECLARATION), to create the ILO's Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work Branch, or FUNDAMENTALS. FUNDAMENTALS' mandate is to support member States in meeting their commitments to implement ILO Conventions related to child labor, forced labor, discrimination, and freedom of association and collective bargaining.

ILO Recommendation 190: Worst Forms of Child Labor

ILO Recommendation 190 (ILO R. 190) supplements the provisions of ILO C. 182 and provides guidance to ratifying countries regarding its implementation. It provides guidelines to assist countries in determining what type of work should be considered hazardous work and thus what type of work countries should prohibit for all children as a worst form of child labor, in accordance with Article 4 of ILO C. 182. The Recommendation describes populations in need of specific attention regarding the worst forms of child labor, such as girls and children involved in hidden forms of work. Finally, ILO R. 190 provides guidance regarding specific steps countries that have ratified ILO C. 182 should take in order to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as the collection and exchange of data on both the problem and best practices to address it; passage and enforcement of laws that penalize violations with criminal penalties; awareness raising about the problem; establishment of policies against the worst forms of child labor; and international cooperation through technical, legal, and other forms of assistance.

Informal Sector

While the concept of the informal sector was introduced into international usage in the 1970s, it was only in 1993 at the 15th International Conference of Labor Statisticians that an internationally-recognized definition for data collection was established, delineating the informal sector as unincorporated, small and/or unregistered enterprises, and the employees of those enterprises. An enterprise is unincorporated if no complete set of accounts are available that would permit a financial separation of the activities of the enterprise from that of its owner(s), and it produces marketable goods or services. The registration and size criteria are determined according to national circumstances and legislation, which provides a degree of flexibility in identifying the informal sector from country to country. However, all interpretations of this sector share the notion of enterprises whose activities are not covered or are insufficiently covered by law or whose activities are not covered by law in practice, meaning that the relevant law is not applied or enforced. Workers in such enterprises often lack the benefits of regular, stable, and protected employment. Because employers in the informal sector are generally either not covered by labor laws or not held accountable for complying with labor protections, including occupational safety measures, children who work in “hazardous” or “ultra-hazardous” informal settings likely face increased risk of exploitation, including injury. In addition, because businesses in the informal sector are not usually included in official statistics, children working in informal sector enterprises may not be counted in labor force activity rates.

Illicit Activities

ILO C. 182, Article 3(c) prohibits “the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs.” Illicit activities in this context can include crimes, but the activity need not be illegal in order to be considered illicit. According to ILO R. 190 and the General Survey on the Fundamental Conventions Concerning Rights at Work, illicit activities can include “activities which involve the unlawful carrying or use of firearms or other weapons,” as well as “the use of children by criminal organizations for transporting weapons and carrying out arson attacks or destroying public or private property, illicit activities such as housebreaking and petty theft, and that there are reports of children being engaged by adults in car breaking, housebreaking, selling drugs and selling stolen goods, ... use of children for forced or organized begging, gambling, the unlawful carrying or use of firearms or other weapons, or for the commission of an offence or a crime using violence or the threat of violence.”

Light Work

This report uses the definition of light work as established in ILO C. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment. Under Article 7(1) of the Convention, “National laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work which is—(a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received.” Countries that have specified a minimum legal working age of 14 years may permit the employment or work of persons 12-14 years of age in light work as defined in Article 7(1), but should specify limitations on their hours of work as well as activities and conditions in which light work may be undertaken.

Source: ILO Convention No. 138, Minimum Age for Employment, (1973), Article 3; <http://www.ilo.org/ilolex/english/convdisp2.htm>.

Minimum Age of Work

The minimum age of work is the age at which a child can enter into work. ILO C. 138 states that the minimum age for admission to employment should not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling and should not be less than 15 years or 14 years for developing countries who specified a minimum legal age of 14 years upon ratification of C. 138.

Non-Formal Education

Any organized educational activity outside the established formal school system—whether operating separately or as an important feature of some broader activity—that is intended to serve identifiable learning objectives. Non-formal or transitional education programs can enable former child workers to “catch up” or be “mainstreamed” with their peers who began their schooling at the appropriate age.

Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper

A Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (PRSP) is a document written by the government of a developing country with the participation of civil society to serve as the basis for concessional lending from the World Bank and IMF, as well as debt relief under the World Bank’s Highly Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. A PRSP should measure poverty in the country, identify goals for reducing poverty, and create a spending and policy program for reaching those goals. A PRSP should also ensure that a country’s macroeconomic, structural, and social policies are consistent with the objectives of poverty reduction and social development. A new PRSP must be written every three years in order to continue receiving assistance from International Financial Institutions such as the World Bank.

Primary Education

Primary education, sometimes called elementary education, refers to school usually beginning at 5 or 7 years of age and covering about six years of full-time schooling. In countries with compulsory education laws, primary education generally constitutes the first (and sometimes only) cycle of compulsory education.

Ratification

Ratification is a serious undertaking by a State formally accepting the terms of an international agreement, thereby becoming legally bound to apply it. Other ways of becoming bound to an international agreement include acceptance, approval, accession, signature, or an exchange of notes.

In order to ratify an agreement, a country must, if necessary, adopt new laws and regulations or modify the existing legislation and practice to support the agreement, and formally deposit the instruments of ratification with the appropriate depositary. (In the case of ILO Conventions, ratifications must be registered with the Director-General of the ILO International Labor Office.)

For certain international agreements that require ratification, signing an agreement or enacting an agreement into domestic law by Congress, or a similar state organ, does not mean that the international agreement has been ratified. Signing an international agreement serves as a preliminary endorsement, albeit a formality, as signatories are not bound by the terms of the international agreement or in any way committed to proceed to the final step of ratification. However, a signatory is obliged to refrain from acts which would defeat the object and purpose of the international agreement, unless it makes its intention not to become a party to the international agreement clear. Similarly, appropriate state entities may signal approval of an international agreement, but that is only one of the requisite steps on the path toward official ratification. The final step requires that the instruments of ratification be submitted to the depositary.

In the case of ILO Conventions, ILO procedures provide the option to ratify or not ratify a Convention, but do not include the option to sign a Convention as a preliminary endorsement. Generally, an ILO Convention comes into force in a ratifying country 12 months after the government has deposited the requisite instrument of ratification. This grace period provides ILO members time to enact or modify legislation to comply with the Convention before it comes into force.

TDA Criteria and Corresponding Guidance Questions

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- Although not explicitly discussed in the TDA conference report, any government that supports the use of forced child labor cannot be said to be implementing commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

Guidance Questions

1. *Was the government complicit in the use of forced child labor?
2. Has the government conducted research on the prevalence and nature of the worst forms of child labor and made the results publically available?
3. Did the government make efforts to reduce children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor by addressing factors such as:
 - a. country and region-specific practices that make children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor; and
 - b. barriers to education: lack of teachers; lack of schools/inadequate facilities; lack infrastructure (access to schools); lack of transportation; violence, including physical and sexual abuse; birth registration; and the charging of school fees.
4. Are specific populations vulnerable to child labor due to gender, race, ethnicity, origin, disability, language, or socio-economic status?
5. Were there events during the year that destabilized the country, such as armed conflict, health epidemics and natural disasters, or other social, economic, and political crises?

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- "Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor;"
- "Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures;"

Guidance Questions

1. Did laws meet the following international standards:
 - a. a minimum age for admission to employment in line with ILO Convention 138;
 - b. a minimum age for admission to hazardous work in line with ILO Conventions 138 and 182;
 - c. prohibitions on forced child labor, child trafficking, the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in illicit activities in line with ILO Convention 182;
 - d. a minimum age for compulsory military service in line with ILO Convention 182 and the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict;
 - e. a minimum age for voluntary military service in line with the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict;
 - f. a minimum age to which education is compulsory in line with ILO Convention 138;
 - g. the provision of free public basic education in line with ILO Convention 182;
 - h. ratification of ILO Convention 182; and
2. If the country's constitution and laws are not compliant with international standards embodied in ILO Conventions 138 and 182, has there been any change in the constitution or laws that brings the country closer to being fully compliant?
3. If laws were not comprehensive in their prohibitions of all variations of a particular worst form, has there been any change in the constitution or laws that brings the country closer to being comprehensive?
4. Were laws related to child labor made publicly available?
5. *Were there aspects of laws that are contrary to international standards and likely to increase children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor? This question would apply both to countries with child labor problems as well as countries in which there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and when the country has gaps in its legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- “Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor;”

In this section, ILAB analyzed whether or to what degree the country had defined enforcement agency roles and had investigated and addressed complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor.

Guidance Questions

1. What was the amount of funding for the labor inspectorate? Was there an increase or decrease in the funding and resources to enforce child labor laws and regulations and were these resources adequate given the incidence of child labor in the country?
2. Was there an increase or reduction in inspectors to enforce child labor laws and regulations and was the number of inspectors adequate given the size of the country’s workforce according to the ILO’s recommendation in Article 10 of Convention No. 81? Did the country offer initial training to new inspectors and investigators, including specialized training on child labor, training on new laws related to the child labor, including its worst forms, and refresher courses?
3. Did the government provide sufficient authority to sanction child labor violations?
4. Did the country make available information on labor law enforcement efforts related to child labor, including the number of labor inspections conducted at work sites and by desk review, the number of child labor violations found, and the number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed and collected?
5. Did the government develop and implement an adequate labor inspection strategy that allowed for different types of on-site inspections of worksites (for example, routine, targeted, complaint-driven, and unannounced inspections); Were inspections conducted with sufficient frequency and in all relevant sectors?
6. Did the government create or improve a mechanism for filing and resolving complaints expeditiously regarding child labor?
7. Does a reciprocal referral mechanism exist between labor and criminal authorities and social services?
8. Did the country make available information on criminal law enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor, including the number of investigations, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions?
9. Did the government establish or improve a process for information sharing among enforcement authorities?
10. *Were there any aspects to the country’s enforcement practices that likely increase children’s vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor?

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- “Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor;”

ILAB analyzed whether or to what degree the country had institutions in charge of coordinating overall efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Guidance Question

1. Was an agency or committee created to coordinate government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor?
2. Does the agency or committee address all sectors of child labor that are prevalent in the country or does it only address certain sectors?
3. Did such an agency or committee meet regularly and takes actions, or did it not meet regularly and take few or no actions?

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- “Whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor;”

Guidance Questions

1. Did the government establish any new policies or plans that specifically address the worst forms of child labor or any one of the worst forms of child labor?
2. Did the government incorporate the worst forms of child labor specifically as an issue to be addressed in poverty reduction, development, educational or other social policies, such as Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers, etc.?
3. Did the government establish any poverty reduction, development, educational or other social policies, such as Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers, etc., that did not explicitly address the worst forms of child labor or any one of the worst forms of child labor, but that might have had an impact on them or it?
4. If the country established any of the above plans, do they designate responsibilities, establish goals, and set timelines?
5. Using the criteria in Question 4, did the government effectively implement existing policies and plans?
6. *Were there on-going country policies or were there any changes to the country's policies that likely increase children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor?

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criteria

- "Whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor, and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor;"

Guidance Questions

1. Did the government fund or participate in any new or ongoing programs that aim to eliminate or prevent the worst forms of child labor?
2. Did the government fund or participate in any social protection programs that could reasonably be expected to have an impact on child labor? Were any of the countries' programs shown, through research, to have an impact on child labor?
3. Are the countries' programs sufficient to combat particular forms of child labor given the scope and magnitude of those problems?
4. Do the programs provide services directly to children?
5. Do the programs adequately target at-risk populations?
6. Were the programs fully funded?
7. Are the programs meeting their goals?
8. Are the program efforts sustainable?
9. Using the criteria in questions 4-8, did existing government programs improve or worsen compared with the previous year?
10. *Were there any changes to the country's programs that likely increase children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor?

*A yes response to questions with an asterisk indicates a country that would likely receive an assessment of minimal or no advancement.
