Thomas E. Perez, U.S. Secretary of Labor

Last fall, all 193 member states of the United Nations spoke with one voice when they adopted the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), a roadmap for ending poverty, protecting the environment, and promoting peaceful, inclusive, and just societies by 2030. Among these goals is the promotion of “inclusive and sustainable economic growth, full and productive employment, and decent work for all,” which has a specific target of taking “immediate and effective measures” to eradicate forced labor and human trafficking and to “secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour.”

Achieving these goals, including this specific target, requires us to work together across sectors and regions – through sustained dialogue and active partnership among governments, international organizations, businesses, trade unions, civil society, and others – to address the 168 million child laborers and 21 million adults and children who suffer in forced labor around the world. To make effective and sustainable progress, we must address the root causes of these practices. We must lift vulnerable populations out of poverty and social exclusion, helping them gain access to education and training, stable livelihoods, and decent work.

Commemorations of World Day Against Child Labor in June spotlighted the risks of child and forced labor in global supply chains, from agriculture to mining and fishing to manufacturing. They also focused both on innovative private sector practices and the critical need for a more universal embrace of “conscious capitalism” to achieve the promise of the SDGs.

Conscious capitalism recognizes that by working collaboratively, governments, businesses, workers, and civil society can do well by doing good. They can achieve success in business, throughout global supply chains, and in sustainable development. Countries’ economies and companies’ bottom lines can grow by doing right by workers and, in particular, by finding sustainable solutions to end child and forced labor.

And employers agree. Shortly after the adoption of the SDGs, the International Organization of Employers, which represents more than 150 business and employer organizations around the world, signed the Bahrain Declaration committing businesses to support the SDGs.

During the year, the United States also took an important step to remove a legal loophole at odds with the SDGs. The Trade Facilitation and Trade Enforcement Act that President Obama signed into law in February 2016 eliminated the “consumptive demand” exemption from the Tariff Act of 1930.^[1] For over eight decades, that exception permitted U.S. importation of goods made by forced, slave, convict, or indentured labor if they were not produced domestically in sufficient quantities to meet U.S. demand.

The U.S. Department of Labor works to combat child and forced labor, wherever it may be found. We raise awareness, engage with other governments and the private sector, fund programs to directly intervene in exploitative labor situations, and develop structures for lasting change and fulfillment of the SDGs.

In Afghanistan’s Herat Province, a ten-year-old girl named Nazia used to weave carpets for six hours a day to earn money to help her family. She was not alone in the handmade carpet industry, which globally uses an estimated 250,000 child weavers and an untold number of forced laborers. We fund GoodWeave, however, a non-profit that rescues children from South Asian carpet looms and inspects and certifies carpet-weaving facilities as free of child and forced labor. GoodWeave found Nazia during an inspection. Now, in addition to school, Nazia attends extracurricular classes supported by the project. She wants to become a doctor, and according to her mother, Nazia has not only improved in school but now uses what she has learned to assist her family and community, including helping her sibling and other neighborhood children with their studies.

It is in this context, recognizing the millions of Nazias around the world and the moral imperative of the SDGs and conscious capitalism, that I am honored to release the 15th edition of the annual Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, as mandated by the Trade and Development Act of 2000 (TDA), and the 7th edition of the List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor, mandated by the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2005 (TVPRA) and last issued in December 2014. The TDA Report describes the efforts of 137 countries and territories to eliminate the worst forms of child labor through legislative reform, intragovernmental coordination, law enforcement, and policies and programs. The TVPRA Report features the addition of new goods that we have reason to believe are produced by child or forced labor, which brings the total number of goods listed to 139, covering 76 countries.

These reports shine a spotlight on specific sectors in which child and forced labor can be found, the strides some countries have made in upholding their commitments to abolish forced labor and the worst forms of child labor, and how much still remains to be done. These reports help us uncover those for whom the promise of the SDGs is most important and still elusive. They provide us the factual foundation, and the inspiration, to push for the laws, policies, and practices to make this promise a reality, both in the United States and around the world.

All three of USDOL's flagship reports on international child labor and forced labor are available on our website in .html and PDF formats, at www.dol.gov/endchildlabor. These reports include the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor required by the Trade and Development Act of 2000, the List of Products Produced by Forced or Indentured Child Labor required by Executive Order 13126, and the List of Goods Produced by Child Labor and Forced Labor required by the Trafficking Victims Protection and Reauthorization Act of 2005. On our website, you can navigate to individual country pages, where you can find information on the prevalence and sectoral distribution of the worst forms of child labor in the country; specific goods produced by child labor or forced labor in the country; the legal framework on child labor; enforcement of laws related to child labor; coordination of government efforts on child labor; government policies related to child labor; social programs to address child labor; and specific suggestions for government action to address the issue.

Easy to slip into your pocket, our USB stores all three reports, as well as fact sheets about our ILAB's work, frequently asked questions about each report, and other report-related materials translated into French, Spanish, Portuguese, Arabic, and Russian.

Our Sweat & Toil App contains over 1,000 pages of research from all three reports. Sweat & Toil helps you easily sort data by region, country, assessment level, good, and type of exploitation – all without needing an internet connection! You can download the free App on the iTunes or Google Play store and access the data behind the App on our website: <http://developer.dol.gov/others/sweat-and-toil>.

ON PAPER

Kinder to our environment and easier to carry with you, our Findings report is now available in a hard-copy magazine format, which provides an overall summary of the report, regional findings related to meaningful efforts made and gaps for countries to address, and the assessment levels of each of the 137 countries. In addition, both Lists are also available in hard-copy. Send an e-mail to GlobalKids@dol.gov to request hard copies or download them from our website.

Purpose of this Report

The U.S. Department of Labor (USDOL) has prepared this 15th annual report on the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor in accordance with the Trade and Development Act of 2000 (TDA).⁽¹⁾ The TDA expanded country eligibility criteria for several preferential tariff programs to include the requirement that beneficiary countries implement their commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.⁽²⁾ The expanded country eligibility criteria apply to the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program authorized under the Trade Act of 1974.⁽³⁾ The TDA mandated the Secretary of Labor to report on each “beneficiary country’s implementation of its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.”⁽⁴⁾ ILAB carries out this responsibility on behalf of the Secretary.

Research Focus

Country Coverage

This report covers 120 independent countries and 17 nonindependent countries and territories designated as GSP beneficiaries. This includes former GSP recipients who have negotiated free-trade agreements with the United States.⁽⁵⁾ Because the population of children is extremely small (less than 50) or non-existent in the British Indian Ocean Territory, Heard Island and McDonald Islands, and the Pitcairn Islands, the report does not contain a discussion of these non-independent countries and territories. Rather, the report presents information on child labor and the worst forms of child labor and efforts to eliminate this exploitation in the remaining 120 countries and 14 non-independent countries and territories. The regional breakdown of these countries and non-independent countries and territories covered in this report is as follows: Sub-Saharan Africa: 47, Asia and the Pacific: 31, Europe and Eurasia: 18, Latin America and the Caribbean: 26, and the Middle East and North Africa: 12. Because the report focuses on government efforts, non-independent countries and territories are classified by the region of the country with which each non-independent country and territory is associated, as appropriate. Hereinafter, the use of “countries” in the report will also include territories.

Population Covered

In undertaking research on the “worst forms of child labor,” ILAB relied on the definition of a child provided in the TDA, which is the same definition contained in ILO C. 182. The TDA and ILO C. 182 define a “child” to be a person under the age of 18.

Reporting Period

The reporting period for this year’s report is January 2015 through December 2015.

Type of Employment

This report focuses on the worst forms of child labor. The definition of the “worst forms of child labor” is found in the TDA and is the same as that included in ILO C. 182. It includes (a) all forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale or trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, or forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict; (b) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic purposes; (c) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs; and (d) work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.⁽⁶⁾ Similar to ILO C. 182, the TDA states that the work described in subparagraph (d) should be “determined by the laws, regulations, or competent authority of the country involved.”⁽⁷⁾

Definitions of Working Children

Definitions related to child labor are guided by ILO Conventions 138 on the Minimum Age and 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor. ILO's Resolution Concerning Statistics on Child Labor developed during the 18th Conference of Labor Statisticians provides the international framework for measuring children's work. Below are the categories of working children discussed in our report.

Working Children

Working children (children in employment) are those engaged in any economic activity for at least one hour during the reference period. Economic activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production (principally the production of goods and services for own use). The work children perform may be in the formal or informal economy, inside or outside family settings, for pay or profit. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child's own household for an employer (paid or unpaid).⁽⁸⁾

Child Labor

Children in child labor are a subset of working children. Child labor includes employment below the minimum age as established in national legislation (excluding permissible light work) and the worst forms of child labor, including hazardous unpaid household services. Child labor is thus a narrower concept than children in employment, as child labor excludes children who work only a few hours a week in permitted light work and those who are above the minimum age who engage in work not classified as a worst form of child labor.⁽⁹⁾

Worst Forms of Child Labor

Worst forms of child labor refers to those activities described and as understood in ILO Convention 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor, 1999.⁽¹⁰⁾ Under Article 3 of the Convention, the worst forms of child labor comprise—

- (a) All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale and trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, and forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict;
- (b) The use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic purposes;
- (c) The use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs as defined in the relevant international treaties;
- (d) Work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.

Forced Child Labor

"Forced labor" under international standards means all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty for its nonperformance and for which the worker does not offer himself voluntarily, and includes indentured labor.⁽¹¹⁾ "Forced labor" includes work provided or obtained by force, fraud or coercion, including: (1) by threats of serious harm to, or physical restraint against any person; (2) by means of any scheme, plan or pattern intended to cause the person to believe that, if the person did not perform such labor or services, that person or another person would suffer serious harm or physical restraint; or (3) by means of the abuse or threatened abuse of law or the legal process.⁽¹²⁾ Forced child labor is a categorical worst form of child labor under ILO Convention 182.⁽¹³⁾

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor

For the purposes of this report, categorical worst forms of child labor refers to child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182. This category does not include the worst forms of child labor identified under Article 3(d). See "ILO Convention 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor, 1999."⁽¹⁴⁾

*Global estimates on the number of children engaged in categorical worst forms of child labor do not exist. See the ILO's global child labour trends from 2008 to 2012 at http://www.ilo.org/ipec/Informationresources/WCMS_IPEC_PUB_23015/lang-en/index.htm for more information about child labor statistics.

ILO Conventions Related to Child Labor

The International Labor Organization (ILO) brings together governments, employers, and workers representatives of member states to establish international labor standards, develop policies, and implement programs to advance decent work.⁽¹⁵⁾ International labor standards are legal instruments drawn up by these ILO constituents that set out basic principles and rights at work. They take the form of either Conventions or Recommendations. Conventions are legally binding international treaties that may be ratified by member states. Ratifying countries commit themselves to applying the convention in national law and practice and reporting on its application at regular intervals. Key ILO Conventions related to children's work are listed below, along with the minimum ages set by countries related to these conventions. Also listed are countries that have not ratified key conventions or did not establish a compulsory education age that extends to the minimum age for work.

ILO Convention 138: Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, 1973

ILO Convention 138 (ILO C. 138) serves as the principal ILO standard on child labor. Under Article 2(3) of ILO C. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, the minimum age of admission into employment or work in any occupation "shall not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling, and, in any case, shall not be less than fifteen." Countries whose economy and educational facilities are insufficiently developed may initially specify a minimum legal working age of 14 when ratifying the convention. Additionally, under Article 7(1), "National laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work..." Countries that specify a minimum legal working age of 14 years may permit light work for persons ages 12 to 14 years.⁽¹⁶⁾

ILO Convention 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor, 1999

ILO Convention 182 (ILO C. 182) commits ratifying nations to take immediate action to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Among other actions, ILO C. 182 requires ratifying nations to remove children from the worst forms of child labor and provide them with rehabilitation, social reintegration, and access to free basic education and vocational training; consult with employer and worker organizations to create appropriate mechanisms to monitor implementation of the Convention; take into account the special vulnerability of girls; and provide assistance and/or cooperate with efforts of other members to implement the Convention.⁽¹⁷⁾

ILO Convention 29: Forced Labor, 1930

ILO Convention 29 is the fundamental convention on forced labor. The convention includes some exceptions for compulsory military service, work as part of normal civic obligations, work as a consequence of convictions, working during emergencies, and minor community services.⁽¹⁸⁾

ILO Convention 105: Abolition of Forced Labor Convention, 1957

ILO Convention 105 further clarifies Convention 29 as it relates to forced or compulsory labor as a means of political coercion or education or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system; as a method of mobilizing and using labor for purposes of economic development; as a means of labor discipline; as a punishment for having participated in strikes; and as a means of racial, social, national or religious discrimination.⁽¹⁹⁾

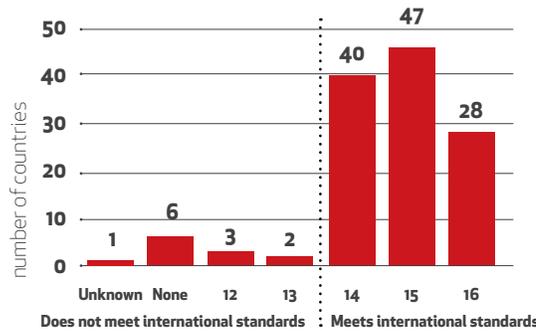

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention, 1930

The Forced Labor Protocol requires countries to take effective measures to prevent and eliminate forced and compulsory labor, to sanction perpetrators and to provide protections and appropriate remedies, such as compensation. It also requires countries to develop a national policy and plan of action to address forced or compulsory labor in consultation with employers' and worker' organizations.⁽²⁰⁾

Country Assessments

Each country in the report receives an assessment⁽²¹⁾ to indicate clearly the Secretary of Labor's findings on their level of advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period. Countries can receive one of five possible assessments: Significant Advancement, Moderate Advancement, Minimal Advancement, No Advancement, or No Assessment.⁽²²⁾

Significant Advancement. Compared with the suggested actions reported in 2014, a country significantly advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor in 2015 if it took suggested actions or made other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in all relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.

Moderate Advancement. Compared with the suggested actions reported in 2014, a country moderately advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor in 2015 if it took suggested actions or made other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in some relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.

Minimal Advancement. There are three types of countries that minimally advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor in 2015. The first is a country that, compared with the suggested actions reported in 2014, took suggested actions or made other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in a few relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.

The other two types of countries are those that, regardless of meaningful efforts made in relevant areas, minimally advanced as a result of establishing or failing to remedy regressive or significantly detrimental laws, policies, or practices that delayed advancement in the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Examples of regressive or significantly detrimental laws, policies, or practices include lowering the minimum age for work below international standards; recruiting and/or using children in armed conflict; and continuing to impose administrative barriers to child labor inspections.

- Regression in Law, Policy, or Practice that Delayed Advancement. This type of country made meaningful efforts in a few or more relevant areas but established a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice during the reporting period that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor.
- Continued Law, Policy, or Practice that Delayed Advancement. This type of country made meaningful efforts in a few or more relevant areas but failed to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice established in previous years, which delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor.

No Advancement. There are three types of countries that made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in 2015. The first is a country that, compared with the suggested actions reported in 2014, took no suggested actions and made no other meaningful efforts in 2015 to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.

The other two types of countries are those that, regardless of whether meaningful efforts in relevant areas were made or not, had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident, which is considered an egregious form of exploitation. Complicity can occur when a government is involved in forced child labor at any level of government, including at the local, regional, or national level. Such involvement is "direct" or proactive government action to compel children under 18 to work.

- No Efforts and Complicit in Forced Child Labor. This type of country made no meaningful efforts, took no suggested actions reported in 2014, and had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident in 2015.
- Efforts Made but Complicit in Forced Child Labor. This type of country made meaningful efforts, which may have included taking suggested actions reported in 2014, but had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident in 2015.

No Assessment. This assessment is reserved for countries in which the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (under 50); there is no evidence of worst forms of child labor and the country appears to have an adequate preventive legal and enforcement framework on child labor; and when a country is included in the report for the first time or when a country receives a suggested action for the first time. Currently, only certain territories and non-independent countries fall into this category.

The Year in Review

The Sustainable Development Goals: A Global Commitment to Eliminate Child Labor

The persistence of global poverty and inequality received much attention throughout the past year, particularly during the negotiation of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) by the 193 countries of the United Nations. Adopted in September 2015, these 17 goals form an ambitious 15-year plan of action for ending global poverty, protecting the planet, and combatting inequality and injustice by 2030.⁽²³⁾

Goal 8 of the SDGs—Decent Work and Economic Growth—links eliminating child labor and ending poverty. Goal 8 calls for the promotion of “inclusive and sustainable economic growth, full and productive employment, and decent work for all,” and Target 8.7 calls for “immediate and effective measures” to eradicate forced labor and human trafficking and “secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour.”

Recognition of this direct relationship is not new. Our predecessors in the fight against child labor identified a clear connection between poverty and child labor well over 100 years ago.

The beginnings of a movement to end the use of child labor in the United States galvanized in 1904 with the founding of the National Child Labor Committee

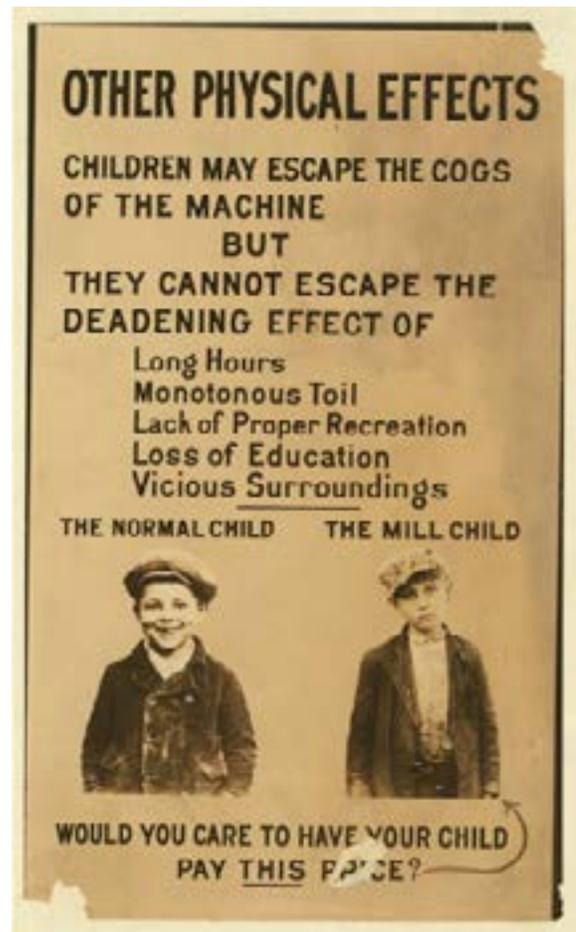

(NCLC). Its founders argued that without an education, child laborers were condemned to a future of illiteracy, poverty, and misery.⁽²⁴⁾ The organization hired investigators to document children working in harsh conditions and used photographs and statistics to publicize their plight. This information was urgently needed because the number of children under age 15 who worked in industrial jobs in the United States grew from 1.5 million in 1890 to 2 million in 1910.⁽²⁵⁾ The advocacy efforts of the NCLC led to the establishment of the Children's Bureau in 1912 as a Federal repository for child labor information. This bureau became part of the U.S. Department of Labor (USDOL) the following year. Their advocacy also led to a decrease in the number of child laborers by nearly 50 percent by 1920.⁽²⁶⁾

Grace Abbott, a trained social worker and child labor reformer, served as head of the Child Labor Division within the Children's Bureau from 1921 to 1934, where among her successes was advocating for a child labor clause to be included in all Federal Government war-goods contracts. Like the founding members of the NCLC, Abbott believed that child labor and poverty are inherently intertwined:

"Child labor and poverty are inevitably bound together and if you continue to use the labor of children as the treatment for the social disease of poverty, you will have both poverty and child labor to the end of time."

The high price of child labor was fully recognized by the National Child Labor Committee in the early 1900s, when this handbill was created.

Child labor decreased significantly in the United States, in no small part due to the tireless work of Grace Abbott and her contemporaries. Roughly a century later, we are witnessing a similar positive trend: a significant reduction in the number of child laborers around the world, from 246 million in 2000 to 168 million in 2012—a decrease of almost one-third. Even so, while progress has clearly been made, child labor around the world persists, looking very much like what Grace Abbott witnessed in this country in the first decades of the 20th century. Full implementation of SDG Goal 8 and, in particular, Target 8.7 is critical to achieving globally the kind of progress that she and others achieved here at home roughly a century ago.

The Sustainable Development Goals: A Roadmap for Ending Child Labor

“We resolve, between now and 2030, to end poverty and hunger everywhere; to combat inequalities within and among countries; to build peaceful, just and inclusive societies; to protect human rights and promote gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls; and to ensure the lasting protection of the planet and its natural resources. We resolve also to create conditions for sustainable, inclusive and sustained economic growth, shared prosperity and decent work for all, taking into account different levels of national development and capacities.”

— Excerpted from the Resolution adopted by the UN General Assembly on September 25, 2015, “Transforming our world: the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development”⁽²⁷⁾

Addressing Child Labor through Sustained Economic Growth and Decent Work

Children today can be found doing virtually every type of work under a wide range of conditions in nearly every corner of the globe. They grow the food we eat, straining to carry heavy loads of produce, wielding dangerous tools, and spraying toxic pesticides. They dive for, load, and process the fish we consume, risking drowning and exposure to cold temperatures.⁽²⁸⁾ They toil for long hours cleaning homes, often risking physical and sexual abuse from their employers. Children sell goods on the streets, sort through trash, mine for precious gems, and build new hotels and office buildings.⁽²⁹⁾ Some are enslaved, bonded to repay debts, used by armed groups to wage war, or exploited in prostitution.⁽³⁰⁾

Exploitative child labor is a complex, multifaceted problem that stems, in significant part, from poverty. Many other factors, however, contribute to the inequity of opportunity that puts children at higher risk of labor exploitation:

- Lack of access to quality education and training
- Lack of decent work opportunities for youth and adult workers
- Demand for cheap and obedient labor
- Economic shocks
- Customs that emphasize the need for children to gain work experience
- Failure of governments to implement laws and policies designed to protect children
- Household crises
- Discrimination based on race or ethnicity
- Language barriers
- Disabilities
- Armed conflict
- Food crises
- Disease outbreaks⁽³¹⁾

The mission of USDOL's Bureau of International Labor Affairs aligns with SDG Goal 8 and Target 8.7 as we seek to improve global working conditions, raise living standards, protect workers' ability to exercise their rights, and address the workplace exploitation of children and other vulnerable populations, helping to ensure that workers around the world are treated fairly and able to share more fully in the benefits of the global economy.

Inequality of Opportunity

The theme of The State of the World's Children 2016, recently released by UNICEF, is "Reaching every child: The promise of equity." This report argues that long-term sustainable growth, stability, and prosperity in any country can be predicted by the degree to which it provides every child with a fair chance to succeed. It concludes that promoting equity is "both a practical and a strategic imperative, helping to break intergenerational cycles of disadvantage and thus reducing the inequalities that undermine all societies."⁽³²⁾

Inequity of opportunity, both for vulnerable children and their families, increases the likelihood of exploitative child labor. Due to factors such as family income, social status, disabilities, or gender, among others, many children face barriers to accessing quality schools and advancing to higher levels of education. Along with older members of their families, children who have reached the minimum age for work face obstacles to obtaining safe, legal, secure, and decent jobs that pay fair wages and in which they can freely exercise their rights. These children are also at a higher risk of involvement in child labor.

As this year's Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor reflects, over the past year, some governments undertook meaningful efforts to reduce inequities so that shared prosperity could be enjoyed by more children, regardless of gender, disability or health status, race, ethnicity, national origin, migration status, or religion. This included steps to ensure that all children had an opportunity to receive high-quality education or training; health care; and, when age appropriate, decent employment opportunities to help them develop and have a chance at upward mobility in the future.

For example, in Argentina, the National Registry of Agricultural Employers and Workers (RENATEA) program provided infrastructure improvement, operating costs, and pedagogical development to rural schools located in agricultural areas where children may be at risk of child labor. The Government of Ghana's Education Service placed girls' education officers at the regional and district levels, and mobilized communities to enroll more girls in school. The Government of Jordan's Social Support Centre in Marka afforded education, training, and rehabilitation to school dropouts and child laborers, including

The Marginalization of Roma Children

Roma children across Europe and parts of Eurasia remain disproportionately represented among victims of child trafficking, forced begging, and commercial sexual exploitation. This remained true in 2015, despite the conclusion of the Decade of Roma Inclusion (The Decade). The Decade was an initiative by the Governments of Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Macedonia, Montenegro, and Serbia to eliminate discrimination against Roma people and to help them close societal gaps in income and opportunity.

Each country participating in the Decade, as well as Kosovo, maintained national policies and social programs that aimed to increase birth registration rates and access to inclusive education for Roma children. But many of these plans suffered from a lack of funding and implementation. Despite government efforts, the low rate of birth registration in Roma communities continued, often due to prohibitive registration costs, residency requirements, or a low level of awareness about the importance of registration⁽³³⁾ The lack of birth registration prevented some Roma children from enrolling in school. Those who did enroll were often placed in segregated schools exclusively for Roma children with a lower standard of education than other public schools, or in schools for children with learning disabilities despite not having such disabilities.⁽³⁴⁾ While the Decade did raise international awareness, it did not succeed in significantly improving the economic and social status of most Roma families.

The Link Between Disability and Child Labor

There are at least 93 million children with disabilities around the world, only 10 percent of whom attend school.⁽³⁵⁾ According to UNICEF, children who are poor and who work in dangerous conditions have a higher risk of becoming disabled. Once they become disabled, these children are often unable to access social protection services, which contributes to greater poverty.⁽³⁶⁾ Some children whose family members are affected by disabilities may be out of school, as they must work to provide for the family or provide care for that relative.⁽³⁷⁾ EducaFuturo, a USDOL-funded technical assistance project in Panama and Ecuador, works to expand access to education and livelihood opportunities for families affected by child labor and disability.⁽³⁸⁾ Through this project, more than 5,953 children are enrolled in education services, and 1,675 households are getting support to help end children's involvement in exploitive labor.⁽³⁹⁾ children with disabilities. And the Government of Thailand supports the operation of Migrant Learning Centers that helped ensure a basic education to children in migrant communities.

In many other instances, however, initiatives to reduce inequities are nonexistent, have not been implemented adequately, or are otherwise falling short of helping vulnerable children. In some cases, this is because programs fail to address one or more essential social services, such as education, health care, or civil or birth registration. In other cases, governments may not be making the necessary changes to legal, political, and economic structures to address ingrained unfairness and exclusion. These types of foundational changes are critical for helping the most vulnerable and marginalized, especially children who are at high risk of child labor and their families.

In 2015, numerous shocks and stresses throughout the world—disease epidemics, drought, and food crises; major economic downturns and rapid environmental degradation; and the outbreak, escalation, or persistence of armed conflict—exacerbated inequity of opportunity and increased children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking.⁽⁴⁰⁾ Of particular concern during the past year were increased migrations within countries and across national borders, stemming from a number of the aforementioned shocks and stresses, particularly armed conflict.

UNHCR reported that the global number of people displaced by armed conflict—65.3 million individuals—was at its highest level ever by the end of 2015, surpassing the numbers seen in the wake of World War II.⁽⁴¹⁾ More than 30 million of these displaced persons—almost half—were children.⁽⁴²⁾

Nearly 1.3 million children across Cameroon, Chad, Niger, and Nigeria, for instance, have been displaced by violence attributed to the Boko Haram insurgency.⁽⁴³⁾ In South Sudan, nearly 2.4 million people fled their homes during two years of armed conflict, 721,000 of whom have become refugees in neighboring countries.⁽⁴⁴⁾ As of July 2015, at least 847,872

The Impact of Syria's Mass Migration on Children

2016 marks the fifth anniversary of the Syrian refugee crisis, which is one of the largest population displacement crises in recent history and continues to have ripple effects throughout the region. Syria was the world's top source country of refugees in both 2014 and 2015. Since the beginning of the conflict, 4.9 million Syrian refugees have fled to the neighboring countries of Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, and Turkey, as well as Egypt, including one million within the past year.⁽⁴⁹⁾ More than half of these refugees are under 18 and over 700,000 of these children do not attend school.⁽⁵⁰⁾ Rather than achieving their greatest potential, these children risk a future of illiteracy and poverty, toiling in Jordan's restaurants, shops, and fields, Turkey's textile mills, and in several countries on the streets and in domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation. In Lebanon, for example, children as young as 10 have been identified as victims of bonded labor in agriculture.⁽⁵¹⁾ Save the Children reported that 47 percent of Syrian refugee households in Jordan subsist partly or entirely on income brought in by their children. Children who remain within Syria are also at great risk of involvement in child labor, as the country is home to the world's second largest internally displaced populations, with 7.6 million people internally displaced.⁽⁵²⁾ As a consequence, children as young as nine years old are involved in hazardous economic activities that limit their access to education, including some who have been forced to take up arms or smuggle goods across borders.⁽⁵³⁾

Afghans had been internally displaced as a result of conflict, with 2.7 million becoming refugees.⁽⁴⁵⁾ Other violence-induced migrations occurred within or from Burundi, Central African Republic, Iraq, Somalia, Sudan, and Syria. Children from these countries have been killed, abducted, sexually assaulted, used as suicide bombers, and forced to join armed groups.

Inequity of opportunity manifests frequently in the children, and their families, living in or migrating from regions of conflict, who often lack access to adequate housing, food, social services, legal protections, education, or viable ways to support themselves.⁽⁴⁶⁾ In January 2016, for example, UNICEF reported that nearly 25 percent of children living in conflict zones across 24 countries were not attending school.⁽⁴⁷⁾ South Sudan, where schools were occupied by armed groups in 2015 and the Government ceased paying teachers' salaries in opposition-held areas, is home to the world's highest proportion of out-of-school children, with 51 percent of primary and lower secondary age children not in the classroom. The situation is nearly as dire in Niger, where 47 percent are unable to attend school, and in Afghanistan, with 40 percent out of school.⁽⁴⁸⁾

Global Analysis of Government Efforts and Country Assessments

This 15th edition of the Findings of the Worst Forms of Child Labor describes the actions taken by 137 countries and territories in 2015 to meet their international commitments to address the worst forms of child labor by enacting and enforcing laws, coordinating effectively among stakeholders, establishing policy frameworks, and implementing social programs. It also points out continuing gaps in such efforts and makes recommendations regarding measures that could be undertaken to improve progress in reducing child labor.

Government Efforts

During this reporting period, 111 out of 137 governments covered in this report made at least one meaningful effort in advancing the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Specifically, 63 governments improved their laws, 65 undertook child labor law enforcement activities, 39 better coordinated their child labor initiatives, 61 enacted or implemented policies related to child labor, and 79 governments offered social programs to assist vulnerable children.

Increased Focus on Law Enforcement

Enforcement of child labor laws is critical to preventing and eliminating the worst forms of child labor. The failure to adequately sanction such practices, and secure remediation, maintains a culture of impunity that fails to effectively deter abusive practices. Child labor law enforcement is a challenge for many countries, particularly those with relatively weak law enforcement systems. Law enforcement entities in such countries often do not adequately document the cases on which they work, and when they do, many of the records are handwritten. Law enforcement statistics often are not collected, compiled, or analyzed on a national level, and, in many cases, there is no simple or reliable way for national governments to obtain this information from local jurisdictions, even when they request it. These and myriad other factors make accurately reporting and evaluating labor law enforcement data challenging.

In 2015, 65 governments included in this report made at least one meaningful effort to improve their labor and criminal law enforcement to better address child labor. Uganda, for example, trained more than 1,000 criminal law enforcement officers on issues related to the worst forms of child labor. The Philippines' Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking conducted training for 3,693 government personnel and 5,972 nongovernmental participants. Bahrain launched a multilingual hotline for the public to report cases of human trafficking and migrant worker abuse. Ivorian police conducted an operation that rescued 48 child trafficking victims, and Guyana achieved the country's first child trafficking conviction in which the full remedy available under the law – both imprisonment and restitution – was handed down to the offender. Courts in Lebanon and Namibia each convicted one defendant for the crime of child sex trafficking, resulting in prison sentences of 10 or more years. Prosecutors in Costa Rica carried out 50 investigations, initiated 10 prosecutions, and convicted 17 individuals involved in the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Despite these positive steps, 69 governments included in this report made no meaningful efforts to enforce

ARCH's MFS program has inspired Mercy to tap into her own potential and give back to her community. laws related to child labor. Labor and criminal law enforcement efforts remained inadequate in many countries, particularly in rural areas where child labor is prevalent, as well as in the informal sector where if child labor laws cover children, they are often not enforced. Of the 137 countries included in this report for which data is reported and available, 56 governments did not meet the ILO's recommended benchmarks for an adequate number of inspectors. In three countries—Armenia, Kyrgyz Republic, and Ukraine—unannounced inspections were not permitted. Thirty-six countries and mainland Tanzania⁵⁴ did not give their inspectors the authority to assess penalties for labor violations, 16 lacked a mechanism to receive child labor complaints, and three—Armenia,⁵⁵ Georgia, and Somalia—lacked labor inspectorates entirely. Many enforcement bodies reported being underfunded and understaffed; hindered by corruption and insufficient legal mandates; and lacking adequate training, data collection, and coordination mechanisms to effectively carry out their work.

It is our goal to help improve global awareness and understanding of law enforcement efforts to address child labor through our analysis and reporting of child labor law enforcement data. In preparing this year's report, we endeavored to more systematically request, collect, and document this information through the inclusion of two new charts for each country where child labor is known to occur: the first focuses on labor law enforcement data and the second focuses on criminal law enforcement. In some categories for some countries, readers will note that the corresponding responses are listed as "Unknown." This denotes that governments either did not provide the information to USDOL or the U.S. embassy or consulate in country, or they do not collect such information. USDOL's Bureau of International Labor Affairs, in partnership with U.S. diplomatic missions, will continue to work with governments to obtain more comprehensive law enforcement statistics and provide a clearer picture of what successful child labor law enforcement interventions look like, as well as best practices seen around the world.

"As part of enhanced coordination with the Department of Justice, we have also begun receiving referrals for potential violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act. This is important because we're sometimes able to bring civil cases under the laws we enforce, with a lower burden of proof, where the Department of Justice is unable to bring criminal trafficking charges. This is one of the ways we as a civil enforcement agency can support law enforcement efforts against perpetrators of these crimes, obtaining back wages and liquidated damages for victims."

Country Assessments

Figure 1 provides a global breakdown of the country assessments in this report. Overall, 84 of the 137 countries (61 percent) received an assessment of Moderate Advancement or higher, compared with 49 countries (36 percent) that received an assessment of Minimal Advancement or lower. The remaining four countries (three percent) received a No Assessment. Sixteen countries received an assessment of Significant Advancement, 68 received Moderate Advancement, 34 received Minimal Advancement, and 15 received No Advancement. Two countries—Sierra Leone and Somalia—received an assessment of Minimal Advancement regardless of meaningful efforts made in relevant areas as a result of establishing a regressive or significantly detrimental policy or practice during the reporting period that delayed advancement in the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. In addition, five countries—Armenia, Bolivia, the Dominican Republic, Georgia, and Ukraine—received an assessment of Minimal Advancement regardless of meaningful efforts made in relevant areas as a result of failing to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law or practice that was established in previous years that delayed advancement in the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. The governments of four countries—Eritrea, South Sudan,

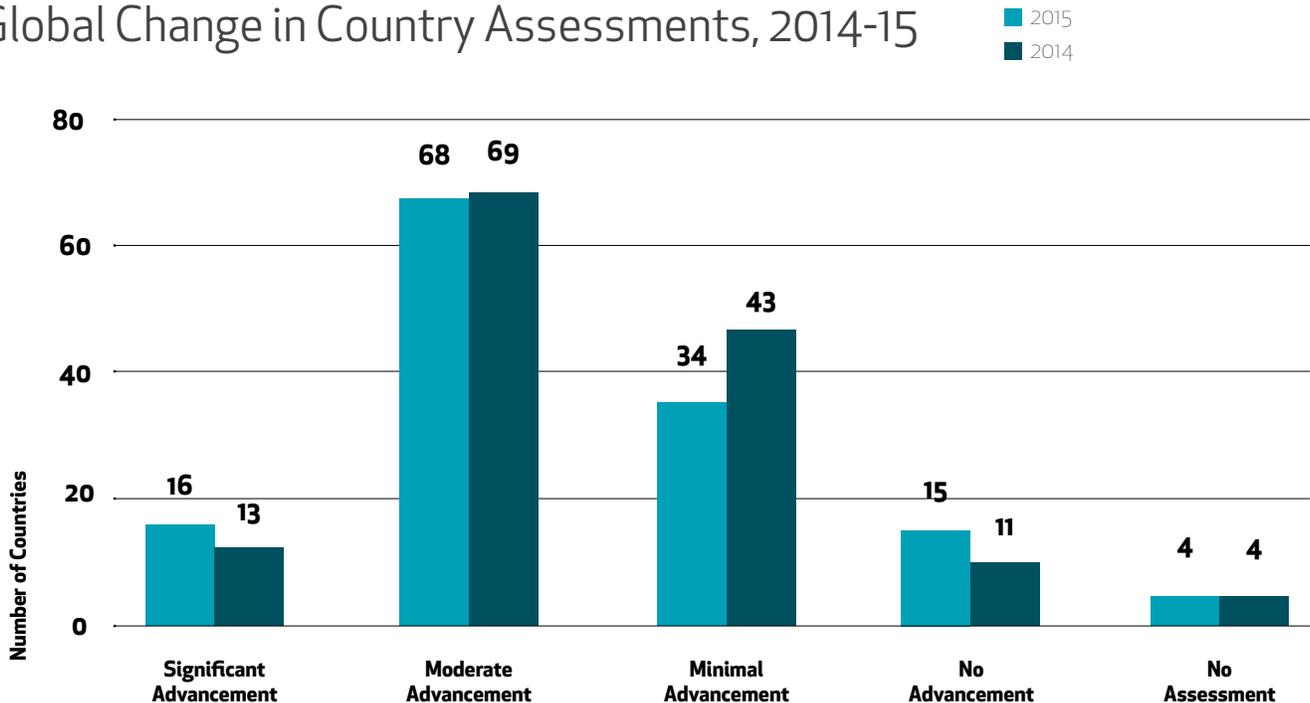

Swaziland, and Uzbekistan—received an assessment of No Advancement, regardless of meaningful efforts they made in relevant areas, as a result of a policy or demonstrated practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident.

One territory, Wallis and Futuna, was not assessed because there was no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and the territory has a good legal and enforcement framework on child labor. Other territories were not assessed due to their small population size: The British Indian Ocean Territory does not have a permanent civilian population, Heard Island and McDonald Islands are uninhabited, and the Pitcairn Islands has a population of fewer than 50 people. Barbados, Russia, and Trinidad and Tobago were included in past years' reports, but were not included in this edition as they are no longer eligible for the Generalized System of Preferences program authorized under the Trade Act of 1974.

The assessment results from 2015 indicate progress. The number of countries receiving Significant and Moderate Advancement assessments increased from 82 in 2014 to 84 in 2015. The number of countries assessed at Minimal Advancement and No Advancement decreased from 54 in 2014 to 49 compared in 2015 (See Figure 2).

Global Change in Country Assessments, 2014-15

A total of 24 countries increased their assessment level in 2015. Of the 16 countries that received Significant Advancement this year, eight countries received this assessment after receiving a Moderate Advancement in the previous reporting period: Argentina, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Jordan, Montenegro, and Panama. One country, Algeria, received this assessment after receiving a Minimal Advancement in 2014. Fourteen countries that received an assessment of Minimal Advancement in 2014 received a higher assessment of Moderate Advancement in 2015—the Central African Republic, Cook Islands, Djibouti, Iraq, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, Kyrgyz Republic, Liberia, Macedonia, Malawi, Mauritius, Namibia, Senegal, and Tanzania. One country, the Falkland Islands (Islas Malvinas), was upgraded from No Advancement to Minimal Advancement in this year's report.

Twenty-two other countries dropped to lower assessment levels in 2015 compared to 2014. One country—Yemen—dropped two levels from Moderate Advancement to No Advancement (see the 2015 Regional Outlook for the Middle East and North Africa for more information about Yemen). Twenty-one other countries dropped by one level. Six of these countries—Colombia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Madagascar, South Africa, and Thailand—dropped from Significant Advancement to Moderate Advancement; Eleven countries—Azerbaijan, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, Kenya, Papua New Guinea, Serbia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, and Ukraine—dropped to Minimal Advancement; and four countries—Niue, Swaziland, Tokelau, and Tonga—dropped one level to No Advancement. Of the countries that dropped one level to Minimal Advancement—Sierra Leone and Somalia—dropped regardless of meaningful efforts made in relevant areas as a result of establishing a regressive or significantly detrimental policy or practice during the reporting period that delayed advancement in the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Of the countries that dropped one level to No Advancement, Swaziland dropped regardless of meaningful efforts made in relevant areas because it demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident. Figure 3 provides a global breakdown on changes in country assessments from 2014 to 2015.

Conclusion: Demanding Change for a New Generation of Working Children

Today, millions of children remain trapped in the worst forms of child labor. The names, faces, and locations may have changed since Grace Abbott and other contemporaries began calling for increased awareness and action, but the factors that lead children to work and the conditions under which they do so remain largely the same. Child labor continues to demand champions, like Grace Abbott, to meet the SDGs' target, and moral imperative, of ending child labor in our time.

Ask Questions, Take Action, Demand Change.

For over 20 years, our Bureau of International Labor Affairs has been asking questions about how the global community can work together to end child labor. This year's report and its accompanying Sweat & Toil app contain detailed and accessible information that provides readers, and consumers, a foundation for looking further into this issue. They provide the basis for asking governments, employers, and other stakeholders what they are doing to help eliminate child labor in workplaces and throughout supply chains, and demanding change.

Greater awareness of child labor already has led to significant change. As this report indicates, many governments continue to improve their responses to these abuses, including through economic development, education, and social protection efforts that invest in and safeguard children, regardless of their gender, ethnicity, nationality, race, religion, or socio-economic status.⁽⁵⁶⁾ Many stakeholders, including businesses, trade unions, and other civil society organizations, continue to work together and collaborate with governments, leveraging resources and competencies.

Child labor is deeply entrenched, however, and its underlying causes are wide and varied. Success will not come quickly or easily. Governments encounter significant challenges along the way, such as limited resources, conflicting priorities, insufficient capacity, difficulty mobilizing stakeholders, and unexpected crises. This report suggests specific actions that governments can take, even when facing such limitations, to move forward in their fight against child labor. These recommendations can serve not only as a roadmap for government efforts, but also as a framework for conversations among a full range of stakeholders.

Nearly a century ago, Grace Abbott advocated that sustainable economic development cannot be achieved on the backs of children. We remain inspired by her courage to speak out and demand change. We stand on her shoulders when we ask questions through this report; take action through direct engagement; and demand that governments, businesses, and other stakeholders do more. This report stems from the legacy that she left us. We are committed to using it as a tool to carry on her work on behalf of a new generation of children.

"The future we want, all of us want — opportunity and security for our families, a rising standard of living, a sustainable, peaceful planet for our kids — all that is within our reach. But it will only happen if we work together."

Regional Analysis of Government Efforts and Country Assessments

This 2015 report includes a regional analysis of country assessments and regional trends in government actions to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Figure 4 provides a regional breakdown of the country assessments. Every region had at least one country receive an assessment of Significant Advancement, with Latin America and the Caribbean with eight countries, followed by Sub-Saharan Africa with three countries, and Asia and the Pacific and the Middle East and North Africa with two countries each. The remaining part of this discussion reviews trends and gaps in efforts to eliminate child labor, including the worst forms, by region.

Meaningful Efforts

- Strengthened legal frameworks to prohibit hazardous work for children and designate specific activities as hazardous.
- Improved sub-regional cooperation to combat child labor in South Asia, Southeast Asia, and the Pacific Islands.
- Provided cash transfers and food support programs for children of impoverished households.

In Asia and the Pacific, 77.8 million children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in child labor, or 9.3 percent of all children in the region.⁽⁵⁷⁾ Children are engaged in child labor, predominately in agriculture and as domestic workers in third-party households. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. In 2015, 2 of the 32 Asian and Pacific countries covered in this report received a rating of Significant Advancement—Cambodia and the Philippines. Countries in Asia and the Pacific made meaningful efforts to strengthen legal frameworks to prohibit hazardous work for children; improve sub-regional cooperation to combat child labor in South Asia, Southeast Asia, and the Pacific Islands; and provide cash transfers and food support programs for children of impoverished households. However, many countries in the region still have persistent barriers to education for child laborers; inadequate legal protection against the worst forms of child labor, particularly against commercial sexual exploitation; and an insufficient number of labor inspectors. Uzbekistan made meaningful efforts, which may have included suggested actions reported in 2014, but had a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident during its 2015 cotton harvest.

In 2015, several governments in the Asia and Pacific region strengthened laws related to the employment of children in hazardous work. Pakistan's Khyber Pukhtunkhwa province adopted hazardous work prohibitions for children; Kiribati passed legislation specifying hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children; Samoa passed legislation that prohibits children from engaging in work in dangerous environments; and Cambodia adopted new regulatory procedures to prevent children ages 15 to 18 from engaging in hazardous work.

In addition, several countries in the region increased the capacity of law enforcement agencies to combat child labor. Bangladesh increased its number of labor inspectors and Fiji significantly increased the number of labor inspections conducted during the year. Cambodia and the Kyrgyz Republic strengthened procedures for identifying children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor and Pakistan's Khyber Pukhtunkhwa province created a mechanism for receiving labor complaints. Nepal also deployed police personnel to identify incidents of child trafficking following the April 2015 earthquake.

Many countries sought to address the root causes of child labor by administering social programs for impoverished families. In 2015, 10 countries in the region implemented cash transfer programs to improve access for poor families to education, adequate nutrition, and health care. Seven of these 10 governments provided the funding for the cash transfer programs—Indonesia, the Kyrgyz Republic, Mongolia, Pakistan, the Philippines, Timor-Leste, and Uzbekistan, while Bangladesh and Indonesia administered food support programs for impoverished households and India, Mongolia, and Timor-Leste implemented school feeding programs.

During the reporting period, sub-regions within Asia and the Pacific worked together to combat child labor. The South Asia Initiative to End Violence Against Children finalized a Regional Action Plan to End Child Labor in countries in the South Asia Association for Regional Cooperation. Kiribati, Samoa, and the Solomon Islands participated in the ILO-supported Pacific Sub-Regional Child Labor and Trafficking Program, which expanded best practices learned from the ILO's child labor program in Fiji, such as establishing an inspection unit focused on child labor. ASEAN countries, including Cambodia, Indonesia, the Philippines, and Thailand, adopted the Convention Against Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, which seeks to improve regional coordination on the investigation and prosecution of human trafficking cases and enhance assistance for victims.

In many countries in the region, there are also legal and enforcement gaps related to the worst forms of child labor. Laws prohibiting hazardous work for children

A Government's Commitment to Ending Child Labor: The Case of the Philippines

In 2009, USDOL's first List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor documented the use of child labor in the production of 12 goods in the Philippines, including sugarcane. In 2011, when USDOL first began to assess the level of government efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in this report, the Philippines received a moderate advancement in the first year, and has since received the highest assessment of significant advancement for its numerous efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Their efforts have included conducting in-depth studies on child labor in hazardous agricultural work, updating the list of hazardous work prohibited for children, supporting the enforcement of criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, coordinating government efforts to address the use of children in armed conflict, implementing a national program against child labor, and creating 159 child labor-free districts. Because of its commitment to ending child labor and the robustness of its efforts, USDOL has funded more than 10 projects in the country since 1995. For example, the $16.5 million Livelihoods, Education, Advocacy, and Protection (LEAP) Against Child Labor in Sugarcane project provided educational services to 54,479 children engaged in or at-high risk of the worst forms of child labor in sugarcane growing areas, sustainable livelihood services to 30,348 members of their households, and support to institutions to improve policies, programs, and the delivery of social protection services.

Over the years, thousands of children and their families in the Philippines have benefited from these projects, including Ryan, a child in Bago City. Ryan's older brother lost interest in school when he started earning money from working on sugarcane farms. Ryan, on the other hand, was among the youth in his village who, after graduating from high school, signed up for vocational technology courses sponsored by LEAP. He finished a six-month course in basic computer literacy and received the Best in Excel award. In 2015, Ryan earned a scholarship to West Visayas State University, and he is now studying for a bachelor's degree in Secondary Education. Seeing all his achievements, Ryan's parents are encouraging him to persevere with his studies. "You are our only hope," they tell him.

do not meet international standards in 10 countries in the Pacific Islands and 5 countries in South and Central Asia. In addition, laws prohibiting the commercial sexual exploitation of children do not conform to international standards in 5 South and Central Asian countries, 10 Pacific Island countries, and Mongolia. Most governments in the Asia and Pacific region also lacked resources to effectively enforce laws related to child labor, including its worst forms. For example, eight countries in the region did not have a sufficient number of labor inspectors to provide adequate coverage of the labor force.⁽⁵⁸⁾

Despite progress in addressing child labor in the region, many children in the Asia and Pacific region face significant obstacles to accessing education. Six countries lack both free primary education and compulsory education ages. Four countries have the age to which education is compulsory below the minimum age for work, which increases children's vulnerability to child labor because they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either. Costs associated with education—such as books, uniforms, and teacher fees—prevent children from attending school in Bangladesh, Cambodia, Kiribati, the Kyrgyz Republic, Nepal, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, and the Solomon Islands. Physical access to education is also a problem for children living in remote, rural areas, particularly in Bhutan, Cambodia, India, Kiribati, Nepal, the Philippines, and Thailand. In addition, children from minority and migrant communities face barriers to accessing education in Cambodia, India, Kazakhstan, the Kyrgyz Republic, and Thailand. Safety concerns due to physical distance, violent conflict, and harassment make it difficult for girls to attend school in Afghanistan, Nepal, Pakistan, and Papua New Guinea.

Europe and Eurasia

2015 Regional Outlook

Regional statistics on child labor do not exist for Europe and Eurasia

Meaningful Efforts

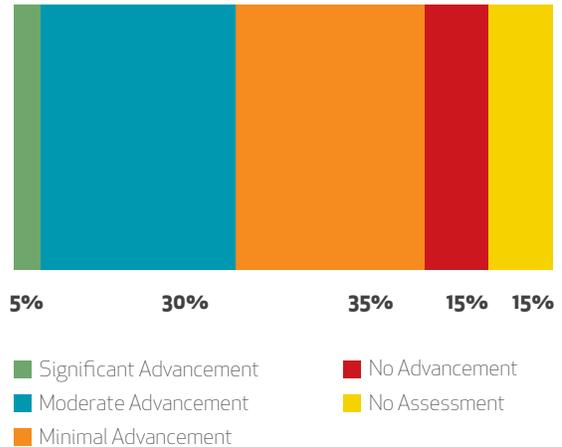

- Strengthened legal frameworks to expand minimum age protections for children.
- Improved criminal law enforcement in sectors where children are most vulnerable.
- Implemented social programs to address poverty, including conditional cash transfer programs.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Weak legal frameworks in countries that do not specify the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.
- Insufficient human and financial resources allocated to the enforcement of child labor laws.
- Unequal access to education for minorities and other disadvantaged children.

Regional statistics on child labor do not exist for Europe and Eurasia. However, children in Europe and Eurasia are engaged in child labor, predominantly in agriculture and street work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. In 2015, 1 of the 20 countries covered in the report received an assessment of Significant Advancement: Montenegro. Countries in the region made meaningful efforts to implement social programs to address poverty, including conditional cash transfer programs, strengthened legal frameworks to expand minimum age protections for children, and improved criminal law enforcement in sectors where children are most vulnerable. Despite these gains, exploitive child labor persisted due to gaps in hazardous work prohibitions, inadequate resources allocated to the enforcement of child labor laws, and unequal access to education for minorities and other disadvantaged children. In addition, three countries—Armenia, Georgia, and Ukraine—made meaningful efforts in a few or more relevant areas, but failed to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law that was established in previous years that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Armenia and Georgia’s previous repeal of laws establishing a labor inspectorate left these countries continuing to lack a functioning labor inspectorate to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws, and Ukraine introduced by law bureaucratic restrictions on the State Labor Service that effectively imposed a moratorium on inspections, including for child labor.

During the year, new efforts were made in three countries to collect statistics on child labor and expand minimum age protections for children. Both Armenia and Georgia conducted National Child Labor Surveys and Ukraine analyzed the data collected during a 2014 survey. Countries also made efforts to strengthen laws related to child labor. Albania raised the minimum age for light work from 14 to 15, and both Armenia and Turkey introduced legislation regulating children’s work in the entertainment industry. In addition, several countries strengthened protections against the worst forms of child labor in their criminal codes. Bosnia and Herzegovina increased penalties for human traffickers, while Macedonia increased the minimum sentence for individuals paying for the services of child victims of trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, Moldova expanded the powers of the Ombudsman for Children’s Rights to monitor the legislative process and appeal legislative proposals that could be damaging to children’s rights.

In 2015, European and Eurasian governments also took steps to target law enforcement efforts in sectors where children were most vulnerable. Several governments accomplished this by focusing criminal law enforcement efforts on identifying and assisting children involved in street work. Law enforcement agencies in Kosovo and Moldova conducted nation-wide operations to identify child beggars who were victims of human trafficking. Similarly, Macedonian police and social workers worked together in mobile patrols to remove 78 children from street work and refer them to social services. A number of governments in the region also built the capacity of their law enforcement mechanisms to address the needs of children. The Government of Montenegro trained prosecutors and social workers on addressing child trafficking and child begging. Law enforcement and judicial officials in Albania received training on working with children in the justice system, including protecting child victims and investigating and prosecuting criminal offences against children. More than 100 judges in Ukraine also received training on working with victims of human trafficking and child labor, including procedures on protecting victims and witnesses, and understanding the vulnerability of victims.

A few governments in the region launched policies to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Both Bosnia and Ukraine adopted national action plans to improve the prevention and prosecution of human trafficking crimes, as well as the provision of services to trafficking victims. Albania also developed the Action Plan for the Identification and Protection of Children in Street Situations, which defines the roles of various government agencies in preventing the exploitation and abuse of children working on the street. Recognizing that economic instability leaves children more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, many countries in the region also supported social programs to address poverty in 2015. Macedonia and Serbia both supported a conditional cash transfer program for vulnerable children in schools, while Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, Kosovo, and Moldova provided financial assistance to low-income families. Georgia and Ukraine also provided non-financial incentives, such as free textbooks and lunches, to keep low-income students in schools.

There are a number of challenges that impede progress in addressing child labor in the region. Anguilla, Bosnia and Herzegovina, the British Virgin Islands, Montenegro, Serbia, and Ukraine do not have laws that clearly and comprehensively define the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, which limits the capacity of labor inspectors to identify and remove children from exploitative labor situations. In Azerbaijan, children without written labor contracts are excluded from protection and, similarly, in Turkey, legal protection for children working in small agricultural enterprises and shops, and in domestic work, is lacking.

There are also challenges related to the enforcement of child labor laws in Europe and Eurasia. The number of labor inspectors in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Turkey, and Ukraine is insufficient to provide adequate labor force coverage according to the ILO's recommendation.⁽⁵⁹⁾ Labor inspectorates in Kosovo, Moldova, and Serbia lack funding for training, equipment, and transportation for inspectors, which compromises the quality of inspections. Georgia has lacked a mechanism to enforce child labor laws since its labor inspectorate was abolished in 2006, and a pilot labor monitoring program established in 2015 did not include child labor violations within its purview. In Ukraine, bureaucratic restrictions requiring that the State Labor Service seek formal approval from the Cabinet of Ministers before conducting most inspections effectively imposed a moratorium on inspections in 2015. Similarly, following the Government of Armenia's restructuring of its labor inspectorate into the State Health Inspectorate in 2014, confusion surrounding the mandate of the agency resulted in a moratorium on inspections in 2015, leaving Armenia without a mechanism to enforce child labor laws.

Across the region, refugee and migrant children; children who have been internally displaced; and children who belong to ethnic minority groups, such as the Roma, continued to experience challenges in accessing education. Roma children lacking birth registration or identity documents in Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Kosovo, Macedonia, Montenegro, Serbia, and Ukraine were sometimes prevented from enrolling in schools. In Turkey, despite the Government's efforts to expand education access for school-aged Syrian refugees, many refugee children living in urban areas remained unable to access education due to language barriers or an inability to pay for tuition and transportation to school.

Increasing the Knowledge Base on Child Labor Globally

Knowledge is power. Asking questions and acquiring knowledge is important to inform action and measure progress. That is why ILAB is currently funding a four-year project that seeks to increase the knowledge base about child labor around the world by measuring the prevalence of working children, child labor, and hazardous work. As part of this project, in 2013 the ILO began collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in 10 countries. During 2015, the project worked with national statistical offices to develop child labor questionnaires and collect data, including in Armenia and Georgia. The project also supported two thematic studies on child labor amongst children living in Roma communities in Serbia and Azerbaijan.

Research is not the end goal. As such, the real question is: What will be done with the knowledge gained from this project? Will it remain merely an academic exercise or prompt relevant stakeholders to ask further questions and take action? For the ILO's part, they have begun to systematically identify existing efforts being made by governments, as well as necessary short and medium-term actions to enable governments to develop comprehensive national strategies to combat child labor. This project will also provide the public with basic information they need to identify problems and demand appropriate responses from relevant governments and other key stakeholders.

Irregular migrants and asylum-seeking children, many of whom are Syrian, also faced difficulties enrolling in schools in Serbia. Other common barriers to education in Europe and Eurasia include discrimination, lack of support for children with disabilities, and distance to schools. Children who do not attend school are particularly vulnerable to exploitation in the worst forms of child labor.

Latin America and the Caribbean

2015 Regional Outlook

12.5 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor

KEY  = 1,000,000 children

Meaningful Efforts

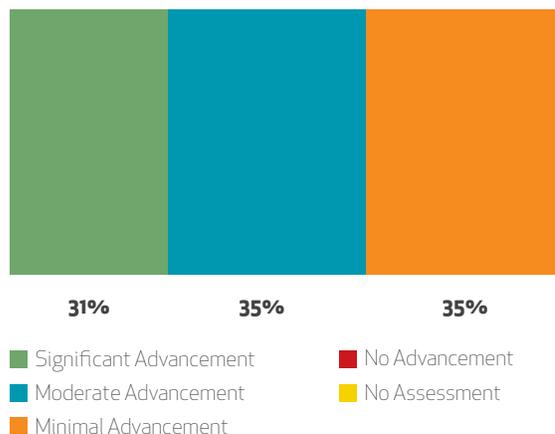

- Increased efforts to combat child labor in domestic work.
- Strengthened national policy frameworks to address child labor, including its worst forms.
- Enhanced social programs to address child labor that combine anti-poverty and educational measures.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Continued recruitment and use of children by gangs to commit illicit activities.
- Weak legal frameworks in countries that do not adequately prohibit hazardous work.
- Insufficient human and financial resources allocated to the enforcement of child labor laws.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, 12.5 million children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in child labor, or 8 percent of all children in the region.⁽⁶⁰⁾ Children are primarily engaged in child labor in agriculture and street work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including being used by gangs to commit illicit activities. Many migrant children, as well as children of indigenous and African descent, remain particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.⁽⁶¹⁾ In 2015, 8 of the 26 countries covered in the region received an assessment of Significant Advancement: Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Panama, Paraguay, and Peru. The region continued to strengthen national policy frameworks to address child labor, including its worst forms; implement enhanced social programs to address child labor that combine anti-poverty and educational measures; and increase efforts to combat child labor in domestic work. Despite these efforts, countries did not have laws adequately prohibiting hazardous work and did not allocate sufficient human and financial resources to the enforcement of child labor laws. Two countries made meaningful efforts in relevant areas, but failed to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice that was established in previous years that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor: Bolivia, where some children as young as age 10 may be self-employed, and the Dominican Republic, where some children without birth registration are denied access to education.

Latin American and Caribbean governments continued to develop comprehensive legal protections to prevent and eliminate child labor, including through sector-specific efforts. The region leads in legal efforts to combat child labor in domestic work, which is prevalent in most of the countries covered. In 2015, Chile, the Dominican Republic, and Panama ratified ILO C. 189 on Decent Work for Domestic Workers, which commits these governments to ensure that domestic workers have the same protections as other workers, and to take steps to prevent child labor.⁽⁶²⁾ Panama adopted a policy to combat child labor in domestic work, and Paraguay, which ratified the convention previously, raised the minimum age for domestic work from 16 to 18. In addition, 12 countries in the region were among the 22 worldwide that have ratified ILO C. 189.

In 2015, countries in Latin America and the Caribbean mainstreamed child labor issues in regional declarations on decent work and labor rights. At the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor, 21 countries covered in the region resolved to promote decent work with social inclusion, in part through policies that aim to eliminate child labor and promote education and vocational training for youth. The five member states of MERCOSUR (the Common Market of the South)—Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay, Uruguay, and Venezuela—also signed a social and labor declaration that aims to protect core labor standards in their decent work agenda, including child labor and forced labor standards. Across the region, 23 countries covered in the report implemented national policies to address child labor, including its worst forms. Argentina, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Jamaica, and Panama adopted new national policies or action plans that outline efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor, and to regulate adolescent work.

Governments also strengthened their policy frameworks to combat human trafficking, including Bolivia, Chile, and Peru in the Andean region, and Haiti, Jamaica, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines in the Caribbean. Nicaragua conducted their first human trafficking prosecutions under legislation that was passed during the previous reporting period.

Throughout the region, many countries expanded on holistic approaches to the prevention and elimination of child labor by combining anti-poverty measures with educational efforts. In 2015, more than half of the Latin American and Caribbean countries covered in this report implemented cash transfer programs whose assistance was conditioned on families sending their children to school, including Brazil, which expanded its Bolsa Familia program for the fourth consecutive year. In addition, many governments made schooling more accessible to impoverished children who might otherwise engage in child labor by providing meals and supplies. Notable examples include the expansion of the school meals program in Honduras and the national school supplies program in Nicaragua. Colombia also allocated more resources to education than to any other area of the national budget, including defense, for the first time.

Despite substantive efforts made in the region to address child labor issues, important challenges remain. In Central America, the governments of El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras continue to combat gang violence, which includes the coercive recruitment of children by gangs into the worst forms of child labor. In these situations, boys are used to commit extortion, drug trafficking, and homicides, and girls are used in commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, gangs in these countries, as well as in Colombia, continue to recruit children while at school, complicating access to education, which in some cases is already hindered by widespread violence.

While legal frameworks across the region are generally comprehensive, there are gaps in legal protections. Four countries covered in the report lack a minimum age for work that conforms to international standards, including Belize, Bolivia, Dominica, and Guatemala. Belize, for example, sets the minimum age for work at 12, and Bolivia allows children as young as age 10 to be self-employed under certain circumstances. Six countries—Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Jamaica, Saint Lucia, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines—lack adequate prohibitions on the use of children in illicit activities. Research also found that nine countries lack prohibitions on hazardous work that conform to ILO C. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor: Argentina, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Panama, Peru, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Uruguay.

Many countries in the region also lack the capacity to adequately enforce child labor laws. Although 12 countries covered increased their number of labor inspectors in 2015, 18 countries did not meet the ILO's recommendation for an adequate number of inspectors.⁽⁶³⁾ A lack of labor inspectors impedes government efforts to identify and sanction child labor violations, including in remote areas. This problem often stems from a lack of dedicated financial resources. For the majority of the countries in the region, reports from government officials, labor unions, and other civil society organizations indicated that labor inspectorates lack the resources they need to carry out their mandates.

Vulnerabilities for Unaccompanied Children from Central America's Northern Triangle

Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras, known collectively as the Northern Triangle, comprise by far the largest source of unaccompanied child migrants to the United States – more than 28,000 of which migrated in 2015. Many of the children who undertake this journey say they do it to escape pervasive violence, forced recruitment into gangs, or lack of educational and economic opportunities. And the dangers do not end there. Once en route, child migrants are at high risk of becoming victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. In 2015, USDOL funded the $13 million Youth Pathways – Central America project, implemented by Catholic Relief Services in El Salvador and Honduras. This project helps prevent at-risk youth in high-violence neighborhoods from engaging in exploitative child labor and addresses one of the root causes of the unaccompanied child migrant crisis by providing them with market-relevant vocational training, employment services, and social support.

Middle East and North Africa

2015 Regional Outlook

9.2 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor

KEY  = 1,000,000 children

Meaningful Efforts

- Strengthened legal frameworks to address child labor.

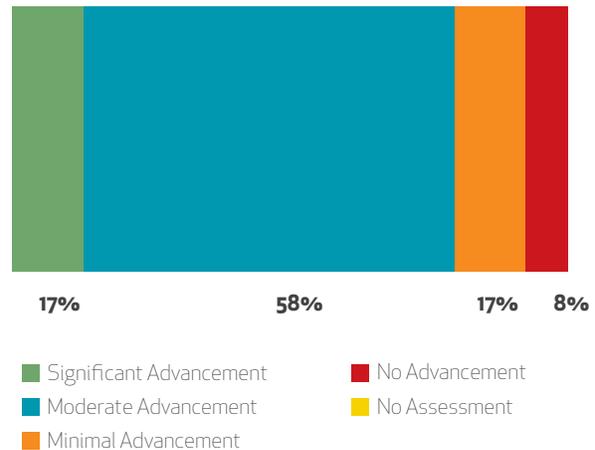

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Limited access to education and high dropout rates.
- Insufficient enforcement of child labor laws.
- Insufficient programs to combat child labor.

In the Middle East and North Africa, 9.2 million children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in child labor, or 8 percent of all children in the region.⁽⁶⁴⁾ Children are engaged in child labor, primarily in agriculture, domestic work, and street work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict. In 2015, 2 of the 12 countries covered in the region received an assessment of Significant Advancement: Algeria and Jordan. Although countries in the Middle East and North Africa made meaningful efforts to strengthen legal frameworks to address child labor, these legal protections were not adequately enforced. In addition, access to education was limited and there were insufficient programs to combat child labor in many of the countries covered in the region. Yemen received an assessment of No Advancement because the Government remained in exile due to large-scale armed conflict.

In 2015, countries throughout the region expanded legal protections for children engaged in child labor. Algeria passed legislation banning the use of children in begging and Iraq adopted a new labor law that requires the establishment of a child labor complaint mechanism. The Government of Morocco also drafted a new law to combat human trafficking.

Countries in the region also made efforts to improve the enforcement of child labor laws. The Government of Bahrain launched a multi-lingual hotline to report cases of human trafficking. The Government of Egypt established a counter-human trafficking unit to provide services to victims, and the Kurdistan Regional Government in Iraq launched a committee to investigate cases of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. Lebanon's Ministry of Labor revamped its Web site to receive child labor complaints, and Jordan and Tunisia conducted more child labor inspections compared to the previous year. Finally, the Government of Oman established a mechanism to receive child labor complaints and refer them for investigation.

Despite these efforts, only 6 of the region's 12 countries were authorized to assess penalties for violation of child labor laws, namely Bahrain, Iraq, Jordan, Tunisia, West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and Yemen. Routine child labor inspections were carried out in only five countries—Iraq, Jordan, Morocco,

Moving Towards a Child Labor-Free Jordan

As part of a USDOL project established in partnership with the ILO and the Government of Jordan, youth advocates volunteered their time after school to interview over 3,000 of their peers engaged in child labor. These interviews aimed to identify causes and potential solutions to help the Government of Jordan tackle a child labor problem made more dire by the recent influx of thousands of Syrian refugees. When Batoul and Mousab, ages 14 and 15, first took to the streets of the most impoverished neighborhoods in Amman to interview working children, they had to overcome some nerves. “I was worried that I would not have enough courage to speak to the children or face their employers, but we had to talk to them and hear their stories,” said Batoul. “We met children who were doing odd jobs in the streets. Some children told us that they would get beaten, shouted at and threatened if they didn’t do the work properly.”

The USDOL project has also helped the Government of Jordan implement its National Plan to Combat Child Labor by establishing strong child labor enforcement units at the Ministries of Labor and Social Affairs; forming local coordination mechanisms to ensure that services and legal protections now reach children everywhere in Jordan; and tailoring services and protections to meet the needs of Jordan’s most vulnerable children, including Syrian refugee children.

Tunisia, and West Bank and the Gaza Strip—and just four countries had a reciprocal referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services—Algeria, Egypt, Jordan, and West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Iraq and Morocco had an insufficient number of labor inspectors based on the ILO’s recommendation.⁽⁶⁵⁾

In 2015, non-state armed groups, including the Houthis in Yemen, Da’esh (also known as the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant [ISIL]) in Iraq, al-Nusra and Hezbollah in Lebanon, and Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia, recruited children to serve as informants, human shields, suicide bombers, bomb makers, and executioners or to play support roles, such as carrying food and ammunition to the front line. Some children in the Gaza Strip also received military training from Hamas. Even though Iraq and Yemen are affected by armed conflict, they do not have programs to assist child soldiers. The protracted conflict in Syria has also resulted in many refugees fleeing to neighboring countries. In Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, and Lebanon, despite government efforts, Syrian refugee children did not have sufficient access to education and remained vulnerable to child labor in street and retail work.

59 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor

KEY = 1,000,000 children

Meaningful Efforts

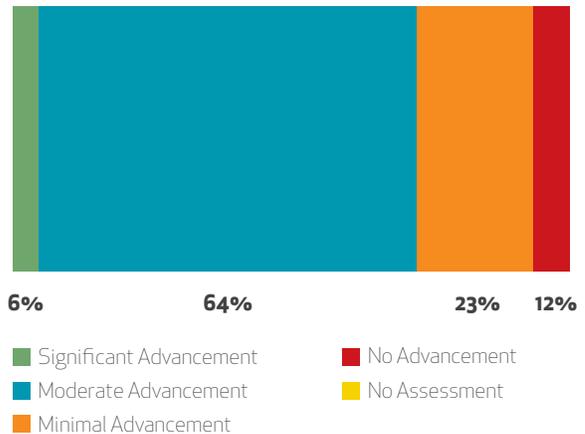

- Strengthened anti-child trafficking legislation.
- Improved policy frameworks and coordination of government efforts.
- New social programs with the goal of preventing or eliminating child labor.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Continued recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.
- Prohibitions on hazardous occupations and activities for children do not meet international standards.
- Limited capacity to enforce child labor laws.
- Social protection programs are insufficient to address the scope of the problem.

In Sub-Saharan Africa, 59 million children are engaged in child labor, or 21 percent of all the children in the region.⁽⁶⁶⁾ Children are engaged in child labor, largely in agriculture, mining, and domestic service.⁽⁶⁷⁾ In 2015, 3 of the 47 countries covered in the region received an assessment of Significant Advancement—Burkina Faso, Côte d’Ivoire, and Uganda. Countries in the region made meaningful efforts to address child labor by strengthening anti-child trafficking legislation, improving policy frameworks and coordination of government efforts, and implementing new social programs with the goal of preventing or eliminating child labor. Nevertheless, much needs to be done to prevent and eliminate child labor in Sub-Saharan Africa, including by ensuring that prohibitions on hazardous occupations and activities for children meet international standards, increasing the capacity to enforce child labor laws, implementing sufficient social protection programs to address the scope of the problem, and addressing the continued recruitment and use of children in armed conflict. In 2015, two countries made meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, but also established a regressive or significantly detrimental policy or practice during the reporting period that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor: Sierra Leone did not permit pregnant girls to attend school or take national exams, and Somalia recruited and used children in armed conflict. Three countries made meaningful efforts in relevant areas, which may have included suggested actions reported in 2014, but had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident in 2015: Eritrea forced children to participate in agricultural, environmental, or hygiene-related public works projects during their annual summer holidays from school; South Sudan’s national army forcibly recruited and used children in armed conflict; and Swaziland forced children to weed the King’s fields and perform other agricultural work.

DANGERS OF CHILD LABOR IN COCOA

Over 2.1 million children work on cocoa farms in Cote d'Ivoire and Ghana. More than half report being injured by their work. Dangerous conditions on these farms that may impact children's health, access to education and future livelihoods include:

Working long hours

Spraying pesticides

Lifting heavy loads

Burning fields

Using sharp tools

During the year, legal frameworks were strengthened in many countries. Somalia and South Sudan ratified the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. Angola, Benin, The Gambia, and Senegal adopted or amended legislation to establish 18 as the minimum age for hazardous work. Benin, Cabo Verde, Liberia, and Senegal adopted or amended legislation to prohibit hazardous occupations and activities for children. Six governments—Cabo Verde, Ethiopia, Malawi, Namibia, Nigeria, and Togo—adopted or amended anti-child trafficking legislation. In addition, Lesotho, South Africa, and Tanzania passed implementing regulations for anti-human trafficking legislation.

To strengthen the enforcement of child labor laws, Côte d'Ivoire integrated a 50-hour module on child labor issues into the training curriculum for criminal law enforcement officers. Senegal prosecuted and convicted a Koranic school teacher for child trafficking, and Burkina Faso intercepted seven child traffickers posing as Koranic school teachers and rescued 43 children who were destined for agricultural work in Mali and Côte d'Ivoire. Police officers in Angola and the Republic of the Congo conducted mapping projects to better understand the nature of human trafficking in their respective countries. The Governments of Mali, Seychelles, and Sierra Leone established national referral mechanisms to ensure that victims of child labor, including child trafficking, receive appropriate social services. In addition, 25 governments conducted unannounced labor inspections during the reporting period.

In 2015, the Governments of Botswana, Central African Republic, Chad, Lesotho, Madagascar, Mozambique, and Zimbabwe established new national committees to coordinate efforts to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms. Six governments—Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, and Uganda—adopted or updated national action plans on the worst forms of child labor. Eight countries—Angola, Burkina Faso, Central African Republic, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Madagascar, and Togo—launched new social programs with the goal of preventing or eliminating child labor. In addition, Kenya, Malawi, Senegal, South Africa, Uganda, and Zambia expanded cash transfer programs to ensure that vulnerable children are able to attend school.

Despite the gains made in addressing child labor during the year, Sub-Saharan Africa faced many challenges. In 2015, terrorist activity, civil conflict, and the Ebola virus disease outbreak impacted the governments' ability to address the worst forms of child labor. The terrorist group Boko Haram continued to recruit and use child soldiers as young as age 8, and there was an increase in the number of children, particularly girls, used as suicide bombers in Cameroon, Chad, Niger, and Nigeria.⁽⁶⁸⁾ More than 1.4 million children in the four affected countries have been displaced from their homes as a result of the conflict. In 2015, 250,000 children were able to return to schools in Northeast Nigeria; however, 2,000 schools remained closed across Cameroon, Chad, Niger, and Nigeria at the end of the year.⁽⁶⁹⁾ In addition, children in the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Mali, Somalia, and South Sudan were forcibly recruited and used in armed conflict. Although the Ebola epidemic in Guinea, Liberia, and Sierra Leone appeared to be waning, nearly 23,000 children lost one or both of their primary caregivers to the disease, increasing their vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor.

There is still an urgent need for governments to improve legal frameworks and the enforcement of child labor laws. Of the 47 Sub-Saharan African countries covered in this report, 38 percent have prohibitions on hazardous occupations and activities for children that do not meet international standards. Ten countries, namely the Central African Republic, Comoros, Gambia, Guinea, Liberia, Mauritania, São Tomé and Príncipe, Somalia, South Sudan, and Zambia, have not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict. Eight countries—Cameroon, Ghana, Kenya, Liberia, São Tomé and Príncipe, Somalia, South Sudan, and Zambia—have not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, and five countries—Comoros, the Republic of the Congo, Somalia, South Sudan, and Uganda—have not ratified the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.

Most countries' law enforcement bodies did not collect comprehensive statistics on child labor and lacked resources and trained personnel, which impeded efforts to identify and sanction child labor violations. During the reporting period, 24 countries had an insufficient number of labor inspectors and the labor inspectorates of 40 countries had inadequate resources to effectively enforce child labor laws. Furthermore, 20 countries have labor inspectorates that are not authorized to assess penalties for child labor violations. Most countries in Sub-Saharan Africa do not have national social protection programs; however, these programs can help provide vulnerable children with access to education through the provision of uniforms, school supplies, and unofficial school fees. Without social safety nets, vulnerable families may continue to rely on child labor to cope with the effects of poverty and economic shocks.

The U.S. Experience

The Federal Government of the United States has several key responsibilities with regard to children and youth—namely, to help ensure that they are protected from harm, including from labor exploitation, and to provide them with opportunities to learn and prepare for decent, productive work. This section of the report highlights the current efforts of a sample of Federal organizations that play a key role in fulfilling the responsibility, including USDOL’s Wage and Hour Division (WHD), Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), and Employment and Training Administration (ETA); the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services’ (HHS) Administration for Children and Families and the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health within the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention; and the U.S. Department of Education’s Migrant Education Program. These organizations work in coordination and collaboration with each other, and with other Federal and local government and nongovernmental stakeholders, on efforts that are aimed to ensure the well-being of children and youth, including the prevention and elimination of the worst forms of child labor in the United States.

U.S. Department of Labor

Within USDOL, WHD takes the lead in enforcing Federal child labor laws and raising awareness about them. OSHA protects the safety and health of children and youth in the workforce. The ETA provides education and training opportunities for at-risk youth.

Wage and Hour Division and Occupational Health and Safety Administration

The WHD enforces the most sweeping Federal law that regulates the employment of child workers—the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). In addition, the Occupational Safety and Health Act and related regulations, enforced by USDOL’s OSHA, apply to all employees regardless of age. The WHD and OSHA work together on investigations and have an active referral process in place for cases involving children under age 18.

The Federal Minimum Ages for Work

The FLSA sets a minimum age of 14 for most employment in non-hazardous, non-agricultural industries, but limits the times of day and the number of hours that 14- and 15-year-olds may work and the tasks that they may perform. Children are permitted under the FLSA to work at a younger age in agriculture than in other sectors. For example, the FLSA allows children working on farms owned or operated by their parents, regardless of their age, to perform farm work. The FLSA establishes a minimum age of 18 for non-agricultural occupations that the Secretary of Labor declares to be particularly hazardous or detrimental to children’s health or well-being. There are currently 17 Hazardous Occupations Orders (HOs), which include a partial or total ban on work for children in the occupations or industries they cover. In fiscal year (FY) 2015, 355 children were found to be employed in violation of HOs in the United States; of these, 4 were engaged in mining and 26 were involved in manufacturing.

There were 8,898,000 children ages 16–17 employed in the United States in 2014 and 8,852,000 employed in 2015.⁽⁷⁰⁾ Despite the restrictions and limitations placed on their work, in 2014, the most recent year for which data are available, there were 14 fatal occupational injuries among children ages 16–17, and 8 fatal occupational injuries among children below age 16 in the United States.⁽⁷¹⁾

Enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act in Fiscal Year 2015

The WHD is committed to ensuring that the FLSA is strictly enforced. Every investigation carried out by WHD investigators looks for violations of the FLSA’s child labor provisions. Complaints from the public about child labor, although not numerous, are given the highest priority within the agency. From October 1, 2014 to September 30, 2015, the WHD concluded 542 cases where child labor violations were found. In 189 of these cases, violations of HOs were found, with 355 minors employed in violation of HOs. More specific information about each of these cases can be found in the WHD’s enforcement database at <http://ogesdw.dol.gov/views/search.php>.

NGOs have expressed concern about U.S. law on agricultural occupations permissible for children. In particular, two reports from the NGO Human Rights Watch documented the exposure of children working in the U.S. tobacco industry to nicotine, toxic pesticides, and other dangers⁽⁷²⁾ The ILO Committee of Experts has called on the U.S. government to continue to make efforts to ensure the safety of children working in agriculture. To maximize the likelihood of detecting child labor violations, WHD investigations are generally conducted during the suckering and harvesting portion of the tobacco season, when children are more likely to be present.

The WHD’s Outreach and Education Efforts to Prevent Child Labor in Agriculture and Other Sectors

The WHD conducts extensive outreach and education to worker and employer organizations in agriculture. At the national level, the WHD receives referrals from organizations such as Farm Worker Justice and the National Center for Farmworker Health, and provides training and information to them. At the State level, the WHD works with a variety of stakeholders, including employee organizations, unions, and other governmental organizations and NGOs, to address child labor issues.

The WHD disseminates materials in English and Spanish to help agricultural employers and workers better understand their responsibilities and rights. A booklet for employers provides simple and comprehensive information on the laws and requirements governing agricultural employment, including wages, housing, transportation, and field sanitation. The WHD also provides a pocket card for agricultural workers with information about their rights and how to file a complaint with the WHD if they believe that these rights have been violated.⁽⁷³⁾

The WHD continues to work with the tobacco industry to improve compliance with labor laws and conditions for workers. This includes working with the Farm Labor Practices Group (FLPG), a tobacco industry stakeholder organization composed of manufacturers, growers, and worker representatives, which has recognized the importance of maintaining compliance with child labor laws in the industry, and has taken steps to improve compliance levels industry-wide. In 2016, the FLPG plans to train more than 10,000 growers, farm labor contractors, farm workers, and others in the industry on U.S. labor laws prior to and during the growing season. Large manufacturers are now self-monitoring or contracting with a third party to monitor labor law compliance among their suppliers.

Beyond agriculture, the WHD's YouthRules! website is a child labor information portal that targets all teenage workers with a user-friendly design, multimedia content, social media links, and a Young Worker Toolkit of teen-friendly resources.⁽⁷⁴⁾ The site maintains links to compliance assistance materials for employers, parents, and educators. It also has links to important worker resources, including information on filing legal complaints, Federal and State child labor laws, Federal and State labor offices, and links to other USDOL and government-wide sites with information for children and young workers. A WHD toll-free helpline is also available (1-866-4US-WAGE or 1-866-487-9243) to provide information about child labor laws.

Employment and Training Administration

At-risk and vulnerable youth in the United States are often faced with a choice between education and work. This choice, in reality, is between education and an income. All too often, they must choose the latter, and are forced to apply for entry-level positions with no advancement opportunities or are unable to find work.⁽⁷⁵⁾ The cycle of poverty thus remains unabated.

Through the National Farmworker Jobs Program, YouthBuild, and Registered Apprenticeships, three programs administered by USDOL's ETA, at-risk and vulnerable youth are able to secure high-quality education and employment opportunities. These opportunities can help break the cycle of poverty and reduce their risk of involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

The National Farmworker Jobs Program (NFJP)

The NFJP is a nationally directed, locally administered program that provides job training and educational opportunities to eligible migrant and seasonal farmworkers (including farmworker youth), as well as their families. Assistance includes career services, training, housing support, specific youth services, and related assistance. The program operates in all States and Puerto Rico, with the exception of the District of Columbia and Alaska.

The NFJP is an integral part of the public workforce system and a partner in the nationwide network of American Job Centers. The program also partners with community organizations and State agencies to comprehensively address the multiple barriers impacting farmworkers, including low wages, low levels of education, limited English proficiency, disability status, limited access to health care, and inferior housing. The NFJP grantees provide opportunities for farmworkers and their families to get the training they need to enter year-round stable employment, offering farmworker youth a chance to focus on their education, and plan and pursue careers out of the fields.

YouthBuild

YouthBuild is a community-based alternative education program that provides job training and educational opportunities for at-risk youth ages 16–24. Youth learn construction skills while building or rehabilitating affordable housing for low-income or homeless families in their own neighborhoods. Participants split their time between the construction site and the classroom, where they earn their high school diploma or equivalency degree, learn to be community leaders, and prepare for college and other postsecondary education opportunities. YouthBuild includes significant support systems, such as mentoring, follow-up education, employment, and personal counseling services. There are more than 215 USDOL-funded YouthBuild programs in 43 States, the District of Colombia, and the U.S. Virgin Islands, serving approximately 7,500 youth annually.

YouthBuild programs make explicit links between what is being done at the work site and what is being taught in the classroom through project-based and contextualized learning. The work experience, coupled with earning an industry-recognized certificate, increases opportunities for post-program employment.

To protect the health and safety of youth participants, all construction trainers are required to be certified in occupational safety and health, and the youth participants are also required to take and pass this certification before they are allowed on the work site. Participants under the age of 18 also are prohibited from engaging in certain type of construction activities that are considered hazardous. YouthBuild addresses the challenges faced by unemployed, high school dropouts by providing them with an opportunity to gain both the education and the occupational skills that will prepare them for good jobs with good wages.

Registered Apprenticeship

Registered Apprenticeship (RA) is an “earn-and-learn” model that offers an array of benefits to youth, including on-the-job learning; related Career and Technical Education (CTE) classroom instruction; a paycheck; and, in many programs, dual enrollment in college and college credit. RAs are offered in high-demand industries, including in health care, information technology (IT), transportation, advanced manufacturing, financial services, and construction. Young people participating in an RA must be at least 16 years of age when they start and 18 years of age to be an apprentice in hazardous occupations. However, some RA programs have strategies that allow apprentices under age 18 to begin training in hazardous equipment as they reach the legal age.

In September 2015, USDOL invested $175 million in the American Apprenticeship Initiative, which supports 46 grantees in advancing the growth and diversity of RAs in the United States. Several of these grantees are leveraging funds to create RA opportunities for at-risk youth. Despite this effort, as of May 2016, there were only roughly 450,000 apprentices in the U.S., which represents a relatively small proportion of the labor force compared with other European countries. The President has challenged the Nation to double the number of apprentices to 750,000 by 2019.

A successful example of the program is the work done by Managed Career Solutions and OpenTech in California, which are working in collaboration with the City and County of Los Angeles to increase access to technical careers through RAs. Currently, a number of programs serving low-income and minority youth are integrated into OpenTech, including Hire LA Youth and LA Summer Youth Programs. By co-enrolling participants from low-income and impacted neighborhoods into these subsidized summer employment programs, which include work readiness and financial literacy training, OpenTech is able to impact the lives of at-risk youth exponentially. Pre-apprenticeship training organized as accelerated learning “boot camps” prepares participants with the technical and soft skills necessary to enter the workforce. Public training dollars allocated through the Workforce Innovation and Opportunity Act also are leveraged to provide tuition and support services to participants throughout the process. The result is a system that directly targets barriers to employment for at-risk and vulnerable youth, and provides participants with the 21st century skills necessary to escape the cycle of poverty.

USDOL’s Office of Apprenticeship (OA) administers the apprenticeship system in the United States and is leading many initiatives to expand and diversify RAs with a focus on disadvantaged groups. In 2016, $90 million in new funding was appropriated to expand RAs among States, high-demand industries, and underrepresented communities. Also in 2016, OA created a Youth Apprenticeship Working Group to address challenges and gaps in recruiting and retaining more apprentices under age 18. The group is part of USDOL’s Advisory Committee on Apprenticeship (ACA) and includes representatives from the ACA, U.S. Department of Education, and select subject-matter experts, including CTE State directors, employers, and other experts. International apprenticeship development also has advanced over the last year and a half, largely due to the Joint Declarations of Intent signed by the United States and Germany, and the United States and Switzerland. The Joint Declarations provide a framework for the countries to collaborate on work-based training, curriculum development, credential recognition, pathways to career development, and the expansion of apprenticeship programs into new industries.

U.S. Department of Health and Human Services

HHS has two agencies that provide social protection for children: the Administration for Children and Families (ACF) and the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) within the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The Administration for Children and Families

The ACF serves as the lead HHS agency to combat human trafficking and modern forms of slavery by administering anti-trafficking programs through grants and contracts, and collaborating with Federal, State, tribal, and local government organizations and NGOs.

In 2015, the ACF established a new Office on Trafficking in Persons (OTIP) to further strengthen collaboration and coordination of anti-trafficking efforts across multiple systems of care, including refugee resettlement, child welfare, runaway and homeless youth, Native Americans, and health care services systems.

The ACF provides assistance to foreign and domestic (U.S. citizen and lawful permanent resident) victims of forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation through multiple grant programs. During FY 2015, a total of 1,726 individual clients received case management services through the Trafficking Victim Assistance Program, a national victim assistance program for foreign victims of human trafficking and their families. This represents a 52 percent increase in clients served by grantees from the previous fiscal year. Seventeen percent of the clients served were children.

Unaccompanied children who are victims of trafficking may be referred to HHS's Unaccompanied Refugee Minors (URM) Program, which offers a variety of assistance, including licensed foster care homes, therapeutic foster care homes, semi-independent living programs, and residential treatment centers. Other services provided include medical care, independent living skills training, educational support, English language training, career and college counseling and training, mental health services, access to legal services for immigration status adjustment assistance, recreational opportunities, support for social integration, and activities that support cultural and religious preservation. The URM Program served 124 minor victims of trafficking in FY 2015.

HHS also issues Eligibility Letters for foreign minors to be eligible for benefits and services to the same extent as a refugee. The Trafficking Victims Protection Act requires any Federal, State, or local official to notify HHS within 24 hours after discovering a foreign child who may be a victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons to facilitate the provision of assistance (22 U.S.C. 7105). HHS issues Interim Assistance Letters to a foreign child who may have been subjected to a severe form of trafficking in persons, providing potential victims with a 90- to 120-day period of eligibility. In FY 2015, HHS issued 34 such letters. HHS subsequently issues Eligibility Letters to foreign child trafficking victims upon receiving credible information that the child was subjected to a severe form of human trafficking. Eligibility Letters do not expire, but some benefits are time-limited.

In FY 2015, the ACF issued 240 Eligibility Letters to children. Thirty-five percent of the child victims who received Eligibility Letters in FY 2015 were female (compared to 40 percent in FY 2014), and 65 percent were male. More than 78 percent of child victims who received Eligibility Letters were labor trafficking victims (up from 66 percent in 2014), 19 percent were sex trafficking victims (compared to 31 percent in FY 2014), and 3 percent were victims of both labor and sex trafficking, which is the same percentage as in FY 2014. The top four countries of origin of child victims who received Eligibility Letters in FY 2015 were Mexico, Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras.

Grant programs assisting domestic victims of trafficking include new grant funding to provide comprehensive case management support for U.S. citizen and lawful permanent resident victims of trafficking. In addition, child victims of trafficking are served through the child welfare system, runaway and homeless youth programs, and culturally specific Native American community programs. In FY 2015, the HHS Children's Bureau provided grants to nine organizations to develop the child welfare system's response to human trafficking through partnerships with law enforcement, juvenile justice, court systems, and other service providers.

In 2016, HHS's Family and Youth Services Bureau released the findings of a Street Outreach study that surveyed 873 runaway and homeless youth in 11 cities. The study found that 36 percent of homeless youth had traded sex for money, a place to spend the night, food, protection, or drugs. Most of the youth who reported trading sex for money did so only after they became homeless. More than half of homeless youth became homeless for the first time because they were asked to leave home by a parent or caregiver. In FY 2015, the HHS Administration for Children and Families continued grant funding for program activities, including providing a culturally grounded support group for young American Indian men ages 16–21, who are at high risk for involvement in commercial sexual exploitation.

The HHS-funded National Human Trafficking Resource Center operates a national 24-hour hotline that connects survivors of human trafficking anywhere in the country to local services. Since 2007, the hotline has identified 25,000 cases of human trafficking. In 2015, 29 percent of the 5,544 trafficking cases reported to the hotline involved minor victims of trafficking.

The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH)

NIOSH undertakes several activities to protect children from involvement in exploitive labor. NIOSH produces and disseminates Are You a Teen Worker? to educate children and young workers about their rights and other resources on child and young worker safety and health.⁽⁷⁶⁾ NIOSH also developed the North American Guidelines for Children's Agricultural Tasks (NAGCAT), working in partnership with the National Children's Center for Rural and Agricultural Health and Safety. NAGCAT provides information on children's physical, mental, and psychosocial abilities in relation to the requirements of specific types of farm work and has been effective in reducing child agricultural injuries.⁽⁷⁷⁾

The U.S. Department of Education

The U.S. Department of Education's Office of Migrant Education, within the Office of Elementary and Secondary Education, administers a program to provide support to migrant children in the United States who may be vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

Office of Migrant Education

Children of migrant farmworkers are particularly vulnerable to involvement in exploitive child labor. Some children may have to forego their education entirely to work to support their families, while others may be able to enroll in school, but their learning and social adjustment are interrupted when they have to change schools frequently due to crop cycles.⁽⁷⁸⁾ Migrant children also often find it difficult to achieve academic success because they must balance the demands of learning with the fatigue and mental stress of work in the fields.⁽⁷⁹⁾

The U.S. Department of Education's Migrant Education Program works to ensure that migrant children who move from one State to another are not penalized by disparities among States in curriculum, graduation requirements, State academic content, or student academic achievement standards. The program provides services to migrant children, such as remedial and compensatory instruction, bilingual and multicultural instruction, vocational instruction, career education services, counseling, testing, health services, and preschool care.⁽⁸⁰⁾

How to Read a Country Profile

Each country profile begins with an overview for 2015 in a single paragraph, beginning with a statement identifying the assessment level assigned to the country for 2015.

Following the statement of assessment, the paragraph offers a summary of key findings in the country profile.

The narrative includes any meaningful efforts taken by a government, defined as efforts in key areas in which the government advanced in implementing its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

The narrative also notes the most common or egregious forms of child labor found in the country and highlights areas in which key gaps in government efforts remain.

Table 1, “Statistics on Children’s Work and Education,” contains at least four variables: percentage of working children, school attendance rate, percentage of children combining work and school, and primary completion rate. The majority of the country profiles have data for at least one of these variables. A smaller set of profiles contain data on children’s work by sector. The age and methodologies of the original surveys that provide the underlying data vary, and in some cases, the surveys may not reflect the true magnitude of the child labor problem in a country. For some countries, data are unavailable from the sources used in this report.

Table 2, “Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity,” groups types of children’s work by sector, using categories established by the ILO and UCW for national child labor surveys (Agriculture, Industry, and Services), as well as a category intended to capture work understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182 (referred to by the report as “Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor”). Sectors and specific activities performed by children are sorted into these categories according to internationally accepted industry and occupational codes.

Table 2 is footnoted to (1) identify sectors or activities for which information is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown, (2) identify sectors or activities determined to be hazardous by national law or regulation as understood under Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182, and (3) provide the definition of “Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor” as previously described.

Following Table 2, the section may highlight additional sector-specific information in a brief narrative. In addition, the narrative may discuss any social, economic, or political issues that impact the prevalence of child labor, such as barriers to accessing education, or major socioeconomic shocks to the country that may inhibit the government’s ability to address child labor, such as a natural disaster or armed conflict.

In 2015, the Philippines made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Government agencies signed a joint memorandum on the Rescue and Rehabilitation of Abused Domestic Workers, which established a protocol for inter-agency coordination in efforts to rescue and assist exploited domestic workers, including child domestic workers. The Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking established five new regional task forces to support enforcement of criminal law related to child labor and provided training on trafficking in persons to a total of 3,698 government personnel and 5,972 non-governmental participants. In addition, the Inter-Agency Council Against Child Pornography adopted a new strategic plan that aims to eradicate child pornography in the Philippines. However, children in the Philippines are engaged in child labor, including in the production of sugarcane, and in the worst forms of child labor, including forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation. Despite the existence of strong mechanisms to respond to cases of child labor, enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the limited number of inspectors and lack of resources for inspections.

⁴ Children, primarily girls, are trafficked domestically from rural communities as well as conflict- and disaster-affected areas.

Section 2 begins with Table 3, "Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor." The conventions listed include ILO C. 138 and 182 and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution, and child pornography, and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the UN Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime (the Palermo Protocol). A checkmark indicates the country's ratification, acceptance, accession, or succession to the instrument, given that these actions have the same practical legal effect regarding the substantive obligations of the instruments as ratification. If other relevant international instruments (beyond those listed in Table 3) were ratified during the reporting period, this may be recognized in a short narrative following the table.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Philippines has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 4, "Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor," lists a set of standards that should be established through national legislation in order to fully implement ILO C. 182. These include the minimum ages for work and hazardous work; hazardous occupations and activities prohibited to children; prohibitions of forced labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and using children in illicit activities; the minimum ages for voluntary and compulsory military service; the compulsory education age; and whether the government has a law on free basic education. Table 4 is footnoted to identify (1) if a government does not use conscription for military service, (2) if a government does not have a standing military, and (3) an age calculated based on available information.

Table 4 is followed by a narrative describing any relevant laws the government enacted, or advanced to a significant step in the legislative process, during the reporting period. If the government failed to take action on an existing draft bill that would fill a gap in the legal framework related to child labor, this also may be noted. The narrative then assesses whether existing laws meet international standards and are sufficiently comprehensive to cover the child labor issues that are present in the country.

Section 3 begins with a broad statement about whether the government has established institutional mechanisms to enforce laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms. It then presents three tables: the first, Table 5, is the “Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement” table; the second and third, which are new to the report this year, provide data on labor and criminal law enforcement efforts in 2014 and 2015, country.

Table 6 the “Labor Law Enforcement Efforts” table, provides information on: labor inspectorate funding; the number of labor inspectors and for some countries, the number of child labor dedicated inspectors; whether the labor inspectorate is authorized to assess penalties; training for inspectors; the number of labor inspections and whether they were conducted at work sites or by desk reviews; the number of child labor violations found, and penalties imposed and collected; whether routine inspections were conducted and if any were targeted; whether unannounced inspections were permitted and if they were conducted; and whether there is a complaint mechanism and a reciprocal referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services.

Table 7, the “Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts” table, provides information on: training for investigators; the number of investigations; the number of violations found; the number of prosecutions initiated; the number of convictions; and whether there is a referral mechanism between criminal authorities and social services.

A narrative follows each of these tables, with more specific information on government mechanisms and efforts, and includes findings where ILAB has concluded that a shortfall exists between international standards and government efforts.

Both tables are footnoted to identify whether the government makes enforcement information publicly available and if the data from 2014 and 2015 falls outside of the calendar year.

Section 4 is typically brief, beginning with a short statement as to whether the government has any coordinating mechanism focused on or related to combating child labor, followed by a table listing the relevant coordinating bodies, their composition (if known), and their respective mandates, as well as their efforts during the reporting period. A subsequent narrative may include findings on gaps in their efforts.

Section 5 begins with a statement indicating whether the government has established any policies related to child labor, including its worst forms. This is followed by a table listing the relevant policies, providing a description of each policy's objective and any developments in implementation that occurred during the reporting period. The table is footnoted to identify policies that were approved during the reporting period as well as policies that do not include child labor prevention and elimination strategies. The narrative following the table is reserved for findings related to whether existing policies sufficiently address child labor issues, including its worst forms, in the country. Analysis of the extent to which these efforts were sufficient to address the scope of the problem and/or covered the key sectors in which children are known to work in the country.

Section 6 opens with a statement as to whether the government funded and/or participated in social programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. As with the policy section, this section lists relevant programs, including larger development programs such as poverty strategies or education-focused initiatives that may have an impact on child labor. Footnotes also identify projects that are funded by the government and/or were launched during the reporting period. The table provides a description of each social program and its activities and accomplishments, to the extent known, during the reporting period. A narrative may follow with analysis of the extent to which these efforts were sufficient to address the scope of the problem and/or covered the key sectors in which children are known to work in the country.

Section 7, the last section of each country profile, is a set of suggested actions. These suggested actions serve as a roadmap of efforts that individual countries can follow to more fully address the worst forms of child labor. The year in which a suggested action was first provided is listed in the table followed by every year the action was included in the report and not addressed.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Philippines (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Autonize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015
Coordination	Ensure that the National Child Labor Committee has the legal mandate and resources necessary to effectively coordinate national efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2015
Social Programs	Ensure that all children are able to safely access and attend school and discontinue prohibitive costs for education-related expenses.	2015-2015

In 2015, Afghanistan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The President ordered the creation of a committee to prevent and prosecute Government officials involved in the commercial sexual exploitation of boys. The Government also prevented children from enlisting in the Afghan National Defense and Security Forces. However, children in Afghanistan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict and the forced production of bricks. Afghanistan's labor inspectorate is not authorized to impose penalties for child labor violations, and the Government lacks programs to eliminate child labor in certain sectors in which it is prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Afghanistan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict and the forced production of bricks.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Afghanistan. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	7.5 (673,949)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	41.8

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Use in armed conflict, sometimes a result of forced recruitment (5-7, 13, 28)
	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking (4, 28, 29)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (25, 26, 28, 30-33)
	Forced labor in the production of bricks and carpets,* and in begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-4, 25, 28, 29)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C 182.

In Afghanistan, children are most commonly trafficked internally for labor exploitation in carpet weaving, brick making, domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, begging, and drug smuggling.(4, 29) Children are also trafficked transnationally, primarily to Pakistan, Iran, India, Saudi Arabia, and Greece. Boys are used for forced labor in agriculture, construction, begging, drug smuggling, and commercial sexual exploitation, while girls are used for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work.(4, 28, 29) Evidence points to the trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation and debt settlement, including bonded labor in the production of bricks.(3, 4, 12) There are reports indicate that girls from other countries—including Iran and Pakistan—are trafficked to Afghanistan for commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 28)

Non-state groups, such as the Taliban and Da’esh (also known as the Islamic State of Khorasan Province), recruited children for use in armed conflict, to plant improvised explosive devices, or to act as suicide bombers.(5, 6, 13, 28) The Taliban use some schools for child recruitment and military training.(7) Limited evidence indicates that the Da’esh trained children as young age 5 in the use of weapons.(21) The UN has also verified cases of recruitment and use of children by the Afghan National Defense and Security Forces.(7) Low birth registration contributes to the problem because it makes the determination of a recruit’s age difficult.(34)

Children, especially boys, are subject to commercial sexual exploitation throughout the country. The practice of bacha bazi (boy play), in which men keep young boys for social and sexual entertainment, is particularly prevalent.(32, 35) In many cases, these boys are dressed in female clothing, used as dancers at parties and ceremonies, and sexually exploited.(32, 36) A national inquiry conducted in 2014 found that most boys were ages 13–16.(32) Reports indicate that some government officials, including members of the Afghan National Police, Afghan Local Police, and the Afghan Border Police, have boys for bacha bazi and also have them work as tea servers or cooks in police camps.(32, 35, 37)

Based on a 2013 report by the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission, about 6 million children are out of school. Barriers to education for children include distance from school, school-related fees, lack of security, and not being allowed by parents to go to school, particularly for girls.(12) Attacks on schools continued in 2015; and 68 schools in Nangarhar province were closed due activities of groups affiliated with Da’esh.(7)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Afghanistan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

* No conscription (44)

‡ Age calculated based on available information.(46)

Afghan law does not comprehensively protect children from commercial sexual exploitation. While the 2009 Elimination of Violence Against Women Act protects girls from forced prostitution, it does not mention boys.(42) The legal framework does not adequately criminalize the possession or distribution of child pornography specifically or include increased penalties for the possession or distribution child pornography. In addition, although the Penal Code sets forth increased penalties for sex acts with boys, it does not specifically address the practice of bacha bazi and the associated sexual exploitation, including touching, massaging, and forced dancing in public and private ceremonies.(41) Pending amendments to the Penal Code include measures that criminalize the practice of bacha bazi, including forcing a child to dance.(28)

The Counter Abduction and Human Trafficking Law requires the elements of force, fraud, or coercion for trafficking of a child, which is inconsistent with international standards.(40) Although forced labor and child trafficking are illegal, research did not find criminalization of debt bondage.

Additionally, laws related to illicit activities are not sufficient as the use, procuring, and offering of a child for the production of drugs are not prohibited.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, Martyrs, and Disabled (MoLSAMD)	Respond to complaints of child labor and refer cases to the Attorney General's Office.(47)
Child Protection Action Network (CPAN)	A coalition of Government agencies, NGOs, and community and religious leaders conducts child labor inspections and refers children engaged in hazardous child labor to NGO and Government shelters that provide protection and social services.(6)

Attorney General's Office (AGO)	Investigate and prosecute human trafficking and abduction cases.(48)
Ministry of Women's Affairs (MOWA)	Register abduction and human trafficking cases, and provide support to child labor and trafficking victims.(6, 48)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor.

In 2015, MoLSAMD employed 18 labor inspectors. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Afghanistan should employ about 200 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(6, 49-51) Government officials, NGOs, and UNICEF acknowledge that the number of labor inspectors is insufficient. Labor inspectors do not have legal authority to enforce child labor laws.(6) Business owners are not required to allow unannounced inspections.(6)

MoLSAMD, in cooperation with the Child Protection Action Network (CPAN), can respond to complaints of child labor, investigate cases, and issue warnings or refer the case to the General Attorney's office. A person wishing to file a complaint must specify the legal grounds for labor violations in writing.(47)

The primary mechanism for responding to child labor cases is CPAN. In 2014, 19 CPAN technical advisors conducted 350 child labor inspections across Afghanistan.(46) Updated information for 2015 is not available.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the Ministry of the Interior employed two officers in each anti-human-trafficking unit throughout Afghanistan's 34 provinces; however, the priority of these units is to combat human smuggling, rather than combating the worst forms of child labor. Government officials stated that they lacked equipment and transportation to carry out investigations.(6) In 2014, the Government issued a directive that calls for the enforcement of the Law on Human Trafficking to ensure that victims of human trafficking receive appropriate social services instead of being prosecuted for violations of Afghan law.(35) During the reporting period, however, victims of human trafficking were routinely prosecuted and convicted of crimes. Some Government officials are complicit in the lack of prosecutions of individuals who subject boys to bacha bazi.(4) Male child victims of human trafficking, especially those who were engaged in commercial sexual exploitation or were used as child soldiers, were sometimes referred to juvenile detention and rehabilitation facilities, and they did not receive appropriate victim support services.(28, 52) The UN noted that some children, detained in juvenile rehabilitation centers as a result of their association with armed groups, reported being subjected to torture and ill treatment.(52)

In 2015, the President ordered the creation of a committee to investigate and prosecute cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children by security forces.(28) Based on Government statistics for 2015, 41 cases of human trafficking were investigated, leading to 38 prosecutions and 33 convictions; however, it is not known how many of these cases involved child victims.(6)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government of Afghanistan has established coordinating mechanisms to address certain forms of child labor, research found no evidence of an overall mechanism to combat child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
High Commission for Combating Crimes of Abduction and Human Trafficking	Address human trafficking in general, including child trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Justice and comprising the National Directorate of Security; the Attorney General's Office; the Afghan Independent Bar Association; the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission; the Afghan Women Skills Development Center; and nine Government ministries, including MoLSAMD, the Ministry of Public Health, and the Ministry of Women's Affairs.(6, 48)
Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Children and Armed Conflict	Coordinate efforts to eliminate the recruitment and use of child soldiers. Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and monitored by the UN Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict, which comprises UN and NGO members.(53)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Afghanistan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Children at Risk	Creates a framework to support at-risk children and their families with new and existing social services, develops a strategic plan to build the capacity of child-based organizations into broader family- and community-based institutions, and guides donors in contributing toward a comprehensive child protection system. Focuses specifically on working children, trafficked children, child soldiers, and other children affected by conflict.(54)
Action Plan for the Prevention of Underage Recruitment	Aims to prevent the recruitment of minors into the Afghan National Security Forces, including the Afghan National Army, the Afghan National Police, the National Directorate of Security, and pro-government militia groups. Seeks to ensure the release of children under age 18 from the armed forces and facilitate their reintegration into families and communities.(55)
Road Map Toward Full Compliance of the Action Plan for the Prevention of Underage Recruitment	Supports and expedites implementation of the Action Plan for the Prevention of Underage Recruitment. Identifies 15 priority areas, including criminalization of the recruitment and use of children by national security forces, development of a policy to protect children arrested and detained on national security-related charges, improved age verification procedures, establishment of a national monitoring system, and endorsement of a national birth registration strategy.(6, 52)
National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons (2014–2015)	Aimed to improve the anti-trafficking legal framework, prevent prosecution of trafficking victims, increase awareness about the trafficking of male children, and improve victim rehabilitation programs for boys.(56)
National Labor Policy	Includes objectives to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, including those in hazardous activities; pass legislation prohibiting child labor; and effectively enforce child labor laws.(17)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Afghanistan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project to Prevent Child Labor in Home-Based Carpet Production in Afghanistan (2013–2017)	$2 million, USDOL-funded 4-year, project implemented by GoodWeave. Aims to build market preferences for child labor-free Afghan carpets, contributes to evidence-based knowledge of child labor in the Afghanistan carpet sector, and increases public awareness and engagement on the issue of child labor in the Afghan carpet sector.(57) In 2015, GoodWeave provided educational services, including extracurricular classes, to 134 children, and livelihood and health services to 43 households. With more time dedicated to educational activities, children have less time to engage in child labor in carpet weaving.(58)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR)*	USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor and the implementation of the National Strategy for Children at Risk.(59)
Afghanistan Peace and Reintegration Program	Promotes the reintegration of former insurgents back into their communities. Child insurgents are referred to the Ministry of the Interior’s child correction centers.(28)
Age Verification of New Afghan National Security Forces Recruits†	Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Ministry of Defense, Ministry of Interior, National Directorate of Security, and UNICEF program that operates child protection units in the Afghan National Security Forces recruitment centers. Aims to ensure that new recruits meet the minimum age requirement of 18 by carefully screening applicants.(60) In an effort to address the use of the fraudulent IDs by children, the process includes an ID check and a requirement that at least two community elders vouch that a recruit is at least age 18 and is eligible to join the Afghan National Security Forces.(61) Implemented by the Afghan National Police in Badghis, Herat, Laghman, Nangarhar, and Nimroz provinces, the pilot program seeks to enforce the Ministry of the Interior National Birth Registration Strategy, which aims to prevent recruitment of children into the armed forces.(28)
Trafficking Shelter‡	MoLSAMD-funded, NGO-operated shelter for human trafficking victims. Provides food, clothing, medical care, counseling, psychosocial support, and vocational and academic training. MoLSAMD registers victims and provides reintegration assistance.(6) An additional shelter is available for boy victims of human trafficking in Kabul, funded by the USDOS and operated by Hagar International.(6)
Counter-Trafficking Program	USDOS-funded project implemented by Hagar International in collaboration with the IOM. Provides counter-trafficking training for law enforcement officials in four provinces and aims to facilitate information sharing and collaboration on counter-trafficking activities between government and civil society actors.(35, 62)

Program	Description
Safety Nets and Pensions Support Project (2009–2016)	$7.5 million World Bank-funded, 7-year project, implemented by MoLSAMD, provides cash support on a case-by-case basis to poor families with children under age 5 in three provinces. Targets highly impoverished families, including children who are at risk of child labor.(6)
Protracted Relief and Recovery Operation (2014–2016)	$496 million WFP-funded $496 million, 3-year project, enhances food security and nutrition for 3.7 million beneficiaries in 184 food insecure districts. Assists people affected by conflict, natural disaster, or economic stress by providing food, vouchers, or cash. Provides targeted children with supplementary feeding, supports schools to increase enrollment and attendance, and provides adults with vocational training.(63)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Afghanistan.

The Government opened three new Children Protection Units, bringing the total to seven throughout the country, which prevent the enlistment of children into the Afghan National Defense and Security Forces.(7) Between March 2015 and March 2016, the Government prevented the enlistment of more than 1,100 children.(64)

There is no evidence of programs designed specifically to prevent and eliminate child labor in agriculture or forced child labor in the production of bricks. Research found that shelters and support services for male child trafficking victims older than age 10 were particularly limited.(33)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Afghanistan (Table 9).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws protect all children, including boys, from commercial sexual exploitation.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that laws clearly prohibit the production, distribution, benefiting from, and possession of child pornography.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that the definition of child trafficking does not require an element of force or coercion in different stages of human trafficking.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that debt bondage is criminally prohibited.	2015
	Ensure laws criminally prohibit procuring and offering of a child for illicit activities.	2015
Enforcement	Collect and make publicly available information on labor inspectorate funding; the number of CPAN technical advisors dedicated to child labor inspections; the number of labor inspections, including those conducted at worksites and by desk reviews; the number of child labor violations identified; and whether unannounced inspections were conducted.	2015
	Authorize the inspectorate to assess penalties for violations of Afghan law.	2015
	Ensure that the labor inspectorate receives training on child labor.	2011 – 2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that the labor inspectorate has legal authority to enforce child labor laws, including by legally requiring businesses to comply with unannounced inspections.	2014 – 2015
	Simplify the child labor complaint mechanism to allow oral complaints and waive the requirement that the individual filing a complaint must specify the legal grounds for the violation.	2015
	Make publicly available data on the training system of criminal investigators, as well as the numbers of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions for all crimes involving the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that investigators are available to enforce criminal laws involving all of the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015

	Ensure that child victims of human trafficking and other worst forms of child labor are correctly identified as victims and are not detained; and ensure that they are referred to appropriate social services, and that children held in juvenile detention or rehabilitation facilities are not subject to mistreatment or torture.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including all its worst forms.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Institute a birth registration campaign.	2015
	Institute programs to increase access to education and to improve security in schools, especially for girls.	2014 – 2015
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture and bonded child labor in brick kilns.	2009 – 2015
	Provide financial support to open shelters for victims of human trafficking and to ensure that sufficient shelter services are available for older male child trafficking victims.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
51. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Albania made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government raised the minimum age at which children may participate in apprenticeship programs and light work to 15. The Government also issued a detailed instruction to national child protection stakeholders outlining each stakeholder's role in child protection and the best practices for assisting vulnerable children. However, children in Albania are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging. Enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the limited number of inspectors in the State Inspectorate for Labor and Social Services and the General Directorate of State. In addition, programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

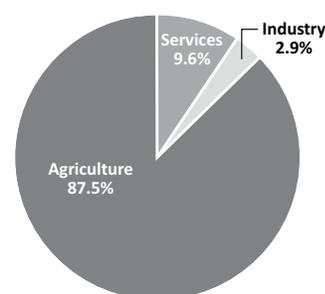

Children in Albania are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-5) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging.(2, 3, 5-7) In 2014, the Government supported the publication of the first national assessment of children living and working on the street in Albania.(3) The report showed that the most common forms of street work among these children are vending, begging, and busking. Ninety-six percent of children interviewed reported family income generation as their reason for engaging in street work.(3) Data also showed that 74.3 percent of street children belong to the Roma and Egyptian communities, indicating that a disproportionately high number of children working on the street belong to ethnic minority groups.(3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Albania.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.6 (23,665)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.5

	Forced begging sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 5-7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Albania is a source country for children trafficked abroad to neighboring countries such as Kosovo, Macedonia, and Montenegro, as well as to EU countries for commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging.(23, 24) In addition, internal child trafficking and forced begging has reportedly increased in recent years.(7, 23) Street children, especially those from ethnic Egyptian and Roma communities, are at the greatest risk of becoming victims of human trafficking.(2, 3, 16, 25, 26)

The majority of children engaged in child labor in Albania work in the agriculture sector. However, there is little information available about the specific work activities in which these children are engaged.(1-3, 16)

Sources report that due to an ongoing police campaign to end cannabis production, child labor in cannabis production has substantially decreased.(27) However, research found that, since the onset of the police campaign, cannabis cultivation has moved to remote mountain regions of the country that are less accessible to NGO and government monitoring. As a result, it is not clear whether child labor in the sector has ceased.(12)

Although the Constitution of the Republic of Albania and the Law on Pre-University Education guarantee free public education, children without birth certificates are unable to attend school.(5) Residency requirements continue to make it difficult for Roma and Egyptian families in particular to acquire birth registration for their children.(16, 23, 28) Lack of registration often prevents children in this community from accessing education and other social services.(14, 16, 28) Children from the Roma and Egyptian communities also experienced discrimination in schools, including being turned away from schools or physically separated from other children in the classroom.(5) Children who do not have access to education and other social services are at an increased risk of exploitation in child labor. In addition, the costs of books, uniforms, and classroom resources such as space heaters are prohibitive for low-income families.(5)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Albania has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

*No conscription (36)

In 2015, the Government introduced amendments to the Labor Code that increased the age at which children may be employed in light work from 14 to 15, and established 15 as the age at which children may participate in an apprenticeship program.(40, 41) However, research did not find a corresponding update to the Decree of the Council of Ministers on the Protection of Minors at Work, which lists the minimum age for light work as 14.(33)

The law does not criminally prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of all children under 18 for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs. Article 129 of the Penal Code only criminally prohibits inducing or encouraging children under 14 to participate in criminality.(29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Social Services Agency under the Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth	Receive, document, and respond to child labor complaints.(6)
General Directorate of State Police and Regional Police Directorates under the Ministry of Interior	Enforce all laws, including child labor and child trafficking laws.(4) Each Regional Police Directorate has an officer designated to child protection, as well as an Illicit Trafficking section that investigates cases of child trafficking. The General Directorate of State Police coordinates the work of child protection officers and Illicit Trafficking sections at the regional level.(4)
Serious Crimes Prosecution Office	Investigate and prosecute cases involving human trafficking, including child trafficking.(2, 43)
Child Rights Units (CRUs)	Monitor the situation of high-risk children and families at the regional level, coordinate protection and referral activities by Child Protection Units (CPUs) at the local level, and manage cases of children whose needs cannot be met by CPUs due to lack of CPU capacity or lack of a CPU in a given municipality.(44, 45)
Child Protection Units (CPUs)	Identify children at risk, take case referrals from enforcement agencies, and conduct initial evaluations of each case at the municipal level. Manage cases of at-risk children and refer them to appropriate social services.(2, 45-47)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

There are currently 12 Child Rights Units (CRUs) and 202 Child Protection Units (CPUs) in Albania.(41) These institutions managed 1,116 cases of street children through September 2015, including 441 new cases.(41) CPUs are generally staffed by only one individual, and a majority of CPU staff are not able to focus on child protection issues full-time.(4, 28) Additionally, CPUs and CRUs often receive inadequate funding for child protection, and the Ombudsman has noted that the effectiveness of these units is often low.(2, 6, 43, 48) Instruction No. 10 on Cooperation and Intervention Procedures for Assisting Vulnerable Children for Institutions and Structures in Charge of Child Protection was issued in February 2015 to address the issue.(45) The Instruction requires municipal governments to allocate sufficient funds to allow CPUs to employ at least one social worker who focuses on children's rights. However, it is not clear whether this requirement will be effective in increasing CPUs' overall funding.(45)

In 2015, the State Labor Inspectorate gained the additional responsibility of monitoring the quality of social services provided to vulnerable Albanians and was renamed the State Inspectorate for Labor and Social Services (SLISS). The agency's labor inspection function has not been affected by this change.(4)

The SILSS does not inspect for child labor violations unless it has received a specific complaint. Inadequate staffing levels contributed to the inability of the SILSS to conduct routine targeted inspections for child labor.(4) In addition, a lack of adequate funding, office space, transportation, and training compromises the quality of inspections and the ability of the SILSS to fulfill its mandate.(4, 6)

In 2015, all 16 child labor law violations uncovered by the SILSS involved the business's failure to register child workers with the tax office. In practice, the SILSS gives the business the opportunity to become compliant with the law before assessing the penalty.(4) Since the violations were discovered, 11 of the businesses have registered child workers with the tax office, and the remaining 5 businesses are taking steps to do so.(4)

Although there is no evidence of formal referral mechanisms, a source reported that child laborers discovered during the course of investigations are referred to social services. However, no children were referred to social services by the SILSS during 2015.(4)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Albania took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, 16 law enforcement officers were dedicated to crimes involving minors, including 3 police officers at the General Directorate of State Police and 13 officers in the 12 Regional Directorates.(4, 41) The number of police officers dedicated to child protection was inadequate to address the scope of the problem.(6) However, all 110 police officers across the country address cases involving minors as part of their regular duties.(4, 41)

During the reporting period, police investigated 6 cases of child exploitation for the purposes of begging, involving 14 children. All children discovered during the course of the investigation were referred to CPUs and State Social Services.(4)

Given the scope of the problem, the number of investigations and prosecutions of child trafficking are inadequate. Some NGOs also report that laws prohibiting the production and possession of child pornography are rarely enforced.(5)

In 2015, prosecutors, judges, and police officers attended trainings on legal standards for working with children in the justice system, protocol for investigating and prosecuting criminal offenses involving children, and standards for the protection of victims and witnesses in cases of child sexual abuse.(4, 41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
State Agency for the Protection of Children's Rights	Oversee implementation of the Government's child rights protection policies.(4) Develop methodological guidelines for child protection and provide technical assistance and training to CRUs and CPUs. Sanction individuals or institutions that fail to protect children from violence and exploitation through inaction or misconduct.(45)
National Referral Mechanism	Coordinate the identification, protection, referral, and rehabilitation of trafficking victims between Government and civil society organizations. Chaired by the Office of the National Coordinator for the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings (ONAC).(23)
Office of the National Coordinator for the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings (ONAC)	Coordinate all antihuman trafficking efforts in Albania. Serve as chair of the State Committee Against Trafficking in Persons, a deputy minister-level working group that establishes the Government's policy on combating human trafficking. Oversee 12 regional anti-human trafficking committees that carry out local action plans in cooperation with civil society partners.(43) ONAC continued to receive funding in 2015, after receiving its own budget for the first time in 2014.(37)

In October 2015, the Ministry of Interior, the State Police, and the SILSS signed a memorandum of cooperation on identification of cases of labor exploitation and labor trafficking.(41)

In December 2015, the Office of the National Coordinator, the Office of the General Prosecutor, and the General Directorate of State Police signed a memorandum of understanding enabling interagency cooperation in the analysis of child trafficking cases and the identification of legal gaps in current anti-trafficking legislation.(4)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Albania has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Action Plan for Children (2012–2015)	Promotes development of comprehensive interagency child protection policies and encourages capacity building of institutions designed to monitor and protect children's rights. Includes a strategic objective on protecting children from the worst forms of child labor through strengthening prevention measures and increasing the SILSS's role in preventing child labor.(14)
Instruction No. 10 on Cooperation and Intervention Procedures for Assisting Vulnerable Children for Institutions and Structures in Charge of Child Protection†	Outlines the child protection responsibilities of the State Police, Ministry of Education, Regional Directorates of Social Service, Regional Departments of Education, schools, municipal governments, CRUs, and CPUs.(45) Requires all agencies to refer known and suspected cases of child abuse and exploitation to CPUs. Outlines principles for case management and evaluation.(45)
Action Plan for the Identification and Protection of Children in Street Situations (2015–2017)†	Aims to protect children from exploitation, abuse, and neglect using a coordinated approach involving all stakeholders.(41) Defines the roles and responsibilities in identifying and providing assistance to street children, including children working on the street, of the Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth, Ministry of Interior, Ministry of Education, Ministry of Health, relevant NGOs, and international organizations.(4)
White Paper on the Future of the Integrated Child Protection System in Albania†	Clarifies the roles and responsibilities of all government agencies involved in child protection and makes policy recommendations on ensuring government accountability in the sphere of child protection, providing effective child protection and response mechanisms, and creating a child-friendly justice system.(4)
Albanian Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016	Outlines a plan to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Albania by 2016 with a focus on adequate legislation; effective law enforcement; accessible, quality education; accessible social protection for vulnerable families; promotion of youth employment; and formalization of the informal economy.(49)
Strategy for Combating Trafficking in Persons and Action Plan (2014–2017)	Outlines plan to improve law enforcement, build the capacity of social services programs that provide services to victims, and improve interagency coordination. Includes the goals of increasing successful prosecutions for child trafficking and increasing the sensitivity of the investigation and prosecution processes to fit the needs of child victims.(50) Facilitates the provision of services to vulnerable children and families, as well as training of professionals who work with street children.(37, 41)
National Action Plan for the Decade of Roma Inclusion, (2005–2015)	Objectives include monitoring cases of child labor exploitation in the Roma community, establishing shelters and day schools for street children, and improving birth registration and access to education for Roma children.(51)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Albania funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
UN Support to Social Inclusion (2012–2016)	UN program that works with several government ministries to improve implementation of social inclusion by developing informed policies and strengthening institutions.(52)
National Anti-Trafficking Month*†	Month-long ONAC-funded awareness-raising program. Includes direct outreach to schools and communities, as well as various forms of public service announcements.(4) In 2015, this program was created as an expansion on the previously existing National Anti-Trafficking Week.(4)
Trafficking in Persons Helpline and Report and Save Mobile App	ONAC projects, supported by USAID, UNODC, World Vision, and the Vodafone Albania Foundation, to provide services for victims of crime and improve prevention of trafficking in persons. Includes a national hotline for trafficking in persons victims and the mobile application “Report and Save,” which serves as a public awareness-raising tool and allows citizens to report suspected human trafficking cases and access information on victim assistance.(23)
Albania-UN Program of Cooperation (2012–2016)	UN program focuses on four thematic areas within the Government and civil society: governance and rule of law, economy and environment, regional and local development, and inclusive social policy.(53) Includes goals such as increased access to education for vulnerable children and increased protections for victims of child trafficking.(54)
National Emergency Transition Centert	Government-run center established to provide vulnerable families with temporary housing, health, psychosocial and educational services, legal assistance, vocational education programs, and employment placement assistance. Currently houses 53 Roma families, including 112 children.(6) Beneficiaries include children at risk of street begging. To receive benefits, families must keep their children enrolled in school.(2) Currently 53 families, including 80 children from the Roma community, are living in the shelter.(41)
National Reception Center for Victims of Trafficking†	Government-funded, high-security national shelter under the supervision of the Directorate General of State Social Service. Provides shelter and access to social services for human trafficking victims identified in Albania.(55)
Child Allowance Program (Ndihma Ekonomike)†	$46 million government-funded cash transfer program that provides a child allowance for families already benefiting from economic aid through Albania’s Law on Social Assistance and Services. Child allowance payments to eligible families are deemed too low to significantly reduce the number of children living in poverty, and therefore are unlikely to have an impact on reducing child labor.(6)
Decent Work Country Program (2012–2015)	ILO technical assistance project detailing the policies, strategies, and results required to realize progress toward the goal of decent work for all. Outcomes include strengthening the effectiveness and quality of labor inspection systems, enhancing the capacity of policymakers to address informal and vulnerable employment of young people, and ensuring that labor laws better adhere to international labor standards, including those on the worst forms of child labor.(56)
World Day Against Child Labor*†	Awareness-raising campaign coordinated by the State Agency for the Protection of the Rights of the Child in cooperation with the OSCE, USAID, and NGO partners. Awareness-raising materials, including leaflets and T-shirts, were distributed to 100 schools, and success stories of children who have been removed from the street and provided social services were featured on television and social media.(41)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

Civil society organizations, rather than government organizations, generally provide social services for children engaged in the worst forms of child labor. However, these civil society organizations often lack well-trained staff and coordination with other protection services, especially at the local level.(2, 48, 57, 58) The National Reception Center for Victims of Trafficking lacked proper resources for victim reintegration services such as education, psychological support, and vocational training. Additionally, the Government did not provide sufficient financial assistance to the NGO-run shelters in Albania.(23)

Although Albania has implemented programs to assist street children and victims of child trafficking, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children in agriculture, construction, and mining, or children used in illicit activities.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Albania (Table 11).

Albania

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the Decree of the Council of Ministers on the Protection of Minors at Work reflects the 2015 amendment to the Labor Code, which increased the minimum age for light work to 15.	2015
	Ensure that the use, procuring, and offering of all children under 18 for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs is criminally prohibited.	2015
Enforcement	Make the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review publicly available.	2015
	Provide CRUs and CPUs with adequate staffing and funding to carry out their work effectively.	2013 – 2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating routine inspections and inspections targeted based on analysis of data related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents.	2015
	Provide inspectors with adequate training and the resources needed to carry out their tasks effectively.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure there are an adequate number, nationwide, of police investigators for child rights and that an adequate number of investigations are carried out.	2013 – 2015
	Fully enforce the provisions of the Criminal Code that prohibit the production and possession of child pornography.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct additional research to further identify children's activities in agriculture and construction to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Increase resources, access to civil registration, and the number of social services available to children, including Roma and Egyptian children engaged in or at risk of engaging in child labor.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that financial barriers to education, such as the prohibitive cost of school supplies and classroom resources, are removed.	2013 – 2015
	Increase payments to families who are eligible for assistance under the Social Assistance and Services Law.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that the Government makes sufficient services and resources available to victims of human trafficking.	2015
	Institute programs to assist children being used in illicit activities.	2014 – 2015

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Algeria

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Algeria made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government released data on child labor; increased fines for those guilty of violating child labor laws; identified 97 children during labor inspections in the services industry and agriculture sector; and established a Children's Council to protect and prevent children from exploitation and violence, including child labor. Also, the Government's Inter-Ministerial Coordinating Committee on Trafficking drafted the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons. However, children in Algeria are engaged in child labor, including in street work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including by being subjected to commercial sexual exploitation. Algerian law does not sufficiently prohibit the use of children in illicit activities. In addition, law enforcement personnel did not receive adequate training to build their capacity to effectively investigate trafficking cases or identify human trafficking victims.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Algeria are engaged in child labor, including in street work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation.(1-5) National statistics released by the Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MOLESS) found that out of 15,093 organizations that employed 98,327 workers, 97 children under age 16 (0.09 percent) were recorded as being employed, compared to 0.04 percent in 2014.(6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Algeria. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including harvesting olives* (1-3, 5, 9, 10)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (2, 5, 6, 9, 11)
Services	Street work, including vending items including bread during Ramadan,* collecting plastics,* and begging (1, 2, 4, 6, 9, 12-15)
	Domestic work (1, 3, 5, 6)
	Working in small workshops and businesses, including mechanics shops* (2, 5, 10, 16)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5, 6, 9, 15, 17)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (15)
	Drawing water from wells, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (15)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Evidence suggests that children, primarily unaccompanied sub-Saharan migrants, are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, including by being trafficked into prostitution in bars and informal brothels.(6, 17, 18) Many unaccompanied migrant girls are engaged in forced domestic work, and traffickers loan some of these girls to Algerian families for extended periods of time. Some unaccompanied migrant boys are engaged in work in the construction industry.(6) Touareg and Maure human traffickers based in northern Mali and southern Algeria force some sub-Saharan refugee and asylum-seeking children to draw water from wells; those children are often beaten and robbed of their possessions, including their identification documents.(15)

During the reporting period, female migrants from Niger often carried children with them when they begged in Algeria, in order to attract greater sympathy. These women did not always carry their own the children, since they sometimes used the children of extended family members or rented children from other women; the biological mothers of those children remained in Niger.(15) Additionally, IOM found that some of the children repatriated to Niger by the Algerian Red Crescent had been forced to beg.(15) Syrian children can be observed begging in the streets in some parts of Algiers, the Algerian capital.(6)

In 2015, MOLESS reported that most children work part time, engaging in activities such as harvesting olives in the winter, selling bread during Ramadan, and providing assistance to small businesses.(10) Research could not find a current and comprehensive study on the activities and scope of the child labor situation in Algeria.(1, 6, 19)

Although the Government mandates compulsory education through age 16 and provides free educational opportunities, a high rate of dropout among girls occurs at the intermediate and secondary school levels.(20) Most children with disabilities do not have the opportunity to access mainstream education, partly because of social stigma, the relatively low number of teachers with specialized training in providing educational support to these children, the lack of a transportation system for children with disabilities, and limited accessibility of school buildings.(1) Children without birth registration documentation also cannot access school. Some school registration officers and family judges refuse to register children who are born out of wedlock, are refugees, or are stateless.(1) Barriers to education—including those placed on girls, children with disabilities, and unregistered children—should be eliminated, because being out of school increases these children’s vulnerability to child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Algeria has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of Law No. 08-04 on National Education (26)

In 2015, MOLESS, in consultation with the ILO and local social partners, continued to overhaul the Labor Code. For example, the Government began drafting a list to detail hazardous work that would be prohibited for children; it is expected to be finished by the end of 2016.(10) The Labor Code prohibits minor workers from being employed in work harmful to their health, safety, or morals; however, Algeria has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under 18.(6, 21, 27)

In 2015, the Government amended its Complementary Finance Law to include new fines for those guilty of violating child labor laws. Article 140, as amended, stipulates that, except in cases of apprenticeship contracts that are formed pursuant to existing law, the Government can impose a fine of between $100 to $200 upon employers found to have recruited minors as apprentices in violation of the law.(28)

A 2015 amendment to Article 65 bis 19 and 20 of the Criminal Procedural Code mandates that the Government ensure the physical safety of human trafficking victims and their family members who participate in criminal judicial procedures against their traffickers when those victims request such accommodations, by concealing the victims' identities; by using a special security point of contact and phone number; and by moving the victims or witnesses—along with their families—to a secure community.(29)

The laws related to illicit activities are not sufficient as the use, procurement, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs are not criminally prohibited.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MOLESS) General Labor Inspectorate	Investigate labor violations, including those involving child labor. Authorized to distribute written notices and issue tickets.(2, 16, 30) Demand that safety and health problems be addressed if workers' health and safety are at risk.(30)
Ministry of the Interior General Directorate for National Security	Enforce criminal laws pertaining to child labor violations, including child trafficking, within cities. In 2015, comprised six active brigades of specialized police officers—in Adrar, Bechar, Illizi, Souk Ahras, Tamanrasset, and Tlemcen—focused on illegal immigration and human trafficking.(15)
Ministry of National Defense National Gendarmerie	Enforce criminal laws pertaining to child labor violations, including child trafficking, in rural and border regions.(15)
Ministry of Justice Office of Criminal Affairs and Amnesty Procedures	Prosecute child exploitation cases, including those pertaining to noncompliance with labor laws.(31)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, law enforcement agencies in Algeria took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, labor inspectors identified and removed 97 children from work during labor inspections in service industries and the agriculture sector, primarily in seasonal agricultural work. The Government enrolled children between ages 14 and 16 who were removed from worksites in vocational programs; it also returned children under age 13 to their parents.(10)

Based on information from 2014, the last year for which information is available, the MOLESS General Labor Inspectorate tends to employ more inspectors in urban than in rural areas, although past reports had indicated higher levels of child labor in rural areas.(16) MOLESS reported in 2015 that it based the number of inspectors in each branch office on the size and economic significance of a province. In 2015, the ILO and Algeria's National Labor Institute, a government body that administers training for all labor inspectors, trained all labor inspectors in basic child labor investigations.(10)

Labor inspectors share child labor reports with the Ministry of Solidarity to ensure follow-up with social services.(12) The National Gendarmerie and the Police both operate hotlines to receive reports on child exploitation or child rights violations, including complaints regarding child labor; however, research did not find out how many complaints related to child labor were received during the reporting period.(12) The NGO Algerian Network for the Defense of Children's Rights also administers a hotline.(30-33) Of the 18,322 phone calls received by the hotline between July 2014 and May 2015, the majority pertained to children, including reports of begging. A total of 750 calls pertained to children subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, including by gangs.(34)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Algeria took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

Number of Convictions	Unknown (32, 35)	0 (15)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	No (31)	Yes (15)

In 2015, the Government reported that instead of criminally prosecuting perpetrators of child labor violations, it often restricted the ability of these individuals or entities to receive government subsidies, or it precluded them from submitting bids for MOLESS contracts for a minimum of 2 years.(10)

During the reporting period, 25 officers from the General Directorate for National Security and National Gendarmerie completed training—provided by UNODC, with support from USDOS—on investigating and prosecuting individuals who smuggle migrants, as well as on how to distinguish smuggling from crimes of trafficking in persons.(15) The Government acknowledged the need for additional training to build the capacity of law enforcement personnel to prevent trafficking of persons and identify human trafficking victims.(15) The Government has a practice in place for law enforcement personnel to refer potential victims of human trafficking to the prosecutor, who then notifies social services as needed.(15) Research did not find further information.

Although the Penal Code states that the Government will cover the cost of services for trafficking victims, which include a per diem, phone calls, medical care and HIV testing, and legal and interpretation services, the law does not stipulate which agency within the Government is responsible for providing these services. NGOs, not the Government, finance and provide the aforementioned services to victims, as well as temporary shelter and counseling services.(15) In 2015, the Government began discussions with an international organization, seeking assistance in improving its provision of such services. Research was not able to determine whether child trafficking victims were able to access specific services or shelters during the reporting period.(15)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Intersectoral Commission Relative to the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor	Prevent and eliminate child labor by coordinating between government ministries and all other agencies that oversee labor activities.(2, 32) Led by MOLESS, with members from the National Labor Union and NGOs, as well as the Ministries of Agriculture; Rural Development; Health; Interior; Justice; Youth and Sports; National Solidarity; Communication and Culture; and National Education, Training, and Professional Teaching.(32, 36)
Inter-Ministerial Coordinating Committee on Trafficking	Manage government efforts to address human trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Director of Security and Disarmament Affairs.(15) Includes representatives from MOLESS and from the Ministries of Interior; Health, National Solidarity; Communication and Culture; Defense; Justice; and Religious Affairs. Also includes representatives of the Algerian Red Crescent and the Government's National Advisory Commission on the Protection and Promotion of Human Rights.(15) Met six times in 2015, which resulted in a four-page national action plan that identifies next steps for the Government to take to combat human trafficking.(15)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Entity for the Protection and Promotion of Children*	Protect and prevent children from exploitation and violence, including child labor. Instituted on June 12, 2015, during the Minister of Labor's press conference for World Day Against Child Labor and the publication in the official gazette regarding its establishment; has undertaken no additional public activities since then.(6, 37)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

Past reports indicate that the Intersectoral Commission Relative to the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor has strengthened the labor inspection service and has organized hundreds of open-door seminars and education programs on child labor; however, research found no evidence that such activities were undertaken during 2015.(6, 38)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Algeria has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Drafted in 2015, aims to prevent and reduce human trafficking by raising awareness of the issue, strengthening legislation, prosecuting trafficking crimes, improving the provision of protective services to victims, and increasing collaboration with national and international NGOs.(15)
National Action Plan for Children (2008–2015)	Promoted universal access to education and child protection, including a section on child labor.(1, 27)

The Government did not meet its timetable for reporting on implementing the National Action Plan for Children. Research found that a lack of funding and technical capacity has hindered the policy's implementation.(1, 35) Additionally, research could not determine whether a new National Action Plan for Children was drafted or approved during the reporting period to replace the one that ended in 2015.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence of programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Algeria (Table 10).

Table 10. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law prohibits the use of children in all illicit activities, including the use, procurement, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2013 – 2015
	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under 18, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available regarding the enforcement of child labor laws, including the General Labor Inspectorate's budget, the number of labor inspectors, the number of labor inspections, and whether unannounced inspections are permitted, and the training system for criminal investigators.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that child labor laws are enforced effectively in all geographic areas.	2009 – 2015
	Initiate criminal prosecutions against employers suspected of criminally violating child labor laws.	2015
	Provide further training to labor inspectors and criminal law enforcement personnel to build enforcement capacity to address child labor violations.	2015
Coordination	Ensure that the Intersectoral Commission Relative to the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor remains active to guarantee proper coordination.	2011 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Government Policies	Report on the progress that the National Action Plan for Children's progress has made through the end of 2015, when it ended.	2011 – 2015
	Adopt a policy that includes all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as construction, street work, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2015
Social Programs	Conduct comprehensive research on children's activities to determine whether children are engaged, or are at risk of being involved, in child labor; if so, specify which activities these children are performing and how many children are doing so in order to publicly inform policies.	2014 – 2015
	Take measures to ensure children's safety in schools and remove barriers to access to education for children, particularly for girls, children with disabilities, and unregistered children.	2015
	Institute programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms, particularly for children who are being subjected to commercial sexual exploitation; or working in construction, street work, and domestic work.	2009 – 2015

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Angola

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Angola made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched a national program to raise awareness of child labor and there was an increase in the number of labor inspections conducted. However, children in Angola are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and mining. There are gaps in the legal framework to protect children from sexual and labor exploitation. Law enforcement agencies lack the necessary human and financial resources to adequately enforce laws against child labor. In addition, social programs do not target all sectors in which children work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Angola are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and mining. (1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Angola.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	25.7 (694,458)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	65.4

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including planting and picking tomatoes,* harvesting vegetables,* plowing,* and the production of rice* (1-5)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (4, 5)
	Cattle herding* (1, 5)
	Production of charcoal* (4, 5)
Industry	Artisanal diamond mining (1, 8)
	Mining coal* (2)
	Construction, including making and transporting bricks* (2-5, 9, 10)
Services	Street work, including vending, car washing, begging,* and shoe shining* (1, 2, 4, 5)
	Transporting loads (1, 2, 4)
	Domestic work* (4, 5)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 4, 11, 12)
	Forced labor, including in agriculture,* construction,* and domestic work,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 13-16)
	Forced labor in artisanal diamond mining* (3)
	Use in illicit activities, including the sale and transport of drugs,* and moving illicit goods across the border of Angola and Namibia (3, 4, 13)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Evidence indicates that girls as young as age 13 are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation.(3) Research suggests that undocumented Congolese migrant children enter Angola for work in diamond-mining districts and experience conditions of forced labor or commercial sexual exploitation in mining camps.(1, 3)

The Government permitted children to attend school without birth registration, but only up to the fourth grade.(4) The level of birth registration is low due to high costs, great distances to service centers, and parents who lack documentation. Additionally, many families, especially those in rural areas, face difficulty in paying informal school fees.(4, 17, 18) A family's inability to obtain birth registration and afford school fees may hinder children from attending school and make them more vulnerable to child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Angola has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 254 of the Labor Law (19)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 256 of the Labor Law (19)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 256 of the Labor Law; Joint Executive Decree No. 171/10 (19, 20)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 18, 19, and 23 of the Money Laundering Law (21)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 19 and 23 of the Money Laundering Law (21)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 19, 22, and 23 of the Money Laundering Law (21)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 4 and 7 of the Drug Trafficking Law (22)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	20	Article 2 of the Military Service Law (23)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 11 of the Military Service Law (23)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12‡	Articles 8 and 17 of the Basic Law of the Education System (24, 25)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (24, 25)

The hazardous work list, established by Joint Executive Decree No. 171/10, prohibits 57 activities for minors, including fireworks production, stone mining, animal slaughter, leather production, paper making, and pornography; however, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not include diamond mining, an area of work where there is evidence of work conducted underground, underwater, at dangerous heights, or in confined spaces.(20)

Angola

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Laws related to commercial sexual exploitation are not sufficient, as the use, procurement, offering, and financial benefit of a child for the production of pornography and pornographic performances are not criminally prohibited. Furthermore, the law does not criminally prohibit the distribution and possession of pornography.(21)

The law establishes that primary education is compulsory and free for 6 years.(24) The Government reported to the UNESCO Institute of Statistics that children begin primary education at age 6, making education compulsory until age 12.(25) Ending compulsory education at age 12 leaves children ages 12 through 14 vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to attend school, but they also are not legally permitted to work. In addition, this age conflicts with the National Development Plan (2013–2017), which sets the compulsory education age at 14.(10)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Ministry of Public Administration, Labor, and Social Security (MAPTSS)	Enforce laws against child labor. Inspectors can fine an employer or send the case to the Ministry of Interior for further investigation and the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights for prosecution.(26) Employ labor inspectors in all 18 provinces to carry out inspections and joint operations with social service providers.(26)
National Children's Institute (INAC)	Receive complaints about cases of child abuse, including child labor, through its research and investigation branch. INAC's inspection teams conduct regular oversight missions in collaboration with various ministries, the ILO, and civil society.(26, 27)
Ministry of the Interior and its agencies, including the National Police, Border Police, and Immigration Services	Enforce criminal laws and conduct operations and investigations related to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 10, 27)
The Attorney General's Office and Court for Minors	Prosecute child labor cases, including the worst forms of child labor.(26) The Court for Minors handles protective proceedings where a child has been the victim of abuse, exploitation, or neglect.(28)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Angola took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Labor Inspectorate Funding	Unknown	Unknown (5)

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (27)	Yes (5)

According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries, Angola should employ approximately 262 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(5, 30-32) Research also found that resources for conducting inspections may be insufficient.(5)

Ministry of Public Administration, Labor, and Social Security (MAPTSS) inspectors work with the National Children's Institute (INAC) and the Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration (MINARS) to ensure that child labor victims receive the appropriate social services.(27)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Angola took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (5)	Yes (5)
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (10)	N/A
■ Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (5)	Yes (5, 16)
Number of Investigations	Unknown	1,330 (5)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown	44 (16)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	2 (16)
Number of Convictions	Unknown	Unknown (5)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (13, 27)	Yes (5)

During the reporting period, seven criminal investigators in Luanda pursued cases of the worst forms of child labor.(5) Research did not identify whether criminal investigators are employed in other parts of Angola.

The Government identified 44 victims of the worst forms of child labor. Forty minors were identified as victims of forced labor, three boys were identified as human trafficking victims for labor or sexual exploitation, and one girl was identified as a victim of human trafficking for sexual exploitation.(16) The Ministry of Justice and Human Rights collaborated with the National Police to map human trafficking cases to better understand the nature of human trafficking in Angola.(16)

In November, a 14-year-old girl was rescued by police from a house in Luanda province, after she had been trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation. The police and the Office of the Attorney General are investigating the case and have reunited the minor with her family.(12)

In July 2015, police stopped a truck filled with 19 children under age 15 in Huila province. The children were allegedly being transported to Namibe province in Southern Angola for forced labor in agriculture.(14) A prosecution against the bus driver began in November, and the investigation is ongoing to determine whether the case is part of an organized crime scheme for forced child labor.(16) In November, a Congolese national was prosecuted for trafficking three Congolese children ages 6, 8, and 10 to Luanda for domestic service.(16)

The National Police and Immigration Services refer victims of the worst forms of child labor to INAC and MINARS to receive social services; victims of child trafficking are referred to INAC's Child Protection Network and government Safe Houses.(13, 16, 27)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Labor Commission	Mandate provincial governments to analyze child labor at the provincial level. Coordinated by the National Council for Children.(33)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate enforcement efforts on human trafficking, including child trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Comprises representatives from the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration (MINARS), MAPTSS, and Ministry of the Interior. (10) Since its establishment in November 2014, the commission has met four times at the ministerial level, while working-level sub-groups meet more regularly. The group is focused on creating a comprehensive national strategy to fight human trafficking.(34) In 2015, created a bilateral working group with the Mozambican National Reference Group for the Protection of Children and Combating Trafficking in Persons to discuss regional concerns and share best practices to combat human trafficking.(16)
National Council for Children	Coordinate the Government's efforts on children's issues, including the worst forms of child labor. Led by MINARS, comprises 17 ministries and related organizations, including the Ministries of Justice and Human Rights, the Interior, Education, Culture, and MAPTSS, as well as UNICEF, religious institutions, and civil society organizations.(1)
MINARS	Ensure coordination between various government agencies related to social welfare and victim protection.(1) A network of institutions and shelters protect children from abusive, exploitative, and dangerous situations.(35)
INAC	Coordinate child protection services. Work with MINARS to provide shelter and help reintegrate children found in child labor situations with their families.(26)

In 2015, ad hoc commissions to combat human trafficking were created in five provinces that had possible human trafficking activity. While it is unclear whether these commissions are permanent coordinating bodies, they have made progress in standardizing victim support services, raising awareness of human trafficking in communities, and alerting law enforcement authorities of suspected human trafficking cases.(16)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Angola has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy to Prevent and Combat Violence Against Children	Guides the Government's efforts to address violence against children, including physical and psychological violence, child labor, child trafficking, and sexual abuse. Developed by INAC under the Eleven Commitments for Angolan Children policy.(11)
Plan of Action and Intervention Against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children	Aims to protect and defend the rights of child victims of sexual and economic exploitation, including rehabilitation.(36)
The Eleven Commitments for Angolan Children	Outlines the Government's main policies for protecting children's rights; goals include protecting children from exploitation and providing education to every child.(11, 37, 38)
National Development Plan (2013–2017)	Guarantees the protection of children's rights by combating child labor, preventing and combating violence against children, establishing mechanisms and bodies to defend and protect children's rights, and expanding the educational system. Guarantees 9 years of compulsory, free education until age 14.(39)
Birth Registration and Justice for Children*	Makes birth registration free for all Angolan citizens until 2016. Allows parents to get identity cards for free so that they can register their children.(17) Aims to expand birth registration coverage of all children from 56 to 80 percent by the end of 2017.(17)
Poverty Reduction Strategy (2005–2015)	Serves as the main policy document that guides the Government's anti-poverty actions. Supports the Millennium Development Goals and includes as its objectives poverty reduction, democratic governance, crisis prevention and recovery, environmental protection, and sustainable development.(40)
National Action Plan for Education (2001–2015)*	Aims to achieve universal primary education by 2015.(11) A National Development Plan for Education (2015–2025) is being developed.(41)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Research did not find whether the Plan of Action and Intervention Against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children is being implemented.(36)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Angola funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Cata Vento *†	MINARS-led campaign that aims to engage relevant government authorities, social partners, and civil society members in combating child labor, including its worst forms.(42)
Mobile School†	Ministry of Education program that provides education in mobile schools to migrant children who work with their parents in cattle herding. The program specifically targets children at the highest risk of involvement in child labor in southern Angola.(1) Some mobile schools also have kitchens, which facilitate the Government's school meal program.(1, 43)
Microcredit Project†	MAPTSS program that provides cash assistance to parents so that their children do not need to work.(1)
National Institutes of Job and Professional Training†	Government-funded program of 555 centers that provides free, professional training for youth so that they have skills to enter the formal labor market.(1, 44)
Free Meals for Children†	Government program that offers free meals for school children.(1, 26) One program in Benguela province, supported by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, NGOs, and the Government of Angola, is reported to have fed more than 220,000 school children. The Ministry of Education reports similar programs in Lunda Norte and Lunda Sul provinces.(26)
Child Protection Network†	INAC program in all 18 provinces that oversees a national network of child support centers that offer health care, psychological care, legal and social assistance, meals, basic education, and family reunification for crime victims, including human trafficking victims between the ages of 9 and 16.(3, 13, 36) Child victims over age 16 are referred to Safe Houses.(36)
Safe House†	MINARS, the Ministry of Family and Women's Affairs, and the Organization of Angolan Women operate 52 shelters that assist trafficking victims.(3, 16, 35)
UNICEF Country Program	UNICEF program, in coordination with the Government, designed to plan and implement education and child protection-focused interventions. Education interventions aim to increase access to quality early childhood, primary, first-cycle secondary, and second-chance education.(18) One of the child protection program components aims to increase birth registration to 80 percent in seven target provinces for children under age 5.(18) In addition, UNICEF is working with an NGO and INAC to set up a child protection hotline that will feed into the design of a national child hotline.(33)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

The provincial government of Huila, in partnership with the University of Huila and with support from UNICEF, conducted a study on child labor in 2014. The provincial government is designing a plan of action based on the findings of that study.(33)

Although Angola has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Furthermore, research did not identify programs that target children engaged in certain worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation, illicit activities, and forced labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Angola (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law prohibits hazardous occupations or activities for children in all relevant sectors in Angola, including diamond mining.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that the legal framework protects children from exploitation in child pornography and pornographic performances, and includes penalties for the distribution and possession of child pornography.	2014 – 2015
	Increase the compulsory education age to 14 to be consistent with the National Development Plan and the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Make information publicly available regarding the labor inspectorate's funding, training on new laws related to child labor, number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review, number of violations found, and number of convictions.	2011 – 2015
	Strengthen the labor inspection system by increasing the number of labor inspectors in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce, and by providing all inspectors with adequate training and the appropriate resources.	2009 – 2015
	Strengthen law enforcement by ensuring that criminal investigators are deployed nationwide.	2015
Government Policies	Expand birth registration and identification processes to promote school enrollment and provide social services to vulnerable children.	2010 – 2015
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2009 – 2015
	Revise and strengthen the Plan of Action and Intervention Against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children and ensure its effective implementation.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Develop social programs to ensure that all children have access to education and are not inhibited by informal fees or lack of birth certificates.	2013 – 2015
	Institute programs that target children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, illicit activities, and forced labor, and expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Argentina

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Argentina made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Third National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work for 2016–2020. The Government also passed the Law on Early Education, which establishes compulsory education beginning at age 4. In addition, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights created five Regional Offices for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims in the Provinces of Chaco, La Pampa, La Rioja, Mendoza, and Santa Fe. The National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor organized two national meetings which convened provincial and local government officials to discuss advances and challenges in addressing child labor issues. The National Registry of Agricultural Workers and Employers continued to run multiple programs to prevent and eliminate child labor, including a program to strengthen schools in rural areas where children whose parents work in agriculture may be at risk of child labor. However, children in Argentina are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Argentina has not determined the types of hazardous occupations that are prohibited for children under 18. In addition, the Government does not appear to publish key labor and criminal law enforcement data on child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Argentina are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-11) In 2012, the Government of Argentina began incorporating a child labor module into the Permanent Survey of Households. Although the full results of the 2012 survey have not been made publicly available, the Government reports that child labor decreased from 2004 to 2012.(12-14) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Argentina.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.2 (258,286)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	98.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(15)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Módulo de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes, 2012.(16) Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are for urban areas only. According to UN data, 91.6 percent of the population of Argentina lives in urban areas (see <http://data.un.org/CountryProfile.aspx?crName=ARGENTINA>). Data reported in this table are not comparable with data published in the previous version of this report because of differences between surveys used to collect the data.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting bell peppers,* blueberries, carrots,* corn,* cotton, garlic, grapes, olives, onions,* potatoes,* strawberries, and tomatoes (8, 9, 17-33)
	Harvesting yerba mate (stimulant plant) (2, 4, 27, 34-36)
	Harvesting tobacco (1, 5, 26)
Industry	Production of garments (37, 38)
	Production of bricks (19, 39, 40)

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Industry	Manufacturing aluminum pots* (41)
	Construction,* activities unknown (19, 42)
Services	Street begging and performing, windshield-washing, automobile caretaking (9, 11, 13, 19, 43, 44)
	Refuse collection, recycling, and garbage scavenging (19, 32, 43-46)
	Domestic work (9, 43, 44, 47)
	Transporting goods* (23)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (10, 43, 48)
	Forced labor in the production of garments (49-51)
	Use in the production of pornography* (6)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Although the extent of the problem is unknown, reports indicate that girls from Argentina’s northern provinces are often victims of commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(52)

Children of Bolivian immigrants in Argentina are engaged in child labor in agriculture and domestic service, and are engaged in forced child labor in the production of garments.(20, 31, 47, 51) Although the extent of the problem is unknown, reports indicate that there has been an increase in the trafficking of Bolivian children to Argentina for labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(53, 54) Reports also indicate that Paraguayan children are trafficked to Argentina for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation.(48, 52, 55, 56)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Argentina has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18‡	Articles 16 and 29 of the National Education Law; Article 2 of the Law on Early Education (69-71)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 15–16 of the Child and Adolescent Rights Protection Law (59)

* No conscription in practice (72)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (69)

In 2015, the Government of Argentina promulgated the Law on Early Education. This law establishes compulsory education from the age of four years.(71) The Government also promulgated the Law on the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons. This law requires that a standard public announcement on the crime of trafficking in persons, including information on how to report it, be placed in airports, bus stations, and border crossings.(73, 74)

Argentina has not adopted into law or regulation the types of hazardous occupations prohibited for children under 18.(48, 75) Article 128 of the Penal Code prohibits the use of children in pornographic shows and the production, publication, and distribution of child pornography. In addition, Article 128 of the Penal Code prohibits the commercialization of child pornography; however, the Penal Code does not prohibit the possession of child pornography for personal consumption.(42, 66)

The National Education Law states that initial, primary, and secondary education are compulsory. Article 134 of this law states that the duration of primary and secondary education must be 12 years in total, and Article 26 of this law states that primary education begins at age 6; this makes the calculated age of compulsory education 18 years.(69)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS)	Enforce child labor laws, in part through its Coordinating Body for the Prevention of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (COODITIA), which trains inspectors in child labor and adolescent work issues. Oversee the Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI).(43, 76, 77) Oversee the National Registry of Agricultural Workers and Employers (RENATEA) which, through its own team of inspectors, assists in the enforcement of child labor laws in the agricultural sector.(13, 78) Maintains a national hotline where labor violations can be reported.(11)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Maintain a Tribunal for adjudicating disputes in domestic service work and telephone lines for reporting cases of child labor and forced labor.(79)

Organization/Agency	Role
Office for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims	Provide emergency legal and other assistance to victims of labor and sex trafficking, including child victims. Part of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights.(44, 73) Maintains Regional Offices that coordinate the provision of legal and social services to trafficking victims in the Provinces of Chaco, La Pampa, La Rioja, Mendoza, and Santa Fe.(52, 80, 81)
Public Prosecutor's Anti-Trafficking Division (PROTEX)	Prosecute crimes of trafficking in persons for labor and commercial sexual exploitation, instruct federal personnel in the investigation of human trafficking, and design criminal policy in human trafficking.(82-84)
National Immigration Directorate	Direct the National Immigration Police, oversee the rights of migrants, and assist in investigating cases of international human trafficking.(20, 85)
Federal Police	Conduct human trafficking investigations through its Trafficking in Persons Division.(38)
Federal Administration of Public Revenue (AFIP)	Ensure employer compliance with national laws, assist in workplace and labor-related inspections, and initiate prosecutions of labor violations through the Penal Section of its Social Security Directorate.(38, 86, 87)

In 2015, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights created five Regional Offices for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims in the Provinces of Chaco, La Pampa, La Rioja, Mendoza, and Santa Fe. These Regional Offices coordinate the provision of legal and social services for trafficking victims according to priorities set by the national Office for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims.(52, 80, 81)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Argentina took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS) employed 584 labor inspectors.(89) However, research could not determine the number of inspectors employed by the National Registry of Agricultural Workers and Employers (RENATEA), which assists the MTESS in the enforcement of labor laws in the agricultural sector. According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Argentina should employ roughly 1,164 labor inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(93-95)

Argentina

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Although research could not determine whether all 584 MTESS inspectors received training in child labor issues in 2015, the MTESS's Coordinating Body for the Prevention of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (COODITIA) conducted numerous trainings on child labor and adolescent work for labor inspectors and government officials located around the country. (90) Reports confirm that RENATEA inspectors received training on child labor issues in 2015 and also conducted 42 seminars on eliminating child labor around the country.(11)

Partial information on specific MTESS inspection efforts was published for 2015.(96) However, research could not find comprehensive information on the number of violations found, penalties assessed, and fines collected as a result of inspections. Research could also not find comprehensive information on the specific sectors and geographic localities in which MTESS inspections were carried out, or on the total number of children removed from child labor.(11)

Reports indicate that in Argentina, children removed from child labor through inspections are referred to the COODITIA, which coordinates the provision of social services through social protection agencies.(13) However, research could not determine whether social protection agencies have procedures to reciprocally refer children rescued from child labor to the MTESS for labor law enforcement. RENATEA reported that 18 minors were found working in violation of the law and that they received assistance.(97) Research could not find comprehensive information on how many children were referred between social services and the MTESS in 2015.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Argentina took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

In 2015, the number of investigators from the Public Prosecutor's Anti-Trafficking Division (PROTEX), the Federal Police, or other criminal law enforcement agencies dedicated to investigating the worst forms of child labor was not known. Research could also not determine whether agencies engaged in enforcing criminal laws related to child labor had sufficient resources to carry out their mandates.

PROTEX reported that it initiated 429 investigations for crimes of human trafficking in 2015. It pursued 226 cases related to commercial sexual exploitation, 132 cases related to labor exploitation, and 71 cases of related crimes.(99) Information on these cases was not disaggregated to differentiate between adult and child victims; however, PROTEX reported that 9.4 percent of the victims were children. PROTEX also reported that, in 2015, there were 92 prosecutions for sex and labor trafficking; however, research could not determine how many of these prosecutions were for crimes that involved child victims.(99) In 2015, PROTEX reported that there were 27 sentences issued for crimes of human trafficking, with 35 individuals convicted of sex or labor trafficking. Sentences for sex trafficking ranged from 1 to 14 years of imprisonment, and sentences for labor trafficking ranged from 2 to 6 years of imprisonment.(99) Although research could not identify how many of these sentences were issued for trafficking crimes involving children, PROTEX reported that, of the total number of victims, 22 of them were children; 14 of these children were victims of labor exploitation and 7 of these children were victims of sex trafficking.(99)

The Office for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims and the National Secretariat for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (SENNAF) provide legal and other assistance to survivors of human trafficking. However, research could not determine the number of child trafficking victims who received these services during the reporting period.(53)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI)	Coordinate efforts to monitor and eradicate child labor at the national level and implement Argentina's National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor.(43, 100-103) Composed of the MTESS, the Ministry of Social Development, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, the Ministry of Security, the Ministry of the Interior, and the Ministry of Health. Includes representatives from the Argentine Industrial Union, the General Confederation of Labor, and the National Secretariat of the Argentine Episcopal Conference.(43, 104) UNICEF and IPEC also provide advisers. Overseen by the MTESS.(43, 104) In 2015, CONAETI organized the Second Convening of Civil Society Organizations to train NGOs on public policy initiatives on the elimination of child labor and the regulation of adolescent work, including public-private partnerships.(105) In addition, CONAETI and the Provincial Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor organized two National Meetings of Local Roundtables for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor. These meetings brought together provincial and local government officials to discuss advances and challenges in addressing child labor issues across the country.(106, 107)
Provincial Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (COPRETI)	Coordinate efforts, with oversight by CONAETI, to prevent and eradicate child labor at the provincial level, including through Local Roundtables on Child Labor at the municipal level.(43, 101, 104, 108, 109). Composed of representatives of governmental and nongovernmental institutions, labor unions, and religious institutions. There are 23 COPRETI.(43, 101, 104, 108)
National Secretariat for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (SENNAF)	Establish public policies through its Childhood and Adolescence Protectorate to secure the rights of children and adolescents; coordinate child protection efforts with other government ministries and entities of civil society; and provide assistance to trafficking victims. Overseen by the Ministry of Social Development.(110)
Federal Council for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family	Uphold the rights of children and adolescents; deliberate on, assess, and plan public policies on child and adolescent rights; and secure the transfer of federal monies to fund provincial programs. Composed of representatives from national and provincial agencies that coordinate with the SENNAF and formed through the Ministry of Social Development.(111)
Child and Adolescent Labor Monitoring Office (OTIA)	Conduct qualitative and quantitative research on child and adolescent labor to provide policy analysis and inform programming to eradicate child labor and regulate adolescent labor. Created through the Undersecretariat of Technical Programming and Labor Studies of the MTESS.(101, 104, 112)
Coordinating Unit for Children and Adolescents in Danger of Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Provide guidance to relevant institutions; run workshops and research programs regarding commercial sexual exploitation; and assist children, adolescents, and their families. Formed within the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights.(113)
Network of Businesses Against Child Labor	Develop initiatives to sensitize stakeholders to issues of child labor and programs to prevent and eradicate child labor. Formed through a partnership between the MTESS, CONAETI, and the businesses that comprise it.(100, 114, 115)
Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (CDNNyA)	Promote and protect children's rights in the City of Buenos Aires in accordance with the UN CRC. Develop programs and policies on the worst forms of child labor, including on the sexual exploitation and trafficking of children.(43, 116)
Executive Council to Fight Human Trafficking and Exploitation and to Protect and Assist Victims	Coordinate executive branch efforts to combat human trafficking. Composed of representatives of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, the Ministry of Security, and the MTESS.(53)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Argentina has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Third National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (2016–2020)†	Aims to prevent and eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, and to protect adolescent work. Specific objectives include promoting the dissemination of information and data on child labor, strengthening the COPRETI and creating Local Roundtables on Child Labor, promoting the livelihoods of families, strengthening the labor inspectorate, fostering civil society engagement on child labor issues, providing for a more inclusive educational system, raising awareness of the safety and health implications of child labor, and promoting institutional and legislative strengthening on child labor issues, in accordance with ILO C. 182.(14, 117) Launched by the MTESS and CONAETI in December 2015 following a presentation of a draft of the plan to the COPRETI at their national meeting in October 2015.(117, 118)

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (2012–2015)	Promotes the dignity and rights of children and adolescents in Argentina. Objectives include preventing and eliminating child labor, including its worst forms.(119)
Third Program for Decent Work for Argentina (2012–2015)	Pursues a decent work and social well-being agenda in the context of Argentina's Millennium Development Goals (2003–2015) and in consultation with the ILO. Social and economic objectives include the prevention and eradication of child labor.(46, 120)
National Plan on Compulsory Education and Teacher Training (2012–2016)*	Aims to strengthen the Argentine educational system by increasing the number of primary schools, increasing children's access to education, and improving the quality of curricula and instruction.(121)
MERCOSUR Social Labor Declaration of 2015†	Aims to promote decent work and sustainable development in the five member states of MERCOSUR, in part through commitments to uphold core labor standards, including the elimination of forced labor, the prevention and elimination of child labor, and the protection of adolescent work. Signed in Brasilia, Brazil in July 2015.(122, 123)
MERCOSUR United Against Child Labor Campaign	Develops public awareness about the need to combat child labor in MERCOSUR. Addresses child labor in agriculture, domestic work, and sexual exploitation, with particular emphasis on communities along country borders.(124)
Second Presidential Declaration on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor in MERCOSUR (2012)	Promotes greater coordination between governmental agencies, levels of government, and with civil society among MERCOSUR members.(120)
MERCOSUR Southern Child Initiative	Aims to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region by raising awareness and seeking coordination among member states regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking and pornography, child labor, and migrant labor; by improving country legal frameworks to harmonize them with international conventions affecting children; and by exchanging best practices.(125)
Regional Plan for Adolescent Work (2011)	Promotes decent work for adolescent workers. Articulated within MERCOSUR's Strategy for Employment Growth.(120)
Fight against Human Trafficking Agreement between the Governments of Colombia and Argentina	Establishes a work plan to prevent, identify, and collaborate in the fight against human trafficking between the Government of Colombia and the Government of Argentina. Aims to strengthen efforts to assist Colombian victims of human trafficking found in forced labor in Argentina; signed in 2014.(126)
XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor†	Promotes decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancun, Mexico, participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancun 2015 which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(127, 128) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(127, 129)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Argentina at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(130-132)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Argentina funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Universal Child Allowance Program (Asignación Universal)†	Government of Argentina program funded in part by the World Bank that provides a monthly cash transfer to unemployed parents and workers in the informal economy, contingent upon parents' fulfillment of health and education requirements for their children.(46, 104, 133, 134) Includes pregnant women and currently covers 3.5 million children under age 18.(46, 104)
RENATEA Awareness-Raising Campaigns†	RENATEA campaigns that raise awareness of child labor in agriculture and inform families and children of the right to education.(92, 135)

Program	Description
CONAETI Awareness-Raising Campaigns	CONAETI/Network of Businesses Against Child Labor campaigns that make businesses and the general public aware of child labor in sourcing and supply chains.(114)
Harvest Day Care and Future Programs (Jardines de Cosecha y Porvenir)	COPRETI/Network of Businesses Against Child Labor programs that aim to reduce child labor in the production of crops, such as tobacco in the Provinces of Salta and Jujuy, where work has often been performed by entire families. Children are placed in day care centers that have educational and recreational programs.(17, 136-140)
Program to Strengthen Schools in Agricultural Areas†	RENATEA program that provides infrastructural developments, operating costs, and pedagogical development to rural schools located in agricultural areas where children may be at risk of child labor. Launched in 2014. In 2015, RENATEA provided support to more than 2,200 students and 294 teachers in 42 elementary and high schools.(11, 97, 141, 142)
Care Program's Extended School Day/ Child Care Centers (Programa Cuidar)†	RENATEA program to lengthen the school day and create child care centers in agricultural regions to reduce children's vulnerability to child labor in the agricultural sector.(13, 143) In 2015, received a budget of $620,000, enabling the program to assist more than 1,800 children ages 1.5 months to 16 years in 25 child care centers in the Provinces of Buenos Aires, Córdoba, Jujuy, La Rioja, Misiones, Mendoza, and Salta. Program was launched in 2014.(11, 97)
Good Harvest Program (Programa Buena Cosecha)†	MTESS and CONAETI program in the Province of Mendoza that creates and runs Rural Social and Educational Centers (CSER) to provide care and educational services to children whose parents work in agricultural harvests, and to reduce children's vulnerability to child labor. Since 2010, program has run 88 CSER that have assisted 4,500 children.(32, 144)
Heads of Household Program (Programa Jefes de Hogar)†	MTESS program that seeks to improve the employability of families who have experienced economic hardship.(145)
Trafficking in Persons Hotline (Linea 145)	Office for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims Hotline that receives reports of possible crimes of trafficking in persons. Cases are referred to law enforcement agencies for investigation, and victims and survivors are referred to social service providers.(73)
UNICEF Argentina's Program for the Protection of Children's Rights	Fosters the development of protection systems and dialogue between civil society and local, provincial, and federal government agencies. Priority areas for 2010-2015 include increasing access to social and legal services for victims of violence, abuse, and exploitation; juvenile justice reform; and strengthening local institutional capacity to prevent and eliminate child labor.(146)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Américas)	Conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(147-149)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011 – 2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Argentina.(150)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012 – 2015)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in Latin America, including Argentina. Includes the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(150)

In 2015, Argentina continued to implement social programs designed to combat child labor.(11) Reports indicate that the Universal Child Allowance Program has had a positive impact on the reduction of child labor since its implementation began in 2009.(12, 106, 151) However, programs that address child labor in the agricultural sector do not appear to address the full scope of the problem. Research also did not find programs that specifically targeted children working in urban activities, such as refuse collection or street begging and performing.

In Argentina, education is compulsory until age 18, which is the qualifying age for participation in many youth employment programs, including apprenticeships. However, reports indicate that many children do not finish secondary education.(152) Children ages 16 and 17 who have not finished secondary school, and who are legally allowed to work, are often unable to find jobs in the formal sector.(152) Without eligibility to participate in youth employment programs until age 18, these children are at an increased risk of engaging in dangerous work. In addition, without formal training, these children are more likely to remain in informal work as adults.

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Argentina (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Determine the types of hazardous occupations prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2009 – 2015
	Criminalize the possession of child pornography for personal use.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Publicly report on the level of funding allocated to the labor inspectorate.	2015
	Ensure there is a sufficient number of labor inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.	2015
	Publicly report on the training provided to all labor inspectors and criminal investigators on child labor, including its worst forms.	2015
	Make information publicly available on child labor enforcement efforts, including the sectors and geographic localities in which inspections are carried out, the number of violations found, and the penalties issued and collected as a result.	2009 – 2015
	Publicly report on the total number of children removed from child labor, including its worst forms, as well as on the number of children who received services and the mechanisms by which law enforcement and social service agencies reciprocally refer cases.	2014 – 2015
	Publicly report on the number of criminal investigators who investigate child labor-related crimes and ensure they have adequate resources to enforce laws on the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Publicly report on the number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions for the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Ensure there is a reciprocal referral mechanism between criminal law enforcement agencies and social services for cases of the worst forms of child labor.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Plan on Compulsory Education and Teacher Training.	2015
Social Programs	Make all results on child labor from the Permanent Survey of Households publicly available.	2013 – 2015
	Expand the coverage and scope of programs that target child labor in agricultural activities.	2012 – 2015
	Develop specific programs that target child labor in informal urban activities, such as refuse collection or street begging and performing.	2009 – 2015
	Extend youth employment and vocational training programs to children ages 16 and 17 that also allow children to complete their compulsory schooling.	2015

[accessed December 16, 2015]; <http://www.uis.unesco.org/> Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. 93. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited March 18, 2016]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
94. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
95. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Armenia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Armenia is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a law that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. The Government failed to remedy the uncertainty regarding its authority to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws caused by its 2014 repeal of Article 34 of the Labor Code, which previously established the Government's authority to conduct routine labor inspections. Since that time, the Government has lacked a functioning labor inspection mechanism to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by developing and conducting a National Child Labor Survey and introducing regulations that placed restrictions on acceptable working hours for children employed in the entertainment industry. Children in Armenia are engaged in child labor in the services sector. The Government also lacks a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address all forms of child labor, including its worst forms. In addition, no programs exist to aid children engaged in work activities on the street or in agriculture.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, evidence suggests that children are engaged in child labor in the services sector in Armenia.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Armenia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	8.1 (30,494)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	89.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	9.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2008, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2010.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including planting and harvesting potatoes* (1, 3-6, 9, 10)
	Raising livestock,* including cattle breeding,* cattle herding,* and shepherding* (4-6, 11)
Industry	Construction,* activities unknown (1, 6, 10, 12)
Services	Washing cars* (3, 4)
	Street work, including gathering scrap metal,* selling flowers,* and begging (1, 2, 4-6, 12, 13)
	Working in shops* (6)
	Dancing in clubs* (6)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (4, 10, 14-16)
	Forced begging sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (4, 10, 15)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

Armenia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Although Article 38 of the Constitution of Armenia and Article 6 of the Law of Republic of Armenia on Education guarantee free universal education, children from low-income families and from families belonging to ethnic minorities continue to have reduced access to education.(17, 18) In addition, children with disabilities also face difficulty accessing mainstream education due to the inaccessibility of the physical infrastructure of schools, a lack of individual education planning and methodologies, a lack of community-based support services for the child and the family, and a general social stigma against individuals with disabilities.(17-20) As a result of these barriers, a source reports that over 70 percent of children with disabilities in the care of the state and almost 20 percent of children with disabilities in the care of their families do not attend school.(20, 21)

In addition, the rate of institutionalization of children remained high. Research found that children enrolled in government boarding schools, orphanages, and special education institutions were likely to experience physical and psychological violence, and were at a higher risk of becoming victims of human trafficking.(10, 18, 21)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Armenia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 15 and 17 of the Labor Code; Article 57 of the Constitution (22, 23)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 257 of the Labor Code (22)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		List of Work Categories Considered Excessive or Harmful for Persons Under the Age of 18, Women Who are Pregnant, and Women Caring for Infants Under the Age of One Year; Articles 140, 148, 153, 155, 249, and 257 of the Labor Code (22, 24)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 57 of the Constitution; Article 3 of the Labor Code; Articles 132 and 132.2 of the Criminal Code (22, 23, 25-27)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 132 and 132.2 of the Criminal Code (25, 28)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 132.2, 166, and 261-263 of the Criminal Code (25, 26, 28)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 165 and 166.1 of the Criminal Code (25, 26, 28)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 5 of the Law on Mandatory Military Service (28, 29)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 18 of the Law on Education (28, 30)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 38 of the Constitution; Article 6 of the Law on Education (23, 30)

In December 2015, a national referendum resulted in significant changes to the Constitution. The Constitution continues to prohibit forced labor and ensure free public education, but these provisions are now housed in new articles, as referenced above.(23, 27)

It has been reported that in April 2015, the Government introduced an amendment to the Law on Education that will increase the compulsory education age to 19 years, beginning in 2017.(27)

It has also been reported that in June 2015, the National Assembly adopted changes to the Labor Code that introduced regulations for children’s work in the entertainment industry and included restrictions on acceptable working hours for children of all ages.(27) According to the updated legislation, children ages 14 to 15 may work no more than 24 hours per week, while children ages 16 to 17 may work no more than 36 hours per week.(27)

The minimum age for work is 16. If children ages 14 and 15 obtain the written consent of a parent or a guardian, they may work restricted hours as specified by the labor code; however, Armenia does not specify the type or conditions of light work in which they may engage.(22, 31)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
State Health Inspectorate (SHI)	Enforce labor laws and impose sanctions for violations.(32) In particular, enforce occupational safety and health provisions through the Oversight Department for Work Safety and other labor laws through the Oversight Department Over the Implementation of Labor Code Norms.(27)
Main Department on Especially Serious Crimes within the Investigative Committee	Investigate cases of child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children referred to the Investigative Committee by the Police.(19, 33)
Department on Defending the Rights of Minors and Combating Domestic Violence within the Police	Identify and conduct preliminary investigation of crimes in which children are victims or perpetrators.(14, 19) Enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor under the General Department of Criminal Intelligence.(19, 28, 33) Refer identified crimes to the Investigative Committee for further investigation.(19)
Anti-Trafficking Unit within the Police	Identify and conduct preliminary investigation of crimes related to child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children through a staff of seven field officers. Operate within the Department of Combating High-Tech related (Cyber) Crimes, Human Trafficking, Illegal Migration, and Terrorism of the General Department on Combating Organized Crime.(34) Refer identified crimes to the Investigative Committee for further investigation.(19)
Police Hotline	Receive complaints related to human trafficking and migration issues.(10)

Due to successive legislative changes reorganizing labor inspection in Armenia and a lack of clarity surrounding the legal mandate for conducting inspections, in 2015 the State Health Inspectorate (SHI) was unable to systematically monitor or enforce child labor laws in Armenia.(35)

Since 2013, a number of legislative changes to the labor inspection mechanism have taken place as part of a broader inspection reform agenda in Armenia. In July 2013, the Government adopted Decree #857-N that created the new State Health Inspectorate (SHI) under the Ministry of Health to take over the combined inspection functions of the former State Labor Inspectorate under the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MoLSA) and the former State Hygiene and Anti-Epidemic Inspectorate under the Ministry of Health.(34) This decree outlined the SHI’s mandate, which includes supervision of labor legislation and safeguards for working children established by the Labor Code.(27, 36)

However, in December 2014, the National Assembly adopted legislation repealing Article 34 of the Labor Code, which had previously established Government authority to conduct routine labor inspections.(27, 35, 37) SHI officials reported that this legislative change, which came into force in January 2015, restricts the SHI to conducting inspections based on complaints related to occupational safety and health violations.(35) Despite this statement from SHI officials, another source reported that the Law on Inspection Bodies, also passed in December 2014, may have obviated the need for Article 34 of the Labor Code, as

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Article 6 of the Law on Inspection Bodies outlines the powers of all inspection bodies in Armenia, including the ability to conduct inspections.(27, 38) As a result of these conflicting understandings of the current legislation, the SHI's mandate to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws remains unclear, and the SHI remained unable to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws in 2015.

SHI officials report that the SHI will undergo further reorganization as part of the Government's continuing campaign to streamline inspections in Armenia, which should increase clarity on the SHI's mandate to conduct inspections. In anticipation of these further changes and clarification, the SHI halted all inspections of any kind in July 2015, with the exception of sanitary oversight over kindergartens and schools.(27)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Armenia remained unable to monitor, inspect, and enforce laws against child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

As part of the 2013 restructuring, the number of labor inspectors was reduced from 146 to 60, which the SHI reported was insufficient to fully enforce labor laws prior to the cessation of inspections. The 20 inspectors based at the SHI headquarters are civil servants, while the remaining 40 are contractors.(35) The SHI reports that while civil servants must receive training at least once every three years, there is no requirement that contractors receive regular training. As a result, the SHI anticipates that the high proportion of contracted inspectors will negatively impact the overall training level and competency of the body of inspectors over time.(35) In addition, the SHI lacks sufficient funding, work space, computers, and transportation to effectively enforce labor laws. SHI officials reported that inspectors are often required to walk to inspection sites in order to perform inspections due to lack of transportation.(35, 39) Inspectors do have the authority to enter the premises of a business during the course of inspections.(39)

While inspectors do not have the right to issue penalties for violations discovered during the course of investigations, the head of the SHI, his deputies, and regional unit managers do have the power to review cases of violations and issue administrative penalties.(39) An SHI official indicated that penalties for violations of labor laws were insufficient to deter violations.(27)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Armenia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Investigative Committee’s police officers respond to allegations of a crime and conduct a pre-investigation during a period of 10 days to determine whether a crime has been committed. After this period, the case is either transferred to the Investigative Committee for full investigation or dropped due to lack of evidence of a crime.(19)

The Main Department on Especially Serious Crimes within the Investigative Committee has 40 investigators, 7 of whom are specialized in investigating human trafficking cases, and the Government reports that overall almost 300 police officers and investigators are engaged in investigations of crimes involving children.(33, 39, 40) The Investigative Committee requires that its personnel receive training at least once every two years. As a result, over 200 investigators received refresher training in 2015, which included 2 hours of instruction on trafficking in persons, including child trafficking. During the reporting period, 174 police officers focusing on juvenile cases also received training on child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(39)

Child victims discovered during the course of criminal investigations are referred to the Fund for Armenian Relief Children’s Center, where they are provided with specialized social services.(39) A source reported that because not all the children who are referred to social service providers by the Police are officially registered as victims, official statistics for begging, forced begging, and commercial sexual exploitation may underreport the scope of the problem.(4)

Research found that although the Police work with social service providers when conducting the pre-investigation, the Investigative Committee does not work with social service providers to ensure the well-being of the children during the investigation period.(4) In addition, a source reported that law enforcement officials do not receive sufficient specialized training on interviewing child victims of crime.(4) The Government’s implementation of the Criminal Procedural Code’s provisions on victim and witness protection continued to be inadequate due to lack of an appropriate victim witness protection mechanism and of sufficient funding for these efforts.(10, 41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established coordinating mechanisms to combat human trafficking and ensure the protection of child rights, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission on the Protection of Child Rights	Coordinate activities of state bodies responsible for child protection, assist in developing state policy and programs aimed at the protection of children’s rights, and assist in developing solutions to new child welfare problems as they arise. Facilitate cooperation between state and local government and NGOs.(28) Maintain a working group to prevent child begging, which includes representatives from the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs, the Ministry of Health, and the Ministry of Education.(28)
Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking	Implement, coordinate, and monitor government efforts on human trafficking.(15, 28) Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister and composed of various officials from 17 government entities.(15)
Inter-Agency Working Group against Trafficking in Persons	Advise, organize, and implement decisions made by the Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking.(15) Chaired by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and composed of officials from all government entities. Includes nongovernmental stakeholders such as NGOs, international organizations, and social partners in regularly scheduled meetings.(15, 28)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Armenia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Concept on Combatting Violence Against Children	Defines government priorities for combatting violence against children and outlines a list of related activities. Addresses labor exploitation of children, especially in rural communities, and commercial sexual exploitation of children, especially child trafficking.(33)
Strategic Program for the Protection of Children's Rights (2013–2016)*	Outlines the Government's goals and activities in the sphere of child rights protection; formerly included a child labor component focusing on data collection on working children, awareness raising of the rights of working children, and implementation of oversight mechanisms for children's work.(42) The National Child Labor Survey and recommendations for the prevention of child labor exploitation originally envisaged in the 2013–2016 Strategic Program remains in the list of activities for 2016. However, during a 2014 revision, the Government removed the child labor component from the document.(19, 33)
National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons for the Years 2013–2015	Aims to improve victim identification, including for child laborers; conduct surveys among working children; improve prevention efforts; and work with the media on the format and approach of reporting on human trafficking cases.(43) Focuses on five areas: legislation on action against trafficking in persons and enforcement of laws; prevention of trafficking in persons; protection of and support to victims of trafficking in persons; cooperation; and surveys, monitoring, and evaluation.(43)
UNDAF Plan for Armenia (2016–2020)*†	Focuses on poverty reduction through expanding economic and social opportunities for vulnerable groups, including improving access to basic education and social protection services for vulnerable children.(20)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Armenia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Armenia, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(44) In 2015, the ILO signed an agreement with the National Statistics Services to conduct a national child labor survey.(45) The project trained 48 enumerators on survey techniques, piloted the survey in two districts, and then implemented the full survey from October – December 2015. The project anticipates publicizing the full results of the survey in June 2016.(45)
Family Benefits Program†	Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MoLSA)-funded poverty-mitigation program for families with children recorded in the Family Poverty Assessment System. Families receive a monthly payment based on their financial situation, the number of children in the family, and the geographical location of their home.(39)
Social Response to Labor Migration in Armenia Project (2013–2016)	EU-funded, 3-year project implemented by UNICEF, the Ministry of Territorial Administration, and MoLSA designed to mitigate the social vulnerability of labor migrants' families, including children.(46)
Armenia Social Protection Administration II Project (SPAP) (2014–2018)†	$25.5 million World Bank project, including a $4.3 million Government contribution, to improve social services delivery through the functional integration of agencies responsible for social services. Continues the first SPAP's efforts to co-locate service providers for social protection benefits by building 37 new Integrated Social Protection Centers, 19 of which were completed by the close of the reporting period.(39, 47) Will target unemployed youth through the Youth Without Education and Skills program.(47)
UNICEF Country Program for 2010–2015	Outlines a plan for the development of an enhanced child care system, a continuum of child protection services to identify and respond to the exploitation and abuse of children, and a comprehensive policy framework for protecting vulnerable children in cooperation with UNICEF.(48)
Day Care Center†	Government-supported day care centers that provide alternatives to working children and daytime centers that provide services for children with special needs.(34) In 2015, the Government contributed funding to four daytime centers to support up to 250 children, providing funding for wages of 84 day care center employees.(34, 39, 49-51)

Program	Description
Shelter for Victims of Human Trafficking†	Government shelter co-funded and run by the United Methodist Committee on Relief—Armenia that provides victims of human trafficking with medical, psychological, social, and legal services; access to education for children; and vocational training for adult victims.(16)
School Feeding Program†	Program co-funded by the World Food Program. In 2015, the government provided over $1 million to provide in-school meals for 22,209 children in 3 regions of Armenia, while World Food Program funding provided meals to 67,000 children in schools throughout the rest of the country.(39)

† Program is funded by the Government of Armenia.

Although the Government of Armenia has implemented programs to address child labor, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in child labor in street work or in agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Armenia (Table 11).

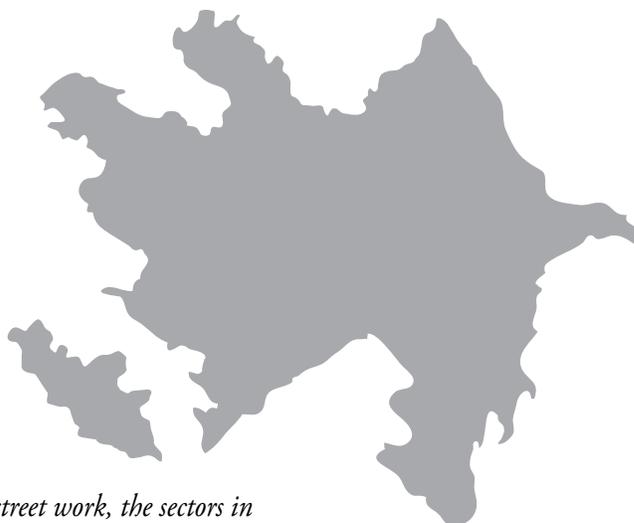

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that Armenian law specifies the types of light work and the working conditions acceptable for children age 14-15.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that the legal framework on inspections clearly empowers the SHI to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws through quality inspections, including targeted, complaint-based, and unannounced inspections; that inspectors have the ability to assess penalties; and that data on the number and type of inspections, violations, and penalties are made publicly available.	2014 – 2015
	Address deficiencies in the SHI's labor inspection resources, including by increasing the number of labor inspectors and empowering inspectors to perform unannounced inspections; increasing the funding and resources available to the SHI; and ensuring that all inspectors receive an adequate amount of training.	2014 – 2015
	Make information on the SHI's funding publicly available.	2015
	Ensure that penalties for child labor violations are sufficient to serve as a deterrent.	2014 – 2015
	Make information on the number of investigations and convictions related to criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor publicly available.	2015
	Protect children by providing law enforcement officials with specialized training on interviewing child victims of crime, and by ensuring that law enforcement officials coordinate with social service providers to protect the best interests of the child during an investigation.	2014 – 2015
	Implement and adequately fund a victim-witness protection mechanism for criminal proceedings.	2011 – 2015
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into national policies, including the Strategic Program for the Protection of Children's Rights and the UNDAF Plan for Armenia (2016–2020).	2011 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure that all children, including children from low-income families and those belonging to ethnic minorities, have equal access to education.	2010 – 2015
	Increase efforts to prevent institutionalization of children and to ensure the safety and well-being of children currently residing in government institutions.	2015
	Ensure that mainstream education is accessible to children with special education needs and children with disabilities by improving the accessibility of the physical infrastructure, bringing the child disability assessment criteria up to international standards, improving needs assessments, expanding community-based support services, and ensuring that social stigmas against individuals with disabilities do not prevent children from accessing schools.	2014 – 2015
	Implement programs to address child labor in street work and in agriculture.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Azerbaijan made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government expanded social services available for migrants considered vulnerable to human trafficking and provided training to law enforcement officials on human trafficking. However, children in Azerbaijan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Legal protections for workers only apply to workers with written employment contracts, leaving self-employed children and children working outside of formal employment relationships vulnerable to exploitation. There are gaps in Azerbaijan's labor inspection system and in the training of its law enforcement officials. In addition, research found limited evidence of government programs to address child labor in agriculture and street work, the sectors in which it is most prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Azerbaijan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-8) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 6, 9-12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Azerbaijan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.5 (70,034)
Attending School (%)	6-14 yrs.	94.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(13)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Child Labor Survey (SIMPOC) Survey, 2005.(14)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

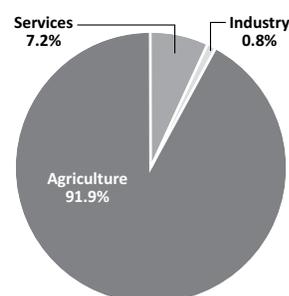

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton, tea,* and tobacco*† (1-4, 6-8)
Industry	Construction,* activities unknown (2, 4, 15)
Services	Street work, including begging, washing cars, and vending (1-4, 6, 8, 9, 16)
	Washing cars at commercial car washes* (15)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6, 9, 11, 12, 16)
	Forced begging (12, 16, 17)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

The majority of child labor in Azerbaijan occurs in the agriculture sector. Evidence suggests that the number of child laborers involved in the production of cotton, tea, and tobacco has considerably declined in the last decade, although the significance of the decline is unknown.(2-4)

Azerbaijan

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Children in Azerbaijan are trafficked for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation both domestically and transnationally. Street children, many of whom become homeless after they are released from government-run orphanages and correctional facilities, are particularly vulnerable to human trafficking.⁽¹¹⁾ Children living in border towns and economically depressed rural communities have also been identified as being vulnerable to human trafficking.⁽¹⁸⁾

Children with disabilities also face difficulty accessing mainstream education due to the inaccessibility of the physical infrastructure of schools, and a general social stigma against individuals with disabilities. As a result of these barriers, a source estimated that only 10 to 17 percent of children with disabilities are able to attend school, while the remaining children are either educated at home or do not receive an education.⁽¹⁶⁾

Azerbaijan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 42 of the Labor Code (19)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 250 of the Labor Code (19)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 98 and 250–254 of the Labor Code; Decision 58 of the Cabinet of Ministers in 2000; Article 9 of the Law on the Rights of the Child (19-21)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 35 of the Constitution; Article 144-2 of the Criminal Code (22, 23)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		The Law on Trafficking in Persons; Articles 106, 144-1, 144-3, and 173 of the Criminal Code (23-26)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 108, 151, 152, 171, 171-1, and 242–244 of the Criminal Code (24, 27)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 28 of the Law on the Rights of the Child; Article 170 of the Criminal Code (21, 24)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Articles 2, 3, and 12 of the Law on Military Obligation and Military Service (28)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	19	Article 36 of the Law on Military Obligation and Military Service (28, 29)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Articles 5 and 19 of the Education Law (30, 31)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 5 of the Education Law; Article 22 of the Law on the Rights of the Child (21, 30)

According to Articles 2 and 3 of the Labor Code, the Labor Code only applies to workers with written employment contracts.⁽¹⁹⁾ As a result, the law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working outside formal employment relationships or children who are self-employed.⁽³²⁾ The Government introduced both administrative and criminal penalties in 2014 for employing people without an effective employment agreement. Although this has strengthened protections for working children by attempting to ensure that all working children work under a contract, self-employed children and children working outside formal employment relationships remain unprotected.

In October 2015, the Cabinet of Ministers issued a decision expanding social services for migrants who are vulnerable to human trafficking; the decision also requires continual training of migration, customs, and border officials on identifying migrants as potential victims of human trafficking.⁽³³⁾

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population (MLSPP)	Enforce labor laws related to the worst forms of child labor. ⁽³⁴⁾
State Labor Inspection Service (SLIS) within the MLSPP	Enforce the Labor Code, including provisions related to child labor. ⁽²⁾ Investigate child labor complaints and ensure that violations of child labor law receive attention from the proper agencies. ⁽³⁴⁾
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MIA)	Function as the central executive agency responsible for public security and prevention and exposure of criminal offences, including child trafficking and begging. ⁽²⁾ Through the Anti-Trafficking Division (ATD), enforce human trafficking laws, investigate human trafficking violations, and enforce criminal laws related to the use of children in illicit activities. Refer children who are victims of human trafficking to social services for assistance with school enrollment, participation in recreational activities, and obtaining proper documentation. ⁽⁵⁾
The Commission on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights	Coordinate the enforcement of laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Located within the Cabinet of Ministers. ⁽³⁴⁾
The National Referral Mechanism for Trafficking in Persons (NRM)	Refer victims of human trafficking to the relevant authorities, ensuring the protection of their rights. ⁽³⁵⁾ Refer human trafficking cases to the ATD for prosecution. Led by the National Coordinator and the Deputy-Minister of the MIA and counts a large number of government agencies as members, including the MLSPP and the State Committee on Family, Women and Children's Affairs (SCFWCA). ⁽¹²⁾

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Azerbaijan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The State Labor Inspection Service (SLIS) reports that all inspectors receive training on identification of trafficking victims and situations of labor exploitation.(18) However, research did not find information on whether inspectors received training on laws and the enforcement of laws pertaining specifically to hazardous child labor. Limited evidence suggests that inspectors may not be adequately trained on child labor issues, including hazardous child labor.(6) In addition, the SLIS noted that it uses a different definition of forced labor than is prescribed in other aspects of Azerbaijani law. This may impact the severity of the penalties imposed by the SLIS for forced labor violations.(33)

While the SLIS does conduct unannounced inspections, the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population reports that subjects of unannounced child labor investigations are often warned of the investigation in advance through unofficial channels, which indicates a lack of integrity within the SLIS.(15)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Azerbaijan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	Unknown
Number of Convictions	Unknown	Unknown
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (18)	Yes (18)

Although the National Referral Mechanism for Trafficking in Persons (NRM) exists to refer victims of human trafficking, including child trafficking, to the relevant government agencies, research found that the NRM's efficacy suffers from a lack of interagency cooperation and an absence of standard operating procedures for referral of victims. In addition, NGOs report that human trafficking victims referred to the NRM by NGOs were not officially recognized as victims by the Government and did not receive government services.(33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Identify government priorities in the sphere of child labor prevention to facilitate efficient mobilization of resources. Established through the Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project and comprising representatives from the MLSPP, the SCFWCA, the Ministry of Education, the Employers' Confederation, the Trade Unions' Confederation, the OSCE, UNICEF, and the ILO.(38)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
State Committee on Family, Women and Children's Affairs (SCFWCA)	Serve as the primary central executive body responsible for implementing child-related policies.(2) Create and maintain an interagency case management database on child rights.(39)
Control-Coordination Group	Work with the Ministry of Education and the SCFWCA to develop a national database for local agencies to identify children who are not in school, and to track absentees over time and across districts.(34, 40) Established from the State Program on Poverty Reduction and Sustainable Development in 2008–2015. Membership includes representatives from the SCFWCA; the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Health, and the MLSPP.(34)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Azerbaijan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Joint Action Plan on Elimination of Child Labor Exploitation (2013–2015)	Joint action plan outlining coordination between the MLSPP and the SCFWCA. Planned activities include preparing social awareness campaigns on the negative consequences of child labor exploitation; organizing seminars and roundtables for state agencies involved in the fight against child labor; conducting research on child labor throughout the country; and training labor inspectors on the worst forms of child labor.(34)
National Action Plan on the Protection of Human Rights (2012–2015)	Sought to ensure that the Criminal Code is compatible with international standards on preventing the sexual exploitation of children and to strengthen efforts to fulfill the ILO child labor conventions. Addressed human trafficking and called for rehabilitation centers for victims.(41)
National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (NAP) (2014–2018)	Aims to identify and combat the causes of vulnerability to human trafficking in Azerbaijan, through improved coordination among the government agencies, NGOs, and intergovernmental organizations involved in combating human trafficking. Also seeks to improve the identification, protection, and provision of services to victims, and to ameliorate the social conditions that make victims vulnerable to human trafficking.(42) Places special emphasis on protecting the rights of child victims and preventing trafficking of vulnerable children and youth.(18, 42)
UNDAF (2011–2015)	Sought to improve identification, referral, and legal support services for victims of trafficking, as well as to build the capacity of judiciary and law enforcement personnel.(43)
State Program on Poverty Reduction and Sustainable Development (2008–2015)	Sought to improve social protection for the most vulnerable populations, including child laborers. Called for developing a national action plan to address the issues of abandoned and street children.(44) Included a plan to improve efforts to make schools better and more accessible, and to decrease educational costs by providing free textbooks and hot meals for children.(44)

The National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (NAP) addresses many prior international recommendations, but lacks clear indicators of the source and amount of funding. As a result, the NAP is lacking the funding necessary for full implementation of associated programs.(18)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Azerbaijan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Azerbaijan. (45) In 2015, conducted four training sessions to build the capacity of union representatives to identify and prevent child labor.(45)

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Azerbaijan, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity of the Government to conduct research in this area.(46) In Azerbaijan, the MAP project is funding a rapid assessment of child labor among children in the Roma community. In 2015, the project conducted a training workshop for staff from the NGO partner that will conduct the rapid assessment.(47)
Statistical Analysis on Child Labor and Street Children in Azerbaijan	SCFWCA and UNICEF collaboration to create a comprehensive report on the situation of street children in 11 cities and districts of Azerbaijan.(18)
Centers for Vulnerable Children†	Government-funded program comprising 13 centers that provide social services to vulnerable children, including street children and orphans.(48) NGOs reported that the centers are effective in providing services and may contribute to a reduction in child labor.(6) The centers were originally established in 2013, but ran out of funds and closed by the end of 2013.(6) In August 2014, funding for the shelters was restored; however it is not clear if the funding was permanently secured.(48)
The Program of Social Rehabilitation and Social Reintegration of Child Victims of Trafficking (2014–2016)†	Government program implemented by the MLSPP, the SCFWCA, and the Ministry of Education. Assists children who are victims of human trafficking and their families by establishing a system of monitoring social reintegration of child victims of trafficking and by providing for the professional development of psychologists and medical professionals.(49, 50)
Victim Assistance Center for Victims of Human Trafficking†	MLSPP-supported program that provides medical, psychological, and social rehabilitation and reintegration assistance to victims of trafficking, including children.(12, 18) In 2015, had a budget of $27,320, which the director reported was inadequate to hire sufficient staff.(33)
Baku Shelter for Victims of Human Trafficking†	MIA-run shelter for victims of human trafficking that can accommodate up to 50 victims.(33)
Reception Center†	State Migration Service-run shelter for victims of human trafficking.(33)
Targeted Social Assistance Program†	MLSPP-run program that provides cash transfers to low-income families.(51, 52)
MIA Identification Document Program†	Provides identification documents to undocumented minors who may be street children or victims of human trafficking.(6)
USAID Anti-Trafficking in Persons Project	$610,000, USAID-funded, OSCE-implemented program to provide technical assistance and financial support to civil society organizations operating shelters for victims of human trafficking, including children.(37, 53)

† Program is funded by the Government of Azerbaijan.

Although the Government of Azerbaijan has implemented programs to address child trafficking, research found little evidence to indicate it has carried out programs to assist children working in agriculture or on the street.

NGO-run shelters that are tasked by the NAP with providing victim services do not receive consistent funding from the Government. Directors of these shelters note that the unpredictable nature of funding prevents long-term planning and capacity building of shelters.(33) Child victims are usually referred to the Azerbaijan Children’s Union shelter, where they have access to specialized care, including art therapy. This shelter does not receive consistent government funding and noted that most of its staff worked on a voluntary basis due to lack of government funding and an inability to receive foreign assistance caused by the restrictions imposed on NGOs over the last two years.(33)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Azerbaijan (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children working without a written employment agreement or outside of a formal employment relationship and children who are self-employed.	2011 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that labor inspectors receive adequate training on the enforcement of laws pertaining to child labor.	2014 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Make complete data on the funding of the inspectorate publicly available.	2015
	Ensure that the State Labor Inspection Service uses a definition of forced labor that corresponds with Azerbaijani law.	2015
	Make publicly available complete data on the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Improve interagency cooperation to ensure that the NRM functions adequately and provides needed services to all victims of child trafficking, including to victims identified and referred by NGOs.	2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Ensure the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings receives the funding necessary for full implementation of associated programs.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the extent of children's continued involvement in the production of commercial agricultural goods, and to determine specific activities related to children's work in construction in order to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture and on the streets	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that NGO-run shelters for victims of human trafficking are sufficiently and consistently funded to provide services to victims effectively, as dictated by the NAP and NRM.	2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Bahrain made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched a multilingual hotline, which the public can use to report cases of human trafficking and abuse of migrant workers. Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has not conducted research to determine the nature and extent of the worst forms of child labor in the country. Furthermore, the Government has not published information on its law enforcement efforts or established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts among government agencies and other stakeholders to address child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, in Bahrain.(1) Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(2)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Selling products on the street* (1)
	Domestic work* (1)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation* (1)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3 (a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

There is no evidence that the Government of Bahrain has conducted or participated in research to determine the extent to which children are engaged in child labor, including its worst forms.(4)

In 2015, there were cases of children who had traveled to Bahrain with falsified documents to work as domestic workers.(1)

In Bahrain, citizenship is derived from the father. As a result, children of Bahraini mothers and non-Bahraini fathers may be stateless.(5) Stateless children lack legal documents, such as birth certificates, which prevents them from enrolling in school and having access to education.(7-9)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bahrain has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 24 of the Labor Law (10)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 27 of the Labor Law (10)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 1 and 2 of Ministerial Order No. 23 of 2013 (11)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons (12)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons (12)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons; Article 39 of the Child Law (12, 13)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 59 and 68 of the Child Law; Article 30 of the Law on Hallucinogenic Substances and Drugs (13, 14)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 24 of the Defense Force Act (15)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 1 of the Education Act (16)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 7 of the Education Act (16)

* No conscription (15)

The minimum age protection in the Labor Law does not apply to children in certain sectors, such as domestic work.(10) However, some Government policies help prevent child labor in domestic work. For example, visa policies require that all individuals seeking to migrate to Bahrain for work be at least age 18. Similarly, children already in Bahrain as dependents of migrants cannot obtain work visas.(17)

Article 236 of the Penal Code penalizes commercial sexual exploitation. Because Article 32 of the Penal Code establishes the criminal responsibility age at 15, children ages 15 and older who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation may be liable as violating Article 236.(18, 19) However, it is standard practice in Bahrain in those situations for the children to be placed in a rehabilitation center and not be prosecuted.(17) Additionally, Articles 1.26 and 1.27 of Ministerial Order No. 23 of 2013 prohibit the employment of minors in bars and nightclubs, which are sectors particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation.(11) This reduces children's vulnerability to commercial sexual exploitation and the likelihood of prosecution.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Development	Enforce child labor laws, along with the Labor Market Regulatory Authority. Inspectors often take the lead role in initial mediation to resolve violations of the Labor Law.(1) Violations that are not resolved through mediation are referred to the Public Prosecutor's Office. Maintain a hotline to receive criminal complaints of child labor, including its worst forms.(1)
Labor Market Regulatory Authority	Issue work visas to ensure that individuals coming to Bahrain as migrant workers are at least age 18.(4) Enforce the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons.(1) In 2015, launched a multilingual hotline to assist migrant workers.(20)
Police Department of the Ministry of the Interior	Enforce criminal laws that prohibit the worst forms of child labor in coordination with the Ministry of Labor and Social Development, the Ministry of Justice and Islamic Affairs and Endowments, and the Public Prosecutor's Office, as needed. Oversee the 12-person Criminal Investigations Directorate that investigates potential cases of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(21) Refer any identified child victims of human trafficking or illicit activities to the Center for Child Protection.(4) Maintain a hotline to receive criminal complaints of child trafficking.(22)
Public Prosecutor's Office	Prosecute all crimes related to child labor and human trafficking.(23)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the National Committee on Combating Human Trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Bahrain funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Protection Center†	Government center that provides treatment and counseling to child victims of abuse, including sexual exploitation.(27, 28) Receives referrals of child victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation from the Ministry of the Interior.(4)
Social Welfare Dignity Home†	Government program that provided services to homeless persons and beggars, including children.(27) Closed in December 2015.(1)

The Government opened the Migrant Worker Service Center and Shelter for adult victims of human trafficking, and transferred trafficking victims from the Dar al Aman Center for Domestic Abuse to the new shelter.(29)

The National Committee on Combating Human Trafficking accepted submissions for a national awareness competition focusing on the fair treatment of domestic workers.(20) Although the Government has implemented programs to assist victims of human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and begging, research found no evidence of programs specifically aimed at protecting children engaged in domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bahrain (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions do not exclude children in certain sectors, including in domestic work.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that the laws do not allow the prosecution of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.	2010 – 2015
Enforcement	Collect and make publicly available data on the labor inspectorate funding; the number of labor inspectors; the training system; the number of inspections and whether they were conducted at worksites or via desk review only; the number of child labor violations and penalties imposed and collected; whether routine, targeted, and unannounced inspections were conducted; and whether there is a reciprocal referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services.	2009 – 2015
	Collect and make publicly available data on the training system for criminal investigators and the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions.	2013 – 2015
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including all its worst forms, such as commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015
Government Policies	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct a comprehensive study of children's activities to determine the extent to which children are engaged in or at risk for involvement in child labor, including the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure universal access to education, particularly for stateless children.	2010 – 2015
	Develop programs to address the issue of child domestic work.	2014 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Bangladesh made a moderate advancement in its efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government published the results of the 2013 National Child Labor Survey and approved the Domestic Workers Protection and Welfare Policy which will set the minimum age for domestic work at 14 years. The National Child Labor Welfare Council as well as two Divisional Child Labor Welfare Councils met for the first time to discuss child labor elimination activities. However, children in Bangladesh are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of bricks and forced child labor in the production of dried fish. The legal framework does not protect children working in informal economic sectors, including small farms and street work, where child labor is most prevalent. The law does not specify the activities and number of hours per week of light work that are permitted for children that are 12 and 13 years of age. The Government lacks the capacity to enforce child labor laws as the number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Bangladesh's workforce and fines are inadequate to deter child labor law violations.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bangladesh are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of bricks and forced child labor in the production of dried fish.(1-3) The Government published its 2013 National Child Labor Survey during the reporting period. The survey data show that 1,698,894 children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in legally prohibited child labor, while 1,751,475 children are engaged in permitted forms of work.(4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bangladesh.

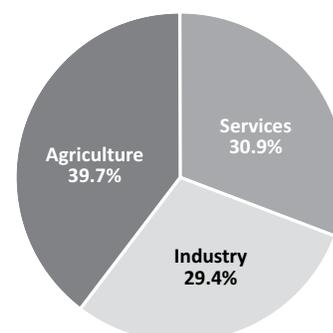

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.3 (1,326,411)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	81.2

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some Bangladeshi children are trafficked internally, and others are trafficked to India and Pakistan for commercial sexual exploitation.(31) Some children in Bangladesh work under forced labor conditions in the dried fish sector and in the production of bricks to help pay off family debts to local moneylenders.(29, 31) Children are forced to beg on the streets, including some who have been kidnapped by gangs.(32)

According to the National Education Policy, education is free and compulsory in Bangladesh through eighth grade, but several factors contribute to children not completing primary school, such as high student-teacher ratios and short school days of only 2 to 3 hours. The associated costs of education, including books and uniforms, also prevent many children from attending school.(4, 36)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bangladesh has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

* No conscription (48)

The Bangladesh Labor Act excludes the informal economic sectors in which child labor is most prevalent, including domestic work, street work, and work on small agricultural farms with less than five employees.(37, 43, 49)

Although the labor law stipulates that children over 12 years of age may engage in light work that does not endanger their health or interfere with their education, the law does not specify the activities or the number of hours per week that light work is permitted.(37)

The use of children in pornographic performances is not criminally prohibited.(40, 43) The use of children in the production of drugs is not criminally prohibited.(42)

The 2010 National Education Policy raised the age of compulsory education from grade 5 (age 10) to grade 8 (age 14); however, until the legal framework is amended to reflect the new compulsory education age, the policy is not enforceable.(50, 51)

In 2015, the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) provided training to labor inspectors on building and fire safety, occupational safety and health, and labor laws, which included child labor laws.(11)

Although DIFE hired 90 additional labor inspectors during 2015, the number of labor inspectors is still insufficient for the size of Bangladesh's workforce.(11) According to the ILO standard of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Bangladesh should employ about 2,000 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(57-59) Reports indicate that inspections rarely occur at unregistered factories and establishments, places where children are more likely to be employed.(12, 60)

The penalty of a $62 fine for a child labor law violation is an insufficient deterrent.(7, 56) According to the Ministry of Labor and Employment, information on penalties imposed and fines collected resides with the labor courts; however, research did not reveal information about penalties.(54)

In 2015, the Ministry of Home Affairs, in coordination with IOM, UNICEF, and UNODC, conducted anti-human-trafficking training for law enforcement officials.(62)

The TIP Monitoring Cell of the Bangladesh Police reportedly has insufficient funds and staff to adequately address cases of child trafficking, forced child labor, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(61)

The Bangladesh Police report that from February to December 2015 there were 982 cases of human trafficking and 1 conviction for crimes involving human trafficking. Disaggregated data for investigations and convictions involving child victims are not provided. (63) The police also report that 110 children were recovered from human trafficking during the same time period.(63)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Welfare Council	Coordinate efforts undertaken by various government agencies to eliminate child labor and assess the implementation of the National Child Labor Elimination Policy provide advice. Chaired by the Ministry of Labor and Employment, comprises officials representing relevant government ministries, international organizations, child advocacy groups, and employer and worker organizations.(65) The Council held its first meeting in May 2015.(66)
Counter-Trafficking National Coordination Committee, Ministry of Home Affairs (MHA)	Coordinate government ministries involved in countering international and domestic human trafficking, including child trafficking.(55) Integrate the work of government agencies and international and local NGOs on human trafficking through bimonthly coordination meetings. Oversee district counter-trafficking committees, which oversee counter-trafficking committees for subdistricts and for smaller administrative units.(55, 64, 67)
Rescue, Recovery, Repatriation, and Integration Task Force, MHA	Coordinate Bangladesh and India's efforts to rescue, recover, repatriate, and reintegrate victims of human trafficking, particularly children. Liaise with various ministries, government departments, NGOs, and international organizations that assist trafficked children.(64, 68)

In 2015, Divisional Child Labor Welfare Councils in Chittagong and Rangpur met for the first time to discuss child labor elimination activities.(11)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bangladesh has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Elimination Policy (NCLEP) (2010–2015)	Guides law making and policy making to eliminate the worst forms of child labor through interventions that will remove children from the worst forms of child labor and provide them with viable work alternatives.(69, 70)
Child Labor National Plan of Action (NPA) (2012–2016)	Identifies strategies for implementing and mainstreaming the NCLEP, including developing institutional capacity, increasing access to education and health services, raising social awareness, strengthening law enforcement, and creating prevention and reintegration programs.(71)

Bangladesh

Policy	Description
Sixth Five-Year Plan (2011–2015)	Includes the elimination of child labor as a Government priority and identifies the NCLEP and its NPA as the Government's central strategy to eliminate child labor.(72)
National Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking (2015–2017)†	Establishes goals to meet international standards and best practices for anti-human-trafficking initiatives, including prevention of human trafficking; protection of survivors and victims of human trafficking; legal justice for survivors and victims of human trafficking; development of advocacy networks; and establishment of an effective monitoring, evaluation, and reporting mechanism.(55)
National Labor Policy	Includes provisions on the prohibition of child labor in the informal and formal employment sectors in urban and rural areas. States that the Government will take necessary actions to ensure that children do not engage in hazardous labor and aims to create opportunities for children to access primary education.(73)
National Education Policy*	Specifies the Government's education policy, including pre-primary, primary, secondary, vocational and technical, higher, and non-formal education policies. Increases the compulsory age for free education to grade 8 (age 14).(51)
National Plan of Action for Education for All (2003–2015)	Includes provisions that target child laborers for non-formal basic education programs.(74)
National Skills Development Policy	Outlines a skills development program for legally working-age children as a means of contributing to a workplace free from child labor.(75)
National Policy for Children	Aims to mitigate child labor by implementing steps set out in the NCLEP strategies for eliminating child labor.(76)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the Government approved the Domestic Workers Protection and Welfare Policy, which will come into effect in 2016. (11, 77) The policy sets the minimum age for domestic work at 14 years; however, children between ages 12 and 13 can work as domestic workers with parental permission.(11) The policy, however, is not legally enforceable.(43)

During the year, the Government also approved the Seventh Five-Year Plan, which lays out actions to be taken by the Government to reduce child labor and eliminate the worst forms of child labor.(78)

In 2014, the Government drafted the National Corporate Social Responsibility Policy for Children that will provide guidance to businesses in the formal and non-formal sector on how to respect and protect the rights of children.(36, 79)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Bangladesh funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Eradication of Hazardous Child Labor, Phase III†	Three-year Government program that targets 50,000 children between ages 10 and 14 for withdrawal from hazardous labor through non-formal education and skills development training.(69, 80)
Services for Children at Risk Project†	Ministry of Social Welfare (MSW) 5-year program that provides integrated child protection services to children engaged in child labor, including its worst forms.(52) The program has provided services to 2,692 children, including non-formal education, skills development education, and livelihood training.(35)
Urban Social Protection Initiative to Reach the Unreachable and Invisible and Ending Child Labor	UNICEF, MSW, and the Ministry of Women and Children's Affairs (MWCA) 5-year project that provides conditional cash transfers and employment training, outreach and referral services, and social protection services for 500,000 children and 30,000 adolescents.(10, 81)
Reaching Out-of-School Children II (2012–2017)	$130 million World Bank-funded, 6-year program that provides out-of-school children with non-formal education, school stipends, free books, and school uniforms. Students attend learning centers called Ananda Schools until they are ready to join mainstream secondary schools.(82) As of June 2015, the program has provided education to 546,000 poor children in 20,162 learning centers.(83)

Program	Description
Child Sensitive Social Protection Project (2012–2016)	UNICEF-funded MSW program to reduce abuse, violence, and exploitation of children and youth by improving access to social protection services.(52) Provides conditional cash transfers of $26 each month for 18 months for underprivileged children to prevent them from working in child labor.(35) Services also include a stipend program for out-of-school adolescents.(84)
Enabling Environment for Child Rights	MWCA program, supported by UNICEF, that rehabilitates street children engaged in risky work. Supports 16,000 children in 20 districts through cash transfers.(36, 85) In 2015, the project launched a pilot initiative to provide 500 additional children in the Dhaka slums with assistance through mobile phone cash transfer.(85)
Primary Education Stipend Project, Phase III†	Ministry of Primary and Mass Education-implemented program that provides stipends to the children of poor families throughout Bangladesh in an effort to reduce child labor and mitigate the cost of education.(11)
Support Urban Slum Children to Access Inclusive Non-Formal Education	EU-funded program implemented by Save the Children to provide non-formal education to children in the urban slums of Dhaka and Chittagong and to mainstream students into the formal education system.(11)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce (CLEAR) Child Labor Project	USDOL-funded, capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve legislation addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards; improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor; develop, validate, adopt, and implement a National Action Plan on the elimination of child labor; and enhance the implementation of national and local policies and programs aimed at the reduction and prevention of child labor in Bangladesh.(66)
Expanding the Evidence Base and Reinforcing Policy Research for Scaling-up and Accelerating Action Against Child Labor	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 7 countries, including Bangladesh, to accelerate country level actions to address child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, building capacity of governments to conduct research in this area, and supporting governments, social partners and other stakeholders to identify areas of policy intervention against child labor.(86) The Government’s Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics, in consultation with the ILO, drafted and published the National Child Labor Survey.(86)
Shelter Project†	MSW-administered support services for vulnerable people who have experienced violence, including human trafficking. Includes nine multipurpose shelters and eight crisis centers that provide services to women and children.(31, 52)
Child Help Line 1098	MSW-implemented and UNICEF-supported 24-hour emergency telephone line. Connects children at risk to social protection services.(87)
National Helpline Center†	National Helpline Center for Violence Against Women and Children-operated 24/7, toll-free hotline. Provides support and guidance to children involved in violent and hazardous situations.(52)
Vulnerable Group Development Program†	MWCA program that provides vulnerable families with food assistance and training in alternative income-generating opportunities.(70, 88, 89)

† Program is funded by the Government of Bangladesh.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bangladesh (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that the law’s minimum age protections apply to children working in the informal sector, including in domestic work, on the streets, and in small-scale agriculture.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that the law specifies the activities and the number of hours per week that children between ages 12 and 13 are permitted to perform light work.	2015
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, particularly in the production of drugs.	2015
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits all offenses related to the sexual exploitation of children for pornographic performances.	2015
	Ensure that the legal framework reflects the policy that education is compulsory through grade eight and is consistent with the minimum age for work.	2012 – 2015

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
59. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Belize made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government provided training to enforcement officials on its trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation legislation, both passed in 2013. However, children in Belize are engaged in child labor, including in the production of sugarcane, bananas, and citrus fruits, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Important gaps in the country's legal framework remain. Belize does not set a minimum age of 14 for work for all sectors, and the country lacks a list of hazardous occupations that are prohibited for children. In addition, the Government does not appear to have programs that aim to reduce child labor in agriculture, a sector in which it remains prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Belize are engaged in child labor, including in the production of sugarcane, bananas, and citrus fruits. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1, 2) The 2013 Report of the National Child Activity Survey, conducted by the Government in collaboration with ILO-IPEC, estimates that 5,565 children work, of which 3,528 are engaged in child labor and 3,381 are engaged in hazardous work. (3) Over half of working children are employed in two industries, in agriculture and in trade and repairs. (3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Belize.

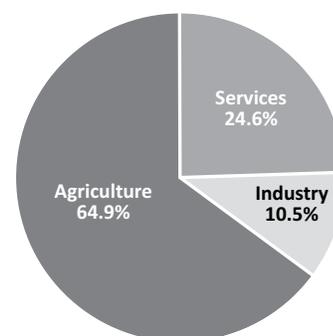

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	1.6 (1,405)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	94.5

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 9-14)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Agricultural work and street vending are reported to often take place in the company of parents.(8-10) The 2013 Report of the National Child Activity Survey estimated that 60 percent of working children engage in hazardous work, primarily in craft and trade, or in elementary occupations, such as yard cleaning, construction, farm or kitchen help, or common labor.(3) According to the 2013 Report of the National Child Activity Survey, the majority of children in hazardous work are boys, ages 14 to 17 years old, who reside in rural areas.(3)

Some reports indicate that some children working in the agricultural sector may be vulnerable to human trafficking or forced labor. (2) Children’s access to education is sometimes hindered when schools charge fees and parents must pay for textbooks, uniforms, and meals.(12, 15, 16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Belize has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	12	Articles 54, 164, and 169 of the Labor Act; Articles 2 and 3 of the Shops Act (17, 18)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	14	Articles 2 and 7 of the Families and Children Act; Articles 2 and 164 of the Labor Act (17, 19)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 8 of the Constitution; Articles 157 and 158 of the Labor Act (17, 20)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 11–14 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Act, 2013; Article 9 of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act, 2013; Articles 49–51 of the Criminal Code (21-23)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 2, 11, 13, and 14 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Act, 2013; Articles 2–9 of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act, 2013; Articles 49–51 of the Criminal Code (21-23)

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 16 of the Defense Act (24)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	14	Articles 2 and 59 of the Education and Training Act; Articles 2 and 34 of the Education Act (15, 25)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 70 of the Education and Training Act; Article 45 of the Education Act (15, 25)

* No conscription.(26)

Article 169 of the Labor Act sets the general minimum age of employment at 12 years, which does not conform to international standards.(17, 27) However, Article 3(1) of the Shops Act sets the minimum age at 14 for work in wholesale or retail trade or business.(18)

Belizean law is not consistent with international standards on hazardous work. Under Article 164 of the Labor Act, children under age 14 are prohibited from working in industrial undertakings.(17) In Article 2 of the Labor Act, industrial undertakings include activities such as mining, manufacturing, and construction.(17) Although Article 7 of the Families and Children Act prohibits children under age 18 from being employed or engaged in any activity that may be detrimental to their health, education, or mental, physical, or moral development, Belizean law does not specify which activities are included in this; however, this article is subject to the Labor Act, which explicitly permits children over age 14 to work in industrial undertakings.(19) Research determined that Belizean law lacks a list of comprehensive activities that are prohibited for all children under age 18.

The Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act and the Criminal Code prohibit all forms of child sexual exploitation, with the former explicitly prohibiting child pornography.(22, 23) Article 3(2) of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act, however, permits consensual sex with a child age 16 or 17, including cases in which a person gives or promises remuneration, gifts, goods, food, or other benefits. This provision leaves these children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(22, 28) Research could not determine whether laws prohibit the use of children in specific illicit activities, such as drug trafficking.(29)

Although Article 70 of the Education and Training Act and Article 45 of the Education Act make primary and secondary education tuition-free in Belize, schools may charge fees, with the approval of the chief education officer.(15, 25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Local Government, and Rural Development	Identify cases and enforce laws related to child labor and hazardous child labor through its Labor Department.(6, 10, 11)
Ministry of Human Development and Social Transformation, Department of Human Services	Receive referrals for child labor cases; train immigration officials, labor inspectors, and the Belize Police Department (BPD) in making referrals; and handle human trafficking cases.(6, 9, 30) Provide victims with welfare services, including medical and social services and counseling assistance.(11, 31)
BPD	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking through its Sexual Offense and Family Violence Units.(6, 7, 9)
Office of the Director of Public Prosecution	Prosecute criminal offenses, including cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(32)

* The Government does not make this information publicly available.

‡ Data are from January 1 to December 31, 2014.

In 2015, the Labor Department employed 24 labor inspectors in 9 offices throughout the country, a decrease from 26 inspectors in 10 offices in 2014.(9-11) The budget allocated to the Labor Department for the reporting period was $841,666, an increase from $765,000 in 2014; however, the exact amount dedicated to labor inspections is unknown.(11, 31) Labor inspectors conduct both routine- and complaint-driven labor inspections, but information on the number of complaints is not available. Reports indicate that labor inspections in rural, agricultural areas were hampered by a lack of resources, including vehicles and fuel.(10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Belize took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown (10)	Unknown (11)

In 2015, the Office of the Director of Public Prosecution employed nine criminal prosecutors, a number reported to be insufficient to effectively investigate all criminal offenses in the country, including the worst forms of child labor.(32)

In 2015, the 24 labor inspectors of the Labor Department worked with the BPD to enforce criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.(11) The BPD investigated seven new human trafficking cases involving six individuals, four of whom were children.(30) No prosecutions and no convictions were documented during the reporting period.(30) As of 2015, the ILO Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions noted that no human trafficking convictions have been made since 2005.(34) Reports indicate that criminal investigators and police officers lacked sufficient resources, including vehicles, to effectively investigate violations of criminal law, including the worst forms of child labor.(32)

The Women’s Department of the Ministry of Human Development, Social Transformation and Poverty Alleviation provided training on human-anti-trafficking during the reporting period.(11) It worked with a local NGO, the Child Development Foundation, to provide training on child abuse and protection to 101 frontline officers, including police, labor, immigration, and social workers.(11) In addition, the International Law Enforcement Academy provided a 5-day training for 8 police officers on Trafficking in Persons and Child Exploitation.(30)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Committee	Coordinate efforts between ministries to combat child labor and implement the National Child Labor Policy. Led by the Ministry of Labor and 14 government and civil society members.(6, 7, 27)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Council	Identify and rescue human trafficking victims, train law enforcement officials, and educate the public about the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by the Vice Minister of Human Development and Social Transformation and includes 12 other government agencies and civil society organizations.(2, 6, 7, 33)
National Committee for Families and Children	Promote, monitor, and evaluate Belize’s compliance with its national and international commitments to children, including the UN CRC, which includes protections against the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities, such as drug trafficking.(31)

The National Child Labor Committee is responsible for implementing the National Child Labor Policy;(27) however, research could not determine whether the committee has convened during the reporting period.(11)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Belize has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Policy	Establishes a rights-based framework to eradicate child labor. Focuses on priority areas that include strengthening current child labor laws, creating new legislation to address existing gaps, and providing educational assistance to children who have been or who are currently engaged in child labor.(7, 35) Promotes awareness and advocacy efforts, the strengthening of government institutions and services, and the training of labor officers to identify and provide care to children engaged in child labor.(7, 27, 35)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Strategic Plan of Action (2013–2015)	Charts a human rights, victim-centered approach to human trafficking that focuses on prevention, protection, and prosecution. Developed in 2012 with the IOM. Defines the roles and responsibilities of the constituent members of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Council.(2)
CARE Model	Coordinates the protection, care, and monitoring of sexually exploited and trafficked children. Outlines the role of the Department of Human Services and the BPD in receiving allegations of commercial sexual exploitation of children, makes referrals to other agencies for services, and protects children from future exploitation.(6, 33)
National Plan of Action for Children and Adolescents (2004–2015)	Calls for the revision of child labor legislation and includes the following three aims: (1) to establish protocols to improve interagency coordination, (2) to increase institutional capacity to enforce legislation, and (3) to strengthen child labor prevention programs, including the creation of awareness-raising campaigns. Prioritizes child labor issues, including the worst forms of child labor.(2, 36, 37)
National Development Framework, Horizon 2030*	Promotes economic growth and national well-being. Recognizes education as a basic human right and ensures access to quality education up through secondary school.(38, 39)

Policy	Description
Ministry of Education, Early Childhood Development Policy (2011–2015)	Promotes the rights of children, from conception to age 8, and provides support to all primary caregivers. Aims to develop innovative programs that target families of child laborers, particularly those engaged in the worst forms of child labor, and to ensure those children attend school.(40)
Ministry of Education, Belizean Education Sector Strategy (2011–2016)*	Aims to improve the quality and accessibility of education by focusing on retention rates, years of attendance, and teacher training. Stems from collaboration among the Ministry of Education, the Caribbean Development Bank, and other educational stakeholders.(41)
Declaration of the Vice-Ministers of the XX Regional Conference on Migration	Aims to strengthen regional cooperation to protect the human rights of migrants, especially youth and children, in countries of origin, transit, and destination, including by increasing opportunities for education and employment. Adopted by Belize at the XX Regional Conference on Migration in Mexico City (November 2015).(42, 43) In 2015, the Government of Belize participated in two meetings with the Ad Hoc Group on Migrant Children and Adolescents of the Regional Conference on Migration to identify ways for member states to increase protections for underage migrants and refugees. These meetings promoted the exchange of information on migrant children’s rights and experiences, the guiding principles relating to migration, and the holistic protection of children and adolescents.(44)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Belize funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Building Opportunities for Our Social Transformation Program (2011–2015)†	Government-run, conditional cash transfer initiative to reduce poverty, funded in part by the World Bank, provides monetary incentives for families that comply with program requirements.(7, 45) Families must ensure that children ages 5 to 17 maintain an annual school attendance record of 85 percent.(6, 7, 45, 46) Program continued to expand in the southern most districts during 2015.(47)
Primary School Completers Subsidy Program†	Government-funded education program, increases school enrollment by providing families with cash subsidies, contingent upon children completing primary education.(7, 10, 48)
Certification of Primary School Teachers Program†	Countrywide teacher training program, improves quality of instruction, school attendance, and completion rates.(7)
Special Envoy for Women and Children Outreach Program†	Special Envoy for Women and Children campaign, raises awareness of the commercial sexual exploitation of children; includes hosting conferences and producing public service messages.(9, 10)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2017)	USDOL project, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010 and implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016. Aims to improve evidence base on child labor through data collection and research.(49)
UNICEF Country Program (2013–2016)	UNICEF program to advance the rights of children by building institutional capacity to reduce disparities and inequalities, promote early childhood development, and increase educational opportunities. Geographic areas of focus include southern Belize and the south side of Belize City.(50)
Make Your Child Count Birth Registration Campaign (2011–2015)	UNICEF project that encourages parents to register children at birth to facilitate their access to education and health benefits.(10, 51)

† Program is funded by the Government of Belize.

Although the Government of Belize has a program to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children, research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to assist children working specifically in agriculture. The Government continues to face budgetary constraints for social programs that address child labor, and poverty remains high.(9)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Belize (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure the law prohibits commercial sexual exploitation with children ages 16 and 17.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure the minimum age for work is 14 in all sectors.	2013 – 2015
	Adopt a list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children and ensure that all children under age 18 are prohibited from engaging in hazardous work.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that laws prohibit the use of children in specific illicit activities, such as drug trafficking.	2013 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that law enforcement agencies have sufficient resources to conduct labor inspections and criminal investigations.	2009, 2011 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on enforcement efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor, including the number of trainings, complaints, criminal investigations, convictions, and penalties.	2009 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on labor inspectorate responsibilities, including authority to assess penalties and conduct unannounced inspections, number of labor inspections conducted, and child labor violations found.	2015
Coordination	Conduct regular meetings of the National Child Labor Committee and develop concrete goals for the committee.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into national education and development policies.	2012 – 2015
Social Programs	Increase access to education by eliminating all fees and by providing textbooks, uniforms, and meals.	2011 – 2015
	Develop new programs aimed at reducing the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Benin made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed an amendment to the Child Code, containing provisions on labor exploitation, the sale or possession of child pornography, and begging. The Government hired 31 new labor inspectors, trained criminal law enforcement officials, and initiated a birth registration awareness-raising campaign. However, children in Benin are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, particularly in the production of cotton, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. The national action plan pertaining to the worst forms of child labor remains unfunded, and social programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Benin are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, particularly in the production of cotton.(1-3) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work.(4-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Benin.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	20.9 (680,004)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	71.0

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Benin is a source, transit, and destination country for trafficked children. Children are trafficked mostly within Benin but also to other West and Central African countries, primarily Gabon, Nigeria, and the Republic of Congo.(23) Children are trafficked for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation, as well as to work in vending, farming, stone quarries, and handicraft activities.(5, 16, 24-26)

Through the system of vidomegon, girls as young as age 7 are sent to relatives or strangers to work as domestic workers in exchange for food, housing, and schooling. In practice, some of these girls receive care and an education; however, many become victims of labor exploitation and sexual abuse.(1, 5, 6, 16, 23) In Northern Benin, some boys placed in the care of Koranic teachers for the purpose of education are forced by their teachers to beg on the street or to work in fields; they must then surrender the money they have earned to their teachers.(6, 20, 21)

A study conducted by ILO-IPEC in 2013 found 2,553 children working in 102 surveyed mines and quarries across Benin.(14) Children who work in quarries are subject to long working hours and to physical injuries and illnesses from dynamite explosions, falling rocks, collapsing quarry walls, and dust inhalation.(13, 14, 27) A UNICEF study of three markets in Benin revealed more than 7,800 children working in the markets, mainly as street vendors. Children working in markets are exposed to injuries and sexual and physical abuse.(6, 28)

Although the constitution guarantees free compulsory primary education by law, in practice, some parents are expected to pay school fees for registration, uniforms, books, and materials.(1, 4, 16, 29) This may make children more vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms. In addition, evidence suggests that incidences of physical, psychological, and sexual abuse, including corporal punishment and rape of students by teachers, prevent some children from remaining in school.(6, 22, 30, 31) Children with disabilities had no access to the regular education system.(1)

The Government has been working with UNICEF to establish new civil registration centers in smaller towns and neighborhoods and, in January 2015, initiated a 2-week national birth registration awareness campaign; however, some children in Benin continued to be unregistered.(6, 23, 32) Unregistered children may have difficulty accessing services, such as education.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Benin has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	11‡	Article 24 of Act No. 2003-17(39)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of the Constitution; Article 114 of the Child Code (34, 40)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (39)

Benin's Child Code is a compilation of existing legislation related to children's rights, education, protection, labor, and health. In January 2015, the Government passed an amendment to the Child Code containing provisions regarding offenses involving minors, including labor exploitation, the sale or possession of child pornography, and begging.(34) The amendment also prohibits using, procuring, or offering children for the production and trafficking of drugs, as defined by international standards regarding the worst forms of child labor.(34)

Article 22 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors prescribes penalties—6 months to 2 years of imprisonment—or fines for human trafficking crimes involving labor exploitation. These punishments are neither sufficiently stringent nor commensurate with the punishments prescribed for other serious crimes, such as rape.(2, 36) A revised Labor Code, which proposes to increase the penalties for child labor violations and to increase the minimum age of employment to age 15, has been developed.(41) Research did not find information indicating whether the revised Labor Code had been approved in 2015.

Beninese children are required to attend only 6 years of primary school, through age 11.(1, 42) Since the minimum age for children to work is 14, children ages 12 and 13 are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they may have completed primary school but are not legally permitted to work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Benin took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, Ministry of Labor personnel were employed in 12 departments across Benin to ensure the application of labor laws, including those on child labor.(32) In November, the Ministry of Labor hired 31 additional labor inspectors, 25 labor controllers, and 5 labor administrators.(32) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, the Government of Benin should employ approximately 92 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(44-46) The labor inspectorate lacks material and financial resources to effectively conduct inspections.(2, 6) There is no formal or informal mechanism to coordinate enforcement actions between the Ministry of Labor and Civil Service and the Ministry of Interior's Central Office for the Protection of Minors (OCPM).(47) Additionally, UNICEF reports that child rights laws, including child labor laws, are often not enforced.(48)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Benin took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the Government of Benin worked with UNICEF to provide training to 60 press and radio journalists on child labor and human trafficking.(23) The Government also collaborated with Terre des Hommes to train police officers, social assistants, journalists, and local NGOs in Benin on the identification and reintegration of migrant children and to provide similar trainings for community workers both in Benin and in Nigeria.(23) In 2015, senior police officials learned about child trafficking as part of their police academy training, and judges and other officials in charge of child protection participated in anti-trafficking in persons trainings in Benin or abroad.(23)

The Government does not maintain comprehensive records of criminal enforcement for all agencies. OCPM reported handling 49 child trafficking cases and 12 exploitive child labor cases in 2015, involving 12 suspected traffickers.(23) OCPM also reported rescuing and providing shelter to 131 child trafficking victims in 2015.(23, 32). Additionally, in 2015, gendarmes arrested a trafficker for bringing two girls to a village in Nigeria to work as domestic servants.(23) Despite these efforts, OCPM remained understaffed; underfunded; and without adequate office supplies, transportation, and fuel to enforce laws effectively and to provide victims with immediate assistance.(2, 6, 32) The police lacked the transportation resources to investigate human trafficking cases and the tools with which to maintain database records.(23) Court officials were also unable to maintain database records on trafficking in persons and lacked the personnel and infrastructure to efficiently prosecute cases.(23)

In 2015, the Ministry of Family developed an integrated database to include information that would allow for the identification of children in need of special protection and information related to violence against women and children.(23)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor	Provide policy guidance; approve programs; and coordinate, monitor, and evaluate efforts to combat child labor in Benin.(4, 6) Led by the Ministry of Labor and Civil Service. Comprises delegates from multiple Beninese ministries, UNICEF, ILO, trade unions, and NGOs.(4, 22, 41) In 2015, the National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor met once to coordinate and evaluate existing child labor programs in Benin.(47)
National Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection (CNSCPE)	Implement, coordinate, and monitor government efforts on child protection. Chaired by MFSN and comprises five technical committees, including a committee for human trafficking and labor exploitation.(41) Each committee has an action plan and proposes activities to the CNSCPE.(50) Includes 40 members from sector-based ministries, NGO networks, international technical and financial partners, and bilateral partners.(50, 51) The CNSCPE did not meet during the reporting period.(23)
Departmental Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection	Coordinate, monitor, and evaluate efforts on child protection at the departmental level. Comprises six departmental committees that identify child protection activities. Compile and analyze the data gathered and report it to the CNSCPE.(12, 52)
National Commission on Children's Rights	Coordinate and promote efforts on children's rights at the national level. Chaired by the Ministry of Justice. Comprises delegates from multiple other ministries and representatives of civil society groups, who are appointed by the Minister of Justice.(6)Met during the reporting period.(53)

The mandates of the National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor, the National Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection, and the National Commission on Children's Rights overlap and are a source of confusion.(6, 48) In addition, although there is an information management system at the national level, data are rarely analyzed or used to affect implementation on the ground.(48, 53)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Benin has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NAP) in Benin (2012–2015)	Aims to improve child labor by conducting awareness-raising campaigns; increasing access to education and training; reducing socioeconomic vulnerabilities through livelihood strategies; increasing enforcement efforts; strengthening protection and monitoring measures for victims of exploitive child labor; and harmonizing the legal sector by ensuring that judges, police officers, and labor inspectors have access to and understand pertinent laws related to child labor.(4, 54) The Government publicized and disseminated NAP and began work to harmonize legislation related to the worst forms of child labor.(41, 55) The Ministries of Labor, Justice, and Family and National Solidarity conduct activities under NAP that are also included in each ministry's 2015 activity plans.(55)
Bipartite Declaration to Combat Child Labor Between the Government of Benin and the Beninese Worker Associations	Pledges to promote efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor and to collaborate at all levels with all parties concerned with combating child labor.(56)
Action Plan to Eradicate Child Exploitation in Markets	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the major markets of Benin, including Dantokpa in Cotonou, Ouando in Porto-Novo, and Arzèkè in Parakou, and to strengthen child labor laws, raise awareness of child labor in markets, and create social programs for children rescued from labor exploitation in the targeted markets.(57, 58)
Benin and Nigeria Joint Committee to Combat Child Trafficking	Aims to reinforce border security measures and repatriate victims of human trafficking between Benin and Nigeria.(59, 60)
Anti-Trafficking Accord Between the Republic of Benin and the Republic of the Congo	Targets the identification, prevention, and rehabilitation of cross-border trafficked children between Benin and the Republic of the Congo. Includes components for monitoring and evaluation, and for conducting cross-border investigations.(61, 62)
National Policy for Child Protection (2014–2025)	Aims to improve child protection in Benin. Includes components to improve school feeding programs and to combat the worst forms of child labor, with a focus on child trafficking.(57, 63) Implemented by MFSN.(57, 63)
Decent Work Country Program (2010–2015)	Identifies three objectives of decent work: (1) promoting social dialogue, (2) creating jobs and guaranteeing rights at work for vulnerable populations, and (3) extending social protection.(64) Includes, as an outcome, improving the operational environment for the elimination of child labor and its worst forms. Led by the Ministry of Labor and Civil Service's Office of Labor and supported by the ILO.(64)
Education Sector Action Plan (2006–2015)*	Aims to reduce poverty and improve access to primary education, especially for girls. Overseen by the Ministry of Education.(65)
Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper PRSP (2011–2015)*	Aims to improve free universal primary education, education quality, student retention rates, provision of social services, and vocational training and microfinance for youth and women. Led by the Ministry of Development and Economic Analysis and supported by international donors.(66)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In 2015, the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Benin remained unfunded.(53, 57)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Benin funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Strengthening Social Dialogue as an Effective Tool to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012–2015)	Government of Ireland-funded, 3-year, $760,883 project to combat child labor through social dialogue.(67)

Program	Description
Irish Aid-ILO Partnership Program Phase II (2014–2015)	Government of Ireland-funded, 3-year, $798,913 project to combat child labor in stone-breaking. Aimed to improve decent working conditions for women in Benin's stone-breaking cooperatives and associations by providing equipment that is safer and more productive, thereby increasing women's earning potential and decreasing the need for child labor.(68, 69)
Understanding Children's Work–Action Against Child Labor (2015–2017)	Government of Canada-funded, 3-year, $334,106 project to combat child labor by supporting data collection and policy efforts related to children's work and youth employment.(70)
MFSN Social Promotion Centers†	Government program that provides food, shelter, education, and vocational training to vulnerable children, including victims of labor exploitation. MFSN operates 85 centers located throughout the country, which provided services to 131 trafficking victims in 2015.(2, 6, 22)
Transit Center for Children	OCPM facility used as interim care facility for human trafficking survivors prior to their placement in a long-term shelter.(22, 41)
Awareness-raising campaigns†	Government-implemented human trafficking campaigns.(2)
Ministry of Mines' Social Servicest	Business management training offered to families, particularly women, involved in mining and quarrying. Also, protection equipment, including boots and gloves, provided to mining craftsman in three cities.(41, 57)
Vocational School Program for Survivors of Child Trafficking†	MFSN program, implemented with UNICEF. Maintains a vocational school program to train survivors of child trafficking in a trade.(41, 53)
Benin Global Partnership for Education Program (2014–2017)	Approximately $42.3-million, World Bank-funded project that aims to improve access and equity to quality basic education in highly impoverished districts in Benin. Primary completion rate in targeted districts increased to 52.5 percent in 2015 from 40.4 percent in 2011.(71)
Second Chance Schools (2013–2015)	USAID-funded, $3.5-million, 4-year project, which ended in October, 2015. Promoted alternative approaches to basic education by providing out-of-school children with basic literacy, numeracy, and life skills.(53, 72, 73)

† Program is funded by the Government of Benin.

Although the Government of Benin has implemented programs to protect children from human trafficking and participated in programs focused on child labor in quarrying and mining, research found no evidence that the Government has conducted programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, or agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Benin (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Create meaningful penalties for human trafficking crimes involving labor exploitation.	2014 – 2015
	Raise the compulsory education age to be equivalent to the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Provide training on the worst forms of child labor to labor law enforcement officials.	2013 – 2015
	Increase resources, the number of labor inspectors, and criminal investigators to enforce laws against child labor and provide immediate victim assistance.	2009 – 2015
	Make publicly available information on labor inspection funding; the number and type of labor inspections conducted; whether routine inspections are targeted; and the number of labor and criminal law inspections and investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penalties related to child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating routine inspections rather than performing inspections solely based on complaints received.	2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Establish a mechanism to coordinate enforcement actions between labor and criminal law enforcement agencies.	2015
	Increase the resources available to law enforcement officials to efficiently track child labor cases.	2015
Coordination	Ensure the Departmental Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection carries out its responsibilities related to the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2015
	Take measures to coordinate efforts at the national level to eliminate duplicative activities, committees, and actors at the local level.	2013 – 2015
	Analyze the data received from national information management systems and disseminate results nationwide.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Fund and implement the NAP.	2010 – 2015
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Education Sector Action Plan and the PRSP.	2010 – 2015
Social Programs	Increase access to education by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Eliminating school-related fees, ■ Ensuring school administrators and teachers allow children without birth certificates to attend school, ■ Taking measures to ensure children with disabilities have access to regular schools, and ■ Ensuring the safety of children in schools. 	2010 – 2015
	Institute programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and agriculture, and monitor the progress of these programs.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies"; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Bhutan made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government increased its funding for the labor inspectorate and provided law enforcement information for the first time. Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Bhutan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work. Bhutan's minimum age for work is inconsistent with international standards and education is not compulsory. The Government has not established a coordination mechanism to address child labor, including its worst forms. Criminal law enforcement agencies did not provide any data on actions taken to combat the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Bhutan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bhutan. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	3.8 (6,338)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	84.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	3.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		97.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(2)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* activities unknown (1, 4-6)
Industry	Construction,*† activities unknown (1)
Services	Domestic work (1, 4-7)
	Work in shops,* restaurants,* hotel service,* and automobile repair* (1, 5)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 7-9)
	Forced labor in karaoke bars,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (9, 10)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (9)
	Use in illicit activities, including the smuggling of tobacco* (5)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

There is a lack of current data on child labor in Bhutan. To date, no national survey on child labor has been conducted. There have been reports that some children who work and live in third-party residences are not allowed to return home.(8) It is reported that young girls are subject to forced labor in karaoke bars. Evidence suggests that some girls are trafficked from rural areas to sing in karaoke bars, where they are subject to commercial sexual exploitation.(9) It is also reported that children from Bhutan are subject to forced labor and sex trafficking in India.(9)

Bhutan

The Government provides free education to all Bhutanese citizens; however, children living in remote villages face significant difficulties in accessing public schools, which may increase their vulnerability to labor exploitation.(11)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bhutan has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	N/A
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	13	Sections 170 and 171 of the Labor and Employment Act; Section 7 of the Regulation on Acceptable Forms of Child Labor (12, 13)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Sections 170 and 171 of the Labor and Employment Act (12)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Section 9 of the Labor and Employment Act; Section 9 of the Regulation on Acceptable Forms of Child Labor (13)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Sections 3 and 9(a) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 154, 227, and 379 of the Penal Code; Section 221 of the Child Care and Protection Act (12, 14, 15)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 9(a) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 221 and 224 of the Child Care and Protection Act; Sections 227, 379, and 380 of the Penal Code (12, 14, 15)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Section 9(b) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 222–224 of the Child Care and Protection Act; Sections 225, 375–380 of the Penal Code (12, 14, 15)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 9(c) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 216 and 220 of the Child Care and Protection Act (12, 15)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Legislative title unknown (16)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 9.16 of the Constitution of the Kingdom of Bhutan (17)

* No conscription (17)

Bhutanese law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor because the Labor and Employment Act allows children under age 14 to work.(12)

The law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, as the possession of child pornography is not criminally prohibited.(15)

Bhutan has no compulsory age for education. The lack of standards in this area may increase the risk of children's involvement in child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Resources (MOLHR)	Investigate child labor complaints and ensure employers comply with child labor laws. Refer cases involving the worst forms of child labor to the police.(18)
Royal Bhutan Police	Investigate and enforce criminal laws relating to the worst forms of child labor.(19) Refer abused and exploited children to child welfare officers and the National Commission for Women and Children (NCWC).(15, 20)
Women and Child Protection Unit	Enforce laws protecting women and children as a separate unit in the Royal Bhutan Police.(1, 21) Refer abused and exploited children to child welfare officers and NCWC.(15, 20)
Child Welfare Officers	Protect and assist children in difficult circumstances, including children abused and exploited for illegal purposes.(15)
Royal Court of Justice	Adjudicate criminal and civil cases, including violations involving children.(22)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Bhutan did take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, the UNODC and the National Commission for Women and Children began developing standard operating procedures for law enforcement interventions in human trafficking cases and providing services for trafficking victims.(24)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism for protecting the rights of exploited children, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
NCWC	Coordinate the implementation of policies involving abused and exploited women and children. Advise the Government on legislation and policies for the protection of women and children. (27) Comprises a chairperson and commissioners who represent relevant government agencies and non-government sectors.(25)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bhutan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
UNDAF Bhutan One Program (2014–2018)*	Serves as a framework for supporting Bhutan's national development goals that target the poor and disadvantaged. Includes initiatives to prevent and respond to violence, abuse, exploitation, and neglect of children.(26, 27)
National Plan of Action for Child Protection*	Develops strategies to establish a comprehensive child protection system, including passing new legislation, improving service delivery, increasing human resource capacity, instituting coordination mechanisms, increasing communication and advocacy, and collecting data and information.(28)
National Youth Policy*	Provides a framework to promote youth development, including increased access to education, training, employment, and financial services. Targets out-of-school youth, domestic workers, and girls working in karaoke bars.(29)
National Education Policy*	Specifies the Government's education policy regarding curriculum, admission procedures, student health and safety, career counseling, and non-formal education.(30)
Eleventh 5-Year Plan (2013–2018)*	Establishes the strategic framework for increasing economic development, reducing youth unemployment, improving the quality of education, and curbing corruption.(31)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Bhutan funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project Hope†	NCWC program that provides residential shelters for children at risk of exploitative child labor. Targets children on the street and provides them with counseling, group therapy, and assistance enrolling in school.(18)
Trafficking Victims Shelter†	Respect, Education, Nurture, and Empower Women (RENEW), a Thimphu-based NGO, receives government funding to provide shelter, counseling, and rehabilitation for women and child trafficking victims.(18)
Enhance Government and Civil Society Responses to Counter Trafficking in Persons	UNODC and Government program that seeks to increase capacity to combat human trafficking. Includes six components: (1) enforce anti-human trafficking laws; (2) train criminal law enforcement officers on victim identification, investigation, and prosecution; (3) formalize a standard operating protocol for investigating cases of human trafficking; (4) train law enforcement personnel on victim treatment and reintegration; (5) establish transit homes for human trafficking victims; and (6) develop campaigns to raise public awareness of human trafficking issues.(32) Held a workshop in Siliguri, India, in May 2015 to sensitize officials in India and Bhutan to cross-border trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation and labor exploitation.(33, 34)
Child Protection System Strengthening	UNICEF program that works to strengthen Bhutan's child protection system through capacity-building training. Supports the implementation of the National Plan of Action for Child Protection.(35)
Improving Rural Children's Access to Basic Education With Focus on Primary Education	$8.58 million WFP-funded program that provides financial support to rural primary schools.(36) Aims to increase primary school enrollment, retention, and graduation by providing school breakfasts and lunches. Implemented in 232 schools across the country, reaches 37,000 children annually and supports school construction and kitchen improvements.(18, 36)
Rural Economy Advancement Program†	Government program that develops sustainable livelihoods in Bhutan's 126 poorest villages by diversifying crop cultivation, providing skills development training, and building collaborative groups.(31)
National Rehabilitation Program†	Office of the Secretariat program that assists landless, socially and economically disadvantaged groups by providing land, shelter, and food support; health and education services; and capacity building for sustainable livelihoods.(31)

† Program is funded by the Government of Bhutan.

The Government of Bhutan has implemented programs that target children at risk for exploitative labor and child victims of human trafficking, but no information is available about programs that target specific sectors, such as agriculture and domestic service. No information is available on social programs that target children involved in the worst forms of child labor, including domestic servitude, forced labor in karaoke bars, and commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bhutan (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that the laws on child labor comply with the international standard of the minimum age for work.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that the law prohibits the possession of child pornography.	2015
	Make primary education compulsory and harmonized with the minimum age for work.	2010 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that the MOLHR has the resources and training necessary to enforce labor laws and to combat child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Institutionalize training for new and veteran investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking and sexual exploitation.	2015
	Publish data on the number and training of investigators and on the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions of crimes involving the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2015
Coordination	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2014 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing social protection policies.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct a national child labor survey.	2013 – 2015
	Implement programs to make education more accessible for children living in remote locations.	2014 – 2015
	Create social programs targeting working children, particularly in agriculture, and children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including forced domestic work.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Bolivia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Bolivia is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a law that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Bolivia's Child and Adolescent Code, passed in 2014, allows children as young as 10 years old to be self-employed under certain conditions. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by adopting the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons, increasing the number of labor inspectors from 95 to 97, and dedicating 10 of these inspectors to investigating child labor in high-risk areas. Children in Bolivia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and in the harvesting of sugarcane. The Offices of the Child Advocate, required by the Child and Adolescent Code to authorize child work and assist victims of child labor, are absent or underfunded in many municipalities, leaving some children unprotected and vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The Government also lacks a comprehensive child labor policy.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bolivia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and in the harvesting of sugarcane.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bolivia.

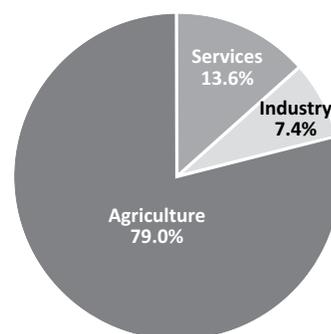

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	7-14 yrs.	20.2 (355,206)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	93.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	18.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		96.0

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting and harvesting corn, cotton,* and peanuts* (5-10)
	Production and harvesting of Brazil nuts/chestnuts† and sugarcane† (8, 9, 11-16)
	Ranching and raising cattle*† (7, 9)
	Plucking chickens* (16)
Industry	Mining† of gold, silver, tin, and zinc (1, 6, 14-16)
	Construction,† including heavy lifting and shoveling (12, 16, 17)
	Production of bricks† (6, 7, 16, 18-20)

	Domestic work† (7, 16, 21, 23)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in ranching* and in the production and harvesting of Brazil nuts and sugarcane (15, 24-26)
	Forced labor in mining and domestic service (8, 21, 25)
	Forced begging (2, 25, 27)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (25, 27, 28)
	Forced to commit illicit activities, including robbery* and producing drugs* (25, 27)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children produce and harvest sugarcane and Brazil nuts principally in the departments of Beni, Pando, Santa Cruz, and Tarija, although recent efforts to combat this practice and other factors have reportedly reduced the prevalence of child labor in these sectors.(1, 9, 12, 15) Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(27, 29) Some indigenous Guaraní families live in debt bondage and work on ranches, including in raising cattle, in the Chaco region.(5, 8, 12, 26) Based on reports, this practice may have been reduced in recent years due in part to increased attention to the region and land tenure reform.(12) Indigenous children are also particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation.(25) Bolivian children have been trafficked to Argentina, where they are vulnerable to forced labor in the production of textiles and in agriculture.(26, 28, 30)

The Child and Adolescent Code, promulgated on July 17, 2014, mandates that a national child labor survey be conducted by the Bolivian National Institute of Statistics as part of the creation of the new Program for the Prevention and Social Protection of Children and Adolescents. The law mandates that this Program be designed by July 2016 and implemented by July 2019.(31) In 2015, the Ministry of Labor (MOL), with funding from UNICEF and the ILO, conducted child labor research in the following sectors: domestic work, Brazil nuts, mining, sugarcane, and self-employment. The Government reports that the results of these studies will be published in 2016.(2)

Bolivian law requires children to attend school up to age 17. However, attendance rates for secondary education are low, particularly in rural areas and often because children work.(2, 29, 32)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bolivia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Articles 8 and 58 of the General Labor Law; Article 129 of the Child and Adolescent Code (31, 33)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 58 and 59 of the General Labor Law; Articles 5 and 136 of the Child and Adolescent Code (31, 33)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 136 of the Child and Adolescent Code (31)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 15, 46, and 61 of the Constitution; Article 291 of the Penal Code; Article 34 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (34-36)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 15 of the Constitution; Article 34 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (34, 36)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 34 and 35 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (36)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 56 of the Law on Coca and Controlled Substances (37)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	17	Articles 108 and 249 of the Constitution; Article 1 of Supreme Decree No. 1875; Article 1 of Supreme Decree No. 21479 (34, 38, 39)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	16*	Articles 1 and 2 of the General Directive of Pre-Military Recruitment; Articles 2 and 7 of the Law of National Military Service (40, 41)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17‡	Article 81 of the Constitution; Articles 1, 8, 9 and 11–14 of the Avelino Siñani-Elizardo Pérez Education Law (34, 42)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 17 and 81 of the Constitution; Article 1 of the Avelino Siñani-Elizardo Pérez Education Law; Article 115 of the Child and Adolescent Code (31, 34, 42)

* The minimum age for combat is 18 per Article 36 of the Law of National Military Service.(40)

‡ Age calculated based on available information.

The 2014 Child and Adolescent Code specifies the conditions under which children may work in addition to providing a number of other protections.(31) While the regulations for this law have not yet been published, its provisions that define the minimum age for work do not conform to international standards.(43) Article 129(1) of the Child and Adolescent Code establishes the minimum age for work at 14 years, which is in harmony with Article 58 of the General Labor Law.(31, 33) However, Article 129(2) of the Child and Adolescent Code allows children as young as 10 years old to work in self-employment upon authorization by the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate, provided that this work does not adversely affect the child's health or education, and only upon consent of a parent or guardian and after successful medical and psychological evaluations.(31) Allowing children as young as 10 years old to work may affect their schooling, which in Bolivia is compulsory to age 17.(42, 43) The ILO Committee of Experts has called upon the Government to amend Article 129 of the Child and Adolescent Code to set the minimum age for work, including in self-employment, at 14 years.(43)

Article 129(2) of the Child and Adolescent Code also permits children as young as 12 to work for third parties following the same process of authorization.(31) While ILO C. 138 allows children as young as 12 to engage in light work under certain circumstances, Bolivian law does not specify a list of activities that are permissible for light work, or the number of hours children are permitted to work in these activities pursuant to ILO C. 138.(31)

Apprenticeships in Bolivia are regulated by Articles 28–30 and Article 58 of the General Labor Law, which requires that apprentices attend school. However, the General Labor Law does not set a minimum age for participation in apprenticeships.(33, 44)

Articles 108 and 249 of the Constitution require Bolivian males to perform compulsory military service in accordance with national law.(34) Article 1 of Supreme Decree No. 1875, passed in 2014, lowered the minimum age at which compulsory military service

Bolivia

may begin from 18 years, as previously established by Supreme Decree No. 21479, to 17 years.(38, 39) Under Article 2 of the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict, to which Bolivia acceded in 2004, state parties must ensure that children under 18 may not be compulsorily recruited into their armed forces.(45-47)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws, in part through its Fundamental Rights Unit, which also addresses forced labor involving indigenous peoples.(48) Conduct labor inspections, including child labor-specific investigations, in areas of national priority that include the sugarcane-producing areas of Santa Cruz and Tarija, the Brazil nut-producing areas of Riberalta and Beni, and the mining areas of Potosí.(16) Assess fines for labor law infractions and refer cases to the Labor Courts for adjudication and remuneration of unpaid wages. Engage municipal Offices of the Child Advocate to ensure the protection of children's rights and welfare.(16, 49) Maintain a national registry to track employment agencies engaged in the illegal recruitment and trafficking of children.(50) Assist in the implementation of the Child and Adolescent Code, including in the authorization of children's work for third parties from the age of 14.(16, 31)
Municipal Offices of the Child Advocate	Authorize children from the age of 10 to work in exceptional cases and register them in the Government's Child and Adolescent Information System (SINNA), pursuant to the Child and Adolescent Code. Protect the rights and welfare of children, often in consultation with NGOs, as well as refer criminal child labor cases to prosecutors.(16, 31) Accompany child labor inspectors in their investigations and refer children rescued from child labor for services.(16, 31)
Attorney General's Office	Oversee all human trafficking investigations and prosecutions.(28) Oversee through its National Coordinator's Office regional prosecutors who, in conjunction with the Bolivian National Police, pursue cases of human trafficking for sexual and labor exploitation. Maintain a database of human trafficking cases through its Coordinator of Specialized Units for the Prosecution of Human Trafficking and Smuggling, Sexual Crimes, and Gender-Based Violence.(28)
Ministry of Justice	Oversee the implementation of the Child and Adolescent Code. Create and administer SINNA, in which municipal Offices of the Child Advocate register young workers who are authorized to engage in self-employment or work for third parties, as required by the Child and Adolescent Code.(31)
Bolivian National Police	Maintain the Special Force in the Fight against Crime (FELCC) which, through its Division of Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons, runs 15 specialized human trafficking units to investigate trafficking crimes and coordinate anti-trafficking efforts.(16, 51) Maintain the Police Unit for Migratory Control and Assistance to address trafficking issues through migratory control efforts, in part through the patrol of national borders.(51, 52) Victims of human trafficking are referred by these units to departmental Social Service Agencies (SEDEGES) or municipal Offices of the Child Advocate.(53)
Bolivian Armed Forces	Support anti-trafficking efforts by collaborating with the Bolivian National Police to detect human trafficking and child labor issues in border-crossing areas, pursuant to article 38 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.(36, 50)

The Child and Adolescent Code requires the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate to authorize children ages 10 to 18 to engage in self-employment, and children ages 12 to 14 to work for third parties, both under certain conditions to ensure children's protection. The Code further requires the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate to register young workers in the Government's Child and Adolescent Information System (SINNA).(31) However, reports indicate that as many as 20 percent of municipalities in Bolivia lack an Office of the Child Advocate; many more are reported to lack adequate resources and the capacity to perform their mandate. This lack of institutional coverage may leave certain children particularly vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms.(16) In 2015, the Government reported that the MOL worked on drafting a standardized form for use by the Offices of the Child Advocate to authorize children to work.(49)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Bolivia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, the level of funding for the MOL's labor inspectorate was not publicly available. However, the MOL reported that its operating budget for child labor activities, excluding salaries, was approximately $10,000, and that its budget for the salaries of its 10 child labor dedicated inspectors was $112,000.(2) Reports indicate that the MOL's overall level of funding to inspect for child labor violations was inadequate.(2) Although the Government increased its number of labor inspectors from 95 to 97, including the 10 child labor dedicated inspectors, the number of labor inspectors is insufficient to inspect for child labor nationwide. According to the ILO's standard of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Bolivia should employ roughly 330 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(54-56)

During the reporting period, UNICEF and the MOL provided funding to send the MOL's labor inspectors to the Ministry of Education's Plurinational Public School, where they received routine training on hazardous child labor.(2)

In 2015, the number of general labor inspections, as well as information on the sectors and geographical regions in which they were conducted, was not publicly available. The MOL reported that it conducted 300 targeted child labor inspections with partial funding from UNICEF.(2) Child labor inspections were conducted primarily in the mining sector of the Potosí Department, the Brazil nut sector of the Beni Department, and the sugarcane sector of the Santa Cruz and Tarija Departments.(2) The MOL also reported that child labor inspections were conducted in restaurants in several urban areas.(2) Although this number of child labor inspections was higher than the 250 inspections conducted in 2014, reports indicate that the number of child labor inspections conducted in 2015 was inadequate to address the scope of the problem, particularly in rural and hard to reach areas.(49)

Research did not find any data on the number of children authorized to work by the Offices of the Child Advocate during the reporting period.(49) The Government reports that children who are removed from child labor are referred to the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate for services. However, information on the number of children removed and whether they received services, particularly in cases where an Office of the Public Advocate did not exist, was not publicly available.(16)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Bolivia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, the Bolivian National Police's Special Force in the Fight against Crime (FELCC) reported that officers received some training on trafficking in persons issues. However, research could not determine the extent to which trainings included other worst forms of child labor.(2)

In 2015, there were approximately 247 cases of human trafficking reported to the Bolivian National Police and 5 sentences issued for crimes of human trafficking. However, these statistics were not disaggregated to distinguish between adult and child victims, and reports could not confirm if all sentences were carried out.(57)

Children identified in the worst forms of child labor, including through criminal investigations, are registered by the Prosecutor's Office when the case is classified as a crime; if the case is not classified as a crime, children are registered by the Offices of the Child Advocate. Reports indicate that coordination between the Attorney General's Office and the Offices of the Child Advocate is often limited.(49) Children rescued from the worst forms of child labor are often not referred for social services because there are few government-run shelters. Although there are some private shelters and religious organizations that receive victims of the worst forms of child labor, referrals from, and coordination with, government agencies is limited.(2)

Some Government agencies reported that funding levels were inadequate and that they sometimes lacked fuel to conduct investigations.(2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinate national efforts to address child labor issues. Includes the MOL, and the Ministries of Justice, Education, and Planning, as well as several NGOs.(16)
Steering Committee for Zero Child Labor in Sugarcane Production	Coordinate efforts to eliminate child labor in sugarcane production. Formed with support from the MOL and the participation of the regional government of Santa Cruz, Bolivian municipal governments, the Bolivian Foreign Trade Institute, and various NGOs.(13)
Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (Plurinational Council)	Serve as the highest national body to lead and coordinate anti-trafficking efforts. Implement the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling, in part through its Plurinational Policy to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons (2013–2017).(36, 51, 58) Chaired by the Minister of Justice and comprising representatives from eight other ministries, including the MOL, as well as the Public Advocate and representatives from NGOs.(51)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking and Smuggling	Coordinate efforts of the Plurinational Council in each of Bolivia's nine departments. Comprised of department-level officials from the FELCC, the Ministries of Labor, Migration, and Education, the Human Rights Ombudsman, and representatives from NGOs.(16, 36, 58)
Directorate General for the Fight against Trafficking and Smuggling	Assist in the coordination of national policy on human trafficking issues. Established under the Ministry of Government's Vice Ministry for Citizen Security, pursuant to the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.(36, 51)
Inter-Ministerial Team	Assist in the development of a National Labor Plan for 2014–2018. Created by MOL in 2013 with representation from the Ministries of Justice, Health, Education, and Government.(50)

The National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor, led by the MOL, has been increasingly inactive, and many Government agencies and NGOs agree that its central coordinating role has lapsed.(2, 16) Reports also indicate that some of the MOL's departmental sub-commissions on child labor have not been active, due in part to a lack of resources.(2, 16) In addition, some reports indicate that child labor coordination efforts between departmental sub-commissions and municipal agencies have been strained due to differences among political parties.(16)

In 2015, the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (Plurinational Council) met several times to implement national policies and laws on human trafficking.(2) The Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling mandates that the Plurinational Council include the participation of NGOs. However, reports indicate that NGOs have not been able to participate fully in the Plurinational Council despite their efforts for inclusion.(51)

The Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling requires each of Bolivia's nine departments to create Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking and Smuggling to advance anti-trafficking efforts on the department level.(36) Reports indicate that some Department-Level Councils had yet to develop department-level plans to combat human trafficking, as mandated by the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.(2, 16, 36, 58)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bolivia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Plurinational Policy to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons (2013–2017)	Sets national priorities on combating human trafficking and smuggling, including that of children, pursuant to the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling. Contains five core areas that set agendas for government efforts and programs, including the prevention of trafficking, the remediation and reintegration of survivors, the prosecution of criminal violations, the strengthening of national coordination mechanisms, and international cooperation.(58, 59) Published by the Plurinational Council.(58, 60)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons (2015–2019)†	Establishes eight lines of action drawn from the five core areas of the Plurinational Policy to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons, including: raising awareness of trafficking and smuggling of persons, developing interagency mechanisms for victim reintegration, monitoring employment agencies to prevent trafficking in persons, strengthening capacities of law enforcement and administrative agencies to investigate and prosecute trafficking, strengthening inter-governmental relations to combat trafficking, conducting research to inform policies on combating trafficking, and fostering the implementation of the Plurinational Policy to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons.(61) Formulated and approved by the Plurinational Council in 2015.(61)
Patriotic Agenda 2025*†	Sets national development priorities and objectives for 2025, including the eradication of extreme poverty, universal access to education, and multicultural integration.(2, 62, 63)
XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor†	Promotes decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancún, Mexico, participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancún 2015 which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(64, 65) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(64, 66)

Bolivia

Policy	Description
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Bolivia at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(67-69)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Bolivia's national policy for addressing child labor, the National Plan for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor (2000–2010), expired in 2010. The Plan identified mining, sugarcane harvesting, commercial sexual exploitation, and domestic service as priority areas in combating exploitative child labor.(70) A new plan was not established during the reporting period.(2, 44)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Bolivia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Juancito Pinto Subsidy Program†	Government program that provides a conditional cash transfer to all primary school students to increase school attendance and reduce the dropout rate.(53) Limited evidence suggests the program contributed to increased school attendance and reduced dropout rates.(16, 53) Provides students with a yearly subsidy of approximately $28 if the student maintains an attendance rate of at least 75 percent.(16, 53) In 2015, program assisted 2,228,907 students with a budget of $65 million.(49)
Ñaupajman Puriy Kereimba (ÑPK): Combating Exploitive Child Labor in Bolivia: Phase II (2010–2014)	$6-million USDOL-funded, 4-year project, implemented by Desarrollo y Autogestión (DyA) that worked to reduce the worst forms of child labor by improving educational and livelihood opportunities for families in the departments of Chuquisaca, La Paz, and Santa Cruz.(7, 71) Assisted 3,100 children and 1,300 households in both urban and rural areas. Collaborated with the Ministry of Education to expand the Leveling Program. Closed in early 2015.(7, 71)
Human Rights of Children and Adolescents in Sugarcane Harvesting, Brazil Nut Processing, and Mining†	Human Rights Ombudsman's Office program that promotes effective, sustainable policies and actions for the gradual elimination of the worst forms of child labor, along with labor and social protection for working adolescents between ages 14 and 17. Launched in April 2013 in Bermejo (Tarija), Cerro Rico (Potosi), and Riberalta (Beni).(72) Expanded in 2014 to monitor the use of child labor in sugarcane harvesting in the Department of Santa Cruz, where inspections found that more than 80 percent of the audited plantations no longer use child labor.(73)
Leveling Program	Ministry of Education directive that requires all public schools to offer an accelerated education "leveling" program so that children who are falling behind in school because they work can catch up.(74, 75) With DyA assistance, municipalities and district education departments of Camiri, El Alto, Mojocoya, Pailon, and San Julian have plans of action, timetables and the resources to operate the leveling, multi-grade, after-school, and technical high school programs.(76)
Combating Hazardous Work through Educational Competency (2012-2015)	ILO-funded 5-year project implemented by the Center for Multifaceted Educational Services that aims to reduce children's engagement in hazardous child labor through educational programs focused on personal and professional development. Since 2012, program has assisted 1,260 youth ages 14 to 18 in El Alto, La Paz, and in rural communities in the Department of Sucre, and trained 84 teachers.(2, 77)
Ministry of Education/ Plurinational Public Management School (Escuela de Gestión Pública Plurinacional , EGPP)	EGPP training program required for public officials, including from the MOL and the Ministry of Education, that prepares them for public service. Contains a child labor module developed in collaboration with the ÑPK project, which is a permanent part of the program.(76, 78) In 2015, the EGPP, with funding from the MOL and UNICEF, trained MOL inspectors.(2) In addition, the MOL collaborated with the EGPP and UNICEF to develop an online Masters degree program that enables any public servant to study child labor issues. The Masters program has yet to be fully implemented.(2)
Bolivian Foreign Trade Institute's Triple Seal Initiative (El Instituto Boliviano de Comercio Exterior Triple Sello)	MOL collaboration with the Bolivian Institute of Standardization and Quality, UNICEF, and the ILO to develop a voluntary certification program to recognize companies that comply with Bolivian law and ILO conventions on child labor, forced labor, and worker discrimination in the production of their goods. (13, 16, 53, 79) In Santa Cruz, Triple Seal Alliance works to diminish child labor under the joint UNICEF and Departmental Government of Santa Cruz Let's Team Up (Hagamos Equipo) Campaign.(80) In 2015, an additional sugar producer, UNAGRO, obtained the Triple Seal Certification.(2)

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Trafficking Awareness-Raising Campaigns	Government program implemented with the Bolivian Network for the Fight Against Human Trafficking and Smuggling that conducts public awareness and education campaigns to educate the public, including youth and children, about the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling. Targeted more than 3,000 professionals including judicial administrators, members of the Public Ministry, public defenders, departmental SEDEGES officials, and civil society organizations.(30, 49) Under the program, the Plurinational Council partnered with UNICEF to publish a guide for children, youth, and adults explaining the new anti-TIP law. The partnership also created a children's cell phone game to teach children about the dangers of trafficking.(30, 49)
Student Documentation Program	Government's General Service of Personal Identification's Civil Registration Service program designed to provide documentation to 1.7 million undocumented students.(28)
UNICEF Bolivia Country Program (2013–2017)	Seeks to ensure the equitable provision of social services to children and protect children's rights, including increased access to and completion of education. Aims to provide special attention to indigenous children, including through the development of strategic policies and educational and professional programs.(81, 82)
Program to Protect the Rights of Children and Adolescents	Government collaboration with UNICEF in 17 Bolivian Brazil nut and sugarcane-producing municipalities to provide education assistance, with funding from the Government of Italy and the Swiss Cooperation Agency. Program seeks to improve living conditions of 2,300 families and reintegrate 3,400 children in school.(81) Established through the UNICEF Bolivia Country Program (2013-2017).(81)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Américas)	Conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(83-85)
Combating Child Labor through Skills Training for Older Children (2014 – 2015)	$2.6 million Government of the Netherlands-funded, 1-year, global project to combat child labor by enhancing access to decent work for children who have reached the minimum age of employment.(86)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011 – 2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Bolivia.(86)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012 – 2015)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 3-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in Latin America, including Bolivia. Includes the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(86)
Partnership Program to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor (2009 – 2017)	$3.7 million Government of Brazil-funded, 9-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to combat child labor in four countries, including Bolivia.(86)

† Program is funded by the Government of Bolivia.

Although Bolivia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem, particularly in the production of Brazil nuts and sugarcane, ranching and cattle raising, mining, domestic work and street work, and commercial sexual exploitation. While the Juancito Pinto subsidy program continues to expand, reports indicate that the $28 subsidy is insufficient to meaningfully cover costs associated with attending school, such as transportation and school supplies. For example, reports indicate that costs associated with attending school in rural Sucre may reach $141 per year, while costs in La Paz's sister city, El Alto, may reach as high as $410 per year.(2)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bolivia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that minimum age protections are extended to all children under 14 years, including in self-employment.	2014 – 2015
	Establish a list of occupations constituting light work, as well as the number of hours permitted in light work, for children ages 12 to 14.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure the law prohibits children under the age of 14 from participating in apprenticeships.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure the law establishes 18 as the minimum age for compulsory military recruitment.	2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Establish and maintain an Office of the Child Advocate in every municipality with sufficient resources to ensure that legal protections are extended to all children who are permitted to work and to coordinate the provision of services to children who are removed from child labor, including its worst forms.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that Offices of the Child Advocate publicly report on the number of children authorized to work and the number of children rescued from child labor and referred for social services.	2015
	Provide sufficient funding and training to increase the capacity of the MOL to ensure the effective enforcement of child labor laws.	2013 – 2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce, and ensure the number of labor inspections is adequate.	2013 – 2015
	Publicly report on whether the labor inspectorate is authorized to assess penalties.	2015
	Ensure that labor inspectors conduct inspections in all sectors and geographical areas.	2011 – 2015
	Collect and publicize statistics on child labor, including the overall number of labor inspections, the number of children found in child labor as a result of inspections, the number of violations found, and the number of penalties imposed and collected.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that all criminal investigators, including new employees, receive training on the worst forms of child labor, and make information about trainings publicly available.	2015
	Collect and publicize information about the number of criminal child labor investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and the penalties applied.	2013 – 2015
	Collect and publicize statistics on trafficking cases disaggregated by adults and children.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure there is a referral mechanism between criminal law enforcement agencies and social service providers.	2015
	Provide sufficient funding to criminal law enforcement agencies to ensure effective enforcement of laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Coordination	Ensure that the National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor fulfills its central coordinating role and develops concrete mechanisms to improve coordination among participating agencies and organizations.
Ensure that all the MOL's departmental sub-commissions designed to combat child labor convene and receive sufficient resources to carry out their functions.		2014 – 2015
Ensure that NGOs participate in the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling, as required by the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.		2014 – 2015
Ensure that all Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking are fully operational as required by the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.		2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Establish and implement a new National Plan for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor.	2010 – 2015
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Government's national development plan.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Expand national programs to increase secondary school attendance.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that there are adequate social services to assist victims of the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Increase the amount of the Juancito Pinto subsidy provided to school children to ensure they are able to cover the costs associated with attending school.	2014 – 2015
	Expand social programs to address the worst forms of child labor in areas where hazardous child labor exists, particularly in the production of Brazil nuts and sugarcane, ranching and cattle raising, mining, domestic work and street work, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
56. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Bosnia and Herzegovina made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the Action Plan for Children of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which calls for the improvement of coordination on addressing forced begging and other forms of child labor; the expansion of social services to children living and working on the street, and the improvement of birth registration rates in the Roma community. The State of Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) increased the penalties for individuals convicted of international trafficking of children. In addition, the State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons collaborated with the State-level Prosecutorial Training Center and the OSCE to develop curricula on human trafficking that can be used to train judges and prosecutors. However, children in Bosnia and Herzegovina are engaged in child labor, including in street work, particularly begging. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking.

The Government lacks a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms. In addition, the minimum age protections in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, and Brčko District labor codes do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside formal employment relationships.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the State of Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) are engaged in child labor, including in street work, particularly begging.(1-6) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking.(5, 7, 8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in BiH. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	8.9 (44,017)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	83.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

† Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Begging on the streets, often at busy intersections or near tourist attractions and religious institutions, is the most common form of child labor in BiH.(1, 2, 6, 14) Organized groups sometimes traffic groups of children to lucrative locations both domestically and internationally and force them to beg. For example, some Romani girls were forced into marriages in BiH and were then trafficked to Paris, France, where they were forced to pickpocket and steal for their BiH traffickers.(2, 8, 11, 15) BiH lacks recent, comprehensive data on the extent and nature of the worst forms of child labor in the country.(1, 6)

Children from the Roma community, the largest minority group in BiH, remain vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 2, 4-8, 11) The Roma custom of paid and arranged marriages between families has resulted in the exploitation of some Roma girls as domestic workers.(5, 7, 8, 11) Many Roma children are not enrolled in school, which increases their vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor.(5, 15-17) Sources indicate that Roma children face numerous obstacles to accessing education, including discrimination by teachers and peers, long traveling distances to schools, and the inability to afford appropriate clothing and food to eat during school hours.(13, 18, 19) Additionally, research found that discrimination against Roma children by school administrators has led to disproportionately high enrollment rates of Roma children in schools for children with intellectual disabilities.(5, 20)

Although the Government of BiH, in collaboration with the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and local NGO Vasa Prava, has made significant efforts to register undocumented individuals for citizenship, UNHCR estimates that approximately 60 people, primarily Roma, were still at risk of statelessness in the country during the reporting period.(5, 11) Children who lack identity documents may face barriers to accessing public education, which increases their vulnerability to engaging in child labor.(5, 15, 18, 21)

Children with disabilities also face barriers to accessing education, which may make them vulnerable to child labor. Although children with disabilities are required to attend class regularly, many schools are unable to provide accommodations for their disabilities.(5) While the number of school programs for children with disabilities is increasing, parents, particularly those of children with severe disabilities, often receive little support from the Government and are left to provide education for their own children.(5)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

BiH has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The State of BiH is a democratic republic with a bicameral parliament. Many governmental functions are the responsibility of two entities within the state, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) and Republika Srpska (RS), as well as the self-governing Brčko District.(5, 20)Criminal laws at the State, entity, and district levels regulate issues pertaining to the worst forms of child labor. The entities and the district are responsible for regulating labor issues.(22) BiH has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

‡ Age calculated based on available information.(34)

The entities of FBiH and RS and the BD all prohibit the employment of minors in activities that may be harmful to their health and moral development, including work conducted underwater, underground, and at night, with certain exceptions.(23-25) However, neither of the entities nor BD have enacted legislation that defines the types of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children in a manner that is comprehensive and specific enough to facilitate effective implementation of penalties for hazardous work violations and the removal of children from these situations.(37, 38)

BiH law prohibits international trafficking in persons for forced labor and sexual exploitation. In 2011, the Governments of BiH, the entities, and BD agreed that BiH law would be used in cases of international human trafficking, but that entity and BD laws should be adopted to cover domestic human trafficking.(28, 39) In 2015, this change was codified by amendment to Article 186 of the BiH Criminal Code, which prohibits trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation and forced labor. The amendment reflected that the BiH Criminal Code covers only international human trafficking.(6, 11, 28) Additionally, the amendment increased penalties for trafficking of people under 18 years of age from a minimum of 5 years to a minimum of 10 years of imprisonment. (6, 11, 28) In 2013, RS and BD adopted amendments to their criminal codes to prohibit all forms of human trafficking and to ensure that convicted violators of these laws receive a sentence of at least 5 years of imprisonment, thereby harmonizing RS and BD laws with BiH law. In 2016, the FBiH amended the law to criminalize all forms of human trafficking, but this law was not effective during the reporting period.(26) As a result, during the reporting period, the FBiH did not have a law criminalizing domestic human trafficking.(6, 8)

The Criminal Codes of BiH, FBiH, RS, and BD prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children through legal provisions that forbid incitement to prostitution, forced prostitution, and turning a person over to a third party for the purpose of prostitution. Despite these protections, some areas consider juvenile prostitution a misdemeanor, which may result in minors engaged in commercial sexual exploitation being charged with a crime.(5, 40, 41) The law does not sufficiently prohibit the use of children for prostitution. The anti-trafficking amendment to the Criminal Code of BD penalizes the use of services provided by a child trafficked for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation, and the amended Criminal Code of RS penalizes the same offense if the perpetrator is aware that the child is a victim of human trafficking. Neither BD nor RS penalize the use of children who have not been trafficked for prostitution.(27, 30-31) The Criminal Code of FBiH does not prohibit the use of children for prostitution.(26, 28-31)

Laws related to illicit activities are not sufficient as the use of children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited in BiH.

Minimum age protections in FBiH, RS, and BD labor codes do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside formal employment relationships. This means that most children engaged in street work, the most common form of child labor, are not protected by the law.(1-6, 23-25)

The Framework Law on Primary and Secondary Education in Bosnia and Herzegovina makes primary education mandatory, beginning at age 6 and continuing for 9 years. As a result, children are typically 15 years old when they complete compulsory education.(34) Both RS and BD have passed additional legislation establishing 15 as the age at which compulsory education ends.(35, 36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
FBiH Ministry of Labor and Social Policy Federal Inspection Agency and Cantonal-Level Labor Inspectorates	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, in FBiH.(6, 42, 43)
RS Ministry of Labor and Veterans Labor Inspectorate	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, in RS.(6, 43)
BD Administrative Support Department	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, in BD.(6)
Entity and Cantonal-Level Police	Enforce criminal laws against human trafficking, forced labor, prostitution, and begging.(39)
Ministry of Security (MoS)	Enforce national policy to prevent the worst forms of child labor. Collect data on human trafficking.(42) Ensure that victims are placed in government-approved shelters.(42)
State Investigative and Protection Agency (SIPA) and State Border Police (SBP)	Investigate human trafficking crimes and enforce anti-trafficking laws across the entire country (SIPA).(39, 40, 42) Identify victims of human trafficking at the border (SBP).(40)
State, Entity, and FBiH Cantonal-Level Prosecutors' Offices	Prosecute human trafficking, forced labor, prostitution, and forced begging cases at their respective levels, based on applicable laws.(39, 40, 42)

Inspectors who find violations of the child labor law are allowed to assess administrative penalties or issue fines of up to $555.(6)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in BiH took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor, (Table 7).

The three police academies in BiH provide training, in cooperation with the International Center for Migration Policy Development, on combating human trafficking; this includes 5 hours of basic training for police officers, 10 hours of training for inspectors, and 1 week of training for investigators. In 2015, the International Center for Migration Policy Development also held two train-the-trainer workshops for law enforcement personnel on the practical application of educational materials on combating human trafficking.(11) Officials from the judiciary, prosecutor’s offices, Centers for Social Welfare, inspections agencies, and the Border Police also received training in order to assist the Government’s research efforts on combating human trafficking and protecting victims. Although law enforcement personnel received training on human trafficking during the reporting period, Government authorities continue to struggle with recognizing forced begging and forced labor as human trafficking issues.(11) Furthermore, a government official acknowledged that while judges and prosecutors receive some basic training on human trafficking through the Agency for Education and Training, more training is needed, especially on how to properly prosecute cases involving child begging as a result of human trafficking.(44, 47)

In 2015, police and prosecutors at various levels of the Government were responsible for investigating human trafficking crimes and compiling information about them through the multiagency Strike Force for Combating Trafficking in Persons and Organized Illegal Migration (Anti-Trafficking Strike Force). Labor inspectors are not part of the Anti-Trafficking Strike Force.(6) Authorities refer children detained for begging to appropriate social services providers. NGOs that receive funding from either the Ministry of Security or the Ministry for Human Rights and Refugees may provide shelter to these children.(6)

During the reporting period, the Government identified 16 child trafficking victims.(11) Of these victims, 13 were girls who were subjected to either forced servile marriage or forced begging, and three were boys who were engaged in forced begging.(11) BiH and French criminal law enforcement authorities received support from Eurojust to create the first-ever joint investigative team to respond to a case involving some Romani girls who were forced into marriages before being trafficked to Paris, France, where they were forced to pickpocket and steal for their BiH traffickers. This joint investigation resulted in the arrests of seven traffickers in BiH, mostly from the Zenica region, and 11 traffickers in France, all of whom were members of the same Roma clan.(11) The BiH Prosecutor’s Office issued its first-ever indictment against a BiH Government official, the Consul General at the BiH Embassy in Paris, on a charge of illegally issuing travel notes to more than 30 Roma women and girls returning to BiH, some of whom were the Romani girls who were trafficked to Paris and forced to pickpocket and steal, in exchange for financial compensation.(11) Through the National Referral Mechanism, some child victims may have been referred to Government-funded shelters, social welfare centers, or assistance programs.(20, 39, 42)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the Department of the State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department of the State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons (State Coordinator) within the Ministry of Security (MOS)	Coordinate human trafficking victim protection efforts among relevant ministries at the entity level, and among prosecutors at the state, entity, and local levels, and NGOs.(11, 40, 48) Oversee the human trafficking database, which includes data from NGOs, the State Investigative and Protection Agency (SIPA), the State Border Police (SBP), and police agencies and Prosecutors’ Offices at all levels.(39) Publish data from this database in its annual report on trafficking.(11) Oversee shelter management and monitor NGOs’ compliance with the agreed-upon provisions on victims’ assistance.(39) In 2015, the State Coordinator, in partnership with the International Forum on Solidarity, held four training sessions on combating trafficking for 120 members of the regional monitoring teams. The State Coordinator also collaborated with the State-level Prosecutorial Training Center, State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons, and the OSCE, to develop curricula that can be used to train judges and prosecutors.(11) The OSCE used this curricula to train nine judges and prosecutors, who will train their colleagues on this curricula in the future.(11)
Strike Force for Combating Trafficking in Persons and Organized Illegal Migration (Anti-Trafficking Strike Force)	Coordinate human trafficking investigations across government agencies.(11) Convene once a month, with additional meetings scheduled as needed.(11, 47) Chaired by the Chief State Prosecutor, includes the following agencies: BiH Prosecutor’s Office, State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons, Federation Prosecutor’s Office, RS Prosecutor’s Office, BD Prosecutor’s Office, Federation Ministry of Interior, RS Ministry of Interior, SIPA, BD Police, SBP, and Federation and RS Tax Administrations.(11, 42)

Inter-Ministerial Working Group	Monitor implementation of the Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings, the Action Plan, and the National Referral Mechanism.(11, 40) Comprises appointed representatives from the State and entity governments, including labor inspectors and elected representatives from NGOs active in anti-human trafficking.(3)
Regional Monitoring Teams	Facilitate coordination among State, entity, and cantonal-level institutions responsible for combating human trafficking, as well as coordination among NGOs and intergovernmental organizations. In 2015, there were Regional Monitoring Teams in Sarajevo, Mostar, Banja Luka, and Tuzla, all of which met regularly.(11, 20)

The Government of BiH maintains the Council for Children, which is responsible for coordinating children's issues among state-level agencies and institutions under the Action Plan for Children of BiH. Although the Council may address issues related to the worst forms of child labor, research did not find evidence that it functions as a mechanism to specifically coordinate efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor in BiH.(49, 50)

A source indicated the need for the Regional Monitoring Teams to improve their coordination efforts regarding the referral and protection of human trafficking victims.(11)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of BiH has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Counter Trafficking (2016–2019)†	In 2015, the Council of Ministers adopted this plan drafted by the State Coordinator and the Ministry of Human Rights and Refugees (MHRR). These bodies used recommendations from the evaluation of the previous plan's implementation and from relevant international monitoring mechanisms in order to create a structure that meets BiH's international obligations.(6, 11) The plan has five strategic goals, which include improving the provision of Government assistance to human trafficking victims, more efficiently prosecuting trafficking crimes, preventing trafficking in persons, and strengthening the collaboration and coordination among all stakeholders involved in combating human trafficking in BiH.(11)
Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings and Action Plan (2013–2015)	Focuses on comprehensive support, prevention, victim protection and assistance, criminal prosecution, and international cooperation. Follows international standards set by the Council of Europe Convention on Actions Against Trafficking in Human Beings and the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.(40, 51) Implemented and monitored by a team of representatives from the Ministry of Security, Ministry of Justice, MHRR, Ministry of Civil Affairs, High Judicial and Prosecutorial Council, and NGOs.(39, 48)
Action Plan for Child Protection and Prevention of Violence Against Children Through Information-Communications Technologies (2014–2015)	Aims to develop efficient mechanisms to protect children from exploitation in child pornography and other forms of sexual exploitation through information and communications technology. Includes 40 activities in the categories of legislation, institutional capacities and cooperation, and prevention.(52) Developed as part of BiH's commitments under the Global Alliance Against Child Sexual Abuse Online initiative.(3)
Action Plan for Children of BiH (2015–2018)*†	Based on recommendations from the Committee for the Rights of the Child and in response to the poorest results achieved while implementing previous Action Plans, this Action Plan for Children of BiH is designed to take a multidisciplinary approach that aims to continue improving the Government's efforts to protect children's rights.(53)
Decade of Roma Inclusion (2005–2015) and Action Plan (2013–2016)*	Aims to improve the socioeconomic status and social inclusion of Roma. Joint initiative of 12 European countries.(6)
Policy for the Protection of Children Deprived of Parental Care and Families at Risk of Separation in FBiH (2006–2016) and Action Plan (2013–2016)*	Calls for the development of social protection systems to provide sufficient protection to children without parental care and children separated from their parents.(7)
Council of Europe Action Plan for BiH (2015–2017)*†	Approved by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe in 2015, outlines a comprehensive strategy for cooperation efforts between the Government and the Council of Europe. Includes components designed to increase inclusivity and access to quality education for all children and decrease discrimination against Roma.(54)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government of BiH has adopted the National Action Plan to Counter Trafficking and the Action Plan for Child Protection and Prevention of Violence Against Children Through Information-Communications Technologies, research found no evidence of an overall policy to combat child labor or the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and illicit activities.(3, 6, 11, 52)

Some progress has been made toward improving conditions for the Roma population through the Decade of Roma Inclusion; however, sources indicate that the Government has not allocated adequate financial resources for effective implementation of inclusive education initiatives.(19, 55-57)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of BiH funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
MHRR Funding†	$2.1 million Roma assistance project funded by the MHRR and various donors and implemented by MHRR and 23 NGOs.(48) Aims to address issues related to housing, health care, and employment for Roma people.(46)
Registration Project	Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees-funded project, implemented by NGO Vasa Prava, that promotes registration of Roma people to increase their access to social benefits and to enable Roma children to enroll in schools.(11, 42, 58) Since its initiation in July 2009, has helped 1,300 Roma individuals to register for citizenship and has enabled 19,000 individuals to apply for social inclusion programs.(46, 49)
Daily Centers and Crisis Centers†	Center for Social Welfare-supported and NGO-operated long- and short-term day care centers for vulnerable children, especially those who live or work on the street.(40, 49) Provide direct assistance for children, including educational activities, counseling, food, and hygiene.(2, 16) Daily Centers operate in nine locations across the country. In four locations, NGOs also maintain Crisis Centers to provide protection to children found in exploitative labor situations who need emergency access to accommodation and social services.(14) In 2015, daily centers in Banja Luka, Tuzla, Mostar, Bijeljina, Bihac, and Sarajevo assisted 129 children at risk of human trafficking, most of whom were engaged in begging and other types of street work.(11)
Enhancing the Social Protection and Inclusion System for Children in BiH (2008–2015)	EU-funded program implemented by UNICEF, government ministries, and NGOs that seeks to improve social protection systems at all levels of Government, strengthen the capacity of government agencies to provide for social protection and inclusion of children, and enhance coordination and communication between providers of social services and the responsible authorities at the local level.(59)
Assistance for Trafficking Victims†	Government program that allocates small grants to local NGOs for the provision of shelter and social services to victims of human trafficking. In 2015, MHRR distributed $34,000 to assist domestic victims, while the Ministry of Security distributed $68,000 to assist foreign victims and allocated $5,681 for the commemoration of European Anti-Trafficking Day.(44) Services include counseling, educational assistance and job training for domestic victims, and providing visa and legal services for foreign victims of human trafficking.(44)
Implementation of the Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings (2013–2015)†	$409,630 USAID and Government-funded project to implement the new Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings. Activities include conducting research to estimate the extent of trafficking in the country, strengthening the capacity of institutions to investigate and prosecute cases of human trafficking and to assist victims, and raising public awareness of human trafficking issues in the framework of the Strategy.(39, 60) In 2015, the State Coordinator concluded the implementation of this program, which included 280 judges, prosecutors, law enforcement personnel, NGO workers, and journalists receiving training on human trafficking issues through regular regional monitoring and national referral meetings. The University of Sarajevo's Criminal Policy Research Center completed the comprehensive academic study on the scope of human trafficking in BiH, which the State Coordinator commissioned through this program.(11) This study will be translated into English. Additionally, the State Coordinator partnered with marketing agency BORAM, in partnerships with digital and print media, to carry out a nationwide public awareness campaign focused on reducing labor exploitation, sexual exploitation, begging, and forced marriages, by distributing video spots, audio clips, and leaflets.(11)
Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings and Organized Crime—Phase 2 (2014–2017)	EU-funded project, implemented by the International Center for Migration Policy Development in six countries, including BiH. Aims to build the capacity of participating governments to prevent transnational organized crime, particularly human trafficking, by providing policy, legal, and technical assistance.(61) Focuses on improving victim identification, increasing prosecution of traffickers, and strengthening coordination among EU and non-EU stakeholders.(61)

† Program is funded by the Government of BiH.

As labor inspectors do not have a mandate to inspect the streets, staff from Daily Centers are often the first to identify children engaged in hazardous street work. In Sarajevo, an institutionalized Mobile Team with a staff of three individuals engages in daily outreach to children on the streets and to families in vulnerable communities.(4) The Mobile Team staff stated, however, that they lack sufficient resources for their work, especially reliable transportation.(2) Government support for outreach to street children in areas outside of Sarajevo varies significantly, depending on the location. While the majority of Daily Centers collaborate with local Centers for Social Welfare, most Daily Centers are not institutionalized, and, therefore, lack consistent financial and technical support.(14) This may limit the ability of Daily Centers to identify and assist children working on the streets. Research also found that although the Government provides some social services for low-income families through the Center for Social Welfare, many families do not receive enough assistance to reduce their reliance on child labor, especially begging, as a source of income.(2)

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Government officials noted that although the number of domestic human trafficking victims identified in BiH is significantly higher than the number of foreign human trafficking victims identified, Government funding is disproportionately allocated to assist foreigners. As a result, some organizations that provide services to victims of domestic human trafficking may lack adequate financial resources.(3, 50)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in BiH (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws exist in all entities that clearly and comprehensively describe the hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that BiH law prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including the use, procurement, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2015
	Ensure that children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation are treated as victims rather than criminals under FBIH law.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that BiH law criminally prohibits the use of a child for prostitution, even if that child has not been trafficked.	2015
	Ensure that all children are protected by labor law, including those who work in the informal sector, such as children engaged in street work.	2015
Enforcement	Collect and publish information on labor law enforcement efforts, including labor inspectorate funding, training labor inspectors receive, and the number of labor inspections.	2015
	Establish a referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services.	2013 – 2015
	Collect and publish data on the number of investigations and individuals prosecuted, convicted, and sentenced for crimes related to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, disaggregated by age and sex of the victim, in FBIH, RS, and BD.	2013 – 2015
	Increase training for prosecutors and judges on how to properly apply criminal law in cases of child labor trafficking, forced labor, and forced begging.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that all children identified as engaged in child labor are referred to appropriate social services.	2013 – 2015
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2009 – 2015
	Improve the coordination among Regional Monitoring Teams on referral and protection of human trafficking victims.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor prevention and elimination strategies into new and existing policies.	2009 – 2015
	Adopt a policy designed to address child labor and the worst forms of child labor other than child trafficking, including in commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and illicit activities.	2015
	Expand and provide adequate funding for existing programs aimed at improving access to education for Roma children and implementing the commitments of including Roma into society by providing for basic needs.	2010 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Collect data on children involved in the worst forms of child labor in order to enhance policymakers' ability to identify problems more accurately and to address them more effectively.	2009 – 2015
	Promote inclusive education for minority children, including Roma, by expanding efforts to reduce discrimination in schools, to mitigate the costs associated with education, and to assist Roma and other families at risk of statelessness to register for citizenship documentation that entitles their children to access to school.	2011 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure inclusive education for children with disabilities, particularly children with extensive disabilities, by ensuring that all schools have enough resources to provide necessary accommodations for them.	2015
	Increase funding for programs that provide social services, including housing, for child trafficking victims.	2015
	Institutionalize and provide sufficient funding for Daily Centers to ensure that they have the resources and technical support necessary to assist children involved in child labor and those who are at risk of involvement.	2014 – 2015
	Strengthen social protection programs that provide support to economically vulnerable families in order to reduce their reliance on child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that resources for human trafficking victims are sufficient to meet the needs of domestic victims.	2014 – 2015

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Botswana made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In response to the Anti-Human Trafficking Bill's mandate, the Government established the Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee comprised of government agencies and non-governmental organizations collaborating to address trafficking in persons, including the trafficking of children. During the year, the Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security, in collaboration with the International Organization for Migration, sponsored training sessions for the Botswana Police and the Namibian Police Service on how to identify and combat trafficking in persons. The Government continued its Stay-in-School Program, which trains teachers and social workers on how to talk to parents about the importance of education. However, although research is limited, there is evidence that children are engaged in child labor in cattle herding in Botswana. Key gaps remain in the country's legal framework, including the lack of a compulsory minimum age and insufficient hazardous work prohibitions, and labor law enforcement data are not made publicly available.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children are engaged in child labor in cattle herding in Botswana.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Botswana. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		99.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* activities unknown (5, 6)
	Herding cattle* (1, 2)
Services	Street work,* including vending* (1)
	Domestic work* (1, 7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Forced labor on farms and cattle posts,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (8)
	Commercial sexual exploitation,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (8, 9)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Botswana

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Children in Botswana are trafficked internally along major highways by truck drivers for commercial sexual exploitation.(8) Two NGOs reported that children are engaged in cattle herding in remote rural villages, especially among the San population.(2, 9) Although research found no laws making education compulsory, the Government reported to UNESCO that education is compulsory for children up to age 16.(10, 11) Primary education is free and poor families receive free meals, toiletries, and school uniforms.(5, 12) However, secondary school costs between $38 and $43 per year, which may deter families from sending their children to school and increase the risk of children engaging in child labor.(12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Botswana has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Articles 2 and 107 of the Employment Act (13)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 2 and 110 of the Employment Act (13)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 2 and 108 of the Employment Act; Section 24 of the Children's Act (13, 14)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2 and 71 of the Employment Act; Articles 175 and 262 of the Penal Code; Section 114 of the Children's Act; Articles 9 and 10 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act (13-16)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 175 of the Penal Code; Section 114 of the Children's Act; Articles 9 and 10 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act (14-16)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 25 and 57–59 of the Children's Act (14)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 60 of the Children's Act (14)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Section 17 of the Botswana Defense Force Act (17)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Revised National Policy in Education, White Paper No. 12 of 1994; Section 18 of the Children's Act (14, 18)

*No conscription (19)

The minimum age protections in the Employment Act do not apply to children who work without a contract, and therefore do not apply to children in domestic work. Although the Employment Act prohibits hazardous underground work for children under age 18, the law fails to prohibit hazardous work in other child labor sectors, such as in agriculture.(13) While the Government has made efforts to compile a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations in recent years, it has yet to be approved.(20-22)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Home Affairs	Enforce child labor laws and policies. In the case of the Commissioner of Labor, authorized by the Employment Act to conduct labor inspections.(5, 13, 20) To facilitate coordination with the local leaders and law enforcement officers, labor inspectors are posted to District Council offices to carry out their duties.(23)
District and Municipal Council Child Welfare Divisions	Enforce child labor laws at the local levels.(5) During the year, the council met on a quarterly basis.(24)
Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security	Monitor suspected human trafficking cases.(25) During the year, the Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security held four trainings on trafficking in persons for citizens in the Selebiphikwe, North East District, Central District, and Sown Town Councils.(26)

On July 30, 2015, the Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security (MDJS) led efforts to celebrate World Day Against Trafficking in Persons in collaboration with the UNODC, the European Union Delegation, and the Southern African Development Community.(26)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Botswana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, the MDJS reported that it conducted human trafficking awareness trainings and media interviews, and formed an anti-human trafficking network that trained 379 police officers, social workers, pastors, and young persons on trafficking in persons. In addition, the MDJS, in collaboration with the IOM, held 10 sessions for law enforcement officers, including the Botswana Police and Namibian Police Service to address human trafficking issues.(26) Despite these efforts, it has been reported that police are not sensitive in handling cases of violence against women and children, and do not have adequate investigative training, which inhibits them in identifying, prosecuting, and preventing trafficking violations.(21, 25, 27)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee	Establish a reporting and referral mechanism for children subjected to human trafficking. Created by the Anti-Human Trafficking Bill.(1)
Advisory Committee on Child Labor	Oversee child labor issues and report to the Government three to four times per year. Include representatives from government agencies, various NGOs, worker federations, and employer organizations.(7, 20)
Child Labor Committees	Identify child laborers at the village level. Include social workers; school teachers; members of the Village Development Committees, which are local government structures; labor inspectors; and community leaders, including chiefs and priests.(12)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Botswana has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Kinds of Child Labor	Outlines the Government's plan to address child labor through legislation and policy, awareness raising, programs, and training on child labor and its worst forms for relevant stakeholders and implementers.(1)
National Plan of Action for Orphans and Vulnerable Children*	Outlines the Government's response to challenges faced by orphans and vulnerable children. Facilitates operational planning and encourages the development of communication tools among key players. Provides long-term objectives related to child protection and the implementation of the Children's Act and other relevant regulations.(28)
Presidential Task Group on Long-Term Vision for Botswana's Vision 2016 Strategy	Aims to provide universal access to school and improve families' social and economic conditions so that children in poor and rural areas are no longer viewed as essential sources of labor and income. Acknowledges that parents sometimes intentionally choose not to send their children to school.(29)
UN Development Assistance Framework (2010–2016)	Supports reducing child labor to help create a protective and supportive environment for children.(30)
Botswana National Youth Policy and National Action Plan for Youth* (est. 1996)	Addresses issues affecting youth, such as abuse and access to education. Includes plans for government-funded programs and nationwide seminars to encourage youth entrepreneurship.(12, 31, 32)

Policy	Description
Ministry of Labor and Home Affairs Sustainability Plan	Aims to incorporate addressing child labor issues into the regular duties of labor inspectors. Calls on local leaders and volunteers to identify and refer cases of child labor to social workers and school teachers to monitor attendance and promote retention.(33)
Ministry and Department Action Plans	Plans to address child labor by the Ministry of Education, Ministry of Gender and Child Welfare, Department of Social Services, and the Police.(34) Contains implementation strategies that include the safety and protection of children, and identify and help vulnerable children in need.(34)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Botswana funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2011–2017)	ILO Decent Work Country Program for Southern Africa that focuses on employment creation, social protection, tripartism, social dialogue, and workers' rights. Addresses HIV/AIDS and child labor issues.(34, 35) The program was extended to 2017.(36)
Stay-in-School Program†	Government program that trains teachers and social workers to communicate with parents about the importance of education.(5, 20)

† Program is funded by the Government of Botswana.

Although Botswana has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Botswana (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law prohibits hazardous work for children younger than age 18 in all relevant sectors, including in agriculture.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the law's minimum age protections apply to children working without a contract.	2010 – 2015
	Establish a compulsory education age equal to or higher than the minimum age of employment.	2010 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available about the labor inspectorate's level of funding, number of labor inspectors, and trainings related to child labor, including its worst forms.	2015
	Make information publicly available about criminal law enforcement's number of investigations, violations found, prosecutions, and convictions concerning the worst forms of child labor.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the existing youth policies.	2011 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure that children can complete secondary school by subsidizing or defraying the cost of tuition, meals, and school uniforms.	2015
	Conduct research on child labor, including its worst forms, to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Develop programs to address child labor in domestic work and cattle herding.	2012 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Brazil made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government conducted 7,263 child labor inspections; of these, the mobile inspection group to combat child labor, established in 2014, conducted 34 inspection activities, and issued 53 penalties for child labor law violations. The state of Bahia passed a law that removes state tax and administrative benefits for companies that utilize forced labor and prohibits company owners and associates from opening a new business within 10 years. The city of São Paulo approved the Municipal Plan to Eradicate Forced Labor, which aims to create and maintain a central database for forced labor information and increase access to education and health services for victims of human trafficking and forced labor. In addition, the Government increased funding for the Family Stipend (Bolsa Família) program by $268 million. However, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of tobacco and in commercial sexual exploitation. Brazil's legal definition of trafficking in persons does not cover human trafficking for labor exploitation. In addition, social programs for child trafficking victims, including victims of commercial sexual exploitation, appear to be insufficient.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

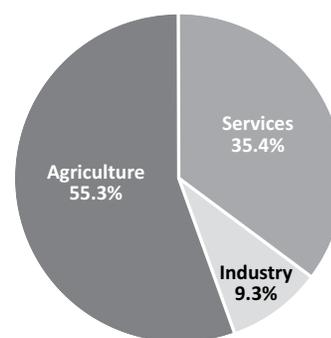

Children in Brazil are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of tobacco and in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-6) In 2015, the Government released the 2014 National Household Survey results, which found 3.3 million children ages 5 to 17 working in Brazil, a 4.5 percent increase from 2013. The study also found that 62 percent of child laborers ages 5 to 13 work in agriculture.(7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Brazil.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 4, 33)
	Forced labor in agriculture, including in coffee,* manioc,* and mate tea* (11, 20, 33, 46)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Brazil, human trafficking is a problem, especially in border areas. Brazilian and Paraguayan indigenous children are trafficked for domestic work; Paraguayan indigenous children are trafficked for the purpose of begging; adolescents, including some from Haiti and South Korea, are trafficked to play in soccer clubs.(1, 45)

While there are no overall statistics available, the Government acknowledges that the commercial sexual exploitation of children is a problem throughout Brazil, especially in tourist areas in the cities of Fortaleza, Manaus, and in the slums (favelas) of Rio de Janeiro.(47) Child sex tourism is particularly common in tourist areas along the coast.(48)

In 2015, the results of the National School Census found that 4,084 rural schools closed in 2014.(49, 50) The states most affected by school closures are in the North and Northeast regions.(51) Many indigenous children are not registered at birth.(33) This may affect their ability to access education because birth registration documents are often necessary to enroll in school.(52)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Brazil has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In January 2015, the state of Bahia passed Law 13.221, establishing harsher penalties for companies that utilize forced or exploitative labor directly or in their supply chains. The penalties remove tax or administrative benefits offered by the state and prohibit company owners and associates from opening a new business within 10 years.(60)

The Penal Code's definition of trafficking in persons does not cover human trafficking for the purposes of labor.(43, 55) Although the Government drafted a bill in 2014 that aims to harmonize the trafficking in persons legal framework with international standards, the legislation was not approved during the reporting period.(43)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTPS)	Conduct labor inspections and enforce child and forced labor laws.(30) Labor inspections are planned by the 27 regional offices based on federal goals, analyses of labor market data, and available human and financial resources.(61, 62) In the case of the mobile inspection group, combat child labor by coordinating labor inspections with awareness-raising programs.(21) Additional mobile inspection units, located in every region, conduct unannounced inspections where forced labor, including forced child labor, is suspected.(21, 63) Mobile inspection units comprise labor inspectors, labor prosecutors, and Federal Police officers.(21) Refer cases involving the worst forms of child labor to the Ministry of Justice and other government agencies.(64) In 2015, the Ministry of Labor and Employment and the Ministry of Social Welfare were combined to form the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTPS).(21)
Federal Labor Prosecutor's Office	Prosecute child labor violations by working with prosecutors from the National Committee to Combat Child and Adolescent Labor, an in-house body that coordinates efforts to combat child labor.(65) Carry out awareness-raising campaigns and monitor whether municipalities budget the required 5 percent for initiatives to protect children's rights.(30, 65, 66)
Federal Police	Investigate some cases of forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(30) Maintain a database to track cases of human trafficking for sexual exploitation.(21)
Federal Public Ministry	Investigate and prosecute cases of forced labor and human trafficking.(67)
Ministry of Justice	Lead efforts to combat human trafficking and oversee Advanced Posts (Postos Avançados) and state-run Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers (Núcleos de Enfrentamento).(43) Provide guidance to federal, state, and local government officials on referrals for victims of human trafficking, including to Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers (Núcleos de Enfrentamento), Social Assistance Reference Centers, and NGOs.(43)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Women, Racial Equality, and Human Rights	Coordinate efforts to protect human rights, including combating forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. In 2015, the National Secretariats of Human Rights and Women's Policies were unified with the Secretariat of Policies for Racial Equality, under the Ministry of Women, Racial Equality, and Human Rights.(68) The National Secretary of Human Rights (SDH) sponsors Dial 100, a human rights violation hotline that directs child labor complaints to appropriate institutions for follow-up.(30, 68) The National Secretary of Women's Policies operates Dial 180, a hotline that receives complaints about violence against women.(69, 70) During the reporting period, the Government expanded the Dial 100 and Dial 180 hotlines, making them available at all hours, every day of the year.(43) In 2015, Dial 100 registered 121 human trafficking complaints and 307 forced labor complaints.(71) From January to June, Dial 180 received 176 human trafficking complaints.(72)
Federal Highway Police	Collaborate with the Federal Public Ministry and MTPS's mobile inspection units to identify areas at high risk of forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation, with a focus on Brazil's highways.(73, 74)
Advanced Posts (Postos Avançados)	Identify human traffickers and potential victims in high-transit areas, including airports and bus stations. There are 19 posts in areas with historically high rates of human trafficking. In October 2015, a new post opened in Manaus.(43)

Labor Law Enforcement

According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Brazil should employ roughly 7,280 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(21, 78-80) In 2015, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTPS) conducted 7,263 child labor inspections.(77) The majority of inspections occurred in the states of Minas Gerais, Rio de Janeiro, Mato Grosso do Sul, Amazonas, and Rio Grande do Sul.(21) The states that registered the highest number of violations were Rio de Janeiro, Minas Gerais, Paraná, Rio Grande do Sul, and Mato Grosso do Sul. In Amazonas, inspectors found 32 violations of child labor laws involving children ages 4 and younger.(77) In May, MTPS targeted the fast food industry for inspections due to the high number of complaints received about children working in this sector.(38) In October, the mobile inspection group to combat child labor conducted 34 inspection activities in Pará in response to the continued employment of children in carwashes and fairs, situations in which they may be exposed to chemicals and flammable and sharp materials.(36) The mobile inspection group found 81 children engaged in child labor and an additional 21 children above the minimum age engaged in hazardous work; 53 penalties were issued.(21, 36)

Upon finding children in hazardous working conditions, MTPS officials immediately remove the children and return them to their families or refer them to social service providers.(21) Between April 2014 and April 2015, labor inspectors removed 5,688 children from child labor. The states with the most rescued children were Pernambuco, Minas Gerais, Mato Grosso do Sul, Goiás, and Sergipe.(81) In 2015, MTPS' labor inspectors and mobile inspection units removed 1,010 people from forced and exploitative labor conditions; 12 of these victims were children under age 16, and 28 were children between 16 and 17. The majority of victims were found in urban areas.(82)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Brazil took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In July 2015, the Government worked with UNODC to provide training on human trafficking issues to police officers, judges, and prosecutors.(43) The Ministry of Justice trained 40 metropolitan civil guards from São Paulo to detect and report cases of human trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation to MTPS and the Federal Police.(83)

From January to June 2015, self-reported data compiled from Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers (Núcleos de Enfrentamento) and Advanced Posts (Postos Avançados) identified 170 victims of human trafficking for sexual exploitation and 2,145 victims of human trafficking for labor exploitation.(43) Research did not find disaggregated data for complaints regarding adult and child victims. The National Center for Cybercrime Complaints, a partnership between the Government and NGO SaferNet, receives online complaints about human rights violations, including child pornography and human trafficking, and refers cases to the Federal Public Ministry and Federal Police for investigation.(84, 85)

Although the Federal Police maintain a database to track cases of human trafficking for sexual exploitation, no mechanism is in place to record violations related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including in prostitution and pornography.(43)

According to the Government, the judicial system does not adequately hold perpetrators of child labor law violations accountable, which may lead to a sense of impunity among violators.(21) Despite reported incidents of child sex tourism, research found no evidence that investigations, prosecutions, or convictions were undertaken during the reporting period. Furthermore, limited evidence suggests police officers and other government officials may be involved in child trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation.(33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor	Lead the implementation of the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents. Led by MTPS, includes 17 government agencies and representatives from trade unions, business associations, and civil society organizations.(86, 87)
Intersectoral Commission to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents	Monitor implementation of the National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents. Led by the SDH and includes representatives from civil society, international organizations, Federal Public Ministry, and MTPS.(88, 89)
National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate activities to address human trafficking, including implementation of the Second Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons. Led by the Ministry of Justice, with 26 representatives from government agencies, civil society organizations, national councils, and academia.(90, 91)
National Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents	Monitor policies to protect children's rights, including the rights of working children. Includes 28 sitting Council members, 14 of whom are representatives from the Executive Branch and 14 of whom are NGO representatives.(92, 93)
Interagency Committee to Implement Strategies to Ensure the Protection of Children's and Adolescents' Rights	Coordinate the implementation of policies to protect children's and adolescents' rights, including the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents. Led by SDH, includes representatives from the National Council of the Federal Public Ministry, MTPS, and ministries of Justice, Education, Health, and Social Development and the Fight Against Hunger.(94)
Labor Justice Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Decent Work	Organize efforts of the labor courts to eliminate child labor and ensure that adolescents have decent work opportunities.(95) Includes 11 representatives from the Superior Labor Court and regional labor courts.(96)
Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers (Núcleos de Enfrentamento)	Coordinate activities carried out by local, state, and federal agencies to combat human trafficking. Established in 16 states.(67)
Judicial State Committees to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate data sharing on human trafficking cases among courts. Established in 15 states.(69)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Brazil has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents (2011–2015)	Guided the Government of Brazil's efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms.(97)
National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents (2013–2020)	Identifies strategies to prevent sexual violence, protect children's rights, and assist child victims.(89)
National Policy on Human Rights for Children and Adolescents (2011–2020)	Outlines the policy framework to promote children's rights and aims to expand actions to address child labor.(98)
Second Plan for the Eradication of Forced Labor	Establishes the policy framework to address forced labor.(54)
Second Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2012–2016)	Guides efforts to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking.(91) Focuses on prevention, assistance to victims, and suppression of criminal activity.(75) In 2015, the Ministry of Justice conducted a policy assessment and found successful progress in 82 of the plan's 115 goals.(99)

Policy	Description
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through efforts by signatories to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Signed in 2014 at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru, the initiative reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor.(100, 101)
MERCOSUR United Against Child Labor Campaign	Aims to develop public awareness about the need to combat child labor in MERCOSUR member countries. Addresses child labor in agriculture, domestic work, and sexual exploitation, with particular emphasis on communities along country borders.(102)
Second Presidential Declaration on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor in MERCOSUR (2012)	Promotes greater coordination between governmental agencies, levels of government, and with civil society among MERCOSUR members.(103)
MERCOSUR Southern Child Initiative	Aims to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region by raising awareness and seeking coordination among member states on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking and pornography, child labor, and migrant labor; improving country legal frameworks to harmonize them with international conventions affecting children; and exchanging best practices.(104)
MERCOSUR Social Labor Declaration of 2015†	Aims to promote decent work and sustainable development in the five member states of MERCOSUR, in part through commitments to uphold core labor standards, including the elimination of forced labor, the prevention and elimination of child labor, and the protection of adolescent work. Signed in Brasilia, Brazil in July 2015.(105, 106)
Municipal Plan to Eradicate Forced Labor (2015–2017)†	Outlines 58 actions to prevent and eliminate forced labor, including forced child labor, in the city of São Paulo. Aims to conduct a study and risk assessment of forced labor, create and maintain a central database for forced labor information, and increase access to education and health services for victims of human trafficking and forced labor.(107) The Municipal Council for the Eradication of Forced Labor of São Paulo monitors the plan's implementation.(107)
Decent Work National Plan	Outlines policies to provide decent work opportunities and increase access to education and vocational training.(108) Aims to include 90 percent of working children between the ages of 5 and 9, and 60 percent of working children between the ages of 10 and 13 in the National Program to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI) by 2015.(108)
National Education Plan (2014–2024)	Aims to expand access to education and improve the quality of education. Has 20 goals, including universal basic education; an end to illiteracy; conversion of 50 percent of public schools into full-time schools, extending the number of school hours to seven or more per day; and strengthening the support provided to children exposed to labor exploitation. Plans to allocate 10 percent of Brazil's GDP to public education by 2024.(109-111)
4-Year Development Plan (2012–2015)*	Sought to achieve sustainable development in all regions and promoted social equality through access to quality education, technological innovation, and environmental sustainability. Aimed to lift 16 million people out of extreme poverty and build 2 million houses for low-income families.(112)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In December 2015, Brazil participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancún, Mexico, participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancún 2015 which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(113, 114) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(113, 115)

In 2015, funding for the education sector was reduced by nearly $3 billion.(116) According to the National Education Council, the reduced funding may have resulted in delayed implementation of the National Education Plan.(117)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Brazil funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Program to Eradicate Child Labor [Programa de Erradicação do Trabalho Infantil (PETI)] [†]	Ministry of Social Development and the Fight Against Hunger (MDS) social assistance program that combats child labor through awareness-raising activities, victim identification and protection, and conditional cash transfers.(63, 118) To receive program benefits, participants must ensure that children are not working and maintain at least 85 percent school attendance.(119) In 2015, 14,622 families received approximately $1.8 million in conditional cash transfers.(63) During the reporting period, a working group began redesigning the program based on an evaluation of its impact and the implementation of current policies.(63, 120)
Living Together and Strengthening Links Program [Serviço de Convivência e Fortalecimento de Vínculo (SCFV)] [†]	MDS social assistance program for vulnerable groups, including child laborers. Aims to strengthen familial and communal ties through sports and artistic and cultural activities. Offers services at Social Assistance Reference Centers and Living Centers.(121) In 2015, 141,436 victims of child labor received support services.(63)
Family Stipend (Bolsa Família) [†]	MDS program that supplements income through cash transfers for families living in poverty and extreme poverty.(4, 122) In 2015, the budget increased from $8.7 billion by $268 million.(75, 123) MDS reported that more than 96 percent of the 15.7 million monitored students achieved the minimum requirement of 85 percent school attendance.(123) During the reporting period, 136,195 families living in extreme poverty with a victim of child labor were identified as priority groups; these families received approximately $140 million in conditional cash transfers.(63)
Brazil Without Extreme Poverty (Brasil Sem Miséria) [†]	MDS program that aims to lift more than 16 million people out of extreme poverty by guaranteeing a minimum income; expanding access to public services, including education, health, and citizenship; and increasing job opportunities and income generation for the poorest families.(124) In 2015, the budget increased by 4.4 percent.(75) One program component, Caring Brazil (Brasil Carinhoso), targets Bolsa Família participants with children ages 0 to 15 with a monthly family income of less than $22 per person.(125)
National Program on Job Training and Employment (Programa Nacional de Acesso ao Ensino Técnico e Emprego) [†]	Ministry of Education job training program for high school students.(126, 127) In 2015, 1.3 million students were registered, and 342 public schools were built, renovated, and expanded to offer technical courses.(127)
More Education Program (Mais Educação) [†]	Ministry of Education program that provides after-school and remedial activities to students to reduce dropout rates and grade repetition, as well as combat child labor.(128) In 2015, the Ministry of Education provided $48 million to participating schools with less than $1,300 in their accounts.(129)
National Household Survey [†]	Government-funded annual national household survey that includes questions about child labor.(7)
South-South Cooperation Projects [†]	Government of Brazil-funded $461,862 project implemented by the ILO to combat child labor and promote South-South cooperation.(120) In June 2015, the Government announced a new $6.8 million South-South cooperation project to be implemented by the ILO to address child and forced labor in cotton production.(130)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(131)
Project to Consolidate Efforts to Combat Forced Labor in Brazil and Peru (2012–2017)	USDOL-funded, $6 million project implemented by the ILO for 5 years to combat forced labor, including forced child labor in Brazil and Peru, and to share Brazil's best practices with the Government of Peru and Peruvian stakeholders.(132, 133) Coordinated with the Government of Brazil to include a set of forced labor questions in the 2015 National Household Survey.(68) In October 2015, Brazilian officials trained the Peruvian Government on the use of mobile inspection units to detect cases of forced labor.(134)
Protect Brazil Smartphone Application (Proteja Brasil) [†]	Government- and UNICEF-sponsored smartphone and tablet application to report child labor abuses.(135)
Social Assistance Reference Centers [†]	MDS and SDH program that provides vulnerable populations, including victims of child labor and commercial sexual exploitation, with psychological, social, and legal services.(75, 136) In 2015, there were 2,453 centers located throughout the country, an increase from 2,440 centers in 2014; however, only 557 centers were certified to assist victims of human trafficking, and many centers were underfunded.(43, 48, 75)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Brazil.

In December 2015, MTPS and the Ministry of Social Development and the Fight Against Hunger (MDS) signed an agreement that outlines activities related to the provision of reintegration services for victims of forced labor, including the Family Stipend (Bolsa Família) program.(137) Although the National Program to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI) and Family Stipend (Bolsa Família) have reduced child labor in Brazil, challenges remain.(97, 138) Some PETI beneficiaries are not fully compliant with program requirements; reports indicate some children do not regularly attend school, and other children work.(37, 139) Limited evidence indicates difficulties in monitoring children’s school attendance and after-school activities. Furthermore, penalties for failure to comply with the programs’ conditions are rarely enforced.(4) Because PETI and Bolsa Família are decentralized, local governments are responsible for their implementation. Some municipalities do not have the necessary human and financial resources to fully implement and monitor these programs.(4, 140)

Many states report a lack of resources to adequately assist victims of human trafficking.(43) Furthermore, research found a lack of specialized shelters for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(33, 48)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR, INCLUDING ITS WORST FORMS

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Brazil (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the definition of trafficking in persons is consistent with international standards.	2011 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available regarding the number of child labor dedicated inspectors, labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review, and penalties imposed that were collected; as well as the number of criminal investigations conducted, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions achieved.	2012 – 2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2014 – 2015
	Collect data on all commercial sexual exploitation cases, including child prostitution and pornography.	2015
	Ensure that violators of child labor laws, including the worst forms of child labor, are held accountable in accordance with the law.	2015
	Conduct investigations of child sex tourism and child trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation and prosecute the alleged perpetrators.	2015
Government Policies	Provide adequate resources to ensure that the goals outlined in the National Education Plan are achieved.	2015
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing development policies.	2015
Social Programs	Conduct research on the commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2009 – 2015
	Expand efforts to improve access to primary and secondary education, particularly in rural areas and among indigenous children.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that families participating in PETI and Bolsa Família comply with program requirements to keep children in school and out of work.	2009 – 2015
	Provide local governments with the necessary resources to fully implement and monitor PETI and Bolsa Família .	2009 – 2015
	Provide adequate resources to state governments to ensure that child trafficking victims receive social services. Ensure the availability of specialized shelters for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.	2012 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. 78. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited March 18, 2016]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
79. Committee on Employment and Social Policy. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, ILO; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
80. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Burkina Faso

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Burkina Faso made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a revised mining code that includes new provisions prohibiting child labor in mines. The Government also renewed its annual National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking and the National Program for the Fight against Child Labor on Artisanal Gold Mining Sites and Quarries. In an effort to improve data collection efforts related to child labor, the Ministry of Social Action and National Solidarity established a basic integrated data system on child protection that is linked to all 45 Committees for Vigilance and Surveillance throughout the country. However, children in Burkina Faso are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in gold mining and cotton harvesting. A lack of labor inspectors and limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from engaging in the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burkina Faso are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including gold mining and cotton harvesting. (1-8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burkina Faso.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	42.1 (2,116,752)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	41.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	21.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		60.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Enquête Démographique et de Santé et à Indicateurs Multiples, 2010.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting,* weeding,* and exposure to pesticides*† while harvesting crops, including cotton and mangos* (1, 3-8, 11)
	Raising and herding livestock, including cattle* and goats* (5, 11-13)
Industry	Mining of gold,† including digging and crushing rock, installing dynamite,† working underground,† carrying water and other heavy loads,† and using cyanide and mercury† (1-3, 8, 12, 14-33)
	Quarrying† and transporting heavy loads† while working to extract granite (17, 23, 34-38)
	Work in carpentry* and construction* (12, 13)
Services	Domestic work† (4, 6, 11-13, 30, 39-41)
	Street work, including vending* and begging* (6, 11-13)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Use in illicit activities,* including drug trafficking* (23)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (11, 18, 21, 30, 42, 43)
	Agricultural work, including cotton production and livestock raising,* domestic work, begging, gold mining, and work in quarries,* each as a result of human trafficking (3, 5, 6, 41-49)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Burkina Faso is a destination, transit point, and source for child trafficking to and from other West African countries.(42, 43, 50, 51) The Government has collaborated with Koranic schools and educators to expose individuals posing as Koranic teachers to force their students to beg in the streets and then take the money the boys collect.(6, 42-44, 48, 52, 53) The practice of confiage, which involves sending a child to live with a relative or friend to attend school in a larger town or city, may place children at risk of being victims of internal human trafficking for the purpose of exploitation.(48)

The Government has acknowledged the need for a national study on the commercial sexual exploitation of children to better understand the issue and to incorporate it into the National Action Plan to combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(46) A boom in gold mining has contributed to the increase of child labor in this sector, and more children are leaving school to work in gold mines.(5, 8, 16, 54-58)

Although the Law Orienting the Education System mandates free education until age 16, students are required to pay for uniforms and school-related fees.(2, 30, 59, 60) The shortage of teachers and the lack of school infrastructure in rural areas hinder children’s access to education.(3, 30, 59) Birth registration is also required for enrollment, which could prevent some children from entering school because about a quarter of the children in Burkina Faso do not have a birth certificate.(61, 62)

In September 2015, the presidential guard seized power from the transitional government, which had been instated when President Blaise Compaoré was forced to step down from power in 2014. The interim government, however, was reinstated the following week, and a new president was peacefully elected and inaugurated in December 2015.(63-74) The disruptions caused by Burkina Faso’s political turbulence may have slowed gains and impacted the Government’s ability to address child labor during the reporting period.(73)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Burkina Faso has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 6 of the Law Orienting the Education System (81)

* No conscription (82)

On June 26, 2015, the National Transition Council adopted a revised mining code that includes new provisions prohibiting child labor in mines. The amendment establishes a penalty of 2 to 5 years of imprisonment and a fine of approximately $8,200 to $41,000 for offenders.(2, 3, 77) The Government also conducted a study to review the existing legislation on hazardous activities prohibited to children, aiming to update the list, but no changes were made during the reporting period.(2)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Civil Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS)	Enforce labor laws, including child labor laws.(11, 83) Responsible for establishing government policy to combat child labor, including its worst forms.(57) In the case of provincial committees, responsible for raising awareness, conducting workshops for community members, and enforcement at the local level.(50, 84)
Ministry of Social Action and National Solidarity (MASSN)	Protect children's rights, enforce laws against child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor, remove children from exploitative child labor, and provide reintegration services.(11, 83, 85, 86) Operate a free hotline to report child abuse, including child labor, and conduct awareness-raising activities in all 13 regions of Burkina Faso.(2, 23, 87-89) Operate civil registry offices in maternity wards to register newborn babies.(90) In 2015, established a basic integrated data system on child protection to improve data quality and collection efforts on child labor, including its worst forms.(43) In the case of the National Council for Childhood, oversee all policies for the survival, protection, development, and participation of children.(91)
Ministry of Territorial Administration, Decentralization and Interior Security (MATDSI)	Enforce criminal laws related to child trafficking.(46) In the case of the Morals Brigade in the MATDSI National Police Force, oversee criminal cases involving children and women.(92)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Enforce and prosecute criminal laws, including laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(93) Appoint one or more judges who specialize in child protection issues to each high court to oversee juvenile court cases. May also call upon the MASSN social workers in charge of child protection to conduct investigations on behalf of vulnerable children, including victims of child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, exploitative child labor, and begging.(94)
Parliamentary Network for the Promotion of Child Rights	Train government officials on children's rights, including child labor laws and other issues affecting children.(3, 95, 96)

After the presidential elections in December 2015, a new cabinet of ministers was announced; the Government consolidated the Ministry of Gender with the Ministry of Social Action and National Solidarity (MASSN) to form the Ministry of Women, National Solidarity and Family in January 2016.(43)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Burkina Faso took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Unannounced Inspections Conducted	Yes (11, 83)	Yes (97)
Complaint Mechanism Exists	Yes (11)	Yes (2)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Unknown	Yes (97)

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

The Government employs 124 labor inspectors and 108 labor controllers who are in charge of conducting labor inspections; however, the Government indicates it lacks adequate resources to enforce labor laws throughout the country, including the human and financial resources needed to carry out a sufficient number of labor inspections.(2, 43, 83) Both the inspectors and the controllers received initial training at the national school for civil servants. During the reporting period, three inspectors received ongoing training through the ILO training center in Turin on issues such as child labor, human trafficking, and forced child labor.(97)

The Ministry of Civil Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS) publishes an annual report listing 12 types of labor infractions, none of which are related to child labor.(11) No penalties have been applied to employers to date because most children are self-employed. The MFPTSS notes that it is difficult for inspectors to follow up on inspections to ensure the recommendations have been implemented.(99) Law enforcement collaborates on an ad hoc basis with the MASSN to provide social services to child labor victims.(97) It is not known how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of complaints made to the MASSN hotline

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burkina Faso took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (11, 83)	Yes (2, 43)

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, 232 labor inspectors and labor controllers worked with police officers to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor; however, this number is insufficient considering the scope of the problem in Burkina Faso.(2, 83) Many provincial committees that assist with criminal law enforcement and raising awareness at the local level were unable to carry out all their planned activities due to a lack of resources.(84)

During the reporting period, 203 provincial directors, social workers, police officers, civil society members, and gendarmes received training on child protection. Judges and law enforcement officials also received training on issues related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children; these training sessions were supported by ECPAT.(43) Members of security forces, judicial employees, and social workers in areas bordering Côte d'Ivoire received training on how to better combat transnational trafficking and track down offenders.(43) As part of its collaboration with Koranic schools and educators, the Government intercepted 7 child traffickers posing as Koranic teachers and rescued 43 children who were destined for agricultural work in Mali and Côte d'Ivoire.(43) The Government relies on coordinating bodies and an official procedural guide to refer victims to social service providers.(43, 97)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordination Committee for the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CNC-PAN/PFTE)	Supervise, evaluate, and oversee implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Chaired by the MFPTSS Directorate to Combat Child Labor and its Worst Forms.(11, 12, 83) Includes representatives from 24 government ministries, among which are the MOJ; the MASSN; the MATDSI; the Ministries of Basic Education, Mines, Human Rights, and Health; NGOs; religious communities; the Children's Parliament; civil society organizations; and 6 observers representing donor countries and international NGOs.(11) Hold meetings once a year to review efforts to combat child labor and identify needs.(57, 83)
MFPTSS Directorate to Combat Child Labor and its Worst Forms (DLTE)	Coordinate and lead interagency efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms; collect information on child labor; and conduct awareness raising activities.(100) Serve as the Secretariat for the CNC-PAN/PFTE.(93, 100) In 2015, initiated a study to implement an integrated data system on child protection and provided training for field agents in charge of data collection, including follow-up and monitoring efforts.(43, 53)
National Committee for Vigilance and Surveillance Against the Trafficking in Persons and Assimilated Practices (CNVS)	Coordinate actions to combat the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking, at the national level. Oversee Committees for Vigilance and Surveillance in each of the regions.(43, 50) The MASSN serves as president, and the MATDSI is the vice president.(43, 88) Include representatives from MFPTSS, the MOJ, the Ministry of Women and Gender, and NGOs.(43) In 2015, met to adopt the implementation report of the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor covering 2001 to 2013 and supported all 45 regional committees through a monitoring and supervision mechanism.(43, 53, 97)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Protection Networks (RPEs)	Assist the CNVS with coordinating and facilitating the collection of statistical data on human trafficking, in particular women and children. Established by the MASSN and comprising social workers, magistrates, judges, police officers, health workers, and NGOs in 23 of the country's 45 provinces.(53) In 2015, all RPEs met to share experiences and good practices.(43)

In 2015, although the Government made efforts to improve its data collection system and monitoring capabilities, a lack of resources, such as computers and electricity, and poor coordination among the ministries continued to hamper the Government's ability to fully address child trafficking.(2, 43)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Burkina Faso has established policies on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (PAN/PFTE) (2011–2015)	Part of the Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development (SCADD); aims to prevent and protect children from the worst forms of child labor through awareness raising, data collection, rehabilitation services, increased access to education, and better law enforcement.(48, 57, 100) Calls for the involvement of 11 ministries, particularly the MASSN and the MFPTSS, to reduce exploitative child labor significantly by 2015.(57, 101) Promotes education, particularly for girls, through school feeding programs, school material distribution, and scholarships.(93)
2015 National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking†	MASSN plan to combat human trafficking implemented by the CNVS.(43)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan on Child Labor (2012–2015)	With 14 other ECOWAS countries, implements a regional action plan on child labor, especially its worst forms. Aims to eliminate worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015.(40, 102, 103)
Decent Work Country Program (2012–2015)	Promotes decent work with a focus on creating job opportunities for youth and promoting social protection. Incorporates child labor concerns into the strategy for work.(104)
Bilateral Agreements to Combat Child Trafficking	Agreements between Burkina Faso, Mali, and Côte d'Ivoire; call for increased cooperation against cross-border trafficking in persons.(23, 43, 105, 106) Overseen by the Government, which has established monitoring committees to review aspects of the agreement with Mali and Côte d'Ivoire.(107) Burkina Faso's National Training Institute of Social Workers partners with its counterpart in Chad to share experiences and best practices in combating human trafficking.(43)
Communal Action Plan Against Trafficking (2013–2018)	Pilot program in Dieboungou; aims to prevent child trafficking, raise awareness in local communities, and rehabilitate and reintegrate victims of child trafficking. Entails government plans to replicate this program elsewhere in the country.(43, 53)
Treaty of Amity and Cooperation	Framework for economic cooperation between Côte d'Ivoire and Burkina Faso.(106) Includes agreements to prevent the exploitation of children in artisanal gold mines and renewed commitments to combat child trafficking between the two countries. Encompasses annual meetings to reaffirm the commitment and address issues requiring cooperation.(106)
Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development (SCADD) (2011–2015)*	Encompasses all development activities with a focus on the promotion of social protections, poverty reduction through economic growth, maternal and child health, and primary education for all.(23, 57, 108) Also implements price controls on food and provides microfinance opportunities to youth.(57)
Program for the Strategic Development of Basic Education (PDSEB) (2012–2021)*	Aims to increase the number of students continuing their studies after elementary school and achieve universal primary school attendance by 2021.(51, 109)
National Parenting Program†	Aims to support families in their efforts to provide education and care to their children to reduce their vulnerability to child trafficking.(43)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the Government of Burkina Faso did not receive any invitations to participate in activities under the ECOWAS Regional Action Plan on Child Labor.(97) The monitoring committee established to review the bilateral agreements to combat child trafficking with Mali and Côte d'Ivoire and the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation agreement between Burkina Faso and Côte d'Ivoire did not meet during the reporting period because of a lack of financial resources and the political situation in Burkina Faso.(97)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Burkina Faso funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Program for the Fight against Child Labor on Artisanal Gold Mining Sites and Quarries (2015–2019)*†	MASSN program that aims to prevent and withdraw children from working in artisanal gold mines as part of the Government's efforts to eliminate child labor in mining by 2025.(2, 43, 97, 110, 111) Seeks to strengthen child protection systems, improve coordination among stakeholders, and implement existing legislation. Builds on the previous project to eliminate child labor in mines and quarries from 2009 to 2013.(97) Approximately $42.9 million, 40 percent of the program costs, to be provided by the Government.(2)
Reducing Child Labor Through Education and Services (2012–2016)	$5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Counterpart International that targets 10,000 children engaged in or at risk of entering child labor in the cotton and gold mining sectors. Targets 1,000 households with child beneficiaries with livelihood services and aims to increase access to education, social protection, and training programs.(112, 113)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor.(114)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II)	USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by Winrock International and partners Verité and Lawyers Without Borders in at least eight countries to build local and national Government capacity to address child labor. Aims to improve legislation addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards; to improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor; to develop, validate, adopt, and implement a national action plan on the elimination of child labor; and to enhance the implementation of national and local policies and programs aiming to reduce and prevent child labor.(115, 116) Delayed implementation due to political transitions in 2014 and 2015.(117)
Transit Centers†	MASSN-funded program that operates 23 transit centers serving vulnerable children, some of whom may have been victims of human trafficking.(43, 51, 89) Provides food, medical assistance, and psychosocial care. Aims to reintegrate victims into their communities. Facilitates repatriation of foreign victims when possible.(23, 43, 51, 85) In 2015, received approximately $36,000 to operate transit centers and supporting programs.(43)
Assistance to Vulnerable Group†	MASSN-funded program that provides services to vulnerable groups, especially women and children, in the prevention of human trafficking and recidivism.(46) In 2015, received approximately $181,000 to provide vocational training and social reintegration assistance to children living in the street who are vulnerable to child trafficking, and $49,000 to support income-generating activities for families of vulnerable children.(43) Provided protection for 400 potential child trafficking victims who were returned to their families; supported the vocational training and education of 301 vulnerable children who were reintegrated.(43)
Awareness Raising Campaigns†	MASSN-funded program that conducts nationwide campaigns to combat human trafficking by providing advocacy, raising awareness, and building capacity for key actors involved in child protection issues, including child trafficking.(43, 53)
National Parenting Program*†	Assists parents in managing and educating their children to combat child trafficking.(53)
Resilience in the Sahel-Enhanced (2014–2019)	USAID-funded 5-year project to increase food security and improve livelihoods in Niger and Burkina Faso. Received $130 million from UNICEF for the first two years of implementation.(118, 119)
UN World Food Country Program (2011–2016)	$56.2 million UN-funded program that supports school feeding programs, promotes primary education, and aims to improve food security. Aims to provide daily meals to 629,000 primary school students and monthly take-home rations of dry cereals to 55,525 young female students.(120, 121)
National Council for the Prevention of Violence at Schools†	Oversees government efforts to combat violence and abuse in schools.(11, 122) Collects and analyzes data on violence in schools; produces an annual report for the Ministry of Education.(122)
Child Friendly Schools (EQAME)	UNICEF-funded project that constructs or converts existing schools into student-centered institutions. Provides quality education, school kits, water and sanitation facilities, and mobilizes communities in support of schools.(3, 71, 123-125) Provides teacher training on children's rights, child-friendly pedagogy, and development of extracurricular activities.(123)
National Strategy on Civil Registration (2012–2016)†	$41.3 million Government-funded program aiming to achieve universal birth registration by creating information and registration centers.(11, 30, 126) Receives 30 percent of its funding from the Government and the remaining 70 percent from technical and financial partners.(126)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Burkina Faso.

In 2015, the Government continued to support and monitor 21,570 children who had been removed from mines and quarries and provided with schooling, vocational training, and income-generating activities.(43) Although Burkina Faso has social programs to address the worst forms of child labor in the production of cotton and in gold mining, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem or to address other forms of child labor, such as in domestic work.(2, 3)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Burkina Faso (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in accordance with the ILO recommendation.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that labor law enforcement receives sufficient resources to fulfill their mandate, including by conducting an adequate number of inspections and following up after inspections to ensure recommendations have been implemented.	2009 – 2015
	Make publicly available statistics on the enforcement of child labor laws, including the number and type of inspections conducted, violations found, and penalties assessed.	2009 – 2015
	Include the number of child labor infractions in the MFPTSS annual report.	2015
Enforcement	Establish a mechanism to log all calls to the child protection hotline and track cases of child labor for referral to law enforcement or social service providers.	2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by conducting routine and targeted inspections.	2015
Coordination	Ensure coordinating bodies receive adequate resources, such as computers and electricity, and can work together to fully address child trafficking issues.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure monitoring committees can meet regularly to review bilateral agreements to combat child trafficking and the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation agreement.	2015
Social Programs	Improve access to education by eliminating school-related fees and increasing the number of schools and teachers in rural areas.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure all children can obtain identity documents, such as birth certificates for school registration.	2010 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to address child labor in the production of cotton and gold mining; develop programs to address other forms of child labor, such as in domestic work.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Burundi made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government provided refresher training to some labor inspectors and continued to provide funding for social programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor. However, children in Burundi are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Education in Burundi is not compulsory, increasing the risk of children's involvement in child labor. Law enforcement officials lack the necessary resources to effectively conduct labor inspections and criminal investigations. In addition, social programs do not target all of the sectors in which children work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORIAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burundi are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-10) According to a national study published by the Government of Burundi and the ILO, the majority of children work in the production of cash crops such as coffee, cotton, palm oil, sugarcane, and tea.(5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burundi.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	27.2 (633,126)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	60.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	26.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		66.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(11)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2010–2011.(12)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of tea,* coffee,* sugarcane,* cotton,* palm oil,* potatoes,* and rice* (1, 5, 7, 8)
	Fishing, including preparing materials and equipment,* preparing meals for fishermen,* loading and unloading materials from vessels,* and cleaning the vessels* (1, 5, 7, 8)
	Herding and feeding livestock* (5, 9)
Industry	Extracting,† washing, and transporting minerals* in mines and quarries, including artisanal gold mines* (1, 5-8, 13, 14)
	Making and transporting bricks* (1, 7-9, 15)
	Construction,* including transporting materials,* welding,* and installing electrical cables*† (5)
Services	Domestic work (1, 5-7, 9)
	Street vending, including selling food,* newspapers,* cigarettes,* and used clothes and shoes* (5, 6, 9)
	Begging* (6)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Handling and transporting heavy loads*† (5, 6)
	Cleaning, cooking, ironing, and laundering clothes in hotels and restaurants* (5)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-7, 9, 10, 14, 16)
	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking (2, 5, 14, 17)
	Forced labor in agriculture, mining, construction, street vending, and begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (9, 10)
	Use in armed conflict as a result of human trafficking* (18, 19)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Burundian children are trafficked within the country for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(2-4, 10, 20) Children are recruited from rural areas for domestic work and later exploited in commercial sexual exploitation.(10) Women sometimes offer free room and board to girls, but then force the children into commercial sexual exploitation to cover their living expenses; these brothels are located in the poorer areas of Bujumbura, along Tanganyika Lake, on trucking routes, and in other urban centers such as Gitega, Ngozi, and Rumonge.(2, 3, 9, 10) Burundian girls are also trafficked internationally for commercial sexual exploitation in Kenya, the Middle East, Rwanda, Tanzania, and Uganda.(10, 19) Limited evidence suggests children are trafficked to Tanzania for work in agriculture.(21)

During the reporting period, political instability and conflict may have impacted the Government’s ability to address the worst forms of child labor. More than 220,000 Burundians, including 6,000 unaccompanied or separated children, have fled into neighboring countries.(22-24) Limited evidence indicates that Burundian children have been recruited from Rwandan refugee camps by armed Burundian opposition groups for weapons training.(23) In July 2015, 58 children participated in an armed invasion of a military position in Kayanza province; reports indicate that the children were trafficked by opposition groups with false promises of work in Rwanda.(18, 19, 25)

The conflict has impaired children’s access to education as schools have been damaged by grenade blasts.(22, 26) Additionally, a lack of birth registration and the cost of books and uniforms prevented children from accessing free public schooling.(9, 26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Burundi has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 17 of the Law on Basic and Secondary Education (32)

* No conscription (33)

The Labor Code prohibits work by children under age 16 in public and private enterprises, including farms, where such work is carried out under the supervision of an employer. However, the law's minimum age protections do not apply to children outside of formal employment relationships.(27, 34, 35)

The Penal Code contains certain prohibitions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children; however, the law does not prohibit the distribution and possession of child pornography.(30)

Article 45 of the Constitution prohibits the use of children in armed conflict. However, the Penal Code only criminalizes the use of children under age 15 in armed conflict, leaving children ages 15–17 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(30, 36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
General Directorate of Labor and Professional Development	Administer and enforce all labor laws, including those on child labor. Operate within the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS).(37)
National Police and the Brigade for the Protection of Women and Children	Conduct criminal investigations on the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities. The National Police forwards investigation findings to the Ministry of Justice.(1, 7) The Brigade for the Protection of Women and Children, a division of the National Police, is charged with protecting children from commercial sexual exploitation.(1)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute cases of the worst forms of child labor.(14)

According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries, Burundi should employ roughly 123 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(38-41) Research found that financial constraints limited inspectors' ability to adequately enforce labor laws.(38)

During the reporting period, some labor inspectors traveled to the African Regional Labor Administration Center for general training; however, most inspectors learned while on the job. In 2015, labor inspectors only conducted inspections in 10 of Burundi's 18 provinces.(38)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burundi did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown (7)	No (38)
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	No (14)	No (38)

In 2015, the National Police and the Brigade for the Protection of Women and Children did not have adequate resources to effectively enforce laws on the worst forms of child labor.(10) Although the Government enacted an anti-trafficking in persons law in 2014, law enforcement officials did not receive training on its implementation during the reporting period.(10)

Research found that suspects apprehended for the commercial sexual exploitation of children were released without prosecution, sometimes as a result of corruption among law enforcement officials.(10)

During the reporting period, law enforcement officials arrested and detained 58 children for involvement with armed groups.(21, 25) Although 7 of the children were released, 14 children were sentenced to 2 years of imprisonment; the remaining 37 children are awaiting trial.(25)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor, including implementation of community development programs that address the education and socioeconomic reintegration of children engaged in or removed from the worst forms of child labor.(37, 42, 43) Composed of nine ministries and organizations, including the MFPTSS; the Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights, and Gender (MSNDPHG); the Ministry of Elementary and Secondary Education; the Ministry of Justice; the Ministry of Youth; and representatives from UNICEF, youth associations, and civil society organizations.(7)
Trafficking in Persons Permanent Commission	Oversee national anti-trafficking in persons efforts, including implementation of the National Action Plan for Combating Trafficking in Persons.(17, 44) Composed of officials from the MSNDPHG and the Ministries of Justice, Public Security, Foreign Affairs, and Interior.(7)
National Independent Commission for Human Rights	Defend and promote human rights, including efforts against child trafficking and exploitation. Develop an annual report on human rights in Burundi, and report on more specific issues, including the rights of women and children.(6) The Commission is an independent state institution composed of seven members who are elected by the National Assembly and appointed by Presidential decree for a 4-year term.(6) In 2015, the Commission removed seven children under age 15 from detention facilities following their arrest by the Burundian army.(21, 38)
MSNDPHG's Department of the Child and Family	Coordinate, monitor, and oversee children's advocacy and family service programs conducted by public and private organizations. Develop policies and national laws on the promotion and protection of children and families.(45) Child Protection Committees, established at the local level, refer cases to police officers and judicial officials for enforcement; victims are referred to local NGOs for social services.(21)

In 2015, the National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and the Trafficking in Persons Permanent Commission were not operational.(19, 21)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Burundi has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2010–2015)	Aimed to eliminate all of the worst forms of child labor by 2015 and contribute to the elimination of all forms of child labor by 2025.(43)
National Action Plan for Combatting Trafficking in Persons (2014–2017)	Aims to significantly reduce human trafficking in Burundi by 2017 through the adoption of political, social, economic, and institutional measures.(44) Identifies women and children as being the most vulnerable to human trafficking. Lists a number of sectors in which trafficking is believed to exist and attempts to describe the profile of a human trafficker.(14, 44)
National Strategy for Street Children	Plans to prevent children from entering the street, reduce the number of street children, and reintegrate 60 percent of street children into their communities and families by 2016.(46)
PRSP*	Details a 5-year strategy to reduce poverty, increase economic growth and development, and strengthen government institutions, including schools.(13, 20, 37)
UNDAF (2012–2016)	Plans to develop a database for information on the worst forms of child labor, and legislation and regulations for the education and training of children and adolescents.(47)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Burundi

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, the Government did not implement the National Action Plan for Combatting Trafficking in Persons.(19)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Burundi funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2012–2015)	Government program that aimed to reinforce the capacity of the National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor through advocacy and mobilization of necessary resources.(48)
Centers for Family Development†	MSNDPHG-operated centers that address human rights issues, including child exploitation, and reintegrate victims to their home communities.(10, 21) Coordinate with Child Protection Committees to refer victims to local NGOs for care, when necessary.(21) In 2015, the Government provided community awareness on the 2014 Trafficking in Persons Law. In addition, a group of child journalists received training on human trafficking.(19)

† Program is funded by the Government of Burundi.

Research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to assist children in agriculture or industry. Additionally, the scope of existing programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Burundi (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Criminally prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, particularly in the production and trafficking of drugs.	2015
	Establish by law a compulsory education age equal to or higher than the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children working outside of formal employment relationships.	2015
	Ensure that the law protects children under age 18 from all forms of commercial sexual exploitation, including the distribution and possession of child pornography.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that laws criminalize the use of children under age 18 in armed conflict.	2012 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available regarding the Labor Inspectorate's funding, the type of labor inspections conducted, the number of violations found, and the number of convictions achieved.	2013 – 2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors to provide adequate coverage of the workforce, and provide adequate training and resources to all inspectors to ensure that labor inspections, including unannounced inspections, are conducted nationwide.	2009 – 2015
	Establish a mechanism for filing child labor complaints.	2009 – 2015
	Establish a referral mechanism between labor authorities and social service providers.	2009 – 2015
	Increase the number of investigators charged with enforcing criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor, and provide adequate training and resources to ensure that criminal investigations and prosecutions take place.	2009 – 2015
	Cease the detention and prosecution of children forced into armed conflict. Ensure that children are demobilized and receive protective services.	2015
Coordination	Ensure that the National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and the Trafficking in Persons Permanent Commission make efforts to combat and prevent child labor, including its worst forms.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the PRSP.	2012 – 2015
	Take steps to implement the National Action Plan for Combatting Trafficking in Persons.	2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Adopt social programs that address the barriers children face in accessing free public schooling, such as obtaining birth registration and paying for books and uniforms.	2015
	Institute and expand existing programs to address child labor, including in agriculture and industry.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Cabo Verde made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a National List of Dangerous Work for Children and Adolescents and amended the Penal Code to criminalize child trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation. The Government funded several social programs that address child labor, including awareness campaigns. However, children in Cabo Verde are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work. Law enforcement data on labor inspections and criminal investigations is not widely available. In addition, social programs do not target all sectors in which children work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cabo Verde are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work.(1-5) A child labor study conducted in 2012 found that the majority of working children are male and work in rural areas.(4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Cabo Verde.

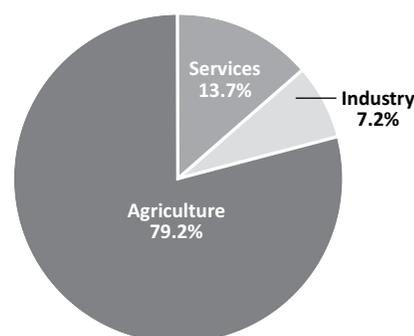

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10-14 yrs.	3.2 (2,392)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	90.1
Combining Work and School (%)	10-14 yrs.	1.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (2-4, 8)
	Raising livestock (2, 4, 5)
	Fishing, activities unknown (2, 4, 8)
Industry	Treating water* (4)
	Construction, including extracting sand*† (9)
Services	Domestic work (1-5)
	Street work, including vending,† garbage scavenging,† car washing, and begging (1-3, 5)
	Working in hotels and restaurants* (4)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 3, 10)
	Use in illicit activities,* including drug trafficking* (2, 11)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Cabo Verde

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The commercial sexual exploitation of both boys and girls, including in the tourism industry, occurs in Cabo Verde. Evidence indicates that children are victims of commercial sexual exploitation in Santa Maria, Praia, and Mindelo.(2, 3, 10) Children are trafficked for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation within Cabo Verde and to Guinea.(3) Children begging and vending goods on the street are particularly vulnerable to human trafficking.(12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cabo Verde has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 261 of the Labor Code (13)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 264 of the Labor Code; Article 133 of the Civil Code (13, 14)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 264 and 267 of the Labor Code; National List of Dangerous Work for Children and Adolescents (13, 15)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 14 of Chapter 1 of the Labor Code; Articles 149, 271, and 271-A of the Penal Code (13, 16, 17)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 149 and 271-A of the Penal Code (16, 17)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 144, 145, 148–150, and 271-A of the Penal Code (16, 17)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 8 of the Drug Trafficking Law (18)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 2 of the Legislative Decree on Military Service (19, 20)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Articles 13 and 20 of the Education Law (22)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 14 of the Education Law (22)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (22)

In July 2015, the Government approved the National List of Dangerous Work for Children and Adolescents, which prohibits children from engaging in 48 activities in agriculture, fishing, mining, manufacturing, construction, domestic work, and services.(5, 15) In November 2015, the Government amended the Penal Code to criminalize child trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation, as well as commercial sexual exploitation of children.(17)

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are self-employed or engaged in unpaid work.(13, 23) Article 262 of the Labor Code provides for an exception to the minimum age provisions for children under age 15 who are engaged in light household chores, agricultural work, or other types of labor that contribute to their physical and mental development, organizational skills, and self-discipline; however, the law does not establish a minimum age for light work, prescribe the number of hours per week permissible for light work, or specify the conditions under which light work may be undertaken.(13, 23)

Laws related to forced labor are insufficient because debt bondage is not criminally prohibited.(16)

The Education Law states that children begin primary school at age 6, and that education is compulsory until grade 10.(22) Thus, education is compulsory until age 15.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Inspector General for Labor (IGT)	Monitor and enforce child labor laws, work closely with the Ministry of Justice and the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA).(24, 25)
Ministry of Justice, including the Judicial Police and the National Police	The Judicial Police conduct criminal investigations and the National Police make arrests related to the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking.(25, 26)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Cabo Verde took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

According to the Government, labor inspectors have adequate office facilities, transportation, fuel, and other resources to adequately carry out inspections; however, the Inspector General for Labor (IGT) does not have national coverage because the office only has representation on Sal, Santiago, and São Vicente Islands.(5)

When IGT inspectors find a case of child labor, they inform the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA) of the case and ICCA reports it to the Ministry of Justice for judicial procedures.(5) In 2015, ICCA provided social services to 37 victims of child labor, 2 of which were referred by the Government's national hotline, Disque Denuncia.(29)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication in Cabo Verde (CNPETI)	Coordinate the execution of the National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor, ensure that national laws comply with international conventions on child labor, and produce yearly reports on child labor issues for the National Assembly. Comprises representatives from 30 institutions, including government agencies, civil society groups, unions, the ILO, and UNICEF.(26, 30) Supervised by ICCA, meets four times a year with other collaborating institutions to discuss implementing, monitoring, and evaluating the National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor.(5, 31)
Children and Adolescent Committee to Prevent and Combat Sexual Abuse and Exploitation	Contribute to the prevention and elimination of child sexual exploitation by coordinating the activities of member organizations and public and private services. Committee members meet yearly.(26) Comprises representatives from the Ministry of Justice, the Institute for Gender and Equality, the Association of Cabo Verdean Journalists, the Solidarity Foundation, the National Commission for Human Rights and Citizenship, and NGOs.(25)
ICCA's National Unit for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor	Promote child's rights, coordinate and monitor the implementation of all national programs and activities to prevent and combat child labor.(31, 32) ICCA delegates are in certain municipalities on the islands of Santiago, Fogo, Sal, São Vicente, and Santo Antão.(30)
Municipal Committee for the Defense of Rights of Children and Adolescents (CMDDCA)	Assist and monitor vulnerable children and their families in municipalities in which no ICCA delegate is present.(1, 30) Seventeen CMDDCAs operate under municipal jurisdictions; they include representatives from the Ministry of Education and Sports, municipalities, health departments, the National Police, courts, and other offices.(1)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Cabo Verde has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor	Prioritizes the eradication of child labor. Outlines specific objectives, including data collection, institutional capacity building, and enhancement of measures to prevent, protect, and remove children from involvement in child labor.(1, 30) Aims to engage multiple stakeholders, such as government agencies, workers' organizations, and child workers and their families, in efforts to achieve these goals.(1, 30)
Regional Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015.(33, 34)
The Code of Ethics Against the Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents	Guides and governs all agencies involved in the tourism sector in Cabo Verde.(35) Approved in July 2014 during a workshop organized by the Ministry of Youth, Employment, and Development of Human Resources and the Chamber of Commerce of Leeward Islands, in partnership with the ILO.(25) Allows the tourism sector to play a prominent role in the fight against the exploitation of children and adolescents, particularly sexual exploitation.(25, 35)

Policy	Description
Poverty Reduction and Growth Plan III (2012–2016)	Identifies strategies to reduce poverty, foster economic development, and bolster education to reduce child labor.(31, 36) Includes plans to develop educational materials on child labor and the sexual exploitation of children.(30)
National Action Plan for Human and Citizenship Rights	Proposes the development of mechanisms to identify cases of child labor involving children under age 14, as well as programs and necessary measures to end these situations. Also plans to develop and increase programs that combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(30)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Cabo Verde funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Awareness Campaigns	Government program implemented by ICCA and the National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication that conducts national awareness campaigns on the worst forms of child labor. In 2015, ICCA released 4,600 copies of a “Stop Child Labor” comic book to students on Santiago island, and published the third edition of the Educational Guide on Violence and Sexual Abuse against Children and Adolescents.(37)
Help for At-Risk Children†	Government program implemented by ICCA that provides education, health services, and professional training to vulnerable children and their families. Eight day centers for street children vulnerable to sexual and labor exploitation operate on Boa Vista, Fogo, Sal, Santiago, Santo Antão, and São Vicente islands.(38) In 2015, assisted 297 vulnerable children.(37)
Child Emergency Centers and Social Protection and Reintegration Centers†	ICCA-run program that operates emergency centers for child victims of abuse and sexual exploitation on Santiago and São Vicente Islands.(3, 26, 30) In August 2015, the Government opened another emergency center on Santo Antão island.(38) The Government also operates five social protection and reintegration centers that provide support and educational integration services to children who have experienced long-term trauma.(3, 5, 26, 38)
Study on Sexual Abuse and Exploitation of Children and Adolescents	Government program in collaboration with UNICEF that analyzes the causes and socio-cultural factors behind child sexual abuse and exploitation. The 2015 report includes a legal and institutional framework analysis to help develop effective policies to combat the problem.(35, 39)
Government Efforts to Increase Access to Education†	Government program supported WFP and UNICEF, led by the Cabo Verdean Foundation for School and Social Support, that ensures school access for disadvantaged children by paying for school fees, school materials, and meals.(27) Secondary education is free for children whose families earn less than $1,670 annually.(2)

† Program is funded by the Government of Cabo Verde.

Although Cabo Verde has programs that target street children, research found no evidence that the Government has programs to assist children involved in agriculture, fishing, and domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cabo Verde (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children who are self-employed or engaged in unpaid work.	2015
	Establish a minimum age for light work and prescribe the number of hours per week and conditions under which light work may be undertaken.	2015
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit debt bondage.	2015
Enforcement	Make law enforcement data publicly available, including information on the labor inspectorate’s funding, number and type of labor inspections conducted, and training for investigators, as well as the number of criminal investigations undertaken, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions achieved.	2011 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Ensure that initial training is provided to new investigators and that all investigators receive training on new laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Ensure that the IGT receives adequate funding to conduct labor inspections on all islands.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine specific activities related to children's work in agriculture and fishing, in order to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture, fishing, and domestic work.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Cambodia made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training adopted a new regulation on the recruitment of young workers that strengthens protections against hazardous work for children ages 15 to 18. The Government also established a policy to reduce child labor in agriculture, a sector in which many Cambodian children are known to work. In order to strengthen efforts to combat human trafficking, including the trafficking of children, the Government adopted a National Plan of Action on the Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, Labor, and Sexual Exploitation, and allocated funding to the National Committee for Counter Trafficking to ensure its implementation. The Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation also approved guidelines to standardize procedures for identifying and protecting victims of human trafficking. To better inform policies and programs that address child labor in Cambodia, a study was published in 2015 on child labor in the sugarcane sector. However, children in Cambodia are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Cambodia does not have a compulsory education requirement, which leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. In addition, insufficient financial and human resources hinder the labor inspectorate's efforts to enforce child labor laws.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cambodia are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. (1-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cambodia.

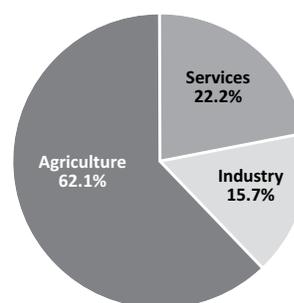

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked to, from, and within Cambodia for commercial sexual exploitation and labor exploitation.(33) Trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation occurs primarily from Cambodia to Thailand, from Vietnam to Cambodia, and within Cambodia, where children are exploited in brothels and other venues, such as beer gardens, massage parlors, salons, and karaoke clubs.(9, 16, 31, 33, 34) Children are trafficked from smaller villages to larger cities and primarily to Malaysia, Thailand, and Vietnam to work as domestic servants.(24, 31, 36, 37) Children are also trafficked to Thailand and Vietnam, where they are forced to beg and work as street vendors.(16, 33, 38)

Access to education remains a challenge in Cambodia. Although the Education Law establishes free basic education, children may be charged additional fees for exams, tutoring, and even class time. These costs are prohibitive for some families.(5, 39-42) In remote areas, children must travel long distances to reach school, and transportation is limited.(5, 27) Children living in relocation sites due to economic land concessions, as well as ethnic minority children living in the northeastern highland provinces, lack sufficient access to educational services.(43, 44) For ethnic minorities, language barriers in schools and an insufficient number of teachers are additional obstacles.(44, 45)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cambodia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	The Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (50, 51)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 42 of the Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (50, 51)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 31 of the Education Law (42)

In November 2015, the Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training (MOLVT) issued a regulation that establishes procedures for recruiting and employing children between the ages of 15 and 18, referred to as young workers. The regulation reiterates that employers must not require young employees to work under dangerous conditions or in the worst forms of child labor.⁽⁵²⁾ It also describes the employer's specific responsibilities with regards to young employees, including verifying identity documents, issuing employment contracts, and providing appropriate vocational training.⁽⁵²⁾

The Labor Law's minimum age protections do not apply to domestic or household workers, which leaves children vulnerable to child labor in this occupation.^(46, 53) Although the Penal Code prohibits the use of a minor to transport, keep, or supply drugs, Cambodian law does not criminally prohibit the procuring or offering of a child for these purposes, nor does it ban the use, procuring, or offering of a child for the production of drugs.^(25, 48) Laws do not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation of children, as the use, procuring, or offering of a child for pornographic performances is not criminally prohibited.

Education is free, but not compulsory, through grade nine.⁽⁴²⁾ The lack of compulsory schooling makes children under age 15, the legal age to work, particularly vulnerable to child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation (MOSAVY)	Accompany the police on investigations, during which child victims may be found, and subsequently refer child victims to NGO services.(4)

In 2015, the MOLVT expanded the number of interdepartmental inspection teams, which each include a child labor inspector, from 24 to 29. The MOLVT reserves five of these teams for urgent inspections.(56-59)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Cambodia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, 24 out of the Department of Child Labor's 58 inspectors were based in Phnom Penh, with an additional 9 inspectors responsible for investigating urgent complaints. One child labor inspector was also stationed in each of Cambodia's 25 provinces to conduct local and regional inspections.(60) Although inspectors from the Department of Child Labor are trained on relevant laws and inspection techniques to identify child labor, the MOLVT lacks standardized guidelines for conducting labor inspections.(56, 62) In 2015, the Department of Child Labor reported that it did not receive any funding for inspection-related costs and that due to these financial constraints, the inspectorate was only able to conduct inspections in and around the capital city of Phnom Penh.(56, 60)

The Department of Child Labor reported that following the adoption of the MOLVT's new regulation on the recruitment of young workers in 2015, 13 new enterprises requested permission to register 557 young workers. Labor authorities also removed 114 young workers from dangerous work.(60) While the MOLVT has other regulations regarding acceptable work for children in agriculture, fishing, tobacco, and cassava production, government officials report that they have not yet begun to enforce these regulations.(19, 62)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cambodia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the Anti-Trafficking Police employed 500 police officers, with approximately 20 in each province, to enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor.(56) The National Committee for Counter Trafficking, in collaboration with several government ministries and NGO partners, provided training for more than 4,000 commune and provincial officials, law enforcement officers, and judicial staff on a variety of anti-human trafficking topics, including legislation, investigative techniques, and evidence collection. Also, during the reporting period, the National Committee for Counter Trafficking and partners provided training courses for 2,495 staff members working at entertainment establishments known to pose high human trafficking risks, such as hotels, guesthouses, and karaoke parlors.(38) These trainings provided instruction on child-safe tourism and the prevention of child labor, among other topics.(38) The Ministry of Interior, however, has not yet introduced anti-human trafficking training into the curriculum of the Cambodian National Police academies.(38, 63)

The Ministry of Justice reported that as a result of investigations, police rescued 73 children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in 2015.(60) The Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation (MOSAVY) and the Cambodian Center for the Protection of Children's Rights also identified 152 child trafficking victims, most of whom were forced to beg or sell lottery tickets in Vietnam. In 2015, the total number of violations related to the worst forms of child labor, as well as data on the number of prosecutions and convictions for these crimes, is unknown, as the Government does not have a comprehensive system in place to collect and report these data.(38) Law enforcement officials refer victims of human trafficking, including children, to NGOs or to provincial social affairs offices to receive assistance. During the reporting period, the MOSAVY finalized and approved guidelines on victim identification, which aim to streamline procedures for identifying victims and referring them to the appropriate services.(38)

In Cambodia, judges have discretion to determine whether perpetrators of crimes related to the worst forms of child labor will be imprisoned or fined, as well as the amount of the fine. In part due to high levels of corruption within the judicial system, the penalties imposed are not uniformly administered and do not adhere to the parameters prescribed by law.(4, 64, 65)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on Child Labor of the Cambodian National Council for Children	Coordinate child labor issues at the national level. Ensure that projects and programs follow the national policy on child labor.(49) Includes all concerned ministries, businesses, trade unions, and NGOs. Provincial Committees on the Protection of Child Rights and Provincial Committees on Child Labor coordinate efforts to address child labor at the provincial level.(49)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for Counter Trafficking	Coordinate government efforts to address human trafficking.(38) At the national level, includes six interministerial working groups, each chaired by a technical ministry, with a selected representatives from civil society serving as a vice chair.(38, 66, 67) Working groups focus on the following areas: prevention; protection, recovery, reintegration, and repatriation; law enforcement; justice; international cooperation; children's affairs; and migration.(67) Member agencies include the Ministry of Education, MOSAVY, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Women's Affairs, and the MOLVT.(38) Oversee a network of Provincial Committees for Counter Trafficking composed of local government officials in each province.(38) In 2015, the Government dedicated greater financial and human resources to the National Committee for Counter Trafficking, including a budget allotment of $500,000 to implement Cambodia's National Plan of Action. Provincial Committees for Counter Trafficking developed action plans to guide human trafficking protection and prevention efforts at the local level, and four of these committees received modest funding from the central government to support anti-human trafficking activities.(38)
Migration Working Group	Coordinate multi-sector participation to address migration issues, gather and monitor data on migration, facilitate information exchange, and provide recommendations on the formulation of agreements with relevant countries. Chaired by the Ministry of Interior and includes representatives from the Government, UN, and NGOs.(66)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Cambodia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action to Tackle Child Labor in Inland and Coastal Fisheries	Incorporates child labor into the Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry, and Fisheries' policies and legal frameworks for fisheries and aquaculture. Assesses work hazards for children in fisheries and aquaculture. Ensures that children who work in fisheries and their families have access to education and livelihood opportunities.(68) Draft guidelines defining types of hazardous activities prohibited for children in the fisheries sector and establishing fines for employers who violate them are awaiting official approval from the Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry, and Fisheries.(69, 70)
Action Plan for Gender Equality Promotion and Child Labor Elimination in the Fisheries Sector (2016–2020)†	Seeks to eliminate child labor and promote gender equality in the fisheries sector nationwide. Focuses on building the capacity of stakeholders to address three issues: (1) promoting economic empowerment for both men and women working in small-scale fishing, (2) preventing and withdrawing children from child labor and hazardous work, and (3) improving mechanisms to monitor and evaluate efforts related to gender equality and the prevention of child labor.(71)
Policy and Strategic Framework on Childhood Development and Protection in the Agricultural Sector (2016–2020)†	Establishes a strategic framework to promote the protection and development of children working in the agricultural sector. Goals include preventing and reducing child labor, especially in hazardous work involving the use of agrochemicals and sharp tools, and improving agricultural vocational training for youth ages 15 through 17.(12)
National Plan of Action on the Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, Labor, and Sexual Exploitation (2014–2018)†	Aims to coordinate efforts to prevent and eliminate all forms of human trafficking by strengthening law and policy enforcement, enhancing prevention efforts, improving criminal justice responses to human trafficking, and protecting victims by providing age- and gender-appropriate support services. Specific activities include strengthening labor law enforcement to protect children from exploitation in entertainment venues, developing standard operating procedures to promote child safety in the tourism industry, integrating anti-human trafficking and child safety issues into the public school curriculum, and promoting the inclusion of vulnerable children in both formal and informal education.(67) Launched in 2015.(38)
Policy and National Minimum Standards for the Protection of the Rights of Victims of Human Trafficking	Establishes guidelines to improve the treatment of victims of trafficking in persons.(72) Lists children among those identified as victims of trafficking in Cambodia and includes the Ministry of Interior's Safety Village Commune/Sangkat Policy Guide, which mandates that local governments take action to end the trafficking of women and children to ensure safe communes.(68, 73)
Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Convention Against Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (ACTIP) (2015)†	Establishes a regional anti-human trafficking framework among 10 Association of Southeast Asian Nations Member States, including Cambodia, to improve coordination on investigation and prosecution of trafficking in persons cases and enhance assistance for victims. Unanimously adopted in June 2015, the Convention was signed by the relevant heads of state on November 21, 2015.(74, 75)

Policy	Description
The Education Strategic Plan (2014–2018)	Outlines a plan to ensure equitable access to educational services, enhance the quality and relevance of learning, and ensure effective leadership and management of educational staff at all levels. Includes programs and activities aimed at improving the response to human trafficking and child labor.(76) Additionally, includes a multilingual education initiative that allows non-native speakers of Khmer language to learn primarily in their mother tongue until grade four.(77)
Multilingual Education National Action Plan (2015–2018)*†	Serves as a roadmap for the implementation of multilingual education in five target provinces in northeastern Cambodia. Aims to improve quality of education for ethnic minority students; strengthen the monitoring and implementation capacity of Ministry of Education, Youth, and Sport officials; and build support for multilingual education among school committees, parents, and local authorities.(44, 78)
National Youth Policy	Aims to afford meaningful opportunities to young adults ages 15 to 30 and provide them with the skills to enhance economic participation.(79)
Rectangular Strategy for Growth, Employment, Equity and Efficiency Phase III (2013–2017)	Defines Cambodia's socioeconomic policy agenda and outlines a strategy for sustainable development and poverty reduction. Includes social protection programs to ensure poor children have access to education; promotes sustainable development of the health sector, including improved sanitation, health, and nutrition of children; and focuses on strengthening law enforcement to be more effective against human trafficking and sexual exploitation of children.(80)
National Employment Policy (2015–2025)*†	Seeks to increase decent and productive employment opportunities for all, to promote skills and human resources development, and to strengthen labor market governance. Addresses the need to provide enhanced education and technical and vocational training, especially for young workers.(81, 82)
National Social Protection Strategy (2011–2015)	Aims to protect the poorest and most disadvantaged populations, mitigate risks by providing coping strategies, and promote poverty reduction by building human capital and expanding opportunities such as access to health, nutrition, and educational services, which will benefit child laborers and their families.(83)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the Department of Child Labor finalized a draft of the second National Plan of Action on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, which replaces the lapsed first National Plan. The draft is currently awaiting formal approval from the Council of Ministers.(70)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Cambodia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Commune Committees for Women and Children†	MOLVT and provincial government program that establishes and trains committees at the commune and village levels to raise awareness about child labor regulations, promote school attendance, and report employers who violate child labor laws.(19)
Cambodians EXCEL: Eliminating Exploitative Child Labor through Education and Livelihoods (2012–2016)	$10 million, USDOL funded, 4-year project to combat child labor in agriculture, fishing, and domestic service. Targets 28,000 child laborers and at-risk children to receive educational services; 14,000 households also receive livelihood services.(84) Addresses a complex set of factors causing child labor, including poverty, limited education access, cultural acceptance of child labor, debt, migration, and lack of regulation in the informal sector.(84) In 2015, contributed to the finalization of the draft National Plan of Action on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(70)
Counter Trafficking in Persons II (CTIP II) (2011–2015)	$5.4 million, USAID-funded, 4-year program implemented by Winrock International to improve the Government and civil society's coordination and capacity to effectively combat all forms of human trafficking. Focuses specifically on addressing the needs of victims of forced labor and sexual exploitation.(85)
Expanding the Evidence Base and Reinforcing Policy Research for Scaling-up and Accelerating Action Against Child Labor	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in seven countries, including Cambodia, to accelerate country-level actions to address child labor by collecting new data; analyzing existing data; building capacity of governments to conduct research in this area; and supporting governments, social partners, and other stakeholders to identify areas of policy intervention against child labor.(86) In 2015, the ILO published the results of a rapid assessment on child labor in the Cambodian sugarcane sector. The study aims to advance knowledge on child labor in a sector in which little information is publicly available in order to shape policies and programs that address the issue.(14)

Program	Description
Street People Committee†	Interministerial committee chaired by MOSAVY that provides direct support for street children. Responsible for determining the number of people living and working on the street, including children, and providing for their needs.(55, 87)
Better Factories Cambodia	Program to monitor garment factories' compliance with national and international labor standards and to work with factories on implementing remediation plans. Works with tripartite partners, including the Government of Cambodia, trade unions, and the Garment Manufacturers Association in Cambodia, and is part of a global partnership between the ILO and the International Finance Corporation.(88) In 2015, identified 18 cases of underage workers in garment factories. Of these 18 children, 10 child workers were provided with compensation and vocational training until they reach the minimum age for employment, and 8 were removed from work.(60)
ILO Decent Work Country Program (2011–2015)	Framework to enhance policies, laws, and enforcement mechanisms to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Endorsed by MOSAVY.(40)
Bilingual Education Programs†	Ministry of Education, Youth, and Sport's bilingual education program for ethnic minority children in preschools and primary schools in three provinces. Targets 2,359 students from grades 1–3 in 27 schools.(87, 89)
UN WFP Country Program (2011–2016)	Australian-funded, 5-year program implemented by the Ministry of Education, Youth, and Sport to improve food security and nutrition, which includes providing breakfast and take-home rations to vulnerable primary school children, and off-season income-generation activities for the poor.(90) Includes a cash scholarship transfer pilot program through a mobile banking system, in partnership with Angkor Microfinance of Kampuchea. Beneficiaries of the program must attend 80 percent of their classes to receive cash assistance that can be used for food or school supplies.(91)

† Program is funded by the Government of Cambodia.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cambodia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Institute a compulsory education age that is at a minimum equal to the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions apply to children working as domestic workers.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the law comprehensively prohibits the procurement, offering, and use of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2015
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit the procurement, offering, and use of a child for pornographic performances.	2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on the amount of funding for the labor inspectorate, the total number of child labor violations found, the number of penalties imposed and collected for child labor violations, and the number of prosecutions and convictions for crimes related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating targeted inspections based on analysis of data related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that a sufficient number of labor inspectors are trained to inspect for child labor violations.	2014 – 2015
	Develop and implement standardized guidelines for conducting child labor inspections.	2011 – 2015
	Provide sufficient resources for the enforcement of child labor laws to ensure inspections are conducted throughout the country.	2010 – 2015
	Enforce regulations regarding child labor in agriculture, tobacco, cassava, and fishing.	2012 – 2015
	Increase anti-human trafficking training for law enforcement officers, including at Cambodian National Police academies.	2014 – 2015
Uniformly administer penalties for violations of child labor laws in accordance with the parameters prescribed by law.	2009 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Government Policies	Approve the new National Plan of Action on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.	2013 – 2015
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Multilingual Education National Action Plan and the National Employment Policy.	2015
Social Programs	Ensure all children have access to free basic education, including by ensuring school fees are not charged and addressing issues related to distance, limited transportation to school, and language barriers.	2013 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Cameroon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Cameroon made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government convicted two individuals under Law N° 2011/024 Relating to the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Slavery, updated its National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children to include a protective policy framework on child labor in domestic work, and announced a National Action Plan for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in Cameroon with combatting child trafficking as a major focus. However, children in Cameroon are engaged in child labor, including in the production of cocoa, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, nor has it prohibited the use of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cameroon are engaged in child labor, including in the production of cocoa. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. (1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cameroon.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	56.2
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	79.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	52.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		72.2

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Forced begging* (4, 18, 21, 33)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3 (d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182

Cameroon is a source, transit, and destination country for child trafficking from neighboring countries in Central and West Africa, and it is increasingly becoming a source country for human trafficking victims sent to Persian Gulf countries.(1, 13, 21, 34) Improved public awareness about child trafficking has reduced the number of parents who willingly give their children to intermediaries promising education or a better life in urban cities. As a result, reports of children being kidnapped for human trafficking purposes have increased, including in Yaoundé.(21, 35) Enforcement officials are becoming more vigilant about requiring parental authorization for children travelling without their parents. Immigration points at land borders, seaports, and airports are also increasingly well monitored, particularly at the borders of Nigeria and the Central African Republic.(21) Child trafficking also occurs internally for the purposes of hereditary slavery in the Northwest Region and three northern regions, though this practice has declined.(2, 5, 21, 36) In the three northern regions, it is a tradition to send boys, or talibés, to Koranic teachers to receive education. While some talibés receive lessons, others are forced by their teachers to beg or perform other work and to surrender the money that they earn.(4, 13, 33, 37) Additionally, the traditional practice of confiage, which involves sending a child to a relative or friend to attend school in a larger town or city, may place children at risk of exploitation by internal human trafficking.(21, 23, 35, 38)

Decree N° 2001/041 on the Organization of Public Schools guarantees free education in Cameroon and the Government has called on schools to stop collecting parent-teacher association fees in accordance with this law.(39, 40) However, due to the late or inadequate disbursement of government funds to schools, families were required to pay for uniforms, books, and other school-related fees.(12, 35, 40-43) During the reporting period, the Government implemented a series of actions to improve access to education, including building schools and classrooms, and recruiting teachers.(35, 40) Girls were also subject to sexual harassment at schools and often dropped out due to early pregnancy or domestic responsibilities.(37) A lack of schools in rural areas and birth registration requirements further hindered access to education as many children are not born in formal health facilities, which issue the declarations necessary to obtain birth certificates.(17, 21, 35, 41) This is particularly true in the Extreme North Region, where UNICEF estimates that approximately 65 percent of children do not have birth certificates.(44) Additionally, children in refugee camps in eastern Cameroon have difficulty accessing education due to a lack of schooling, teachers, and resources to pay for school-related expenses.(26, 45, 46)

Ongoing insecurity along Cameroon’s borders with the Central African Republic and Nigeria has displaced many Cameroonians and strained the Government’s resources for addressing child labor.(21, 43, 47, 48) Boko Haram has attacked numerous villages around the Lake Chad region, burning buildings, killing villagers, and kidnapping children.(24, 31, 32, 49) Boko Haram has repeatedly used children as soldiers and suicide bombers in these attacks, including children as young as age 13.(21, 31, 32) These attacks have forced an estimated 1,100 schools to close in Cameroon, Chad, Niger, and Nigeria. At least 170 of these schools are in Cameroon, affecting approximately 70,000 students, and putting an estimated 29,000 students at risk of losing an entire school year.(26, 28, 31, 32, 45, 47, 49-53) Teachers have left their posts as a result of the conflict and displaced students place an additional strain on existing schools.(19, 26, 45) Refugees and internally displaced children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking.(5, 21, 25, 50, 54)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cameroon has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 46 (2), 47, and 48 of the Decree on the Organization of Public Schools (39)

* No conscription (60, 63)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (40)

Articles 20 and 21 of the Order on Child Labor prohibit hazardous activities for children under age 18, with two exceptions for those age 16 and over. This means that children ages 16 and 17 can legally be employed in hazardous tasks such as operating horizontal winches or pulleys, servicing steam valves, and working on scaffolding without receiving adequate training or ensuring their health, safety, and morals are protected.(56) The Government has acknowledged the need to update the hazardous work prohibitions and is planning to incorporate updates into a revision of the Labor Code.(12) As part of this effort, the National Labor Advisory Commission met in 2015 in order to review and update the list of hazardous activities prohibited to children.(40) Additionally, the prohibitions against child trafficking are insufficient because they require threats, the use of force, or coercion to be established for the crime of child trafficking. In addition, the Law Relating to the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Slavery doubles the penalty if the victim is under 15; thus children ages 16 to 18 are not adequately protected under the law.(57, 58) The Government, with the help of an NGO, national, and international experts, drafted amendments to the Law Relating to the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Slavery in 2012 to bring the law into conformity with international standards. However, the draft is still under consideration.(14)

The Law Orienting the Education System makes education compulsory through primary school, but it does not specifically establish a compulsory education age.(38) Children typically begin education at age 6 and most students complete primary education at age 12.(40) The lack of a clear compulsory education age makes children ages 12 and 13 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school and are below the minimum age for work.(35, 38, 55)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MINTSS)	Lead efforts to enforce child labor laws, promote decent working conditions, and fight against child trafficking in cooperation with other government bodies, including the ministries of Social Affairs, Employment and Vocational Training, Justice, Women's Empowerment and Family, Territorial Administration and Decentralization, and Tourism.(12, 21) Primarily concerned with the welfare of vulnerable groups, including women, children, and indigenous groups. Advocate on behalf of victims, present complaints to court, and provide social services to victims of child labor.(43)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Contribute to investigations through police and gendarmes, and through the prosecution of offenders as appropriate.(43, 64)
Ministry of Social Affairs (MINAS)	Lead Government efforts to combat human trafficking, including by raising awareness.(21) Provide social services and protection to victims of child trafficking, including education, vocational training, and shelter.(12, 65, 66) Maintain a hotline for reporting child trafficking cases or child labor complaints as part of the National Referral System.(40) Coordinate repatriation for victims of human trafficking in cooperation with the Ministry of External Relations.(44) In the case of the Directorate of Social Protection of the Child, oversee 10 regional delegations; the Operational Technical Unit provides social services and maintains Centers for Social Action.(65) In the case of the Minors Brigade, work within the public security sections of local police stations to investigate reports of child trafficking and the use of children in hazardous work.(4, 64, 67)
Ministry of Women's Empowerment and Family (MINPROFF)	Enforce criminal laws against forced child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. Promote the protection of children's rights.(12, 67)
Ministry of Defense's National Gendarmerie (SED)	Enforce criminal laws against child trafficking and investigate violations of child labor laws throughout the country in both rural and urban areas.(1, 43)
General Delegate for National Security (DGSN)	Enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor and investigate violations in urban areas.(1, 43) In the case of the DGSN's Special Vice Squad, a technical department within INTERPOL's National Central Bureau, investigate cases of human trafficking, child soldiering, and commercial sexual exploitation of women and children through regional and international police cooperation. Refer cases to the MOJ or the Ministry of Defense for further investigation or prosecution.(1)
Ministry of Territorial Administration and Decentralization	Enforce child labor laws at the regional level. Local representatives may settle child labor disputes amicably or refer the case to the SED, DGSN, or MOJ for further investigation and prosecution.(43)
National Commission on Human Rights and Freedoms	Promote and protect human rights and investigate human rights abuses.(64, 67) Report wrongdoing, advocate for victims, and assist victims of human trafficking with settling lawsuits.(43)
Joint Mobile Brigade	Work to prevent and combat the phenomenon of street children in Yaoundé and Douala by identifying street children, providing temporary shelter, reintegrating them into their families, and educating families whose children have returned home on the root causes of the phenomenon to prevent these children from returning to the streets.(4, 43, 68)
Ministry of External Relations	Provide assistance in repatriating victims of child trafficking in cooperation with MINAS.(43)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Cameroon should employ roughly 607 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(71, 72) Moreover, some reports indicate that funding for labor inspectorates throughout the country was not equal. Most labor brigades reported having inadequate resources to conduct inspections as these are funded from the agency's general appropriations rather than a dedicated budget line item.(1, 73) In addition, because existing legislation does not explicitly extend to the informal sector, inspections are generally limited to the formal sector.(1, 73) The ILO CEACR has also expressed concern that the inspectors are not sufficiently familiar with labor laws.(74)

Although there are no comprehensive statistics on child labor law violations, human rights organizations reported that at least five cases were resolved outside the court system during the reporting period, with perpetrators providing some compensation to victims.(1, 14) There is no formal referral mechanism; however, authorities worked together to ensure that victims of child labor received social services.(40)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

It is unclear how many investigators the Government employed in 2015, although officers from the National Police and National Gendarmerie, Special Vice Squad, and Cameroon Border Police all worked to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. In general, agencies do not receive adequate funding to investigate the worst forms of child labor.(1, 21) The Ministry of Social Affairs (MINAS), the police, and INTERPOL each maintain a hotline where individuals can report cases of child labor violations or other worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking. However, it is not known how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of complaints made to these lines.(40) Two NGOs provided assistance to at least 43 victims of child trafficking during the reporting period.(21) There are also some reports that the Government holds young boys in detention for prolonged periods due to suspicion of being affiliated with Boko Haram elements.(31, 32, 54)

Although there are no comprehensive statistics on criminal child labor law violations, at least 20 prosecutions were initiated and an unknown number of victims received remediation and restitution from trafficking offenders outside the judicial system.(5, 21, 40) Of the 20 prosecutions, 2 individuals were convicted under the Law Relating to the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Slavery.(21) The offenders reportedly gave money to the parents of the child trafficking victims in order to avoid a legal case. As a result, the parents did not cooperate with the authorities and each perpetrator received a sentence significantly below the maximum allowed by law.(21)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Combat Child Labor (CNLCTE)	Coordinate government efforts to combat child labor, propose measures to harmonize Cameroon's legal framework to international standards, and implement the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children (PANETEC).(1, 15, 75, 76) Led by MINTSS.(75) In 2015, updated statistical data on child labor with the National Institute of Statistics, reviewed proposed hazardous work list revisions, drafted a media plan in coordination with the Ministry of Communication, and revised PANETEC to include the protective policy framework on child labor in domestic work.(1, 11, 77, 78)
Inter-Ministerial Committee (IMC)	Coordinate government efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including by training stakeholders, proposing legislation, and ratifying international instruments. The Secretary General of the Office of the Prime Minister chairs the Committee, which includes members of eight ministries, law enforcement personnel, civil society organizations, and NGOs active in anti-trafficking work.(21, 69) Oversee three Regional Taskforces on Trafficking in Persons that carry out the Government's anti-trafficking efforts at the local level in Northwest, Southwest, and Littoral provinces.(14, 44) In 2015, only the Southwest and Northwest Regional Taskforces were active, raising awareness of child trafficking issues through radio broadcasts.(14, 21)

In 2015, the Prime Minister issued Order N° 083/PM to amend the membership of the National Committee to Combat Child Labor extending membership to additional stakeholders and adding representatives from MINAS and the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training as Deputy Chairpersons.(1) The Inter-Ministerial Committee did not carry out any meaningful activities in 2015 and its ability to coordinate among stakeholders and provide oversight to the Regional Taskforces on Trafficking in Persons was limited.(40, 43) In addition, a lack of resources and a clear mandate limited the effectiveness of the Taskforces.(21)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Cameroon has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
PANETEC (2014–2016)	Aims to eradicate the worst forms of child labor by 2016 while reinforcing a long-term institutional framework for the abolition of child labor. Aims to harmonize national laws with international standards, provide quality universal primary education, and allocate additional resources to the labor inspectorate.(1, 12, 23, 73, 79) Establishes responsible agencies, actions to be taken, timelines, and concrete measures related to preventing child labor and child trafficking.(44) In 2015, assisted member institutions with developing individual action plans in support of PANETEC and launched an initiative to recruit 385 jobless youth in the Far North Region as an attempt to prevent youth from enlisting in Boko Haram .(21, 77)

Policy	Description
Trafficking in Persons Action Plan	Outlines efforts to prosecute and convict human trafficking offenders, educate law enforcement personnel and social workers, develop and enact legislation prohibiting the trafficking of adults, and train enforcement personnel on how to use the human trafficking database.(80)
National Action Plan for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in Cameroon (2015–2019)†	Addresses all forms of human rights, including children's rights. Aims to combat child trafficking by disseminating standard operating procedures for the National Referral System, raises awareness about how to identify and report cases of child trafficking, establishes a collaboration mechanism on human trafficking, increases punishments for offenders, builds the capacity of labor inspectors, and accelerates the ratification of relevant ILO conventions.(1, 21) Additionally, addresses gaps in the education sector, including the shortage of teachers and classrooms, a lack of legal framework to regulate parent-teacher associations, and a low rate of educational attainment for girls.(1)
Decent Work Country Program (2014–2017)	Incorporates child labor concerns into the strategy for work.(6)
PRSP (2010–2020)*	Includes the overall goals of poverty reduction; increased access to health and social services; and improved infrastructures, such as education.(81)
Country Program Action Plan (2013–2017)*	UNICEF and government-implemented program that addresses the full development of young children and builds on the previous Country Program Action Plan. Aims to improve access to quality education, expand employment opportunities, and promote active participation of youth in society.(4, 43, 69)
National Gender Policy Document (2011–2020)*†	Coordinated and managed by the IMC, aims to promote access to education for girls, increase access to training for adults and youth, improve access to health services, and strengthen the institutional framework for gender promotion.(1, 21, 82, 83) Specifies responsible agencies and actions to be taken within the timeframe.(83)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children (PANETEC) was endorsed by stakeholders in 2014, it has yet to be formally endorsed by the Government.(40, 78) However, the Government of Cameroon, with support from the ILO, provided trainings and held a series of consultations for PANETEC stakeholders during the reporting period, with the goal of effectively implementing PANETEC. As a result, many agencies included funding for activities in support of PANETEC in their 2016 budgets, including the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MINTSS), which budgeted approximately $46,000 for an extensive awareness-raising campaign.(1, 78) The Government also officially released the National Gender Policy Document in 2015, which had been in draft form since 2011.(1, 40)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Cameroon funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (GAP)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Cameroon, aims to build the capacity of the National Government to develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor, and to strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers.(77, 84) In 2015, included a protective policy framework document on the elimination of child labor in domestic work and the protection of domestic workers of legal age in a revised PANETEC.(77, 78)
National Referral System†	MINAS project with IOM support that implemented standard operating procedures to provide assistance to vulnerable children and victims of exploitation. Provides shelter, medical care, psychological support, and reintegration services.(5, 21) In 2015, removed at least 20 children from living on the street and placed them in government-funded shelters.(1)
Project to Fight the Phenomenon of Street Children†	MINAS-funded program that gathers information on street children and offers health care, education, and psychosocial care. In 2015, identified 120 street children and reunited 72 of them with their families.(1)

Program	Description
Centers for Children in Need†	MINAS- and MINPROFF-operated shelters for women and children in need. MINAS-run shelters are located in four regions of Cameroon and MINPROFF operates at least one shelter in every region that provides vocational and educational training for girls and women.(18, 43, 85) Victims of child trafficking are placed in MINAS-run shelters and are given lodging, food, health care, psychological care, education, vocational training, and family tracing as appropriate.(18, 21)
Country Program Action Plan (2013–2017)†	UNICEF- and MINAS-implemented program aiming to improve social protection, ensure access to primary education, and improve preventative health care.(1, 86) Aims to improve conditions in refugee camps in the East Region by providing education, clean drinking water and sanitation facilities, vaccinations, and by building child-friendly spaces.(67) In 2015, focused on the delivery of essential services in refugee camps, such as education and child protection, including the risk of recruitment into Boko Haram .(1)
School Feeding Program†	Programs funded by U.S. Department of Agriculture, WFP, and the Ministry of Education that provide meals to help improve the educational goals of girls in targeted geographic zones.(4, 42) Feeding programs funded by WFP and the Ministry of Education benefit an average of 55,366 girls annually in the Extreme North, North, and Adamaoua Regions.(42) The U.S. Embassy in Yaoundé and the USDA fund Food for Education, which operates in the North Region and promotes the use of school gardens to improve food security. Since the program began in 2013, it has provided breakfast and lunch to 95,867 primary school students and financed the construction of 497 school buildings and 12 wells.(40)
Direct Cash Transfer†	Government program that provides limited direct cash transfers to street children on an ad hoc basis.(42)
Emergency Fund for the Far North†	$133 million government-funded program that will finance 94 development projects in order to alleviate unemployment and generate income in border communities that have been affected by insecurity.(25)

† Program is funded by the Government of Cameroon.

In 2013, MINTSS evaluated the programs that had been implemented to prevent and combat child labor since 2003, but the results of the study have yet to be released.(4, 43, 69) Although the Government has implemented programs to assist victims of child trafficking and children engaged in street work and in domestic work, the scope of these programs are insufficient and do not fully address the extent of the problem; funding was reduced during the reporting period.(1) Additionally, research did not find evidence of programs to specifically address child labor in agriculture, mining, and quarrying.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cameroon (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2013 – 2015
	Criminally prohibit the use of children for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that all hazardous activities are prohibited for children under age 18.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that laws prohibiting child trafficking do not require threats, the use of force, or coercion to be considered child trafficking and that all children under age 18 are protected.	2015
	Ensure that there is not a gap between the age for compulsory education and the established minimum age for work.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Collect and make publicly available comprehensive statistics on enforcement efforts, including the amount of funding allocated to the labor inspectorate, the total number and type of inspections conducted, violations found, and penalties imposed.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that labor inspectorates and criminal law enforcement agencies receive an adequate amount of funding with which to conduct inspections and investigations.	2009 – 2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating targeted inspections based on analysis of data related to at-risk sectors and patterns of serious incidents, including in the informal sector.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that labor inspectors are familiar with all laws related to child labor by providing regular refresher course on child labor issues.	2013 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Establish a mechanism to log all calls to the child protection hotline and track cases of child labor for referral to law enforcement or social services providers.	2015
	Ensure that young boys are not held in detention without reasonable evidence of wrongdoing.	2015
Coordination	Ensure that existing coordinating mechanisms carry out their mandates.	2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2010 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure that all children, regardless of birth registration or refugee status, have access to education by eliminating school-related fees, eliminating sexual harassment of girls, and ensuring an adequate number of schools throughout the country.	2009 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem in Cameroon and institute programs to address child labor in agriculture, mining, and quarrying.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly,

- on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

In 2015, the Central African Republic made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In May, 10 armed groups signed a formal agreement with the Transitional Government to end the recruitment and use of children in armed combat and facilitate the separation of children from their ranks. Additionally, the Government established an Interministerial Committee to Combat Human Trafficking and approved an Education Program to rehabilitate and equip more than 300 schools. However, children in the Central African Republic are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in illicit activities and armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment by nongovernmental armed groups. An estimated 1.4 million children lacked access to education as a result of ongoing instability and limited resources hampered the Government's ability to implement policies and programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Central African Republic (CAR) are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in illicit activities and armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment by nongovernmental armed groups.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in CAR.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	31.0 (373,742)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	63.1

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Central African Republic

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Sectarian violence has plagued CAR since 2013, and armed groups remain in control of large parts of the country. The ongoing insecurity has impacted the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.(6, 22, 32-44) Despite a July 2014 cease-fire agreement, armed groups have continued to perpetrate violence against civilians and engage in fighting with other armed factions, displacing an estimated 800,000 civilians.(5, 7, 13, 22, 26, 43, 45-47) Reports indicate that some children in refugee camps may be vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation by peacekeeping troops, sometimes in exchange for food.(5, 7, 13, 31, 46, 48-55)

The UN reported that non-state armed groups continued to recruit and use child soldiers during the reporting period, sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment.(4, 5, 7, 14, 18, 27, 42, 56-58) An estimated 6,000 to 10,000 children associated with armed groups, some as young as age 8, are used to carry supplies; monitor checkpoints; and serve as combatants, cooks, lookouts, and concubines.(1, 5-7, 18, 19, 24, 28, 30, 59-64) Some children have reportedly been used as human shields by armed men.(5, 7) There are also reports that children from neighboring countries have been recruited by CAR armed groups, and that children in CAR have been abducted for forced labor and/or forced soldiering by the Lord's Resistance Army, a rebel group that operates in CAR.(4-7, 14, 16, 30, 65) Catholic Relief Services reported that 145 children were abducted from CAR between April 2015 and January 2016 for use by the Lord's Resistance Army; 128 had been released as of February 2016.(30) The Government worked with the UN Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in CAR (MINUSCA), UNICEF, and other partner agencies to prioritize the demobilization and reintegration into community life of these children.(22, 44, 47, 64, 66)

Although the Constitution provides free education, associated fees and a severe lack of textbooks, schools, and teachers, particularly in rural areas, limit access to education for an estimated 1.4 million, or 30 percent, of school-aged children.(6, 14, 43, 58, 65, 67, 68) Teachers and civil servants who fled during the conflict have yet to return and others have been threatened, attacked, or killed. Some schools have been used by armed groups, including as military bases and for recruiting children into their ranks.(5-7, 14, 65, 68, 69) Many schools have been closed for lengthy periods of time due to destruction, damage, or looting as a result of the conflict, and others are occupied by displaced civilians.(5-7, 14, 27, 65, 68-71) Additionally, some students do not attend school due to safety concerns.(14) Birth registration is required for children to enroll in school; however, birth registration was not possible in all areas of CAR in 2015 and the associated cost of registering births made it prohibitive to some.(30, 65, 71, 72) Additionally, members of the armed group ex-Séléka reportedly looted and destroyed the records at birth registration offices throughout the country.(65)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

CAR has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Ordinance N° 84/031; Article 7 of the Constitution (67, 76, 77)

* No conscription (30)

Article 261 of the Labor Code mandates that the Ministry of Labor and Ministry of Public Health, in consultation with the Permanent National Labor Council, issue a joint order determining the types of activities and occupations prohibited for children, but this has yet to be issued.(72, 73) The types of hazardous work prohibited for children are not comprehensive, and do not cover diamond mining, an area of work where there is evidence of children working in hazardous conditions, under water, and carrying heavy loads.(10-12) Additionally, the law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, as the possession and distribution of child pornography are not criminally prohibited. In addition, the law does not criminally prohibit an individual from benefiting from the sexual exploitation of children.(73, 75) Research did not uncover a public version of the Government's legislation with regard to minimum age for voluntary military recruitment.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, Social Security, and Employment	Monitor and enforce laws related to child labor.(78) In 2015, established the Child Labor Prevention Service dedicated to combatting child labor through inspections, investigations, and awareness-raising activities.(3, 79) Although allocated a provisional budget of $1.3 million to carry out activities for 2015, the Child Labor Prevention Service did not receive this funding.(3, 79)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Investigate cases of the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities. The MOJ shares this responsibility with CAR's police forces.(78)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Promotion of Gender, and Humanitarian Action (MSA)	Oversee child soldier issues and lead the Government's anti-trafficking policy efforts through the National Council on Child Protection.(30) Refer victims of child trafficking to NGOs and maintain an orphanage for children at risk of trafficking.(30)
Special Criminal Court*	Comprised of national and international magistrates, the Court investigate serious human rights abuses committed since 2003, including the use of children in armed conflict.(13, 44, 46, 80, 81)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

In June 2015, the Transitional Government promulgated a law that was passed in April to establish the Special Criminal Court.(5, 13, 44, 80, 81) Although the Government drafted the decrees necessary to implement the Court's functioning, developed job descriptions to recruit staff, and identified a building to enable the investigation and prosecutorial activities of the Court, it was not operational during the reporting period.(13, 81) The Ministry of Justice (MOJ), with the support of MINUSCA, developed a strategic plan to gradually reopen courts and detention facilities throughout the country and process the backlog of cases. In 2015, 18 of the country's 28 courts were staffed with magistrates.(44)

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

Labor inspectors receive training on topics such as statistics, law, and sociology when they are first hired, in addition to on-the-job training during a probationary period. When funding is available, inspectors are sent to Cameroon or other countries for additional training.(79) Despite an increase since 2014, the number of labor inspectors remains insufficient to address the scope of the problem according to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, which is roughly 56 inspectors for CAR.(3, 85-87)

The ongoing violence in CAR has limited the Government's ability to enforce child labor laws in many areas, especially in areas controlled by armed groups.(3, 22) The Government's efforts were further hindered by a lack of labor inspectorate capacity and inadequate financial and material resources, including transportation, office facilities and supplies, and computers. Child labor violations may be reported in person to the labor inspectorate in Bangui, but there is no mechanism to report child labor violations in other parts of the country.(79) Research indicates that violations were common in all sectors of the economy.(3, 65, 79, 82, 83, 88) The Ministry of Public Service, Labor, Social Security, and Employment works closely with the MOJ; Ministry of Social Affairs, Promotion of Gender, and Humanitarian Action (MSA); and UNICEF to provide assistance to victims of child labor.(79)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in CAR took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

† Data are from April 1, 2013 to March 31, 2014.

The first criminal trials since 2011 were held in Bangui in June and July 2015; however, none of these trials were related to the worst forms of child labor.(30, 79) Of the six juvenile courts in CAR, only the one located in Bangui functions. However, it lacks the staff and resources to conduct investigations.(14) The weak judicial system and absence of state authority outside of Bangui has led to a lack of trust in the system and the inability to access formal judicial processes.(5, 14) Criminal acts were widely resolved through traditional methods across the country, often to the exclusion of formal legal proceedings.(4) Research also indicates that although law enforcement officials received training on how to identify and investigate cases of human trafficking, government officials outside of the capital may lack the means and the capacity to enforce the law, including not having access to copies of relevant laws.(4, 30)

There are no formal referral mechanisms, and the Government did not identify any child trafficking victims during the reporting period. UNICEF and MINUSCA identified and separated at least 2,679 children from armed groups during the reporting period and NGOs identified and provided services to 104 victims of human trafficking, including shelter, psychosocial care, health services, and resettlement.(4, 7)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for the Protection of Children	Coordinate policies and strategies to protect children from sexual exploitation and child soldiering. Overseen by the Prime Minister's Office and comprised of government ministries, NGOs, and international organizations.(10, 30, 57, 91)
Interministerial Committee to Combat Human Trafficking*	Overseen by the Ministry of Public Security, investigates and combats human trafficking in CAR.(4)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

The National Council for the Protection of Children did not meet in 2015 for the third straight year. The Interministerial Committee to Combat Human Trafficking, which was created in March 2015, did not carry out any activities during the reporting period.(72, 79)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of CAR has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Bangui Forum Agreement†	Formal agreement signed by 10 armed groups and the Transitional Government on May 5, 2015, to end the recruitment and use of children in armed combat and facilitate the separation of children from their ranks.(3, 5, 7, 13, 24, 28, 44, 47, 64, 92, 93) Since the signing of the agreement, 1,446 child soldiers were released from armed groups and received psychosocial support and reintegration services from UNICEF, some as part of this agreement.(5, 7, 23, 30, 57, 62)
Child Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Policy†	MSA policy that aims to facilitate the disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration of child soldiers in CAR.(5)

Central African Republic

Policy	Description
UNDAF (2012–2016)	Aims to continue peace-building efforts, strengthen the rule of law, and accelerate progress toward the Millennium Development Goals. Commits to improving reintegration activities for child ex-combatants, improving access to protective services for children, and increasing primary school attendance and access to quality education.(29, 94)
National Action Plan for Education for All (2003–2015)*	Aimed to improve enrollment and completion rates for primary school. Also called for the establishment of informal schools in rural areas to provide access to education for children, between the ages of 8 and 15, who have never attended school.(95, 96)
National Strategy for the Education Sector (2008–2020)*	Aims to improve access and retention in all levels of education by constructing 800 classrooms per year between 2008 and 2015, improving the quality and effectiveness of education, recruiting additional teachers, encouraging the establishment of private schools, and conducting awareness-raising campaigns that promote the importance of education.(97)
National Poverty Reduction Strategy II (2011–2015)*	Established a national framework for encouraging growth and reducing poverty. Focused on promoting security and peace, reviving the economy through regional integration, and developing human capital and social services.(95, 98)
2010 N'Djamena Declaration of the Regional Conference: Ending Recruitment and Use of Children by Armed Forces and Groups	Represents a commitment among the signatory countries, including CAR, to eliminate the use of child soldiers. All efforts to demobilize and reintegrate child soldiers have been taken under this declaration.(99)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government of CAR has adopted the Bangui Forum Agreement that seeks to address child soldiering, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor. In 2015, the MSA, in collaboration with an NGO, began drafting a National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking.(4, 72, 79) This replaces a previous action plan drafted in collaboration with UNICEF in 2007 that was not implemented due to a lack of resources.(30) A draft of a national policy addressing the elimination of child labor has yet to be adopted.(72, 88) Research was unable to determine whether the UNDAF, National Action Plan for Education for All, National Strategy for the Education Sector, or the National Poverty Reduction Strategy II were implemented during the reporting period.(79)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of CAR participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Regional Strategy to Combat Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants (2015–2020)*	$24.7 million UNODC-funded program implemented in conjunction with ECOWAS and the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS) that aims to improve the capacity of West and Central African countries to combat human trafficking and the smuggling of migrants in accordance with the Palermo Protocol.(100) Aims to improve regional coordination in terms of data collection, information sharing, criminal prosecution, and victim protection.(100)
Education Cluster	Funded by the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (UNOCHA) and led by UNICEF, develops and coordinates the implementation of an education program in collaboration with the Ministry of Education for schools that are able to reopen. Establishes Temporary Spaces for Learning and Child Protection (ETAPE) in internally displaced persons sites in Bangui to provide safe learning environments and child protection services.(68, 70)
Shelters for Unaccompanied Children	UNICEF-supported centers in Bangui that provide immediate care, food, and psychosocial support to unaccompanied children and former child soldiers.(56)
Education Program*	$23.4 million European Union-funded program to strengthen educational services by rehabilitating and equipping more than 300 schools in 4 prefectures and the capital, Bangui. Provides training for teachers, support for parent-teacher associations, and care for children released from armed groups.(101)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

Although the Government participates in a program that assists former child soldiers, the scope of this program is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(5, 14, 102) Additionally, the Government was unable to provide direct reintegration programs to former child soldiers due to a lack of resources, which left victims vulnerable to exploitation or re-recruitment by armed groups.(4, 5) Research found no evidence that the Government has programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, largely due to a lack of governmental capacity and funding.(3, 22)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in CAR (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict.	2013 – 2015

	Create a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations and/or activities prohibited for children in consultation with employers’ and workers’ organizations.	2013 – 2015
	Establish criminal prohibitions for the possession and distribution of child pornography, and for benefiting from the proceeds of the sexual exploitation of children.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that enforcement agencies have sufficient resources and allocated funding to enable government officials to enforce laws related to child labor throughout the country.	2009 – 2015
	Make data publicly available on the labor inspectorate’s funding level, the number and type of investigations conducted, violations found, penalties imposed, prosecutions initiated, and convictions made.	2014 – 2015
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in accordance with the ILO’s standards.	2009 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure that existing coordination mechanisms function as intended and aim to combat all forms of child labor, including its worst forms.	2011 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into education and poverty reduction policies.	2009 – 2015
	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor and ensure adequate funding to fully implement action plans and policies.	2014 – 2015
	Implement established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Improve access to education by eliminating school-related fees; ensure that there are an adequate number of teachers and classrooms throughout the country; ensure that children can safely access education; and ensure that schools are safe spaces, free from armed groups.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that all children have access to birth registration.	2013 – 2015
	Expand programs to assist former child combatants and children associated with armed groups.	2009 – 2015
	Implement programs to address the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as

- a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development as determined by the UN.
86. UN. “World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex.” (2012); http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.
87. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

In 2015, Chad made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government drafted a National Action Plan on Human Trafficking and created a Working Group on the Worst Forms of Child Labor. The Government also adopted a law on cybercrime that makes the production, distribution, and possession of child pornography a crime. However, children in Chad are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work, and in the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in cattle herding and domestic work. The legal framework does not contain criminal penalties for forced child labor, child trafficking, or the use of children in illicit activities. Additionally, the labor inspectorate lacks an adequate number of inspectors and resources to effectively enforce child labor laws throughout the country.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chad are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in cattle herding and domestic work. (1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Chad.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	29.6 (1,073,282)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	47.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	18.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		38.1

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3-6)
	Forced labor in domestic work, fishing,* herding cattle, begging, street vending,* and agriculture,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2-5, 11, 12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Child trafficking occurs primarily within Chad, although children are occasionally trafficked to neighboring countries for forced labor in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 4, 11, 12) Boko Haram members sometimes kidnap children from Chad for use in armed conflict in Nigeria.(13) Domestically, boys known as mahadjirine are sent to Koranic schools to receive an education; some of them are forced to beg and to surrender the money they receive to their teachers.(2-4, 9, 11, 14)

The Constitution and the Law Orienting the Education System mandate free and compulsory education in Chad.(15, 16) However, there is a lack of schools throughout the country, and parents are often required to pay for part of teachers' salaries, textbooks, and other school-related fees, which may prevent some children from attending school.(14) Additionally, Boko Haram's attacks on villages around the Lake Chad region have forced an estimated 1,100 to 2,000 schools to close in Chad, Cameroon, Niger, and Nigeria, and have displaced up to an estimated 1.4 million children.(1, 17-21)

During the reporting period, Chad hosted an estimated 526,140 foreign refugees—including separated and unaccompanied children displaced by instability in neighboring Nigeria, the Central African Republic, and South Sudan.(1, 11, 14, 22-28) In addition, decreased revenue from falling oil prices and increased costs associated with combating Boko Haram has affected the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.(11)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Chad has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 9 of the Law Orienting the Education System; Article 35 of the Constitution (15, 16)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (15)

In February 2015, the Government adopted the Law on Cyber Security and Fight Against Cyber Criminality that criminally prohibits the production, distribution, and possession of child pornography.(1, 34) Several additional laws are awaiting approval by the National Assembly, including the Child Protection Code and an amendment to the Penal Code. Both laws contain provisions criminalizing child trafficking.(2, 4, 11, 25, 35-38) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJHR) also worked with UNODC to draft specific legislation on trafficking in persons, which is pending adoption; this legislation will supplement the Child Protection Code and amendments to the Penal Code.(4, 11, 39, 40) Existing laws related to forced labor do not criminally prohibit debt bondage, slavery, or the forced labor of children.(16, 30, 31) In addition, laws related to child trafficking are insufficient, as they do not criminally prohibit domestic or international child trafficking, child trafficking for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation or forced labor. The draft legislation prohibiting human trafficking addresses these concerns, including for child trafficking victims.(41) In the past, the Government of Chad has used Articles 289 and 290 of the Penal Code, which prohibit kidnapping, to prosecute cases of child trafficking.(10, 11, 31)

The Government drafted a revision to the Labor Code in 2013 to extend protection to children working in the informal sector and to update its hazardous worklist, which had not been reviewed since 1969. However, this draft has not been formally adopted.(1, 11, 42) The Decree Relating to Child Labor prohibits certain hazardous activities for children under age 18 and some other activities for children under age 16.(29, 38) This means that children ages 16 and 17 can work legally in hazardous tasks, such as working with hand- or foot-powered machinery, operating machinery with sharp blades, and working on scaffolding in construction sites.(29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment (MOL)	Implement and enforce child labor laws.(10, 14) Includes a directorate and specific point of contact to assist in coordinating child protection and human trafficking issues.(11)
Ministry of Women, Childhood Protection, and National Solidarity (MWCPNS)	Work to prevent child abuse and endangerment, and train government personnel on the rights of women and children, including victims of human trafficking.(1, 11, 12) Provide protection, assistance, and interim accommodations for children removed from dangerous situations, including child soldiers removed from the military, child trafficking victims, and children removed from exploitative child labor. (1, 11, 14) Through its Child Protection Directorate, act as the Government's focal point for issues related to human trafficking and liaise with Child Protection Directorates in other ministries.(11)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJHR)	Draft and enforce laws, including child labor laws and laws on human trafficking.(11) Through its Directorate General of Human Rights, coordinate efforts by local and international NGOs to protect human rights. Chair the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons (ICTIP).(10, 14)
National Police's Child Protection Brigade	Enforce criminal laws against child labor, including its worst forms, and investigate cases of child labor, including those involving human trafficking.(1, 10, 39) Located throughout the country.(11, 43)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Defense's Child Protection Committees	From its locations in N'Djamena and in each of the eight defense and security zones, coordinate the MWCPNS' protection of children's rights and implements awareness-raising activities.(44) Comprising representatives from 10 government agencies, the National Army, the Gendarmerie, the National Nomadic Guard, and civil society organizations.(11, 39) Prevent abuse and exploitation of children, including child labor, child trafficking, use of children in armed conflict, and forced labor through policy and advocacy.(1, 11, 39)

In 2015, the Government addressed the need for a specific program focusing on children's rights and child protection issues by realigning the Ministry of Women, Social Action, and National Solidarity to become the Ministry of Women, Childhood Protection, and National Solidarity (MWCPNS). The change became official in February 2016.(1, 39) The MWCPNS's Child Protection Committees, which function at the regional level to address child labor, worked effectively with NGOs to identify some victims of exploitation and provide support during the reporting period. However, they lacked adequate support from MWCPNS, as well as financial resources.(4, 11, 45) The Government and UNICEF also inaugurated new headquarters for the Child Protection Brigade.(1, 11)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Chad took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not make this information publicly available.

According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Chad should employ roughly 127 labor inspectors to enforce labor laws adequately throughout the country.(46-48) The Government also acknowledges that inspectors lack resources, including transportation, and primarily respond to complaints.(1, 11, 14, 49) Research indicates that the informal sector, in which the majority of children work, is largely unmonitored.(2) In addition, the Government also reports that labor inspectors spend the majority of their time reconciling disputes rather than enforcing labor laws.(49) Individuals may file complaints with the local police, which refers cases of child labor violations to the Ministry of Justice, which in turn collaborates with the MOL as necessary.(39) The Child Protection Brigade responds to reports of child labor and refers cases to the MOL. Victims are referred to MWCPNS for temporary shelter, legal assistance, and social reintegration, which NGOs sometimes facilitate.(1)

During the reporting period, MWCPNS worked with UNICEF to provide training to law enforcement and judges on children's rights, including child labor, and held a workshop with social workers, police, judiciary officials, and labor inspectors to develop standards for protecting children in conflict with the law, as required by its National Action Plan.(1, 11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Chad took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

In 2015, the National Police's Child Protection Brigade employed 50 labor investigators, which was insufficient to enforce criminal labor laws. The Government, UNICEF, and a local NGO have also acknowledged this.(1, 10) In addition, research indicates investigators had inadequate resources, which hindered their ability to respond to complaints of child labor violations.(10, 50) All newly hired law enforcement officials—including police, military, judiciary officials, and social workers—receive a mandatory course on child protection as part of their training.(1, 4, 11, 14, 39) The Ministry of Defense integrated modules on child soldiers and the protection of children's rights into its training curriculum for all military personnel, and provided anti-trafficking training to its troops before deploying them on peacekeeping missions.(4, 11, 25, 39) During the reporting period, the Child Protection Brigade received training from UNICEF on investigating and responding to cases of child exploitation.(11) Local authorities, the local police commissioner, civil society members, and children's rights observers attended a 3-day, workshop funded by foreign entities, which provided training on how to detect, report, and respond to suspected cases of child exploitation, including child trafficking and child labor.(52)

Police officials report cases of exploitative child labor to MOJHR for prosecution.(1, 11) Civil society organizations typically assist with providing temporary shelter, legal assistance, and family reintegration; they also track prosecutions and convictions.(1, 11) However, prosecuting cases of child labor is difficult because of an underdeveloped judicial system, inadequate penalties that do not deter future offenses, and under-enforcement of existing penalties.(4, 11, 14) During the reporting period, allegations arose that a police commissioner in Kélo was complicit in a child trafficking network; the investigation remains ongoing.(4, 11) Despite these barriers, at least six children were removed from situations of exploitative child labor during the reporting period and reunited with their families. During the reporting period, the Government sentenced two human traffickers and their driver each to 5 years in prison for trafficking seven children.(39) A man arrested in southern Chad paid restitution of $167 for forcing a 13-year-old boy to herd cattle; his case remains under investigation.(1, 11)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Working Group on the Worst Forms of Child Labor*	Chaired by the MWCPNS, includes the MOL; MOJHR; Ministries of Education; Health; and Interior and Public Security.(1) Addresses child-related issues through four working groups: (1) Female Genital Mutilation and Child Marriage; (2) Birth Registration; (3) Orphans and At-risk Children; and (4) Children and Justice.(11) Coordinates government efforts on child trafficking, including by providing training, conducting awareness-raising activities, and strengthening the network of government organizations that address human trafficking.(11, 53)
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons (ICTIP)	Coordinate government efforts to combat exploitative child labor, including its worst forms, and propose revision of national legislation to conform to international standards.(1, 11, 54, 55) Led by the Directorate General of Human Rights from MOJHR and includes representatives from the Presidency; the Prime Minister's Office; the National Assembly; MWCPNS; the Ministry of Interior; and the Ministries of Foreign Affairs; Territorial Administration; and Economy, Planning, and Cooperation. Also includes international NGOs and civil society.(11) ICTIP structure is based on UN recommendations and modeled after the existing Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Soldiers.(56)
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Soldiers	Coordinate government efforts to eliminate the use of children in armed conflict and address exploitative child labor.(11, 53) Located in each of the eight military regions, comprise representatives from MWCPNS; MOJHR; the Ministries of Health and Education; the Army; the Gendarmerie; and civil society organizations.(43, 57) Conduct awareness-raising activities and trainings in the military.(10, 58, 59)
MWCPNS's Regional Child Protection Committees	Coordinate regional government efforts to address the worst forms of child labor.(57) Includes representatives from the Ministry of Education; MOJHR; MWCPNS; and the police.(10)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

In 2015, the ICTIP met five times and drafted a National Action Plan on Human Trafficking.(4, 11, 39) The Working Group on the Worst Forms of Child Labor developed and launched a series of training modules for the protection of at-risk populations, including women and children.(1, 11) However, the Government noted that a lack of technical and financial resources has hampered its ability to improve its coordination and response to child labor.(1) Additionally, the MWCPNS reports that the activities and effectiveness of Regional Child Protection Committees were limited by budget constraints during the reporting period.(1)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Chad has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
2013 Child Soldiers Action Plan	In partnership with the UN, aims to permanently eliminate the use of child soldiers.(35, 59-62) Integrates training modules on child soldiers for all military personnel and includes monitoring and age verification in all military training centers by officials from MOJHR; MWCPNS; and the Ministry of Defense.(4, 11) In February 2015, convened a meeting with local authorities to disseminate the 2014 Presidential Ordinance criminalizing the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.(4, 63)
N'Djamena 2010 Declaration of Regional Conference: Ending Recruitment and Use of Children by Armed Forces and Groups; Contributing to Peace, Justice, and Development	Represents a commitment among six signatory countries, including Chad, to eliminate the use of child soldiers in their territories.(35, 64) Forms the basis for the 2013 Child Soldiers Action Plan and accompanying UNICEF Roadmap.(43)
National Action Plan on Human Trafficking†	MOJHR plan led by the ICTIP that aims to promote human rights and address human trafficking.(4, 11, 65) Planned activities include submitting an anti-trafficking law to Parliament for adoption, training judges and law enforcement on human trafficking issues, and organizing awareness-raising workshops.(11, 65)
MWCPNS's National Action Plan†	Aims to establish standards for law enforcement and NGOs on identifying and assisting victims of child trafficking, and implement a mandatory training course on child protection.(11)

Policy	Description
Child Protection Policy (2013–2015)	MWCPNS and UNICEF policy that aims to improve the Government's ability to protect women and children in accordance with the Child Protection Code and the 2014 Presidential Ordinance criminalizing the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.(12) Provides training on child labor and child trafficking issues for the police, gendarmes, the military, social workers, and the judiciary. Has established points of contact in 22 out of 28 police stations that are responsible for collecting data on child trafficking.(12)
UNDAF (2012–2015)	Aims to alleviate extreme poverty, improve food security, and increase human capital, particularly for youth and women. Intends to enhance child protection measures by increasing access to birth registration and eliminating the worst forms of child labor.(66)
National Development Plan (2013–2015)*	Places emphasis on education, economic growth, poverty reduction, food security, developing human capital, and creating additional youth employment opportunities.(35, 67, 68)
Education Initiative (2000–2015)*	Aims to increase equal access to schooling, and improve the quality of teaching and school infrastructure, with an emphasis on female students and other marginalized groups.(69, 70)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government of Chad has adopted policies on child trafficking and child soldiers, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor in domestic work, and herding cattle.(14)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Chad funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Transition Centers†	Run by the Ministry of Defense, provides family reunification and reintegration assistance to former child soldiers. MWCPNS, in collaboration with UNICEF, assists in demobilizing and reinserting child soldiers.(35, 54)
Reception Centers†	Run by MWCPNS and UNICEF, centers located throughout the country provide temporary assistance to victims of child trafficking, including food, education, medical and psychological care, and reintegration services.(4, 11) The Prime Minister's Office maintains a National Solidarity Fund that funds temporary shelter or reunification assistance for victims.(11) Child Protection Directorates at various ministries work together to provide support and reintegration services to victims of exploitation.(11)
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2015)	Aims to improve work conditions in Chad through the promotion of employment opportunities and strengthening social protection. Emphasizes quality universal primary education and nonagricultural job opportunities.(71)
Awareness-Raising Activities†	Government program that conducts outreach campaigns to raise awareness of and prevent child trafficking, the use of children in armed conflict, and the exploitation of children as herders.(4, 14, 35)
Income-Generating Activities†	Government program that provides grants to women's groups as part of MWCPNS's strategy to empower women and children in the fight against child trafficking and gender-based violence.(57)
Birth Registration Campaign	UN-funded program as part of the National Birth Registry Code that conducts birth registrations and deploys mobile registration units. Includes the development of a 2-year strategy for capacity building in civil registration.(54, 58, 59) In 2015, the Government, in collaboration with the Chadian Association for the Promotion of Fundamental Freedoms and UNICEF, launched awareness campaigns in 12 municipalities to promote birth registration.(12) Granted government-issued birth certificates to Sudanese and CAR refugees living in Chad.(14)
Projects in Support of the National Development Plan (NDP)†	Includes the Intermediate Strategy for Education and Literacy (SIPEA); Project in Support of Reform of the Education Sector in Chad (PARSET); and Project in Support of the Sectoral Policy for Education in Chad (PAPST). In 2014, the African Development Bank-funded Project to Support the Education Sector (PASE) was consolidated into the NDP. Supports educational and institutional reform to achieve universal quality primary education by 2015 by providing ongoing training for teachers, strengthening public administration capacities, building 1,500 classrooms per year until 2015, and purchasing textbooks and manuals for students.(35, 69)
UNICEF Country Program	In support of the UNDAF, aims to increase primary school enrollment, support training of community teachers, and increase the percentage of children with a birth certificate. Intends to institutionalize programs for children associated with armed groups and prevent sexual and gender-based violence.(72) Implemented and published an evaluation of the existing child protection system in Chad in 2015.(1, 11) Establishes child-friendly spaces and schools in refugee camps.(26)

† Program is funded by the Government of Chad.

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The status of the progress of the Projects in Support of the National Development Plan is unknown at this time.(39) Research also indicates that the Government lacks the capacity to provide adequate care and reintegration support for demobilized child soldiers.(25) Although Chad has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem adequately, particularly forced child labor in herding, begging, and domestic work.(9)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Chad (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure laws specifically prohibit children from being used, offered, or procured for illicit activities.	2011 – 2015
	Establish criminal prohibitions for debt bondage, slavery, and forced labor of children.	2015
	Ensure laws criminally prohibit child trafficking, both domestic and international, and trafficking for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure all children under age 18 are prohibited from engaging in hazardous occupations or activities.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Make statistics regarding the enforcement of child labor laws publicly available, including the amount of funding received by the labor inspectorate, the number and type of inspections conducted, the violations found, and the penalties issued.	2009 – 2015
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors in accordance with the ILO recommendation and ensure inspectors receive the necessary resources to enforce labor laws throughout the country.	2012 – 2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing inspectors to assess penalties and conduct inspections that are routine, at the worksite, and in the informal sector.	2014 – 2015
	Institutionalize training for labor inspectors and provide training on new laws related to child labor.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure penalties are severe enough to deter offenders and are enforced according to the law.	2015
Coordination	Ensure coordinating committees receive adequate resources to carry out their mandates to coordinate and respond to child labor issues.	2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2014 – 2015
	Adopt a policy to combat all worst forms of child labor in Chad, including commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor in domestic work, and herding cattle.	2009 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure access to education for all children by eliminating school-related fees and improving access to schools throughout the country.	2014 – 2015
	Establish and expand programs providing services to children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, such as use of forced labor in herding, begging, and domestic work. Ensure adequate care and support for demobilized child soldiers.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
 47. UN. "World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex." (2012); http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries

- that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

In 2015, Chile made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established the National Strategy to Eradicate Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers (2015–2025). Two bills were drafted and submitted to Congress; the first requires adherence to the rights enumerated in the Convention of the Rights of the Child, while the second creates an Undersecretary for Children to evaluate policies relating to children and address gaps. Chile also continued to implement several programs targeting the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Chile are engaged in child labor, including in construction, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production and distribution of drugs sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Information regarding the number of potential criminal violations found and prosecutions initiated related to the worst forms of child labor is not publicly available.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chile are engaged in child labor, including in construction. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production and distribution of drugs sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-12) The results of the 2012 National Survey on Activities of Children and Adolescents (Encuesta de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes) indicate that 70.6 percent of working children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in work classified as hazardous.(9, 11) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Chile.

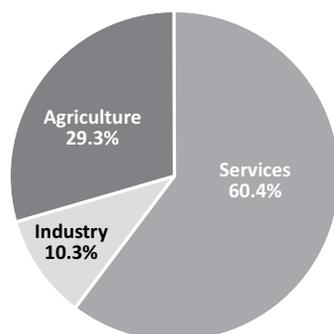

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	3.8 (94,025)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	99.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		96.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(13)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Encuesta de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes Survey, 2012.(14)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting and selling crops, including wheat,* raising animals,* and working on agricultural loading docks* (5, 11, 12)
	Livestock rearing* (10, 11)
	Forestry,*† activities unknown (10, 11)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Hunting,* activities unknown (10, 11)
	Fishing,*† activities unknown (10, 11)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (5, 9-12)
	Production of ceramics* and books* (5, 12)
	Repairing shoes* and garments* (5, 12)
	Domestic work (1, 5, 9, 11)
	Working in retail, hospitality, and restaurants (5, 10, 12, 15)
	Street work, including street vending and washing cars* (5, 9, 10, 12, 16)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Used in illicit activities, including in the production and distribution of drugs sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-8)
	Forced labor in agriculture,* mining,* construction,* street vending,* domestic work,* and garment and hospitality sectors* (1, 4-6, 12)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 5, 7-9, 12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Chilean children and girls from other Latin American countries are subjected to human trafficking in Chile for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work.(1, 4, 17) Children are used to produce, sell, and transport drugs in the border area with Peru and Bolivia.(5) Limited evidence suggests that children from Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay, and Peru are found in forced labor in the agriculture, mining, domestic work, and hospitality sectors.(1, 4, 18) The Government of Chile has indicated that indigenous children and adolescents from Otavalo, Ecuador, are vulnerable to human trafficking for labor exploitation in Chile.(3) Data from the Government of Chile’s National Minors’ Service (SENAME) indicate that the highest incidence of children living and working on the streets occurs in the Santiago region of Chile.(19-21) However, no information is available on the types of activities children performed while working on the streets.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Chile has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

‡ Age calculated based on available information (34)

Education is compulsory in Chile through secondary school, with a projected progression of 6 years of study in primary school, beginning at age 6, and 6 years of study in secondary school.(34)

In 2015, Chile submitted two bills for congressional approval. The first establishes the rights enumerated in the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which Chile ratified in 1990.(15, 35) The second bill creates an undersecretary for children to evaluate current policies regarding the child and address gaps.(15)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Prevision (MINTRAB)	Enforce child labor laws and generate public awareness of child labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(9, 36)
National Minors' Service (SENAME)	Coordinate the provision of services to vulnerable children in collaboration with Rights Protection Offices.(37, 38)
National Investigations Police (PDI)	Prevent the worst forms of child labor by conducting community outreach activities, including trainings and informational talks, through the PDI Department of Community Action and Support.(39)
National Prosecutor's Office	Investigate and prosecute crimes, including those involving commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking of children. Train and coordinate with interagency partners, including the PDI, and regional and local prosecutor's offices.(40, 41)
Rights Protection Offices	Refer cases of children whose rights have been violated to appropriate social services, and monitor and raise awareness of the worst forms of child labor. Located in municipalities throughout the country and part of a social protection network overseen by SENAME.(10)

According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Chile should employ roughly 579 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(42-44) During the reporting period, 285 children were removed from worksites as a result of labor inspections, including for failure to register an employment contract, failure to comply with education requirements, and failure to obtain a parent's or guardian's authorization.(15) SENAME updated its Worst Forms Registry in 2015 to be compatible with their existing case management system, SENAINFO. Due to this update, 2014 and 2015 statistics are not comparable.(17) Labor inspectors did not receive child labor-specific training during the reporting period; however, 150 labor inspectors received training on best practices for labor inspections involving foreign workers and human trafficking.(15, 17)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Chile took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2015, the Inter-Agency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons implemented continuous training on trafficking in persons for investigators. The training occurred throughout the country, often in coordination with regional task forces on trafficking in persons, as well as online and at international locations.(17) During the reporting period, SENAME identified 447 cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children and 260 cases of children used in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of narcotics.(15, 17)

Juvenile Justice, the Ministry of Education, and the Ministry of the Interior.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor	Direct the Social Observatory to Eradicate Child Labor, which formulated the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.(10, 45) Led by MINTRAB and includes the following members: the Ministry of Agriculture, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Justice, the National Statistics Institute, the National Tourism Service, SENAME, as well as the PDI and the National Uniformed Police.(45)
Worst Forms of Child Labor Task Force	Evaluate and promote programs that prevent and protect children from the worst forms of child labor.(37, 46) Oversee the Worst Forms of Child Labor Registry, which tracks incidents of the worst forms of child labor and provides information on programs designed to assist child workers.(18, 47) Includes implementing a multisectoral protocol for the identification, registration, and care of victims of the worst forms of child labor.(31) Evaluate and promote programs that protect children from and prevent the worst forms of child labor. Receives financial and technical assistance from the ILO.(37, 46)
National Council for Children	Integrate efforts across government agencies to uphold the rights of the child through the implementation of policies; strategic plans; and programs at national, regional, and local levels.(15) Managed by the Ministry General Secretariat of the Presidency.(15)
Interagency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate the Government's anti-human trafficking efforts. Led by the Ministry of the Interior, members include law enforcement agencies, the Ministry of Foreign Relations, the Ministry of Justice, the National Prosecutor's Office, and SENAME, among others.(48) In 2015, established the National Action Plan, which outlines a strategy for the Government's anti-human trafficking interventions through 2018.(17)
National Observatory of Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Conduct and publish research on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, in collaboration with the Government and civil society; led by SENAME.(9) In 2015, the Observatory met eight times.(15)
Social Observatory to Eradicate Child Labor*	Established by Decree No. 131 to coordinate the study of child and adolescent labor issues among working groups, foundations, educational study centers, and institutions. Conduct technical studies on child and adolescent labor issues and evaluate current child labor elimination policies.(2, 49) Disaggregate child labor survey data from the 2012 National Survey on Activities of Children and Adolescents.(49)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Chile has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers (2015–2025)†	Establishes a strategy to eradicate child labor by (1) combining efforts across national and regional agencies, as well as private and public entities, and (2) requiring regions to establish a strategy adapted to issues particular to the area to effectively eradicate child labor.(50) The National Observatory of Commercial Sexual Exploitation monitors the implementation and effectiveness of the plan by evaluating regional activities on an annual basis and the impact of the operating plan biannually. An assessment of the National Strategy's progression toward its goal to eradicate child labor will be conducted every 4 years.(50)
Anti-Trafficking National Action Plan (2015–2018)†	Implements actions to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, with a focus on women and children. Encompasses four strategic areas: (1) prevention and awareness raising, (2) control (prosecution), (3) victims' assistance and protection, and (4) interinstitutional cooperation and coordination.(51)
Cooperative Agreement for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers in Chile	Creates mechanisms to detect child labor within the school system in the capital region. The Ministry of Education and MINTRAB are signatories to the agreement.(52)

Policy	Description
Chilean Ministry of the Interior and Public Security and U.S. Department of Homeland Security Joint Statement on Trafficking in Persons	Seeks to enhance collaboration and information exchanges between enforcement agencies on combating human trafficking and protecting vulnerable populations. Signed by Chile and the United States in Washington, DC (June 2015).(53)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013) and was signed by Chile at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(54-56)
Declaration of Cancún and Plan of Action (2015)†	In 2015, the Government of Chile participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas, held in Cancún, Mexico. Participating countries adopted the declaration, which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(57, 58) Participating countries also adopted the Plan of Action, which prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(59)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Chile funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Guides on Eliminating Child Labor and Safe Work for Adolescent Workers	MINTRAB collaboration with the Confederation of Production and Commerce, one of the country's largest business associations, and the Chilean Safety Association to fight against child labor. The Confederation of Production and Commerce distributes guides to employers on eliminating child labor through public-private partnerships, and the Chilean Safety Association has developed a manual promoting safety for adolescent workers and has distributed this information widely.(60, 61)
Eradication of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011–2015)	A $4.5-million, Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Chile.(62)
Strengthening Social Dialogue as an Effective Tool to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012–2015)	A $760,000, Government of Ireland-funded, 3-year project implemented by the ILO-IPEC that focuses on strengthening social dialogue on the worst forms of child labor in different regions of the world, including Benin, Chile, Fiji, Ghana, and Zambia.(62)
Regional Action Group for the Americas	Prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(63, 64) Administered in Chile by the National Tourism Service. Conducts child labor prevention and awareness-raising campaigns in the tourism sector.(9)
MERCOSUR Southern Child Initiative	Initiative to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region by raising awareness and seeking coordination among member states on the worst forms of child labor and migrant labor, improving countries' legal frameworks by harmonizing them with international conventions affecting children, and exchanging best practices.(65)
SENAME Programs for Children at Risk of or Engaged in the Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	More than 90 SENAME programs for disadvantaged youth and children at risk of or engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(10, 46) In 2015, SENAME continued funding 17 projects to provide protective services to victims of commercial sexual exploitation in 10 regions, as well as the Regional Initiatives Against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children.(50) Projects are implemented in collaboration with municipal governments and involve 126 local branches of the Office for the Protection of Children's Rights.(2, 37) In 2015, SENAME provided $3.4 million to fund the 17 existing programs that assist victims of CSEC and disbursed an additional $14.6 million to fund programs that assist children at risk of becoming victims of the worst forms of child labor throughout 15 regions.(15) SENAME also added 85 new Office for the Protection of Children's Rights centers, which are strategically located in vulnerable communities to provide assistance to victims of child labor and other rights violations, in addition to raising awareness of child rights issues in the community.(50)

Program	Description
Child Labor Survey on Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Collaboration of the Government with the ILO to collect data from police and other governmental agencies for a preparatory study on commercial sexual exploitation.(8, 9)
24 Hours Program (Programa 24 Horas), formerly called the New Life Program (Vida Nueva)‡	Program of the Ministries of Education and Health, Department of Juvenile Justice, and Service for Clinical Intervention that aims to address delinquency among children ages 14 and younger in eight cities.(66) Targets children who have been used by adults to carry out illegal activities.(10, 67) Aims to provide integrated intervention for children who have been detained by the police for such activities but are not subject to the juvenile justice channels because of their age.(66) In 2015, $15.3 million was dispersed to fund 95 projects and provide assistance to 5,860 children.(50)
Government Projects for At-Risk Youth in the Dominican Republic (Proyecto de Emprendimiento Juvenil)‡	Project supported by the Government of Chile that improves the employability of disadvantaged, at-risk youth through training and internship opportunities to promote entrepreneurial and job-related skills.(16, 68, 69)
Ethical Family Income Program‡	Ministry of Social Development income assistance and conditional cash transfer program to assist 170,000 families living in extreme poverty.(10, 70) Other programs provide scholarships and social services to children from low-income families and to adolescent parents and children of incarcerated parents who are at high risk of leaving school to enter work.(10)
Extended School Day Program (Programa 4 a 7)‡	National Women's Service extended school day program that aims to keep children off the streets, among other goals, while their parents are at work.(71)
Indigenous Language Sector Program (Sector de la Lengua Indígena)‡	Ministry of Education program that aims to increase the quality of education available to indigenous children.(72)
Caring Chile Programs (Chile Solidario)‡	Ministry of Social Development programs implemented by Chilean NGOs to combat poverty. Includes several social welfare programs, including the Bridge Program (Programa Puente), which helps families in extreme poverty, and the Opening Paths (Abriendo Caminos) program for children who are separated from their families.(73)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Chile.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Chile (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Make publicly available information on the training system for new labor inspectors, the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review, and the number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed and collected.	2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating targeted inspections based on analysis of data related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents.	2015
	Hire a sufficient number of labor inspectors to effectively enforce laws related to child labor.	2015
	Make publicly available information on the training system for new investigators, the number of criminal violations found, and the number of prosecutions initiated related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working on the street to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 42. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

Colombia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Colombia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched the National Development Plan for 2014-2018 which outlines Colombia's strategy to promote inclusive economic growth, in particular through improving access to quality education and lengthening the school day. For the first time, the Government's budget for education exceeded all other areas of the national budget, including defense, and registered a 7.5 percent increase over the amount allocated in 2014. The Ministry of Labor also signed one-year agreements with the National Federation of Coffee Growers and the Federation of Cargo Transporters and Logistics to prevent and eliminate child labor in the coffee and transport sectors, respectively. However, children in Colombia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in street work and in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Government does not employ a sufficient number of labor inspectors to adequately enforce child labor laws across the country, and challenges in coordination on child labor issues remain.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Colombia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in street work and in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-3) In 2015, the Government published some results from the 2014 National Household Survey, which include estimates of the percentage of working children ages 5 to 17.(4) However, the results do not disaggregate information on health, occupational safety, or sectors in which children work, particularly the priority sectors identified by the Government for child labor reduction such as coffee and sugarcane. The Government does not appear to conduct research on child labor for hard-to-reach populations, including children engaged in street work and involved in illicit activities. Government survey data on working children also include limited information on indigenous populations.(5)

Several government officials in different departments of Colombia reported that due to a lack of training and resources, they have not updated the Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Information System for Identification, Registration, and Characterization of Child Labor (SIRITI) in the past three years. Therefore, comprehensive data on child labor available to the public is incomplete and outdated.(6-8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Colombia.

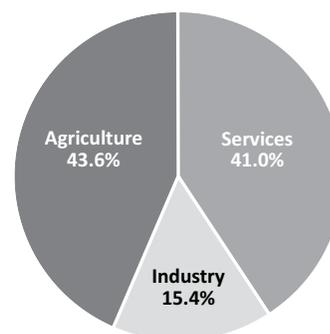

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

	Use in the production of pornography (2, 29)
	Use in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of force, in illegal armed groups, to perform intelligence and logistical activities, store and transport weapons, and engage in commercial sexual exploitation (32-35)
	Use in illicit activities, including in the production of marijuana* and poppies*, in the production of coca (stimulant plant) sometimes as a result of human trafficking, in forced begging, and by gangs to commit homicides and traffic drugs (2, 3, 11, 15, 25, 30, 36-38)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Reports indicate that in the cities of Cali and Medellin, numerous children work on the streets.(1, 23) Reports also indicate that many children ages 10 to 17 are engaged in domestic service in third-party homes. These children may work up to 60 hours per week with little to no pay, access to school, or health benefits.(39, 40) In the city of Cartagena, children, many of whom are Afro-Colombian, sell fruits and handicrafts and offer services to tourists. Individuals occasionally purchase children's goods and services in exchange for sexual acts. In addition, government officials in Cartagena reported that children sell food and carry heavy loads in urban markets, beginning work as early as 3 am.(8, 41)

The commercial sexual exploitation of children, especially girls, is a problem in Colombia, primarily in the departments of Atlántico, Bogotá, Bolívar, Magdalena, and Valle Del Cauca.(42) Colombian government officials reported that gang members, parents, hotel receptionists, and motorcycle taxi drivers sometimes recruit and use children for commercial sexual exploitation.(41, 43) Research indicates that in the Triple-Border region (Colombia, Peru, and Brazil), young Colombian girls and boys often enter Tabatinga, Brazil, by foot and Santa Rosa, Peru, by canoe, where they engage in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities.(6, 44) Boys in the city of Leticia, Amazonas, also engage in commercial sexual exploitation, where perpetrators pay them less than $1 to perform sexual acts.(43) In other cities such as Cartagena, children are used by gang members to commit homicides and may be forced to engage in commercial sexual exploitation.(41)

In 2015, criminal gangs and illegal armed groups, including the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC-EP) and the National Liberation Army (ELN), continued to forcibly recruit children into their ranks. The UN reported that there were 289 cases of child recruitment and use by these and other groups.(45) Children were used by the FARC-EP, ELN, and criminal groups as combatants, coca-pickers, and in commercial sexual exploitation.(35, 45) During the reporting period, the FARC-EP, in peace negotiations with the Government since 2012, stated publicly that they would no longer recruit children under the age of 15 and would release all recruits under age 15 from their service. In February 2016, the FARC-EP announced that they would stop recruiting children under age 18.(2, 35, 46) Although the Colombian Ombudsman's Office for Human Rights reported that, as of December 2015, the FARC-EP had not set a date for the release of their associated children, government reports indicate that such recruitment by the FARC-EP had decreased throughout 2015.(2, 47)

Colombia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Reports indicate that criminal gangs, many of whose members were previously associated with the paramilitary non-state United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia (AUC), sometimes use bullying as a strategy to recruit children from schools into their operations, which include drug and arms trafficking, extortion, and the commission of homicides.(38, 48, 49)

In 2015, the Government's budget for education exceeded, for the first time, all other areas of the national budget, including defense, and registered a 7.5 percent increase over the amount allocated in 2014.(50-52) However, in Colombia, access to education is hindered by the internal armed conflict and sometimes impassable routes and long distances between children's homes and schools in rural areas.(53-55) In 2015, there were multiple cases of schools damaged in the cross-fire as a result of confrontations between illegal armed groups and the Colombian Armed Forces.(45) Access to education is also often difficult for children from ethnic groups who may not speak Spanish as a first language. There are 68 native languages in Colombia; a 2014 report from a Colombian NGO indicates that more than 80 percent of ethnic groups in the country do not have access to a culturally and linguistically relevant education.(56) Indigenous and Afro-Colombian children are considered the most vulnerable children in Colombia and are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(24, 37) The 2012 National School Desertion Survey for children enrolled in primary and secondary school identified child labor as one of the primary causes of school desertion in the Caribbean and Pacific regions of Colombia.(57)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Colombia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In 2014, the Government issued the Victims Assistance Decree, which aims to regulate the procedures of government entities responsible for protecting and providing assistance to victims of human trafficking. It also addresses victims' access to services, protection, and assistance through interagency coordination and partnerships with civil society members.(66) However, the law stipulates that human trafficking victims must file an official complaint against their trafficker within 5 days of receiving services in order to receive medium-term assistance, which includes additional medical, psychological, and legal assistance as well as educational services and economic support.(3, 32, 66, 67) The limited time allowance and the requirement to file an official complaint may prevent human trafficking victims from receiving sufficient assistance beyond any emergency services provided.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Inspection, Monitoring, Control, and Territorial Management Department	Receive complaints of labor law violations and conduct labor inspections, including inspections to verify labor conditions for adolescent workers and compliance with other child labor provisions. Operate the Integrated Registration and Information System for Child Labor (SIRITI), a child labor monitoring system that identifies children engaged in or at risk of child labor.(2, 68) Oversee the Internal Working Group on Child Labor Eradication, which includes inspectors who focus on the eradication of child labor by carrying out prevention activities, conducting child labor inspections, and compiling data on child labor.(69)
Ministry of the Interior (MOI)	Operate a hotline through its Anti-Trafficking in Persons Operations Center to report and track cases of human trafficking, coordinate investigations, and facilitate access to social services for victims.(70)
National Police	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(68)
Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being (ICBF)	Receive complaints regarding child labor; operate hotlines to report cases of child labor, including its worst forms; and provide social services to children engaged in or at risk of child labor.(2, 71, 72) Operate 40 mobile units to coordinate government actions to protect children's rights, including with respect to child labor. Partner with civil society organizations to operate an Internet hotline to combat child commercial sexual exploitation and pornography.(71, 72)
Attorney General's Office (AGO)	Investigate and prosecute cases of child recruitment for armed conflict, commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and human trafficking.(2, 58) Oversee the Articulation Group for Combatting Trafficking in Persons, which focuses on investigation and prosecution of international human trafficking and other related crimes. This group includes four prosecutors from specialized directorates in the AGO.(32)
Office of the Ombudsman	Promote the rights of children and adolescents and monitor policies related to children's human rights. Operate an early warning system to prevent the recruitment of children by illegal armed groups.(58)
Ministry of Health and Social Protection	Provide health services to victims of sexual violence, including child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(73)
National Training Service (SENA)	Collect fines imposed by the MOL for labor law violations.(74)

The Government reported that labor inspectors lacked sufficient resources to carry out their duties in 2015.(2, 6, 7) In 2015, the MOL reported that the labor inspectorate has the budget to employ 904 labor inspectors consistent with commitments under the 2011 Colombian Action Plan Related to Labor Rights. However, the MOL employed only 827 inspectors during the reporting period.(2) The Government reported that this number of inspectors is inadequate to enforce labor laws across the country.(2) According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Colombia should employ roughly 1,622 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(78-80)

For 2015, the Government reported that all labor inspectors, including those in regional offices and child labor dedicated inspectors, received training on child labor law enforcement issues. Trainings were provided on the worst forms of child labor as defined and addressed through Resolution 3597 and ILO Conventions 138 and 182.(2) In addition, the MOL coordinated trainings for regional labor inspectors that addressed human trafficking and labor exploitation, including with regard to labor migration and migrant worker rights. Regional labor inspectors received additional trainings on assisting human trafficking survivors.(35)

The MOL reported that from January to September 2015, it carried out 1,819 inspections of the working conditions of the 2,684 children between the ages of 15 and 17 authorized to work during that period.(2) Research could not determine the breakdown of inspections by geographic department or by sector for 2015.(2) In Colombia, labor inspections may be unannounced; however, research could not determine the number of inspections related to child labor that were unannounced in 2015. MOL inspections of private homes, family farms, and brothels require authorization from the Attorney General's Office (AGO); inspections of brothels also include the participation of the Police.(2) Reports indicate that inspections of private homes and family farms are often done only in response to complaints.(2)

As a result of its 1,819 inspections, the MOL reported 11 violations of the Code of Childhood and Adolescence that resulted in penalties, with 14 potential violations still under investigation at the end of November 2015. The MOL also reported that 199 work permits for adolescents were revoked as a result of its inspections.(2) However, research could not determine the causes for these revocations, or whether the affected adolescents were removed from work and received services.

Research could not determine how many children the MOL's child labor monitoring system identified in child labor, or whether this monitoring data informed labor inspections. Research also could not determine the number of child labor complaints the ICBF received during the reporting period. Although the ICBF refers cases of apparent child labor violations to the MOL for further action, it is unclear whether the MOL conducts any follow-up, including whether labor inspectors use this information to target their inspections.(8, 72)

In some departments of Colombia, inspectors only carry out inspections in a small fraction of the department. For example, in Amazonas, inspectors only conduct inspections in the capital of Leticia. Inspectors do not have the resources to carry out inspections in any other areas of the department, which are often only accessible by boat or small planes.(2)

In order to combat child labor in the mining sector, the ICBF requires its regional offices to coordinate with the MOL's regional offices and other government agencies. It also requires its regional offices to collaborate with labor inspectors in the periodic inspections of mines and quarries, provide social services to children found working in mining, and notify the relevant MOL authorities of any apparent child labor infractions that the ICBF identifies.(81) However, it is unclear whether such coordination occurs in practice.

Recent National Household Surveys have found that many adolescents work without permits, despite the requirement in the Code on Childhood and Adolescence that children between the ages of 15 and 17 obtain work authorization from the MOL.(5)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Colombia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Judicial officials, attorneys, and judicial police participated in specialized trainings on human trafficking investigations and prosecutions, including through mock trials.(35) The AGO also reported circulating a memorandum to criminal law enforcement officials in March 2015 to improve the effectiveness of investigation strategies and to ensure the protection of children's rights.(2)

In 2015, the AGO reported that it employed 32 prosecutors who handled cases of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, among other cases.(2) However, the total number of criminal law enforcement officials who enforced laws on the worst forms of child labor, including the number of National Police officers dedicated to this task, is unknown.

During the reporting period, the AGO received 1,415 reports of crimes related to the worst forms of child labor. The breakdown of these cases by type of crime involving the worst forms of child labor, and whether all 1,415 cases were investigated, is unknown.(2) In 2015, the AGO initiated 1,330 criminal proceedings for crimes against children, including 515 cases of the recruitment of minors for commercial sexual exploitation, 109 cases of commercial sexual exploitation, and 706 cases involving other violations of children's rights not related to the worst forms of child labor. Research could not determine how many of these 1,330 criminal proceedings pertained to cases that originated in 2015 versus in previous years, or how many child victims were involved in each.(2) For 2015, the number of investigations and prosecutions initiated by the AGO for cases involving the recruitment of children by illegal armed groups or involving the use of children in illicit activities by such groups, is unknown. However, the AGO confirmed 157 ongoing investigations of cases involving the recruitment of children by illegal armed groups that occurred in 2014.(2) Although research could not determine the exact number of convictions related to the worst forms of child labor that were reached in 2015, reports indicate that there were at least 30 such convictions.

In 2015, the National Police initiated nine human trafficking investigations, including six cases of transnational trafficking and three cases of domestic trafficking.(35) However, research could not determine whether these cases involved child victims. The AGO reported 135 human trafficking investigations and issued 71 warrants for criminal violations involving human trafficking.(35) The AGO also reported 42 convictions for crimes of human trafficking, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, which may include some of the 515 cases of child sexual exploitation.(35) However, research could not determine how many of these investigations, violations, and convictions involved child victims.

The Ministry of the Interior’s (MOI) Anti-TIP Operations Center hotline received 3,625 calls during the reporting period. Also during the reporting period, the ICBF identified 39 human trafficking cases that involved children, of which 33 victims were girls and 6 were boys.(35) Research could not determine how many of these cases were referred for investigation and prosecution. Research indicates that few child victims of commercial sexual exploitation file complaints with officials, making the scope of the problem unknown. Some officials report that some children are afraid to file complaints because many of their recruiters are locally known individuals.(41)

The Government has acknowledged that it lacks adequate resources to effectively conduct investigations and prosecutions of cases of human trafficking and the worst forms of child labor. Furthermore, the Government has limited resources to assist victims.(2, 32)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National System of Family Well-Being	Promote interagency coordination to protect children’s rights, including rights related to child labor. Design, implement, monitor, and evaluate policies that affect children from early childhood to adolescence.(82) Composed of the Offices of the President and Vice President, 15 government ministries, and other government agencies that address children’s rights and welfare. Overseen by the ICBF.(82)
Interagency Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CIETI)	Coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the MOL and includes 13 government agencies and representatives from trade unions, business associations, and civil society organizations.(83) Oversee 32 department-level CIETIs, each comprising municipal-level committees, throughout the country.(75) In 2015, CIETI coordinated efforts between the MOL and ICBF to define public policy strategies for 2016–2026, including efforts to address child labor. CIETI also provided technical assistance to 695 of its municipal-level committees to strengthen coordination among government agencies operating in each municipality.(2)
National Interagency Committee for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Implement efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Coordinated by the MOL; includes 11 government agencies and representatives from business associations, trade unions, and civil society organizations.(84, 85)
Interagency Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons (CICTP)	Lead and coordinate efforts among government agencies to combat human trafficking. Chaired by the MOI and includes 16 government agencies, including the MOL, ICBF, National Police, and the Special Administrative Unit for Migration in Colombia.(2) Created by Law 985.(2) In 2015, CICTP provided trainings on human trafficking issues to its departmental- and district-level committees, and developed indicators for monitoring and evaluating the provision of government services to victims. In addition, IOM and UNODC provided assistance to the Office of the Inspector General to evaluate government efforts in addressing human trafficking issues.(2) In May 2015, the Government issued Decree 1066, which provides the MOI with special funding for CICTP initiatives to combat human trafficking and provide assistance to victims. In addition, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, with assistance from IOM, launched the second phase of a national campaign to prevent human trafficking.(35)
Interagency Committee for the Prevention of the Recruitment and Use of Children by Illegal Armed Groups	Coordinate efforts to prevent child recruitment by illegal armed groups, including for purposes of commercial sexual exploitation. Led by the Office of the Vice President and composed of more than 21 government agencies.(86, 87) Created by Law 552.(2)
Office of the Inspector General	Monitor the implementation of child labor laws and policies, including the National Strategy to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(58)
Work Group to Assess Acceptable Activities for Adolescent Work in Coffee, Cotton, Sugar, and Rice	Coordinate with universities to research and assess types of activities that may be permitted for adolescents authorized to work in the coffee, cotton, sugar and rice sectors. Created in 2014 and composed of the Food and Agriculture Organization, ILO, Department of National Planning, National Department of Statistics, Ministry of Agriculture, Ministry of Health, and the MOL.(75)

The 2013 evaluation of the National Strategy to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2008–2015) indicates that the ICBF, CIETI, and the MOL demonstrated the highest rates of participation in coordination activities.(5) However, in 2015, regional government officials recognized that there is a need for increased coordination and information exchange between regional ICBF and MOL offices and the national headquarters to ensure the effective implementation of child labor policies.(6-8)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Colombia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy to Prevent and Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2008–2015)	Provided Colombia's strategy to combat the worst forms of child labor in nine priority sectors: coffee, tobacco, sugarcane, mining, street work, garbage scavenging, sale of gasoline, commercial sexual exploitation, and the recruitment of children by illegal armed groups.(83)
National Policy to Prevent the Recruitment of Children and Adolescents by Illegal Armed Groups	Directs actions to prevent the recruitment and use of children by illegal armed groups. Calls for the Government to develop strategies to protect children from recruitment, address violence against children (including the worst forms of child labor), and improve interagency coordination.(88)
National Development Plan (2014–2018)†	Outlines Colombia's strategy to promote inclusive economic growth and national development. Priorities include improving access to quality education, lengthening the school day to 7 hours, and providing pre-school for children younger than age 5.(89) Prioritizes the respect and protection of rights for Colombia's indigenous and vulnerable populations. Launched in June 2015.(89)
10-Year National Plan for Children and Adolescents (2004–2015)	Aimed to increase children's access to social services and reduce the number of children engaged in child labor.(90)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014-2024)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Colombia at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(91-93)
Fight Against Human Trafficking Agreement between the Government of Colombia and the Government of Argentina	Establishes a work plan between the governments of Colombia and Argentina to collaborate in the fight against human trafficking. Signed in 2014 and aims to prevent human trafficking and strengthen efforts to assist Colombian human trafficking victims found in forced labor in Argentina.(94)
Illegal Mining, Drug Trafficking, Inequality, and Poverty Elimination Agreement between the Governments of Colombia and Peru	Outlines 11 objectives to combat illegal mining, drug trafficking, inequality, and poverty in Colombia and Peru. Several objectives focus on child and adolescent labor protection, including identifying and assisting children and adolescents working in mining activities and in vulnerable situations.(95) In addition, establishes a roadmap to apply concepts from the Cooperation Agreement on the Exchange of Experiences and Good Practices regarding labor and labor relations, including child labor.(95) As part of the agreement, officials from both countries developed an information and coordination exchange to develop a Binational Peru-Colombia Child Labor Registration System.(95, 96)
Territorial Assistance Plan	Increases interinstitutional capacity to address child labor issues in regions and departments. Coordinates regional working groups in 17 departments to collaborate with the Interagency Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor on the implementation of public policies related to child labor and children's rights.(75) Provides training on child labor laws and policies in rural regional areas.(75)
Child Labor Pact (2014–2018)	Calls for the formulation of policies on the prevention and eradication of child labor and improved coordination between the MOL and other government agencies including the ICBF, Ministry of Education, Ministry of Health and Social Protection, as well as the ILO and Colombia's National Association of Industries. Also calls for awareness-raising activities in capital cities and tourist destination to address forced child labor issues in priority sectors and for the provision of technical assistance to departments for training on services and laws related to combatting child labor.(75)
Memorandum of Understanding for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor in the Transport Sector (2015-2016)†	Aims to promote cooperation between the MOL and the Colombian Federation of Cargo Transporters and Logistics (COLFECAR) to design technical assistance projects and build capacity in the transport sector to prevent and combat child labor, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (2, 97) Signed in October 2015 and expires in December 2016. Implemented jointly by the MOL and COLFECAR.(2, 97)
Memorandum of Understanding for the Prevention of Child Labor and the Promotion of Respect for Children's and Adolescents' Rights in the Production of Coffee (2015-2016)†	Aims to promote cooperation between the MOL and the National Federation of Coffee Growers (FEDECAFE) to prevent and eradicate child labor in the coffee sector.(2) Signed in December 2015 and expires in December 2016. Implemented jointly by the MOL and the FEDECAFE.(2)

Policy	Description

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

At the end of 2015, the National Strategy to Prevent and Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2008–2015) expired.(2) The Office of the Inspector General previously indicated that some of the country’s departments and main cities had not adequately implemented the plan, or allocated sufficient funding for child labor initiatives.(101) Officials in some of the country’s departments have correlated difficulties in implementing child labor policies to a lack of current reliable data available on child labor in their department. Regional government officials report that a lack of resources and training for updating the MOL’s Integrated Registration and Information System for Child Labor (SIRITI) has contributed to this situation.(6-8) The Child Labor Pact, approved in 2014, aims to improve and broaden policies on child labor in the country’s departments; however, research indicates that departmental government officials lack sufficient guidance to adequately perform this task.(75)

During the reporting period, the Government began drafting a national plan to prevent and eradicate child labor and protect adolescent workers. The Government also began drafting a national plan to prevent and eradicate the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(2) The drafting process for each plan involved a range of government agencies including the MOL, ICBF, Ministry of Education, Ministry of Health and Social Protection, and the National Planning Department. The drafting process also included 15 regional workshops for local authorities to contribute to the policies, as well as a review of recommendations from the MOL, the National Planning Department, and the UN CRC on relevant subjects.(2) Both plans are slated to cover 2016-2026.(2)

In 2015, the National Strategy to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2014–2018) remained in draft form. Reports indicate that this strategy outlines the responsibilities of the Interagency Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons (CICTP), departmental committees, international organizations, civil society, and academia to address human trafficking.(32, 35)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Colombia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating and preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
More Families in Action (Más Familias en Acción)†	Development for Social Prosperity (DPS) conditional cash transfer program that seeks to combat poverty and build human capital. Implements strategies to prevent child labor in the mining sector and fight teen pregnancy; support poor families with disabled members; and improve child nutrition.(102, 103) In 2015, served 2,559,954 families and 4,557,375 children.(104)
United Network program (Red Unidos)†	DPS program that coordinates actions to reduce inequality and end extreme poverty, including through access to education, health, and job training. Continued projects under agreement with the Telefónica Foundation to prevent child labor in eight cities.(105, 106)
Healthy Generations (Generaciones con Bienestar)†	Children’s rights program implemented by DPS and the Colombian Institute for Healthy Families that offers cultural and recreational activities to children ages 6 to 17 identified as vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(107)
Youth in Action (Jóvenes en Acción)†	DPS technical job training and conditional cash transfer program for vulnerable urban youth ages 16 to 24. In 2015, 250,931 youth were provided benefits, an increase from 152,370 youth in 2014.(104, 107, 108)

Program	Description
We Are a Treasure Project (Somos Tesoro)	USDOL-funded, $9 million, 4-year project to combat child labor and promote safe work in the mining sector, implemented by Pact, Inc., in partnership with the Alliance for Responsible Mining, Mi Sangre Foundation, and Fund for Environmental Action and Childhood. Works with the Government of Colombia to (1) strengthen national policies to combat child labor in the mining sector; (2) improve governmental capacity to identify and address violations of child labor and occupational safety and health laws in the mining sector; and (3) provide education and livelihood opportunities for households vulnerable to child labor in mining communities in the departments of Antioquia and Boyacá.(109, 110) Aims to benefit more than 19,000 children and 9,000 households. In 2015, trained 600 artisanal and small-scale miners in occupational safety and health; raised awareness of child labor and working conditions in artisanal and small-scale mining; and provided educational and livelihood services to more than 6,000 children and 1,300 households.(111)
Colombia Network Against Child Labor (Red Colombia contra el Trabajo Infantil)	MOL-led public-private partnership that builds on the UN's Global Pact Initiative to create collaboration between Colombian businesses, the MOL, and the ICBF to eliminate child labor, including in supply chains. Initiated with 14 business in 2014.(112, 113) In 2015, expanded to incorporate 34 businesses.(114)
National Household Survey†	National Administrative Department of Statistics annual national household survey that includes questions on child labor.(115)
Decent Work Program†	MOL project implemented by the ILO to promote decent work, including combating child labor.(116, 117)
School Meals Program (Programa de Alimentación Escolar [PAE])†	Ministry of Education program that provides meals to more than 4 million school children to increase school attendance and retention.(118-120)
Fund to Assist Children and After-School programs (Foníñez)†	Superintendency of Family subsidy programs for children in situations of extreme poverty.(121) For children from birth to 6 years, provides social protection services, and for children ages 7 to 17, provides after school activities.(122)
I Have Rights (Yo Tengo Derechos)	Department of Atlántico child labor awareness raising program that also strengthens interagency coordination through a one-stop center to handle child labor cases.(123)
Ingruma Indigenous Training Center	ICBF and USAID social reintegration program to provide indigenous youth who have been victims of child soldiering with specialized services.(124)
Child Labor in Mining Prevention Program	Secretariat of Mining and Office of Infancy, Adolescence, and Youth program in Antioquia that has provided 438 children with life skills training, legal and psychological support, and recreational activities to prevent and eradicate child labor in the mining sector.(125)
Campaign to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism sector (Ojos en Todas Partes)*†	Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Tourism public awareness campaign that aims to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism sector. Implemented in coordination with the ICBF and the National Tourism Fund.(2, 126)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012 – 2015)	$1.3 million, Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in the Americas, including Colombia. Included the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(127)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011 – 2015)	$4.5 million, Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Colombia.(127)
Capacity-building project for the implementation of the National Strategy for the Prevention and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2015 – 2017)*	$214,000, Government of Canada-funded, 2-year project to build the capacity of key institutions for the formulation and implementation of the National Strategy for Prevention and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Protection of Young Workers 2015 - 2025 (ENETI).(127)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Colombia.

The Government of Colombia has implemented programs to eliminate child labor in mining, commercial sexual exploitation, armed conflict, and tourism. However, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children in sectors such as sugarcane and garbage scavenging.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Colombia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that victims of human trafficking have sufficient time to, or are not required to, file official complaints against their traffickers to receive services beyond emergency care.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that labor inspectors have adequate resources to perform inspections, and publicly report on the level of funding for the labor inspectorate.	2009 – 2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2009 – 2015
	Publicly report on child labor law enforcement efforts, including disaggregated data on the number of unannounced inspections and the number and amount of penalties collected for labor violations.	2009 – 2015
	Develop and implement a strategy of targeted inspections related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents.	2015
	Use information from the child labor monitoring system to target labor inspections and take enforcement actions to follow up on child labor cases reported by the ICBF.	2009 – 2015
	Improve coordination between the ICBF and the MOL to enforce child labor laws in the mining sector.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that all adolescents who work in allowable activities have received legally required authorization from the MOL.	2015
	Make the number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor publicly available, including disaggregating data on each by type of violation, and ensure that all criminal child labor violations are reciprocally referred among relevant agencies to ensure adequate and coordinated prosecution of crimes and the provision of services.	2014 – 2015
	Expand efforts to encourage the filing of complaints against commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2014 – 2015
	Provide adequate resources to criminal law enforcement officials to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure that there is an exchange of information among coordinating bodies at the national and regional levels.	2012 – 2015
Government Policies	Ensure that departments and municipalities have sufficient resources and technical assistance incentives to adequately implement national policies to prevent and eliminate the worst forms of child labor, with a focus on identified priority sectors.	2010 – 2015
Social Programs	Collect and make publicly available information about activities in which children and adolescents work—including information about health, occupational safety, and other risks—as well as about geographical areas and sectors where children work, including street work, recruitment of children by illegal armed groups, children’s involvement in illicit activities, and other identified priority sectors.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that children are protected from armed conflict while in school.	2013 – 2015
	Expand efforts to improve access to education for all children, particularly for indigenous and Afro-Caribbean children, and for children in rural areas and in the Caribbean and Pacific regions.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that all children identified by the MOL in child labor receive appropriate social services.	2009 – 2015
	Institute programs to address child labor, including its worst forms, in the identified priority sectors for child labor eradication.	2012 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
79. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

80. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Comoros made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the Decent Work Country Program and the Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development, which aim to improve the operational environment for the elimination of child labor and its worst forms. In addition, the Government funded and participated in multiple programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. However, children in Comoros are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work. A gap between the minimum age for work and the age for compulsory education leaves children ages 13 to 15 vulnerable to child labor. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. In addition, social programs to combat child labor are also insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Comoros are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-3) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work.(4-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Comoros.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	23.0 (42,145)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	81.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	20.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		73.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2012.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* activities (3, 10, 11)
	Animal husbandry* (11)
	Agroforestry,* activities unknown (11)
	Fishing,*† activities unknown (10-12)
Industry	Carpentry,* activities unknown (11)
	Construction,* activities unknown (11)
Services	Domestic work† (2, 3, 6, 7, 10-12)
	Repairing* cars and bicycles, including tire vulcanization* and battery charging* (11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in domestic work,* street vending,* baking,* fishing,* and agriculture* (2, 5, 11)
	Commercial sexual exploitation,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (5, 6)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined hazardous by national law or regulation.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Comoros

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Some parents who are unable to care for their children send them to wealthy families that are expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling to the children in exchange for housework. In practice, some of these children receive care and an education, while many become domestic workers and are victims of labor exploitation and abuse.(5, 12) In Comoros, it is a traditional practice to send children to Koranic teachers to receive an education; however, some Koranic teachers force their students to work; girls usually perform domestic work and boys perform agricultural labor.(5, 12, 13)

Although the Constitution guarantees free compulsory primary education, in practice, this provision is not enforced effectively, and many children do not attend school.(2, 10) Also, the lack of school infrastructure and the limited availability of teachers impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(3, 10, 14)

The Government, in collaboration with civil society partners, conducted a study on the prevalence of child labor in hazardous work; it is unknown whether the results were published during the reporting period.(6)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Comoros has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 129 of the Labor Code (15)

* No conscription. (22)

The National Assembly adopted a new Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedures in June and December 2014, respectively, that prohibit and increase the penalties for human trafficking crimes, but the President did not assent to these codes during the reporting period.(5, 13) The Government submitted a proposal to ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons to the National Assembly, but the proposal was also not approved during the reporting period.(13, 23)

The Labor Code allows children under the minimum age to perform light work in the home and in the fields, as long as it does not interfere with the children's education or with their physical or moral development(15); however, the Labor Code does not prescribe the number of hours per week for light work, does not determine the activities in which light work may be permitted, and does not specify the conditions in which light work may be undertaken, as defined by the international standards on child labor.(24) In addition, children working in unpaid or non-contractual work do not have the same protections under child labor laws and regulations as do children working in contractual employment.(24)

Children in Comoros are required to attend 6 years of primary school, through age 12. Since the minimum age for children to work is 15, children ages 13 to 15 are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor because they may have completed primary school, but are not legally permitted to work.(1, 25, 26)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws, investigate allegations of child labor, and refer cases for investigation.(11, 12)
Police Morals and Minors Brigade	Investigate allegations of child abuse, including child trafficking and refer cases for prosecution.(11)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Prosecute criminal cases.(11)
National Commission for Human Rights and Freedoms* (CNDHL)	Investigate allegations of child labor and trafficking and refer cases to the MOJ for prosecution.(11)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Comoros did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) employed four labor inspectors: two in Grand Comore, one for Anjouan, and one for Mohéli; the MOL reported this number to be inadequate considering the prevalence of child labor in the country. According to the ILO recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Comoros should employ about 6 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(11, 29-31) Reports indicate a lack of equipment, transportation, and funding to conduct child labor inspections and legal proceedings.(11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Comoros did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	No (11)

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Unknown	Unknown

Reports indicate a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to effectively conduct criminal law enforcement efforts on the worst forms of child labor.(23, 32) As a result, the police are unable to open an investigation unless the victim self-reports the alleged crime at the police station and can pay the expenses associated with the investigation, including fuel and telephone fees; therefore, investigations are reactive and depend on the victim's wealth and knowledge of the criminal justice system, making investigations of cases involving victimized children unlikely.(33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee Against Child Labor	Coordinate government efforts on child labor, including the implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.(12, 24)
Regional Committees Against Child Labor	Identify cases of child labor and violence against children and educate communities on child labor.(34)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Monitoring Group for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate actions against trafficking in persons and provide rehabilitation services to victims at the national level.(5) Headed by the Secretary General of the Government and reports to the cabinet on progress in implementing the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan.(12) Members include the Government Human Rights Officer; representatives of the Ministries of National Education, Employment, Interior, Justice, External Relations, Finance, and Health; and representatives from the police, Gendarmes, Planning Commission, Office of the Presidency, Human Rights Delegation, CNDHL, and United Nations.(11, 12)

Research did not determine whether the National Committee Against Child Labor, the Regional Committees Against Child Labor, or the Monitoring Group for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons were active during the reporting period.(6)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Comoros has established policies on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor (2010–2015)	Aimed to harmonize labor laws, mobilize groups to combat the worst forms of child labor, promote universal primary education, address family poverty, and collect systematic information on the worst forms of child labor.(6, 24, 35)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan	Includes the goals of enhancing the legal framework to prevent human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation; effectively implementing the laws; providing effective protection and care for victims; and raising awareness of trafficking in persons.(12, 36) In 2015, the TIP Task Force drafted a new action plan, which was not validated because of the presidential elections.(32)
Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development (2015–2019)†	Aims to reduce poverty, promote sustainable development, and increase access to social services. Integrates strategies that target child labor by supporting activities outlined in the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.(13, 37)
National Plan on Education for All in 2015	Aims to achieve universal primary education and integrates strategies that target child labor.(1, 10, 25)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Comoros funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Protection Units†	Government program that provides social and reintegration services to vulnerable and sexually abused children. Comprises three government-operated units on the islands of Anjouan, Grande Comore, and Mohéli.(13)
Decent Work Country Program (2015–2019)†	Identifies two objectives of decent work: (1) creating jobs and guaranteeing rights at work for vulnerable populations and (2) extending social protection and promoting social dialog.(7) Outcomes include improving the operational environment for the elimination of child labor and its worst forms. Overseen by the MOL and supported by the ILO.(7)
UNICEF Country Program (2015–2019)	In cooperation with the Government of Comoros, aims to strengthen children's rights to survival, development, education, protection, and social inclusion.(3, 13)
Social Safety Net Project (2015–2019)*	World Bank-implemented, $6 million program that aims to increase low-income communities' access to safety net and nutrition services. Seeks to provide cash for work transfers to 5,890 beneficiaries by 2019.(38)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Comoros.

Although the Government has in place programs that target child labor, the activities undertaken by these programs in 2016 are unknown and their scope is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in agriculture, domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Comoros (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that the law's light work provisions prescribe the number of hours per week for light work, determine the activities in which light work may be permitted, and specify the conditions in which light work may be undertaken, as defined by international standards on child labor.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions and protections apply to children in unpaid or non-contractual work.	2015
	Raise the compulsory education age to 15 to be equivalent to the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Collect information on the labor inspectorate's funding and make it publicly available.	2015
	Increase the resources, training, available transportation and equipment, and number of criminal law investigators and labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws on child labor to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2009 – 2015
	Carry out inspections and criminal investigations to enforce compliance with the laws that address child labor.	2009 – 2015
	Collect and make publicly available information on the number of Police Morals and Minors Brigade criminal investigators, law violations and penalties assessed, and criminal investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to cases of the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
	Establish referral mechanisms between labor and criminal law enforcement agencies and social welfare entities.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure that the National Committee Against Child Labor, the Regional Committees Against Child Labor, and the Monitoring Group for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons actively carry out their responsibilities related to the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Increase children's access to education by increasing school infrastructure and teacher availability.	2014 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem, particularly in agriculture, domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
31. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, the Democratic Republic of the Congo made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government took steps to implement a UN-backed action plan to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers, including by arresting Force de Résistance Patriotique en Ituri leader Cobra Matata for use of child soldiers and launching the Reinsertion and Reintegration Project. The National Labor Council also approved the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor, originally drafted in 2011, and submitted it to the Cabinet for approval and adoption. However, children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the mining of gold, cassiterite (tin ore), coltan (tantalum ore), and wolframite (tungsten ore), and are used in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forcible recruitment or abduction by non-state armed groups. The prescribed penalties for forced or compulsory labor remain low and do not serve as deterrents. Decentralization, a lack of resources, and poor coordination have hampered the Government's efforts to combat child labor, and laws mandating free primary education are not enforced.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the mining of gold, cassiterite (tin ore), coltan (tantalum ore), and wolframite (tungsten ore) and are used in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forcible recruitment or abduction by non-state armed groups.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the DRC.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	16.9 (3,327,806)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	67.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	16.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		66.8

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Forced domestic work* (37, 38)
	Use in illicit activities, including for spying, stealing, carrying stolen goods, smuggling minerals,* and distributing drugs* (9, 24, 37, 44-46)
	Use as child soldiers, sometimes as a result of forced recruitment by armed groups (4, 6, 10, 11, 15, 45, 47-50)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2015, members of indigenous and foreign non-state armed groups—including the Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA); Forces Démocratiques de Libération du Rwanda (FDLR); Nduma Défense du Congo (NDC/Cheka); Force de Résistance Patriotique en Ituri (FRPI); Mayi Mayi groups including Nyatura and Rayia Mutomboki; and other armed groups—continued to abduct and recruit children to be used in their units, primarily in North Kivu.(36, 47, 51) The Government estimates 3,663 children were associated with armed groups in 2015.(52) Children associated with armed groups serve as combatants and bodyguards for army commanders, as well as porters of ammunition, cooks, spies, miners, domestic workers, and sex slaves. Children also monitor military check points, cultivate crops, transmit messages, collect taxes in rebel-occupied territory, and loot villages after attacks.(4, 12, 37, 45, 46, 48-50, 53-56) The LRA continued to abduct Congolese children for use by the group within the country, as well as in the Central African Republic, Sudan, and South Sudan during the reporting period.(57) For the second year in a row, there have been no verified cases of children being recruited into the Armed Forces of the DRC (FARDC), and the FARDC has increased its efforts to demobilize child soldiers, including those from rebel military groups.(36, 47)

Article 43 of the Constitution establishes the right to free education in all public establishments; President Joseph Kabila’s August 2010 declaration, and his Circular of September 2010, waives all direct costs of primary education.(9, 58-61) The fee waiver mandated by the 2010 declaration and by the Circular was implemented in stages, with all school fees to be eliminated by the 2014–2015 academic year.(58) However, in practice, implementation is uneven and some families are required to pay for school uniforms, tuition, and additional fees—including funds to cover teachers’ salaries, which may be prohibitive.(9-11, 26-28, 30, 34, 47, 61-65) Children often engage in various kinds of work, such as artisanal mining, to pay their school fees.(17, 19, 21, 26) Many schools throughout the DRC are oversubscribed, under-resourced, poorly maintained, and require children to travel long distances.(10, 14, 63, 66-68) Additionally, armed conflict hinders children’s access to education in the eastern region of the DRC. There are reports of some children being forcibly recruited or sexually abused at school; some children were subject to sexual violence or abduction on their way to and from school.(6, 39, 44, 47, 50, 69) Many schools in the eastern regions have been closed due to destruction, damage, or looting caused by the conflict; other schools are occupied by armed rebel groups as their barracks or army operation bases.(10, 12, 47, 51, 64, 69) There is a lack of qualified teachers throughout the country and research indicates some teachers require students to work in their fields or demand sexual favors from female students in exchange for good grades.(10, 17, 47, 60, 68, 70) Internally displaced children may also have difficulty accessing education, which puts them at increased risk of engaging in child labor. UNHCR estimates that approximately 2.7 million people were internally displaced in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in 2015.(67, 71)

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Only an estimated 10 to 37 percent of all births are registered in the DRC, which may make some children more vulnerable to child labor.(11, 36, 67, 72, 73) A lack of identification documents makes age verification difficult during FARDC recruitment campaigns; it also hinders efforts to identify and separate children associated with armed groups.(74)

A comprehensive, standalone child labor survey has never been conducted in the DRC.(53)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The DRC has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 43 of the Constitution; Article 38 of the Child Protection Code; Article 9 of the Law on National Education (59, 75, 83)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (58, 75, 77, 83)

In April 2014, the Council of Ministers approved a draft law to establish specialized mixed chambers to try war crimes and crimes against humanity, including the recruitment and the use of child soldiers; it presented the draft law to the National Assembly for adoption and enactment in May 2014. Citing technical concerns, the Parliament rejected the legislation; it now awaits the resubmission of corrected text.(84, 85)

Although the Law on National Education guarantees free and compulsory education through primary school, it does not establish a compulsory age for education.(58, 83) Children between ages 6 and 9 may enroll in primary education, which lasts for 6 years. This makes children who are graduating elementary school between ages 12 and 15 years old particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work.(58, 75, 77, 83) In addition, the Child Protection Code establishes a penalty of 1 to 3 years of imprisonment and a fine of approximately $171 to $342 for offenses related to the forced labor of children, which may not be severe enough to deter offenders and is not commensurate with penalties imposed for other worst forms of child labor.(75) The Government has not passed the implementing decree for the Child Protection Code, which contains many relevant protections for children.(39, 85) The provisions of the Child Protection Code cannot be enforced until the implementing decree is passed. A draft Mining Code submitted by the Ministry of Mines includes a provision punishing forced child labor on mining sites with 5 to 10 years of penal servitude; it has yet to be considered by the National Assembly for adoption.(29, 86)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Labor, and Social Welfare (MOL)	Investigate cases related to child labor, including its worst forms.(4, 11) Refer cases of child labor to the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ) for prosecution.(87)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ)	Enforce criminal laws related to forced labor, human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.(4, 11) Oversee four juvenile courts in Kinshasa convoked for cases involving children under age 16; the courts have heard no cases of child labor since their establishment in 2011. Assist the International Criminal Court in conducting investigations and prosecutions against individuals who allegedly used children in armed conflict.(87)
Ministry of the Interior	In the case of the Congolese National Police, enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(85, 88) In the case of the Police for Child Protection and Combating Sexual Violence (PEVS), combat sexual and gender-based violence against women and children, especially in eastern DRC.(54, 85, 89, 90) Units in North Kivu, South Kivu, and Orientale collect data, conduct preliminary investigations, refer cases to the MOJ for prosecution, and assist victims in seeking justice.(91) PEVS officials also accompany children who are in conflict with the law when they go to court.(92)
Ministry of Gender, Family, and Children (MOGFC)	Oversee and investigate cases related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(11, 36)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action, and National Solidarity (MINASAH)	Monitor humanitarian programs and coordinate with UNICEF, USAID, and NGOs to provide social services to vulnerable groups, including street children, trafficking victims, and child soldiers.(36, 93) A technical team within MINASAH's Secretary General's office is responsible for overseeing and investigating child trafficking cases.(4) Oversee the Street Children Project.(36, 94) In the case of the Department of Child Protection, operate a database to monitor and coordinate children's rights activities and implement programs targeting orphans and vulnerable children.(95, 96)
Ministry of Defense	Investigate and use military courts to prosecute military officials suspected of recruitment and use of child soldiers or forced labor of civilians. Lead the implementation of the UN-backed action plan to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers.(36)

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The MOJ, which is responsible for investigating the use of children in illicit activities, should be the primary point of contact for human trafficking issues. However, it receives limited funds, which hampers its ability to investigate and prosecute cases, including those involving child trafficking.(4, 36) Additionally, the Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action, and National Solidarity (MINASAH) reports that it receives limited funding to support reintegration services for street children and demobilized child soldiers.(36)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in the DRC took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, the DRC should employ roughly 690 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(100-102) Although only approximately 50 of the country's 243 inspectors are based in Kinshasa, officials from the MOL report that even more inspectors are needed in rural areas. The Government aims to employ at least 1,000 inspectors.(85, 92) The Government acknowledges that given the size and remoteness of the country, the inspectorate has insufficient capacity and resources, including transportation, facilities, and infrastructure, to conduct investigations throughout the country.(11, 30, 36, 42, 99) Inspectors at the MOL noted that it is difficult to recruit and retain new inspectors and they need additional training in gathering statistics, child labor, and other aspects of labor inspections.(11, 92) Inspectors are occasionally sent to Cameroon for regional trainings, but the last training inspectors received in-country was conducted in 2009.(92)

Inspectors are required to prepare at least 10 inspection reports each per month, but their focus is primarily on the formal economic sector, which is not the sector in which the majority of child labor incidences occur.(11) When victims of child labor are identified, the MOJ or the MOL refers them to NGOs or the MOGFC for social services.(87) When dealing with children in vulnerable situations, MINASAH refers to a guide it had published in 2014 that includes information for service providers and law enforcement.(85, 103)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in the DRC took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

The justice system lacks independence, funding, capacity, and legitimacy, which weakens its ability to deal with crimes committed in the country.(4, 36, 48, 49) In 2015, USDOS provided training on human rights to the National Police, which included some training on trafficking issues.(36) The UN trained 11 Congolese lawyers and magistrates, 5,067 members of the FARDC, and 127 members of the Congolese National Police on child protection issues during 2015. Additionally, 251 members of the FARDC received training from the USDOS on conducting investigations, prosecutions, and trial procedures for military justice issues, including human trafficking.(36) There has also been increased collaboration at the local level between Government officials and NGOs to strengthen the referral mechanism that identifies vulnerable children and refers them to social services providers.(36, 37, 85)

The Government was unable to enforce laws adequately throughout the country, including to all the areas where child trafficking occurs. Additionally, research indicates some judges, prosecutors, and investigators lack the knowledge, capacity, or resources to investigate and prosecute cases of child trafficking effectively. However, the Government has taken some steps to address impunity for crimes against humanity and continues to work through the military court system.(36) Since his arrest in January 2015, FRPI Leader Cobra Matata has been held in pretrial detention for war crimes, including the recruitment of children.(49, 51, 104, 105) Additionally, the judiciary worked with the UN to issue additional arrest warrants for the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.(51, 105) In August, a FARDC officer was arrested for allegedly recruiting children into armed conflict.(51)

In 2015, the National Intelligence Service intercepted four children who were being trafficked to Tanzania for forced domestic labor and referred them to a shelter where they received legal support and protection.(36) As part of a new trend, six Burundian child soldiers who were recruited from refugee camps in Rwanda transited through the DRC to join opposition groups in Burundi at the end of 2015. The Government intercepted the child soldiers in the DRC and referred them to NGOs for care and support.(36, 51) There were also reports that some children associated with armed groups were detained, interrogated, and beaten, despite the enactment of a directive that requires that all children detained for their association with armed groups be immediately transferred to the UN.(4, 6, 51, 108)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NCCL)	Develop, coordinate, implement, monitor, and evaluate a National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NAP) and build the capacity of partner organizations.(97, 109-111) Led by the MOL and composed of members from the MOGFC, MOJ, local NGOs, and civil society.(93, 97, 110, 111) In the case of Provincial Committees, combat the worst forms of child labor at the provincial level in Kasai Orientale, Katanga, and Orientale provinces.(60, 96, 111) Two new provincial committees were established in South Kivu and Katanga during the reporting period.(9) In 2015, with the support of the ILO under the Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project, the Permanent Secretariat organized a National Workshop on Child Labor in Agriculture from May 12–14 for 30 participants from government ministries, social partners, and farmers' organizations, to raise awareness about child labor in agriculture and identify opportunities to address these issues.(9, 112) As a result, the MOL and the Ministry of Agriculture created a partnership to combat child labor and relevant ministries clarified their policies to better implement sectoral programs to combat child labor.(9)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Defense's Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Commission (UEPN-DDR)	Coordinate the identification, verification, and release of child soldiers by collaborating with the UN Organization Stabilization Mission in the DRC (MONUSCO), UNICEF, and NGOs.(36, 113, 114) In the case of the Children Associated with Armed Forces and Armed Groups unit, ensure identified children are referred to these partners for family reunification and assistance with socioeconomic reinsertion.(36, 114) Provide a signed "attestation" stating the demobilized children have completed a reintegration program.(36)
Joint Technical Working Group (JTWG) on the Implementation of the UN-Backed Action Plan	Coordinate implementation of the UN-backed action plan to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers. Led by the MOGFC and includes representatives from the Ministry of the Interior, the MOJ, the MOL, and the Ministry of Defense, as well as the UN.(36) In the case of Provincial JTWGs, coordinate implementation at the provincial level in North Kivu, South Kivu, and Orientale provinces.(36, 48) In 2015, established two additional Provincial Working Groups in Ituri and Katanga, and a second Provincial Working Group in North Kivu due to the size of the province.(36, 85) Met multiple times during the reporting period and drafted a roadmap identifying eight priority areas to expedite the full implementation of the Action Plan and eliminate the use of child soldiers.(36, 105)

In July 2015, the Government began decentralization efforts, which were mandated by the 2006 Constitution. This divided 11 provinces into 26, disrupting the functions of many ministries and resulting in officials assuming new and unfamiliar duties.(11, 36, 115) Decentralization, poor coordination among relevant ministries, a lack of resources, and competing priorities have impeded the Government's efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.(36) The formation of a proposed interministerial TIP committee has been stalled for 2 years, despite recognition from relevant ministries that it would enable the Government to better coordinate efforts against human trafficking and enable the formulation of a comprehensive anti-trafficking law.(36) Although the UEPN-DDR is intended to coordinate the Government's disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration program, research indicates that, in practice, coordination occurs between international and local partners in the field.(36) Additionally, the NCCL only meets when there is funding or a specific activity; it did not formally meet in 2015, since it did not receive a dedicated budget.(9, 13, 93)

In October 2013, the Government published a decree authorizing the creation of committees to combat child labor at the provincial level and extending applicable MOL activities to the provinces.(4, 85, 97) However, the Government has not funded the three existing provincial committees and did not establish additional committees during the reporting period; research found no evidence that the existing committees were operational in 2014.(85, 96, 98)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the DRC has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NAP) (2012–2020)†	Developed by the NCCL in consultation with UNICEF; aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the DRC by 2020.(4, 10, 116) Promotes the enforcement of legislation on the worst forms of child labor; awareness raising and empowering communities to stop engaging in child labor practices; provision of quality universal primary education; provision of prevention and reintegration services; improved monitoring and evaluation efforts; and improved coordination of stakeholders.(10, 109, 116, 117) In 2015, the National Labor Council, comprising representatives from the MOL, labor unions, and employers' unions, approved the NAP, which is now before the Cabinet for approval and adoption.(9, 118) During the reporting period, it began implementing limited awareness-raising activities about child labor in agriculture in the Kongo Central Province.(85, 119)
Katanga Regional Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2015–2017)†	In support of the NAP, aims to eliminate child labor by 2020 by improving the legal and institutional framework, raising awareness, providing protection and support to victims, and improving coordination of local actors combating child labor. Led by the Provincial Committee under the supervision of MINASAH's Provincial Division of Social Welfare.(24, 60)
UN-Backed Action Plan to End the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers	Seeks to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers within the Government's security services, including the armed forces. Implemented by the JTWG, UNICEF, and MONUSCO, aims to identify and separate children from armed forces, provide support and reintegration services, pursue accountability for perpetrators, and creating a partnership framework for the UN and the Government.(12, 51, 89, 108, 120, 121)

Policy	Description
National Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Plan (PNDDR) DDR III†	Aims to significantly improve the security situation in Eastern Congo by eradicating the existence of armed groups in the East and providing rehabilitation and reintegration services to 12,205 combatants demobilized from all armed groups.(122, 123) Implemented by UEPN-DDR with the support of MONUSCO, USAID, the World Bank, Sweden, and Japan, DDR III is the third phase of PNDDR which supports the 2013 Framework Agreement for Peace, Security and Cooperation for the DRC and the Great Lakes Region (52, 109, 113, 123, 124) A directive issued in 2013 and amended in 2014 requires the immediate transfer to humanitarian organizations of all children who escape from armed groups, are in the custody of the FARDC, or have been detained.(36) By the end of 2015, the Government and MONUSCO had provided support to 2,055 children who were separated or escaped from non-state armed groups as part of DDR III.(85)
Human Rights Due Diligence in Mineral Supply Chains	Code of conduct signed by the Government, representatives of artisanal miners, mineral buyers and traders, and civil society groups in 2011 to increase transparency and prohibit the employment of children in mines.(125) Supported by the Ministry of Mines' Ministerial Order N° 0058 and accompanying Manual of Principles, Guidelines, and Standards, which establishes a multistakeholder validation process to certify artisanal sites as being free of illegal taxation by armed groups or criminal FARDC elements, dangerous work conditions, and child labor.(37, 126, 127) In cooperation with the IOM and USAID, validated 81 artisanal mining sites in eastern Congo as free of conflict and child labor between October 2014 and November 2015, for a total of 215 certified mines.(36) Initiative does not include protocols for assisting child victims of forced labor on the inspected sites.(37, 85)
Growth and PRSP (2011–2015)*	Seeks to improve living conditions and access to social services for vulnerable groups, including children, by 2015.(63)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor was approved during the reporting period, it has not been comprehensively implemented, largely due to the Government's failure to allocate adequate funding.(11, 15) Research was unable to obtain any information to assess the implementation of the three provincial committees' action plans to combat the worst forms of child labor.(85, 96, 109)

UN sources reported that the Government cooperated fully and collaborated closely with the UN to identify and remove children from the FARDC, allowing frequent and often unfettered access to its bases. During the reporting period, FARDC commanders proactively requested that UN agencies and partners screen for children in certain locations.(36)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of the DRC funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in the DRC.(112) In 2015, as part of the effort to revise the hazardous work list for children, conducted an occupational safety and health risk assessment in agriculture from November 4–19.(112) Also presented the NAP to the National Labor Council for adoption.(9, 112)
Reinsertion and Reintegration Project (2015–2019)*	$21 million World Bank-funded project seeking to provide socioeconomic reintegration support for the 4,700 combatants identified as part of DDR III. Provides cultural and sport activities for former child combatants to assist with social reintegration.(124)
Program to Support Vulnerable Children*	$4 million Government of Japan-funded program aiming to provide education and school feeding programs to 13,000 children and construct a training center for youth in North Kivu Province. UNICEF will coordinate primary education interventions; the National Institute of Professional Preparation will provide vocational training; WFP will implement school lunch programs; UNDP will provide reintegration kits and support households with the reintegration of former child soldiers; and the Presidential Adviser on Sexual Violence will help identify participants who were victims of sexual violence.(128)

Program	Description
Growth with Governance in the Mineral Sector Project (PROMINES) (2010–2015)†	$90 million project co-funded by the Government, the World Bank, the International Development Association (IDA), and the UK's Department for International Development (DFID) that aimed to promote better governance in the mining sector and eliminate child labor and the presence of children in mines. In Kolwezi, located in Katanga Province, included raising awareness of child labor among parents and provided children with extracurricular activities, school catchup classes, school clubs, and income-generating activities for families.(30, 129-131)
Street Children Project (2010–2015)	$10 million World Bank-funded, 5-year project to prevent children from engaging in street work, provided support services for street children, and built the capacity of service providers to better coordinate and implement interventions.(43, 94, 95) Benefitted 15,586 street children by the time it ended in 2015.(43)
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2016)	$44.5 million ILO-implemented program to contribute to the consolidation of peace and reconstruction in the DRC by promoting social dialogue, social protection, and decent work for girls and boys in a post-conflict context of sustainable development. Aims to ensure that child protection agencies use the NAP.(132)
School Rehabilitation Project	$100 million World Bank-funded project implemented by the Ministry of Primary, Secondary, and Vocational Education, which aims to strengthen institutional capacity, increase access to education, and improve learning conditions, including through the distribution of 15 million textbooks and the rehabilitation of 1,000 schools across the country.(67, 133-136) The World Bank will rehabilitate 900 schools and the Government will rehabilitate 100 schools.(85, 135) By February 2016, had rehabilitated 728 classrooms and distributed 20 million textbooks on French, math, and science.(135)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of the DRC.

The Government works with international partners to assist and support demobilized child soldiers, but the programs are not sufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, and the process is slow.(55, 67) Additionally, cumbersome bureaucracy and a lack of funding hampers effective collaboration between MONUSCO and the Government in fully implementing DDR III.(137) Reintegrated child soldiers remain vulnerable to re-recruitment, as stigmatization, threats from former colleagues, and lack of adequate rehabilitation services may lead them to rejoin their old unit or to be recruited by other armed groups.(36, 45, 108, 137) More than half of the child soldiers returning from armed conflict do not have access to reintegration services; the programs available do not adequately respond to the medical, psychological, and economic needs of former child soldiers.(53) Limited evidence also suggests that shame and fear of stigmatization prevents girls from entering Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration (DDR) programs because they do not identify as child soldiers and lack awareness of their rights and options.(44, 55, 108, 138) The UN and other organizations have called on the Government to make DDR more accessible and effective for girls.(53, 139)

Despite the efforts of the Katanga Provincial Ministry of the Interior to manage a center for street children in Lubumbashi, children continued to live and work on the streets in Katanga and throughout the country. The Government needs to strengthen its efforts to provide street children with food, shelter, and health care.(39, 43, 96, 98) Child labor in artisanal mining is prevalent in the provinces of Katanga, Eastern and Western Kasai, North and South Kivu, and Orientale.(15, 37) Although the Government pledged $3 million to fund PROMINES, it did not allocate these funds.(85) Additionally, research did not find evidence of any social programs to protect these children.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the DRC (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Raise the compulsory education age to 16 so it can be equivalent to the minimum age for work.	2013 – 2015
	Issue appropriate decrees to ensure that enacted laws are implemented.	2013 – 2015
	Raise penalties for the use of forced or compulsory labor to deter violations.	2013 – 2015

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Implement President Kabila's August 2010 declaration and Circular No. MINEPSP/CABMIN/008/2010, which provide for free and compulsory education.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the MOJ and MINASAH have sufficient funding and resources to carry out their mandates and address the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing inspectors to assess penalties, conducting routine and unannounced inspections, establishing a complaint mechanism, and conducting inspections in the informal sector.	2015
	Systematically collect, monitor, and make publicly available information related to enforcement statistics, including funding level for the labor inspectorate, the number and types of inspections conducted and violations found, and the number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed and collected.	2009 – 2015
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors in accordance with the ILO recommendation and ensure that they receive adequate resources and training to effectively carry out their duties throughout the country.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that judges, prosecutors, and investigators know about child labor issues and can investigate and prosecute violations effectively.	2011 – 2015
	Implement directive 05/00/CAG/ANR/195/2013, which requires that children in detention for being associated with armed groups be handed over to UN child protection actors for reintegration.	2013 – 2015
Coordination	Improve coordination among relevant ministries and ensure that they receive adequate resources to combat the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking.	2015
	Ensure that UEPN-DDR is able to coordinate the Government's DDR III program as intended.	2015
	Ensure that the NCCL receives a dedicate budget and meets on a regular basis.	2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure local and national plans to combat the worst forms of child labor are fully implemented.	2011 – 2015
Social Programs	Improve access to education for all children, including those who are internally displaced, by eliminating all school-related fees; regulating classroom size; training additional teachers; ensuring that schools are safe and that students are not required to work in teachers' fields or subjected to sexual abuse while at school.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure that all children are registered at birth or have identification documents.	2012 – 2015
	Conduct a standalone child labor survey.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure adequate medical, psychological, economic, and other support services for children demobilizing from armed groups and integrate stigmatization, gender, and re-recruitment concerns into programs to reintegrate such children.	2009 – 2015
	Expand efforts to address the needs of former child soldiers, children working in artisanal mining, and children working on the streets and in other informal settings.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new

Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.

ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
102. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Congo, Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, the Republic of the Congo made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched a project to expand the network of foster families throughout the nation, continued to implement a school feeding program which served approximately 215,000 children, and undertook a mapping project in Pointe-Noire to identify possible human trafficking rings and hotspots for commercial sexual exploitation. However, children in the Republic of the Congo are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work, and the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has yet to ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons and there is no mechanism to coordinate the Government's efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms. Additionally, information on children's work is extremely limited, as there has never been a national child labor survey or similar research conducted in the Republic of the Congo.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Republic of the Congo (ROC) are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. (1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Republic of the Congo.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	27.9 (286,137)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	90.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	29.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		74.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Deuxième Enquête Démographique et de Santé du Congo (EDSC-II) Survey, 2011-2012.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* including in the production of manioc,* peanuts,* corn,* plantains,* potatoes,* and sugar cane* (3, 9-13)
	Catching* and smoking fish* (3)
	Raising livestock* and hunting* wild game (12, 14)
	Production of charcoal* by burning wood (14)
Industry	Working in stone quarries,* including breaking stones*(3, 9, 11)
Services	Domestic work* (3, 9)
	Working in transportation as bus touts* (9, 11)
	Market vending and carrying heavy loads* (3, 9, 11)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3-5, 10, 11, 15-17)
	Forced labor in farming,* including the production of cocoa,* domestic work, stone quarries,* fishing,* and market vending, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 6, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18)
	Forced labor of indigenous Baka children in agriculture,* including sugar cane,* fishing,* hunting,* and domestic work* (11, 15)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked to ROC, mainly from West African countries and the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-4, 10, 11, 15, 17, 19-21) Children are also trafficked internally from rural areas to Brazzaville and Pointe-Noire for forced labor.(1, 3, 10, 11, 15) Indigenous children in particular are vulnerable to forced labor in agriculture.(1, 10, 11, 22) Information on children’s work is limited, as there has never been a national child labor survey or similar research conducted in ROC.(23)

The Government does not collect fees for examinations and provides free textbooks through secondary school in an attempt to increase children’s access to education.(11, 21) Although the Constitution stipulates that education is free until age 16, in practice, some parents are required to pay for books, uniforms, and school fees. This may limit some children’s access to education.(3, 22) Over-enrollment, a lack of teachers, and sexual abuse in schools also pose barriers to education for some children.(13, 22, 24) There were no reports that children from the DRC living in Brazzaville were denied access to education during the reporting period. However, many children from the DRC did not attend school in ROC for fear of being deported.(13) Indigenous children, particularly those in remote areas, had difficulty accessing education because of discrimination and linguistic barriers.(13, 25)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Republic of the Congo has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

* No conscription (23, 30, 31)

In partnership with UNODC, the Government drafted an anti-trafficking law in 2013 that extends greater protection to victims, provides more stringent penalties for offenders, and creates an interministerial coordination mechanism. Although the draft law made some advancement through the legislative process during the reporting period, the Parliamentary Committee has yet to adopt it.(1, 3, 21, 32) Existing penalties for the worst forms of children may not be severe enough to serve as deterrents, as offenses are punishable by 3 to 12 months of imprisonment and a fine of $85 to $850.(1, 3, 27) Additionally, research indicates that existing laws regarding child trafficking may not be specific enough to facilitate enforcement.(11)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws and monitor officially registered businesses.(3, 10)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ)	Enforce criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor.(3, 10) Dedicate two judges—one judge in Brazzaville and one in Pointe-Noire—to child protection cases.(3)
National Police	Enforce criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor, human trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities.(3, 10)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and Solidarity (MSA)	Promote the rights of vulnerable groups and contribute to anti-trafficking efforts by identifying and providing social welfare assistance to victims.(3, 22) Through the Departmental Directorate of Social Affairs, lead efforts to combat human trafficking in Pointe-Noire through the Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee.(10, 15) Maintain reception centers and assist in repatriating or reintegrating victims.(10)
Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation	Coordinate with the MSA in repatriating victims of child trafficking and monitor bilateral and multilateral agreements with neighboring countries to combat human trafficking.(10)

Although the two judges dedicated to child protection were appointed in 2013, they have been ineffective due to a lack of funding and support; therefore, no cases have been tried.(3) There have been no further allegations against members of the Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee; staff at the Consulate of Benin in Pointe-Noire; or government officials in Cotonou, Benin for being complicit in a child trafficking ring.(13, 15)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in the Republic of the Congo took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

The MOL employed an unknown number of part-time labor inspectors to supplement the 12 full-time inspectors, which is insufficient to enforce labor laws throughout the country. However, the part-time inspectors did not conduct any investigations during the reporting period because the inspectorate lacked the needed funds and means of transportation.(3, 11, 13, 34) According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, ROC should employ roughly 120 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(35-37) Training opportunities for labor inspectors are also very limited.(12) Inspectors in departmental offices were unable to carry out inspections unless the employer being inspected provided transportation.(3, 11, 34) Inspections were typically limited to the formal sector, leaving children in the informal sector without legal protection. Penalties were rarely applied for infractions of the Labor Code.(3, 11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Republic of the Congo took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

The MSA, MOL, MOJ, and the National Police work together to enforce criminal laws against child trafficking—although their efforts were primarily focused on West African children in the port city of Pointe-Noire.(3, 15) In 2015, the National Police undertook a mapping project in Pointe-Noire to identify possible human trafficking rings and hotspots for commercial sexual exploitation.(15) A local NGO in Pointe-Noire often initiated investigations that were then referred to the Prosecutor's

Congo, Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Office.(3, 15) The NGO occasionally received police support in rescuing trafficking victims for a fee of $90 to authorize a rescue operation and an additional $18 per police officer to staff the operation.(11, 15) After the victims are rescued, the Magistrate of Pointe-Noire works with the Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee to assign each victim to one of three MSA-supported foster families for shelter, food, and medical care.(1, 3, 10, 15) The MSA and the MOJ reported it was difficult to prosecute offenders due to a weak judicial system and an uneven knowledge of anti-trafficking legislation and of the Child Protection Code by criminal law enforcement officials and judges.(1, 3, 10, 11, 15) The Police Commander in Pointe-Noire noted that additional training is needed, particularly for lower-level police officers who may be illiterate or have received minimal training.(15)

In an effort to comply with the standards of the Palermo Protocol, the Government mandates that all human trafficking cases be prosecuted as felonies, rather than as delicts, a violation that is more severe than a misdemeanor but less severe than a felony. Felony courts meet infrequently and irregularly, due to a lack of resources, and they require more complex prosecution.(15) Rather than prosecuting such cases, the MSA has begun summoning those accused of child trafficking before the Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire.(3, 11, 15) While these summons often resulted in the accused trafficker paying for the victim's repatriation and reintegration kit, they did not deter the perpetrators of the practice.(11, 15) In 2015, seven victims were rescued from child trafficking in Pointe-Noire; they were subsequently placed in foster homes and enrolled in school. The Government facilitated the repatriation of two of these children, reintegrated one child within ROC, and is continuing to support the remaining four children as they await finalization of their legal proceedings and repatriation process.(3, 40) The four traffickers were all brought before the Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee. Two were detained pending investigations and two were released upon agreeing to pay the cost of their victims' repatriation and reintegration.(15)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a Task Force to combat child trafficking in Pointe-Noire, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MSA Task Force	Coordinate efforts to combat child trafficking, including training law enforcement officials, raising public awareness, and repatriating and reintegrating victims of child trafficking. Composed of the representatives of the MSA, other government agencies, the National Police, border patrol, and NGOs.(14, 33) Track the number of rescued and repatriated victims; maintain files on each victim.(40)
Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire	Led by the MSA's Departmental Directorate of Social Affairs, coordinate all efforts to combat child trafficking in Pointe-Noire with UNICEF's support; comprising government representatives and civil society organizations.(3, 10, 15) Prevent, identify, and rescue children of West African origin from situations of child trafficking, including by raising public awareness and by repatriating or reintegrating victims of child trafficking.(3, 15) Relies on a local NGO to bring cases of child trafficking to its attention, and refers cases for prosecution. In 2015 was unable to identify cases for several months following a violent attack on the home of the NGO's president that resulted in the temporary cessation of the NGO's work.(3, 15)

In 2015, the MSA Task Force did not receive any funding to conduct awareness-raising events or training. However, it continues to convene and coordinate with police and a local NGO when child trafficking victims are identified for rescue or repatriation.(40) Although the MSA continues to maintain the Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire, it did not receive any of its allocated $1,670 from the Government in 2015.(3) This is a significant decrease from the $69,000 received in 2013 and the $14,000 received in 2014.(38) The Government attributes its decreasing budgetary commitments to falling oil prices, since the national budget relies primarily on oil revenues.(15) Additionally, the MOJ and MSA have expressed concern over the Committee not including a representative from the MOJ.(15) Weak interministerial coordination, reduced funding, and poor recordkeeping continue to challenge the Government's ability to coordinate its efforts to address human trafficking.(1, 3, 10, 15)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Republic of the Congo has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (2014–2017)	Aims to establish a National Commission to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons; develop systems for monitoring and evaluation; strengthen the legal framework; and provide social services to victims of human trafficking.(41) Includes public awareness campaigns, training law enforcement officials, and improving enforcement activities related to child trafficking.(33)
Cooperation Agreement with the Government of Benin	Constitutes a bilateral agreement to combat child trafficking between the Republic of the Congo and Benin. Accompanying action plan prioritizes the prevention, identification, and assistance for victims of child trafficking as well as the prosecution of perpetrators.(2, 4, 10, 21, 32)
National Development Plan (2012–2016)*	Develops core strategies to set national priorities for poverty reduction and attainment of the Millennium Development Goals. As part of the strategy, aims to expand employment opportunities for youth; attain universal primary education by 2015; and reduce child mortality.(21, 42, 43)
Education Sector Policy (2015–2025)*†	Aims to improve infrastructure and equipment, access to education, and working conditions for educators.(44)
Cost Free Identity Document Policy*	Permits the issuance of free birth certificates, citizenship, and nationality documents.(15, 21)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government has adopted the National Action Plan to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, the Government failed to allocate resources to the National Action Plan and has not reached its stated benchmarks for 2015.(15) Research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.(10, 45) Despite the signing of the Cooperative Agreement with Benin in 2011, neither government has taken action under this agreement since it was signed.(1, 10, 15)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of the Republic of the Congo funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Awareness-Raising Activities†	MSA program that provides training to community members and social workers on child trafficking issues and offers social assistance to victims of child trafficking. Conducts anti-trafficking awareness-raising activities through television, banners, and public events.(3) In 2015, conducted an awareness campaign that included radio and TV broadcasts, a billboard, and a day-long conference on human trafficking.(3, 15)
Center for Street Children†	MSA program that provides vocational training and family reintegration assistance for street children. Maintains a drop-in center in Brazzaville and monitors privately-run centers throughout the country.(11)
Foster Families Program*†	MSA-funded program that provides small stipends to foster families of child trafficking victims in Pointe-Noire.(15) Families receive approximately $280 per child per month to cover the cost of food, lodging, transportation, and medical care.(15) In 2015, launched an EU and Embassy of France-funded, 3-year project implemented by Humanitarian Generation Triangle to expand the network of foster families throughout the nation.(3, 15, 46, 47) The MSA also received funding to map existing orphanages throughout the country in order to gain government accreditation, which would enable them to accept foster children.(3)
Improved Border Checkpoints	IOM-supported initiative to improve immigration controls to combat human trafficking.(10, 15, 17)
Safety Net Program (LISUNGI) (2014 – 2018)†	A $17 million project co-funded by the Government and World Bank that grants improved access to health and education services to poor families in Brazzaville, Cuvette, and Pointe-Noire.(3, 11, 48) Includes a pilot cash transfer program to cover 5,000 households, and an evaluation system to measure the change in situation for beneficiaries.(11, 48-50) In 2015, validated the LISUNGI Program Operations Manual and identified potential beneficiaries in all three cities, resulting in the addition of 10,751 poor households to the social registry that provides social programs. Disbursed regular payments to 3,764 families.(51) Research was unable to confirm whether the Government had allocated $15 million to the program as planned.(40, 48, 52)
School Feeding Program†	Co-funded by the Government and the U.S. Government's McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program, and implemented by the International Partnership for Human Development, to provide school lunches and reduce poverty-related dropouts, serving approximately 150,000 students.(3, 11, 12, 14) A second school feeding program partly funded by WFP targets about 100,000 students; it received $1.66 million from the Government in 2015.(3)

Congo, Republic of the

Program	Description
Observe, Reflect, Act (ORA) Schools†	Ministry of Education program supported by UNICEF, the EU, and WFP that aims to improve access to education for indigenous children through a 2- or 3-year preparatory program.(21, 53-55) Identifies children who should be added to the civil register, provide school supplies to students, and raise awareness about the importance of education among indigenous families.(21, 53)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of the Republic of the Congo.

Although the Government has implemented programs to assist victims of child trafficking, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs specifically designed to assist children engaged in forced labor in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation. Additionally, current funding levels are not sufficient to address the scope of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Republic of the Congo.(3, 33) In 2014 and 2015, IOM piloted a biometric identification system at the Brazzaville airport. Although it has been effective in combating human trafficking in other countries, the Government declined to implement it throughout the country due to budget constraints.(15) Since the Government failed to meet several funding commitments in 2015, UNICEF has ceased funding to the Foster Families Program as a result. With the exception of the EU and Humanitarian Generation Triangle, other international donors are no longer providing funds for anti-trafficking efforts.(3, 15)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Republic of the Congo (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2015
	Make publicly available the law establishing the minimum age for voluntary military service.	2015
	Ensure penalties for violating the worst forms of child labor laws are severe enough to serve as deterrents.	2015
Enforcement	Remove barriers to enforcement and prosecution by ensuring police assistance for rescuing trafficking victims is free; strengthening the judicial system; training prosecutors on existing laws; ensuring trafficking cases are prosecuted in a timely manner; and allocating resources to the judges responsible for child protection cases.	2014 – 2015
	Collect and make publicly available information related to enforcement statistics, including the funding level for the labor inspectorate, the number and type of labor inspections conducted, and penalties imposed for child labor violations.	2010 – 2015
	Institutionalize training for labor inspectors and investigators, including by providing training at the beginning of their employment and periodic refresher courses.	2014 – 2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by conducting routine and unannounced inspections, establishing a complaint mechanism for child labor violations, and creating a referral mechanism between labor law enforcement agencies and social services providers.	2015
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors and investigators in accordance with the ILO recommendation and ensure they receive adequate resources to effectively enforce labor laws throughout the country, including in the informal sector.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure anti-trafficking efforts protect victims throughout the country, and that prosecutors and law enforcement officials are knowledgeable about existing legislation regarding child trafficking.	2010 – 2015
	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2009 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure all coordinating bodies receive adequate resources to function as intended and improve interministerial coordination and record keeping to effectively combat human trafficking issues.	2014 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2009 – 2015
	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant forms of child labor such as domestic work and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.	2013 – 2015
	Fulfill the commitments outlined in the Cooperative Agreement with Benin.	2015
Social Programs	Conduct a national child labor survey or similar research to determine the activities carried out by working children to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Improve access to education by eliminating all school-related fees, regulating classroom size, training additional teachers, and ensuring that students are not subject to sexual abuse.	2013 – 2015
	Institute programs to address child labor in domestic work, and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015
	Meet funding commitments to partners in order to ensure the sustainability of social programs.	2012 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development as determined by the UN.
37. UN. “World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex.” (2012); http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Costa Rica made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government updated the Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor, introduced the Bridge to Development policy to reduce poverty in the poorest districts of the country, and expanded services to indigenous children vulnerable to child labor in coffee growing areas. Criminal law enforcement agencies received training on the worst forms of child labor and the Prosecutorial Unit for Gender Issues made 17 convictions for cases involving child pornography and commercial sexual exploitation of children. However, children in Costa Rica are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Existing social programs are insufficient to reach all child laborers and resources for the Government's child labor law enforcement agencies are inadequate.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Costa Rica are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Costa Rica. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.4 (34,494)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.7

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS 4, 2011.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

	Use in trafficking of drugs (3, 5, 23)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Results from the Government of Costa Rica’s 2011 National Household Survey indicate that almost 72 percent of child laborers ages 5 through 14, and 80 percent of working adolescents ages 15 through 17, are engaged in hazardous work, particularly in rural areas, where 9.1 percent of households are in situations of extreme poverty.(1) The 2011 National Household Survey also showed a decrease in children’s school attendance beginning at age 13 and identified the expense or difficulty of accessing educational services as barriers to education for 21 percent of out of school children ages 5 through 17.(2) The Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS) has noted the need for updated child labor statistics, citing the lack of funding as a key challenge toward this end.(7)

Research indicates Ngäbe Buglé indigenous children in Costa Rica travel with their families to coffee farms and may face challenges accessing education and nutrition services due to long distances, language barriers, and difficulties obtaining required documents from government institutions. Coffee pickers are paid by the number of baskets they fill, and children reportedly participate in the coffee harvest with their families by collecting beans from the ground and from shorter plants.(13-16).

Commercial sexual exploitation of children occurs in the provinces of Guanacaste, Limón, Puntarenas, and San José, as well as in border towns and port areas.(4, 25)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Costa Rica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

† No standing military.(30, 36)

‡ Age calculated based on available information. (6, 26, 30)

The Constitution and the Childhood and Adolescent Code make education compulsory through secondary school but do not specify a start or end age.(26, 30) The Government of Costa Rica has indicated that education is compulsory until age 17.(6)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS)	Investigate reports of child labor, including hazardous and forced child labor, and enforce child labor laws.(3, 17) Protect adolescent labor rights by conducting school and workplace visits, providing referrals to government services, and writing socio-labor studies and technical reports for the National Scholarship Fund (FONABE).(19, 26)
Prosecutor's Office	Enforce criminal laws protecting children, including laws prohibiting forced child labor, human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. Employ the following investigative and prosecutorial units: the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit against Trafficking in Persons, the Organized Crime Unit, the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit for Gender Issues, and the Juvenile Justice Unit.(17)
Judicial Investigative Police (OIJ)	Conduct investigations of child labor violations, including child trafficking, child commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.(3, 17)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Costa Rica took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA) identified 138 children between the ages of 7 and 14 engaged in child labor and 69 adolescents engaged in hazardous work. OATIA used the Inter-Institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors to remove and assist these children and adolescents through home visits and referrals to social programs.(39)

According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Costa Rica should employ roughly 151 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(40-42) In 2015, the MTSS reported that it had insufficient personnel and transportation resources to enforce labor laws. Government capacity to monitor labor violations is particularly limited in the informal sector, where much of child labor, especially hazardous adolescent work, occurs.(2, 8, 39)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Costa Rica took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Trafficking in Persons Prosecutor's office reported 50 criminal investigations and 10 prosecutions of commercial sexual exploitation of children during 2015.(43) The Specialized Prosecutorial Unit for Gender Issues reported eight convictions involving the production, possession, reproduction, or dissemination of child pornography and nine convictions involving the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Elimination of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Work	Develop and promote policy initiatives focused on eliminating child labor and regulating adolescent work. Overseen by Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker; includes a technical secretariat that comprises representatives from various sectors.(6, 7) In 2015, the Government updated the Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor to define interagency coordination and strategies for 2015 through 2020.(44)
Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker	Coordinate Government policies and programs to combat child labor from within the MTSS.(2, 6, 7, 45) Monitor implementation of the Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in Costa Rica. Provide technical assistance to government ministries and design social programs to combat child labor. (45, 46) Oversee the Inter-Institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors to ensure that children's and adolescents' rights and welfare are protected.(6, 47) Provided child labor training and consultation services to 1,992 individuals in 2015.(39)
National Child Welfare Agency (PANI)	Protect child and adolescent rights and receive reports of child labor.(26) Activate interagency social services to provide child labor victims with protection and welfare assistance, including temporary shelter, legal advice, and victim counseling. Responsible for reintegrating child labor victims into the educational system.(3, 26)
National Commission to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents	Address child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of minors.(3, 17) Report to the National Council of Childhood and Adolescence with legal standing under the PANI.(17)
National Coalition against the Smuggling of Migrants and Trafficking in Persons	Promote the formulation, implementation, and assessment of national policies that address human trafficking, including labor trafficking.(32) Review the country's adherence to international standards and evaluate and award funds for programming through the National Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants Trust Fund. Help coordinate prosecutions of human trafficking and assistance to trafficking victims.(32)

The Government had limited capacity to coordinate its efforts on child labor due to staff turnover and insufficient training on the implementation of protocols. According to OATIA, a national database is needed to allow Costa Rican institutions to monitor and evaluate child labor cases and measure Government actions.(7)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Costa Rica has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in Costa Rica (2010–2020)	Aims to eradicate all forms of child labor in Costa Rica by 2020 by strengthening anti-poverty, health, and educational programs and policies and conducting campaigns to raise awareness on the issue of child labor. Developed by OATIA, in coordination with ILO-IPEC.(44, 48, 49)
National Plan for Development (2015–2018)†	Incorporates child labor issues into national education and poverty reduction strategies.(50) The 2015–2018 plan aims to decrease child labor and the worst forms of child labor.(20)
Inter-Institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors	Provides services to child laborers and at-risk children through collaboration between the MTSS, PANI, the Ministry of Education, and the Social Welfare Institute, as well as their regional and local agencies and the private sector. As part of this partnership, civil society organizations collaborate with the tourist industry to train companies on how to identify and report the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(2, 7, 51)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013) and signed by Costa Rica at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(52, 53)

Costa Rica

Policy	Description
Declaration of Cancún and Plan of Action (2015)†	In 2015, the Government of Costa Rica participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas, held in Cancún, Mexico. Participating countries adopted the declaration, which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(54, 55) Participating countries also adopted the Plan of Action, which prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(54, 56)
National Coalition against the Smuggling of Migrants and Trafficking in Persons Strategic Plan (2012–2015)	Seeks to combat human trafficking, including for commercial sexual exploitation and labor exploitation.(17, 32)
Bridge to Development (2015–2018)†	Aims to reduce poverty and eliminate situations of vulnerability, including child labor, by providing social services to 54,600 families in the 75 poorest districts of Costa Rica.(7, 8, 44, 57)
Declaration of the Vice-Ministers of the XX Regional Conference on Migration†	Aims to strengthen regional cooperation in order to protect the human rights of migrants, especially youth and children, in countries of origin, transit, and destination, including by increasing opportunities for education and employment. Adopted by Costa Rica at the XX Regional Conference on Migration in Mexico City (November 2015).(58, 59) In 2015, Costa Rica participated in two meetings with the Ad Hoc Group on Migrant Children and Adolescents of the Regional Conference on Migration to identify ways for member states to increase protections for underage migrants and refugees. These meetings promoted the exchange of information on migrant children's rights and experiences, guiding principles relating to migration, and the holistic protection of children and adolescents.(60)
Coordination Agreement on Labor Migration between the Ministries of Labor of Costa Rica and Panama*† (2015–2020)	Aims to strengthen dialogue between the Governments of Costa Rica and Panama on labor migration between the two countries, with an emphasis on indigenous Panamanian migrant workers, in order to ensure social protection of migrant workers and their families. Establishes a bilateral technical committee to promote joint action to combat human trafficking, exchange information, and develop cooperative strategies and projects.(61)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Costa Rica funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011–2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Costa Rica.(62)
Child Labor Awareness Campaign	MTSS and Ministry of Education public-private partnership supported by Fundación Telefónica to raise awareness of child labor through social media.(46)
Houses of Joy (Casas de la Alegría)	Public-private alliance that provides culturally sensitive daycare and meals to indigenous children whose parents work on coffee farms in Coto Brus and Los Santos. Aims to promote social inclusion and developmental opportunities for indigenous children and provide an alternative to child labor in the coffee harvest.(8, 14, 63–65) The Government of Costa Rica's Joint Institute for Social Aid provides funds for meals, caregiver salaries, and training; farm owners provide the land and classroom, with financial contributions from UNICEF for building and didactic materials. Began as a pilot in 2014 with 6 centers serving 175 children, and in 2015 was expanded to 16 centers serving 687 children ages up to 10 years.(8, 14, 63–65)
FONABE†	OATIA and Ministry of Education national scholarship program created to encourage adolescents to complete their schooling. Includes targeted scholarships for child and adolescent workers identified by OATIA to promote their reintegration and retention in the educational system.(2, 3, 7, 66–68)
Let's Get Ahead Program (Avancemos)†	Social Welfare Institute program that provides monthly conditional cash transfers to low-income families to keep children in school and out of exploitative work.(2, 3, 17, 68, 69)
Age Classroom (Aula Edad)†	Ministry of Education program that replaced the Open Classroom (Aula Abierta) program and helps at-risk children and adolescents complete their primary education by providing flexible school hours and curricula appropriate for their needs. Targets those who have never been to school, those who have left school, adolescent mothers and workers, and foreign migrant youth.(8, 70, 71)

Program	Description
Marco-Tulio Salazar Virtual High School†	Ministry of Education program for adolescents between the ages of 15 and 18 who did not complete, or begin, their secondary education. Offers classroom and homeschool lessons.(8, 72)
Employ Yourself (Empleate)†	MTSS public-private initiative that promotes access to employment for young people between the ages of 17 and 24 who are at risk or living in conditions of poverty.(73, 74)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Costa Rica.

While the Government continues to support initiatives to eradicate child labor, current programming does not reach all children who are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and in commercial sexual exploitation. According to OATIA, existing social programs were insufficient to fully address the problem of child labor, including its worst forms, and additional staff and funding are required to assist children engaged in child labor and their families.(7, 8)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Costa Rica (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Hire a sufficient number of labor inspectors to effectively enforce laws related to child labor.	2015
	Build enforcement capacity to address child labor protections for children and adolescents who work in the informal sector.	2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by permitting inspectors to determine and assess penalties for child labor violations.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure adequate funding for human resources, transportation, and training for law enforcement agencies.	2013 – 2015
	Make publicly available information on the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review and whether unannounced inspections are conducted.	2015
Coordination	Strengthen coordination mechanisms by providing additional training on protocols.	2015
	Increase coordination and information sharing between government agencies responsible for monitoring and evaluating child labor cases.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Coordination Agreement on Labor Migration between the Ministries of Labor of Costa Rica and Panama.	2015
Social Programs	Expand existing social programs to strengthen school retention for children and adolescents, particularly at the secondary level.	2015
	Conduct additional research on child labor, including its worst forms, in order to inform policies and programs.	2015
	Increase access to education and nutrition services for indigenous children in coffee growing areas to ensure they have alternatives to participating in the coffee harvest.	2015
	Expand programs to reach more children working in agriculture and subjected to commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015
	Increase the number of personnel in governmental agencies dedicated to implementing programs that address the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

42. UN. World economic situation and prospects 2012 statistical annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Côte d'Ivoire

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Côte d'Ivoire made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed a revised Labor Code, which raised the minimum working age from 14 to 16, and passed a law establishing compulsory education through age 16. More than 100 law enforcement officials and social workers received training on investigation and interrogation techniques, which resulted in a subsequent police operation that rescued 48 victims of child trafficking. The National Monitoring Committee on Actions to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor and the Interministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor published a joint report on the implementation of the pilot phase of Côte d'Ivoire's child labor monitoring system, SOSTECL. During the reporting period, the Government launched the National Action Plan for the Fight Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor and finalized the National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking. In addition, nine new programs were approved to combat child labor, including its worst forms, and improve access to education. However, children in Côte d'Ivoire are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in the harvesting of cocoa and coffee, sometimes as a result of child trafficking. Gaps remain in enforcement efforts and the labor inspectorate is not authorized to assess penalties.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Côte d'Ivoire are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of cocoa and coffee, sometimes as a result of child trafficking.(1-8) According to a report by Tulane University published in 2015 that assessed data collected during the 2013–2014 harvest season, the cocoa sector employed an estimated 1,203,473 child laborers ages 5 to 17, of which 95.9 percent were engaged in hazardous work in cocoa production.(9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Côte d'Ivoire.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	31.5 (1,682,754)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	63.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	21.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		56.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(10)

Source for all other data: Enquête Démographique et de Santé en Côte d'Ivoire (EDSCI-III) Survey, 2011–2012.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 23, 29)
	Selling pornography* (19)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers* (24, 36)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked to, from, and within Côte d'Ivoire. Girls are trafficked internally for work in commercial sexual exploitation or domestic work, whereas boys are internally trafficked to work in agriculture.(2, 3, 5, 19) Children from neighboring West African countries are also trafficked into Côte d'Ivoire for agricultural labor, especially in cocoa production, and for work in mining, construction, domestic work, street vending, and commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 3, 6, 8, 13, 17, 28) A study carried out by the ILO and the Government of Côte d'Ivoire in 2013 estimated that 55 percent of children working in agriculture in rural areas are subject to forced labor.(3)

The Government has taken measures to increase school attendance by providing school kits to primary school students, lifting restrictions on wearing school uniforms, introducing school canteens, and enrolling children without birth certificates. The rates of birth registration, however, remain low in Côte d'Ivoire and may pose a barrier to education for some children because birth certificates may be required for graduation certificates.(16, 20, 37-41) Despite the laws on free education and the Government's efforts to make education free at the primary level, some students are required to pay for textbooks or school fees, which may be prohibitive to some families.(4, 20, 42-46) The lack of teachers and schools, particularly in rural areas, also limits access to education. Research also suggests that some students are physically and sexually abused at school, which may deter some students from attending school.(13, 20, 26, 43, 47-55)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Côte d'Ivoire has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 2.1 of the Law on Education (46, 62)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 2 of the Law on Education (63)

* No conscription (27)

On July 20, 2015, the Government adopted a revised labor code, which raised the minimum age for work from 14 to 16 and requires employers to register all workers under age 18.(56) During the reporting period, the Government also passed an amendment to the Law on Education, which establishes compulsory education up to age 16, and which went into effect for the 2015–2016 academic year.(13, 46, 62, 64, 65) The Law on Education also penalizes parents who do not send their children to school with a fine of $86 to $860 or 2 to 6 months in prison.(13, 62)

The Ministry of Solidarity and the National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTdP), with the assistance of UNODC, has drafted a law that provides specific penalties for human trafficking violations against both adults and children, calls for tougher justice against perpetrators, and provides for the establishment of formalized procedures for identifying and referring victims.(13, 27, 38, 66) A draft law providing greater protection to domestic workers is also under consideration. This law would grant more latitude to inspectors in investigating possible labor violations in private homes.(67)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Social Affairs, and Professional Training (MESAPT)	Enforce labor laws.(23) Implement the child labor monitoring system, Système d'Observation et de Suivi du Travail des Enfants en Côte d'Ivoire (SOSTECL), which enables communities to collect and analyze statistical data on the worst forms of child labor.(1, 23, 68-70) In the case of the Direction of the Fight Against Child Labor, develop, monitor, and enforce laws related to child labor.(28) In 2015, extended SOSTECL into 18 prefectures in cocoa-growing areas, with the support of the ILO and UNICEF, at a cost of approximately $400,000.(65)
Ministry of Interior and Security	In the case of the Anti-Trafficking Unit, enforce criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor.(13, 38, 71)
Ministry of Justice	Investigate and prosecute crimes related to child labor, including its worst forms.(13)
National Monitoring Committee on Actions to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CNS) Monitoring Brigades	Conduct trafficking investigations. Composed of security forces tasked with dismantling trafficking networks and rescuing exploited children or victims of child trafficking.(28, 72)
Ministry of Solidarity, the Family, Women, and Children (MSFWC)	Lead the Government's efforts to combat human trafficking, including providing repatriation services to victims, including children. Maintain a hotline for child labor issues, and respond to complaints.(13, 37, 44) Chair both the National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTdP) and a coordination committee at the ministerial level, which fights against all forms of human trafficking. (67, 73, 74) In 2015, led the development of the National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking (2016–2020) with the Ministry of Planning and Development.(38) In January 2016, the ministry was divided into two ministries; the Ministry of Solidarity, Social Cohesion and Victims Compensation, which maintains the human trafficking portfolio, and the Ministry for the Promotion of Women, the Family, and the Protection of Children.(13, 27)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Côte d'Ivoire took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Côte d'Ivoire should employ roughly 541 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country, almost double the current number of inspectors.(78-80) Although labor inspectors conduct routine and unannounced inspections, targeted child labor inspections are only conducted in response to complaints and most inspections primarily focus on formal sector establishments.(13, 27, 81) Enforcement of child labor protections is not adequate for all children, including those who are self-employed or who work in the informal sector. However, MESAPT is currently piloting a project to implement labor inspections in the informal sector.(13, 81) Significantly fewer inspections were conducted in 2015 compared with the previous year because of budget constraints.(13, 27, 75) Impunity remains an issue, because research found that some labor inspectors ignore violations and courts are unlikely to impose penalties for labor violations discovered during the inspections.(20, 43, 74, 75)

Each of the 10 MESAPT departmental directorates receives between $4,000 and $10,000 per year to fund activities.(13) MESAPT acknowledged that this amount is inadequate to fund all necessary functions, particularly if they are to implement inspections in the informal sector.(13) In addition, the lack of sufficient staffing, offices, and vehicles and fuel continues to hinder labor inspections and the inspectorate's ability to investigate all reported violations.(18, 20, 23, 43, 75, 81, 82) In 2015, the MSFWC hotline received 18,655 calls related to children in distress, a significant increase over the 14,117 calls received in 2014.(65) However, it is not known how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of these calls.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Côte d'Ivoire took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the National Police's Anti-Trafficking Unit (ATU) received a budget of $6,636, the same as it received in 2014.(27) The ATU continued to employ 11 Abidjan-based investigators to enforce laws related to child labor, including its worst forms. The ATU has acknowledged that this is inadequate, and relies on regional law enforcement agencies to enforce criminal child labor laws throughout the country.(13, 38) An insufficient number of official border crossings and monitoring of activity along the Mali and Burkina Faso borders make it difficult to detect cases of human trafficking. The Ministry of Interior and Security is currently reviewing a proposal by IOM to double the number of official border crossings and implementing improved surveillance mechanisms.(38)

Research indicates the laws governing the worst forms of child labor are not effectively enforced or well understood by law enforcement officials. The ILO CEACR, multiple NGOs, and other international organizations have also noted this.(4, 17, 18, 23, 85) To address this concern, in 2015, the Government integrated a 50-hour training module into the curriculum of the academy for gendarmes and the police academy.(38, 65) Four members of the ATU are designated trainers and provided training on the worst forms of child labor to 56 gendarmes during the reporting period.(38) UNICEF also continued to provide general training to law enforcement on child protection issues.(13) In addition, the Interministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CIM) supported IOM and Interpol to train more than 100 law enforcement officials and social workers on investigation and interrogation techniques related to child trafficking. A subsequent police operation rescued 48 victims of child trafficking and arrested 22 alleged perpetrators in June 2015.(13, 17, 34, 35, 83) The children received support from social services providers, and victims who were not Ivorian received repatriation assistance. Of the 22 alleged perpetrators who were arrested, 12 were formally charged, imprisoned and are awaiting trial; 6 were charged and freed on provisional release pending further investigation; and 4 were released due to insufficient cause.(27) During the reporting period, 17 young women ages 15 to 26 were rescued from Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, en route to Saudi Arabia for forced domestic work. Another four girls were rescued from Saudi Arabia in 2015 and reunited with their families in Côte d'Ivoire.(38)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Monitoring Committee on Actions to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CNS)	Supervise, monitor, and evaluate all government activities in Côte d'Ivoire related to child labor and child trafficking. Make policy recommendations and initiate awareness-raising campaigns to combat the worst forms of child labor.(44, 45, 70, 85) Composed of 16 international and domestic partners, including UNICEF and Save the Children, and chaired by the First Lady of Côte d'Ivoire.(19, 28, 44, 71, 86, 87) The CNS met regularly in 2015.(13)
Interministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CIM)	Design, coordinate, and implement all government actions to combat the worst forms of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire. Monitor and evaluate programs implemented by partner organizations related to the fight against child trafficking.(19, 45, 85, 87) Chaired by MESAPT and comprising representatives from 13 ministries, including the ministries of Justice, National Education, Agriculture, Human Rights, and Youth.(28, 73, 75, 87) The CIM met regularly in 2015.(13)
National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTdP)	Dedicated to combatting all issues related to human trafficking, including both adults and children.(67, 74, 75) Operate at the working level and chaired by the MSFWC.(66, 67, 74) In 2015, assisted in creating the National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking, which was sent to the CNS and the CIM for review and approval.(37) Implement the National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking.(27)

The CNS and the CIM published a joint report on implementation of the pilot phase of Côte d'Ivoire's child labor monitoring system SOSTECI, which was intended to establish baseline data on child labor and ended in July 2014.(13) The report did not analyze the effectiveness of SOSTECI directly, but included data from 2,878 children under age 14 who were engaged in child labor. The results were in line with previous studies on child labor, which found the majority of the children to be employed in agricultural activities, including cocoa production.(13)

The respective roles and responsibilities of the CIM and the CNS are not clear, which some NGOs and companies have also noted. This undermines effective coordination at all levels and results in disjointed or duplicated efforts.(1, 18, 67, 88)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Côte d'Ivoire has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Compulsory Education Policy†	In support of the Law on Education, aims to achieve 100 percent enrollment in primary school by 2020 and 100 percent enrollment in junior high by 2025.(46, 64) Allocates $1.34 billion to modernize the education system, including by building new classrooms and providing free textbooks to low-income families and additional pedagogical training to teachers.(46)
PRSP (2012–2015)	Aims to increase access to education, train youth and adults in a trade, enhance agricultural production, promote certified agricultural products, ensure food security, and strengthen the country's capacity to combat the worst forms of child labor.(54)
UN Development Assistance Framework (2009–2015)*	Sought to increase access to education, with the goal of reducing by half the number of children without access to primary school. Extended for 2 years, until 2015, to fully align UN support with national priorities.(89-91)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor, Especially the Worst Forms (2013–2015)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015 through the implementation of a regional action plan with 14 other ECOWAS countries.(92)
Joint Declarations Against Cross-Border Trafficking	Bilateral declarations signed by the First Ladies of Côte d'Ivoire and Burkina Faso, and Côte d'Ivoire and Mali.(70, 85, 93, 94) As part of these agreements, the Government established measures to systematically verify the identities of all children and accompanying adults at border crossings.(73) In 2015, the Governments of Burkina Faso and Côte d'Ivoire worked together to apprehend three individuals in Ouagadougou who were trafficking 17 girls and young women to Saudi Arabia.(38)

Policy	Description
2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol (2010 Declaration) and Its Accompanying Framework of Action	Joint declaration by the Governments of Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, and the United States, and the International Cocoa and Chocolate Industry.(68, 95, 96) Provide resources and coordinates with key stakeholders on efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas.(95, 96) Ensures that all project efforts implemented under the Declaration and Frameworks align with Côte d'Ivoire's national action plans in order to promote coherence and sustainability.(68, 95, 96)
Joint Declaration of Commitment to Combat Child Labor	Joint declaration between regulatory bodies and the media to improve efforts to fight against the worst forms of child labor.(75)
National Policy Document on Child Protection	Led by the MSFWC. Seeks to reduce the incidence of violence, abuse, and exploitation of children.(75) In 2015, provided $70,300 to establish 6 regional coordination mechanisms and 6 platforms for child protection.(65) Regional coordination mechanisms, led by prefects, oversee implementation of the National Policy. Child protection platforms bring together relevant actors to identify specific problems in the region.(27, 65)
Country Partnership Framework*	Up to $1 billion lending program financed by the World Bank, which aims to eliminate extreme poverty through job creation and improved spending on education, health, and social protection.(97)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The Ministry of Planning and Development also drafted a National Development Plan for 2016–2020 during the reporting period, which includes provisions that address poverty alleviation, child trafficking, and child labor.(13, 38)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Côte d'Ivoire funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Action Plan for the Fight Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NAP) (2015–2017)*†	Coordinated by the CNS and the CIM, a $25.8 million project that builds on the previous National Action Plan to Fight Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor, which was implemented from 2012–2014. The budget for the 2015–2017 NAP represents almost a $6 million increase from the previous NAP.(13, 86, 87) Aims to significantly reduce the number of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor by eliminating risk factors and creating a protective environment for children.(13, 86, 87) Informed by the baseline data from the results of the SOSTECL pilot phase, the new NAP aims to raise awareness of child labor issues, revise the list of hazardous activities prohibited for children, build the capacity of law enforcement, and improve social services for victims. It also includes a monitoring and evaluation component to assess the impact of existing policies and programs to combat child labor.(13, 65, 87) Includes the construction of 2,000 classrooms, 333 school canteens, and 3 new reception centers for victims. Also aims to distribute 6,000 school kits to vulnerable children, expand research on child labor, enhance subregional cooperation, implement poverty alleviation measures, and extend SOSTECL into 20 new departments.(65, 86, 98, 99) To reinforce regional cooperation, aims to convene a summit of First Ladies of West African countries on transnational child trafficking, sign an accord with Ghana to combat child trafficking between the two countries, and organize annual meetings with the Governments of Burkina Faso and Mali to review the bilateral declarations against cross-border trafficking.(87)
National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking (2016–2020)*†	With the support of UNODC and coordinated by the CNLTdP, $14.8 million project drafted to prevent trafficking; expand social services for victims; provide training for law enforcement personnel and other stakeholders; promote coordination; and collect data on human trafficking, including the development of a system to track and disseminate data.(13, 38) Aims to build two new victim support centers, rehabilitate three existing transit centers, and establish social centers or cooperatives in areas with a high prevalence of child trafficking to raise awareness of human trafficking issues.(38) The Government will contribute 22 percent of the funding and seek the remainder from donors.(13)
National Awareness Campaign Against Child Labor (2015–2017)*†	CNS-led large-scale national awareness campaign against child labor that disseminates information to increase public awareness through television and radio broadcasts, billboards, and newspapers in French and in local languages. Calls on national actors to take on a greater role in media campaigns to raise awareness about child labor.(38, 75) In 2015, spent $82,000 on a 2-day event that commemorated World Day Against Child Labor and educated 5,000 individuals on child labor and education issues.(65)

Program	Description
Self-Help Village Initiative†	Government-implemented initiative that provides villages with funds to combat child labor in the cocoa sector. Builds schools and health centers, trains vulnerable households in income-generating activities, and implements a child labor monitoring system.(69, 100) Participating villages are provided with service packages worth approximately $60,000, which is funded by taxes and fees on cocoa exports.(23)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR)*	USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build the local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies on child labor in Côte d'Ivoire, including by enhancing the Government's ability to implement SOSTECl and ensure its sustainability.(101-103)
Towards Child Labor Free Cocoa Growing Communities in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana Through an Integrated Area-Based Approach (2010–2015)	$10 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO. In support of the 2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol aimed at reducing the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana by providing direct services to communities.(1, 84, 95) In Côte d'Ivoire, worked with the Government to develop and implement SOSTECl in cocoa-growing areas.(1, 84, 95) By the end of the project in 2015, established 40 community Child Protection Committees, provided educational services to 2,500 children, and provided livelihood services to 1,000 families in Côte d'Ivoire.(104)
Survey on Child Labor in West African Cocoa Growing Areas (2012–2015)	$1.9 million USDOL-funded, 3-year research project implemented by the Payson Center for International Development at Tulane University. Supported the collection of nationally representative survey data on child labor in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana to assess the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas.(68, 105, 106) Coordinated with the Government and worked with government statistical experts from Côte d'Ivoire to build the country's capacity to implement future child labor surveys.(68) Conducted a nationally representative survey in the cocoa sector during the 2013–2014 harvest season survey.(9, 68, 106)
Assessing Progress in Reducing Child Labor in Cocoa-Growing Areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana (2015–2019)*	$3 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by NORC at the University of Chicago. Evaluates and measures progress to reduce child labor in the cocoa sectors of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana.(107) Includes a mapping of stakeholder interventions to reduce child labor in the cocoa sector, an assessment of the effectiveness of funded efforts to reduce child labor, and a survey of the incidence of child labor in cocoa-growing areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana in the 2018–2019 growing season.(107, 108)
Eliminating Child Labor in Cocoa (2015–2019)*	$4.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by International Cocoa Initiative. In support of the 2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol, works with communities in Côte d'Ivoire to develop community action plans to address child labor in cocoa-growing areas, provide households with livelihood assistance and occupational safety and health training, and provide at-risk youth with marketable job skills.(109)
Empowering Cocoa Households with Opportunities and Education Solutions (2007–2015)	$14.5 million World Cocoa Foundation-funded, 8-year project that strengthened cocoa-growing communities by expanding leadership and educational opportunities for youth.(110-112) By the end of the project, provided 6,632 students with 1 year of agricultural training, awarded scholarships to 486 parent-child pairs that was equivalent to 3 years of school-related expenses, built or upgraded 5 teacher resource centers, provided literacy instruction to 5,661 youth and adults, and provided 1,518 teachers and 43 administrators with pre-service and in-service training.(13)
Council of Coffee and Cocoa Platform Public-Private Partnership	Ministry of Agriculture and Ministry of the Economy program that aims to monitor exports, stabilize coffee and cocoa prices, improve productivity, promote rural development, and reduce the prevalence of child labor in the cocoa and coffee sectors.(17, 113-115) Between October 2014 and June 2016, dedicated $66,500 to an awareness-raising campaign in cocoa-growing communities, constructed 15 school latrines and 6 canteens, distributed 45,000 school kits worth $420,500, and provided classrooms with 2,825 desks worth $229,400.(65) Research was unable to determine the amount of funding allocated specifically for 2015.
CocoaAction (2014–2020)	$400 million World Cocoa Foundation-funded project, in collaboration with the Ministry of Agriculture and the Ministry of the Economy through the Council of Coffee and Cocoa Platform Public-Private Partnership. Aims to increase sustainability in the cocoa sector and to improve the livelihoods of 300,000 farmers in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana through increased productivity and improved agricultural practices.(116-119) Includes six pillars, one of which aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor and to increase access to basic education for children in cocoa-growing areas.(116, 118)
Transforming Education in Cocoa Communities (TRECC) (2015–2022)*	$51 million public-private partnership among the Swiss Government, the Jacobs Foundation, the World Cocoa Foundation, and the Government of Côte d'Ivoire, 7-year project that aims to improve access to education in cocoa-growing areas through the construction of schools.(13) Aligned with the strategy of CocoaAction and led by the CNS, TRECC aims to reach more than 200,000 direct beneficiaries by the conclusion of the project.(13, 119-121)

Program	Description
Nestlé Schools Project (2011–2015)	$1.5 million Nestlé-funded, 4-year project that built and renovated schools in cocoa-growing areas where children are most vulnerable to child labor.(68, 122) In support of the 2010 Declaration, collaborated with the Ministry of Education to reduce the prevalence of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire's cocoa-growing areas, including by improving children's access to education and increasing household incomes.(68, 95, 96, 123) By the end of the project in March 2015, built 36 schools benefitting 11,663 students.(122)
Creating a Protective Environment for Children in Cocoa-Growing Communities (2012–2016)	$1 million Mars, Incorporated-funded program that supports the implementation of SOSTECI and the development of community action plans to combat child labor.(124, 125) In support of the 2010 Declaration, collaborated with the Government to reduce the prevalence of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire's cocoa-growing areas, including by improving children's access to education and increasing household incomes.(68, 95, 96, 123)
Promotion of Human Security and Stability in West Africa*†	$370,000 Government of Japan-funded project implemented by UNODC, which aims to strengthen the capacity of the CNS, to build the capacity of law enforcement officials to combat human trafficking, and to provide specialized equipment to identify victims at border crossings.(126)
Centers for Vulnerable Children†	Approximately 110 MSFWC- and MESAPT-funded social centers and mobile schools throughout the country that receive women and children who are victims of crime or violence, including children who are victims of the worst forms of child labor. International NGOs also operate additional centers that provide meals and basic education.(31, 38)
School Feeding Programst	The Integrated Program for Sustainable School Feeding is a $42.5 million WFP-funded program that aims to raise school attendance rates in rural areas, particularly among girls, by providing school meals, conditional cash transfers, nutritional supplements, and training for the National Directorate of School Feeding and local school feeding management committees.(127) The Ministry of National Education School Feeding Program aims to provide incentives for school attendance by providing nutritious meals in rural areas using U.S. soy commodities. Meal delivery will begin in the 2016–2017 academic year.(13) The McGovern-Dole School Feeding Program is a $31 million joint initiative between the WFP and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, in coordination with the Ministry of National Education, which aims to provide meals to 150,000 children in 1,000 rural schools. Girls in fifth and sixth grade who have an attendance rate of more than 80 percent are eligible to receive a 100-pound ration of rice three times per year.(13)
It Takes a Village to Protect a Child*†	Operated by the Office of the First Lady and the CIM, this project will train cooperatives on the Fairtrade Child Labor Standards and project management. Youth will receive training on child rights and 58 children will be selected as youth leaders for local child labor committees.(128)
Emergency Support Project for Basic Education (2012–2016)	$41.4 million World Bank-funded project that aims to improve access to basic education by constructing and rehabilitating classrooms and school latrines.(129) In 2015, built 638 new primary school classrooms, rehabilitated 167 classrooms, equipped 200 classrooms, and began construction on 141 latrines and water pumps in cocoa-growing areas.(130–132)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Côte d'Ivoire.

Although the Government of Côte d'Ivoire maintains programs and coordinates with industry, international organizations, NGOs, and other governments to help children working on cocoa farms, the scope of existing programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(9, 13, 133) Although SOSTECI has been implemented in several cocoa-growing communities, it has not been expanded throughout the country because it requires a significant amount of resources for implementation.(13, 38, 98) The Government primarily relies on NGOs to provide social services to victims of child trafficking. Research indicates that there is poor coordination among service providers, and the distribution of services throughout the country is uneven.(38)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Côte d'Ivoire (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing the inspectorate to assess penalties.	2014 – 2015
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in accordance with the ILO recommendation.	2009 – 2015
	Build enforcement capacity to address child labor protections for all children, including those who are self-employed or who work in the informal sector.	2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Ensure that labor inspectorates and criminal law enforcement agencies receive adequate funding to proactively conduct inspections and investigations throughout the country, including in the informal sector, and that penalties are enforced according to the law.	2014 – 2015
	Systematically collect and make publicly available information about criminal law enforcement statistics, including the number of prosecutions initiated and convictions made.	2015
	Establish a mechanism to track cases of child labor identified as a result of calls made to the MSFWC hotline.	2015
	Establish a sufficient number of official border crossings to enable the Government to identify and prevent transnational trafficking activity.	2015
Coordination	Improve coordination by clarifying the respective roles and responsibilities of the CNS and CIM.	2012 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Improve access to education by eliminating all school-related fees, providing all children with birth certificates, increasing the number of schools and teachers in rural areas, and ensuring that schools are free of physical and sexual abuse.	2011 – 2015
	Replicate and expand models, such as SOSTECI, for addressing exploitative child labor for effective implementation of government policies to combat the worst forms of child labor, including efforts to reduce child trafficking and forced labor in agriculture and domestic work.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that victims of the worst forms of child labor are able to access services throughout the country.	2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Original data from Enquête Démographique et de Santé (EDSCI-III), 2011-2012. Analysis received December 18, 2015. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. For more information on sources used, the definition of working children and other indicators used in this report, please see the "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" section of this report.

78. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited January 19, 2016]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
79. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex, 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.
80. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

In 2015, Djibouti made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government drafted an updated National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons and legislation to strengthen the legal framework on human trafficking. In addition, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. However, children in Djibouti are engaged in child labor, including in street work, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The law neither establishes a minimum age for hazardous work nor fully protects children from all forms of commercial sexual exploitation. Law enforcement efforts were inadequate to prevent and combat child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Djibouti are engaged in child labor, including in street work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Djibouti.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	12.3 (23,693)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	67.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	10.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		63.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by the UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's Analysis of Statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Caring for livestock* (1, 2)
	Farming,* activities unknown (2)
Services	Domestic work† (1, 2, 7)
	Street work, including shining shoes,* washing and guarding cars,* cleaning storefronts,* sorting merchandise,* collecting garbage,* begging, and selling items, including khat* (1, 2, 4, 7)
	Working in restaurants, small shops, and family businesses (1, 2, 7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 2, 8, 9)
	Forced domestic work and begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1-3)
	Use in illicit activities, including theft* (2, 3)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Research found an increase in children, younger than in previous years, who migrated through Djibouti from Ethiopia, Somalia, and Eritrea to reach Yemen and other locations in the Middle East.(3) Limited evidence suggests children, including undocumented migrant girls, experience commercial sexual exploitation in Djibouti City and the Ethiopia-Djibouti trucking corridor.(2, 9) Girls from poor Djiboutian families may engage in commercial sexual exploitation as a means of income.(1) Limited evidence suggests older children sometimes exploit younger children in commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 3)

Djibouti

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

While primary and middle school are tuition-free, other expenses may be prohibitive for poor families.(2) Enrollment rates are lower for girls, children living in rural areas, and children living in poverty.(2, 10)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Djibouti has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 5 of the Labor Code (11)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 110 of the Labor Code (11)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2 and 290 of the Labor Code; Article 23 of the Law Regarding Terrorism and Other Serious Crimes (11, 12)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 2 and 6 of the Law on the Fight Against Human Trafficking; Article 23 of the Law Regarding Terrorism and Other Serious Crimes (12, 13)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 394 and 463 of the Penal Code (14)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 461 of the Penal Code (14)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	National Army Amendment Decree (15)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 4 of the Law on the Orientation of the Education System (16)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 16 of the Law on the Orientation of the Education System (16)

* No conscription (17)

During the reporting period, the Government drafted new legislation that strengthens the legal framework on human trafficking. The law prohibits all forms of human trafficking and prescribes sufficiently stringent penalties; however, contrary to international legal standards, it requires an element of force, fraud, or coercion for child sex trafficking offenses. The law was not passed by the end of the reporting period.(18)

The law's minimum age provisions do not apply to children working outside formal employment relationships.(11, 19)

The Labor Code prohibits the employment of children between ages 16 and 18 in domestic work, hotels, and bars; however, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not include street work, an area where there is evidence of work in an unhealthy environment which may expose children to hazardous substances, agents, or processes damaging to their health.(11, 19)

The law does not sufficiently prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children because using and offering a child for prostitution, pornography, and pornographic performances are not criminally prohibited. Additionally, the law does not criminally prohibit possessing child pornography and procuring and benefiting from a monetary or in-kind transaction involving the sexual exploitation of a child for the production of pornography and for pornographic performances.(14)

The Penal Code criminalizes the use of children to commit crimes; however, the law does not criminalize using, procuring, and offering a child in both the production and trafficking of drugs.(14)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce all labor laws, including child labor laws and regulations.(4)
National Police, including the Vice Squad	Enforce criminal laws and investigate criminal offenses related to the worst forms of child labor.(20)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute child labor cases after they have been referred by the MOL.(4)
National Commission on Human Rights	Receive complaints and investigate cases of human rights violations, including the worst forms of child labor.(21, 22) Assist victims in obtaining legal aid to prosecute violators.(21)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Djibouti did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Labor Inspectorate Funding	Unknown	Unknown
Number of Labor Inspectors	4 (20)	13 (18)

Unannounced Inspections Conducted	N/A	No (18)
Complaint Mechanism Exists	No (20)	No (4)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	No (20)	No (4)

In 2015, the Government found the number of labor inspectors inadequate. According to the MOL, the labor inspectorate has insufficient funding and training to adequately enforce child labor laws.(2, 4)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Djibouti took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Unknown
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown	Unknown
■ Refresher Courses Provided	Unknown	Yes (23)

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (20)	0 (4)
Number of Convictions	0 (20)	0 (4)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	No (20)	No (4)

In 2015, the Vice Squad included four officers, but they lacked sufficient training and resources to effectively enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.⁽⁴⁾ The Government collaborated with international organizations to train law enforcement officials on the definitions of human trafficking versus smuggling, and issues related to the protection of unaccompanied migrant children.⁽²³⁾ However, no child victims were identified or referred to social services.⁽⁴⁾

The Government continued to detain street children, including potential child trafficking victims, following sweeps to clear the streets in advance of holidays and national events. After detention, immigration officials transported children identified as Ethiopian or Somali to the Ethiopian border, leaving them abandoned and vulnerable to re-trafficking.⁽³⁾

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a Senior Human Trafficking Taskforce, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Human Trafficking Taskforce	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Justice. ⁽³⁾
National Council for Children (CNE)	Promote children's rights and oversee the implementation of the National Strategic Plan for Children in Djibouti (PASNED). Members include six ministers, two representatives of the Youth Parliament, two representatives of the private sector, and two representatives of women's associations. ⁽²⁴⁾

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Djibouti has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
PASNED (2011–2015)	Aims to create a protective environment for all children to ensure the protection of their human rights and equitable access to basic services. Interventions to combat the worst forms of child labor include a study on the worst forms of child labor, awareness campaigns, and social services for victims of human trafficking and other worst forms of child labor. ^(25, 26)
National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons (2014–2020)	Aims to strengthen the legislative framework to combat human trafficking, protect and assist human trafficking victims, and establish a national referral mechanism between law enforcement officials and social service providers. ⁽²⁷⁾ In 2015, the Ministry of Justice drafted an updated plan that extends the Government's anti-human-trafficking strategy through the year 2020. ⁽²³⁾
UNDAF (2013–2017)	Provides access to basic social services in order to protect children against all forms of violence and exploitation. Includes plans for boys and girls in both rural and urban areas to have equal and quality access to basic education. ⁽²⁸⁾

Policy	Description
National Strategy (2013–2017)*	Supports street children and other marginalized populations through an emphasis on protecting the rights of children and developing social programs.(1, 29)
Education Sector Strategic Plan (2014–2017)*	Incorporates strategies to address the needs of children who have not previously attended school and children living in the most impoverished areas.(29)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Djibouti funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description and Objectives
Strengthening the National Criminal Justice System's Response to Trafficking in Persons in Djibouti*	$500,000 USDOS-funded program, implemented by UNODC in partnership with the Government, to establish a national referral mechanism for victims of human trafficking, establish a mechanism for data collection, raise awareness of human trafficking, and conduct law enforcement trainings.(23)
National Family Solidarity Program*†	Government-funded program implemented by the State Secretariat for National Solidarity that establishes cash transfers to support Djiboutian households in extreme poverty.(30)
UNICEF Country Program (2013–2017)	UNICEF program in collaboration with the Government that promotes access to quality education for children, especially from rural and poor urban areas, increases birth registration, and provides support for orphans and vulnerable children.(29, 31)
Humanitarian Action for Children	UNICEF-funded program in partnership with the Government that identifies the needs of vulnerable women and children. In 2015, the program provided migrant and street children with access to non-formal education, vocational training, and recreational activities.(32)
IOM Program	IOM program in partnership with the Government to address the risks of irregular migration, including a Migrant Response Center along the route most frequently traveled by undocumented migrants from Somalia and Ethiopia on their way to Yemen.(1, 20, 23) In 2015, the program worked with local and international actors to identify appropriate solutions for unaccompanied and separated children who were victims of human trafficking or at risk of being trafficked upon arrival in Djibouti after conflict broke out in Yemen. The program reintegrated and rehabilitated a number of children into their communities of origin in Ethiopia.(33)
Enhancing Income Opportunities Program (2015–2019)*	World Bank-funded program in partnership with the Government that aims to provide training and business opportunities for youth. One objective is to provide at least 2,200 youth with basic life-skill training and coaching in business plan development and link these youth with technical training centers.(34)
Access to Quality Education Project	Global Partnership for Education-funded program in collaboration with the World Bank and Government to improve the learning environment in the first 3 years of primary education.(10, 35) Aims to construct classrooms, rehabilitate and extend schools in rural areas, train teachers, procure student learning materials, and distribute hearing aids and glasses to students who need them.(10)
School Meal Program	WFP-funded project in partnership with the Government that provides daily meals at schools in rural parts of Djibouti for 15,000 children. Distributes take-home rations to girls to encourage regular school attendance.(36)
Urban Poverty Reduction Program	African Development Bank program implemented by the Government to promote socioeconomic development in Djibouti's towns and cities, where the majority of working children live.(29, 37)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Djibouti.

Although the Government of Djibouti has implemented programs that target migrant and street children, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs specifically designed to assist children involved in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Djibouti (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish a minimum age for hazardous work and ensure that the hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children working outside formal employment relationships.	2015
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit using and offering a child for prostitution, pornography, and pornographic performances; possessing child pornography; and procuring and benefiting from a monetary or in-kind transaction involving the sexual exploitation of a child for the production of pornography and for pornographic performances.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure that using, procuring, and offering a child in both the production and trafficking of drugs are criminally prohibited.	2015
Enforcement	Make law enforcement information publicly available, including the labor inspectorate's funding and training for criminal investigators.	2010 – 2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by training new employees and providing refresher courses, initiating routine inspections, and establishing a mechanism to receive child labor complaints.	2015
	Provide additional resources to the labor inspectorate and criminal law enforcement agencies so that more inspectors and officers can be hired and receive adequate training, including on identifying victims of child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking.	2011 – 2015
	Cease the detention of street children and establish referral mechanisms between labor and criminal law enforcement agencies and social service providers so that exploited children, particularly victims of child trafficking, receive the appropriate care and reintegration services.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2009 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in agriculture in order to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that all vulnerable children, particularly girls, have access to education.	2015
	Implement programs to specifically address children involved in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Dominica

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Dominica made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government held consultations with labor unions and employers to discuss drafting a list of hazardous occupations for children and continued to support programs to reduce poverty and ensure access to education. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Dominica, no recent study of child labor has been done to confirm this. The Government's ability to prevent children from becoming engaged in exploitative work is limited due to exceptions to the minimum age for hazardous work and a lack of prohibitions against the use of children in prostitution, pornography, or pornographic performances or the use of children in illicit activities, including producing and trafficking of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Dominica.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Dominica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Article 46 of the Education Act prohibits the employment of children ages 5 to 16 during the school year, but allows students ages 14 and older to work during school vacations or in school-sponsored employment training programs without defining the conditions, specific activities, or number of hours permissible for light work.(2) Article 7 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act prohibits children under age 18 from working at night, unless they are working with members of their family, but includes exceptions for children over age 16 to perform night work in certain industries or in case of emergencies without including provisions to ensure that they receive proper training or that their health, safety and morals will be protected. (3) During the reporting period, the Government held consultations with labor unions and employers to discuss drafting a list of hazardous occupations for children.(1, 8) The Government of Dominica has yet to enact laws or regulations explicitly prohibiting the use of children in prostitution, pornography, pornographic performances, or illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.(9)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of National Security, Labor, and Immigration (MNSLI)	Conduct inspections and enforce laws related to child labor. Authorized to conduct unannounced inspections at any location with employees and take legal action against employers violating child labor laws. Report children found in exploitative labor situations to police and social services.(1, 10, 11)
Ministry of Health (MOH)	Conduct inspections and enforce laws related to child labor. Report children found in exploitative labor situations to police and social services.(10, 11)
Police Force	Enforce criminal laws, including those related to child labor.(11)
Social Welfare Division, Ministry of Social Services, Family, and Gender Affairs	Provide social services, including education, housing, counseling, and financial aid in child labor cases. (1, 10, 12)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Dominica took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

In addition to the 5 labor inspectors employed by the Ministry of National Security, Labor, and Immigration (MNSLI), the Ministry of Health (MOH) employs 17 health and safety inspectors and 12 fire inspectors who also inspect for labor violations.⁽¹⁾ Government officials report that while the number of labor inspectors is sufficient to inspect labor violations, too few technical officers are available to effectively enforce labor laws.⁽¹⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Dominica did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 5).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms; however, a review found no evidence of current research on the worst forms of child labor in Dominica.^(10, 14) In 2015, the Government of Dominica funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 6).

Table 6. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Basic Needs Trust Fund (1979–2015)	Caribbean Development Bank-implemented program to reduce poverty through livelihood services, improved infrastructure, capacity-building projects, and technical services.(14, 15)

School Textbook Provision Schemet	MOE program that subsidizes the cost of textbooks for primary and secondary school students.(11, 17)
School Feeding Program†	MOE program that provides lunch to primary school students in targeted areas.(11, 18)
CHANCES†	Ministry of Social Services, Family, and Gender Affairs program, supports an emergency residential shelter to provide short-term services to abused and neglected children. May accept victims of the worst forms of child labor.(1, 10, 13, 19)
Break the Silence Awareness Program† (2013–2015)	Ministry of Social Services, Family, and Gender Affairs program, raises awareness and encourages reporting of child abuse cases.(1) Managed by the Child Abuse Prevention Unit in the Social Welfare Division.(19)

† Program is funded by the Government of Dominica.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Dominica (Table 7).

Table 7. Suggested Government Actions to Prevent Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Define the conditions, activities, and number of hours permissible for light work.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that the minimum age for night work is 18 for all children or that children receive adequate training and that the health, safety, and morals of children are protected.	2015
	Enact legislation to expressly prohibit child prostitution and the using, procuring, or offering of a child for the production of pornography or pornographic performances.	2011 – 2015
	Prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information for the MNSLI and the MOH regarding the annual funding levels and number of labor inspections publicly available.	2014 – 2015
	Employ a sufficient number of technical officers to provide adequate labor law enforcement.	2015
	Ensure that labor inspectors and criminal investigators receive training on the worst forms of child labor.	2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine whether any of the worst forms of child labor exist in Dominica.	2014 – 2015

Dominican Republic

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, the Dominican Republic made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, the Dominican Republic is receiving this assessment because it continued a practice that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Some children, particularly those of Haitian descent, were prohibited by school officials from attending or completing school if they could not present birth certificates or other identifying documents, making them more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. This practice continued despite Dominican law and policies that prohibit the exclusion of children from the educational system based on a lack of identity documents. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by launching the social program Progressing Together and expanding the Extended School Day Program. Children in the Dominican Republic are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor and its Local Committees appear to lack sufficient resources to effectively coordinate efforts to address child labor. In addition, social programs for victims of harmful agricultural work and commercial sexual exploitation do not appear to address the scope of these problems.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Dominican Republic are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-3) In 2015, the Government published principal results from the 2014 National Multipurpose Household Survey (ENHOGAR), which was partially funded by UNICEF and used to generate information on child labor.(4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in the Dominican Republic.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in the Dominican Republic are exploited in commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in touristic locations and major urban areas.(1, 31, 35, 39) The porous border between Haiti and the Dominican Republic has allowed some children to be trafficked into the Dominican Republic, where they have been engaged in commercial sexual exploitation or forced to work in agriculture, domestic service, or begging.(31, 32, 34, 39-42) Some reports indicate that children have also been forced to engage in waste picking, shining shoes, and washing car windows, for which they must meet earnings quotas, and that some children involved in these activities have turned to commercial sexual exploitation to satisfy unmet quotas.(20, 43) Some children, including Haitian children and Dominican-born children of Haitian descent, work in sugarcane production, often alongside their parents, and live in communities that often lack adequate housing and basic services.(3, 7-14, 17, 44)

Children of parents with irregular migration status are particularly vulnerable to labor exploitation, often due to a lack of identifying documentation.(17, 45) The Dominican Constitution establishes that children born in the Dominican Republic to parents that are “in transit” are not Dominican citizens.(46) In 2013, the Dominican Constitutional Tribunal interpreted this “in transit” provision to mean that only children born in the Dominican Republic to Dominican parents are Dominican citizens, and upheld the definition of “in transit” persons to include, among others, foreign labor migrants. The Tribunal also ordered the Central Electoral Board to audit the civil registry from 1929 to 2007 to make it consistent with this interpretation, which led to the loss or suspension of Dominican citizenship for the children of “in transit” parents listed in the civil registry, most of whom were of Haitian descent.(3, 44, 47-49)

In May 2014, the Government passed a naturalization law (Law 169-14), which mandated that citizenship should be restored for the 54,307 individuals identified in the audit who were born to “in transit” parents between 1929 and 2007; however, by September 2015, the Government had reissued birth certificates to only 25 percent of these individuals.(3) The law also created a path to citizenship for individuals who were born in the Dominican Republic to “in transit” parents prior to 2007 and who were never listed in the civil registry.(3, 50-53) Under this law, an estimated 55,000 to 80,000 persons, who are predominantly of Haitian descent, could have applied for citizenship through naturalization; however, only 8,755 applied before the February 1, 2015 application deadline.(3, 51, 53, 54) In August 2014, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR) ruled that Articles 6, 8, and 11 of Law 169-14, which regulate legal personhood and nationality in the Dominican Republic, were incompatible with the Government’s duties under the American Convention on Human Rights. These duties include providing freedom against discrimination under the law based on race, color, or national origin, as well as the right to nationality in the state of one’s birth when the right to another nationality cannot be fulfilled.(39, 55-58) In October 2014, the Government stated it rejected the IACHR’s ruling; however, the Dominican Republic remains a party to the American Convention of Human Rights.(59)

In addition to Law 169-14, in November 2014, the Government enacted the National Plan to Regularize Foreigners, which created a path to temporary legal residency for individuals born in the Dominican Republic to “in transit” parents after 2007, as well as for persons who entered the country irregularly at any time. Individuals born prior to 2007 who could not meet the requirements for naturalization under Law 169-14 were eligible to apply for temporary legal residency under this Plan.(3, 51, 54) On August 1, 2015, the eligibility of these individuals to apply for regularization under the Plan expired. Individuals who did not apply under the Plan can still apply for regularization pursuant to the more extensive requirements of the General Law on Migration or can be subject to deportation under the same law.(3, 48, 53, 54, 60) Although approximately 240,000 individuals were granted temporary legal residency status under the Plan, IOM reported that approximately 280,000 individuals with irregular residency status, the majority of whom are Dominican-born persons of Haitian descent, did not apply.(3, 61) Misunderstandings related to the application process for obtaining identity documents, as well as costs associated with this process, for example to travel to government offices, hindered the acquisition of identity documents under the Plan.(62) Individuals, including children, with irregular residency status who did not apply for regularization under the Plan are at an increased risk of labor exploitation.(1)

On August 14, 2015, the Government began involuntary repatriations of individuals with irregular residency status to Haiti.(3, 61, 63) By January 2016, the Government reported that it had deported 13,756 individuals.(64) IOM reported that from June 2015 to January 2016, 37,836 individuals also migrated spontaneously to Haiti, including 970 unaccompanied minors.(64) Unaccompanied migrant children are vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. Children who remain in the Dominican Republic after their parents have been deported to Haiti, or who left the Dominican Republic for Haiti, are also vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. In addition, children of parents who have been deported to Haiti, or who voluntarily left the Dominican Republic for Haiti, may reside in makeshift camps in Haiti along the Dominican border that lack basic social services and schools, increasing the likelihood that these children engage in child labor, including its worst forms.(63, 65)

National law guarantees free public education and requires that all children attend school until age 18.(3, 46, 66) In addition, national law prohibits the exclusion of children from the educational system based on a lack of identity documents.(67, 68) However, in practice, some primary and secondary schools in the public system deny access to children who cannot present birth certificates or identity documents.(3, 15, 44, 69, 70) This practice puts these children in precarious situations where they are more likely to work. In addition, some secondary schools may permit access without birth certificates, but require such documentation for the national exams required to obtain high school diplomas.(70-72) Without the opportunity to receive high school diplomas, pursue higher education, and with limited access to formal sector work as adults, children without identity documents have less incentive to remain in school. This may increase the likelihood that these children engage in child labor, including its worst forms.(17, 30, 31, 35, 70, 73-77) Research could not determine whether a lack of identity documents hinders access to vocational training opportunities. In 2013, the Government reported that 16 percent of children younger than age 4, and 10 percent of children ages 4 to 9, lacked birth documents.(3)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Dominican Republic has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In May 2015, the Government ratified ILO Convention 189 on Decent Work for Domestic Workers. ILO Convention 189 requires signatories to specify a minimum age of employment for domestic workers, as well as ensure that work performed by domestic workers who are under the age of 18 and above the minimum age for work does not deprive them of compulsory education, or interfere with opportunities to participate in further education or vocational training.(78)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 1, 3, and 7 of the Law Against Migrant Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons; Articles 25 and 409 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents; Article 41 of the Constitution (46, 67, 81)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 25 and 408–411 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents; Article 24 of the Law on Technological Crime (67, 82)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 85 of the Law on Drugs and Controlled Substances (83)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*		Articles 96, 97, 231 and 232 of the Organic Armed Forces Law (84)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18†	Articles 26 and 96–97 of the Organic Armed Forces Law (84)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18‡	Article 63 of the Constitution; Articles 33, 35, 37, and 40 of the Organic Law of Education; Articles 45 and 46 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (46, 66, 67)
Free Public Education	Yes	18‡	Article 63 of the Constitution; Articles 33, 35, 37, and 40 of the Organic Law of Education; Ministry of Education Circular No. 18 of 2011; Articles 45 and 46 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (46, 66-68)

* Articles 96, 231 and 232 of the Organic Armed Forces Law (No. 139-13) state that there is no conscription in peacetime and that compulsory military recruitment may be authorized in situations of national defense or emergency. However, it is unclear whether Dominican law establishes a minimum age for compulsory military recruitment in these situations.(84)

† The minimum age for voluntary military service is 18. However, children ages 16 to 18 may enlist for training with parental consent.(84)

‡ Age calculated based on available information.(46, 66)

In December 2014, the Government passed a new Penal Code that, among other provisions, increased penalties for the commercial sexual exploitation of children to 10 to 20 years of imprisonment, and in aggravated circumstances to 20 to 30 years of imprisonment.(85) However, in December 2015, the Dominican Constitutional Tribunal ruled that Law 550-14, which instituted the new Penal Code, was unconstitutional, leaving the 1884 Penal Code in force.(86, 87) Under Article 410 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents, penalties for the commercial sexual exploitation of children are 3 to 10 years of imprisonment.(67) UNICEF has stated that penalties for the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the Dominican Republic should be strengthened.(2)

Article 2 of the Resolution on Hazardous Work for Persons Under Age 18 specifies activities that the Government deems hazardous and prohibits them for children under age 18. Article 3 of the same Resolution allows children ages 16 to 18 to engage in some hazardous activities, such as the use of industrial machines, as part of vocational training programs and only when properly trained, supervised, and protected.(80) Despite these protections, Article 251 of the Labor Code sets the general minimum age for hazardous work at 16.(79) The ILO has called upon the Government to amend the Labor Code to ensure that children ages 16 to 18 who are permitted to engage in hazardous activities are fully protected.(88)

The Dominican Constitution states that initial, basic, and secondary education are free and compulsory but does not specify ages for this schooling.(46) The Organic Law of Education states that initial education serves children up to age 6, where basic education typically begins, and that basic education lasts for 8 years. The Organic Law of Education states that secondary education lasts for an additional 4 years, making the calculated age for compulsory education 18.(66)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MT)	Lead government efforts to eliminate child labor; conduct labor inspections to identify and document offenses; and direct the Child Labor Unit (UTI) to investigate and reduce child labor, in part through the National Information System for Monitoring Child Labor (INFOSITI).(9, 20, 76, 89, 90) Implement the MT's Institutional Strategic Plan (2013–2016), which outlines objectives to improve the number and quality of labor inspections overall, offer better service to workers, coordinate Labor Code reform, integrate the UTI into existing enforcement efforts, and provide improved vocational training for vulnerable populations, including children.(9)
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI)	Promote policies to eradicate all forms of violence against children, including child labor, as well as improve the employability of young people.(76, 91) Coordinate with the MT to protect children against labor exploitation and enforce labor laws.(9, 92) Receive victims of child labor through 43 municipal-level offices for psychological evaluation and refer them for services.(91, 92) Run regional and municipal-level workshops on preventing and addressing the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(92) Created through the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents.(67)
Office of the Attorney General (AG)	Prosecute crimes involving children, including criminal violations of child labor laws. Oversee the Special Prosecutor for Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking, which uses a team of specialized investigators to investigate the commercial sexual exploitation of children and other worst forms of child labor; alleged violations may be communicated to the Specialized Prosecutor through a hotline.(20, 92)
National Police's (PN) Trafficking in Persons Unit and the Directorate of Migration (DGM)	Enforce criminal laws, including those prohibiting and punishing the worst forms of child labor, and coordinate with the AG in the prosecution of perpetrators. Under the Ministry of the Interior.(9)
Specialized Corps for Tourist Safety	Prevent child sex abuse and commercial sexual exploitation in touristic areas, rescue minors, and arrest and bring to justice child sex offenders. Overseen by the Ministry of Defense.(91)

According to the Ministry of Labor (MT), additional funding and resources are needed to increase the number, efficiency, and quality of labor inspections.(2, 21) During the reporting period, the MT employed 186 labor inspectors, 10 more than in 2014. Reports indicate that this number of inspectors is still inadequate to meet the need for inspections nationwide.(2, 20) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, the Dominican Republic should employ roughly 329 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(94-96)

The MT's process for labor inspections includes a preliminary visit, during which inspectors inform employers of violations and establish periods for remediation but do not issue fines. Upon expiration of the remediation periods, inspectors conduct re-inspections to determine whether the violations have been remedied.(79, 97, 98) If re-inspections find that the identified violations persist, the MT files infraction reports with the local office of the MT, which then transfers the infraction reports to the relevant local court for adjudication.(79, 97, 98) This two-tiered inspection process puts a strain on the Inspectorate's limited human and financial resources and may not sufficiently deter employers from exploiting children in the workplace, particularly in remote rural areas where re-inspections are more difficult and less consistent. Furthermore, the lack of published information on the results of inspections prevents a complete understanding of how effective this inspection system is in practice.

Although the 2008 General Inspection Protocol and the 2011 Inspection Protocol for Agriculture instruct inspectors to assess child labor violations by reviewing workers' identity documents and employers' records, making observations, and conducting interviews, the widespread lack of identity documents impedes both inspectors and employers from verifying the ages of workers and guaranteeing that children under age 18 are not participating in dangerous or unhealthy work.(10, 15, 73, 97, 98) The MT has indicated that improvements could be made with respect to how inspectors conduct interviews, ask follow-up questions, and use inspection data to strengthen the inspection system.(15) Moreover, reports indicate that in some cases, Spanish-speaking inspectors working without translation assistance have been responsible for interviewing Creole-speaking workers with limited or no Spanish-language abilities, which has further hindered the efficacy of those inspections.(20)

Dominican Republic

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

From January through November 2015, the MT conducted 87,792 labor inspections; of these, 75,328 were regular inspections, which were preventative in nature and conducted unannounced, and 12,464 were special inspections, which were conducted in response to requests or complaints.(2, 21) For all of 2015, the MT conducted a total of 92,644 inspections.(93) During this period, each inspector therefore conducted an average of 498 inspections. This is a high number of inspections conducted by each inspector, and it is unknown whether this high number affects the quality of inspections. Some NGOs and labor unions have reported that inspections are not always conducted immediately after requests are made and that inspection reports often contain errors and contradictions, undermining the credibility of these reports.(2, 20) Reports also indicate that substandard labor inspection reports have hindered the ability of the Office of the Attorney General (AG) to pursue prosecutions on criminal matters involving child labor issues.(20)

In 2015, the Government reported that a total of 211 children were found working in violation of the law. Of these, 149 children were found working in the agricultural sector, including in the cultivation of rice and in the harvesting of coffee, beans, tomatoes, and corn.(2, 21) The Government reported that there were no children found engaged in child labor in the sugar sector. Research could not find the breakdown of where the remaining 62 children were found working illegally.(2, 21) The Government did not report how many of the 211 children found in child labor were removed from work. It is unknown whether the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI) or its municipal offices evaluated these rescued children, provided them with services, or coordinated their return to their homes.(2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Dominican Republic took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the AG’s Special Prosecutor for Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking employed six investigators to conduct investigations regarding the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation. However, reports indicate that its capacity to identify, investigate, and prosecute criminal cases related to the worst forms of child labor is limited due to resource constraints.(2) Similarly, the National Police (PN) maintains a Trafficking in Persons Unit, but reports indicate that it did not investigate trafficking in persons crimes during the reporting period also due mainly to a lack of resources.(2)

In 2015, investigators employed by the AG’s Special Prosecutor for Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking participated in 19 trainings, 10 of which specifically addressed human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(2) However, the PN’s Trafficking in Persons Unit did not receive training, due largely to a lack of resources.(99)

During the reporting period, the AG successfully prosecuted to conviction 14 cases of trafficking in persons that involved a total of 20 defendants. Seven of these cases, with 11 defendants convicted, involved child victims.(2) In the cases involving child victims, one defendant was sentenced to two years; five defendants were sentenced to three years each; one defendant was sentenced to five years; three were sentenced to 15 years; and one had been convicted but not yet sentenced.(2)

In 2015, the AG reported that it rescued 82 children from alleged cases of human trafficking.(2) The AG is required by interagency agreement and regulations to refer children rescued from human trafficking and other worst forms of child labor to CONANI for services. This may include placement in NGO-run shelters.(2, 43, 99) Research could not determine whether all of the 82 children rescued from the alleged cases of human trafficking in 2015 were referred to CONANI for services. NGOs and government ministries also report that CONANI is severely under-funded and does not have the institutional capacity to meet the demand for services nationwide.(2) In response to this, the AG began working in 2015 to open its own shelter for child victims of human trafficking with funding from NGOs.(2)

Reports indicate that coordination between the MT and the AG has been limited due mainly to a lack of resources and that not all criminal violations identified by the MT have been referred to, and subsequently investigated and prosecuted effectively, by the AG.(9, 16, 20) Although challenges in coordinating criminal law enforcement efforts remain, in 2015 the Government published a protocol on trafficking in persons developed by the Inter-Agency Commission Against Trafficking in Persons (CITIM) and the IOM to address the detection and referral of child and adolescent victims of human trafficking.(99) The protocol was presented to government officials and NGOs at seven conferences throughout the reporting period.(99) In addition, with the support of the Government, UNICEF sponsored various judicial coordination working groups, which met 62 times during the reporting period to coordinate the prosecution of crimes of child sexual exploitation. In addition to the judicial branch, participating governmental agencies in the working groups included the AG, PN, MT, CONANI, and the Ministries of Education and Tourism; NGOs also participated in the working groups.(2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor (CDN)	Develop and promote evidence-based policies to combat child labor and coordinate the efforts of 48 Local and Municipal Committees to implement CDN efforts at the local level. Overseen by the MT and composed of ministerial representatives, including from the UTI, labor union officials, private business leaders, and NGOs. Established through Decree 144-97.(20, 76, 89, 92, 100) In 2015, the CDN met every two months to coordinate government efforts to combat child labor.(2)
Inter-Institutional Commission Against Child Abuse and Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Coordinate and implement actions to combat commercial sexual exploitation and child abuse. Led by CONANI and the MT, and includes representatives from various ministries, the National and Tourism Police, the AG, NGOs, and the Hotel and Restaurant Association, as well as representatives of UNICEF and the ILO as advisors.(9, 20, 91)
Inter-Agency Commission Against Trafficking in Persons (CITIM)	Coordinate government agencies in efforts to combat human trafficking by developing and implementing national plans, collaborating with international organizations and NGOs, developing training and education programs, examining legislative initiatives, and collaborating in the production of reports on human trafficking.(43, 101) Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and comprises 14 government agencies, including the Ministries of Labor, Education, Public Health, and Tourism, as well as the AG and other law enforcement agencies; created through Decree No. 575-07.(43, 101)
Social Policies Coordination Cabinet (GCPS)	Coordinate all social policies and conditional cash transfer programs, such as the Progressing with Solidarity Program. Led by the Vice President.(9, 76)
Local Committees for the Protection and Restitution of Children's Rights	Ensure that children's rights are not being violated; consists of community volunteers in 10 municipalities.(91)

Reports indicate that the Local and Municipal Committees of the CDN face limitations in their coordination efforts due to a lack of resources.(30) Previous reports indicated that the CITIM has not always convened all relevant agencies working on human trafficking issues and that its coordination efforts were limited.(43) Research could not determine whether CITIM met and convened all relevant agencies in 2015.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Dominican Republic has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategic Plan to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (PEN) (2006–2016)	Identifies the roles and responsibilities of government agencies and municipal representatives in eradicating the worst forms of child labor. Prioritizes prevention, protection, assistance, and the progressive eradication of the worst forms of child labor.(20, 89, 92, 102)
Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in the Dominican Republic	Outlines a plan to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015 and all other types of child labor by 2020.(76, 103) Designates the roles of various government agencies and sets targets and indicators for each area of responsibility, specifically: poverty reduction, health, education, institutional coordination, awareness-raising, and information sharing. Adopted in 2010.(76, 92)
Protocol for the Protection of Children's and Adolescents' Rights in Child Labor	Aims to eliminate child labor in favor of greater school attendance, in part through community workshops that seek to reach 300,000 children and adolescents on child protection issues. Includes a plan to evaluate the country's policy framework on the elimination of child labor as well as the country's compliance with international conventions on child labor.(20, 92)
National Action Plan Against Human Trafficking and the Smuggling of Migrants (2009–2014)	Aims to combat human trafficking and the smuggling of migrants through strategic objectives, including prevention, investigation and prosecution, and victim assistance and protection.(43, 99, 104) The Government reported that this plan remained in effect for 2015.(99)
Education Pact (2014–2030)	Seeks to reform the education system by building more and better-quality schools, improving teacher training, and increasing attendance and graduation rates through free early childhood education and enrolling more students in the Extended School Day Program.(105) Also seeks to provide support to families to keep their children out of child labor and enrolled in school. Signed by the President and nearly 200 academic, political, and educational organizations.(76, 77, 105)
National 10-Year Education Plan (PDE) (2008–2018)	Aims to increase access to education and improve attendance and graduation rates, in part to reduce child labor. Aims to improve both classroom space and time in school, as well as build strategies to address the needs of children who are behind in school because of work.(76, 106) Implemented by the Ministry of Education.(76)
National Development Plan 2030 (END)	Aims to reduce poverty and inequality, and includes policies and programs that encourage families to keep their children out of child labor and in school.(9, 76, 91) Includes the Quality Education for All plan that aims to provide universal education to all children through middle school, including students without identity documents and those with disabilities.(91)
National Plan on Gender Equality (2007–2017)*	Promotes occupational and educational opportunities for women and girls, seeks to remedy gender discrimination and violence, and promotes child care for working mothers so that children do not have to be in the workplace.(107)
Government Plan under President Medina (2012–2016)	Focuses on the development of 400,000 new jobs and includes the elimination of child labor among other goals.(2, 20)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by the Dominican Republic at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(108-110)
XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor†	Promotes decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancún, Mexico, participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancún 2015 which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(111, 112) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(111, 113)

Policy	Description
Declaration of the Vice-Ministers of the XX Regional Conference on Migration†	Aims to strengthen regional cooperation to protect the human rights of migrants, especially youth and children, in countries of origin, transit, and destination, including by increasing opportunities for education and employment. Adopted by the Dominican Republic at the XX Regional Conference on Migration in Mexico City (November, 2015).(114-116)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Efforts to implement child labor elimination policies in the Dominican Republic have been slowed by an insufficient allocation of resources, including personnel.(117) In addition, reports indicate that the implementation of the Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor has also been hindered by a lack of coordination among participating government agencies.(9)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of the Dominican Republic funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Progressing with Solidarity (PROSOLI)†	Government program that promotes the well-being of families living in extreme poverty through an approach that includes subsidies and conditional cash transfers.(76, 92, 118) Among other objectives, aims to increase the number of students who attend school and reduce child labor, including by informing parents about the effects of child labor and the benefits of education.(76, 91, 119-121) In June 2013, the ILO and the Vice President of the Dominican Republic announced a project to withdraw 38,000 of the program's beneficiaries from child labor; this action supported the 2012 letter of agreement between the Vice President and the ILO to remove 100,000 children from exploitative work over a 4-year period.(122-124) Within this framework, in 2015 the ILO and the Vice President's Office implemented the Program to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor and its Worst Forms Among PROSOLI Households, which targeted children ages 5 to 17.(2, 121) In addition, the Vice President's Office reported that PROSOLI's School Attendance and School Subsidy Incentives benefited 325,217 students, reducing school dropout rates among beneficiaries by 3.8 percent and children's vulnerability to child labor.(121)
Progressing Together (Progresando Unidos)*	Government program financed by the World Bank that aims to reduce extreme poverty among 180,000 beneficiaries in 14 provinces, including Santo Domingo. Implemented along five lines of intervention, including increased food security and health programming, elimination of dirt floors in participating homes, job creation for youth, and capacity-building of the Social Policies Coordination Cabinet (GCPS).(125, 126) Coordinated by the GCPS with support from PROSOLI and government agencies, including the Ministry of Education.(125, 126)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012–2015)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 3-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aimed to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in Latin America, including the Dominican Republic. Included the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(127)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011–2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including the Dominican Republic.(127)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, including the Dominican Republic, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor in the Dominican Republic and improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research.(128)
Awareness-Raising Campaign on Child Labor	MT and the Foundation for Peace and Democracy (FUNPADEM) public awareness-raising campaign to mobilize communities to report cases of child labor.(91, 129)
Child Domestic Work Awareness-Raising Campaign	MT and ILO child labor eradication campaign that supports reaching the goals outlined in the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, with an emphasis on the elimination of child domestic work.(91)

Program	Description
Line 700 Hotline†	Office of the First Lady’s free hotline to enable citizens to report cases of child labor, in addition to child abuse.(91)
Extended School Day Program (Jornada Escolar Extendida)†	Ministry of Education program to extend school hours to a full day (8 a.m. to 4 p.m.) to improve educational achievement and reduce child labor.(9, 15, 28, 130, 131) In 2015, the Government expanded the program to include 3,418 schools, benefitting 882,558 students. An additional 22,265 teachers have been hired with this expansion.(2)
Spaces for Growth and Homework Rooms (Espacios para Crecer)†	Government after-school programs that seek to prevent children from working by keeping them in a creative learning environment outside of normal classroom hours.(15, 30, 119, 132)
Spaces for Hope (Espacios de Esperanza)†	Government early educational centers to promote integrated attention and positive stimulation to pre-school aged children. In 2015, the Government reported operating 68 Spaces for Hope around the country.(9, 91, 133)
Literacy Campaign (Quisqueya Aprende Contigo)†	Government literacy campaign to promote the importance of literacy and education among families, including youth.(9, 134, 135) Approximately 8,500 teachers have been trained for literacy instruction with students ages 15 and older, and more than 52,000 people have been integrated into the program.(20, 21, 92)
Youth and Employment Project (Proyecto de Emprendimiento Juvenil)	Government project supported by the Government of Chile that improves the employability of disadvantaged, at-risk youth through training and internship opportunities.(91, 119, 136, 137)
At-Risk Youth Initiative	USAID-funded project to protect youth from crime and promote access to education, including through participation in afterschool programs (Spaces for Growth) and other social services.(138)
Child Care Facilities (Estancias Infantiles)†	MT-supported child care facilities for adult workers with children under age 5. The Government has reported operating 115 child care facilities around the country.(91)
Presidential Microcredit Initiative†	Government program to provide microcredit to small businesses in disadvantaged regions to increase employment and provide improved livelihoods for families.(9)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of the Dominican Republic.

In an effort to improve the national education system, the Government has allocated 4 percent of the national GDP in its budget for primary and secondary education for the third consecutive year.(21, 76, 92) Since 2012, priorities have included the construction of new classrooms and the provision of school meals.(15, 30, 77, 139-143) Although these plans have not yet been fully implemented, the Government reports that 10,017 new classrooms have been created in 2014 and 2015.(21, 92)

A study commissioned by the IDB indicated that the Progressing with Solidarity (PROSOLI) program has increased school enrollment and attendance among beneficiaries.(119, 144) Another study indicated an increase in beneficiaries’ abilities to read and write.(91) An evaluation conducted in the province of Montecristi showed a decline in child labor among program beneficiaries compared to a control group in the same province.(91) However, the PROSOLI program requires participants to present identification documents in order to access program benefits, which limits the participation of those individuals lacking such documentation, many of whom are particularly vulnerable to child labor.(15)

Despite the efforts described above, current programs do not appear to adequately address the scope of the worst forms of child labor in the Dominican Republic, particularly commercial sexual exploitation and harmful work in agricultural areas.(31, 39, 43)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Dominican Republic (Table 11).

Dominican Republic

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Amend the Labor Code to raise the general minimum age for hazardous work to 18 and ensure that children ages 16 to 18 who are permitted to engage in hazardous activities are fully protected by the law.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that penalties for the commercial sexual exploitation of children are adequate.	2015
	Ensure the law establishes a minimum age of 18 for compulsory military recruitment in situations of national defense or emergency.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Correctly interpret and apply the law to allow all children without birth certificates or other identity documents to enroll in primary and secondary education and complete schooling.	2011 – 2015
	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015
	Publish information about the training for labor inspectors and statistics on the number of child labor violation penalties imposed and collected.	2009 – 2015
	Strengthen the enforcement of child labor laws by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Allocating adequate resources for inspectors to conduct timely inspections; ■ Following the MT's 2008 General Inspection Protocol and 2011 Inspection Protocol for Agriculture to improve the quality of information gathering and the use of inspection data to enable prosecution; and ■ Establishing a system to verify the age of young workers to better protect children without birth certificates or other legal documentation from exploitation. 	2012 – 2015
	Ensure that the two-tiered inspection system does not restrict the MT's ability to enforce laws prohibiting child labor.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that labor inspectors are able to communicate with Creole-speaking workers, including those who may be underage, to adequately conduct inspections for child labor violations.	2014 – 2015
	Publicly report on the mechanism by which the MT refers victims of child labor, including its worst forms, to the CONANI for services, as well as on the total number of children referred and assisted.	2014 – 2015
	Publish information on training for criminal investigators and statistics on the number of criminal investigations conducted for criminal child labor violations, including by type, as well as on the number of prosecutions initiated.	2009 – 2015
	Increase the resources of criminal investigators and prosecutors to effectively enforce criminal laws on child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that all children rescued from the worst forms of child labor are referred to CONANI for services and that CONANI has sufficient resources to provide services for referred children.	2015
	Improve coordination between the MT and the AG to ensure violations are effectively investigated and prosecuted.	2013 – 2015
	Coordination	Ensure the CDN and its Local and Municipal Committees have sufficient resources to effectively coordinate efforts to address child labor.	2013 – 2015
		Ensure the CITIM regularly convenes all necessary agencies to effectively coordinate government efforts to address human trafficking issues.	2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Plan on Gender Equality.	2013 – 2015
	Allocate additional personnel and resources to support national plans and strategies to combat the worst forms of child labor, including the Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor.	2009 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure that all children are able to obtain identity documents to reduce their vulnerability to labor exploitation.	2011 – 2015
	Address deficiencies in the educational system by continuing to increase enrollment and add classroom space.	2011 – 2015
	Eliminate the requirement that individuals present identity documents to participate in social programs intended to combat child labor, including in the PROSOLI program.	2012 – 2015
	Expand social protection programs, particularly in commercial sexual exploitation and agriculture.	2010 – 2015

- UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary. Total. [accessed December 16, 2015]; <http://www.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children’s work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. 94. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited March 18, 2016]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country’s total labor force. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development as determined by the UN.
95. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/re/m/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
96. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

144. ILO-IPEC Geneva official. E-mail communication to USDOL official, April 15, 2013.

In 2015, Ecuador made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government enacted legislation that expands the list of hazardous work for children to include dangerous agricultural activities and paid domestic indoor work. The National Plan to Eradicate Child Labor (2015–2017) was implemented and the Government also adopted a protective policy framework document on the elimination of child labor in domestic work and the protection of young domestic workers of legal working age. However, children in Ecuador are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor is insufficient to provide adequate coverage of the workforce. In addition, the Government lacks national coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms; and child labor programs do not provide adequate coverage of the worst forms of child labor, including street work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ecuador are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-3) In 2013, the Government released the results of the Child Labor Survey, which indicates that 359,597 Ecuadorian children and adolescents work, or 8.6 percent of the population between the ages of 5 and 17. Data from this survey were not analyzed in time for inclusion in Table 1. (2, 4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ecuador.

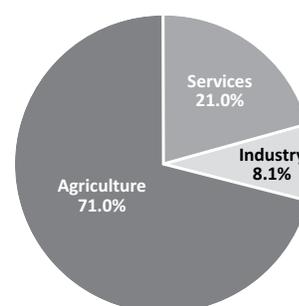

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	2.7 (75,689)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	96.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	2.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		112.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Use in the production of pornography* (10)
	Forced labor in domestic work, street vending, and begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (20, 23, 26-30)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Reports indicate that children working in commercial sexual exploitation are induced by traffickers to recruit friends and classmates. Children are also used in commercial sexual exploitation in illegal mines.(3)

Although the Constitution provides for free education, in practice, students are sometimes required to pay for uniforms and books, which may be prohibitive.(31) Reports indicate that migrant children and children of certain ethnic groups face barriers to education. Indigenous children in rural and urban areas are found to abandon school early.(13, 22) For example, 48 percent of indigenous children do not attend secondary school in rural areas, and 37 to 40 percent do not attend secondary school in urban areas.(32)

Indigenous children and children of migrants and refugees are particularly vulnerable to involvement in child labor; 82 percent of children who work come from homes that are in extreme poverty and lack basic necessities.(3) In Ecuador, 44 percent of children were identified as indigenous in the 2010 census.(32) The Child Labor Survey indicates that Cotopaxi Province in the central highlands has the highest percentage of children working.(33)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ecuador has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) issued ministerial accord MDT–2015–0131, which expanded the list of hazardous activities for teenagers to include activities that require youth to be in forced physical positions, such as squats or push-ups, and requires the use of a safety net or scaffolding for children working at dangerous heights.(31, 37, 40)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Industrial Relations (MOL)	Monitor child labor, conduct labor inspections at work sites, and enforce child labor laws in the formal sector. Administer sanctions against companies found using child labor.(3, 10) Has a system to collect fines.(8)
Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion (MIES)	Provide remediation services to child laborers and their families. Assist victims of child labor found in the informal sector.(3, 4) In the case of the Institute for Children and Families (INFA), provide social services and assist children who are victims of abuse, human trafficking, exploitative child labor, and sexual exploitation of all types.(4, 41) Run seven protection centers staffed by social workers, doctors, psychologists, and educators.(4)
Attorney General's Office	Enforce criminal laws against child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking.(24, 42)
Ministry of Interior	Oversee and evaluate all police actions, including the Judicial Police Anti-Trafficking Police Unit (ATU) and the National Police Unit for Crimes against Children and Adolescents (DINAPEN). The ATU investigates human trafficking cases, rescues victims, and arrests traffickers.(10) DINAPEN investigates all crimes against children, including abuse, sexual exploitation, sex tourism, smuggling, kidnapping, exploitative child labor, and forced labor.(20, 43) The DINAPEN anti-trafficking unit also investigates child trafficking cases.(3) Police units have officers in each province dedicated to victims and witness protection.(4, 44)
Office of the Prosecutor	Conduct investigations and try cases related to the worst forms of child labor.(10)
Ministry of Education	Provide immediate educational services for victims of child labor.(45)

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Ecuador should employ about 489 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(3, 46-48) Research indicates inspectors often lack the necessary resources to carry out their mandate, and the number of inspections conducted in 2015 decreased significantly from 2014.(3, 42, 43) Labor inspectors and police officers sometimes encountered language barriers in rural areas when conducting inspections and enforcing laws in indigenous towns, and inspectors sometimes had no access to transportation to conduct inspections.(3, 42) During the reporting period, the ILO and a local NGO worked with the MOL to develop training guides for labor inspectors.(42) However, sources indicate that labor inspectors lack adequate knowledge of child labor laws, the processes in place for referring children to the appropriate social services, and how to impose penalties consistent with the law.(3)

In 2015, the Government drafted a strategy to identify the most risk-prone sectors for child labor to improve the quality and targeting of inspections. As of early 2016, implementation of the strategy had not yet begun.(3) MOL has 10 technicians in the Project to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI) who refer children to the appropriate social services agencies and local enforcement officials investigate the cases.(3, 13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Ecuador took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, DINAPEN employed 635 agents nationwide to handle all crimes against children, including 23 officers in its anti-trafficking unit. The ATU employed 20 agents based in Quito.(3) During the reporting period, DINAPEN and the ATU conducted operations to combat commercial sexual exploitation, child trafficking, child begging, and exploitative child labor.(3) The Government of Ecuador works with several NGOs to provide services to child victims of trafficking, including shelter, food, job training, legal assistance, and psychological and medical care.(10)

Sources indicate that DINAPEN officers lack sufficient human and material resources to adequately investigate reported cases of child abuse and the use of children in the micro-trafficking of drugs.(3) Although the DINAPEN anti-trafficking unit and the ATU assist in complex cases of child trafficking, DINAPEN is unable to investigate all potential cases of child trafficking.(3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a Coordinating Ministry of Social Development, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-institutional Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinate government efforts to combat child labor.(3) In 2015, reviewed the Unified System of Registering Child Labor (SURTIL), a new mechanism to file and respond to child labor complaints.(3, 42)
Inter-Agency Committee against Trafficking in Persons*	Coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking. Established as part of the National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, Sexual and Labor Exploitation, and other Forms of Exploitation.(42)
Coordinating Ministry of Social Development	Convene government ministries to discuss issues, including child labor.(3) In 2015, improved protection and shelter services for victims of human trafficking.(42)
National Council for Intergenerational Equity	Coordinate interagency efforts to protect vulnerable populations, including children.(3)
Local Autonomous Governments	Participate in coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor and implement the guidelines provided by the National Council.(3) Mayors are held accountable to ensure that children do not work, and they can be fined if children are discovered to be working.(49)
Ministry of Tourism and DINAPEN	Coordinate prevention work against the commercial sexual exploitation of minors.(42, 50)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

In 2015, the Interagency Steering Committee (IAC) was disbanded as the Government shifted its strategy to focus on government actors through the Coordinating Ministry of Social Development; however, meetings on child labor issues occur only infrequently.(3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Ecuador has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan to Eradicate Child Labor (2015–2017)†	Establishes strategy for the eradication of child labor in Ecuador by 2017.(3)
Project to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI) (2014–2017)	MOL program to prevent hazardous child labor in agriculture, manufacturing, construction, and mining. Aims to strengthen the legal framework and enforcement mechanisms to combat child labor, to design strategies for the protection of vulnerable youth, to strengthen public-private cooperation, and to establish an identification and referral system for children removed from exploitative labor situations.(13)

Policy	Description
Ecuador Without Child Labor	Seeks to increase efforts to eradicate child labor by improving data collection, strengthening labor inspections, and carrying out awareness-raising activities in 150 municipalities. Government agencies work with the private sector and other actors to address child labor in agriculture, construction, and flower sectors.(51) The Government signed an agreement with the agriculture, flower, livestock, and construction sectors to coordinate actions and promote joint programs for the elimination of child labor in those sectors.(51, 52) MIES entered into 206 agreements with local governments and organizations throughout the country to help up to 41,000 children and improved protection and shelter to victims of human trafficking.(4)
National Plan for Good Living (2013–2017)	Seeks to improve living conditions for all citizens and promote social inclusion and decent work. Eradicating child labor and providing access to decent work for adolescents of legal working age are guiding policies under Objectives 2 and 9 of the plan.(53) Provides conceptual framework for plans to combat child labor, including PETI.(42)
National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, Sexual and Labor Exploitation, and other Forms of Exploitation†	Establishes processes to prevent, investigate, and impose legal sanctions for human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and other forms of abuse, and to protect and restore the rights of victims of these crimes.(54, 55)
Declaration of the Establishment of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Regional initiative launched in 2013 at the Third Global Conference on Child Labor. The declaration re-emphasizes signatories' commitments to eradicate all child labor by 2020. Also recognizes that child labor contributes to social and economic inequality.(56-58) In 2015, shared best practices with counterparts in Brazil, Colombia, Panama, and Peru.(42)
Declaration of Cancún 2015†	Resulted from the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor in December 2015 to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Aims to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(59, 60) Participating countries each adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(60, 61)
Sectorial Strategy to Eradicate Child Labor (2014–2017)	Outlines national priorities and goals for each ministry in eliminating child labor. Delegates responsibilities and budget to each ministry to achieve goals.(43)
Binational Plan†	Strategic alliance between Ecuador and Peru to progressively eradicate child labor.(3)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The MOL has completed the Sectorial Strategy to Eradicate Child Labor (2014–2017), which is pending approval and implementation. The plan will foster coordination in among governmental agencies responsible for the eradication of child labor.(3)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Ecuador funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Grants for Human Development†	MIES conditional cash transfer program, supplements household income. Also targets vulnerable families and conditions payments on keeping children under age 15 in school and taking them for medical checkups.(15, 62, 63) Working children whose families receive grants are more likely to stay in school rather than work, particularly children between the ages of 11 and 15.(64, 65)
National Program to Combat Child Begging†	Government program that raises awareness about child begging in originating and receiving communities.(28) In 2015, MIES invested $1,456,000 in 44 cooperation agreements, which affected 4,941 individuals found begging or at risk.(3) DINAPEN rescued 1,318 children and adolescents during its operations to combat child begging during the reporting period.(42)
School Meals Program†	Government program that provides free meals to school children across the country. In 2015, 2.3 million students benefited from the program.(3, 66)

Program	Description
Business Network for a Child Labor Free Ecuador†	UN initiative that seeks to gain commitment from participating industries to promote the prevention and elimination of child labor in their supply chains.(67-69) Businesses participating in the program have three commitments: to promote zero tolerance of child labor, to conduct a supply chain analysis to determine if there is child labor, and to develop strategies to prevent and eradicate child labor in the supply chain.(68) In 2015, in collaboration with the MOL, a new reporting system was created to facilitate the transfer of information from the Business Network to MOL. During the reporting period there were 26 active business members.(3)
Eradication of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011–2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 3-year multi-country project for the eradication of child labor.(3, 70)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012–2015)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 3-year multi-country education and monitoring program for the eradication of child labor.(70)
Support to the Partnership Program to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor in the Americas (2009–2017)	$3.8 million Government of Brazil-funded, 9-year project that supports exchange of good practices to combat child labor between Bolivia, Ecuador, Paraguay, and Timor-Leste.(70)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor, and strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers in Ecuador.(71) In 2015, adopted the protective policy framework document on the elimination of child labor in domestic work and the protection of young domestic workers of legal working age.(71)
Building Effective Policies Against Child Labor in Ecuador and Panama (2012–2016)	$3.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC, aims to strengthen policy and enforcement of child labor laws and occupational health and safety services.(40) Promotes lesson sharing between Ecuador, Panama, and other countries. In Ecuador, piloting efforts to address the link between child labor and disabilities.(40) In 2015, developed and adopted the hazardous work list and assisted the MOL in revising the National Plan. Developed a training module on eradicating child labor in collaboration with the Ecuadoran Service for Professional Training and provided training to 60 MOL child labor inspectors and other stakeholders.(40) In collaboration with the MOL, piloted (SURT1), which refers victims of child labor to social services providers.(3, 40)
EducaFuturo Project (2012–2016)	$6.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Partners of the Americas to combat the worst forms of child labor among the most vulnerable populations, including Afro-descendants, migrants, and indigenous children, by providing them with educational and livelihood services in Ecuador and Panama.(72) The project also promotes lesson sharing between Ecuador, Panama, and other countries. In Ecuador, the project is piloting efforts to address the link between child labor and disabilities.(72) Since the start of the project, provided educational services to 2,584 children and provided livelihood services to 500 households in Ecuador.(73)
Projects to Combat Human Trafficking and Exploitation	National INFA program to assist children who are engaged in child labor or who are victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. Works closely with law enforcement officials to protect children and provide social services at 86 INFA centers across the country.(10)
Prevention of Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents from Tourism†	Ministry of Tourism program that seeks to prevent sexual exploitation by creating regulations and awareness campaigns in the tourism sector.(74)
Awareness Raising Activities†	MOL programs to raising awareness of child labor issues and build the capacity of stakeholders to combat child labor. In 2015, held 60 street theater presentations and 46 events to commemorate World Day Against Child Labor, which reached 21,876 public officials, employers, and children.(3)

† Program is funded by the Government of Ecuador.

Although Ecuador has a program that targets child labor in street work, including begging, the scope of the National Program to Combat Child Begging is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Sources also indicate that during the reporting period, the number of child laborers in street work, including begging, increased slightly.(3)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ecuador (Table 9).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on the funding for the labor inspectorate.	2015
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing child labor laws in accordance with the ILO's recommendation.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that labor inspectors are familiar with existing laws, penalties, and referral processes for victims.	2015
	Make publicly available the number of penalties imposed and collected, prosecutions initiated, and convictions made.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that inspectors receive adequate resources, such as transportation and translators, to effectively carry out their duties and investigate all cases of child labor.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2015
Social Programs	Expand efforts to improve access to education for all children, particularly for children from different ethnic groups and migrant children.	2014 – 2015
	Expand child labor programs that target the worst forms of child labor, including street work.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 46. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “least developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

In 2015, Egypt made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government announced plans to enforce minimum age protections in the agricultural sector. The Ministry of Manpower signed a memorandum to oversee the National Child Labor Monitoring System. The Government also initiated a program to improve access to education through a cash transfer program. However, children in Egypt are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work. The Government did not publicly make available data on the enforcement of child labor laws, including its worst forms. In addition, programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Egypt are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work.(1-4) Data from the 2010 National Child Labor Survey indicate that 63.5 percent of all child laborers work in agriculture. Boys are three times more likely than girls to engage in child labor.(3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Egypt.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	6.7 (993,417)
Attending School (%)	6-14 yrs.	88.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	6.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		103.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2005.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton (1, 2)
	Caring for livestock* (1, 3, 7)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (1, 7, 8)
Industry	Quarrying† limestone (1, 9-11)
	Making bricks* (1, 12, 13)
	Working in carpentry workshops* (1, 14)

	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking* (2, 19)
	Forced begging sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 19, 20)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Egypt

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children have been reported in a number of governorates, including Alexandria, Cairo, and Luxor.(19) Additionally, in return for payments, parents give their young daughters into temporary marriages to wealthy foreign men, mostly from Persian Gulf countries.(2, 19) However, anecdotal evidence shows that this practice is on the decline with the reduction in tourism.(21)

The cost of school fees, books, and uniforms is prohibitive for lower-income families, resulting in many children dropping out of school. In addition, cultural barriers may prevent some parents from sending their daughters to school.(8) As of August 2015, more than 6,200 Syrian refugee children were out of school.(22) Syrian refugees cite overcrowded schools, harassment, and transportation issues as being among the primary reasons for their children not attending school.(23)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Egypt has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 64 of the Child Law (24)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 1 of Ministry of Manpower's Decree 118 (25)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 1 and 2 of Ministry of Manpower's Decree 118 (25)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 89 of the Constitution; Article 291 of the Penal Code as amended in the Child Law; Articles 2 and 3 of the Law on Combating Human Trafficking (24, 26, 27)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 89 of the Constitution; Article 291 of the Penal Code as amended in the Child Law; Articles 2 and 3 of the Law on Combating Human Trafficking (24, 26, 27)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 116- bis (a) of the Child Law and Article 291 of the Penal Code as amended in the Child Law; Articles 2 and 3 of the Law on Combating Human Trafficking (24, 26)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 34 of the Law on Narcotics; Article 65 of the Child Law; Article 2.2 of Ministry of Manpower's Decree 118 (24, 25, 28)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 1 of the Law on Military and National Service (29)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	15	Ministry of Defense Guidelines on Youth Volunteers in the Armed Forces (30)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 59(1) of the Child Law; Articles 80 and 238 of the Constitution (24, 27)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 54 of the Child Law (24)

Laws on the commercial sexual exploitation are not comprehensive enough to criminally prohibit the procuring of a child in all circumstances for pornography or pornographic performances, and benefiting from a monetary transaction involving a child in pornographic performances.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Manpower	Enforce child labor laws and regulations, including receiving and investigating child labor complaints, and referring relevant violations to the Prosecutor General's Office.(1) Inspectors conduct routine labor inspections, and when they find instances of illegal child labor, refer the cases to the ministries of the Interior and Justice.(21)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforce laws and regulations prohibiting human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(31)
Prosecutor General's Office, Ministry of Justice	Prosecute violation of laws related to child labor and human trafficking.(31)
National Council for Childhood and Motherhood (NCCM)	Provide technical support and training for Ministry of Manpower's inspectors on child labor. Identify and monitor children at risk, including those vulnerable to exploitative labor.(21) Manage two 24-hour hotlines, which can be used to report cases of child exploitation, including child victims of human trafficking. Receive the majority of complaints regarding child labor. Refer victims to shelters and medical, psychological, and legal services.(21) Provide callers who are victims of human trafficking with over-the-phone counseling and legal assistance.(1) In 2015, a counter-child trafficking unit was established to coordinate Government efforts to refer victims to social services.(32) The unit also provides work training to women and girls in order to combat "temporary marriages."(33) In 2015, the hotline received 387 reports related to human trafficking, at least nine of which involved child victims.(34)
Ministry of Local Administration and Development	Provide administrative and logistical support for the enforcement of child labor laws.(35) Administers the Child Protection Committees.(21)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, law enforcement agencies in Egypt took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, the Ministry of Manpower prepared an annual plan for enforcing child labor laws in agriculture, but the numbers of inspections conducted and violations found were unavailable.(36) The Ministry also responded to child labor complaints, but the details are unavailable.(1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Egypt took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the Government investigated 11 cases of human trafficking. It is not known how many of these cases involved child victims. Two individuals were sentenced to life imprisonment for sexually abusing children and forcing them to beg.(34) During the reporting period, 4,645 Government officials, including judges, prosecutors, and law enforcement officers, received training on identification, protection, and rehabilitation of victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(34)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordinating Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate the efforts of the Ministries of Manpower, Justice, Social Solidarity, and the Interior; the Council for Human Rights, Childhood, and Motherhood; and the Council for Women to draft a National Strategy to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(1)
National Coordination Committee on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking, including women and children. Led by the Deputy Minister of Justice with committee members from the Ministries of Justice and Interior; the General Intelligence Service; the Council for Human Rights, Childhood, and Motherhood; and the Council for Women.(31, 38)
Child Protection Committees	Coordinate child protection efforts at the local level. Organized by the Ministry of Local Administration and Development and the NCCM, and chaired by the local governors in each governorate, with subcommittees at each police station.(21) Coordinate investigations, prosecutions, and counseling services to address child labor issues. These Committees remained dormant in 2015.(39)
Educational Working Group	Coordinate efforts to improve access to education for Syrian refugee children. Led by the UNHCR for Refugees, in cooperation with the Ministry of Education.(23)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Egypt has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Second National Plan of Action Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Aims to provide timelines and identify roles of Government agencies responsible for assisting children engaged in child labor.(1)

Policy	Description
Second National Plan of Action Against Human Trafficking (2013–2015) and Third National Plan of Action Against Human Trafficking	Aims to maintain referral mechanisms, train law enforcement officials, and combat trafficking of street children.(1, 38, 40)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Egypt funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Enhancing Access of Children to Education and Fighting Child Labor (2014–2018)	$65 million, EU-funded, 4-year project implemented by the WFP provides food security for up to 100,000 children at risk of engaging in child labor, and financial assistance to 400,000 family members to compensate for wages that child labor would have otherwise generated, enabling children to attend school. Supports 50,000 households in income-generating activities to help keep their children in school.(41) In 2015, the project served 58,000 children in 8 governorates.(42) The Ministry of Manpower, in cooperation with the Ministry of Social Solidarity and WFP, signed an MOU, according to which the Ministry of Manpower will oversee the National Child Labor Monitoring System at the ministerial and governorate level and improve access to education, particularly for young girls.(1) The system will track the beneficiaries of the project and also support the implementation of the national child protection mechanism as envisioned by the Child Law.(43)
Combating Worst Forms of Child Labor by Reinforcing Policy Response and Promoting Sustainable Livelihoods and Educational Opportunities in Egypt (2011–2015)	$2.07 million, WFP-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO-IPEC that provided direct educational services and promoted sustainable livelihoods to targeted households. Supported the review and revision of legislation on child labor. Promoted the capacity of national institutions to combat child labor and conducted research to collect reliable data on child labor through baseline surveys.(44, 45)
Shelters for Street Children†	NCCM program that, in cooperation with NGOs, operates shelters and provides support services to street children. A center for male street children is operated by a Belgian NGO and the NCCM.(38)
Child Rights Program (2013–2017)	UNICEF program, in cooperation with the Government, that aims to improve the quality and coverage of child protection services and programs to prevent violence against children.(46)
Awareness-Raising Campaigns†	NCCM program that generates awareness of human trafficking and victim services among students and educators, the public, NGOs, and government officials.(37)
Care Centers and Shelters for Victims of Trafficking†	Three facilities providing assistance and services to Egyptian and foreign victims of human trafficking.(37)
National School Feeding Program†	Improves food security by reaching 5.3 million school children with a budget of $60 million per year.(47)
Solidarity and Dignity Initiative of the Cash Transfer Program (2015–2017)*†	Provides a monthly income supplement to poor families, conditional on keeping their children at school, or unconditional for the elderly and family members with disabilities. The Initiative aims to reach 1.5 million households by 2017.(48)
Action to Protect and Assist Vulnerable and Exploited Migrant Workers (2013–2016)	$1.8 million, EU- and Italian Ministry of Interior-funded, 2-year regional project implemented by the IOM in five countries to build the capacity of governments and civil society organizations to apply international standards to migrant workers, provide assistance to migrant workers, raise awareness among the workers of their rights, and reduce bias and discrimination in the general public against migrant workers.(49, 50) The project pursues the objective of elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Egypt. It provides victim identification training to civil society organizations and supports drafting policies to protect vulnerable groups in Egypt.(49) It also raises awareness among migrant workers about regulations in the informal sector.(49)
Positive Life Alternatives for Egyptian Youth at-Risk of Irregular Migration Program (2015–2017)*	$3.2 million, USAID-funded, 2-year project implemented by the IOM supports activities that include the goal of eliminating the worst forms of child labor, specifically through raising awareness among children and youth on the dangers of irregular migration, trafficking in persons, and building technical capacity of service providers to at-risk children.(43, 51)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Egypt.

The president announced the allocation of $14 million to address the growing number of street-based children who are vulnerable to forced labor and human trafficking.⁽¹⁹⁾ Research found no additional details about the scope or timeline for this program. Although Egypt has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Egypt (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law clearly criminally prohibits the procuring of children for pornography and pornographic performances under all circumstances, as well as benefiting from a monetary transaction involving a child in pornographic performances.	2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on the labor inspectorate funding; the number of child labor inspectors, their training, and whether they can assess penalties; the number of inspections, including number of worksite inspections and desk reviews; the number of violations found, penalties imposed, and penalties imposed that were collected; whether routine and targeted inspections were conducted, and whether unannounced inspections were permitted and conducted.	2011 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the training of criminal investigators, the numbers of investigations, violations found, and prosecutions.	2011 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure coordination of the Government's efforts to investigate, prosecute, and provide services to children engaged in child labor, for example, through the reactivation of the Child Protection Committees.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure universal access to free public education, including for girls and Syrian refugee children, by addressing the cost of school fees, supplies, overcrowding, and other barriers to education.	2010 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. El Salvador

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, El Salvador made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government's National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA) issued a National Action Plan for 2014–2017 to implement the National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents, which aims in part to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. CONNA also increased its technical assistance in developing the Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights, pursuant to the Law for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents. The Salvadoran Ministries of Labor and Public Works signed agreements with the Sugar Association of El Salvador and the Salvadoran Chamber of Construction Companies, respectively, to reduce child labor in the sugar and construction sectors. However, children in El Salvador are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of sugarcane and in illicit activities sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Law enforcement agencies continue to lack sufficient resources to enforce child labor laws, and no penalties for child labor violations were issued in 2015.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in El Salvador are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of sugarcane and in illicit activities sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in El Salvador.

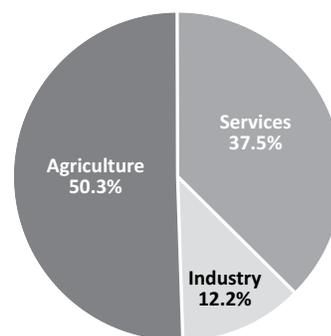

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent

	Forced begging and forced domestic work (2, 5, 6, 10)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2015, El Salvador, like Honduras and Guatemala, continued to be a principal source of the high numbers of unaccompanied children from Central America who were found migrating to the United States.(20-22) These children often lack economic and educational opportunities and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and the recruitment by gangs into illicit activities, such as committing homicides and trafficking drugs.(23-25) Children often emigrate to escape violence, extortion, and forced recruitment by gangs, in addition to seeking economic opportunities and family reunification. Once en route, they become vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(23-25)

Child labor in El Salvador is predominantly male, with boys comprising approximately three-fourths of child laborers ages 5 to 17.(26-28) However, girls comprise the majority of children engaged in domestic service in third-party homes.(2, 16) Victims of forced domestic service include migrant children from Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua.(29) The Government has reported that approximately 50 percent of sex trafficking victims in El Salvador are girls ages 13 to 18.(30) There are reports that children are recruited into gang activity or are threatened by gangs while at school, including through extortion, which may cause children to stop attending school.(18, 31-34)

The Government regularly collects statistics on children’s work through its annual Multipurpose Household Survey.(8) However, the Government does not appear to conduct research on hard-to-reach populations who are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in illicit activities. Multiple reports, including by a third-party monitoring group, indicate that the use of child labor in the sugarcane harvest has declined since 2010.(9, 35, 36)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

El Salvador has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 5, 18, 20 and 22 of the General Education Law; Article 82 of LEPINA; Article 56 of the Constitution (37, 39, 44)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (39, 44)

In January 2015, the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons, which was passed by the Legislative Assembly in October 2014, went into effect. This law replaced previous legislation and increased prison sentences for convicted human traffickers from a minimum of 4 years and a maximum of 8 years to 10 and 14 years, respectively.(41, 45) When the trafficking victim is a child or adolescent, these penalties are increased to 16 to 20 years, and when the convicted trafficker is the head of a gang or organized criminal group, the penalties are increased to 20 to 25 years.(41) The law also treats forced labor and the use of children in illicit activities as trafficking in persons crimes, and expands mandated assistance to survivors of trafficking.(30, 41, 45)

Article 627 of the Labor Code specifies a default fine of no more than $60 per violation of all labor laws, including child labor laws.(38) The Government is currently reviewing national legislation to ensure that monetary penalties for all labor violations are proportionate to the nature and seriousness of the offense.(46, 47)

The Law for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents (LEPINA) states that initial, basic, and secondary education are compulsory but does not specify ages for this schooling.(39) The General Education Law states that initial education typically begins at age 4 and comprises 3 years; basic education begins at age 7 and comprises 9 years; and secondary education comprises an additional 2 years, making education compulsory to age 18.(44)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS)	Enforce regulations on child labor, including hazardous child labor. Inspect registered businesses for all types of labor violations, including child labor.(10, 15) Maintain a special child labor unit that trains inspectors and businesses on child labor law.(48) Refer cases of possible crimes committed against children to the Office of the Attorney General.(10)

Organization/Agency	Role
Office of the Attorney General (AG)	Enforce criminal law related to the worst forms of child labor. Maintain the AG's Special Unit on Trafficking in Persons and Related Crimes, made permanent by Article 11 of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons, that consists of prosecutors who investigate human trafficking and related crimes.(6, 10, 41) Refer exploited children to the Salvadoran Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Adolescents (ISNA) for social services and shelter.(10)
National Civilian Police (PNC)	Enforce criminal laws regarding the worst forms of child labor. Maintain the PNC's Special Unit on Trafficking in Persons and Related Crimes, made permanent by Article 12 of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons, that investigates cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, including child trafficking.(10, 15, 41) Maintain an emergency hotline that receives complaints about commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(49)
Salvadoran Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Adolescents (ISNA)	Receive referrals from law enforcement agencies on cases of criminal exploitation of children, including forced labor, human trafficking, and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Provide child victims with services, including shelter; medical attention; psychological help; and legal advice.(50)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in El Salvador took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2015, the Inspection Department of the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS) reported that its level of funding was insufficient to enforce labor laws.(6) During the reporting period, the MTPS employed 186 labor inspectors, which is a significant increase from the 114 inspectors employed in 2014.(3, 6) Despite this increase, the Government reported that the current number of inspectors is inadequate to inspect for labor violations nationwide.(6)

In October 2015, the MTPS, with support from the Spanish International Development Agency, created the School of Labor Inspection Trainings. The school trained MTPS officials on the prevention of risks in the workplace as well as on the detection of forced labor and trafficking in persons.(6) During the reporting period, the MTPS, in conjunction with the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA), trained 2,473 public officials, including judges, police, and public defenders, on their roles in enforcing the 2014 Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons.(6)

El Salvador

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, the MTPS conducted 27,241 labor inspections; of these, 1,477 were child labor-specific inspections.(47, 51) Research did not find information on the sectors or geographical regions in which these inspections were conducted. As a result of the inspections, the MTPS found 11 children under the minimum age of 14 engaged in work without prior authorization.(6) Research did not find information on the activities in which these children were engaged. The MTPS did not report issuing any penalties or collecting any fines for these child labor violations in 2015.(6)

Reports indicate that the inspection process, which may include complaint driven and unannounced inspections, can entail multiple visits per site and that the MTPS's process to issue penalties can sometimes take up to 6 months. The Government reports that the Labor Committee of the Legislative Assembly is drafting an updated Labor Procedures Code, which will include provisions to streamline the issuance of penalties.(47)

In El Salvador, children removed from child labor are referred to the Salvadoran Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Adolescents (ISNA) for services. Research could not determine whether the MTPS referred the 11 children it found in child labor to ISNA for services. In 2015, ISNA reported assisting a total of 62 children that were engaged in child labor, including its worst forms.(6)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in El Salvador took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

In 2015, the Government reported that the National Civilian Police's (PNC) Special Unit on Trafficking in Persons and Related Crimes comprised 30 officials, including 25 investigators, and the Attorney General's (AG) Special Unit on Trafficking in Persons and Related Crimes comprised 21 officials, including 12 prosecutors.(6) Both units are mandated by the 2014 Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons.(41)

During the reporting period, the AG provided training to all prosecutors in its Special Unit on Trafficking in Persons and Related Crimes on the 2014 Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons. The training was conducted in collaboration with the IOM.(6)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in El Salvador have reported that they lack sufficient resources to adequately investigate and prosecute crimes, including the worst forms of child labor.(3) Although the Government has funded and begun implementing the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons, which expands and strengthens law enforcement agencies, reports indicate that increased coordination between the PNC and the AG is needed to improve the investigation and prosecution of criminal cases involving the worst forms of child labor.(47) In addition, reports indicate that coordination between criminal law enforcement agencies and social service agencies also needs improvement.(30)

In El Salvador, children removed from the worst forms of child labor are referred to ISNA for services.(6) Reports indicate that ISNA also assists children engaged in the worst forms of child labor without referrals. Of the 62 children engaged in child labor ISNA assisted, 27 were engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, 11 were engaged in illicit activities, and 10 were engaged in forced begging.(6) Research could not determine whether these cases were referred to law enforcement agencies for investigation and prosecution.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (CNETI)	Determine and implement government efforts to combat child labor, including the Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms. Chaired by the MTSP and includes 12 government agencies, along with representatives from labor unions, business associations, and NGOs.(2, 15, 53) Use a Web-based monitoring system that allows government agencies to share and analyze information on their agencies to coordinate the implementation of the Roadmap.(54-56) In 2015, convened to draft an action plan for implementing the Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor for the period 2016–2017.(47)
National Council Against Trafficking in Persons (CNCTP)	Coordinate government efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including by implementing the National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons.(57) Headed by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security, and composed of 11 government ministries and law enforcement agencies. Made permanent by the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons, and administered by an Executive Secretariat and a Technical Committee.(1, 30, 41)
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA)	Develop policies to protect the rights of children, including child labor policies, and implement the LEPINA and the National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (PNPNA).(39, 58, 59) Composed of Departmental and Local Committees for Children’s and Adolescents’ Rights, ISNA, the Ministry of Public Security and Justice, the AG, the Human Rights Ombudsman, and other agencies.(15) Maintain a Public Registry of civil associations that monitor and advocate for the rights of children and adolescents.(60) In 2015, issued a National Action Plan to implement the PNPNA for the period 2014–2017.(61) Also during the reporting period, continued to provide technical assistance in developing the Departmental and Local Committees for Children’s and Adolescents’ Rights, as mandated by the LEPINA. As of April 2015, Local Committees had been created in 20 municipalities to help develop local plans and policies for the defense and promotion of children’s rights.(62, 63)
Departmental and Local Committees for Children’s and Adolescents’ Rights	Implement CONNA’s policies, including the PNPNA, at the departmental and municipal levels, as well as receive complaints of child rights violations at the departmental level. Composed of local elected officials, government specialists in public health and education, and members of civil society.(39, 62-64)

Reports indicate that the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA) lacks sufficient resources to implement all of its mandates established by the LEPINA. As a result, it cannot fully implement the interagency coordination mechanisms it has developed to combat child labor and protect children’s rights.(15, 65)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of El Salvador has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms	Serves as the Government’s main policy framework to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015, and all child labor by 2020, by reducing poverty, improving education and health, protecting children’s rights, raising awareness, and generating knowledge.(1, 66)
National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (PNPNA) (2013–2023)	Sets government policies aimed at guaranteeing children’s rights and protecting them from violence and harm, including the worst forms of child labor. Other objectives include improving health services for children, improving access to quality education, improving services for children with disabilities, and reducing poverty among children, among others.(59)
National Action Plan for the PNPNA (2014-2017)†	Sets a framework for the implementation of the PNPNA for the period 2014-2017. By focusing on children’s and adolescents’ rights, gender equality, and social inclusion, aims to address PNPNA objectives including the prevention of violence, the promotion of access to quality education, and the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms.(61, 67)
National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons	Defines a comprehensive plan to combat human trafficking of both adults and children, including commercial sexual exploitation, labor exploitation, begging, pornography, and sex tourism. Aims to improve prevention efforts, victim assistance, prosecution, interagency coordination, training, and anti-corruption efforts.(1, 68, 69)

El Salvador

Policy	Description
Inclusive Education Policy	Defines actions that the Ministry of Education (MINED) should implement to improve education for marginalized and excluded groups, including child laborers.(1, 70)
National Youth Policy (2010–2024)*	Outlines the Government’s strategy to provide integrated services to socially excluded youth. Includes the goal of providing vocational training and creating 50,000 temporary jobs for youth.(71)
Cooperative Agreement for the Elimination of Child Labor in the Sugarcane Sector†	Aims to increase cooperation between the MTPS and the Sugar Association of El Salvador in efforts to eliminate child labor in the sugarcane sector. Objectives include increasing labor inspections in the production of sugarcane and child labor awareness-raising programs, each with technical and financial support from ILO-IPEC. Signed in 2012 and renewed in June 2015. (72, 73)
Cooperative Agreement for the Elimination of Child Labor in the Construction Sector†	Aims to reduce child labor in the construction sector through the exchange of strategies for the prevention and elimination of child labor among relevant businesses, labor unions, and government agencies.(74) Participating agencies include the Ministry of Public Works, which commits to review El Salvador’s public procurement policies and legislation to ensure that companies that contract with the Government prohibit the hiring of minors. Signed by the ILO, the Government, and the Salvadoran Chamber of Construction Companies.(74)
Alliance for Prosperity in the Northern Triangle	Aims to create economic growth, increase educational and vocational training opportunities for youth, and reduce violence in Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador, in part to reduce the number of unaccompanied minors who leave El Salvador and other Central American countries for the United States and who are vulnerable to human trafficking. Signed by the presidents of each country in 2014.(75-77)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories’ efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by El Salvador at the ILO’s 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(78-80)
Memorandum of Understanding between El Salvador and Colombia on Preventing and Investigating Trafficking in Persons and Assisting Victims	Establishes joint actions between Salvadoran and Colombian government agencies to improve their coordination in preventing and investigating human trafficking cases and protecting victims. Signed in 2013.(81)
Central American Regional Coalition to Combat Human Trafficking	Aims to improve government and civil society efforts to combat human trafficking in Central America. Includes the participation of civil society organizations and the national police and public prosecutors’ offices in Central America.(82-84) Includes a Memorandum of Understanding between El Salvador and Guatemala on Protecting Trafficking Victims and the Illicit Trafficking of Migrants, which establishes actions for the Governments of Guatemala and El Salvador to improve the protection of trafficking victims and reduce the trafficking of migrants along the Guatemala-El Salvador border. Includes a focus on improving services for children.(82-84)
Partnership for Growth: Joint Country Action Plan between El Salvador and the United States (2011–2015)	Aims to promote broad-based economic growth in El Salvador, with a focus on human capital development and crime prevention, including the provision of assistance to at-risk youth.(85, 86)
XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor†	Promotes decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancún, Mexico, participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancún 2015 which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(87, 88) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(87, 89)
Declaration of the Vice-Ministers of the XX Regional Conference on Migration†	Aims to strengthen regional cooperation in order to protect the human rights of migrants, especially youth and children, in countries of origin, transit, and destination, including by increasing opportunities for education and employment. Adopted by El Salvador at the XX Regional Conference on Migration in Mexico City (November, 2015).(90-92)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of El Salvador funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project to Combat Child Labor in El Salvador	$14 million USDOL-funded, 5-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor, including by strengthening national and municipal government capacity to address child labor.(93, 94) As of October 2015, project has provided educational or vocational services to 13,054 children engaged in or at high risk of entering child labor, and livelihood services to 5,100 families of child laborers or children at high risk of entering child labor.(95) In 2015, project assisted MTPS in developing a new operational plan for 2015 to 2017 outlining specific steps government agencies may take to implement the Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms. In addition, project worked with the Ministry of Finance to begin developing regulations that require the prohibition of child labor in public procurement processes.(95)
Youth Pathways Central America (2015 – 2019) (Senderos Juveniles)*	$13 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Catholic Relief Services to prevent at-risk youth, including returned migrant youth, in El Salvador and Honduras from engaging in hazardous work by providing them with vocational training, skills programs, employment services, and other holistic support services. Works with the Governments, private sector stakeholders, and community organizations to improve job training models for at-risk youth, increase the number of job opportunities accessible to at-risk youth, and support self-employment opportunities for youth.(96)
Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including El Salvador, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(97)
“Don’t Put Your Lives at Risk” Public Awareness Campaign (No pongas en riesgo sus vidas)†	CONNA campaign that sensitizes children and their families to the dangers of irregular and unaccompanied migration, including the risks of being trafficked and forced to engage in commercial sexual exploitation. Supported by UNICEF and IOM.(47, 98)
Public Awareness Campaigns on Child Labor†	Government public-awareness campaigns implemented by MINED, the Ministry of Health, CONNA, and others to inform children about the dangers of child labor, including manufacturing and handling fireworks.(99, 100) In 2015, MINED implemented awareness efforts in 74 school districts with high levels of child labor.(3, 47)
First I Learn (Primero Aprendo en Centroamérica)	MTPS project implemented with the Ministries of Labor from Nicaragua and Guatemala that assisted 1,000 children at risk of commercial sexual exploitation in the three countries. Provided training to businesses in the tourism sector on commercial sexual exploitation and developed a manual for workers on the prevention and eradication of child labor.(3)
Strengthening Regional and National Authorities in TIP Prevention and Victims Care Campaign	Directorate of Migration and Foreigners program implemented by Save the Children to raise public awareness of methods used by human traffickers. Focused primarily on helping women and girls detect traffickers’ schemes.(52)
Solidarity Communities Programs (Comunidades Solidarias)†	Government programs implemented in the poorest municipalities to reduce social exclusion and boost household income by increasing access to public services and building human capital. Includes Health and Education Bonus Programs that assist more than 100,000 families with cash transfers conditioned on children’s school attendance and regular health checkups.(1, 101, 102) Includes the Temporary Income Support Program (PATI) that provides financial support and vocational training to beneficiaries ages 16 and older and female heads of household who face poverty. PATI is financed with support from the World Bank.(1, 101, 102)
School Meal and School Supply Program†	MINED programs that provide low-income children with school meals and school supplies, including uniforms, to encourage school attendance.(103-105) In 2015, continued to assist 1.4 million students with school meals.(6, 106)
Inclusive Full-Time School Program (Escuela Inclusiva de Tiempo Pleno)†	MINED program that provides extracurricular programs in schools, such as art and entrepreneurship classes, to extend the school day and prevent children from becoming involved in harmful activities. Funded by the World Bank, USAID, the Millennium Challenge Corporation, and others, with the Government providing $10.2 million.(3, 107, 108) In 2015, program operated in 1,620 schools in 100 municipalities across the country, including with technical support from World Vision.(3, 109, 110)
School Prevention and Security Plant	Programs implemented by MINED, the Ministry of Justice and Public Security, and the PNC in schools with high levels of violence. Includes activities such as providing psychological help, skills workshops for youth, crisis intervention, and increased police patrols.(105, 111) Expanded in 2015-2016 to operate in approximately 1,000 schools.(112)

A main objective of the project is to develop information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(113)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011 – 2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including El Salvador.(113)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of El Salvador.

The Government implements several programs to reduce the worst forms of child labor by assisting poor families and school children; however, research found no evidence that the Government has programs that assist child laborers who may not be living with their families or attending school, such as children engaged in domestic service. In addition, although government programs have expanded basic education coverage, gang violence, including the extortion of school children, has hindered efforts to increase school enrollment and decrease dropout rates.(34, 112, 114, 115)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in El Salvador (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that monetary penalties for child labor violations are proportionate to the nature and seriousness of the offence.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Provide sufficient funding and resources to the MTPS and criminal law enforcement agencies to fully enforce child labor laws.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that the number of labor inspectors is sufficient to fully enforce child labor laws.	2014 – 2015
	Make publicly available information on whether unannounced or targeted inspections are conducted, including the sectors and geographical regions in which inspections are conducted, and on the activities in which children are engaged as a result of inspections.	2014 – 2015
	Strengthen enforcement of child labor and other laws by streamlining the labor inspection process and the issuance of fines.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that citations are issued, penalties are imposed, and fines are collected for child labor violations.	2015
	Ensure that law enforcement agencies and the ISNA refer child labor cases to one another for social services and prosecution, respectively.	2015
	Publicly report on the number of criminal violations and prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Improve coordination between the PNC and the AG in their investigation and prosecution of criminal cases, as well as their referral of cases to social service providers.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Provide sufficient funding to CONNA to fully implement the LEPINA.	2012 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Youth Policy for 2010–2024.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct a study on the use of children in illicit activities.	2009 – 2015
	Improve children's access to education by ensuring that school children are safe in schools.	2011 – 2015
	Implement programs to address child labor in domestic service.	2014 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. Eritrea

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2015, Eritrea made efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, but was also complicit in the use of forced child labor. While the Government drafted legislation that contains prohibitions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, Eritrea is receiving an assessment of no advancement due to its continued requirement that children participate in a national program called Maetot, under which children in grades 9 to 11 engage in compulsory labor in agricultural, environmental, or hygiene-related public works projects. In addition, although the law prohibits the recruitment of children under age 18 into the armed forces, there may be children enrolled in the Government's compulsory military training program. Children in Eritrea are also engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and street work. The Government does not make law enforcement data publicly available. National laws and regulations also only identify a limited number of hazardous activities prohibited for children, and there is a lack of specific penalties for those who employ children who are under the minimum age for work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Eritrea are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and street work. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Eritrea. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		36.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including the production of corn,* wheat,* sorghum,* and other grains* (1-3, 7)
	Herding livestock* (1, 3)
Industry	Small-scale manufacturing* (1, 7, 8)
	Mining* (2, 9)
Services	Domestic work (1, 3, 7)
	Working in garages, bicycle repair shops, tea and coffee shops, and metal workshops (1, 3, 7)
	Street work, including selling cigarettes, newspapers, and chewing gum; cleaning cars; begging; and transporting goods on donkey carts or tricycles* (1, 3, 4, 7)
	Gathering firewood and hauling water* (1, 3)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 8, 10, 11)
	Compulsory participation in Active National Service or the Popular Army prior to the age of 18 for military training, and agricultural and domestic work (3, 11-15)
	Forced labor, including in agriculture, environmental protection, and begging* (1, 3, 9, 11, 12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some Eritrean girls who travel to Saudi Arabia or Gulf states for domestic work are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation upon arrival.(10) A smaller number of girls are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation in South Sudan, Sudan, and Israel.(11)

The Ministry of Education operates a national program, Maetot, under which children in grades 9 to 11 are required to engage in compulsory labor in public works projects in agriculture and environmental protection during their summer holidays, in some cases for as long as 2 months.(3, 11, 16-18) Adolescents may be required to dig irrigation ditches or canals, maintain agricultural terracing, or produce and maintain school furniture.(1, 3, 15) Government declarations indicate that the purpose of Maetot is to instill a proper work ethic in adolescents and to expose them to people of other ethnic backgrounds, with the aim of fostering their appreciation for diverse cultures and strengthening national unity through cooperation and self-reliance.(17)

The Proclamation on National Service No. 82/1995 establishes compulsory military training and service, known as Active National Service, for all citizens ages 18 to 40.(19) To graduate from high school and meet the compulsory training component of National Service, students are required to complete their final year of schooling (grade 12) at the Sawa Education and Military Training Camp in remote western Eritrea; these students have typically reached age 18, but some are reportedly younger.(3, 11, 12, 14, 19) Limited evidence suggests military training includes military discipline and procedures, weapons training, and a 2- to 4-week war simulation.(14) Research found that some students are forced to conduct agricultural activities on government-owned farms, in addition to their military training, and girls may be subject to forced domestic work in military training centers.(15) For some attending Sawa, National Service may consist of 6 months of military training, followed by employment in a government work unit for 12 months. However, for others, the Government often fails to abide by the Proclamation’s 18-month limit on Active National Service.(20) Eritreans may be compelled to remain in the military indefinitely, or they may be assigned to work units not of their choosing.(20)

The uncertain length of service, lack of hope of ever being demobilized, inability to earn higher wages in the private sector, and notoriously harsh working conditions in the National Service provoked a significant number of youth, including unaccompanied minors, to flee Eritrea and may have also encouraged many to resort to the use of international smuggling or human trafficking networks.(12, 14, 18, 20, 21) Adolescent children who attempted to leave Eritrea were sometimes detained or forced to undergo military training, despite being younger than the minimum age of 18 for compulsory military recruitment.(11, 14)

National Service places an economic burden on children as their parents and older siblings are either already conscripted and paid meager wages, or have fled the country to avoid indefinite conscription. Many children drop out of school to work and financially support their families before they are conscripted.(14) Additional barriers that children face in accessing education are a shortage of schools; the inability to afford uniforms, supplies, and transportation; and a lack of birth registration, which is required to attend school.(3, 22)

Research did not find information on whether the Government made an effort to collect or publish data on the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Eritrea has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Eritrea

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 68 of the Labour Proclamation (23)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 565 and 605 of the Penal Code (24)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 605 of the Penal Code (24)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 594, 595, 604, 605, and 609 of the Penal Code (24)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 510 of the Penal Code (24)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 8 of the Proclamation on National Service (19)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	No

In May 2015, the Government announced that it was considering the establishment of a new Criminal Code that contains prohibitions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. However, the Code has not yet been proclaimed. Laws regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children are insufficient as the procurement and offering of a child for prostitution, the production of pornography, and the use of children for pornographic purposes are not criminally prohibited.(12, 18)

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working outside formal employment relationships, such as those who are self-employed.(23, 25)

The Labour Proclamation of Eritrea No. 118/2001 does not require employers to keep a register containing the name, age, or date of birth of their employees, nor does it prescribe specific penalties for employers of children in hazardous work or employers of children under the minimum age for work.(23, 26)

A child may become an apprentice at age 14 and is not prohibited from engaging in hazardous work in supervised vocational training programs.(23, 26, 27)

Article 69 of the Labour Proclamation authorizes the Minister to issue a list of activities prohibited to children under age 18; however, the Government of Eritrea has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.(23, 28)

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Laws related to the use of children in illicit activities are not sufficient because offering and procuring a child for the production and trafficking of drugs are not criminally prohibited.(24)

Minimum age for voluntary military service is not applicable to Eritrea because all citizens ages 18 to 40 have the compulsory duty of performing Active National Service under the Proclamation on National Service No. 82/1995.(19)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Welfare	Enforce child labor laws and monitor children working in hazardous conditions, particularly in urban areas.(18, 29)
Popular Army	Perform night patrols and refer cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children or other exploitative practices to the Eritrean Police.(1, 30)
Eritrean Defense Forces	Refer cases of the worst forms of child labor to the Eritrean Police or the Ministry of Labor.(1, 30)
Eritrean Police	Enforce laws and investigate referred cases of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(1, 30)
National Security Administration	Work with the Eritrean police to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(10)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Eritrea took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Eritrea has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Comprehensive Child Policies	Aims to prevent and eliminate child labor in Eritrea. Prepared in collaboration with UNICEF, the policies align with the UN Strategic Partnership Cooperation Framework.(30)
UN Strategic Partnership Cooperation Framework (2013–2016)	Aims to enhance the well-being of Eritreans through equitable access to quality basic education and strengthened protection of vulnerable children from exploitation.(31)
National Policy on Education*	Establishes 8 years of compulsory, free education for all citizens.(28, 32)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Research did not reveal the extent to which the Comprehensive Child Policies were implemented, or what their impact has been on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. The Government’s compulsory military training requirement for Active National Service for students in grade 12 may diminish the impact of Eritrea’s policies to combat the worst forms of child labor on all those wishing to obtain high school diplomas. In addition, the Government’s continued use of compulsory labor through the Maetot program may also diminish these efforts.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Eritrea participated in one program that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
UNICEF Country Program (2013–2016)	UNICEF program, in collaboration with the Government, that aims to build on previous progress in complementary and nomadic education, and to assist the Government in enhancing the quality of basic education.(22) UNICEF also works with the Ministry of Labor to provide social integration and counseling services to approximately 3,500 street children.(33)

Although the Government of Eritrea participates in a program that targets street children, the scope of this program is insufficient to fully address the extent of children in street work. Furthermore, research found no evidence of programs that target children working in agriculture and domestic work and that specifically address the worst forms of child labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Eritrea (Table 10).

Table 10. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify ILO C. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.	2013 – 2015
	Establish a minimum age for hazardous work and determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2015
	Ensure that all children are protected by minimum age laws, including those who are self-employed.	2015
	Amend the Labor Proclamation to require employers to keep a register containing the name and age or date of birth of their employees, and provide penalties for employers of children in hazardous work and employers of children under the legal minimum age.	2010 – 2015
	Prohibit children in supervised vocational training programs from engaging in hazardous work, in line with international conventions.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that procuring and offering a child for prostitution, the production of pornography, and for pornographic performances are criminally prohibited.	2015
	Ensure that procuring and offering a child for the production and trafficking of drugs are criminally prohibited.	2015
Enforcement	Collect data on labor and criminal law enforcement and make the data publicly available.	2009 – 2015
Coordination	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Policy on Education.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the Comprehensive Child Policies are implemented and assess their impact on eliminating the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that children under age 18 are not recruited into Active National Service.	2009 – 2015
	Cease requiring children to perform compulsory labor under the Maetot program during the school break.	2009 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure all children have access to education by building more schools, removing financial barriers, and increasing birth registration.	2010 – 2015
	Conduct research on child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of children in street work. Institute programs to address child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work and the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Ethiopia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Ethiopia adopted the Proclamation to Provide for the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants, which criminalizes all forms of human trafficking and contains provisions to prevent child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor, including separate penalties for child trafficking. The Government also made a number of efforts to improve labor law enforcement and participated in and implemented several programs, including the renewal of the Productive Safety Net Program, which includes the goal of eliminating the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Ethiopia continue to engage in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in domestic work and textile weaving. The law in Ethiopia does not include free basic education or compulsory age for education, which leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Social programs to combat child labor have not sufficiently targeted sectors with high incidences of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ethiopia are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in domestic work and textile weaving.(1-3) Data from the Government's 2011 Demographic and Health Surveys show that 27 percent of children age 5-17 in Ethiopia are involved in child labor. In addition, Demographic and Health Surveys data indicate child labor is more common among males and in rural areas.(4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ethiopia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	22.0 (5,545,319)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	54.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	17.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		47.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Surveys, 2011.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting and harvesting apples,* coffee,* cotton,* bananas,* and sugarcane,* (7-15)
	Herding cattle (10, 11, 14, 16, 17)
	Fishing,*† activities unknown (10-12, 15, 18)
Industry	Mining† gold (9, 14)
	Quarrying*† (10, 18)
	Construction,† including carrying heavy loads and digging.(10-12, 14, 19, 20)
	Making pottery products* (10, 14)
	Traditional weaving of (hand-woven) textiles(10, 11, 14, 21)

Services	Domestic work† (1-3, 15, 19, 21, 22)
	Unpaid household services, including carrying heavy loads of water* and firewood* (10, 14, 15)
	Street work,† including as shoe shiners, assistants to taxi drivers,* vendors, porters,* and beggars (1, 10-12, 17, 22, 23)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 17, 22, 24)
	Forced labor in domestic work, herding,* street vending,* and traditional weaving of hand-woven textiles, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 10, 25-27)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Ethiopia, children work in the traditional weaving industry in Addis Ababa and in the Gamo Gofa and Wolaita Zones.(20) Sources indicate that children are trafficked from rural areas to Addis Ababa and to other regions of the country for forced labor in the weaving industry.(3, 10) The Confederation of Ethiopian Trade Unions reports an increase in child labor in the construction industry in recent years.(14, 19) During the reporting period, the Government of Ethiopia conducted a nationwide Child Labor Report.(20)

Although the Government has improved access to education, the lack of adequate schools and trained teachers in rural areas increases children’s risk of entering the workforce at a young age. In addition, the cost of school supplies keeps some children from attending school.(14, 28-30) In 2015 droughts and floods also hindered children’s access to education in Afar; Amhara; Benishangul-Gumuz; Dire Dawa; Gambella; Harar; Oromia; Somali Region; Southern Nations, Nationalities, Peoples Region (SNNPR); and Tigray.(31-33) In SNNPR, sexual abuse and harassment of girls in schools is an additional barrier to education.(29) Although the Vital Events Registration Proclamation requires the registration of all births, many children in Ethiopia are not registered. Unable to prove their citizenship, unregistered children may have difficulty accessing services such as education.(21, 34-36) In addition, the rollout of the Vital Events Registration Proclamation continues to be delayed by the absence of uniform national identification cards.(3, 36)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ethiopia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

‡ Age calculated based on available information (37)

In July 2015, the Government issued the Proclamation to Provide for the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants, which criminalizes all forms of human trafficking, including the trafficking of children. The law prescribes penalties of up to life imprisonment and a fine of up to approximately $20,000 against those convicted of trafficking children, which is a punishment commensurate with the penalties prescribed for other serious crimes, such as rape.(42, 45, 46) The law also provides for legal protection and social assistance to victims of human trafficking. Under the law, children identified as victims of human trafficking are to receive specialized assistance that addresses the particular needs of minors, including family reintegration service.(42, 45, 46)

In February 2015, two local bylaws were enacted in Ethiopia. The SNNPR enacted Regulation No. 2/2007 for the Prevention and Control of Child Trafficking and Labour Exploitation in Gamo Gofa Zone.(43) The law prohibits child trafficking and calls for the establishment of task forces and a fund to assist with rescuing children as well as preventing and controlling child exploitation and human trafficking.(43) Regulation No. 3/2007 for the Prevention and Control of Abusive and Vulnerability Situations Committed against Children of Wolaita Zone prohibits family members from engaging their children in forced labor and hazardous work, and calls for the establishment of task forces and a fund to support vulnerable and abused children.(44)

Despite the establishment of these laws, Ethiopian laws related to child labor are not completely in compliance with international standards. Article 89(5) of the Labour Proclamation allows children ages 14 to 16 to engage in certain forms of hazardous work, if the work is performed following a government-approved vocational training course.(37, 47) The minimum age provisions of the law do not apply to children working outside of a contractual employment relationship.(30, 47, 48) In addition, the penalties for violating child labor laws, outlined in Article 185 of the Labour Proclamation, are low and do not generally deter violations.(37, 49)

In Ethiopia, there is no age up to which education is compulsory nor is there free basic education for children. Since children cannot access free basic education and are not legally required to attend school, they may be vulnerable to engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(19, 30, 47)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA)/Occupational Safety and Health Case Team (OSHCT)	Enforce occupational safety, health, and wage and hour protections, which include child labor laws. (14, 17, 49) Collect and analyze data and make policy recommendations on labor. Located in the MOLSA.(13, 49-51)
Regional Bureaus of Social and Labor Affairs (BOLSA) and City Administration	Conduct labor inspections at the zonal offices and at the regional and city levels.(49) Operate an occupational safety and health laboratory in Addis Ababa to identify workplace hazards.(35)
Ethiopian Federal Police Commission and the Ministry of Justice	Investigate and prosecute criminal violations of laws that protect against the worst forms of child labor.(9, 19) Provide trained child protection officers in regional police stations. Provide Child Protection Unit in 10 Addis Ababa sub-city police stations.(52)
Human Trafficking and Narcotics Section	Collaborate with the prosecutor's office to investigate human trafficking, prosecute offenders, and report and collect human trafficking data. Located in the Organized Crime Investigation Unit of the Federal Police.(3, 9, 19)
Ministry of Women, Children, and Youth Affairs (MOWYCA)	Develop and implement programs to protect vulnerable children and monitor alleged violations of child protection laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(2, 53)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Ethiopia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, labor inspectors received training on domestic and international laws pertaining to prohibited work for youth laborers and learned techniques to identify child laborers.(20) Insufficient resources and an inadequate number of staff prevent proper enforcement of child labor laws in Ethiopia.(49) Inspections are particularly lacking in the agricultural sector in rural areas, at construction sites in urban areas, and at sites of domestic work nationwide.(20).During the year, labor inspectors conducted 37 complaint-based inspections.(20) According to the ILO standard of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Ethiopia should employ roughly 812 inspectors to enforce labor laws adequately throughout the country.(20, 56-58)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Ethiopia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2015, trainings on the worst forms of child labor were reported to be sporadic and focused on human trafficking hotspots in major urban areas.(20) During the reporting period, the International Organization on Migration (IOM) collaborated with the Ministry of Justice and the Ethiopian Federal Police Commission to conduct trainings on Ethiopia's new human trafficking law and victim-centered investigation techniques for prosecutors and judges in Addis Ababa, Amhara, and Oromia. In addition, the IOM provided training for 140 police investigators from Amhara, Oromia, SNNPR, and Tigray.(20) The World Vision, Inc.'s Ethiopians Fighting Against Child Exploitation project, funded by the USDOL, conducted a 4-day training on ILO Conventions and national laws related to child labor and human trafficking for 40 judges from the regions of SNNPR, Amhara, Benishangul Gumuz, Gambela, Oromia, SNNPR, Somali, and Tigray, and the cities of Addis Ababa and Dire Dawa. The UNODC provided anti-trafficking in persons training to 70 Ethiopian judges and prosecutors.(20, 59)

During the reporting period, the Forum on Sustainable Child Empowerment worked closely with local police from different regions and Ministry of Justice officials to reunite 389 child trafficking victims with their families.(20) Sources also reported that police departments and district officials refer victims of the worst forms of child labor to NGO-run shelters and government-run orphanages.(25)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate activities on the worst forms of child labor. Members include MOLSA, the MOWYCA, and the Ministry of Education.(19) Research found no evidence that this committee convened during 2015.
MOLSA National Forum to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Combat the worst forms of child labor at the national level. Meet twice a year. Include participants from the Ethiopian Employers' Federation and Confederation of Ethiopian Trade Unions.(19) Continued consultations with the Confederation of Ethiopian Trade Unions during the reporting period.(60)
MOLSA child labor desk	Coordinate efforts between MOLSA and MOWYCA on child labor issues.(13, 35)
National Steering Committee against Sexual Exploitation of Women and Children	Develop action plans and coordinate activities against the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(28, 53) In 2015, the Committee opened a center at the Gandhi Hospital for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(60)
National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Address international exploitation, including the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister, with representatives from the Ministries of Justice, Foreign Affairs, MOLSA, MOWYCA, and Education and regional presidents. Meet twice a year.(42, 61) Convened seminars to help regions establish their own anti-human trafficking bodies and disseminate the new anti-trafficking proclamation during 2015.(62)
National Anti-Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants Task Force	Develop action plans quarterly and coordinate activities against trafficking in persons and migrant smuggling.(25, 42) Led by the Ministry of Justice, with representatives from the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, MOLSA, MOWYCA, Education, National Security and Intelligence Service, and Ethiopian Federal Police Commission. Include representation by deputy state ministers.(42)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Regional Technical Working Groups on Human Trafficking	Identify trends and areas that need public awareness campaigns on human trafficking. Meet weekly. Include officials from regional Federal ministries and agencies.(25, 52)
Child Protection Committees, Child Rights Clubs, and Orphans and Vulnerable Children Task Forces	Promote children's rights, provide children with food and school supplies, and train members on child labor issues, case management, international child labor standards, and Ethiopian child labor laws. Include children, police, health workers, and teachers.(3, 11, 13, 53)

Budgets for these committees remained limited during the reporting period and impacted their ability to operate and coordinate efforts to address child labor.(20)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Ethiopia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2013–2017)	Includes guidelines on child labor identification, withdrawal, reintegration, and educational policies. Available in Amharic. Overseen by the National Steering Committee on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(13, 35) In 2015, MOLSA and BOLSA staff attended multiple trainings on child labor inspections, monitoring systems and implementation of the National Action Plan.(63)
National Occupational Safety and Health Policy and Strategy	Seeks to abolish child labor and improve working conditions for youth, women, and disabled workers. Adopted in 2014 and led by the National Occupational Safety and Health Council.(54, 64)
Social Protection Policy	Aims to improve the quality of, and access to, basic education and health services, including child labor concerns. Adopted in 2014 and overseen by the Federal Social Protection Council.(65, 66) In 2015, enabled withdrawal of over 36,000 street children from exploitative situations.(53)
National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2015–2020)†	Examines legal and institutional frameworks and responses related to existing human trafficking. Aims to provide guiding principles based on international best practices for human anti-trafficking action and the institutional structures and inputs needed to effectively combat human trafficking.(67)
National Youth Policy	Addresses the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and illicit work. (68) Adopted in 2005 and overseen by the Ministry of Youth, Sports, and Culture.(65)
National Employment Policy and Strategy of Ethiopia	Describes the root causes of child labor in Ethiopia and lists interventions that may be used to combat child labor, including income-generating activities and awareness raising.(69)
UNDAF (2012–2015)	Promotes improved access to education and livelihood services for vulnerable children; seeks to protect children from abuse, violence, and exploitation; and seeks to withdraw children from child labor and rehabilitate them.(70)
National Human Rights Action Plan (2013–2015)	Aims to strengthen the implementation of human rights in Ethiopia, including by making efforts to eliminate exploitative child labor.(22, 71, 72)
Growth and Transformation Plan 2 (2015/16–2019/20)†	Aims to address youth unemployment by increasing access to livelihood programs and improving the quality of technical and vocational training programs to better align with the job market. Integrates strategies to strengthen and enforce child labor laws.(20, 53, 63, 73, 74)
Education Sector Development Program (2010–2015)*	Focuses on improving the quality of education and increasing access to educational opportunities through enhanced equity, equality, and relevance. Led by the Ministry of Education.(75, 76)
National Technical Vocational Education and Training Strategy*	Aims to increase employment opportunities for school dropouts and youth without formal education through technology and skills training. Adopted in 2008 and led by the Ministry of Education.(77, 78)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The National Youth Policy has no budget or detailed action plan related to the worst forms of child labor.(68)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Ethiopia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Ethiopians Fighting Against Child Exploitation (2011–2015)	USDOL-funded $10 million, 4-year project implemented by World Vision, Inc. to reduce the number of children ages 14 to 17 years who are engaged in or at-risk of child labor in the weaving, agricultural, and other sectors in 14 districts in Addis Ababa, Gamo Gofa, and Wolaita.(11) Provided vocational or educational services to 20,639 children engaged in or at-risk of child labor and 7,859 households with livelihood services.(59) Provided school supplies to 15,604 children enrolled in school and reintegrated 407 child trafficking victims with their families.(63) Collaborated with MOLSA to coordinate services and provide occupational safety and health training for labor inspectors.(11) With the Addis Ababa Bureau of Labor and Social Affairs, developed a voluntary code of conduct for business owners in the traditional weaving sector to use child safe certification and seal on products.(59) Supported zonal bylaws that address gaps in national laws to combat and prevent child labor and human trafficking in Gamo Gofa and Wolaita Zones.(43, 59)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor in Ethiopia.(79) In 2015, the program conducted a training of trainers on labor inspections and child labor monitoring systems.(80)
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (2013–2017)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Ethiopia, to increase the knowledge base for child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area. Aims to conduct a national child labor survey in Ethiopia.(81, 82) Trained over 500 participants on improved data collection techniques on child labor in 2015.(82)
Engaged, Educated, Empowered, Ethiopian Youth Project (2014–2018)	USDOL-funded $10 million, 4-year project implemented by World Vision, Inc. that targets 12,000 in-and out-of-school youth ages 14 to 17 who are engaged in, or at-risk of entering, exploitative child labor.(83) Assists 7,500 households of targeted youth to promote sustainable livelihoods and to increase access to education and decent work opportunities. Operates primarily in the Amhara and SNNPR Regions.(83) Provided educational services to 2,344 children in 2015.(73)
Child Labor Free Zones (2012–2015)	Stop Child Labor Partners-funded $600,000 program, in collaboration with the Forum on Sustainable Child Empowerment, to pilot child-labor-free zones in Adama and Addis Ababa.(84) Supported by child protection officers, labor inspectors, police officers, and other stakeholders on the prevention and withdrawal of child laborers. Since 2012, has withdrawn 1,853 children from exploitative labor situations.(84)
Child Labor Awareness Raising†	Under the MOLSA, raises awareness of child labor issues through a quarterly media forum on national television broadcasts, regional and local encouragement for community members to report child labor violations to authorities, and raising awareness of human trafficking from rural to urban areas.(63, 71)
Afar Region and Mille Town Emergency Migration Response Centers	Operates centers under the Ethiopian Federal Police Commission. In collaboration with the International Organization on Migration (IOM), assists human trafficking victims by providing shelter and transportation. In 2015, trained 31 government officials on identification, protection, and referrals of human trafficking victims. (3, 85)
Social Cash Transfer Program (2011–2017)	In partnership with UNICEF, provides vulnerable populations, including child laborers, with cash transfers in the Oromia and SNNPR regions and in two sections in the Tigray Region.(86, 87) Aims to improve school attendance and enrollment and to support children's health in targeted districts.(87)
Productive Safety Net Program Phase IV † (2014–2020)	$2616 million, 6-year project co-funded with the World Bank that includes several components, including cash and in-kind transfers to orphans and vulnerable children and households without able-bodied adults who can work reducing the amount of time children spend doing household work and increasing the amount of time children spend in school. As of 2015 assisted approximately 7.9 million beneficiaries, including 3.3 million children.(60, 87–90) Considered Africa's second largest social protection program.(87–90)
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2015)	A tripartite (Government, Workers and Employers) partners initiated program framework, designed to address country priorities identified by the constituents in collaboration with ILO Country Office funded by the Governments of the United Kingdom and the Netherlands. The framework is aimed at facilitating the delivery of ILO's support to the country toward ensuring sustainable poverty reduction through the integration of decent work priorities with the national development agenda as set out in the Growth and Transformation Plan (GTP, 2010/11–2014/15) and UNDAF. Includes targets to eliminate child labor, such as establishing child labor units at the city administration level. Guided by a National Steering Committee (NSC) comprised of key representatives from MoLSA, CETU (President), Employers Federation (President), the ILO CO (Director) and other relevant stakeholders. The NSC convenes a meeting quarterly to monitor and review implementation of the DWCP. (91)
General Education Quality Improvement Project II (2014–2018)	World Bank-funded $50 million project, with other donors, aims to improve learning conditions in Ethiopia through curriculum development, textbook assessment, teacher training, and school construction.(92)

Program	Description
Children on the Move Program (2015 – 2020)	Forum for Sustainable Child Empowerment program, $652,000 funded by the EU and Save the Children, aims to create a strong child protection network by creating referral systems and strengthening existing community organizations. Uses a multi-sectoral approach to raise awareness and build links among the local government, police officers, law and justice administrators, the transport industry, community-based organizations, the private sector, and mass media channels. Since 2012, has reunite 3,713 children with their parents or guardians; provided business skills training and seed funds to 1,566 older children who were unwilling to reunite with their families; and gave educational materials and learning support to 5,664 highly vulnerable children.(20)

† Program is funded by the Government of Ethiopia.

Although the Government participates in and implements several programs to combat child labor, these programs do not sufficiently target sectors with high incidences of child labor, such as agriculture and domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ethiopia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Raise the minimum age at which children may enter hazardous work following vocational training from 14 to 16, in line with ILO C. 138.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that all children are protected by child labor laws, including children working in non-contractual employment.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that penalties are high enough to deter child labor law violations.	2013 – 2015
	Establish by law free basic education and an age up to which education is compulsory that is consistent with the minimum age of employment.	2012 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that the OSHCT and BOLSA inspectors have adequate resources to conduct systematic inspections in all labor sectors.	2009 – 2015
	Increase the ratio of labor inspectors to workers according to the ILO benchmark standards.	2015
	Gather and publish information on the numbers of child labor law violations found, citations issued, and penalties applied; and whether unannounced inspections are conducted and permitted.	2009 – 2015
	Enforce the Labour Proclamation by authorizing the inspectorate to determine and assess penalties when child labor law violations are found.	2013 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the training of investigators, number of criminal investigations, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Institutionalize training for police investigators working to combat labor-related child trafficking investigations.	2015
	Ensure the established coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor have adequate funding to operate effectively.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Sector Development Program and the National Technical Vocational Education and Training Strategy.	2013 – 2015
	Include a budget and action plan on the worst forms of child labor for the National Youth Policy.	2009 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the types of activities carried out by children working in fishing to inform policies and programs.	2015
	Increase access to education by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Increasing school infrastructure, especially in rural areas ■ Eliminating school-related costs ■ Implementing programs that protect communities from droughts and floods ■ Addressing sexual abuse and harassment of girls in schools ■ Providing teacher training ■ Ensuring school administrators and teachers allow children without birth certificates to attend school 	2010 – 2015
	Develop social protection programs to prevent or withdraw children from agriculture and domestic work.	2009 – 2015

In 2015, Fiji made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Employment, Productivity, and Industrial Relations significantly increased the number of labor inspections conducted throughout the year. In addition, the Government was actively involved in the launch and implementation of the Tackling Child Labor Through Education Project, which aims to strengthen Government coordination, monitoring, and enforcement of policies and programs related to the eradication of child labor. During the year, the Government also opened a new rehabilitation center for children found begging on the street. However, children in Fiji are engaged in child labor, including in street work, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Fiji has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, or the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons. It is challenging for labor inspectors to inspect for child labor violations in remote areas of the country, and Fiji has limited support services for child victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Fiji are engaged in child labor, including in street work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Fiji. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		102.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(4)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cutting,† loading,† weeding,* and spraying chemicals on sugarcane*† (3, 6-9)
	Planting, picking, and using chemical† on tobacco* (1)
	Collecting and splitting coconuts,* harvesting rice,* planting, harvesting, weeding, and spraying fertilizers on roots (including dalo and yaqona),* and planting and harvesting other kinds of fruits and vegetables* (1)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Commercial sexual exploitation of children continued to occur in Fiji, particularly in urban centers and near ports where fishing vessels dock. (1, 3, 16, 19) Parents sometimes send their children to live with families in cities or near schools to facilitate their continuing education and to perform light household work. Research found that some of these children are vulnerable to involuntary domestic work or are forced to engage in sexual activity in exchange for food, clothing, shelter, or school fees. (3, 12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Fiji has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 92 of the Employment Relations Promulgation (20)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 40 of the Employment Relations (Administration) Regulations; Hazardous Occupations Prohibited to Children Under 18 Years of Age Order (21, 22)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Hazardous Occupations Prohibited to Children Under 18 Years of Age Order (22)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 6 and 91 of the Employment Relations Promulgation; Articles 20–21 of the Immigration Act; Articles 102–103 and 111–121 of the Crimes Decree; Article 10 of the Constitution of the Republic of Fiji (20, 23-25)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 91 of the Employment Relations Promulgation; Article 20 of the Immigration Act; Article 10 of the Constitution of the Republic of Fiji; Articles 111–121 of the Crimes Decree (20, 23-25)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 91 of the Employment Relations Promulgation; Articles 225–227 of the Crimes Decree; Juveniles (Amendment) Act (20, 25, 26)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 91 of the Employment Relations Promulgation; Article 58 of the Juveniles Act (20, 27)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 7 of the Royal Fiji Military Forces Act (28)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Compulsory Education Order; Compulsory Education Regulations (3, 29)
Free Public Education	No

* No conscription (30)

The Employment Regulations Promulgation specifies the conditions under which children ages 13 to 15 may engage in light work, but it does not limit the number of hours for light work, nor does it include a list of activities that are permissible.(20)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Productivity, and Industrial Relations (MEPIR)	Enforce child labor laws, including its worst forms. Monitor child employment, including compliance with the requirement on the minimum age for employment and the Employment Relations Promulgation.(2, 8) Oversee 14 Divisional Labor Offices responsible for investigating cases of child labor and making appropriate referrals.(8)
Child Labor Unit	Serve as the mechanism in MEPIR for filing and responding to child labor complaints.(2) Coordinate activities at the national, divisional, and district levels through Interagency Committees on Child Abuse. These committees include the police; Ministries of Social Welfare, Labor, Health, and Education; the Public Prosecutor's Office; the Solicitor General's Office; and NGOs working on child labor issues.(2) Conduct training on child labor in MEPIR and in communities, schools, and industries where child labor occurs. Maintain a 24-hour phone line to accept reports of child labor and refer children to social services when appropriate.(2, 8)
Employment Relations Tribunal	Adjudicate alleged violations of child labor provisions in the Employment Relations Promulgation.(8)
Fiji Police Force	Enforce laws on child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and other illicit activities.(8) Maintain a Human Trafficking Unit (HTU) to investigate allegations of human trafficking and to provide training focused on combating human trafficking to other police units.(19) Collaborate closely with the Department of Immigration and the Police Transnational Crime Unit.(31)
The Department of Immigration	Coordinate with Fiji Police Force to investigate cases involving underage victims of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, which are then tried in the criminal court system.(19, 32)
The Department of Social Welfare and the Department of Public Prosecutions	Enforce laws on child trafficking.(2) Operate four homes for child trafficking victims.(31)

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Fiji took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Labor Law Enforcement

Information was not available on the amount of funding dedicated for labor inspections; however, in 2015, the aggregate estimated operating expenditures for the Ministry of Employment, Productivity, and Industrial Relations (MEPIR) were $7.97 million.⁽⁹⁾ In addition to MEPIR's 45 labor inspectors, there were also 30 health and safety inspectors, who have received training on child labor and may provide coverage when needed. All inspectors were stationed in larger, more populated areas and sometimes found it challenging to access smaller, rural communities and outer islands.⁽⁹⁾ MEPIR provided up to three months of competency-based trainings for all new labor inspectors, including standardized instruction on child labor. Subsequently, labor inspectors received quarterly refresher courses.⁽³⁵⁾ Other civil society organizations and district community leaders involved in child protection also received training on this topic.⁽⁹⁾

In 2015, labor inspectors conducted targeted routine inspections in the retail, manufacturing, and agricultural sectors, where children in Fiji are known to be employed.⁽⁹⁾ If child labor cases are identified through inspections, MEPIR initially refers the cases to one of MEPIR's 14 Divisional Labor Offices for further investigation. The Divisional Labor Office then refers the case to MEPIR's Child Labor Unit, which will determine whether to remove the child from the situation with the help of the Social Welfare Department and the Ministry of Education, or whether to involve another appropriate agency.⁽⁹⁾ During the reporting period, MEPIR removed all seven children identified during labor inspections from worksites, and the Government assisted them in returning to formal education.⁽⁹⁾

In September 2015, the Department of Social Welfare established a national child helpline to promote child protection and access to health care.⁽⁹⁾ Data were unavailable on the number of calls received related to child labor.⁽⁸⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Fiji took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (18, 31)	Yes (35)

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	1 (8)	0 (37)
Number of Convictions	1 (8)	0 (9, 37)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (18)	Yes (18)

The Human Trafficking Unit (HTU) in the Fiji Police Force employs five officers responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(9) In 2015, ILO facilitated a regional seminar for some law enforcement officials, which included training on trafficking in persons. Police officers from the HTU also provided training for labor inspectors on the identification of potential child trafficking cases during labor inspections.(37) In 2015, investigators recorded three cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children and zero cases of forced child labor.(9) When child victims are identified, law enforcement officials refer them to the Department of Social Welfare to receive social services.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Agency Network	Focus on child labor issues at the district and provincial level. Monitor and report cases of non-compliance. Conduct awareness-raising activities in collaboration with the Child Labor Unit.(36) Network consists of interagency committees in nine towns in Fiji: Ba, Labasa, Lautoka, Nadi, Rakiraki, Sigatoka, Suva, Taveuni, and Tavua.(2, 38) Committees comprise the Fiji Police Force; Director of Public Prosecutions Office; Ministry of Woman, Children, and Poverty Alleviation; Ministry of Education; and various NGOs.(33)
Inter-Agency Taskforce on Beggars	Address issues concerning children who beg and other exploited children. Includes Fiji Police Force, Department of Social Welfare, Ministry of Local Government, Suva City Council, Fiji National Council for Disabled Persons, Ministry of Health, the Ministry of i'Taukei Affairs, and local NGOs.(2) Enforce zero-tolerance policy on child begging.(9)
Inter-Agency Trafficking Task Force	Implement the National Plan of Action to Eradicate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking. Government-wide task force, headed by the Department of Immigration.(2, 8, 31)

The Inter-Agency Trafficking Task Force has not been active since 2012.(8, 9) This lack of coordination may limit the Government's effectiveness in efforts to combat child trafficking.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Fiji has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action to Eradicate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking	Guides the Government's efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons. Focuses on increasing public awareness and education on human trafficking-related issues and prioritizes anti-trafficking training for Government officials.(31) Implementing committee is chaired by the Immigration Department, with the Fiji Police Force's Human Trafficking Unit serving as the lead coordinator.(9)
Free Education Grant	Provides 12 years of tuition-free education for children in Fiji. Covers the cost of school fees and textbooks for students in 904 eligible primary and secondary schools.(33, 39, 40) Fiji has established free public education by policy, but not by law.
UNDAF Pacific (2013–2017)*	Promotes sustainable development and economic growth for vulnerable groups in 14 Pacific Island Countries and Territories: Cook Islands, Fiji, Federated States of Micronesia, Kiribati, Nauru, Niue, Palau, Marshall Islands, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu. In Fiji, includes initiatives to improve access to quality education, health, and housing services for children and to strengthen child protective systems.(41, 42)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In 2015, the Government of Fiji continued consultation on the National Action Plan for Child Labor and the accompanying 5-year Strategic Plan for Combating Child Labor, including its worst forms.(34) The Government anticipated the Plan would be implemented by September 2013 and operational through 2018, but at the close of the reporting period, the plan remained in draft form.(2, 36)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Fiji funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE II) Project (2015-2017)*	$570,700 European Union-funded project, implemented by the ILO in partnership with the Ministry of Employment, Productivity, and Industrial Relations, which strengthens and sustains national efforts to eliminate child labor. Seeks to enhance coordination, enforcement, and monitoring mechanisms to build the capacity of stakeholders in the implementation of policies and programs on formal and non-formal education, school retention, and access to education for out-of-school children, and to promote research and raise awareness on child labor issues.(43) In 2015, held a sub-regional training for participants from seven Pacific island nations, including Fiji, on the development of training and livelihoods programs for older children engaged in child labor and those at risk.(44) Assisted the MEPIR to achieve certification from the International Organization for Standardization for Fiji's labor compliance system, which includes child labor inspection systems and processes.(45)
Nadi Safe House*†	Government-run safe house in Fiji's western division of Nadi that provides temporary housing for victims of human trafficking.(37)
Rehabilitation Center*†	Department of Social Welfare and faith-based organization-run rehabilitation center for children found begging on the streets. In 2015, initial capacity of the center was 24 children.(9)
Safety Net Project†	Government program to combat human trafficking at the community level, largely by funding rehabilitation services targeting female victims of commercial sexual exploitation under age 18. Receives referrals from various entities, including the Fiji Police.(46)
Food voucher and bus fare assistance†	Ministry of Education program that provides food vouchers and subsidized bus fares to offset the cost of education for children attending remote schools.(36, 39)
Access Quality Education Program (2011–2015)	Australian Agency for International Development-funded, 5-year program, implemented in partnership with the Ministry of Education, to improve the quality of education in rural and remote schools. Provided grants to improve school infrastructure and to ensure access to schooling for the most poor and marginalized children.(47) In 2015, launched a toolkit for inclusive education for children with disabilities, which will be distributed to every primary and secondary school in Fiji.(48)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Fiji.

During the reporting period, Fiji hosted the Sub-regional Child Labor and Trafficking Forum, which brought together national policymakers from five countries to discuss best practices for addressing child labor and trafficking issues.(49)

Fiji has insufficient support services available to address the particular needs of child victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, especially for boys and for children in remote areas.(35, 50) NGOs provide limited support services, but these are concentrated in the capital city of Suva.(35, 38, 50)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Fiji (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography and the Palermo Protocol.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that the law's light work provisions are specific enough to prevent children from involvement in child labor.	2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on the amount funding for the labor inspectorate.	2015
	Ensure that labor inspectors can access rural areas and outer islands to conduct inspections.	2015
	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Coordination	Ensure that the Inter-Agency Trafficking Task Force meets regularly to address implementation of the National Plan of Action to Eliminate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking.	2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Finalize and implement the National Action Plan for Child Labor and 5-year Strategic Plan for Combating Child Labor, including its worst forms.	2013 – 2015
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into Fiji's country program framework for the Pacific UN Development Assistance Framework for the Pacific Region.	2015
Social Programs	Increase the availability of support services for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, including effective counseling and specialized shelters.	2010 – 2015

In 2015, Gabon made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government improved its enforcement efforts by conducting unannounced inspections, initiating prosecutions for violators, and making its law enforcement statistics publicly available. However, children in Gabon are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government lacks prohibitions against the use of children in illicit activities, and does not criminally prohibit slavery, or the use of children for pornographic performances. Additionally, the Government cut funding to the Interministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking and social programs to address child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Gabon are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Gabon. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Gabon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Gabon is primarily a destination and transit country for victims of child trafficking from other countries in Central and West Africa.(3, 4, 6, 7, 12, 15-19) Boys in Gabon are forced to work as street vendors or mechanics, while girls are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, and work in markets and restaurants.(3, 7, 16, 17) There is limited evidence of child trafficking occurring within Gabon.(16, 20)

The Law on General Education guarantees the right to free and compulsory education.(21) Although the Government has taken measures to increase access to education, including by passing Decree N° 243/PR/MASSNBE to authorize the free distribution of school textbooks, in practice, students were often required to pay for supplies and school fees, which may be prohibitive.(15, 22-24) The country also suffers from a shortage of schools and teachers, particularly in rural areas, and the school year has occasionally been disrupted by prolonged teacher strikes.(15, 22-29) Reports suggest that some children, especially girls, are sexually abused at school.(5, 15, 30) The lack of schools and teachers, safe learning environments, and associated costs may hinder access to education and make children more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Gabon has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 1.18 and 1.19 of the Constitution; Article 2 of Act N° 21/2011 on General Education (41, 42)

* No conscription (40, 43)

Article 2 of Decree N° 0651/PR/MTEPS Establishing Individual Exceptions to the Minimum Age for Admission to Employment permits children under age 16 to perform light work with parental permission. However, it does not set a minimum age for light work or include a list specifying the kinds of light work allowed.(34) The ILO Committee of Experts has also expressed concern over this gap in the law.(44)

Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient, as slavery, and child trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation are not criminally prohibited.(17, 31, 36, 39) The law also does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, as the production of pornography and procuring, offering, or benefitting from the use of children for pornographic performances are not criminally prohibited.(39)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Employment (MLE)	Receive, investigate, and address child labor complaints through its inspectors.(2) Maintain a helpline for victims of child trafficking that provides monitoring, counseling, and information services. Oversee the procedure for returning victims of child trafficking and exploitation to their families.(16, 45, 46) Refer cases of child trafficking to the Ministry of the Interior's Police Force for investigation and the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare (MHSW) for social services.(10, 47)
Ministry of Health and Social Welfare (MHSW)	Provide social services and assistance to vulnerable children; assist in repatriation or resettlement processes for victims of child trafficking; operate shelters for victims of child trafficking.(10)
Ministry of the Interior's Police Force	Investigate child labor law violations and refer cases to the Ministry of Justice for prosecution.(2, 48)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce child labor laws by prosecuting child labor complaints.(2, 22) Assist in supporting victims of child trafficking while prosecutors and investigators prepare their case.(10)
Local Vigilance Committees	Administered by the Interministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking (CNSLTE). Monitor potential cases of child exploitation and human trafficking at the local level. Identify and intercept children at risk of child trafficking and coordinate assistance to children in need.(2, 15, 16, 38, 46, 48) In November 2015, raised awareness about Gabon's prohibitions of hazardous activities for children in conjunction with the establishment of two new committees.(2, 17)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Gabon took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, through the Interministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking (CNSLTE), the Government employed approximately 350 social workers, labor inspectors, police officers, and others to combat child exploitation.(2) Although the CNSLTE reports the number of inspectors is sufficient in urban areas, research indicates that it may be insufficient in rural areas.(2, 22, 33) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Gabon should employ roughly 53 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(51-53) In principle, the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MLE) sends newly hired labor inspectors to Cameroon for a one-time training at the Regional African Center for Administration Work, but the Government lacked the budget to do so in 2015.(24, 49) In an effort to improve its enforcement in the informal sector, labor inspectors conducted at least 10 unannounced inspections and found children working as street vendors and mechanics. The MLE refers victims to the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare (MHSW) for appropriate services.(2)

The MLE does not have a specific line item in its budget for inspections, although the CNSLTE is able to allocate some of its funds to ministries to fund specific actions such as labor inspections.(2) The country's heavily forested terrain in rural areas and a lack of resources such as transportation, fuel, and office supplies limits inspectors' ability to conduct investigations.(2, 16, 17, 54) Additionally, labor inspectors in Gabon are tasked with reconciling labor disputes, which may detract from their primary duties of inspection and monitoring. The ILO Committee of Experts has also expressed concern over this gap in the law.(54)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Gabon took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Number of Convictions	0 (44)	0 (2, 17)

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

Like labor inspectors, investigators do not have a dedicated budget to carry out their work, and the lack of resources such as transportation and fuel hindered their ability to conduct investigations.(2) Additionally, the UN has noted that prosecution of child trafficking cases can be difficult since the Criminal Court meets infrequently.(15) The Government, with the assistance of a local NGO, identified 25 victims of child trafficking in 15 cases during the reporting period and referred them to social services providers.(17, 47) Investigations into these cases resulted in initiation of legal proceedings in 11 cases, which are all currently ongoing.(2, 17) The MHSW assisted in the repatriation of 14 of the victims.(17)

Although law enforcement officials did not receive additional training in 2015, the Government provided training for social workers on how to deal with human trafficking victims through the CNSLTE.(17) Approximately 450 Gabonese peacekeepers received training on human trafficking prior to their deployment in the Central African Republic as part of the UN Support Mission for the Central African Republic (MINUSCA).(17) It is not clear how many cases of exploitative child labor were identified as a result of calls made to the MLE’s hotline for child trafficking victims.(16, 45, 56)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking (CNSLTE)	Coordinate national efforts against child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor by facilitating communication and coordinating enforcement actions among ministries. Led by the MLE and includes the Ministry of Human Rights, Ministry of Justice, Ministry of Interior, MHSW, law enforcement agencies charged with the protection of minors, and local NGOs.(2, 17, 24) Responsible for establishing Local Vigilance Committees and validated a manual on National Procedures to Support Victims of Child Trafficking, which defines the roles and responsibilities of service providers and government bodies.(15) Maintain provincial offices and centers for child trafficking victims. Remove children from exploitative labor situations, provide shelter, assist victims with prosecution, and repatriate victims when necessary.(2, 7, 20, 48, 56-58) In 2015, updated its action plan to combat child labor.(2)
National Observatory for Children’s Rights	Coordinate the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, including the promotion of children’s right to education and protection against all forms of exploitation and abuse.(15, 59)

In 2015, the CNSLTE’s dedicated budget was reduced from the previous year and was insufficient to fully implement its 2015 action plan. However, the CNSLTE continued to respond to complaints of child trafficking, refer victims to social services providers, and work with the courts to prosecute child trafficking violations during the reporting period.(2, 17) Research indicates that committee members occasionally use personal funds to assist victims.(2, 17) In addition, a lack of communication between ministries limited the Government’s ability to collect data on the prevalence of human trafficking issues.(17, 24)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Gabon has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
2015 Action Plan of the CNSLTE†	Aims to address the worst forms of child labor in five ways: (1) identifying and prosecuting those who use child labor, (2) building capacity to enforce laws against human trafficking, (3) advocating for maximum penalties to be applied to child labor violations, (4) harmonizing domestic laws with international standards, and (5) increasing cooperation with embassies of source countries for child trafficking victims. Led by the CNSLTE, assigns actions and a timeline to ministries and NGOs.(2) In 2015, identified and prosecuted child labor offenses and established two new vigilance committees.(2, 17)
National Manual of Procedures for the Care of Child Victims of Trafficking	Establishes a series of procedures to return victims of child trafficking to their country of origin or facilitate their integration into Gabon.(20)
Education Policy (2010–2020)*	Aims to make pre-primary education widely available, improve the quality of primary education throughout the country, and improve the quality of and access to secondary education.(42, 59, 60)
National Youth Policy of Gabon*	Aims to establish a department devoted to youth and strengthen the technical and operational capacities of existing ministries dealing with youth issues. Encourages youth participation in democratic practices by creating a National Youth Council and strengthening the existing Youth Parliament.(61) Improves the lives of youth by providing more professional opportunities, fostering patriotism, and developing good citizenship.(62-64)
UNDAF (2012–2016)*	Establishes six priority areas in alignment with the Millennium Development Goals: (1) promote sustained and diversified growth, (2) develop good infrastructure, (3) improve economic governance, (4) consolidate democratic governance, (5) promote decentralized government, and (6) promote human and social development.(65)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Gabon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, although the Government of Gabon adopted the 2015 Action Plan of the CNSLTE, research found no evidence of a general policy to address child labor. Additionally, the Government of Gabon drafted separate bilateral agreements with Benin, Cameroon, Guinea, Mali, Nigeria, and Togo to combat child trafficking; however the agreements have not been signed by all parties.(3, 15, 23, 66)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Plan on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers in Gabon.(67) In 2015, held a 3-day workshop to create a policy framework document on child domestic work. The framework has yet to be officially endorsed by the Government of Gabon.(4, 67)
Gabon Emergent Strategic Plan (2011–2016)†	Government program that outlines President Ali Bongo Ondimba’s vision for the country’s development, which includes a component on improving work conditions and eliminating child labor.(68, 69) Created a National Council for Education, Training, and Research, which is charged with evaluating the implementation of training opportunities, infrastructure projects, and availability of teaching resources.(14, 68)
Shelters for Children in Need†	Shelters in Libreville and Port-Gentil supported by the Government and civil society organizations that provide victims of child labor, child trafficking, and orphans and other vulnerable children with health care, education, financial support, psycho-social support, and reintegration services.(2, 7, 14, 16, 17, 19, 24, 48, 56, 70) The Government provides in-kind support, such as social workers, medical supplies, food, and office supplies.(2)
Repatriation Program†	Overseen by the CNSLTE. Resettles children in their country of origin when possible or provides resettlement assistance in Gabon if repatriation is not possible.(7, 17, 71) If the country of origin is unable to provide financial restitution or support for victims of child trafficking, the Government of Gabon absorbs these costs.(17)
Birth Certificate Program†	Ministry of Interior and MHSW program to provide birth certificates to Gabonese citizens who were not registered at birth.(17)
Africa Contingency Operations Training and Assistance Program†	Government program, supported by foreign donors, to provide anti-trafficking in persons training to Gabonese peacekeepers as part of their preparation for deployment to the UN Support Mission for the Central African Republic (MINUSCA).(10, 55)
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2016)	Promotes decent work conditions with a focus on creating job opportunities for youth and promoting social protection.(72)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Gabon.

Although Gabon has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(2) Additionally, the main government-funded shelter in Libreville had its budget reduced from $220,000 to $76,000 during the reporting period.(17) Research indicates that the shelters in Libreville are unable to accommodate all identified trafficking victims and other vulnerable children.(47) The Government continued to support existing programs related to child labor in 2015, despite reducing funding for these programs.(2, 10)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Gabon (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the legal framework prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including both the production and trafficking of drugs.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the legal framework for light work establishes a minimum age no younger than 13, determines the activities considered light work, and specifies the conditions under which light work may be undertaken.	2013 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish criminal prohibitions for slavery, child trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation, the production of child pornography, and procuring, offering, or benefitting from the use of children in pornographic performances.	2015
Enforcement	Ensure that the labor inspectorate receives dedicated funding to carry out inspections and that labor inspectors are able to carry out their primary duties of inspection and monitoring throughout the country, including in rural areas.	2009 – 2015
	Authorize the inspectorate to assess penalties.	2014 – 2015
	Institutionalize training for labor inspectors, including by training new investigators at the beginning of their employment and providing refresher courses.	2014 – 2015
	Make statistics publicly available regarding the enforcement of child labor laws, including the type of inspections conducted, the number of criminal violations found, and penalties collected.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Establish a mechanism to log all calls to the MLE's child protection hotline and track cases of child labor for referral to law enforcement or social services providers.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure that the CNSLTE has sufficient funds to carry out its mandate, including improving communication and coordination among ministries.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2014 – 2015
	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant forms of child labor, such as domestic work, work in transportation, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2015
	Sign agreements with origin countries to combat child trafficking.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the specific activities carried out by children working in agriculture, industry, and the informal sector to inform policies and programs.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure children have access to education by eliminating school fees, increasing the number of teachers and schools in rural areas, avoiding prolonged disruptions to the academic calendar due to strikes, and ensuring schools are free from sexual abuse.	2010 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. - of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
52. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies;” “economies in transition” to “transition economies;” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Gambia, The

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, The Gambia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Education continued the Conditional Cash Transfer initiative that provided subsidies to Koranic teachers, marabouts, to support discontinuing their practice of forcing students to beg in the streets.

The Government continued its support of the country's 15 Child Protection Committees. However, children in The Gambia continue to engage in child labor, including in domestic work and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Gaps in the law remain, including increasing the compulsory education age to the minimum age for work. In addition, child labor enforcement resources are limited and existing social programs are insufficient to address the scope of the child labor problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in The Gambia are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in The Gambia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	36.4 (180,954)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	65.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	29.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		67.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS3 Survey, 2005–2006.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including protecting crops by chasing animals* (1, 5)
Industry	Working in carpentry,* masonry,* sewing,* plumbing,* and in metal welding workshops*† (1, 6)
Services	Domestic work* (1, 6)
	Street work,* including vending* (1, 7)
	Scavenging for scrap metal and jewelry at dump sites* (1)
	Working as taxi and bus attendants* (1)
	Working as auto mechanics*† (1, 7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 8)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers (1, 2, 5)
	Forced labor in domestic work* and street vending,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In The Gambia, children are internally trafficked and subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and domestic work. Girls and boys from West African countries, including Senegal, Sierra Leone, Liberia, Ghana, Nigeria, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, and Benin are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation in The Gambia.(2) European tourists also subject children to commercial sexual exploitation in brothels and motels in tourist areas.(2, 6, 9, 10) It appears the Government has not conducted research to determine the activities carried out by children, including in agriculture and domestic work, to inform policies and social programs. Reports indicate that in The Gambia it is a common practice to send boys to receive education from Koranic teachers, marabouts, and some Koranic students, almudus, are forced by their teachers to beg in the streets for money and food.(2, 6, 11) Some marabouts also force students to sell items on the street and in rural areas, and some almudus work in agriculture for long hours. (6)

Article 30 of the Constitution mandates free compulsory education; however, families are often required to buy books and uniforms for their children and contribute to the school fund, which is used to pay for school activities.(12, 14, 15) A report indicates a cultural preference to educate boys, which may cause girls to be more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. To address this issue, the Government has waived school fees for girls.(11, 12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Gambia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

Gambia, The

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In The Gambia, children are required to attend school only until the age of 12, at which point they are permitted under Section 51 of the Children's Act to work as an apprentice in the informal sector. This standard makes children ages 13 to 15 that are not engaged in apprenticeships in the informal sector particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor because they are not required to be in school, but also are not legally permitted to work.(12, 15, 21) Section 43 of the Children's Act, however, permits children at age 16 to do light work, meaning work that does not jeopardize the health or safety of the child and does not interfere with school attendance.(16) In November 2014, President Jammeh declared the Government would impose the death penalty for the crime of raping a child, effective September 2015.(22)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Social Welfare (DSW)	Combat forced child labor and coordinate the handling of trafficking victims, working closely with social welfare officers in police units.(6, 13) Monitor, through the operation of five Neighborhood Watch Groups, suspected cases of child abuse or child commercial sexual exploitation in urban areas near tourist sites. Operate a 24-hour hotline to address human trafficking and maintain a database of individuals suspected of pedophilia or child trafficking, in collaboration with The Gambia Tourism Board.(9, 23) Maintain an electronic database that contains information on cases related to child protection, including those involving labor and human trafficking violations.(9, 23)
Child Protection Alliance (CPA)	Promote children's rights and child protection services. Raise awareness about child exploitation.(24-26) Include Government departments, civil society organizations, UN agencies, NGOs, child and youth organizations, and bilateral institutions.(25).
National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons (NAATIP)	Investigate suspected cases of trafficking, including child trafficking. Agency includes investigators, police, members of the National Intelligence Agency, and five prosecutors.(27) Gather evidence for NAATIP Director, who can recommend that the NAATIP prosecutor file charges for trafficking violations.(27)
The Gambia Tourism Board	Combat commercial sexual exploitation of children in tourist areas.(6) Maintain a database of individuals suspected of pedophilia or child trafficking, in collaboration with the DSW.(9, 28)
Tourism Security Unit	Prevent unaccompanied children from entering tourist areas and patrol tourist areas for child labor and criminal violations, such as commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking. Has a dedicated child protection division.(6, 13, 28)
Gambia Police Force Child Welfare Unit	Oversee all situations involving children's welfare.(26) Work with the CPA, DSW, and other agencies and NGOs to assess and identify children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(7)
Child Protection Committees	Raise awareness and report cases of labor issues, including child labor, to the authorities. DSW operates 15 Child Protection Committees in the country.(1, 7, 13, 29)
Neighborhood Watch Groups	Monitor neighborhoods for child exploitation. Five existing groups established by DSW in urban areas near tourist resorts.(13) Provides members with allowances and cell phone credit.(13)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in The Gambia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

According to the ILO recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less-developed economies, The Gambia should employ about 19 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws.(30-32) A source also indicates that inadequate transportation and a lack of fuel presented a challenge for inspectors to carry out their duties.(1, 6) Children found during labor inspections are referred to the Department of Social Welfare (DSW).(13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in The Gambia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).
