Comply Chain
8 steps to reduce

A girl child is working in a textile factory in Dhaka. It is common in Bangladesh for children of poor parents to work in various hazardous and labor intensive workplaces to support their families. 17.5 percent of all children aged between 5-15 are engaged in economic activities. The average child labourer earns between 400 to 700 taka (1 USD = 70 taka) per month, while an adult worker earns up to 5,000 taka per month.

Foreword

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, in 2016, the United States imported $124 billion in clothing and footwear. Before goods make their way to store shelves, they follow a long and winding path through a supply chain – the complexity of which no collar tag can capture. The journey begins in fields that grow cotton and on the cattle farms that provide the hides, proceeds through spinning mills and tanneries, and ends on the floors of factories or homes where the shoes are cut and assembled or the garments are sewn. Sometimes work produced for major international brands is subcontracted out, at times without the brand's knowledge, to medium-sized factories and home-based workshops.

Unfortunately, there are sometimes hidden, non-monetary costs associated with the goods Americans purchase. Abusive labor practices, such as forced labor and child labor, harm millions of children, women, and men by enabling goods to be produced at artificially low prices. These practices create not only human rights abuses, but they create an uneven playing field, making it hard for businesses that play by the rules to compete. A country's failure to stop the exploitation of its labor force undermines the well-being of American workers and other workers around the world. This reality impacts us as consumers, as we all run the risk of indirectly and unwittingly contributing to the perpetuation of shadow industries, where goods are made on the backs of children and modern-day slaves. The complexity of many global supply chains makes it challenging for consumers to know where to buy untainted goods or what they can do to help address the problem.

All this raises the question: What can be done to stop these abuses?

The primary mission of the U.S. Department of Labor's (DOL) Bureau of International Labor Affairs is to promote a fair global playing field for workers in the United States and around the world by enforcing trade commitments, strengthening labor standards, and combating international child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking. There are an estimated 152 million child laborers, roughly 10 percent of the world's child population and almost half – 73 million children – are used in hazardous work, such as spraying pesticides, descending into mineshafts, or diving underwater to untangle fishing nets.^[1] Millions of children are used in prostitution, the production of pornography, domestic servitude, forced begging, drug trafficking, or are forcibly recruited for use in armed conflict. Worldwide, there are also 25 million adults and children in forced labor.^[1] These newly released 2016 global estimates from the International Labor Organization underscore the urgency of our response.

President Trump's 2017 National Trade Policy Agenda includes "enforcing labor provisions in existing [trade] agreements and enforcing the prohibition against the importation and sale of goods made with forced labor." The Trade Facilitation and Trade Enforcement Act also strengthens the U.S. government's ability to prevent goods made by forced labor from entering the United States. DOL remains committed to contributing our expertise in this area by working collaboratively with the U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) as they enforce this prohibition.

This month, we release the 16th edition of the annual Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, a report born from the idea that trade should be fairer for all. Mandated by the Trade and Development Act of 2000 (TDA), which expanded eligibility criteria for the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program, this report shines a spotlight on specific sectors in which child labor, including forced labor and trafficking, persists, and describes the progress some countries have made in upholding their international commitments to eliminate these practices. The report offers recommendations to address these injustices and protect children through improved laws, policies, and practices. Unfortunately, the report also demonstrates how much work is needed to end child labor.

This report provides specific, actionable information to the governments of GSP-beneficiary countries regarding how best to combat labor abuses. Companies also use the report as a critical input into risk assessments, to conduct due diligence on their supply chains, and to develop strategies to address the problem. Our own federal government agencies use the report to safeguard federal procurement by informing procurement officers of risks in sourcing products and services. DOL uses this report to reveal hidden exploitation and partner with countries working to end labor abuses. Through these partnerships, we have rescued and provided educational opportunities to nearly two million children, helped almost 170,000 families meet their basic needs without relying on child labor, and contributed to reducing child labor by more than 94 million worldwide. This month, we are releasing an updated version of our Sweat & Toil app, which puts more than 1,000 pages of this report and other DOL research on child labor and forced labor in the palm of your hand.

DOL offers another free, comprehensive online toolkit for businesses seeking to develop robust social compliance systems for their global production. DOL also released a new mobile version of this toolkit – Comply Chain: Business Tools for Labor Compliance in Global Supply Chains, making this information more accessible to companies and the public. The power of digital technology is increasingly harnessed to combat labor abuses in supply chains through data collection, supply chain tracing, grievance reporting, and other mechanisms, and DOL is part of that trend. Because of our ongoing commitment to help business develop new tools and test new models to address abuses, we are funding a new initiative to support robust social compliance systems in coffee supply chains that help raise labor standards and safeguard against abusive working conditions. Together, we can ensure that the products we buy are made in a way that is consistent with American values.

Producing goods with exploited labor is simply wrong and gives countries and businesses an unfair competitive advantage. We must do our part to end exploitation and expose those who engage in abusive labor practices. The challenge is immense, but so are the opportunities for progress. The information in this report can help us all take concrete steps to make these injustices a relic of the past.

From Seed to Shirt:

Child Labor in the Cotton Supply Chain

How much do you know about your favorite cotton t-shirt's journey to your closet?

Child labor can begin in the earliest stages of cotton production exposing children to hazardous work. In India, for example, between 400,000 and 450,000 children work long hours in the production of hybrid cottonseed, many as forced or bonded laborers.

Children are involved in the cultivation of cotton plants, by plowing, weeding, and removing pests by hand, as well as by spraying pesticides that present significant health hazards.

Although some progress has been made in reducing the number of forced child laborers in the cotton harvest, some children in countries such as Uzbekistan and Tajikistan are mobilized by local governments for forced labor in the cotton harvest.

Child labor has also been documented in ginning factories, where children work with hazardous machinery and inhale cotton dust as raw cotton is processed.

Children work long hours in hazardous conditions for very little pay as they produce garments that are sold commercially around the world.

Purpose of this Report

The U.S. Department of Labor (USDOL) has prepared this 16th annual report on 2016 Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor in accordance with the Trade and Development Act of 2000 (TDA).⁽³⁹⁾ The TDA set forth the requirement that a country implement its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in order for the President to consider designating the country a beneficiary developing country under the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program.^(40, 41) The TDA also mandated the President to submit to Congress the Secretary of Labor's findings with respect to each "beneficiary country's implementation of its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor."⁽³⁹⁾ ILAB carries out this responsibility on behalf of the Secretary.

Research Focus

Country Coverage

This report covers 121 independent countries and 14 non-independent countries and territories designated as GSP beneficiaries. This includes former GSP recipients who have negotiated free-trade agreements with the United States. Although designated as GSP recipients, the report does not contain a discussion of the British Indian Ocean Territory, Heard Island and McDonald Islands, and the Pitcairn Islands, due to their population of children being extremely small (less than 50) or non-existent. A regional breakdown of the countries and non-independent countries and territories discussed in this report is as follows: Sub-Saharan Africa: 47, Asia and the Pacific: 32, Europe and Eurasia: 18, Latin America and the Caribbean: 26, and the Middle East and North Africa: 12. Because the report focuses on government efforts, non-independent countries and territories are classified by the region of the country with which each non-independent country and territory is associated, as appropriate. Hereinafter, the use of "countries" in the report will also include territories.

Population Covered

In undertaking research on the "worst forms of child labor," ILAB relied on the definition of a child provided in the TDA, which is the same definition contained in ILO C. 182. The TDA and ILO C. 182 define a "child" to be a person under age 18.

Reporting Period

The reporting period for this year's report is January 2016 through December 2016.

Type of Employment

This report focuses on the worst forms of child labor. The definition of the "worst forms of child labor" is found in the TDA and is the same as that included in ILO C. 182. It includes (a) all forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale or trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, or forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict; (b) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic purposes; (c) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs; and (d) work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.⁽⁴³⁾ Similar to ILO C. 182, the TDA states that the work described in subparagraph (d) should be "determined by the laws, regulations, or competent authority of the country involved."^(39, 43)

The Year in Review

A Race Against the Clock: Action Needed to End Child Labor by 2025

This year marks the 70th anniversary of the U.S. Department of Labor's Bureau of International Labor Affairs' (ILAB) efforts to protect worker rights around the world. Within this time, the Bureau has worked for almost 25 years to combat the worst forms of child labor. These targeted and sustained efforts have contributed to an unprecedented global reduction in child labor—by 94 million since 2000.⁽¹⁾ ILAB's use of systematic and rigorous research to shine a light on child labor abuses has been a cornerstone of our approach when engaging with governments, businesses, and civil society actors to spur action to make these abusive practices a relic of the past. In over 95 countries, ILAB has helped countries collect information on and measure the prevalence of child labor, translated these findings into focused national action plans, and supported innovative approaches to help families meet basic needs without relying on child labor.

However, as new global estimates from the ILO and this year's report clearly show, global efforts to date, while substantial, are not keeping pace with what is required to rapidly end child labor in the next decade. The following three takeaways from this year's TDA report summarize: progress has been made, but gaps still remain; exploiters are innovating to profit while evading accountability for their actions; and there is need to ensure that all hands are on deck to accelerate progress over the coming decade.

are being pulled in and exploited. In 2016, for instance, newspapers in Ecuador and Uruguay began covering reports of the use of young children to transport and sell narcotics as part of a new form of drug trafficking;

Child labor continues to decrease, but the pace of progress has slowed

Today, millions of children around the world remain trapped in the worst forms of child labor, carrying out virtually every type of work under a wide range of conditions. The newly released 2016 global estimates from the ILO indicate that there are an estimated 152 million child laborers between the ages of 5 and 17 years old, including 73 million involved in work that is hazardous to their health and well-being. Overall, since the ILO first began measuring the global prevalence of child labor, we have seen a nearly 40 percent reduction in the number of child laborers from 246 million in 2000 to 152 million in 2016.⁽¹⁾ While 2016 saw a continuation of this positive downward trend, the marked decline in the pace of change in recent years is cause for concern. Still today, nearly 1 in 10 children in the world is in child labor. Even more concerning is that the proportion of children in child labor in Sub-Saharan Africa continues to increase, with one in five children in child labor.⁽¹⁾

Over the past year, we observed another troubling trend: as new forms of illicit activities arise, children rather than cross-border trafficking of large quantities of narcotics for international consumption, this new form of child labor involves the “micro-trafficking” of small quantities of drugs, which children rapidly sell for domestic consumption.

As the nature of the global marketplace shifts from storefronts to e-commerce, exploiters are also adapting their business models. In an increasingly mobile, connected world, internet-facilitated commercial sexual exploitation of children is a growing problem. Children in the Philippines, for example, are being coerced into performing sex acts for live internet broadcasts to foreign customers and local Filipinos in small internet cafes, private homes, or windowless dungeon-like buildings known as “cybersex dens.” And in Colombia, press reports during the year documented a trend away from the use of commercial establishments for the sexual exploitation of children and the production of child pornography; instead, private homes are now being rented via the internet to conduct such activities.

Also in 2016, a variety of new studies, some employing new methods of investigative reporting, were released. These studies deepened our understanding of the ongoing exploitation of children in certain sectors. For example, recent investigative research by Transparentem, an NGO seeking increased transparency and ethical behavior in supply chains, brought into greater focus the extremely toxic environment of Bangladesh’s leather tanneries, in which children use hazardous chemicals and machines without any sort of protective equipment. Recent reports by international organizations and news outlets also shined a brighter spotlight on the thousands of children as young as age 6 mining mica, a mineral used in thermal or electrical insulation and as a pigment extender, in India, under dangerous and unhealthy conditions. And Ukrainian news media and local observers began reporting an emerging trend of child labor in illegal amber extraction in the western part of the country.

From Research to Action: The Importance of National Child Labor Surveys

The collection and dissemination of child labor data are fundamental to understanding the breadth and scale of issues affecting working children, as well as risk factors that increase children’s vulnerability to exploitative labor.

Children who are engaged in child labor or hazardous work are more likely to drop out of school, get hurt on the job, and suffer from poor health. These children’s development is impeded and they are more likely to experience livelihood insecurity as adults.

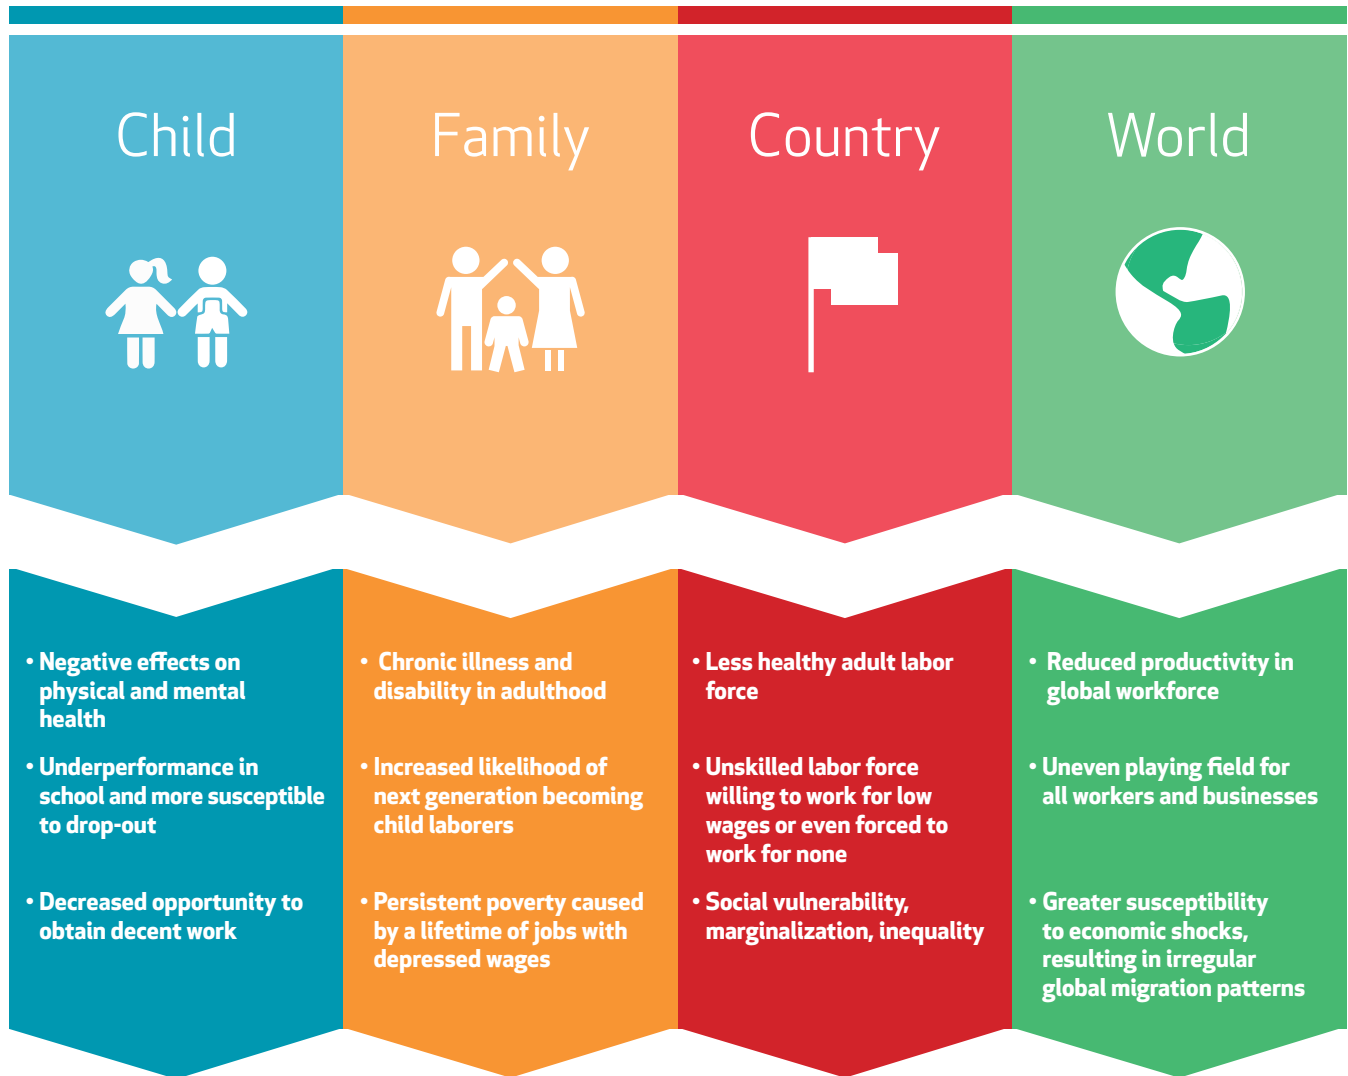

National child labor surveys are a key mechanism for collecting much-needed data. These surveys – whether conducted as a stand-alone or integrated into pre-existing national research efforts, such as labor force, household, or demographic surveys – provide a powerful window into the lives of children, including their health, well-being, education, work activities, and working conditions.

Such research can inform policymakers by illuminating the areas where programs, policies, or legislation are most needed. It can also galvanize support or serve as the basis for targeted programs for addressing child labor. When data are used to their fullest potential, they can become a roadmap for policy action. Identifying an issue and monitoring it through timely data collection are the only ways to know whether progress is being made.

ago. Even so, child labor around the world persists and is, in many places, deeply entrenched and continuing to evolve. The rate of the decline has progressively slowed over the past four years, as the efforts made by governments and other stakeholders have not expanded in quantity or quality. The findings of the 16th edition of this report reveal that the level of governments' efforts to address this problem has remained fairly consistent over the past several years. For instance, the percentage of countries achieving the top two assessment levels – Significant Advancement and Moderate Advancement – has leveled off, hovering around 59 percent of the countries included in the report (see Figures 1-2).

Two years ago, the member states of the United Nations adopted the Sustainable Development Goals (SDG), a roadmap for ending poverty, protecting the environment, and promoting peaceful, inclusive, and just societies by 2030. The eighth among these 17 goals is the promotion of “inclusive and sustainable economic growth, full and productive employment, and decent work for all.” Goal 8 contains a specific target, known as Target 8.7, which calls for taking “immediate and effective measures to... by 2025 end child labor in all its forms.” While many countries and their partners are making efforts, realizing this goal will require all countries and other stakeholders to expand and accelerate action. The number and effectiveness of our collective efforts needs to increase. Otherwise, we will fall short of our goal of eliminating child labor by 2025, as is envisioned by Target 8.7 and agreed to by the international community.

The mission of USDOL’s Bureau of International Labor Affairs (ILAB) aligns with SDG Goal 8 and Target 8.7 as we seek to improve global working conditions, raise living standards, protect workers’ ability to exercise their rights, and address the workplace exploitation of children and other vulnerable populations, helping to ensure that workers around the world are treated fairly and able to share more fully in the benefits of the global economy.

Many governments are stepping up; others have yet to do so

Greater awareness of child labor and a resulting commitment to address it have undoubtedly led to change. As this report indicates, many governments continue to improve their responses to these abuses, including through enacting and enforcing laws, coordinating more effectively among stakeholders, establishing policy frameworks, and implementing economic development, education, and social protection programs that invest in and safeguard children.

This report reveals that almost all countries made at least one effort to combat child labor during the year. Many have ratified all of the relevant international conventions and established good legal frameworks that are aligned with international standards. They have done the hard work of putting into place a solid basis from which to address child labor.

Several countries also made important advances in the areas of law enforcement relevant to child labor. For example, Albania increased funding for its

Marking 15 Years of Protecting the Most Vulnerable: Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child

Fifteen years ago, two Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child adopted by the United Nations General Assembly first entered into force, working alongside ILO C. 182’s requirement that countries criminalize the forced recruitment of children for armed services and the use, procuring, and offering of children for commercial sexual exploitation. Yet this anniversary can hardly be called a celebration. The brutality of armed conflict and commercial sexual exploitation continue to ensnare hundreds of thousands of boys and girls globally. These children are victims, whose abhorrent involvement in such activities can put them in an early grave or leave enduring scars, both physical and psychological.

The Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict, which has been ratified by 166 countries, is a commitment that States will:

- neither conscript nor send children under the age of 18 to the battlefield;
- prevent such recruitment, including by enacting legislation; and
- demobilize children and provide physical and psychological services to support their recovery and reintegration.

The Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, ratified by 173 member states, obligates governments to criminalize and punish a wide range of activities related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The rights and best interests of child victims must be paramount, particularly in interactions with the criminal justice system. Survivors should receive legal, medical, psychological, logistical, and financial support to aid their rehabilitation and reintegration.

These protocols matter. Standing united against these abuses is a matter of great urgency and the collective responsibility of every government and citizen. We urge the member states of the United Nations who have not yet ratified these protocols to join those who have.

labor inspectorate in 2016, Ecuador increased its number of labor inspectors by 67 percent, and Togo hired additional labor inspectors for the third year in a row. In Kazakhstan, the Ministry of Education and Science, in cooperation with other government agencies, conducted 45,000 targeted raids in areas where children were likely to be engaged in child labor. Brazilian law enforcement initiated 950 cyber investigations into the commercial sexual exploitation of children, while Burma sanctioned 13 officers and 23 noncommissioned personnel for complicity in the recruitment or use of children in its military, and Belize secured its first ever human trafficking conviction. The Philippine government established an Internet Crimes Against Children Office to combat internet-facilitated commercial sexual exploitation of children and other forms of internet-facilitated sex trafficking.

Many countries covered in this report also recognize that education is critical to the effective prevention and elimination of child labor, taking positive steps forward during the year. In Honduras, for example, the Ministry of Education invested $3.5 million to build schools in some of the poorest municipalities, while Nicaragua's Ministry of Education provided more than 700,000 packages of school supplies and 3.9 million textbooks to children in need. The Government of Egypt participated in programs to feed 13.3 million students and expanded access to education to 36,000 children. Burundi, with UNICEF, launched and completed a campaign to provide

Power in Photography: The Role of the Image in Fighting Child Labor

When David Parker packed up his camera and headed to Mexico for his first expedition to document child labor in 1992, he said he had little understanding of how big the problem was and the conditions children faced. "I was surprised what lay just beyond the surface of everyday activity," Parker says.

This was not for a lack of scholarship: Parker had spent years viewing the hazards faced at work through a different lens – in his role running occupational state health programs in his native Minnesota. "Even those of us who study work have often spent little time observing work, and our vision is often sanitized by numbers."

While data may drive policy, Parker sees the image as just as essential. At its best, he believes, it "presents a reality uncluttered by ideas... and forces us to understand what is basic." It is from this understanding that a will to act is often stirred. "No one is convinced of something by a p-value," Parker says.

Parker has been training his camera on this global scourge for 25 years, or about as long as ILAB has been working to combat child labor worldwide through its research, policy engagement, and programs. In that time, he has amassed a vast catalogue of images of working children, from the garbage dumps in Cambodia to the brick kilns of Nepal.

When he captured this photograph, Parker had been wandering through the chiefdoms of Sierra Leone and happened upon a boy in a small workshop. The resulting image offers a window into the life of just one of the millions of children upon whose backs the global economy remains partly built.

Parker's body of work on a global scale has been compared to that of Lewis Hine, who illuminated the plight of child laborers in the United States in the early 20th century by documenting the work of children in the nation's factories and coal mines. For his part, Parker is a bit more modest: "Standing alone, a photograph may stir us to action but it may fail to provide a coherent direction." For this reason, Parker continues to straddle two worlds, as both an empirical researcher and a documentarian.

While change has been frustratingly slow, Parker does take heart in the progress being made. "It's from the actions of a lot of different people doing a lot of different things," Parker says. "On a good day, I like to think I'm a part of that."

teaching and learning materials to 32,000 teachers and promote equitable access to and retention in school for 2.6 million students.

Although we are encouraged by these and the many other accomplishments governments have made, much more needs to be done in most countries—both in terms of quantity and quality of efforts—to ensure effective labor and criminal law enforcement, as well as coordinating mechanisms and social programs, that offer the protection that children deserve. While passing good laws and ratifying established conventions are rarely easy and always commendable, many countries are failing to implement those laws and commitments in practice. Child labor laws are established to ensure that when young people work, the work is safe and does not jeopardize their health, well-being, or educational opportunities. Criminal laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor are established to ensure that no child is exploited as a modern-day slave. The enforcement of both is critical to preventing and eliminating this problem. However, laws—even the most perfectly crafted statutes—are meaningless if they are not enforced.

In 2016, 55 of the 135 governments included in this report made no meaningful efforts to enforce laws related to child labor, including 30 governments that made no known law enforcement efforts whatsoever related to child labor (see Figure 3). Labor law and criminal law enforcement efforts related to child labor issues around the world remained particularly inadequate in rural areas where child labor is prevalent, as well as in the informal sector. At least 70 governments did not meet the ILO's recommended benchmarks for an adequate number of inspectors, and in 4 countries—Armenia, Cambodia, Kyrgyz Republic, and Mongolia—unannounced inspections were not permitted. Forty-one governments have not given their inspectors the authority to assess penalties for labor violations, 10 lacked a mechanism to receive child labor complaints, and 3—Armenia, Georgia, and Somalia—lacked labor inspectorates entirely. The failure to adequately sanction violations of child labor laws, and secure remediation, maintains a culture of impunity that fails to effectively deter child labor.

We also see significant gaps around the world in interagency coordination and policy implementation. In 2016, for example, 82 governments made no meaningful efforts to improve their inter-ministerial coordination on child labor issues and 66 countries took no meaningful steps to enact or implement policies related to child labor (see Figure 3).

Of the 135 countries covered in this report:

39 have an adequate number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO's recommendation

64 authorize their labor inspectorates to assess penalties

86 conduct routine labor inspections

79 conducted unannounced inspections in 2016

106 have a complaint mechanism

Some governments made positive efforts to address their country's child labor situation during the year, but simultaneously began or continued to take actions that negatively impacted their overall effectiveness. Eleven countries—Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bolivia, the Dominican Republic, Georgia, Iraq, Mauritania, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Tanzania, and Ukraine—implemented or maintained a law, policy, or practice related to education access, minimum age for work, labor inspection, or the recruitment and use of child soldiers that reversed their advancements in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Four governments—Eritrea, South Sudan, Swaziland, and Uzbekistan—were complicit in the use of forced child labor during the reporting period, whether it be for agricultural or domestic work, public works projects, or participation in armed conflict. The U.S. government joins in with many others to continue to advocate for the speedy resolution of these situations for the well-being of all affected children.

Ending child labor will require "all hands on deck"

How can the international community accelerate the pace of progress against child labor? To help us achieve Target 8.7's goal, as well as the related objectives of ridding the world of forced labor and human trafficking, Alliance 8.7 was launched in September 2016. This is an inclusive and targeted partnership involving governments, workers' and employers' organizations, UN agencies, regional bodies, the private sector, civil society, academia, and other actors. Its mission is to assist all

Hurricane. War. Drought. To many of us, these appear as mere headlines in our newsfeeds. To the people who have experienced them firsthand, events like these can traumatize and permanently alter lives, even of adults. Imagine, then, the effect of such natural disasters and conflicts on children. While the news stories may focus on damage to infrastructure and the financial burden caused by natural disasters or conflict, the physical and psychological damage and burden borne by children is often overlooked. Many of these children lose their families. In the ensuing chaos, some are swept up by opportunists who exploit them for their labor. Likewise, in times of conflict, the collapse of government social services networks can place already at-risk children in more precarious situations, cut off from the help that they need. The ILO is actively working to address these issues and has developed a draft Inter-Agency Toolkit to help humanitarian groups tackle child labor in emergencies.

Every year on June 12th, the ILO seeks to raise awareness about the global plight of child laborers through the World Day Against Child Labor, a worldwide event to foster the global movement against child labor. On June 12th, 2017, the ILO underscored the crippling effects of natural disasters and conflicts on the world's most vulnerable children. Across the world, people came together to commemorate this important day with rallies in India, televised debates in Ghana, and other events with communities, ensuring that the plight of children faced with natural disaster and conflict is not blurred by the next headline.

UN member states in taking immediate and effective measures to eradicate the problems of child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking by increasing awareness of the problems, advocating for high-level commitment to tangible action, establishing more effective policies and action plans, promoting better information-sharing, and initiating other capacity-building activities. This type of concurrent forward movement on multiple fronts will create momentum on several Sustainable Development Goals, as it generates inclusive economic growth, produces opportunities for decent work, increases gender equality, improves access to education, and fosters peace and stability within societies.

The Ministerial Declaration released after the May 2017 G20 Labor and Employment Ministers' Meeting called for "proposals on how to accelerate action to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, forced labor, and modern slavery in global supply chains including identifying high risk sectors, and how to support capacity building in the countries most affected." In November 2017, government officials and civil society representatives from around the world will convene in Argentina to further strategize a way forward. The main objective of the IV Global Conference on the Sustained Eradication of Child Labor is to increasingly consolidate and accelerate global efforts under Target 8.7. The United States will be an active participant in this gathering, joining with other like-minded stakeholders to more effectively and efficiently translate our knowledge of the problem into action.

This report serves as a key input for Alliance 8.7, the G20 Ministers of Labor, and the Global Conference in Argentina, as it offers an annual snapshot of where child labor can be found, the advances some countries have made in upholding their commitments to abolish it, and where gaps in efforts exist and work remains to be done. It provides a factual base from which to push for the laws, policies, and practices that will bring to reality the goal of allowing all children to achieve their

ALLIANCE

Alliance 8.7: Building a Coalition to Eradicate Child Labor, Forced Labor, and Human Trafficking

In September 2015, the United States and 192 other countries rallied together to support the adoption of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDG). Through SDG Target 8.7, the global community made a renewed commitment to take "immediate and effective measures" to eradicate forced labor, modern day slavery, human trafficking, and child labor in all its forms.

The U.S. Department of Labor's Bureau of International Labor Affairs (ILAB) has long been at the forefront of this fight. Since 1995, ILAB has invested in more than 300 projects that make a meaningful difference in the lives of those vulnerable to forced labor and child labor in more than 90 countries. Our experience has taught us that the best way to tackle this challenge is through a strategic, "all-hands-on deck" approach.

That is why ILAB is supporting Alliance 8.7, a coalition, led by the International Labor Organization, of governments, civil society groups, workers' and employers' organizations, and businesses dedicated to putting an end to child labor, forced labor, and modern-day slavery. To this end, Alliance 8.7 will develop a global data hub to spur data-driven efforts, harness new technologies and foster innovation for enhanced impact, and increase and leverage the resources required to tackle a problem of this magnitude.

Alliance 8.7 is taking off quickly. Already key players in Latin America, North and West Africa, and Asia have convened to identify regional child labor and forced labor concerns and develop actionable strategies for addressing these issues. The momentum will continue to build heading into the IV Global Conference on the Sustained Eradication of Child Labor in Argentina, where the United States and other Alliance members will use new global estimates on child and forced labor to evaluate progress made over the past 4 years, and consider the road still ahead.

The road to eradicating child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking has never been easy; however, the United States, bolstered by the partnership of Alliance 8.7, will continue pushing ahead. We have set our sights on a horizon in which unscrupulous actors no longer prosper at the expense of exploited workers abroad and American workers at home.

Cost of Education

Worldwide, 124 million children and adolescents are unable to enter and complete school. Although countries may offer primary education that is tuition-free, families are often unable to afford the cost of meals, uniforms, school supplies, and transportation.

full potential. Equally as important, it also suggests more than 1,700 country-specific actions that governments could implement in order to progress in their fight against child labor. Of these recommendations, 1,100 relate to improvements in laws and the enforcement of legal statutes, indicating the urgent need for additional progress in these areas.

Governments are key players in this fight, but they cannot end child labor alone. Nor can the private sector or civil society organizations. We know for certain that continued fragmentation of efforts will not achieve the results that we are seeking. Any entity acting in isolation—be it a government, business, or individual citizen—will face limitations. To be successful, progress must come from actions taken by the full set of actors that have a role to play in this effort.

Ending child labor requires working together across sectors and regions through sustained dialogue and active partnership among governments, international organizations, businesses, workers' and employers' organizations, civil society, and others. An energized and more strategic global movement, and one that is grounded in targeted partnerships, is the recipe needed for success. Such partnerships, through Alliance 8.7 and beyond, are critical to breaking down information and expertise silos in order to address the root causes of child labor; to lift vulnerable populations out of poverty and social exclusion; and to help them gain access to education and training, stable livelihoods, and decent work.

We believe that these types of partnerships are not simply aspirational, but actually possible. We see many stakeholders collaborating with governments, leveraging resources and competencies to eliminate child labor in supply chains. The Government of Thailand, for example, collaborated in 2016 with multiple stakeholders to implement a new project to prevent and reduce child labor in the fishing and seafood industry. Cambodia approved guidelines to address child labor in the country's fishing industry and Madagascar participated in a new program to reduce child labor in vanilla production. In addition, Malawi expanded social programs to address child labor and Colombia continued to fund programs to address child labor in mining.

Businesses at all stages of the supply chain are playing a critical role in ensuring that consumer goods are not tainted with child or forced labor. Many businesses are voluntarily pursuing a wide variety of risk mitigation strategies—robust voluntary standards, due diligence, remediation, transparency, and engagement with stakeholders—to ensure that they and their supply chain partners respect national laws and fundamental labor rights. In response to newly released reports, for example, several cosmetics companies and pigment producers, in partnership with the Indian government and NGOs, formed the Responsible Mica Initiative in early 2017 to ensure a clean supply chain, solid legal framework, and healthy living environment for mica-mining communities.

We are also supporting business efforts to address child labor through the launch of a new Global Business Network Against Forced Labor and Human Trafficking by the ILO, which will provide a forum for businesses to collaborate and share good practices to address the complex challenges presented by these often-hidden abuses. Businesses seeking to develop robust social compliance systems for their global production can now also make use of our newly released comprehensive online resource and complementary mobile application—Comply Chain: Business Tools for Labor Compliance in Global Supply Chains—that makes information about voluntary social compliance systems more accessible and user-friendly.

Consumers also have an important role to play by becoming more informed. As consumers, we often have very little information on the origin of the things we buy and the people who produced them. This year's report and its accompanying Sweat & Toil mobile application puts detailed and accessible information at consumers' fingertips, so they can start asking questions, taking action, and demanding change. Moreover, the app serves as a resource for consumers to better understand the challenges, opportunities, and complexities inherent in the struggle to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. We will need many champions to meet Target 8.7 and to end child labor. Every sector of society needs to step up and play its part. This includes individuals letting governments and companies know that meaningful action is important, recognized, and valued—and that inaction is unacceptable.

The clock is ticking. We will not end child labor in the next decade by maintaining the status quo or relying exclusively on current methods of intervention. To achieve this ambitious goal, to gain ground on the problem, the pace of advancement against child labor needs to sharply accelerate. This year's report provides a detailed roadmap for getting to a world where the dignity of work is respected and the rights of children are protected—for their sake and for ours.

The Worst of the Worst Forms of Child Labor: Spotlight on Child Trafficking and Forced Child Labor

Addressing issues of child trafficking and child forced labor has grown to be of great international concern. New global estimates from the ILO and WalkFree indicate that approximately 25 million men, women, and children are in forced labor, meaning they are trafficked, held in debt bondage, forced into commercial sexual exploitation, or working under slave-like conditions. For more than 20 years, ILAB has been recognized as a global leader in combatting the trafficking of adults and children for labor and commercial sexual exploitation through our technical assistance programs and policy engagement. In 1995, for example, ILAB became the first U.S. Government agency to fund a project specifically aimed at tackling the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Thailand. Since then, ILAB's programming to combat trafficking and forced child labor has expanded to some of the most challenging environments and sectors in the world – from deep sea fishing in Indonesia and brick kilns in Nepal to cocoa farming in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana.

In the wake of the devastating 2015 earthquake in Nepal, for example, the USDOL-funded Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II) project has been working with local government officials in the municipality of Panauti to incorporate child labor and child trafficking prevention into its Disaster Management Plan to ensure that children are safe from traffickers and those who would exploit them for labor or commercial sexual purposes. The CLEAR II project, implemented by Winrock International and partners Verité and Lawyers Without Borders, aims to work with governments in seven countries to build their capacity to address child labor in the areas of legislation and regulations, monitoring and enforcement, national plans of action, and social policies and programs.

ILAB also contributed directly to the ILO's development of the groundbreaking Forced Labor Protocol and Recommendation to ILO C. 29 on Forced Labor, which aims to advance forced labor prevention, protection, and compensation measures around the world.

ILAB then helped turn policy into action by funding a project — From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labor — that will help countries implement this new protocol and more effectively fight trafficking and forced labor. As of the end of 2016, the project has supported work that has contributed to 10 countries ratifying the protocol. Among these ratifications is Mauritania – the last country in the world to have abolished slavery. The project has also developed a Web platform and new content for the 50 for Freedom campaign in order to increase awareness of the protocol and recommendation, and to support countries seeking to ratify the protocol. Take a stand to End Modern Slavery at <http://50forfreedom.org/>.

Regional Analysis of Government Efforts and Country Assessments

This 2016 report includes a regional analysis of country assessments, as well as regional trends in government actions to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Figure 4 provides a regional breakdown of the country assessments. All five regions had at least two countries receive an assessment of Significant Advancement, with Latin America and the Caribbean with ten countries, followed by Sub-Saharan Africa with six countries, the Middle East and North Africa with three countries; Asia and the Pacific with two countries; and Europe and Eurasia with two countries. The remaining portion of this discussion reviews trends and gaps in efforts to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, by region.

Meaningful Efforts

- Adopted laws that establish a minimum age for work and a minimum age for hazardous work.
- Removed children from child labor as a result of labor inspections.
- Launched national action plans to combat the worst forms of child labor.

In Asia and the Pacific, 62.1 million children ages 5 to 17, or 7.4 percent of all children in the region, are engaged in child labor.⁽¹⁾ Figure 5 provides an overview of the regional outlook. This is close to 16 million fewer child laborers in 2016 compared with 2012. In addition, this is the first time since the ILO released its global estimates on child labor that Asia and the Pacific does not have the highest absolute numbers of child laborers.⁽¹⁾ Children perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and as domestic workers in third-party households. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. In 2016, while only 2 of the 32 Asian and Pacific countries covered in this report received an assessment of Significant Advancement (the Philippines and Thailand), countries across Asia and the Pacific made meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. These efforts included adopting laws that

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Laws do not adequately prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs.
- Labor inspectors lack the authority to conduct inspections at informal workplaces and to assess penalties.
- Children face persistent obstacles to access education, including lack of schools and prohibitive costs to attend school.

establish a minimum age for work and a minimum age for hazardous work, identifying and removing children from child labor as a result of labor inspections, and launching national action plans to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, additional efforts need to be undertaken to prevent and eliminate child labor, including ensuring that laws adequately prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, authorizing labor inspectors to conduct inspections at informal workplaces, and eliminating barriers to education.

In 2016, one country made meaningful efforts, but had a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor: Uzbekistan, where forced child labor occurred in more than an isolated incident during the 2016 cotton harvest. In addition, Burma received no assessment in 2016 because this is the first year that efforts have been assessed and suggested actions provided for Burma. While Burma made meaningful efforts, its national army continued to use some children as combatants, porters and cooks in conflict areas.

In 2016, several governments in Asia and the Pacific adopted laws related to child labor, including its worst forms. Burma, India, and Pakistan's Punjab and Sindh provinces passed legislation that established minimum ages for work and hazardous work. The Philippines revised and expanded its list of hazardous work prohibited for children under age 18, and Thailand adopted a ministerial regulation to protect children under age 18 from hazardous work in seafood processing establishments. Afghanistan passed legislation to prohibit child trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation, the Solomon Islands criminalized commercial sexual exploitation broadly, and Cambodia adopted a law that prohibits the use of minors for forced labor while they are held in juvenile detention facilities.

Countries in the region also increased the capacity of law enforcement agencies to combat child labor, including its worst forms. Afghanistan, Bhutan, Fiji, the Philippines, and Thailand increased their numbers of labor inspectors and Cambodia issued standardized guidance on how to conduct child labor inspections. Of the 32 countries in Asia and the Pacific covered in this report, 17 provided training to labor inspectors and 15 provided training to criminal law enforcement officials. Both the Philippines and Thailand established law enforcement agencies to combat Internet-facilitated commercial sexual exploitation of children. Nepal's police also developed a training curriculum that addresses child labor issues and trained officers with this new curriculum. In addition, Indonesia, Kazakhstan, Pakistan's Punjab Province, the Philippines, and Sri Lanka conducted targeted inspections of workplaces with a high risk of child labor and removed children engaged in prohibited work.

Several governments improved policy frameworks and established social programs to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Cambodia, Kazakhstan, and the Kyrgyz Republic launched national action plans to combat the worst forms of child labor, and Afghanistan adopted a policy to incentivize families to prevent their children from working in carpet weaving and enroll them in school. The Philippines set a new goal of withdrawing one million child laborers by 2022. Several countries designated additional geographic areas as child labor free, including industrial zones in Indonesia, 5 additional municipalities in Nepal, 79 additional districts in the Philippines, and 19 additional districts in Sri Lanka.

In addition, countries in East Asia, Southeast Asia, and the Pacific Islands attended a sub-regional consultation workshop in Thailand on achieving UN Sustainable Development Goal 8.7 that focuses on ending child labor, forced labor, modern slavery, and human trafficking. Furthermore, the South Asia Initiative to End Violence Against Children held a sub-regional consultation on Goal 8.7 in Bhutan. Both consultations were held in preparation for the IV Global Conference on the Sustained Eradication of Child Labor, which will be hosted by Argentina in November 2017. During the year, many countries in the region also supported regional policies (Table 1) and participated in programs (Table 2) to address child labor, including its worst forms.

Despite efforts in addressing child labor in the region, many countries lack adequate legal protection against the worst forms of child labor, especially with regard to hazardous work. For example, 7 countries have a minimum age for hazardous work below the international

Policy	Description
Regional Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of All Forms of Child Labor in South Asia (2016–2021)*	Seeks to prevent and eliminate all forms of child labor in South Asia by strengthening the institutional capacity of the South Asia Initiative to End Violence Against Children and increasing collaboration among its members, which include Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan, and Sri Lanka. ⁽²⁾
Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Convention Against Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children	Establishes a regional anti-human trafficking framework among 10 ASEAN member states to improve coordination on the investigation and prosecution of trafficking in persons cases and enhance assistance for victims. In 2016, Thailand and Cambodia ratified the convention. ^(3, 4)
Beijing Declaration on South-South Cooperation for Child Rights in the Asia Pacific Region	Commits signatories to advancing efforts to protect children's rights, including pertaining to child labor, child trafficking, and child pornography. Includes 29 signatories, including Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Burma, Cambodia, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Kiribati, Maldives, Mongolia, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Samoa, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Timor-Leste, and Vanuatu. ⁽⁵⁾
United Nations Development Assistance Framework for the Pacific Region (2013–2017)	Promotes sustainable development and economic growth for vulnerable groups in 14 Pacific Island countries and territories: Cook Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, Fiji, Kiribati, Marshall Islands, Nauru, Niue, Palau, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu. ⁽⁶⁾

Asia-Australia Program to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2013–2018)	$45 million Australian Aid-funded, 5-year regional and national-level project implemented in ASEAN countries, including Cambodia, Indonesia, Myanmar, Philippines, Thailand, and Vietnam. Seeks to build the capacity of regional and national stakeholders to improve the investigation, prosecution, and adjudication of human trafficking cases and to enhance coordination at the regional level. ⁽⁹⁾ standard of 18 years; 9 countries only provide a general prohibition and do not identify specific hazardous occupations or activities prohibited for children; and 9 countries' hazardous work prohibitions are not comprehensive. Laws prohibiting the commercial sexual exploitation of children do not adequately criminalize the use, procuring, and offering of children for prostitution, pornography, and pornographic performance in Bangladesh, Burma, Cambodia, Maldives, Mongolia, Nepal, Pakistan, and seven Pacific Island countries. Furthermore, 19 countries in the region have not adequately prohibited the use of children in illicit activities because the use, procuring, and offering of children for both the production and trafficking of drugs are not criminalized.

Many countries in the Asia and Pacific region lacked the authority and resources necessary to enforce laws related to child labor, including its worst forms. Labor inspectorates in 6 countries lack the authority to conduct inspections in the informal sector, particularly domestic work in private homes where many children work. Labor inspectorates also do not have the authority to assess penalties in 9 countries and unannounced inspections are not permitted in Cambodia, Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, the Kyrgyz Republic, and Mongolia. In addition, 14 countries in the region did not have a sufficient number of labor inspectors according to the ILO's recommendation.⁽¹⁰⁾

Children in the Asia and Pacific region face significant obstacles to accessing education. Five countries have not established an age up to which education is compulsory and 5 countries have compulsory education ages that are below the minimum age for work, which increases children's vulnerability to child labor because they are not required to be in school but are also not legally permitted to work. Free primary education has also not been established by law in 7 Pacific Island countries. In addition, prohibitive costs associated with education, such as books, uniforms, and teacher fees, prevent children from attending school in 11 countries.

Child Labor in Palm Oil Production: Everyday Products At Your Local Store

What makes ice cream smooth and creamy and keeps chocolate from melting? What makes laundry detergents tough on stains? The answer is palm oil, which is in approximately half of the packaged products we buy at the supermarket. Palm oil is in everything from lipstick to pizza dough, from non-dairy creamers to automotive cleaners. It is even used to make biodiesel fuels. While the cultivation of palm has been an important motor of economic development around the globe, including in Southeast Asia, which accounts for more than 85 percent of the world's product, the supply is often tainted by child labor. In Indonesia and Malaysia, for example, children are compelled to work alongside their parents, who often must meet harvest quotas to avoid wage deductions and other penalties. On the plantations, they are exposed to toxic chemicals and risk injury from carrying heavy loads. Children toiling in the palm oil industry—whether in Southeast Asia, Africa, or Latin America—often work long hours and miss school.

What are leading producers and retailers doing to combat child labor in the global palm supply, and how can consumers make informed decisions at the supermarket? Since 2013, palm oil producers Agropalma (Brazil), DAABON (Colombia), and Musim Mas (Singapore) have partnered with a set of global brands that includes Danone, Ferrero, and L'Oréal to form the Palm Oil Innovation Group (POIG), a group that also includes the labor rights NGOs Verité and the International Labor Rights Forum, as well as key environmental watchdogs. Its mission is to build on the advances that the Roundtable on Sustainable Palm Oil (RSPO) has made to combat child labor. Companies signing the POIG Charter must certify that all of their palm production confirms to the RSPO standard, as well as that of subsidiaries and third-party suppliers, within 2 years. In addition, POIG members must demonstrate, through published and independent, third-party verification, additional social and environmental standards across all operations. This means maintaining a clear policy and compliance system that prohibits child labor, including its worst forms, throughout a member's supply chain. By certifying that operations conform to rigorous standards, POIG creates market recognition for the leading companies in the RSPO, and encourages a race to the top. This could not be timelier, given that the global production of palm oil has doubled in the past decade and is expected to continue to increase rapidly.

2016 Regional Outlook

5.5 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor

KEY = 1,000,000 children

Meaningful Efforts

- Adopted laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor.
- Trained law enforcement personnel to combat child labor, including its worst forms.
- Conducted and published research on child labor, including national child labor surveys.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Countries lacked fully functioning labor inspectorates.
- Prohibitions on the use of children in illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs, are insufficient.
- Minorities and other disadvantaged children face barriers to accessing education.

Regional statistics on child labor for Europe and Eurasia are available for the first time. Figure 6 provides an overview of the regional outlook. In 2016, 5.5 million children ages 5 to 17, or 4.1 percent of all children in the region, are engaged in child labor. ⁽¹⁾ Children in this region perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. In 2016, only 2 of the 18 countries covered in this report received an assessment of Significant Advancement: Albania and Kosovo. However, countries in Europe and Eurasia did make meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, including by adopting laws that prohibit the worst forms of child labor; training law enforcement personnel to combat child labor, including its worst forms; and conducting and publishing research on child labor. Despite these gains, countries in the region need to undertake additional efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor, including by establishing fully functioning labor inspectorates; ensuring that the use of children for illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs, is prohibited; and eliminating barriers to education for minorities and other disadvantaged children.

In 2016, three countries made meaningful efforts, but failed to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law that was established in previous years that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor: Armenia lacked a functioning labor inspectorate to enforce child labor laws due to a continued moratorium on inspections, and Georgia lacked a functioning labor inspectorate to enforce child labor laws since its labor inspectorate was abolished in 2006. Ukraine also failed to fully lift bureaucratic restrictions on the State Labor Service's ability to conduct inspections, including for child labor, and Azerbaijan made meaningful efforts, but introduced a regressive practice during the reporting period that imposed a moratorium on all labor inspections not initiated by a formal complaint, which effectively curtailed labor inspections in 2016.

In 2016, several countries adopted laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor. Moldova passed a law increasing penalties for involving children in the worst forms of child labor, including for forced labor, illicit activities, and the production of pornography. Ukraine amended the Law on the Protection of Childhood to establish a criminal penalty for the use of children in armed conflict, and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina criminalized all forms of human trafficking, including child trafficking for forced labor and sexual exploitation, within its jurisdiction. Armenia also passed legislation that requires the Government to provide financial restitution to victims of human trafficking, including child trafficking victims.

Number of Countries in Europe & Eurasia that Undertook Meaningful Efforts to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Relevant Areas

Number of Countries=18

Countries in the region also improved their capacity to enforce laws related to child labor, including its worst forms. For example, both Kosovo and Albania increased funding to their labor inspectorates; Azerbaijan provided all labor inspectors with training on international conventions and national legislation regarding child labor; and labor inspectors in Azerbaijan and Bosnia and Herzegovina received training on identifying victims of human trafficking, including children. In Turkey, local law enforcement established and trained 33 units to combat crimes against woman and children, including child trafficking. Kosovo also provided criminal investigators with training on legislation related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in the production of pornography. In addition, 6 of the 18 countries in the region—Albania, Armenia, Georgia, Kosovo, Montenegro, and Ukraine—trained criminal investigators and other law enforcement personnel on enforcing laws against human trafficking.

During the year, European and Eurasian countries conducted and published research on child labor. Azerbaijan conducted sectoral research on child labor in high-risk sectors of the service industry, and Armenia and Georgia published national child labor surveys. The Government of Moldova also committed to strengthening statistics on child labor through the adoption of a Decent Work Country Program. In addition, countries funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. Turkey provided social services and enrolled approximately 300,000 Syrian refugee children in school, many of whom were involved in child labor in Turkey. Kosovo and Serbia took steps to improve the inclusion of vulnerable populations, including Roma children, in the education system. Macedonia also nearly doubled funding for programs dedicated to combating human trafficking, including child trafficking, and Albania increased the amount of cash transfers its social assistance program provides to vulnerable families by 25 percent.

However, there are a number of challenges that impede progress in addressing child labor in the region. Six countries, including Anguilla; the British Virgin Islands; Kosovo; Montserrat; Falkland Islands; and Saint Helena, Ascension, and Tristán da Cunha lack sufficient prohibitions on the use of children in illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs. Bosnia and Herzegovina, the British Virgin Islands, and Georgia do not have comprehensive hazardous work prohibitions, which limits the capacity of labor inspectors to identify and remove children from dangerous labor situations. In Azerbaijan, children without written labor contracts are excluded from protection by the Labor Code, and similarly, Turkey lacks legal protections for children working in small agricultural enterprises.

Gaps in labor law enforcement remain in the region. The number of labor inspectors in Armenia, Turkey, and Ukraine is insufficient for the size of the workforce according to the ILO's recommendation. Labor inspectorates in Albania, Kosovo, Moldova, Serbia, and Ukraine also lack funding for training, equipment, and/or transportation for inspectors, which compromises the quality of inspections.

Across the region, refugee and migrant children, children who have been internally displaced, and children who belong to ethnic minority groups, such as the Roma, continued to experience challenges in accessing education. Despite Turkey's significant efforts to expand access to education for school-aged Syrian refugees, many refugee children living in urban areas remained unable to access education due to language barriers or an inability to pay for tuition and transportation to school. Migrant children, many of whom are Syrian, also faced difficulties enrolling in schools in Serbia. Other common barriers to education in Europe and Eurasia include discrimination, lack of support for Roma children and children with disabilities, and distance to schools. Out-of-school children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

Child Labor Enforcement: How Many Labor Inspectors Is Enough?

Labor inspectors are on the front lines of defense against children's work that is dangerous, exploitative, and jeopardizes their future. Simply put, countries need a properly functioning labor inspectorate with a sufficient number of labor inspectors if they hope to effectively enforce existing labor laws, including those related to child labor. But how can countries determine this "sufficient number?" To answer this question, the International Labor Organization (ILO) has indicated that governments should take into account two important variables: the number of workers employed in workplaces liable to inspection and the country's level of economic development.

This reasonable benchmark should approach:

- One inspector for every 10,000 workers in industrial market economies;
- One inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies;
- One inspector for every 20,000 workers in transition economies; and
- One inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries.

For example, an economy in transition such as Serbia, with a total workforce of approximately 3,141,000 should employ at least 157 inspectors to provide adequate coverage of its workforce. In Serbia's case, the Government exceeded this standard in 2016, employing 240 labor inspectors. However, Serbia is in the minority. Only 39 of the 135 countries covered in this report met the ILO benchmark in 2016, highlighting a concrete area for improvement among many of the countries analyzed. For more information on these standards, see the ILO's Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection, Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy, November 2006.

Latin America and the Caribbean

2016 Regional Outlook

10.5 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor

KEY  = 1,000,000 children

Meaningful Efforts

- Adopted laws prohibiting the use of children in the worst forms of child labor.
- Increased efforts to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking and forced labor.
- Conducted and published research on child labor.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Failure to identify the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.
- Insufficient number of labor inspectors for the size of the workforce to effectively enforce child labor laws.
- Social programs do not have adequate funding to address child labor in key sectors and among vulnerable populations.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, the number of children in child labor continues to decrease. Figure 7 provides an overview of the regional outlook. In 2016, 10.5 million children ages 5 to 17, or 7 percent of all children in the region, were engaged in child labor.⁽¹⁾ This is 2 million fewer children in 2016 compared with 2012. However, children in Latin America and the Caribbean perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and domestic work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. In addition, many migrant children, as well as children of indigenous and African descent, remain particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.⁽¹⁻¹³⁾ In 2016, 10 of the 26 countries covered in this report received an assessment of Significant Advancement: Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, Panama, Paraguay, and Peru. Countries throughout the region made meaningful efforts, including by adopting laws that prohibit the worst forms of child labor, increasing efforts to enforce criminal laws related to child trafficking and forced labor, and conducting and publishing research on child labor. Despite these achievements, additional efforts are needed to prevent and eliminate child labor in Latin America and the Caribbean, including identifying the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, employing a sufficient number of labor inspectors for the size of the workforce to effectively enforce child labor laws, and providing adequate funding for social programs to address child labor in key sectors and among vulnerable populations.

In 2016, two countries made meaningful efforts in relevant areas but failed to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law or practice that was established in previous years that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor: Bolivia, where children as young as 10 years old are permitted to be self-employed under certain conditions, and the Dominican Republic, where some children are vulnerable to labor exploitation due to limitations on educational opportunities.

During the year, countries in Latin America and the Caribbean continued to develop comprehensive legal protections to prevent and eliminate child labor, including its worst forms. For example, Argentina passed a law defining the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under age 18. Panama updated its existing list of hazardous work for children and established a minimum age for hazardous work within training establishments. Dominica also continued efforts to develop a hazardous work list for children, while Chile began the process of updating its own list. In addition, Panama and Argentina became the first two countries in the region to ratify the Protocol of 2014 to ILO C. 29 on Forced Labor, which commits governments to prevent and eliminate forced labor, including of children, and provide victims with protection and compensation.⁽¹⁴⁾ Furthermore, Brazil passed a new law that criminalizes human trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation, and El Salvador approved regulations to strengthen enforcement of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons, including the referral of criminal child labor cases between law enforcement and social services agencies.

Number of Countries in Latin America & the Caribbean that Undertook Meaningful Efforts to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Relevant Areas

Several countries increased efforts to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor in 2016. Belize and Haiti achieved their first child trafficking convictions under recently passed anti-trafficking in persons laws. Brazil trained 120 state police officers on the investigation of child sexual exploitation on the Web, leading to the initiation of 950 cyber-investigations on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Argentina also opened two regional offices dedicated to the rescue and care of trafficking victims, and Paraguay's Office of the Attorney General rescued 35 indigenous workers, including 7 children, who were victims of forced labor on a farm in the Chaco region.

Throughout the region, many countries funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. In 2016, more than half of the Latin American and Caribbean countries covered in this report implemented cash transfer programs in which assistance was conditioned on families sending their children to school. A prominent example is Brazil's Bolsa Familia program, which was expanded for the fifth consecutive year. In addition, Costa Rica's Ministry of Labor and Social Security launched a scholarship program with the Joint Institute for Social Aid to cover educational expenses for children engaged in child labor. Jamaica also introduced a Transportation Allowance Grant to subsidize the cost of school transportation for vulnerable children. Furthermore, many countries made schooling more accessible to impoverished children who might otherwise engage in child labor by providing meals and supplies. Notable examples include the continued expansion of the School Meals Program in Honduras, which now reaches more than 1.3 million students, and the National School Supplies Program in Nicaragua, which provided more than 700,000 packages of school supplies and 3.9 million textbooks to children in need. Many countries in the region also supported regional policies (Table 3) and participated in a regional program (Table 4) to address child labor, including its worst forms. Of particular note is the Regional Initiative, which unites governments, employers, and workers from 26 countries throughout the Latin America and Caribbean region in their efforts to combat child labor in support of Target 8.7 of the UN Sustainable Development Goals.

In 2016, several countries in the region conducted or published research on the nature and prevalence of child labor. Costa Rica, Jamaica, and Panama conducted national child labor surveys during the year, while Chile conducted two qualitative studies on child labor in the agricultural and commercial sectors. Also in 2016, Peru published results from the 2015 National Child Labor

Table 3: Key Regional Policies Related to Child Labor in Latin America and the Caribbean

Policy	Description
Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor	Aims to accelerate efforts to eliminate child labor in the region by 2025, in line with Target 8.7 of the UN Sustainable Development Goals. ⁽¹⁵⁾ Commits the 27 member states to combat child labor through increased regional and intergovernmental cooperation; participation from workers' and employers organizations; and efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. ⁽¹⁵⁻¹⁸⁾ In 2016, promoted the adoption of a policy framework focused on prevention efforts and leveraging existing social protection and education policies and services to combat child labor. ⁽¹⁵⁾
MERCOSUR Child Labor and Forced Labor Policy Initiatives	Aims to prevent and eliminate child and forced labor, including by raising public awareness and increasing coordination among member states. These policies include the Social Labor Declaration of 2015, the United Against Child Labor Campaign, and the Southern Child Initiative. Additional information is available on the MERCOSUR Web site.
XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor	Promotes decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancún, México, in December 2015, participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancún 2015, which aims, in part, to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth. ^(19, 21) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families. ^(19, 21)

Survey, El Salvador published results from the child labor module of the 2015 Multipurpose Household Survey, and Paraguay published results from the 2015 Survey of Activities of Rural Area Children and Adolescents. Gathering such data and making it publicly available allows stakeholders to generate recommendations and implement targeted policies and programs to address child labor.

Despite substantive efforts made during the reporting period, several countries in the region have gaps in their legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor. For example, the minimum age for work in Belize and Bolivia does not conform to international standards as it is set below the age of 14. In addition, 8 of the 26 countries lack prohibitions on hazardous work that conform to ILO C. 182. For example, laws in Belize, Dominica, Guyana, Panama, and Peru provide exceptions to the minimum age for hazardous work that do not fully protect all children under age 18. In addition, Grenada has not established legal provisions identifying hazardous work prohibited for children. Furthermore, prohibitions on child commercial sexual exploitation are inadequate in Belize, Dominica, Grenada, and Guyana. These same countries, as well as Jamaica, Saint Lucia, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, also lack prohibitions on using children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs.

YouthBuild: Building Pathways Out of Violence for At-Risk Youth

© Stephany Rodriguez, CRS El Salvador
Axel Morales, a participant in a USDOL-funded program for youth in high-crime areas of El Salvador, 2017.

At age 16, Axel Morales knew a lot about fending for himself. His father was dead, his mother had abandoned him, and his older brother was at the violent and crime-ridden epicenter of El Salvador's ongoing gang crisis. He wasn't attending school because he couldn't afford the cost of school supplies, and the future looked bleak. He started spending his time on the rough streets around his home in Soyapango, El Salvador, where he was one of the many young people at risk of being recruited into illicit activities – one of the worst forms of child labor. Then Axel's life changed. He met an educator named Carlos, who works for the organization Fe y Alegría (Faith and Joy). Carlos invited Axel to join a program called YouthBuild, which helps at-risk youth like him develop life and technical skills, and supports them in transitioning into their first job. Axel began a sewing course and re-enrolled in the seventh grade through an alternative education program. Through YouthBuild's partnerships with local employers, he is learning how to write a resume and excel at job interviews. His self-esteem and his outlook have improved as a result. "I'm proud to have changed the direction of my life," he said, "I like doing homework and having the opportunity to study again. If I hadn't enrolled in YouthBuild, I would surely have fallen in with the wrong crowd."

The YouthBuild program is supported by a USDOL-funded project in El Salvador and Honduras called Youth Pathways–Central America, implemented by Catholic Relief Services in partnership with Fe y Alegría and Glasswing.

Table 4: Key Regional Social Programs to Address Child Labor in Latin America and the Caribbean

Program	Description
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Américas)	Prevention and awareness-raising campaigns conducted to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, and Uruguay. ⁽²²⁾

Gaps in labor law enforcement remain in many countries in the region. Eighteen of the 26 Latin American and Caribbean countries covered in this report did not have a sufficient number of labor inspectors for the size of the workforce according to the ILO's recommendation. Fifteen countries also decreased their number of labor inspectors in 2016. A shortage of labor inspectors impedes governmental efforts to identify and sanction child labor violations, including in remote areas. The majority of labor inspectorates in the region also lack the necessary resources to carry out their mandates, and labor inspectors in 7 countries do not receive sufficient training. In addition, labor inspectorates in 12 countries are not authorized to assess penalties and 5 countries' labor inspectorates did not conduct targeted labor inspections.

Many countries in the region also need to allocate additional resources for social programs to address child labor. For example, 14 countries in the region need more programming targeting child labor in agriculture; 5 countries – Bolivia, Guyana, Honduras, Peru, and Suriname – need to strengthen programs to address child labor in mining; and 4 countries – Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, and Jamaica – need additional programs to assist children engaged in street work. More programs are also needed for children from rural, indigenous, and Afro-descendant communities to improve access to education and to reduce their vulnerability to child labor, including its worst forms.

Middle East and North Africa

2016 Regional Outlook

3.3 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor

KEY = 1,000,000 children

Meaningful Efforts

- Adopted laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor, particularly child trafficking.
- Increased access to education for refugee children.
- Conducted and published research on child labor.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Hazardous work prohibitions do not adequately protect children.
- Limited capacity to enforce child labor laws due to inadequate resources, including an insufficient number of labor inspectors.
- Insufficient social programs to prevent and eliminate child labor, particularly to assist children recruited and used for armed conflict.

In the Middle East and North Africa, 3.3 million children are engaged in child labor, which is 3.4 percent of all children in the region.⁽¹⁾ Figure 8 provides an overview of the regional outlook. Children perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and armed conflict. In 2016, 3 of the 12 countries and territories covered in the region received an assessment of Significant Advancement: Morocco, Tunisia, and Western Sahara. Countries in the Middle East and North Africa made meaningful efforts by adopting laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor, increasing access to education for refugee children, and conducting and publishing research on child labor. Despite these efforts, additional actions are needed to prevent and eliminate child labor in the region, including by ensuring that hazardous work prohibitions adequately protect children, strengthening the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws, and supporting additional social programs to assist children recruited and used for armed conflict. In addition, Iraq made efforts during the reporting period, but implemented a regressive practice that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor as some Popular Mobilization Forces used children to engage in armed conflict.

In 2016, countries in the region adopted laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms. Tunisia passed legislation that for the first time provides a comprehensive definition for human trafficking crimes, addresses child trafficking, strengthens punishments for offenders, and contains provisions for providing support to victims. Morocco also passed legislation to improve protections for children against child trafficking, as well as legislation to limit the employment of children between the ages of 16 and 18 in domestic work. In addition, Oman issued regulations outlining the occupations in which children can safely work.

During the year, countries also conducted and published research on child labor, and launched and implemented programs to improve access to education and eliminate child labor. For example, Jordan released a summary report of its National Child Labor Survey, while Oman released the country's first major report on child labor.

Lebanon conducted a study on child labor and Tunisia agreed to conduct a national child labor survey with the ILO's assistance. Tunisia also launched a project to build the capacity of government institutions to support the implementation of the Child Labor National Action Plan. Egypt enrolled Syrian refugee children in formal or non-formal education, and Lebanon and Jordan expanded programs to enroll more refugee children into schools.

Despite efforts made to address child labor, some countries have weak legal protections for children engaged in hazardous work. Algeria has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work that are prohibited for children. In Morocco, hazardous work prohibitions do not cover all sectors that may be dangerous and where child labor is known to occur. In addition, Tunisia's hazardous work prohibitions are not comprehensive.

In 2016, inadequate resources hampered the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws in the region. Three countries lacked a sufficient number of labor inspectors for the enforcement of child labor laws given the size of the workforce: Iraq, Lebanon, and Morocco. Seven countries lacked financial resources to enforce child labor laws, and only 7 countries carried out routine child labor inspections. In addition, information on child labor law violations and crimes related to the worst forms of child labor was not publicly available for most countries.

Children in the region were also recruited and used for armed conflict. In Iraq, the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS also known as ISIL), and

Displaced Children: The Impact of Conflict on Access to Education

More than 75 million children are currently out of school in 35 crisis-affected countries, with girls being 2.5 times more likely to be out of school than boys.⁽²³⁾ Although half of the world's 3.5 million refugee children of primary school age attend classes, less than one-quarter of the nearly 1.95 million secondary school-age refugees are enrolled.⁽²⁴⁾ For many displaced children, poverty and policies that prevent parents from obtaining legal work push school out of reach and make child labor more likely. In Lebanon, for example, humanitarian agencies documented a sharp increase in the worst forms of child labor among children in 2015.⁽²⁴⁾ Often children who do not work cannot afford school-related costs, such as fees, uniforms, and notebooks.

Physical, social, economic, policy, and linguistic barriers to education dim children's hope for the future and prevent them from acquiring the tools and skills they need to contribute to their host and home communities. This carries repercussions for the security, stability, and economic well-being of all countries in which these children reside.⁽²⁴⁾ For instance, UNICEF calculated the "total economic loss" from lower lifetime earnings for the 1.9 million Syrian children who dropped out of school within the country over the course of a year due to the conflict to be $10.7 billion. These children's lowered earning potential will also drive up the cost of the aid and government assistance they need in order to survive.⁽²⁵⁾

In May 2016, humanitarian donors and UN agencies launched Education Cannot Wait, a global fund that aims to support education for 75 million children and young people affected by emergencies each year by raising $3.85 billion by 2020.⁽²³⁾ groups fighting ISIS, recruited and used children as informants and suicide bombers, and to oversee checkpoints. In Yemen, the Houthis, Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula, the Houthi-affiliated Popular Committees, tribal militias, and forces affiliated with the Republic of Yemen Government recruited and used children as checkpoint guards and soldiers. Children in Lebanon were also involved in armed violence.

Iraq and Yemen did not have programs to rehabilitate and reintegrate child soldiers back into their communities. Iraqi children, internally displaced due to the armed conflict, also had insufficient access to education. Furthermore, 9 of the 12 countries in the region lacked the programs necessary to adequately address other worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking. Countries in the region also did not establish regional policies or participate in regional programs during the reporting period.

2016 Regional Outlook

70 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor

KEY  = 1,000,000 children

Meaningful Efforts

- Increased resources for criminal law enforcement agencies to combat the worst forms of child labor.
- Adopted policies that aim to increase the capacity of law enforcement.
- Launched new and expanded existing social programs to prevent or eliminate child labor.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Children continue to be recruited and used in armed conflict.
- Key international conventions on child labor have not been ratified.
- Labor inspectors lack the resources necessary to enforce child labor laws.
- Social protection programs are insufficient to address the scope of the problem.

In Sub-Saharan Africa, 70 million children, or 22 percent of all children in the region, are engaged in child labor. Figure 9 provides an overview of the regional outlook. This is the first time since global estimates were released in 2000 that Sub-Saharan Africa has surpassed all other regions in terms of the absolute numbers of children in child labor.⁽¹⁾ Children perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, mining, and domestic work. In 2016, 6 of the 47 countries covered in the region received an assessment of Significant Advancement: the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Ghana, Mali, and Uganda. Other countries in the region also made meaningful efforts to address child labor by providing additional resources for criminal law enforcement agencies to combat the worst forms of child labor, adopting policies that aim to increase the capacity of law enforcement, and launching new and expanding existing social programs to prevent or eliminate child labor. Nevertheless, more work remains to be done to prevent and eliminate child labor in Sub-Saharan Africa, including by addressing the continued recruitment and use of children in armed conflict, ratifying international conventions on child labor, increasing resources for labor inspectors to enforce child labor laws, and adopting social protection programs to prevent and eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

In 2016, 4 countries made meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, but also continued a regressive or significantly detrimental policy or practice during the reporting period that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Mauritania required proof of marriage and biological parents' citizenship in order to get a birth certificate, preventing many children from being registered at birth and accessing secondary education. Sierra Leone did not permit pregnant girls to attend school or take national exams. Somalia recruited and used children in armed conflict in violation of its own law, which sets the minimum age for military recruitment at 18. Tanzania regulated access to secondary education through successful completion of the Primary School Leaving Exam, which students may take just once; however, as students complete primary education at the average age of 14, children in Zanzibar who fail the exam are both barred from formal education and unable to legally work, as Zanzibar's minimum age for work is 15 years.

Three countries also had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident in 2016: South Sudan's national army forcibly recruited and used children in armed conflict; local chiefs in Swaziland forced children to engage in agricultural and domestic work; and Eritrea forced children to participate in agricultural, environmental, or hygiene-related public works projects during the annual summer holidays from school.

Countries increased resources for criminal law enforcement agencies to combat the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Mauritania created new Regional Anti-Slavery Courts to prosecute crimes related to slavery and provide free legal assistance to victims, including children. Niger trained district and magistrate courts on trafficking in persons and illicit migrant smuggling, and conducted awareness campaigns about the forced begging of children. The Government of Nigeria established an anti-human trafficking training center to increase the capacity of law enforcement officials to combat child trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation. The Kenyan police also developed a Child Protection Unit to investigate cases of child exploitation, including commercial sexual exploitation of children. In addition, Botswana sponsored a human trafficking training that included judges, prosecutors, and police officers from 10 Sub-Saharan African countries, and Mali trained child protection officials on best practices for child soldier referrals.

During the year, countries adopted new policies that aim to prevent and eliminate the worst forms of child labor, including several policies that aim to increase the capacity of law enforcement. Gabon adopted an action plan that aims to increase prosecutions for child trafficking crimes and shorten the length of time that victims spend in shelters awaiting trial. Chad approved a national policy that aims to strengthen the capacity of their labor inspectorate to combat the worst forms of child labor. The Central African Republic also launched a National Recovery and Peacebuilding Plan that aims to disarm and reintegrate children associated with armed groups, and Guinea-Bissau adopted a Code of Conduct Against Sexual Exploitation in Tourism. In addition, countries in the region also supported regional policies to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

During the reporting period, countries also launched new and expanded existing social programs with the goal of preventing or eliminating child labor. Mali launched the National Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Program for former combatants, including children. Niger started a program to reduce child labor in agriculture, and Madagascar launched a program with the ILO to reduce child labor in vanilla-producing areas. Many governments in the region also conducted awareness-raising campaigns for targeted sectors, including Sierra Leone's anti-child labor campaigns in fishing and quarrying communities, and Liberia's program to prevent children from street vending in urban areas. In addition, five governments — Ethiopia, Ghana, Malawi, Nigeria, and Uganda — adopted or expanded cash transfer programs to ensure that vulnerable children are able to attend school. Countries also participated in a regional program to combat child labor (Table 6).

Despite the gains made in addressing child labor during the year, Sub-Saharan Africa faced many challenges. In 2016, terrorist activity and civil conflict impeded governments' ability to address the worst forms of child labor. The terrorist group Boko Haram recruited nearly 2,000 children in Nigeria and neighboring countries for use in armed conflict.⁽³³⁾ As a consequence, more than 1.4 million children in Nigeria and the Lake Chad region have been displaced from their homes, and some children have been forced to drop out of school.^(34, 35) In addition, children in Cameroon, Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Mali, Somalia, and South Sudan were forcibly recruited and used for armed conflict by non-state armed groups; children were recruited and used for armed conflict by state armed groups in Somalia; and children were recruited, sometimes by force, by South Sudan's national army.

Although the governments of Mali and Mauritania ratified the ILO Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention in 2016, there is still an urgent need for governments to ratify international conventions on child labor. Nine countries — Central African Republic, Comoros, Gambia, Liberia, Mauritania, São Tomé and Príncipe, Somalia, South Sudan, and Zambia — have not yet ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict. Eight countries — Cameroon, Ghana, Kenya, Liberia, São Tomé and Príncipe, Somalia, South Sudan, and Zambia — have not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography. In addition, five countries have not ratified the Palermo Protocol, including Comoros, Republic of the Congo, Somalia, South Sudan, and Uganda.

Gaps in labor law enforcement remain in many countries in the region. Twenty-nine countries did not have a sufficient number of labor inspectors for the size of the workforce according to the ILO's recommendation, and 41 labor inspectorates had inadequate financial resources to effectively enforce child labor laws. Labor inspectorates in 14 countries also are not authorized to assess penalties for child labor violations. In addition, most countries' law enforcement bodies did not collect comprehensive statistics on child labor and lacked resources and trained personnel.

During the reporting period, 6 countries lacked a national policy to guide efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Most countries in Sub-Saharan Africa also do not have national social protection programs to cope with the effects of poverty and to provide vulnerable children with access to education. Furthermore, many countries in the region do not have social programs that target sectors with a high prevalence of child labor and did not participate in regional programs to combat child labor during the reporting period.

In August, the group reviewed the results achieved under the Plan, and began developing a system to monitor and evaluate activities. ^(31, 32)

Innovation in the Face of Crisis: Responding to the Needs of Children During the Ebola Outbreak

The USDOL-funded Actions to Reduce Child Labor (ARCH) project in Liberia demonstrated a unique approach to reducing child labor in a challenging environment through innovation and holistic design. Amid generational cycles of poverty and exploitative working conditions – and in the throes of the worst Ebola crisis the country had ever experienced – the $6.2 million dollar project, implemented by Winrock International, managed to withdraw 6,100 children and youth engaged in child labor in rubber plantations, prevent 4,000 children at high risk of engaging in child labor, and provide 3,700 families with village savings and loans programs. ARCH also instituted school feeding programs to fight the subsequent rise in food insecurity. These efforts dramatically increased attendance rates for the children enrolled in the program and deterred them from engaging in hazardous work. Critically, ARCH focused on shared community-based solutions by collaborating with the ministries of Agriculture and Education to unite educators, students, parent-teacher associations, and food producers to grow, store, and prepare food for students. To foster accountability and raise awareness, Champion Communities were selected for their success in increasing access to education and reducing child labor in their areas. This holistic best practice has prevented Liberian children from engaging in a cycle of hazardous work throughout their lives.

The U.S. Experience

The Federal Government of the United States has several key responsibilities with regard to children and youth—namely, to help ensure that they are protected from harm, including from labor exploitation, and to provide them with opportunities to learn and prepare for decent, productive work. This responsibility begins with compulsory education for children enforced by state governments and the provision of social protection services to vulnerable children and families by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. Within USDOL, the Wage and Hour Division (WHD) takes the lead in raising awareness about and enforcing federal child labor laws, and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) protects the safety and health of minors in the workforce. WHD enforces the most sweeping federal law that regulates the employment of minors—the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). In addition, the Occupational Safety and Health Act and related regulations, enforced by OSHA, apply to all employees regardless of age. WHD and OSHA work together on investigations and have an active referral process in place for cases involving minors under age 18.

USDOL's Office of Apprenticeship, along with State Apprenticeship Agencies in certain states, administers apprenticeship programs. These programs give participants, including youth age 16 and over, access to 1,000 career areas, the opportunity to earn a paycheck, get hands-on career training, and receive an industry-recognized credential at the end of the program. Instead of being faced with a choice between education and work, these youth are able to participate in high-quality education and employment opportunities, which in turn, reduce their risk of involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

The Federal Minimum Ages for Work

The FLSA sets a minimum age of 14 for most employment in non-hazardous, non-agricultural industries, but limits the times of day and the number of hours that 14- and 15-year-olds may work and the tasks that they may perform.

There were 1,624,000 children ages 16–17 employed in the United States in 2015 and 1,747,000 employed in 2016.⁽³⁶⁾ Despite the restrictions and limitations placed on their work, in 2014, the most recent year for which data are available,

WHD's Outreach and Education Efforts to Prevent Child Labor in Agriculture and Other Sectors

WHD conducts extensive outreach and education to workers' and employers' organizations at the national level.

The WHD maintains the YouthRules! website, a child labor information portal that targets all teenage workers with a user-friendly design, multimedia content, social media links, and a Young Worker Toolkit of teen-friendly resources.

⁽³⁸⁾ The site links to compliance assistance materials for employers, parents, and educators. It also links to important worker resources, including information on filing complaints, federal and state child labor laws, federal and state labor offices, and links to other USDOL and government sites with information for children and young workers. WHD maintains a toll-free helpline (1–866–4US–WAGE or 1–866–487–9243) that provides information about child labor laws.

Country Assessments

Each country in the report receives an assessment to indicate clearly the Secretary of Labor's findings on each country's level of advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period. Each country receives one of five possible assessments: Significant Advancement, Moderate Advancement, Minimal Advancement, No Advancement, or No Assessment.⁽⁵³⁾

1. Significant Advancement Compared with the suggested actions reported in 2015, a country significantly advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor in 2016 if it took suggested actions or made other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in all relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.

2. Moderate Advancement Compared with the suggested actions reported in 2015, a country moderately advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor in 2016 if it took suggested actions or made other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in some relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.

3. Minimal Advancement There are three types of countries that minimally advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor in 2016. The first is a country that, compared with the suggested actions reported in 2015, took suggested actions or made other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in a few relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.

The other two types of countries are those that, regardless of meaningful efforts made in relevant areas, minimally advanced as a result of establishing or failing to remedy regressive or significantly detrimental laws, policies, or practices that delayed advancement in the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Examples of regressive or significantly detrimental laws, policies, or practices include lowering the minimum age for work below international standards, recruiting and/or using children in armed conflict, and continuing to impose administrative barriers to child labor inspections.

- Regression in Law, Policy, or Practice that Delayed Advancement. This type of country made meaningful efforts in a few or more relevant areas but established a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice during the reporting period that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor.
- Continued Law, Policy, or Practice that Delayed Advancement. This type of country made meaningful efforts in a few or more relevant areas but failed to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice established in previous years, which delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor.

4. No Advancement There are three types of countries that made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in 2016. The first is a country that, compared with the suggested actions reported in 2015, took no suggested actions and made no other meaningful efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.

The other two types of countries are those that, regardless of whether meaningful efforts in relevant areas were made or not, had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident, which is considered an egregious form of exploitation.

Complicity can occur when a government is involved in forced child labor at any level of government, including at the local, regional, or national level. Such involvement is "direct" or proactive government action to compel children under age 18 to work.

- No Efforts and Complicit in Forced Child Labor. This type of country made no meaningful efforts, took no suggested actions reported in 2015, and had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident in 2016.
- Efforts Made but Complicit in Forced Child Labor. This type of country made meaningful efforts, which may have included taking suggested actions reported in 2015, but had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident in 2016.

5. No Assessment This assessment is reserved for countries in which the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (fewer than 50), there is no evidence of worst forms of child labor and the country appears to have an adequate preventive legal and enforcement framework on child labor, or when a country is included in the report for the first time or receives a suggested action for the first time. Currently, Burma and certain territories and non-independent countries fall into this category.

How to Read a Country Profile

Country Overview. Each country profile begins with an overview for 2016 in a single paragraph, beginning with a statement identifying the assessment level assigned to the country for 2016. Following the statement of assessment, the paragraph offers a summary of key findings in the country profile. The narrative includes any meaningful efforts taken by a government, defined as efforts in key areas where the government advanced its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The narrative also notes the most common or egregious forms of child labor found in the country and highlights areas in which key gaps in government efforts remain.

Section I: Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of Child Labor The first section of each country profile attempts to provide, to the extent that information is available, a comprehensive picture of the worst forms of child labor in the country.

Table 1, Statistics on Children's Work and Education, contains at least four variables: percentage of working children, school attendance rate, percentage of children combining work and school, and primary completion rate. The majority of the country profiles have data for at least one of these variables. A smaller set of profiles contain data on children's work by sector. The age and methodologies of the original surveys that provide the underlying data vary, and in some cases, the surveys may not reflect the true magnitude of the child labor problem in a country. For some countries, data are unavailable from the sources used in this report.

Table 2, Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity, groups types of children's work by sector, using categories established by the ILO and Understanding Children's Work for national child labor surveys (Agriculture, Industry, and Services), as well as a category intended to capture work understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182 (referred to by the report as "Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor"). Sectors and specific activities performed by children are sorted into these categories according to internationally accepted industry and occupational codes.

Footnote (1) identifies sectors or activities determined to be hazardous by national law or regulation as understood under Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182, and footnote (2) provides the definition of "Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor."

The table is followed by a narrative highlighting additional sector-specific information and social, economic, or political issues that impact the prevalence of child labor, such as barriers to accessing education, or major socioeconomic shocks to the country that may inhibit the government's ability to address child labor, such as a natural disaster or armed conflict.

In 2016, the Philippines made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government released a revised and expanded list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children, and passed the Children's Emergency Relief and Protection Act, which increased measures to monitor and prevent child trafficking and child labor, including its worst forms, during national disasters. The Government also established the Internet Crimes Against Children office under the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division to combat the Internet-facilitated commercial sexual exploitation of children. In addition, the Government updated the Philippine Program against Child Labor, and published the Revised Rules on Labor Laws Compliance System, which prioritizes establishments and workplaces that employ children for joint labor inspections. However, children in the Philippines perform dangerous tasks in the production of sugarcane. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation. Despite the existence of strong mechanisms to respond to cases of child labor, enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the limited number of inspectors, lack of resources for inspections, and inspectors' inability to enter private homes.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Philippines engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation. Children also engage in the production of sugarcane, an industry that is considered dangerous for children in the Philippines.(1-8) The 2011 National Survey on Children indicated that 3.2 million children aged 5 to 17 years old engage in child labor, of which approximately 3 million work in hazardous labor.(9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Philippines.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children, primarily girls, are trafficked domestically from rural communities to urban centers and tourist destinations for the purpose of domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(26, 37) In addition, children are coerced into performing sex acts for live Internet broadcast to paying foreigners and local Filipinos, which usually take place in small internet cafes, private homes, or windowless dungeon-like buildings commonly known as "cybersex dens."(8, 37, 40-43) Research indicates that the Philippines is the top global Internet source of commercial sexual exploitation of children in which exploiters pay between $20 to $150 for a live "sex show."(44-46)

Section II: Legal Framework for the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The second section indicates whether a country has ratified key international instruments related to child labor, including its worst forms. This section also describes a country's legal framework with regard to child labor, including its worst forms, and assesses the adequacy of that legal framework. It begins with a statement about the extent to which the government has ratified key international conventions concerning child labor.

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor. lists the relevant UN conventions concerning child labor. A checkmark indicates the country's ratification, acceptance, accession, or succession to the instrument, given that these actions have the same practical legal effect regarding the substantive obligations of the instruments as ratification. If other relevant international instruments (beyond those listed in the table) were ratified during the reporting period, this may be recognized in a short narrative following the table.

Above Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor, there is a statement indicating whether the government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms, and notes whether gaps remain in the country's legal framework.

Table 4 lists a set of standards that should be established through national legislation in order to fully implement ILO C.182. Please note that, this year, Table 4 indicates where the legal framework met international standards and where it did not, whereas last year the chart indicated the existence of relevant laws.

Footnotes identify (1) if a government does not use conscription for military service, (2) if a government does not have a standing military, and (3) whether an age is calculated based on available information.

Section III: Enforcement of Laws on the Worst Forms of Child Labor The third section describes the roles of government agencies in enforcing laws related to child labor, including its worst forms, and reports on efforts made during the reporting period. It begins with a statement about whether the government has established institutional mechanisms to enforce laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms, and notes whether there were gaps in enforcement, or if enforcement data were missing. Table 6 and Table 7 provide data on labor law and criminal law enforcement efforts, respectively, in 2015 and 2016.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement, lists the agencies charged with enforcing such laws and identifies each agency's role.

A footnote identifies whether an agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period. A subsequent narrative describes gaps in agency responsibilities and/or new information during the reporting period.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Philippines has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the Philippines's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE), Bureau of Working Conditions	Enforce child labor laws; regularly train inspectors and regional personnel. Inspect establishments and monitor compliance with labor laws in all sectors, including in the informal sector and agricultural and mining operations.(1) Register DOLE enforcement activities using the Labor Law Compliance System Management Information System.(70)
Rescue the Child Laborers Quick Action Teams (Sagip Batang Manggagawa – SBM QAT)	Lead the regional mechanism for rescuing children who work in exploitative situations.(25) Detect, monitor, and respond to incidents of child labor using a cooperative and interagency approach.(37, 71) In 2016, rescued 65 children engaged in child labor.(42)
Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD)	Rehabilitate and reintegrate child laborers.(25, 72) Coordinate regional Special Action Units, with at least one dedicated staff member per region to conduct rescue operations for child laborers and cooperate with social workers to manage ongoing cases. Maintain 16 Crisis Intervention Units and 30 residential facilities nationwide, as well as social media accounts, to address cases of child abuse and support child abuse victims, including children exploited in hazardous labor.(16, 37)
Philippine National Police (PNP)	Investigate and prosecute cases related to the worst forms of child labor.(33, 73) The PNP's Women and Children's Protection Center leads the enforcement of laws on child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children as well as other tasks related to the protection of children.(1)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

In May 2016, DOLE issued the Revised Rules on Labor Laws Compliance System, which prioritizes establishments and workplaces that employ children for joint assessments that would involve the labor inspector, the employer's representatives, and the employees. If the complaint on an employer involves a violation of the Special Protection of Children against Child Abuse, Exploitation and Discrimination Act, the Manual on Conduct of Inspection, Rescue and Enforcement Proceedings in Child Labor Cases pursuant to Department Circular No. 02, Series of 2010, will apply. In 2016, DOLE hired 41 additional Labor Laws Compliance Officers and conducted a Training of Labor Laws Compliance Officers on Child Labor Assessment to enhance personnel's capacity to detect and assess child labor incidents. However, enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the lack of resources for inspections.(16, 37, 70) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of the Philippines's workforce, which includes over 42 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, the Philippines should employ roughly 2,783 labor inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(37, 80-82) While the Inspectorate's funding increased in 2016, the Government noted that DOLE's funding for maintenance and operating expenses was insufficient to carry out inspections across the country's 16 regions, particularly in more rural areas.(37, 77)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Committee (NCLC)	Coordinate national efforts to combat child labor under DOLE.(25) Promote information-sharing at the national, regional, and provincial levels.(72) Composed of more than 25 government agencies, international organizations, and trade unions.(13)
Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking (IACAT)	Coordinate, monitor, and oversee efforts to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking. Co-chaired by the Department of Justice and the DSWD.(1, 74) Composed of 24 anti-human trafficking task forces established in eight regions and seven interagency task forces in major seaports and airports. (1, 16, 70). In 2016, established a Memorandum of Understanding to coordinate efforts to combat the trafficking of children.(37)
Inter-Agency Council for the Welfare of Children (CWC)	Operate a monitoring and response system to assist children engaged in armed conflict, including recruitment and use of child soldiers.(33)
Inter-Agency Committee on Children Involved in Armed Conflict	Advocate for protecting children and preventing the involvement of children in armed conflict. Chaired by the CWC.(70) Coordinate and monitor the implementation of the Children in Armed Conflict Program Framework.(1)
Inter-Agency Council Against Child Pornography	Monitor and implement the Anti-Child Pornography Act of 2009.(84) Chaired by the DSWD.(76)

• * Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

In 2016, the Government proposed an executive order that aims to restructure the role of the National Child Labor Committee (NCLC) and allocate funds to support its projects and activities, which would enhance the NCLC's role as the lead coordination mechanism on child labor policy and programming.(37, 85)

Section V: Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The fifth section describes a country's policies and plans to combat child labor, including its worst forms, and development policies that explicitly incorporate the issue of child labor. It begins with a statement indicating whether the government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms.

Table 9, Key Policies Related to Child Labor, lists the country's key policies, providing a description of each policy's objectives and any developments in implementation that occurred during the reporting period.

Footnotes identify (1) if a policy was approved during the reporting period and (2) whether the Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.

The narrative following the table includes findings related to whether existing policies sufficiently address child labor issues, including its worst forms, in the country.

Section VI: Social Programs to Address Child Labor

The sixth section describes social programs launched or implemented during the reporting period that focus on child labor, including its worst forms, and programs that address poverty, education, and other related matters that could have a beneficial impact on child labor. It begins with a statement as to whether the government funded and/or participated in social programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.

Table 10, Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor, lists the country's key social programs and provides a description of each social program, including its activities and accomplishments, to the extent known, during the reporting period. Where possible, programs are hyperlinked to project Web sites for additional information.

Footnotes identify (1) social programs that are funded by the government; (2) social programs that were launched during the reporting period, or (3) whether the government had small-scale social programs with the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.

The narrative following the table includes an analysis of the extent to which social programs were sufficient to address the scope of the problem and/or covered the key sectors in which children are known to work in the country.

Section VII: Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

The last section of each country profile includes a set of suggested actions in Table 11. These suggested actions serve as a roadmap of efforts that individual countries can follow to more fully address the worst forms of child labor. The year in which a suggested action was first provided is listed in the table followed by every year the action was included in the report and not taken.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Philippines has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Inter-Agency Council Against Child Pornography Three-Year Strategic Plan†	Aims to eradicate child pornography in the Philippines by focusing efforts in five strategic areas: (1) advocacy and prevention; (2) law enforcement and prosecution; (3) protection, recovery, and reintegration; (4) research, monitoring, and management of information systems; and (5) partnerships and networking.(86)

‡ The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (REF)

In December 2016, the NCLC announced that it will launch three anti-child labor programs in early 2017 to support the Philippine Program against Child Labor 2016-2022. These programs will establish helpdesks and a local registry on child labor for referral to social services, integrate a new module on child labor with a conditional cash transfer program that will raise awareness of child labor and involve families in preventing and combating child labor, and provide interventions to address child labor in gold mines and improving these children's working conditions.(89)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor*

Program	Description
Child Labor Prevention and Elimination Program (Pantawid Pamilyang Pilipino Program)	DSWD program that provides conditional grants to poor families with children to improve their access to health care, adequate nutrition, and education; implements local awareness-raising campaigns; institutes child labor-monitoring mechanisms; and requires barangays to develop child labor elimination plans. (91-93) Covers 1,627 cities and municipalities in 79 provinces and all 17 regions.(70) As of November 2016, there were 4,389,863 active household beneficiaries who received education and health services. Program will include a child labor module that will impart information on the effects of child labor to project participants and the family's role to combat child labor.(37, 94)
Campaign for Child-Labor Free Barangays †	DOLE program that aims to eliminate child labor in villages through community awareness-raising on child labor and anti-human trafficking laws, and through government livelihood programs and guidelines.(95) In 2016, DOLE declared 79 barangays child labor free, bringing the total number to 292 since 2014.(37) DOLE regional offices certified 28 establishments child labor free, bringing the total up to 210 since 2013.(37)
Livelihood for Parents of Child Laborers (Kabuhayan para sa Magulang ng Batang Manggagawa)‡	DOLE program that provides livelihood assistance to parents, guardians or other family members of child laborers. (73, 96, 97) In 2016, prevented or removed a total of 2,108 child laborers or children at risk for child labor.(37)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of the Philippines.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(25, 73, 96, 103, 104)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Philippines (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor as well as resources available in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2014 – 2016
	Authorize SBM QATs to conduct compliance visits in private homes to search for underage child domestic workers.	2014 – 2016
	Publish information about the training system for labor inspectors, the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review, whether routine inspections are conducted and targeted, and the number of child labor law violations found; and ensure that the total number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor are disaggregated by age.	2015 – 2016
Coordination	Pass the proposed executive order to restructure the National Child Labor Committee and ensure it has the legal mandate and resources necessary to effectively coordinate national efforts to combat child labor including its worst forms.	2015 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure that all children are able to safely access and attend school and do not face prohibitive costs for education-related expenses.	2010 – 2016
Social Programs	Provide necessary resources to help more out-of-school youth access the Alternative Learning System program so they can complete their basic education.	2011 – 2016

Definitions Related to Child Labor

Definitions related to child labor are guided by ILO C. 138 on Minimum Age and ILO C. 182 on Worst Forms of Child Labor. ILO's Resolution Concerning Statistics on Child Labor developed during the 18th Conference of Labor Statisticians provides the international framework for measuring children's work. Below see definitions of key terms discussed in our report.

Working Children

Working children (children in employment) are those engaged in any economic activity for at least 1 hour during the reference period. Economic activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production (principally the production of goods and services for own use). The work children perform may be in the formal or informal economy, inside or outside family settings, and for pay or profit. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child's own household for an employer (paid or unpaid).^(11, 44)

Child Labor

Children in child labor are a subset of working children. Child labor includes employment below the minimum age as established in national legislation (excluding permissible light work), the worst forms of child labor, and hazardous unpaid household services. Child labor is thus a narrower concept than children in employment because child labor excludes children who work only a few hours a week in permitted light work and those who are above the minimum age who engage in work not classified as a worst form of child labor.^(11, 45)

Forced Child Labor

Forced labor under international standards, means all work or service for which the worker does not offer himself voluntarily and which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty for its non-performance.⁽⁴⁶⁾ Forced labor includes work provided or obtained by force, fraud, or coercion, including⁽¹⁾ by threat of serious harm to, or physical restraint against, any person;⁽²⁾ by means of any scheme, plan, or pattern intended to cause the person to believe that, if the person did not perform such labor or services, that person or another person would suffer serious harm or physical restraint; or⁽³⁾ by means of the abuse or threatened abuse of law or the legal process.⁽⁴⁷⁾ It occurs during any of three dimensions of employment, which the ILO characterizes as unfree recruitment, work or life under duress, or the inability to leave the employer.⁽⁴⁸⁾

Forced child labor is a categorical worst form of child labor under ILO C. 182.⁽⁴³⁾ Children older than the minimum age for work are in forced child labor if work is involuntary and under the menace of threat or penalty to themselves or their parents. For children below the minimum age, voluntariness does not need to be established, as children cannot legally consent to work. All children who are made to work as a result of parental forced labor are engaged in forced child labor.⁽⁴⁸⁾

Worst Forms of Child Labor

Worst forms of child labor refers to those activities described and as understood in ILO C. 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor, 1999.⁽⁴³⁾ Under Article 3 of the Convention, the worst forms of child labor comprise:

- (a) All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale and trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, and forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict;
- (b) The use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic purposes;
- (c) The use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs as defined in the relevant international treaties; and
- (d) Work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.

What is Hazardous Child Labor?

ILO Recommendation 190¹ calls on governments to consider the following when determining work that is prohibited for children.

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor

For the purposes of this report, categorical worst forms of child labor refers to child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182. This category does not include the worst forms of child labor identified under Article 3(d) “hazardous work.” See also “ILO C. 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor, 1999.”⁽⁴³⁾

Hazardous Work

Hazardous work refers to the worst form of child labor identified in ILO C. 182 Article 3(d) “work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children.” ILO C. 182 Article 4 directs countries to consult with employers and workers to identify the types of hazardous work that should be prohibited by law or regulation. Hazardous work lists may describe specific activities, occupations, or industries.⁽⁴⁴⁾

Child Trafficking

According to the 2000 Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, child trafficking refers to the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harboring, or receipt of a child for the purpose of exploitation. There does not need to be abuse of power, control, coercion, or fraud present in order to constitute child trafficking, as the definition for adults requires. Child trafficking is also a categorical worst form of child labor under ILO C. 182.

Work which exposes children to physical, psychological or sexual abuse

Work underground, under water, at dangerous heights or in confined spaces

Work with dangerous machinery, equipment and tools, or which involves the manual handling or transport of heavy loads

Work in an unhealthy environment which may, for example, expose children to hazardous substances, agents or processes, or to temperatures, noise levels, or vibrations damaging to their health

Work under particularly difficult conditions such as work for long hours or during the night or work where the child is unreasonably confined to the premises of the employer

ILO Conventions Related to Child Labor

The International Labor Organization (ILO) brings together governments, employers, and workers' representatives of member states to establish international labor standards, develop policies, and implement programs to advance decent work.⁽¹⁵⁾ International labor standards are legal instruments drawn up by these ILO constituents that set out basic principles and rights at work. They take the form of either Conventions or Recommendations. Conventions are legally binding international treaties that may be ratified by member states. Ratifying countries commit themselves to applying the convention in national law and practice and reporting on its application at regular intervals. Key ILO Conventions related to children's work are listed below, along with the minimum ages set by countries related to these conventions. Also listed are countries that have not ratified key conventions or did not establish a compulsory education age that extends to the minimum age for work.

ILO Convention 138: Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, 1973

ILO Convention 138 (ILO C. 138) serves as the principal ILO standard on child labor. Under Article 2(3) of ILO C. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, the minimum age of admission into employment or work in any occupation "shall not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling, and, in any case, shall not be less than fifteen." Countries whose economy and educational facilities are insufficiently developed may initially specify a minimum legal working age of 14 when ratifying the convention. Additionally, under Article 7(1), "National laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work..." Countries that specify a minimum legal working age of 14 years may permit light work for persons ages 12 to 14 years.⁽⁵⁰⁾

ILO Convention 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor, 1999

ILO Convention 182 (ILO C. 182) commits ratifying nations to take immediate action to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Among other actions, ILO C. 182 requires ratifying nations to remove children from the worst forms of child labor and provide them with rehabilitation, social reintegration, and access to free basic education and vocational training; consult with employer and worker organizations to create appropriate mechanisms to monitor implementation of the Convention; take into account the special vulnerability of girls; and provide assistance and/or cooperate with efforts of other members to implement the Convention.⁽⁴³⁾ Recommendation 190 also provides more guidance on how to implement the ILO C.182.

ILO Convention 29: Forced Labor, 1930

ILO Convention 29 is the fundamental convention on forced labor. The convention includes some exceptions for compulsory military service, work as part of normal civic obligations, work as a consequence of convictions, working during emergencies, and minor community services.⁽⁴⁶⁾

ILO Convention 105: Abolition of Forced Labor Convention, 1957

ILO Convention 105 further clarifies Convention 29 as it relates to forced or compulsory labor as a means of political coercion or education or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system; as a method of mobilizing and using labor for purposes of economic development; as a means of labor discipline; as a punishment for having participated in strikes; and as a means of racial, social, national or religious discrimination.⁽⁵¹⁾

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention, 1930

The Forced Labor Protocol supplements existing ILO Convention 29 and requires countries to take effective measures to prevent and eliminate forced and compulsory labor, to sanction perpetrators and to provide protections and appropriate remedies, such as compensation. It also requires countries to develop a national policy and plan of action to address forced or compulsory labor in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.⁽⁵²⁾ Recommendation 203 supplements the Protocol and ILO Convention 29 by providing non-binding guidance on forced labor prevention, victim protection, including access to justice and compensation for personal and material damages, enforcement of laws, and international cooperation.

About the Iqbal Masih Award

The United States Congress established the Iqbal Masih Award for the Elimination of Child Labor in 2008 to recognize exceptional efforts by an individual, company, organization or national government to end the worst forms of child labor.

The award reflects the spirit of Iqbal Masih, a Pakistani child sold into bonded labor as a carpet weaver at age 4. He escaped his servitude at age 10 and became an outspoken advocate of children's rights, drawing international attention in his fight against child labor.

Masih was killed in Pakistan at age 13 in 1995.

To learn more about the Iqbal Masih Award and USDOL's efforts to combat child labor, visit our Web site at www.dol.gov/ilab.

2016 Iqbal Masih Award Recipient: Sonia Pierre

At 13, Sonia Pierre began her stand for workers' rights in the Dominican Republic, leading a march to demand humane working conditions for sugar cane harvesters in the "batey" – the worker settlement in which she grew up.

From the single-room, dirt-floor barrack she shared with 12 siblings and her mother, Pierre's journey took her to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, where her powerful testimony helped lead to a landmark decision protecting children whose lack of legal status in their country of birth left them vulnerable to exploitation, known as the Yean and Bosico v. Dominican Republic case. The case was aimed at reforming the country's birth registration system, and set a precedent regarding the legal status of migrant-descendant children.

Pierre led the struggle against violence and discrimination against Haitians and Dominican children of Haitian descent. Despite threats and intimidation, Pierre fought for children's access to educational opportunities and nationality. She founded an NGO, Movement for Dominican Women of Haitian Descent (MUDHA), to help empower these women and their communities. To help address persistent barriers to education, MUDHA established a school that has served thousands of children. Sonia Pierre's efforts highlighted the link between a lack of nationality and increased vulnerability to child labor and labor exploitation. She continued her work until her death in 2011, at age 48. Her legacy has inspired a generation of youth to continue her work to secure legal identity documentation and educational opportunities for the most vulnerable children in the Dominican Republic.

ON YOUR COMPUTER

All three of USDOL's flagship reports on international child labor and forced labor are available on our Web site in HTML and PDF formats, at www.dol.gov/endchildlabor. These reports include the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor required by the Trade and Development Act of 2000, the List of Products Produced by Forced or Indentured Child Labor required by Executive Order 13126, and the List of Goods Produced by Child Labor and Forced Labor required by the Trafficking Victims Protection and Reauthorization Act of 2005. On our Web site, you can navigate to individual country pages, where you can find information on the prevalence and sectoral distribution of the worst forms of child labor in the country, specific goods produced by child labor or forced labor in the country, the legal framework on child labor, enforcement of laws related to child labor, coordination of government efforts on child labor, government policies related to child labor, social programs to address child labor, and specific suggestions for government action to address the issue.

Easy to slip into your pocket, our USB stores all three reports, as well as fact sheets about ILAB's work, frequently asked questions about each report, and other report-related materials translated into French, Spanish, Portuguese, Arabic, and Russian.

ON YOUR PHONE

Our Sweat & Toil mobile application contains more than 1,000 pages of research from all three reports. Sweat & Toil helps you easily sort data by region, country, assessment level, good, and type of exploitation – all without needing an Internet connection! You can download the free App from the iTunes or Google Play store and access the data behind the App on our Web site: <http://developer.dol.gov/others/sweat-and-toil>.

ON PAPER

Our Findings report is available in a hard-copy magazine format, which provides an overall summary of the report, regional findings related to meaningful efforts made and gaps for countries to address, and the assessment levels of each of the 135 countries. In addition, both Lists are also available in hard-copy format. Send an e-mail to GlobalKids@dol.gov to request hard copies or download them from our Web site: <https://www.dol.gov/agencies/ilab/resources/reports/child-labor/findings/>.

BONUS APP!

Our Comply Chain: Business Tools for Labor Compliance in Global Supply Chains mobile application contains best practices guidance for companies on developing strong social compliance systems to reduce child labor and forced labor in their supply chains. The App includes eight modules ranging from stakeholder engagement to code of conduct provisions, and from auditing to remediation to reporting. Companies that are new to social compliance can work through the modules in order, and more experienced companies can select modules based on their continuous improvement goals. You can download the free App from the iTunes or Google Play store, or access it on our Web site: <https://www.dol.gov/complychain>.

Afghanistan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Afghanistan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The President signed a new Law to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants, hired 14 new labor inspectors, and adopted the Policy on Child Labor in Carpet Weaving. The Government also prosecuted five soldiers involved in a possible case of bacha bazi – a practice involving exploiting boys, often through threats or violence, for social and sexual entertainment – and investigated 60 men in Balkh Province for involvement in such practices. Bacha bazi exists in all provinces of the country, with specific cases documented in the provinces of Balkh, Baghlan, Helmand, and Uruzgan during the reporting period. While some elements of bacha bazi are prohibited under existing Afghan law, the term is not specifically included or defined in the law, making it challenging for law enforcement officials to comprehensively address and compile statistics on these cases. Boys who are victims of bacha bazi are often treated as criminals rather than as victims. In addition, children in Afghanistan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict and forced labor in the production of bricks. Also, Afghanistan's labor inspectorate is not authorized to impose penalties for child labor violations, and the Government lacks sufficient programs to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Afghanistan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict and the forced production of bricks.⁽¹⁻⁶⁾ Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Afghanistan. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	7.5 (673,949)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	41.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	4.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.⁽⁷⁾

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including harvesting poppies (6, 9-11)
	Herding (10, 12, 13)
Industry	Carpet weaving [†] (10, 13-16)

	Street work, including peddling, vending, shoe shining, carrying goods, and begging (6, 10, 15)
	Collecting garbage [†] (6, 15, 24, 25)
	Washing cars (10, 11)
	Selling goods in stores (10, 17, 23, 24)
	Voluntarily recruited children used in hostilities by state armed groups (5, 6)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (6, 26-28)
	Use in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs (4, 6, 10, 29)
	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking (4, 30)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 24, 27, 31-35)
	Forced labor in the production of bricks and carpets, and in begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-4, 16, 24, 36)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are subject to commercial sexual exploitation throughout the country. The practice of bacha bazi (boy play), in which men – including warlords, police commanders, influential tribal leaders, and mafia heads – force boys to provide social and sexual entertainment, is particularly prevalent.(32, 37, 38) In many cases, these boys are dressed in female clothing, used as dancers at parties and ceremonies, and sexually exploited.(32) According to the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission, the practice exists in all provinces of the country.(39) Research has found specific cases in the provinces of Baghlan, Balkh, Faryab, Konduz, Helmand, Takhar, and Uruzgan.(35, 38, 39) A national inquiry conducted in 2014 found that most boys were between the ages of 13 and 16, and that 60 percent of them had been subjected to physical violence, confinement, and threats of death.(32) Some government officials, including members of the Afghan National Police, the Afghan Local Police, and the Afghan Border Police, exploit boys for bacha bazi as well as to work as tea servers or cooks in police camps.(6, 32, 34, 35, 37, 39-41) Some local police commanders abduct boys and use them for bacha bazi.(34, 35) One source indicated that the practice of bacha bazi is the biggest weakness of the police forces.(27) In 2016, the Ministry of Interior ordered police to stop having parties in which boys are dressed as girls and forced to perform dances.(39) In 2016, in Uruzgan Province, the Taliban used boys engaged in bacha bazi to attack policemen who subjected the same boys to sexual exploitation.(27) The police chief of Balkh province stated that some local officials support and defend suspects of bacha bazi.(38)

Children are trafficked both within Afghanistan and internationally. Afghan boys are used for forced labor in agriculture and construction abroad, and girls tend to be used for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work in destination countries, primarily Iran and Pakistan.(4) Children were trafficked for debt settlement, including in the production of bricks and illicit drugs.(3, 4, 10) Reports indicate that girls from Iran and Pakistan are trafficked to Afghanistan for commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 30)

Widespread violence and lack of economic opportunities leads some Afghan children to leave Afghanistan.(42-46) There are reports that the Iranian government and the Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps (IRGC) coerce male Afghan migrants and registered refugees, including boys as young as age 12, to fight in Syria in IRGC-organized and -commanded militias by threatening them with arrest and deportation to Afghanistan.(41) Media reported that there were covert recruitment agencies in Afghanistan and that a Syrian opposition leader has urged the Afghan government to prevent recruitment within Afghanistan.(47) Boys, especially those traveling unaccompanied, are particularly vulnerable to trafficking. Some Afghan boys are subjected to sex trafficking in Greece after paying high fees to be smuggled into the country.(41, 48)

Non-state groups, such as the Taliban and Islamic State in Khorasan Province, recruited children for use in armed conflict, to plant improvised explosive devices, or to act as suicide bombers.(28) The UN verified the continued use of children in combat and non-combat roles by the Government in 2016, including five cases of recruitment by the Afghan National Police, two by the Afghan Local Police, and one by the Afghan National Army, at times using fake identity documents.(6, 37, 41) Low birth registration and falsified identity documents contribute to the problem because it makes the determination of a recruit's age difficult.(49, 50) Observers reported that some officials accepted bribes to produce identity documents for boys stating their age was above 18 years old.(41)

Based on a 2013 report by the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission, about 6 million children are out of school. Barriers to education for children include displacement of populations due to conflict, the use of schools as military bases, distance from school, school-related fees, lack of security, and not being allowed by parents to go to school, particularly for girls.(10, 25, 51, 52) Approximately, 1,000 schools closed in 2016 due to security issues.(53) In 2016, approximately 600,000 Afghan refugees returned from Pakistan.(54) About half of returnee children from Pakistan do not attend school.(55) They are also particularly vulnerable to child labor.(36, 56) Some individuals who facilitate repatriation take returnees to brick factories and keep them in debt bondage to repay their transportation costs.(37)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Afghanistan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Afghanistan's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

In November 2016, the Parliament passed the Law to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants, which repealed the Counter Abduction and Human Trafficking Law of 2008. The President signed the Law in December 2016, and it entered into force in January 2017, when it was published in the Official Gazette.(68) The Law prohibits recruiting, transferring, transporting, harboring, or receiving children for the purposes of exploitation, including sexual exploitation, production of pornography, forced dancing, and use in armed conflict or illicit activities.(68)

During the reporting period, the President's Cabinet began drafting a Child Protection Act to address some worst forms of child labor. The Parliament must review the draft before it is adopted.(6) The current draft law defines and prohibits bacha bazi, although the penalty remains unclear. The draft also asserts that health facilities and parents are responsible for birth registration.(69)

Although forced labor and child trafficking are illegal, research did not find criminalization of debt bondage.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Child Protection Action Network (CPAN)	A coalition of government agencies, NGOs, and community and religious leaders. Receive complaints of child labor, investigate such cases, and refer them to NGO and government shelters that provide social services.(6, 70) Not all provinces have a CPAN.(16)
Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, Martyrs, and Disabled	Respond to complaints of child labor, child trafficking, and child sexual exploitation; refer cases to the Attorney General's Office and NGO shelters; and operate a shelter for trafficking victims in Kabul.(50)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforce laws related to child trafficking, the use of children in illicit activities, and child sexual exploitation.(70)
National Directorate of Security	Identify human trafficking victims and refer these cases to the Ministry of the Interior.(71)
Attorney General's Office	Investigate and prosecute human trafficking, abduction, and sexual exploitation cases.(50)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor.

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (70)	Yes (6)

In 2016, the Child Protection Action Network (CPAN) was the primary mechanism of monitoring child labor cases. It is unknown how many individuals were in charge of investigating child labor complaints in CPAN, but the Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, Martyrs, and Disabled (MoLSAMD) employed 32 labor inspectors.⁽⁶⁾ The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Afghanistan's workforce, which includes more than 7.9 million workers.⁽⁷³⁾ According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Afghanistan should employ roughly 200 labor inspectors.^(70, 74, 75) Government officials, NGOs, and UNICEF acknowledge that the number of labor inspectors is insufficient. Labor inspectors do not have legal authority to enforce child labor laws.⁽⁷⁰⁾ MoLSAMD, in cooperation with CPAN, can respond to complaints of child labor, investigate cases, and issue warnings or refer the case to the Attorney General's Office. A person wishing to file a complaint must specify the legal grounds for labor violations in writing.⁽⁷²⁾

Business owners are not required to allow unannounced inspections.⁽⁷⁰⁾ Based on available information, MoLSAMD only inspects businesses that are registered with the Ministry.⁽⁶⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, the Ministry of the Interior employed two officers in each anti-human trafficking unit throughout Afghanistan's 34 provinces; however, the priority of these units is to combat human smuggling rather than combat the worst forms of child labor.

Government officials stated that they lacked equipment and transportation to carry out investigations.(6) Victims of human trafficking were routinely prosecuted and convicted of crimes.(4, 41) Officials hope that with the adoption of the new Law to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants, victims will be more easily distinguishable from perpetrators because of clearer definitions in the new law.(76) In 2016, the Government made 115 arrests, 63 prosecutions, and 34 convictions for human trafficking crimes; however, it is unknown how many of these involved child victims.(50)

In 2015, the President ordered the creation of a committee to investigate and prosecute cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children by security forces, but the committee never convened.(6, 30) In June 2016, the President ordered an investigation into reports of sexual abuse of children by police officials. The President's Office stated that any official involved in such sexual abuse would be prosecuted and punished, regardless of rank.(77) Officials in Balkh Province began investigating 60 men suspected of using boys for bacha bazi.(38) In October 2016, five Afghan National Army soldiers were accused of sexually abusing a boy, possibly in bacha bazi. All five were arrested and transferred to an Afghan National Army court, where one soldier was convicted of unlawful use of lethal force and sentenced to two years of imprisonment; another soldier was convicted of battery and sentenced to one year of imprisonment.(41) Some government officials contributed to the lack of prosecutions of individuals who subject boys to bacha bazi.(4, 38) The Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission's 2014 report assessed that most men who engage in bacha bazi paid bribes to, or had relationships with, law enforcement, prosecutors, or judges that effectively exempted them from prosecution.(41)

Male child victims of human trafficking, especially those who were engaged in commercial sexual exploitation or were used as child soldiers, were sometimes referred to juvenile detention and rehabilitation facilities, rather than receiving appropriate victim support services.(4, 30, 41, 78) Male child sex trafficking victims, including those subjected to bacha bazi, were in some cases referred to juvenile rehabilitation centers on criminal charges.(41) The UN noted that some children associated with armed groups were kept in detention centers instead of juvenile rehabilitation centers.(28) The UN reported that some of these children were subjected to torture and ill treatment.(78, 79)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government of Afghanistan has established coordinating mechanisms to address certain forms of child labor, research found no evidence of an overall mechanism to combat child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
High Commission for Combating Crimes of Abduction and Human Trafficking	Address human trafficking in general, including child trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Justice; other members include nine ministries and five other entities.(70, 71) In 2016, the Commission met quarterly, and its Technical Committee met monthly.(37)
Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Children and Armed Conflict	Coordinate efforts to eliminate the recruitment and use of child soldiers. Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and monitored by the UN and NGOs.(80)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Labor Policy	Includes objectives to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, including those involving hazardous activities; pass legislation prohibiting child labor; and effectively enforce child labor laws.(15) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
Action Plan for the Prevention of Underage Recruitment	Aims to prevent the recruitment of minors into the Afghan National Security Forces, including the Afghan National Army, the Afghan National Police, the National Directory of Security, and pro-government militia groups. Seeks to ensure the release of children under age 18 from the armed forces and facilitate their reintegration into families and communities.(81)
Policy on Child Labor in Carpet Weaving†	Provides social services to children, as well as incentives for weaving families that avoid child labor. Includes an implementation plan.(82)

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Children at Risk	Creates a framework to provide social services to at-risk children and their families, and guides donors in contributing toward a comprehensive child protection system. Focuses specifically on working children, trafficked children, child soldiers, and other children affected by conflict.(83) Since the adoption of the policy, the establishment of CPANs has been an important achievement in its implementation.(84) However, not all provinces have a CPAN.(16) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects to address child labor	USDOL projects that aim to build capacity of government law enforcement officials and address child labor in the carpet industry. These are Project to Prevent Child Labor in Home-Based Carpet Production in Afghanistan, a $2 million project implemented by GoodWeave; and Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor, a capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 11 countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor.(85, 86) For additional information, please visit our Web site.
Age Verification of New Afghan National Security Forces Recruits†	Joint Government and UNICEF program that operates child protection units in the Afghan National Security Forces recruitment centers. Aims to ensure that new recruits meet the minimum age requirement of age 18 by carefully screening applicants.(87) The process includes an ID check and a requirement that at least two community elders vouch that a recruit is age 18 or older and is eligible to serve.(88) The Government opened 12 new child protection units in 2016.(76) From January to November 2016, child protection units prevented the recruitment of 315 boys and 3 girls into the security forces.(41)

The Government ran public service messages through radio, television, and print media to raise awareness about human trafficking issues.(37, 41) The Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission conducted 60 educational training programs on preventing and combating human trafficking for officials, university lecturers, mullahs, and civil society activists; the programs reached 2,091 individuals.(41)

There is no evidence of programs designed specifically to prevent and eliminate child labor in agriculture or forced child labor in the production of bricks. Research found that shelters and support services for male child trafficking victims older than age 10 were particularly limited.(33, 76) Some boys who are victims of human trafficking are sent to juvenile rehabilitation centers due to the lack of shelters.(37)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Afghanistan (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that debt bondage is criminally prohibited.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Establish a CPAN in all of Afghanistan's 34 provinces.	2016
	Publish information on labor inspectorate funding; the number of CPAN technical advisors dedicated to child labor inspections; training of labor inspectors; the number of labor inspections, including those conducted at worksites and by desk reviews; the number of child labor violations identified and penalties imposed and collected; and whether unannounced inspections were conducted.	2015 – 2016
	Authorize the inspectorate to assess penalties for violations of Afghan law.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that new labor inspectors receive training on child labor.	2011 – 2016

Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO recommendation.	2011 – 2016
	Ensure that the labor inspectorate has legal authority to enforce child labor laws, including by legally requiring businesses to comply with unannounced inspections.	2014 – 2016
	Simplify the child labor complaint mechanism to allow oral complaints, and waive the requirement that the individual filing a complaint must specify the legal grounds for the violation.	2015 – 2016
	Publish data on the training system of criminal investigators, as well as the numbers of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions for all crimes involving the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2016
	Ensure that investigators are available to enforce criminal laws involving all of the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that criminal law enforcement agencies have the necessary equipment and transportation to enforce laws involving the worst forms of child labor.	2012 – 2016
	Ensure that child victims of human trafficking and other worst forms of child labor are correctly identified as victims and are not detained; ensure that victims are referred to appropriate social services, and that children held in juvenile detention or rehabilitation facilities are not subject to mistreatment or torture.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that the committee to investigate and prosecute bacha bazi crimes actively fulfills its mandate.	2016
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including all its worst forms.	2013 – 2016
Government Policies	Implement the National Labor Policy and the National Strategy for Children at Risk.	2016
Social Programs	Institute a birth registration campaign.	2015 – 2016
	Institute programs to increase access to education and to improve security in schools, especially for girls.	2014 – 2016
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture and bonded child labor in brick kilns.	2009 – 2016
	Provide financial support to open shelters for victims of human trafficking and to ensure that sufficient shelter services are available for older male child trafficking victims.	2010 – 2016

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
75. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Albania

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Albania made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government increased the funding allocated to the labor inspectorate and established a task force to assist children living and working on the streets. In addition, the Government implemented the Identification and Protection of Children in Street Situations Action Plan, which aims to protect street children from abuse, exploitation, and neglect. The Government also implemented the Action Plan for the Social-Economic Reintegration of Women and Girl Victims by providing education and social services to girl victims of forced labor and human trafficking. However, children in Albania engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and forced begging. The law does not criminally prohibit using, procuring, or offering children for illicit activities. In addition, the labor inspectorate needs to be strengthened to conduct effective inspections in all sectors in which child labor is known to occur.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Albania engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and forced begging.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Albania.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.6 (23,665)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	5.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		106.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from National Child Labor Survey, 2010.(8)

Albania lacks recent, comprehensive data on children engaging in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and construction, in the country. Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (2-5) Shepherding (9)
Industry	Mining, [†] including chrome (1, 2, 4, 5, 10-13) Construction, activities unknown (1-5) Working in the textile, garment, and footwear sectors (2, 4, 5, 14) Processing fish (4, 5, 15)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Begging (2-5, 16)
	Street work, including vending, washing vehicles, busking, and shining shoes (3, 9, 17)
	Collecting recyclable materials on the street and in landfills (3, 5)
	Working in wholesale and retail trade (1, 2, 4, 5)
	Working in hotels and restaurants (1, 2, 4, 5)
	Working in call centers (4, 5)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Use in illicit activities, including burglary, drug trafficking, drug couriership, and harvesting and processing cannabis (2, 3, 5, 10, 17-20)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 5, 20)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 5, 6, 17, 20)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked internally in Albania and abroad to neighboring and European Union countries for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, including forced begging.(5, 17, 20-22) Internal child trafficking and forced begging has increased in recent years, particularly during the tourist season.(17, 20-22) Street children, especially those from Egyptian and Roma communities, are at the greatest risk of becoming victims of human trafficking.(2, 3, 23)

Albania allows children without a birth certificate to enroll in public schools; however, some children from Roma, Egyptian, and Greek families and refugees may face obstacles in obtaining birth certificates, which may affect their access to social services and school inclusion.(5, 9, 15, 21, 24, 25) Children out of school are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Some Roma and Egyptian children also experienced financial hurdles to accessing education, such as transportation and textbook costs.(5) Discrimination in schools or being physically separated in classrooms are also issues for Roma and Egyptian students.(5, 9)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Albania has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Albania's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 98 of the Code of Labor; Article 24 of the Law for the Protection of the Rights of the Child (26, 27)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 98–101 of the Code of Labor; Article 24 of the Law for the Protection of the Rights of the Child (26, 27)

State Voluntary	Yes	19	Article 9 of the Law on Military Service (32)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes		Article 28 of the Law for the Protection of the Rights of the Child (27)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 22 of the Law on Pre-University Education System (33)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 57 of the Constitution of the Republic of Albania; Article 5 of the Law on Pre-University Education System (33, 34)

* No conscription (35)

The Parliament of Albania presented a draft Code on the Criminal Justice for Children, which seeks to ensure access to education, protection, and rehabilitation for children who commit crimes.(36) The Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth proposed a new Law on the Rights and Protection of the Child that aims to protect exploited working children and mandates reporting of child exploitation cases.(5, 27, 37)

The law in Albania does not criminally prohibit using, procuring, or offering all children under age 18 for illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs. Article 129 of the Criminal Code criminally prohibits only inducing or encouraging children under age 14 to participate in criminality.(31)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth	Enforce laws related to child labor and hazardous work, and monitor the quality of social services provided through the State Inspectorate for Labor and Social Services.(4) Receive, document, and respond to child labor complaints through the Social Services Agency.(4, 6)
Ministry of Interior	Enforce all laws, including laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(4) Coordinate the work of the Regional Police Directorate through the General Directorate of State Police. Investigate child trafficking cases by an officer designated to child protection and an Illicit Trafficking Section assigned to each Regional Police Directorate.(4) Establish the Government's policy on combating human trafficking through the State Committee Against Trafficking in Persons (TIP), chaired by the Interior Minister.(37)
Office of the Prosecutor General	Investigate and prosecute child trafficking cases through the Serious Crimes Prosecution Office.(2, 38)
Child Rights Units (CRUs)	Monitor the situation of high-risk children at the regional level, coordinate protection and referral activities by Child Protection Units (CPUs) at the local level, and manage cases of children whose needs cannot be met by CPUs.(39, 40)

Organization/Agency	Role
Child Protection Units (CPUs)	Identify at-risk children, take case referrals from enforcement agencies, and conduct initial evaluations of each case at the municipal level. Manage cases of at-risk children and refer them to appropriate social services.(2, 40-42) Receive referrals from state police responsible for identifying and referring children in need to the CPUs.

Child Protection Units (CPUs) are generally staffed by only one individual, and a majority of CPU staff are not able to focus on child protection issues full-time.(4, 24) During the reporting period, CPUs handled new cases, however, due in part to decentralization reforms, Child Rights Units (CRUs) have not been functional.(5, 43)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Albania took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Labor Inspectorate Funding	$117,164.47 (5)	$142,953.97 (5)

Unannounced Inspections Conducted	Unknown (4)	Yes (5)
Complaint Mechanism Exists	Yes (4)	Yes (5)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (4)	Yes (5)

The Government has an annual plan to conduct inspections to identify potential dangers to employees. During the summer tourist seasons, the inspections focus on child labor in tourist areas.(5) Due in part to human resource shortages, inspections were not conducted in some fields in which child labor is known to occur in Albania, specifically the agricultural, wholesale and retail trade, hotel restaurants, mining, and informal sectors. In 2016, the 69 inspections conducted at worksites were routine requests required before hiring a minor.(45) While labor inspectors were trained on trafficking in persons (TIP), including child trafficking and proactive identification of TIP victims, inspectors were not trained on hazardous work conditions for children.(5) The total number of labor inspectors decreased from 115 in 2015 to 113 in 2016 due to reduced vacancies.(5, 45) Funding increased to a 10-year high in 2016, although the Labor Inspectorate reported that the budget was insufficient for effective labor law enforcement.(5)

If a child is trafficked for labor exploitation, the agency identifying the child refers the child to the police and state social services and then to an anti-trafficking shelter.(5) If a child is exploited for labor, the identifying agency or individual refers the child to the CPU to create a child care plan.(5) The CPU then refers the child to social services offered by the Government or NGOs.(5)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Albania took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Yes (5)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	N/A
Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (4)	Yes (37)
Number of Investigations	32 (4)	19 (5)
Number of Violations Found	16 (43)	21 (43)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	8 (4)	17 (5)
Number of Convictions	5 (4)	8 (5)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (4)	Yes (5)

In 2016, police, prosecutors, judges, social workers, and civil society group members attended workshops and training focused on TIP identification, services for trafficking victims, and managing children's cases, including children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(5, 20, 45) While the number of investigations and prosecutions of child TIP cases increased in 2016, NGOs noted that, due to police turnover, frequent training for police officers is needed to improve identification of child trafficking victims.(20, 37)

Standard operating procedures exist to identify and refer victims of trafficking, although border police rarely used them during the reporting period.(20, 45) In addition, gaps existed in the screening of minors, including migrants travelling to and from neighboring countries.(20, 45) Criminal law enforcement's national capacity to handle migrant flows is limited due to lack of resources.(46)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
State Agency for the Protection of Children's Rights	Oversee implementation of the Government's child rights protection policies, including monitoring the National Action Plan for the Identification and Protection of Children in Street Situations.(4, 5) Manage cases of at-risk children and refer them to appropriate social services.(2, 40-42) Sanction those that fail to protect children from violence and exploitation by a fine or other means of redress.(40, 47)
Office of the National Coordinator for the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings (ONAC)	Coordinate all anti-trafficking efforts in Albania.(38) Oversee 12 regional anti-human trafficking committees that carry out local action plans in cooperation with civil society partners. Lead data collection and report writing for the National Database for TIP Victims/Potential Victims.(5)
National Referral Mechanism	Coordinate the identification, protection, referral, and rehabilitation of trafficking victims between Government and civil society organizations.(21) Chaired by the Ministry of the Interior's ONAC.(21, 43)

In 2016, governmental institutions, the police, and NGOs created a task force to assist children living and working on the streets in Albania.(5) During the reporting period, the Office of the National Coordinator for the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings conducted two national awareness-raising campaigns and met three times with the Office of the General Prosecutor and the State Police Task Force to identify investigative and prosecutorial shortcomings in TIP cases. These meetings tapered off due to a lack of participation.(20) In addition, coordination between the State Inspectorate for Labor and Social Services and the Albanian State Police has traditionally been sporadic.(5)

During the reporting period, the State Agency for the Protection of Children's Rights (the State Agency) organized a national mobilization plan aimed at raising awareness on violence against children.(50) The State Agency also established a child helpline in every public residential institution for children.(20) In addition, the State Agency set up mobile teams to monitor assigned regions for the identification and protection of children and at the local level to offer assistance to parents.(43)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Strategy for Combating Trafficking in Persons Action Plan (2014–2017)	Outlines a plan to improve law enforcement and prosecutions, build the capacity of programs that provide services to trafficking victims, improve interagency coordination, and train professionals working with street children.(22, 44, 48, 49) Reviewed and updated by ONAC and IOM in 2016 to ensure its continued relevance.(20)
The Action Plan for the Social-Economic Reintegration of Women and Girl Victims (2016–2020) [†]	Increases resources available to victims and attempts to reintegrate girl trafficking victims by providing education and social services to combat future forced labor and trafficking.(50) Part of the Strategy for Combating Trafficking in Persons Action Plan.(5)
Instruction No. 10 on Cooperation and Intervention Procedures for Assisting Vulnerable Children for Institutions and Structures in Charge of Child Protection	Describes child protection responsibilities of the state police, Ministry of Education, regional Directorates of Social Services, regional Departments of Education, schools, municipal governments, CRUs, and CPUs.(40) Requires all agencies to refer known and suspected cases of child abuse and exploitation to CPUs. Outlines principles for case management and evaluation.(40)
Action Plan for the Identification and Protection of Children in Street Situations (2015–2017)	Defines the roles and responsibilities of various ministries and stakeholders in identifying and providing assistance to street children, including children working on the street.(4, 44)
White Paper on the Future of the Integrated Child Protection System in Albania	Clarifies roles and responsibilities of government agencies involved in child protection, makes government policy recommendations on child protection accountability, addresses mechanisms, and creates a child-friendly justice system.(4, 51)
National Action Plan for Roma and Egyptian Community Reintegration (2016–2020)	Aims to provide Roma and Egyptian children full access to education, reduce discrimination, enhance social inclusion, and promote intercultural dialog between different actors in the community.(22, 52)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Under the Social Assistance and Services Law, the Government increased payments to families who are eligible for assistance and expanded the reach of the program.(5) In 2016, the People's Ombudsman drafted a report on migrant unaccompanied minors and distributed flyers aimed to prevent sexual abuse and exploitation of children affected by the refugee crisis.(48) In addition, Guideline No. 14 was passed, which gives CPUs and multidisciplinary technical groups the power to immediately intervene to take a child out of a high-risk situation and place the child into a care institution.(5, 53)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
UN Programs	Support to Social Inclusion (2012–2016) worked with several government ministries to develop informed policies and strengthen institutions on social inclusion.(45, 54) Albania-UN Program of Cooperation (2012–2016) and the Government of Albania-UN Program of Cooperation for Sustainable Development (2017–2021)* includes goals of increased access to education for vulnerable children and protections for child TIP victims.(55, 56)
TIP Hotline and Shelters	The TIP Helpline, Report, and Save Mobile App, created by ONAC and supported by USAID, UNODC, World Vision, and the Vodafone Albania Foundation, provides services to victims of crime, improves prevention of TIP, and serves as a public awareness tool.(21) The National Shelter Coalition [†] comprises one state-run and three NGO-run shelters. The National Reception Center for Victims of Trafficking, under the supervision of the Directorate General of State Social Service, provides shelter and access to social services for TIP victims.(57) The Tjeter Vizion NGO shelter provides services for minors. In 2016, ONAC promoted the helpline through awareness-raising activities.(45) In 2016, $36,500 was allocated to the state-run shelter; 63 TIP victims/potential victims received services, and 95 children TIP victims/potential victims were accommodated in the shelters.(5, 20)
National Emergency Transition Center [†]	Government-run center that aims to provide vulnerable families with housing, health care, psychosocial and educational services, legal assistance, and employment placement aid. In 2016, housed 37 families and 80 unaccompanied children.(5)

Program	Description
Child Allowance Program (Ndihma Ekonomike)†	$46 million government-funded cash transfer program that provides an allowance for families benefiting from economic aid through the Law on Social Assistance and Services. Expanded throughout the country by the 2016 amendments to the law.(58)
Identification and Protection of Children in Street Situations Action Plan (2015–2017)	UNICEF-funded program that protects children from abuse, exploitation, and neglect through an inter-agency plan for the protection of children living and working on the street.(59) Drafted by the Ministries of Social Welfare and Youth, Interior, and Education and Sports. Implemented by municipalities and monitored by the State Agency for the Protection of Children's Rights.(5, 59) In 2016, 24 special mobile teams were formed in 7 municipalities, reaching more than 800 children.(5)

* Policy was launched during the reporting period.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(5, 20, 48)

While some state or NGO-run services were available for children who were forced to beg, research found no evidence that programs were carried out to assist children working in mining.(20, 43)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Albania (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that using, procuring, and offering of all children under age 18 for illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs, is criminally prohibited.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Provide CRUs and CPUs with sufficient staffing and funding to carry out their work effectively and implement decentralization reforms.	2013 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by providing sufficient training and funding, initiate routine inspections and inspections targeted based on analysis of data related to child labor, risk-prone sectors, and patterns of serious incidents.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that police investigators receive frequent training on children engaged in the worst forms of child labor and that enough investigations are carried out.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure that the border police officers properly screen minor children, including migrants, and properly implement the Standard Operating Procedures.	2016
Coordination	Coordinate the task force between ONAC, the Office of the General Prosecutor, and the state police to ensure that all parties participate in meetings.	2016
	Increase the coordination between the State Inspectorate for Labor and Social Services and the state police.	2016
Social Programs	Conduct additional research to further identify children's activities in agriculture and construction to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2016
	Increase resources, access to civil registration, and social services available to children, including Roma and Egyptian children engaged in or at risk of engaging in child labor.	2011 – 2016
	Ensure that barriers to education, such as the prohibitive cost of school supplies, are removed.	2013 – 2016
	Institute programs to assist children being used in mining and forced begging.	2014 – 2016

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation

- includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Algeria made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established the National Committee for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons. Furthermore, it established the National Authority of Child Protection and Promotion to advocate, in part, for children in danger of economic exploitation. It also provided advanced training for government personnel on investigating and prosecuting trafficking in persons and protecting victims, in coordination with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. However, children in Algeria engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging. Children in Algeria perform dangerous tasks in street work. The Government has not sufficiently prohibited the use of children in illicit activities or determined by national law or regulation the types of work that are hazardous.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Algeria engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging. Children in Algeria perform dangerous tasks in street work.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Algeria.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	6.7 (413,729)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	7.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		105.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4 (MICS 4), 2012–2013.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including harvesting olives (1, 2, 8-12)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (5, 8-10, 12, 13)
Services	Street work, including vending, collecting plastics, and begging (1, 3, 5, 8, 9, 14-18)
	Domestic work (1, 2, 5, 10, 19)
	Working in small workshops and businesses, including mechanics shops (4, 8, 10, 11, 19)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 5, 9, 17, 19, 20)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (12)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (14, 15, 17)
	Forced domestic work, including drawing water from wells, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (17)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Evidence suggests that children, primarily unaccompanied Sub-Saharan migrants, are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic work.(5, 20-22) Touareg and Maure human traffickers based in northern Mali and southern Algeria force some Sub-Saharan refugee and asylum-seeking children to draw water from wells; those children are often beaten and robbed of their possessions, including their identification documents.(17, 20) Increased instability in neighboring countries has depressed the tourism sector in the southern region of Algeria, created an influx of migrants, and exacerbated the problem of human trafficking.(23) Some migrants—those from Niger, in particular—keep young children, often not their own, at their side while begging in the street.(12, 20)

Algeria

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS) reported that most underage workers are employed part-time in the informal service industry, in small family businesses (including restaurants, cafés, and workshops), or on family farms.(24) The Government reported child labor was most prevalent in the provinces of Algiers, Oran, Batna, and Constantine.(25) Research could not find a current and comprehensive study on the activities and scope of the child labor situation in Algeria.(1, 5, 26)

Most children with disabilities do not have the opportunity to access mainstream education, partly because of social stigma, the relatively low number of teachers with specialized training, the lack of a transportation system for children with disabilities, and limited accessibility of school buildings.(1, 19) A study by the NGO Doctors of the World determined that a main reason for non-schooling among migrants is the lack of administrative documents.(27) However, NGOs have reported that the number of migrant children enrolled in schools has increased since the Ministry of Education instructed schools to allow migrant and refugee children to enroll.(19, 25) Barriers to education, including those placed on migrant children and children with disabilities, should be eliminated because absence from school increases vulnerability to child labor. Furthermore, because birth certificates are required to attend school, many unregistered children remain out of school and vulnerable to child labor.(25)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Algeria has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Algeria's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 15 of the Labor Code; Article 7 of Executive Decree No. 96-98 on the List and Content of Special Books and Registers Mandatory for Employers (28, 29)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 15 of the Labor Code; Article 7 of Executive Decree No. 96-98 on the List and Content of Special Books and Registers Mandatory for Employers (28)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 303 bis 4 of the Penal Code (30)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 303 bis 4 and 319 of the Penal Code (30)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 319, 333 bis 1, 343, and 344 of the Penal Code (30)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Article 195 bis of the Penal Code (30)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	19	Article 3 of Law No. 14-06 on National Service (31)

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
State Voluntary	Yes	17	Article 14 of Presidential Decree No. 08-134 on the National People's Army (32)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 12 of Law No. 08-04 on National Education (33)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of Law No. 08-04 on National Education (33)

In 2016, Algeria added a provision to its Constitution, prohibiting the employment of children under the age of 16.(25, 34) Algeria continued to work on a bill to amend the Labor Code; it was noted that further discussions among the Government, trade unions, and businesses were ongoing.(12, 22, 25, 35-37) The Labor Code prohibits anyone under 19 from working at night and anyone under 18 from performing work that is harmful to their health, safety, or morals; however, Algeria has not determined by national law or regulation the types of work that are hazardous.(5, 18, 28, 38) In addition, Algerian law does not provide either increased penalties for or categorize as a separate crime the involvement of children in either the production or trafficking of drugs. Also, the law does not criminally prohibit the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS)	Enforce labor laws, including laws related to child labor, through its General Labor Inspectorate, distribute written notices and issue tickets in response to violations, and refer violations to the Ministry of Justice.(8, 19) Supervise the application of laws and regulations related to labor relations, working conditions, and worker safety.(12) Share child labor reports with the Ministry of National Solidarity to ensure follow-up with social services.(12, 14)
Ministry of the Interior and Local Assemblies	Enforce criminal laws related to child trafficking through the Directorate General for National Security (DGSN), which comprises eight active brigades of 77 specialized police officers, focused on illegal immigration and human trafficking and 50 brigades of 300 police officers, specialized in the protection of children.(12, 17, 24, 25)
Ministry of National Defense	Enforce criminal laws pertaining to the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking, in rural and border regions through the National Gendarmerie.(17) Work with DGSN and NGO Algerian Network for the Defense of Children's Rights to administer hotlines for the reporting of child abuse.(14, 24, 39, 40)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute child exploitation cases, including those related to non-compliance with labor laws, through its Office of Criminal Affairs and Amnesty Procedures.(39)
National Authority of Child Protection and Promotion*	Protect and promote children's rights and provide advocacy for children in danger of economic exploitation. Act as a liaison between the Ministry of Justice and members of the public alleging violations of children's rights.(12, 24) In 2016, led by an appointed national delegate.(12) Announced plans in December to set up a toll-free phone number and a website to report physical or psychological violence against children.(12)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Algeria took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Algeria's workforce, which includes over 11 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Algeria should employ roughly 785 inspectors, notably in all geographic areas of the country, both urban and rural.(11, 42, 43) In 2016, the Government reported that it set aside 46 days to train 247 inspectors.(12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Algeria took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown (5)	Yes (25)

In 2016, the National Gendarmerie arrested six individuals in connection with an alleged human trafficking scheme that included 17 children; prosecutions of the individuals are ongoing.(22) The Ministry of Justice prosecuted 117 cases involving illegal employment of children, human trafficking, economic exploitation of a child, or buying and selling of children under the age of 18, with 76 percent of the cases ending in conviction.(24)

UNODC also provided advanced training on investigating and prosecuting human trafficking, and protecting victims to build on the basic training workshop held in 2015. Participants included 12 representatives from various entities and departments that make up the National Committee for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and 23 law enforcement officers of the National Gendarmerie, and the Directorate General of National Security.(22, 44) One hundred police officers from the DGSN's child protection brigades received training on the protection of children who are victims of crime. The Ministry of Justice organized six training sessions for 136 judges on the legal framework for the protection of children, and 60 training sessions on the mistreatment of minors.(25) The Government acknowledged the need for additional training to build the capacity of law enforcement personnel to prevent trafficking in persons, and identify human trafficking victims.(17) The Government has an informal practice in place for law enforcement personnel to refer potential victims of human trafficking to the prosecutor, who then notifies social services as needed.(12, 17, 24)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor	Prevent and eliminate child labor by coordinating between government ministries and all other agencies that oversee labor activities.(8, 40) Led by MTESS, with members from the National Labor Union and NGOs, as well as nine other governmental agencies.(40, 45) In 2016, the commission met once as part of an annual meeting to review policies.(24)
National Committee for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons*	Monitor implementation of the National Action Plan for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, established by Decree 16-249. Comprises representatives from the President's Office; the Prime Minister's Office; 12 ministries, including MTESS; and other government entities.(12, 22, 46) In 2016, the committee was formalized by decree and included a budget; 20 people were named to serve on the committee.(12, 24, 46)
National Entity for the Protection and Promotion of Children	Protect children from exploitation and violence, including child labor.(5)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Aims to prevent and reduce human trafficking by raising awareness of the issue, strengthening legislation, prosecuting trafficking crimes, improving the provision of protective services to victims, and increasing collaboration with national and international NGOs.(12, 17) During the reporting period, the Government did not implement measures of the plan; however, efforts were undertaken to name individuals to the nascent National Committee for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons.(24)

Although the Government of Algeria has adopted the National Action Plan for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of a policy regarding other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Awareness Raising*†	The National Commission for the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor distributed brochures to raise awareness among employers, workers, parents, and children of the negative consequences of child labor on children's health and education and also organized seminars and cultural events and ran an awareness campaign in cooperation with local mosques.(25)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Algeria.

Although Algeria has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Algeria (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws prohibit the use of children in all illicit activities, including using, procuring, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2013 – 2016
	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under the age of 18, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Publish information on the enforcement of child labor laws, including the number of penalties imposed and collected; and the number of criminal investigations, violations, and convictions.	2009 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors in accordance with the ILO recommendation and ensure that child labor laws are enforced effectively in all geographic areas.	2009 – 2016
	Provide additional training to labor inspectors and criminal law enforcement personnel to build enforcement capacity to address child labor violations, prevent trafficking of persons, and identify human trafficking victims.	2015 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure implementation of the National Action Plan for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons.	2016
	Adopt a policy that includes all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Research and publish information on children involved in child labor, or are at risk of being involved in it; specify these activities and publish information to inform policies.	2014 – 2016
	Take measures to register children at birth and remove barriers to accessing education, particularly for migrant children and children with disabilities.	2015 – 2016
	Provide sufficient resources to expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Angola

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Angola made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government drafted a new Penal Code that contains prohibitions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Government also deployed 50 officials to increase birth registration in rural municipalities. However, children in Angola engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor. The gap between the compulsory education age and minimum age for work leaves children ages 12 and 13 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. There are not enough labor inspectors to provide sufficient coverage of the workforce. In addition, social programs do not target all sectors in which children work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Angola engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(1-4)
Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Angola.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	25.7 (694,458)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	65.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	22.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		49.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 2, 2001.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including plowing, planting, and picking tomatoes, harvesting vegetables, and the production of rice (1, 4, 7-10)
	Fishing, activities unknown (4)
	Cattle herding (7)
	Production of charcoal (4)
Industry	Artisanal diamond mining (2, 3, 7)
	Mining coal (1)
	Construction, including making and transporting bricks (1, 3, 4, 11)
Services	Street work, including vending, car washing, begging, shoe shining, and transporting heavy loads (1, 4, 9, 10)
	Domestic work (4)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 4)
	Forced labor, including in agriculture, construction, artisanal diamond mining, and domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 10, 12)
	Use in illicit activities, including the sale and transport of drugs, and moving illicit goods across the border of Angola and Namibia (3, 4)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Undocumented Congolese migrant children enter Angola for work in diamond-mining districts and experience conditions of forced labor or commercial sexual exploitation in mining camps.(3, 7) Girls as young as age 12 are trafficked from Kasai Occidental in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to Angola for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Angolan boys are taken to Namibia and forced to herd cattle.(3)

The Government permitted children to attend school without birth registration, but only up to the fourth grade.(4) Many families face difficulty in paying informal school fees, and many schools do not have enough classroom space for all children.(4, 13)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Angola has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Angola's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 254 of the Labor Law (14)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 3(21) and 256 of the Labor Law (14)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 256 of the Labor Law; Joint Executive Decree No. 171/10 (14, 15)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 18, 19, and 23 of the Money Laundering Law (16)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 19 and 23 of the Money Laundering Law (16)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 19, 22, and 23 of the Money Laundering Law (16)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 4 and 7 of the Drug Trafficking Law (17)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	20	Article 2 of the Military Service Law (18)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 11 of the Military Service Law (18)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	No	12‡	Articles 8 and 17 of the Basic Law of the Education System (19)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 7 of the Basic Law of the Education System (19)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (19, 20)

In 2016, the Government continued the process of revising the Penal Code, which began in 2004. The 2016 draft contains prohibitions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(21, 22) However, laws related to commercial sexual exploitation are not sufficient, as using, procuring, and offering of a child for the production of pornography and pornographic performances are not criminally prohibited.(16)

Angola

The hazardous work list, established by Joint Executive Decree No. 171/10, prohibits 57 activities for minors, including fireworks production, animal slaughter, leather production, paper making, and pornography; however, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not include diamond mining, an area of work in which there is evidence of work conducted underground.(15)

Ending compulsory education at age 12 leaves children ages 12 and 13 vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to attend school but are also not legally permitted to work.(19, 20) In addition, this age conflicts with the National Development Plan (2013–2017), which sets the compulsory education age at 14.(23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Administration, Labor, and Social Security (MAPTSS)	Enforce laws against child labor. Fine employers or send cases to the Ministry of Interior for further investigation and to the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights for prosecution.(24) Employ labor inspectors in all 18 provinces to carry out inspections and joint operations with social service providers.(25)
National Children's Institute (INAC)	Receive complaints about cases of child exploitation, including child labor. Conduct inspections and respond to reports of child labor.(24)
National Police, Border Police, and Immigration Services	Enforce criminal laws and conduct operations and investigations related to the worst forms of child labor.(7)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Investigate and prosecute the worst forms of child labor cases.(24)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Angola took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Complaint Mechanism Exists	Yes (8)	Yes (26)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (8)	Yes (26)

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Angola's workforce, which includes over 10.8 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Angola should employ approximately 271 labor inspectors.(8, 28-30) In 2016, inspectors conducted 369 unannounced inspections in the industrial and construction sectors.(26)

Inspectors from the Ministry of Public Administration, Labor, and Social Security (MAPTSS) work with the National Children's Institute (INAC) and the Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration (MINARS) to ensure that child labor victims receive the appropriate social services.(24)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Angola took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (8)	Unknown
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	N/A

Number of Investigations	Unknown	2 (32)
Number of Violations Found	44 (31)	Unknown (26)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	2 (31)	4 (32)
Number of Convictions	Unknown (8)	Unknown (26)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (8)	Yes (26)

In 2016, the Government conducted two investigations of the commercial sexual exploitation of children and initiated four prosecutions of the worst forms of child labor, one of which involved children exploited for labor on farms.(32)

The National Police and Immigration Services refer victims of the worst forms of child labor to INAC and MINARS to receive social services.(31, 33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate enforcement efforts on human trafficking, including child trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Led by the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights.(34)
National Council for Children	Coordinate the Government's efforts on children's issues, including the worst forms of child labor. Led by the Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration (MINARS), comprises 17 ministries and related organizations.(7)
MINARS	Ensure coordination among various government agencies related to social welfare and victim protection.(7) A network of institutions and shelters protect children from abusive, exploitative, and dangerous situations.(35)
INAC	Coordinate child protection services. Work with MINARS to provide shelter and help reintegrate children found in child labor situations with their families.(24)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Strategy to Prevent and Combat Violence Against Children	Guides the Government's efforts to address violence against children, including physical and psychological violence, child labor, child trafficking, and sexual abuse. Developed by INAC under the Eleven Commitments for Angolan Children policy.(36, 37)
Plan of Action and Intervention Against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children	Aims to protect and defend the rights of child victims of sexual and economic exploitation, including rehabilitation.(38)

[‡] The Government has other policies which may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(23)

Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Plan of Action and Intervention Against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Social Protection Programs [†]	INAC-implemented national network of child support centers that offer legal and psychological assistance, meals, and basic education to crime victims, including child trafficking victims.(3, 31) MINARS, the Ministry of Family and Women's Affairs, and the Organization of Angolan Women operate 52 children's shelters.(3)
Microcredit Project [†]	MAPTSS program that provides cash assistance to parents so that their children do not need to work.(7)
Birth Registration and Justice for Children [†]	Government-run program that makes birth registration free for all Angolan citizens. Aims to expand birth registration coverage of all children from 56 to 80 percent by the end of 2017.(39) During the reporting period, UNICEF supported the Government to train and deploy 50 officials to municipalities in which it is most difficult to deliver birth registration services.(40)
UNICEF Country Program (2015–2019)	UNICEF program, in coordination with the Government, that is designed to plan and implement education and child protection-focused interventions.(41) Collaborates with MINARS, INAC, and NGOs to run a child helpline in Luanda province.(13)
National Institutes of Job and Professional Training [†]	Government-funded program of 555 centers that provides professional training for youth so that they have skills to enter the formal labor market.(7, 42)
Mobile Schools and Free Meals for Children [†]	Ministry of Education program that provides education in mobile schools to migrant children who work with their parents in cattle herding. Specifically targets children at the highest risk of involvement in child labor in southern Angola.(7) Supports some mobile schools with kitchens, which facilitate the free school meals program.(7, 24, 43) Research was unable to determine whether the Government restarted the free school meals program after it was halted in the beginning of 2016.(22)

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(44)

During the reporting period, the Government conducted human trafficking awareness raising campaigns at local universities and on the radio and television.(32) Although Angola has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Furthermore, research did not identify programs that target children engaged in certain worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Angola (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the legal framework protects children from exploitation in child pornography and pornographic performances.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that the law prohibits hazardous occupations or activities for children in all relevant sectors in Angola, including diamond mining.	2011 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
	Increase the compulsory education age to 14 to be consistent with the National Development Plan and the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2016
Enforcement	Publish information regarding the labor inspectorate's funding, the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review, child labor violations found, and penalties imposed and collected, as well as training for new criminal investigators, the number of violations found, and convictions achieved.	2011 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspection system by increasing the number of labor inspectors in order to provide sufficient coverage of the workforce.	2009 – 2016
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2016
Government Policies	Ensure that the Plan of Action and Intervention Against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children is effectively implemented.	2014 – 2016
Social Programs	Develop and expand existing social programs to ensure that all children have access to education and are not restricted by informal fees, lack of birth certificates, and lack of classroom space. Ensure the continuation of the free school meals program.	2013 – 2016
	Institute programs that target children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, and expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2010 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 29. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.
30. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

In 2016, Argentina made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government issued an Executive Decree that determined in law the types of hazardous occupations prohibited for children under age 18 and ratified the Protocol of 2014 to ILO C. 29 on Forced Labor. The Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security conducted trainings on child labor and adolescent work for labor inspectors, government officials, and union delegates around the country. The National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor coordinated government efforts to implement child labor research, strengthen child labor law enforcement, and develop commitments by the private sector to prevent and eliminate child labor. In addition, the Government convened agencies from the UN System for Development in Argentina to discuss plans for the IV Global Conference on Child Labor, which Argentina will host in 2017 in cooperation with the ILO. The Government also expanded the Universal Child Allowance Program to more than 3.7 million children. However, children in Argentina perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Government does not appear to publish comprehensive labor and criminal law enforcement data on child labor, including its worst forms, and social programs that address child labor in agriculture do not appear to address the full scope of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Argentina perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-6) In November 2016, the Government, in collaboration with the ILO, began implementing the National Survey on Children and Youth Activities (EANNA) to assess child labor in urban areas, and planned for a similar survey for rural areas in 2017.(6, 7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Argentina.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.2 (258,286)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	98.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	4.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		101.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Módulo de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes, 2012.(9) Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are for urban areas only. According to UN data, 91.8 percent of the population of Argentina lives in urban areas (see <http://data.un.org/CountryProfile.aspx?crName=ARGENTINA>).

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting blueberries, carrots, cotton, garlic, grapes, olives, onions, potatoes, strawberries, and tomatoes (4, 10-22)
	Harvesting yerba mate (stimulant plant) and tobacco (1-3, 23-26)
	Production of garments (27, 28)
Industry	Production of bricks and wooden crates (6, 12, 29-31)
	Construction,† activities unknown (12, 32)
Services	Street begging and performing, windshield-washing, guarding parked cars (12, 33-35)
	Refuse collection, recycling, and garbage scavenging (12, 19, 33, 36-38)
	Domestic work (33, 39)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Although the extent of the problem is unknown, reports indicate that girls from Argentina’s northern provinces are often victims of human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation.(43, 44) Children of Bolivian immigrants in Argentina engage in child labor in agriculture and domestic service, and engage in forced child labor in the production of garments.(18, 39, 42) Although the extent of the problem is unknown, reports indicate that the trafficking of Bolivian children to Argentina for labor and commercial sexual exploitation has increased.(45–47) Reports also indicate that Paraguayan children are trafficked to Argentina for commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 43, 48)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Argentina has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

In 2016, Argentina ratified the Protocol of 2014 to ILO C. 29 on Forced Labor.(49, 50)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Argentina’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

‡ Age calculated based on available information (64)

In 2016, the Government issued Executive Decree 1117, which determined the types of hazardous occupations prohibited to children under age 18.(57)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS)	Enforce child labor laws, in part through its Coordinating Body for the Prevention of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (COORDITIA). Oversee the National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI).(33, 68, 69) Collaborate with the National Registry of Agricultural Workers and Employers (RENATRE) in enforcing child labor laws in the agricultural sector.(6, 34, 70) Maintain a national hotline through which labor violations can be reported.(35)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Maintain a tribunal for adjudicating disputes in domestic service work and telephone lines for reporting cases of child labor and forced labor.(71)
Office for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims	Provide emergency legal and other assistance to victims of labor and sex trafficking, including child victims. Under the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights.(72) Maintain Regional Offices that coordinate the provision of legal and social services to trafficking victims in the Provinces of Chaco, Chubut, La Pampa, La Rioja, Mendoza, Rio Negro, and Santa Fe.(43, 73–75) Maintain a hotline through which alleged crimes of trafficking in persons can be reported.(72)
Public Prosecutor's Anti-Trafficking Division (PROTEX)	Prosecute crimes of trafficking in persons for labor and commercial sexual exploitation, instruct federal personnel in the investigation of human trafficking, and design criminal policy in human trafficking.(76–78)
National Immigration Directorate	Direct the National Immigration Police, oversee the rights of migrants, and assist in investigating cases of international human trafficking.(79)
Federal Police	Conduct human trafficking investigations through its Trafficking in Persons Division.(28)
Federal Administration of Public Revenue (AFIP)	Ensure employer compliance with national laws, assist in workplace and labor-related inspections, and initiate prosecutions of labor violations through the Penal Section of its Social Security Directorate.(28, 80, 81)

* The Government does not publish this information.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Argentina's workforce, which includes more than 17.7 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Argentina should employ roughly 1,181 labor inspectors.(89-91)

The Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security's (MTESS) Coordinating Body for the Prevention of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (COODITIA) conducted numerous trainings on child labor and adolescent work for labor inspectors, government officials, and union delegates located around the country; some of the participants took part in targeted inspections, including in sawmills and in the cotton, rice, and yerba mate sectors.(6, 84)

Reports indicate that COODITIA refers children removed from child labor through labor inspections to social protection agencies for services.(34) However, research could not determine whether social protection agencies have procedures to reciprocally refer children rescued from child labor to the MTESS for labor law enforcement, in particular in Argentina's provinces. Research could not find comprehensive information on how many children were referred between the MTESS and social services in 2016.(6)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Argentina took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, the number of investigators from the Public Prosecutor's Anti-Trafficking Division (PROTEX), the Federal Police, or other criminal law enforcement agencies dedicated to investigating the worst forms of child labor was not known. Research could also not determine whether agencies engaged in enforcing criminal laws related to child labor had sufficient resources to carry out their mandates.

In 2016, PROTEX initiated 293 preliminary investigations of alleged crimes of trafficking in persons; however, research could not determine the number of these investigations, or the number of violations found through them, that involved child victims.⁽⁷⁵⁾ PROTEX reported that 54 individuals were charged with crimes of trafficking in persons for sexual or labor exploitation; however, the number of prosecutions involving other worst forms of child labor is unknown. During the reporting period, 19 cases of trafficking in persons were prosecuted in federal courts, with 18 resulting in the conviction of 46 individuals. However, research could not determine how many individuals were prosecuted or convicted for other worst forms of child labor.⁽⁹³⁾

The Office for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims and the National Secretariat for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (SENNAF) provide legal and other assistance to survivors of human trafficking.^(45, 72) However, research could not determine the number of child trafficking victims who received these services during the reporting period.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI)	Coordinate national efforts to monitor and eliminate child labor and implement the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor. ^(33, 94-98) Led by the MTESS and re-established in October 2016 to comprise nine government agencies, representatives from UNICEF, the ILO, industry associations, and labor unions. ^(33, 87, 98, 99) In 2016, coordinated government efforts to implement child labor research, strengthen child labor law enforcement, and develop commitments by the private sector to prevent and eliminate child labor. ⁽¹⁰⁰⁾
Provincial Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (COPRETI)	Coordinate efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor at the provincial level, including through Local Roundtables on Child Labor at the municipal level. ^(33, 95, 99, 101, 102) Composed of representatives from government agencies, NGOs, labor unions, and religious institutions; there are 23 COPRETI. ^(99, 101)
National Secretariat for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (SENNAF)	Establish public policies through its Childhood and Adolescence Protectorate to secure the rights of children and adolescents; coordinate child protection efforts with other government ministries and NGOs, and provide assistance to trafficking victims. Overseen by the Ministry of Social Development. ⁽¹⁰³⁾
Child and Adolescent Labor Monitoring Office (OTIA)	Conduct qualitative and quantitative research on child and adolescent labor to provide policy analysis and inform programming to eradicate child labor and regulate adolescent labor. Created through the Undersecretariat of Technical Programming and Labor Studies of the MTESS. ^(95, 99, 104)
Coordinating Unit for Children and Adolescents in Danger of Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Provide guidance to relevant institutions; run workshops and research programs regarding commercial sexual exploitation; and assist children, adolescents, and their families. Formed within the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights. ⁽¹⁰⁵⁾
Federal Council for Human Trafficking	Coordinate government-wide efforts to combat human trafficking. Composed of representatives from the three branches of government and NGOs. Presided by the National Council of Women. ⁽⁶⁾
Executive Council to Fight Human Trafficking and to Protect and Assist Victims	Coordinate executive branch efforts to combat human trafficking. Composed of representatives of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, the Ministry of Security, and the MTESS. ⁽⁴⁵⁾
Network of Businesses Against Child Labor	Develop initiatives to raise awareness of child labor and programs to prevent and eradicate child labor. Formed through a partnership among the MTESS, CONAETI, and the businesses that comprise it. ^(94, 106, 107)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
Third National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (2016–2020)	Aims to prevent and eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, and to regulate adolescent work. Promotes the dissemination of information on child labor, strengthens the COPRETI and creates Local Roundtables on Child Labor, promotes families' livelihoods, strengthens the labor inspectorate, fosters civil society engagement on child labor issues, provides for a more inclusive educational system, raises awareness of the safety and health implications of child labor, and promotes institutional and legislative strengthening regarding child labor issues.(108, 109)
Strategic Framework for Cooperation Between Argentina and the UN System for Development (2016–2020)	Establishes development priorities for Argentina as agreed upon by the Government and the agencies comprising the UN System for Development in Argentina. Comprises five areas for cooperation, including the expansion of social protection floors and the promotion of inclusive and sustainable economic growth, which prioritizes the prevention and elimination of child labor and forced labor, as well as the protection of adolescent workers.(110)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(111)

In December 2016, the Government convened agencies from the UN System for Development in Argentina to discuss plans for the IV Global Conference on the Sustained Eradication of Child Labor, which Argentina will host in 2017 in cooperation with the ILO. The conference theme will include forced labor for the first time, in line with efforts to achieve Target 8.7 of the UN Sustainable Development Goals, which calls for the prevention and elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, and forced labor. The conference will also promote labor market transitions for safe youth employment.(112)

The Government does not appear to have included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Plan on Compulsory Education and Teacher Training (2012–2016).(113)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Universal Child Allowance Program (Asignación Universal) [†]	Government program funded in part by the World Bank that provides a cash transfer to unemployed parents and workers in the informal economy, contingent upon parents' fulfillment of health and education requirements for their children.(37, 99, 114) In 2016, expanded coverage from 3.5 million to more than 3.7 million children.(115, 116)
RENATRE Awareness-Raising Campaigns [†]	RENATRE campaigns that raise awareness of child labor in agriculture and inform families and children of the right to education.(117, 118)
CONAETI Awareness-Raising Campaigns	CONAETI/Network of Businesses Against Child Labor campaigns that make businesses and the general public aware of child labor in sourcing and supply chains.(6, 106)
USDOL-funded Projects to Support Apprenticeships*	USDOL-funded, $3 million Project to Promote Workplace-Based Training for Vulnerable Youth in Argentina (2016–2019) and $1.4 million Promoting Apprenticeship as a Path for Youth Employment in Argentina through Global Apprenticeship Network (GAN) National Networks (2016–2018). Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
Harvest Day Care and Future Programs	COPRETI/Network of Businesses Against Child Labor programs that aim to reduce child labor in the production of crops, in which work is often performed by entire families. Program places children in day care centers with educational programs.(10, 119–122)
Program to Strengthen Schools in Agricultural Areas [†]	RENATRE program that provides infrastructural developments, operating costs, and pedagogical development to rural schools located in agricultural areas, where children may be at risk of child labor.(35, 93, 123, 124)
Campaign to Report Human Trafficking	Government campaign to raise public awareness of human trafficking and to encourage use of the national human trafficking hotline.(75)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Argentina.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(6, 19, 75, 125–128)

Reports indicate that the Universal Child Allowance Program has had a positive impact on the reduction of child labor since it began in 2009.(129-131) However, programs that address child labor in the agricultural sector do not appear to address the full scope of the problem. Research also did not find programs that specifically targeted children engaged in street begging and performing, windshield-washing, and guarding parked cars.

In Argentina, education is compulsory until age 18, which is the qualifying age for participation in many youth employment programs, including most apprenticeships. However, reports indicate that many children, including children ages 16 and 17, do not finish secondary education.(92, 115, 132) Children ages 16 and 17 who have not finished secondary school, and who are legally allowed to work, are often unable to find jobs in the formal sector.(92, 132) Without eligibility to participate in youth employment programs until age 18, these children are at an increased risk of engaging in dangerous work. In addition, without formal training, these children are more likely to remain in informal work as adults.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Argentina (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Publish information on the level of funding allocated to the labor inspectorate.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that there are a sufficient number of labor inspectors to enforce labor laws throughout the country.	2015 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and through desk reviews, as well as on the penalties collected for child labor violations.	2015 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of children removed from child labor, including its worst forms, who received services and the mechanisms by which labor law enforcement and social service agencies reciprocally refer cases.	2014 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of criminal investigators who investigate child labor-related crimes and ensure that they have sufficient resources to enforce laws on the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions for the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that there is a reciprocal referral mechanism between criminal law enforcement agencies and social services for cases of the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Plan on Compulsory Education and Teacher Training.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Expand the coverage and scope of programs that target child labor in agricultural activities.	2012 – 2016
	Develop specific programs that target child labor in street begging and performing, windshield-washing, and parked car caretaking.	2009 – 2016
	Extend youth employment and vocational training programs to children ages 16 and 17 that also allow children to complete their compulsory schooling.	2015 – 2016

8. UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education, both sexes (%). Accessed December 16, 2016; <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Original data from Módulo de Actividades de Niños Niñas y Adolescentes, 2012 Analysis received December 15, 2016. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
91. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO's classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Armenia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Armenia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Armenia is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a law that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. The Government failed to remedy the uncertainty regarding its authority to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws caused by its 2014 repeal of Article 34 of the Labor Code, which previously established the Government's authority to conduct routine labor inspections. Since that time, the Government has lacked a functioning labor inspection mechanism to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by publishing a National Child Labor Survey and adopting the National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons and Exploitation.

However, children in Armenia performed dangerous tasks in agriculture. The Government also lacks a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address all forms of child labor, including its worst forms. In addition, no programs exist to aid children engaged in work activities in agriculture.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Armenia perform dangerous tasks in agriculture.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Armenia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	7.0 (24,602)
Working children by sector	5 to 14
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	95.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	8.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		99.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from National Child Labor Survey, 2015.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including planting and harvesting potatoes (1-7)
	Raising livestock, including cattle breeding, cattle herding, and shepherding (2, 3, 5, 7, 10)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (1, 5-7, 11)
Services	Vehicle maintenance (3, 7)
	Selling food (7)
	Street work, including gathering scrap metal, selling flowers, and begging (1-3, 5, 11-13)
	Working in shops (5, 7)
	Dancing in clubs (3, 5)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 6, 14-17)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 6, 15)

† Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2016, the Government published a National Child Labor Survey conducted by the National Statistical Service in cooperation with the ILO. Survey results showed that a majority of children in hazardous child labor worked in agriculture.(7) Data showed that boys were more likely than girls to be engaged in child labor, and that child labor is more prevalent in rural areas.(7)

Although Article 38 of the Constitution of Armenia and Article 6 of the Law of Republic of Armenia on Education guarantee free universal education, children from low-income families and from families belonging to ethnic minorities continue to have reduced access to education.(18, 19) Children with disabilities also face difficulty accessing mainstream education due to the inaccessibility of the physical infrastructure of schools, a lack of community-based support services for the child and the family, and a general social stigma against individuals with disabilities.(18-21) As a result of these barriers, more than 70 percent of children with disabilities in the care of the state and almost 20 percent of children with disabilities in the care of their families reportedly do not attend school.(21, 22) Changes to the Law on Public Education that came into effect in January 2015 require all schools to be inclusive for children with disabilities by 2025.(19, 23)

The rate of institutionalization of children remained high in 2016. Children enrolled in government boarding schools, orphanages, and special education institutions were likely to experience physical and psychological violence and were at a higher risk of becoming victims of human trafficking.(6, 19, 22)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Armenia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Armenia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 15 and 17 of the Labor Code; Article 57 of the Constitution (24, 25)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 257 of the Labor Code (24)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Law on Approval of the List of Occupations and Work That Are Likely to be Heavy and Hazardous for Persons Under the Age of 18 years, Pregnant Women, and Women Taking Care of a Child under the Age of 1 year; Articles 140, 148–149, 153, 155, 209, 249, and 257 of the Labor Code (24, 26)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 57 of the Constitution; Article 3 of the Labor Code; Articles 132 and 132.2 of the Criminal Code (24, 25, 27)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 132 and 132.2 of the Criminal Code (27)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 132.2, 166, and 261–263 of the Criminal Code (27)

Armenia

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 63, 165, 166.1, and 266.1 of the Criminal Code (27-29)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	Articles 5 and 11 of the Law on Conscription (30)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Articles 4 and 10 of the Law on Military Service (31)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 29 of the Law on the Rights of the Child; Articles 63, 165, and 224 of the Criminal Code (27, 32)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 18 of the Law on Education (33)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 38 of the Constitution; Article 6 of the Law on Education (25, 33)

Children ages 14 and 15 may work restricted hours with the permission of a parent or guardian; however, the Labor Code does not list specific activities that constitute light work.(24, 34)

Although forced labor is prohibited by the Constitution, Criminal Code, and Labor Code, enforcement of this prohibition is hindered by the lack of a definition of “forced labor” in Armenian law.(35)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
State Health Inspectorate (SHI)	Enforce labor laws and impose sanctions for violations.(36) In particular, enforce occupational safety and health provisions through the Oversight Department for Work Safety and other labor laws through the Oversight Department Over the Implementation of Labor Code Norms.(37)
Main Department on Especially Serious Crimes Within the Investigative Committee	Investigate cases of child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children referred to the Investigative Committee by the police.(20, 38)
Department on Defending the Rights of Minors and Combating Domestic Violence Within the Police	Identify and conduct preliminary investigation of crimes in which children are victims or perpetrators.(14, 20) Enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor under the General Department of Criminal Intelligence.(20, 28) Refer identified crimes to the Investigative Committee for further investigation.(20)
Anti-Trafficking Unit Within the Police	Identify and conduct preliminary investigation of crimes related to child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children through a staff of seven field officers. Operate within the Department of Combating High-Tech related (Cyber) Crimes, Human Trafficking, Illegal Migration, and Terrorism of the General Department on Combating Organized Crime.(39) Refer identified crimes to the Investigative Committee for further investigation.(20)
Police Hotline	Receive complaints related to human trafficking and migration issues.(6)

Due to successive legislative changes reorganizing labor inspection in Armenia and a lack of clarity surrounding the legal mandate for conducting inspections, in 2016 the State Health Inspectorate (SHI) was unable to systematically monitor or enforce child labor laws in Armenia.(35, 40)

As part of a broader inspection reform agenda in Armenia, responsibility for conducting labor inspections was transferred from the State Labor Inspectorate, which was abolished in 2013, to the Department of Work Safety Control within the SHI, created the same year.(35, 40) Subsequent changes to legislation regulating labor inspections, including the 2014 repeal of Article 34 of the Labor Code, which previously established the Government’s authority to conduct routine labor inspections, have left the SHI’s mandate to conduct inspections unclear. As a result, a moratorium placed on labor inspections in 2015 is expected to remain in effect at least until the Government’s program of inspection reform is completed in 2017.(35, 40)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Armenia did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

When labor inspections were transferred to the SHI, the number of labor inspectors was reduced from 146 to 60, which the SHI reported was insufficient to fully enforce labor laws prior to the cessation of inspections. The 20 inspectors based at the SHI headquarters are civil servants, while the remaining 40 are contractors.⁽⁴³⁾ The SHI reports that while civil servants must receive training at least once every 3 years, there is no requirement that contractors receive regular training. As a result, the SHI anticipates that the high proportion of contracted inspectors will negatively impact the overall training level and competency of the body of inspectors over time.⁽⁴³⁾

In addition, the SHI lacks sufficient funding, workspace, computers, and transportation to effectively enforce labor laws. SHI officials reported that inspectors are often required to walk to inspection sites to perform inspections due to a lack of transportation.^(41, 43) Inspectors do have the authority to enter the premises of a business during the course of inspections.⁽⁴¹⁾

Although inspectors do not have the right to issue penalties for violations discovered during the course of investigations, the head of the SHI, his deputies, and regional unit managers do have the power to review cases of violations and issue administrative penalties.⁽⁴¹⁾ An SHI official indicated that penalties for violations of labor laws were insufficient to deter violations.⁽³⁷⁾

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Armenia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

The Main Department on Especially Serious Crimes within the Investigative Committee has 40 investigators, 7 of whom are specialized in investigating human trafficking cases, and the Government reports that overall almost 300 police officers and investigators are engaged in investigations of crimes involving children.(38, 41, 44) The Investigative Committee requires that its personnel receive training at least once every 2 years.(41)

Child victims discovered during the course of criminal investigations are referred to the Fund for Armenian Relief Children's Center, where they are provided with specialized social services.(41) A source reported that because not all the children who are referred to social service providers by the police are officially registered as victims, official statistics for begging, forced begging, and commercial sexual exploitation may underreport the scope of the problem.(3)

Research found that although the police work with social service providers when conducting the pre-investigation, the Investigative Committee does not typically work with social service providers to ensure the well-being of the children during the investigation period.(3) In addition, a source reported that law enforcement officials do not receive sufficient specialized training on interviewing child victims of crime, which in some cases can prevent local investigators from collecting sufficient evidence to build a prosecutable case.(3, 40) The Government's implementation of the provisions on victim and witness protection in the Criminal Procedural Code continued to be inadequate due to the lack of an appropriate victim witness protection mechanism and insufficient funding for these efforts.(6, 45)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established coordinating mechanisms to combat human trafficking and ensure the protection of child rights, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission on the Protection of Child Rights	Coordinate activities of state bodies responsible for child protection, assist in developing state policy and programs aimed at the protection of children's rights, and assist in developing solutions to new child welfare problems as they arise. Facilitate cooperation between state and local government and NGOs.(28) Maintain a working group to prevent child begging.(28)
Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking	Implement, coordinate, and monitor government efforts on human trafficking.(15, 28) Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister.(15)
Inter-Agency Working Group Against Trafficking in Persons	Advise, organize, and implement decisions made by the Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking.(15) Composed of officials from all government entities; non-governmental stakeholders participate in regular meetings.(15, 28)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Concept on Combating Violence Against Children	Defines government priorities for combating violence against children and outlines a list of related activities. Addresses labor exploitation of children, especially in rural communities, and commercial sexual exploitation of children, especially child trafficking.(38)

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons and Exploitation (2016–2018) [†]	Aims to improve the legal framework and enforcement of legislation related to trafficking in and exploitation of children. Planned activities include developing tools for identification of the worst forms of child labor, as well as a guide for the proper identification and referral of child trafficking victims.(35, 46) In 2016, the Government conducted trainings for law enforcement personnel on legislation prohibiting the worst forms of child labor.(35)

Armenia's Strategic Program for the Protection of Children's Rights, which outlines the Government's child rights protection program, does not incorporate child labor concerns.(20, 35) The UNDAF Plan for Armenia, which focuses on poverty reduction, also lacks specific provisions on child labor.(21)

Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Concept on Combating Violence Against Children during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO, which supported the publication of a National Child Labor Survey in 2016. For additional information on USDOL's work, please see our Web site.(47)
Family Benefits Program [†]	Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs-funded poverty-mitigation program for families with children recorded in the Family Poverty Assessment System. Families receive a monthly payment based on their financial situation, the number of children in the family, and the geographical location of their home.(41)
UNICEF Country Program for 2016–2020*	Improve child protection systems, including through expanding programs for children in extreme poverty, improving social integration of children with disabilities, and developing a victim-witness protection system.(48)
Day Care Centers [†]	Government-supported day care centers that provide alternatives to working children and daytime centers that provide services for children with special needs.(39)
Shelter for Victims of Human Trafficking [†]	Government shelter co-funded and run by the United Methodist Committee on Relief-Armenia that provides medical, psychological, social, and legal services to victims of human trafficking; access to education for children; and vocational training for adult victims.(16)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Armenia.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(41, 49, 50)

Although the Government of Armenia has implemented programs to address child labor, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in child labor in street work or in agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Armenia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that Armenian law specifies the types of light work acceptable for children age 14-15.	2014 – 2016
	Facilitate enforcement of labor law by codifying a definition of forced labor.	2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Ensure that the legal framework on inspections clearly empowers the SHI to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws through quality inspections, including targeted, complaint-based, and unannounced inspections; and that data on the number and type of inspections, violations, and penalties are made publicly available.	2014 – 2016
	Address deficiencies in the SHI's labor inspection resources, including by increasing the number of labor inspectors; increasing the funding and resources available to the SHI; and ensuring that all inspectors receive an adequate amount of training.	2014 – 2016
	Make information on the SHI's funding publicly available.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that penalties for child labor violations are sufficient to serve as a deterrent.	2014 – 2016
	Protect children by providing law enforcement officials with specialized training on interviewing child victims of crime, and by ensuring that law enforcement officials coordinate with social service providers during investigations.	2014 – 2016
	Implement and adequately fund a victim-witness protection mechanism for criminal proceedings.	2011 – 2016
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including all its worst forms.	2009 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into national policies, including the Strategic Program for the Protection of Children's Rights and the UNDAF Plan for Armenia.	2011 – 2016
	Take steps to implement the Concept on Combating Violence Against Children.	2016
Social Programs	Ensure that all children, including children from low-income families and those belonging to ethnic minorities, have equal access to education.	2010 – 2016
	Increase efforts to prevent institutionalization of children and to ensure the safety and well-being of children currently residing in government institutions.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that mainstream education is accessible to children with special education needs and children with disabilities by improving the accessibility of the physical infrastructure, expanding community-based support services, and ensuring that social stigmas against disabilities do not prevent children from accessing schools.	2014 – 2016
	Implement programs to address child labor in street work and in agriculture.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Azerbaijan

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT REGRESSION IN PRACTICE DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Azerbaijan made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Azerbaijan is receiving this assessment because it implemented a regression in practice that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. In 2016, the Government suspended all labor inspections not based on a formal complaint, imposing a moratorium on inspections during the reporting period. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by providing training for labor inspectors and continuing a cash transfer program for vulnerable families. Children in Azerbaijan perform dangerous tasks in street work, and also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Legal protections for workers only apply to workers with written employment contracts, leaving self-employed children and children working outside of formal employment relationships vulnerable to exploitation. The labor inspectorate lacks sufficient personnel and resources to effectively enforce labor laws. In addition, research found limited evidence of government programs to address child labor in agriculture and street work, the sectors in which it is most prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Azerbaijan perform dangerous tasks in street work.(1-8) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 9-13) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Azerbaijan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.5 (70,034)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	94.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	4.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		103.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(14)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Child Labor Survey (SIMPOC), 2005.(15)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton, tea, and tobacco [†] (1, 3-6, 11, 16)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (3, 5, 17)
Services	Street work, including begging, washing cars, and vending (1-8) Washing cars at commercial car washes (17)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 8, 9, 11-13) Forced begging (8, 12, 13)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Azerbaijan are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation both domestically and transnationally. Street children, many of whom become homeless after they are released from government-run orphanages and correctional facilities, are particularly vulnerable to human trafficking.⁽⁹⁾ Children living in border towns and economically depressed rural communities are also particularly vulnerable to human trafficking.⁽¹⁸⁾

Although Article 5 of the Education Law guarantees free universal education, children with disabilities face difficulty accessing mainstream education. Barriers to education include inaccessibility of the physical infrastructure of schools, and a general social stigma against individuals with disabilities.^(8, 13) As a result of these barriers, only an estimated 10 to 17 percent of children with disabilities are able to attend school. The remaining children are either educated at home or do not receive an education.^(8, 13)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Azerbaijan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Azerbaijan's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 42 of the Labor Code (19)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 250 of the Labor Code (19)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 98 and 250–254 of the Labor Code; Decision 58 of the Cabinet of Ministers in 2000; Article 9 of the Law on the Rights of the Child (19–21)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 35 of the Constitution; Article 144-2 of the Criminal Code (22, 23)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		The Law on Trafficking in Persons; Articles 106, 144-1, 144-3, and 173 of the Criminal Code (24)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 108, 151, 152, 171, 171-1, and 242–244 of the Criminal Code (24)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 28 of the Law on the Rights of the Child; Article 170 of the Criminal Code (24)

State Compulsory	Yes	18	Articles 2, 3, and 12 of the Law on Military Obligation and Military Service (25)
State Voluntary	Yes	19	Article 36 of the Law on Military Obligation and Military Service (25, 26)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Articles 5 and 19 of the Education Law (27, 28)

Azerbaijan

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 5 of the Education Law; Article 22 of the Law on the Rights of the Child (21, 27)

According to Articles 2 and 3 of the Labor Code, the Labor Code applies only to workers with written employment contracts.⁽¹⁹⁾ As a result, the law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working outside formal employment relationships or children who are self-employed.⁽²⁹⁾ The Government introduced both administrative and criminal penalties in 2014 for employing people without an effective employment agreement.⁽¹¹⁾ Although this has strengthened protections for working children by attempting to ensure that all working children work under a contract, self-employed children and children working outside formal employment relationships remain unprotected.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population (MLSP)	Enforce labor laws related to the worst forms of child labor through the State Labor Inspection Service (SLIS). ⁽³⁰⁾
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MIA)	Function as the central executive agency responsible for public security and prevention of criminal offences, including child trafficking and begging. ⁽³⁾ Through the Anti-Trafficking Division (ATD), enforce human trafficking laws, investigate human trafficking violations, and enforce criminal laws related to the use of children in illicit activities. Refer children who are victims of human trafficking to social services for assistance with school enrollment, participation in recreational activities, and obtaining proper documentation. ⁽¹⁰⁾
Commission on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights	Coordinate the enforcement of laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Located in the Cabinet of Ministers. ⁽³⁰⁾
National Referral Mechanism for Trafficking in Persons (NRM)	Refer victims of human trafficking to the relevant authorities to ensure the protection of their rights. ⁽³¹⁾ Refer human trafficking cases to the ATD for prosecution. Led by the National Coordinator and the Deputy-Minister of the MIA and counts a large number of government agencies as members, including the MLSP and the State Committee on Family, Women and Children's Affairs (SCFWCA). ⁽¹²⁾

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Azerbaijan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The State Labor Inspection Service (SLIS) reports that all inspectors receive training on identification of trafficking victims and situations of labor exploitation.(18) The head of the SLIS reports that the number of inspectors was insufficient to fully enforce child labor laws in Azerbaijan.(8)

Under the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings, regional representatives of the SLIS, along with criminal law enforcement professionals, received training on preventing and raising awareness about child labor issues, including information on national legislation and international conventions.(34) Limited evidence suggests that inspectors may not be adequately trained on child labor issues, including hazardous child labor.(11)

In 2016, the Government suspended all labor routine and unannounced inspections, although the inspectorate may still visit a workplace upon receipt of a formal, written complaint. This practice, which was instituted to reduce opportunities for rent-seeking among inspectors, is in effect through October 2017.(8) While inspections may still occur if a complaint is filed, no inspections appear to have been conducted in 2016. The SLIS learned of two child labor violation through written complaints and issued fines of approximately $550.(8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Azerbaijan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (18)	Yes (8)

Although the National Referral Mechanism for Trafficking in Persons (NRM) exists to refer victims of human trafficking, including child trafficking, to the relevant government agencies, research found that the NRM's efficacy suffers from a lack of interagency cooperation and an absence of standard operating procedures for referring victims. In addition, NGOs report that human trafficking victims referred to the NRM by NGOs were not officially recognized as victims by the Government and consequently did not receive government services.(8, 32) Criminal law enforcement personnel identified more than 500 children being exploited in street work, including potential victims of forced begging, during the course of more than 2,000 operations conducted in 2016.(34) However, NGOs report that children were not referred to social services and resumed work almost immediately after being identified by law enforcement officials.(8)

In 2016, the Government reported that it had created a database to collect information on crimes against children, including child trafficking, street work, and begging, but did not make the data collected publicly available or provide further information on the database itself.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the State Committee on Family, Women and Children's Affairs, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
State Committee on Family, Women and Children's Affairs (SCFWCA)	Serve as the primary central executive body responsible for implementing child-related policies.(3) Create and maintain an interagency case management database on child rights.(36)

Research found that both the National Steering Committee on Child Labor and the Control-Coordination Group, which previously tracked absenteeism among children, had ceased functioning prior to the start of the reporting period.(8)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (NAP) (2014–2018)	Aims to identify and combat the causes of vulnerability to human trafficking in Azerbaijan through improved coordination among the government agencies, NGOs, and intergovernmental organizations. Also seeks to improve the identification and provision of services to victims.(37) Places special emphasis on protecting the rights of child victims and preventing child trafficking.(18, 37) In 2016, conducted four trainings on preventing child labor for SLIS and MIA officials.(8)

Although the Government of Azerbaijan has adopted the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (NAP), research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor, including forced begging and hazardous child labor in agriculture. In addition, the NAP addresses many prior international recommendations, but lacks clear indicators of the source and amount of funding. As a result, the NAP lacks the funding necessary for full implementation of associated programs.(18)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL-funded projects supporting the elimination of child labor in Azerbaijan include Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (GAP), implemented in approximately 40 countries by the ILO; and Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP), implemented by the ILO in 11 countries.(38, 39) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site.
Decent Work Country Program (2016–2020)	Aims to promote decent employment opportunities and improve social protection and labor administration mechanisms. Includes a focus on youth employment.(40)
SCFWCA Child Labor Research	In 2016, conducted research in four regions of Azerbaijan on child labor, with a focus on markets, car repair shops, cafes, and restaurants. Children found in child labor situations were removed from work.(34)
Centers for Vulnerable Children†	Government-funded program comprising 13 centers that provide social services to vulnerable children, including street children.(41) NGOs reported that the centers are effective in providing services and may contribute to a reduction in child labor.(11)
Resources for Child Trafficking Victims†	The Government maintains several shelters for human trafficking victims, including the MLSP-run Victim Assistance Center, the MIA-run Baku Shelter, and the State Migration Service-run Reception center.(42) In addition, the Government maintains the Program of Social Rehabilitation and Social Reintegration of Child Victims of Trafficking to assist with the social reintegration of child trafficking victims.(43, 44)
Targeted Social Assistance Program†	MLSP-run program that provides cash transfers to low-income families.(42, 45)
MIA Identification Document Program†	Provides identification documents to undocumented minors who may be street children or victims of human trafficking.(11)

† Program is funded by the Government of Azerbaijan.

Although the Government has implemented programs to address child trafficking, research found little evidence to indicate it has carried out programs to assist children working in agriculture or on the street.

NGO-run shelters that are tasked by the NAP with providing victim services do not receive consistent funding from the Government. Directors of these shelters note that the unpredictable nature of funding prevents long-term planning and capacity building of shelters.(32, 35) Child victims are usually referred to the Azerbaijan Children's Union shelter, where they have access to specialized care.(35) This shelter does not receive consistent government funding and noted that most of its staff worked on a voluntary basis due to the lack of government funding and an inability to receive foreign assistance caused by the restrictions imposed on NGOs over the last 2 years.(32)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Azerbaijan (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children working without a written employment agreement or outside of a formal employment relationship and children who are self-employed.	2011 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Resume regular labor inspections to ensure child labor laws are enforced.	2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors to facilitate effective enforcement of child labor laws.	2016
	Ensure that labor inspectors receive sufficient training on the enforcement of laws pertaining to child labor.	2014 – 2016
	Make complete data on the funding of the inspectorate publicly available.	2015 – 2016
	Make publicly available complete data on the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2016
	Improve interagency cooperation to ensure that the NRM functions adequately and provides needed services to all victims of child trafficking, including to victims identified and referred by NGOs.	2014 – 2016
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2016
Government Policies	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as forced begging and hazardous work in agriculture.	2016
	Ensure the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings receives the funding necessary for full implementation of associated programs.	2014 – 2016
Social Programs	Ensure that children with disabilities have equal access to education.	2016
	Conduct research to determine the extent of children's continued involvement in the production of commercial agricultural goods, and to determine specific activities related to children's work in construction in order to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2016
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture and on the streets.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that NGO-run shelters for victims of human trafficking are sufficiently and consistently funded to provide services to victims effectively, as dictated by the NAP and NRM.	2015 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Bahrain made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government shared labor and criminal law enforcement data, as well as information regarding the coordination activities of the Child Protection Center. In addition, the Labor Market Regulatory Authority posted inspectors at the airport to prevent migrant children from working in domestic service, mandated using only the recruitment agencies that have been vetted by the Government, and more than doubled the number of labor inspectors. Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Bahrain engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has not conducted research to determine the nature and extent of the worst forms of child labor in the country, and it also lacks a policy to address the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Bahrain engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.⁽¹⁾ Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report (Table 1).

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.⁽²⁾

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.⁽³⁾

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Selling products on the street (1)
	Domestic work (1, 4)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation (1)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The Government of Bahrain has not conducted or participated in research to determine the extent to which children are engaged in child labor, including its worst forms.⁽⁵⁾

In Bahrain, citizenship is derived from the father. As a result, children of Bahraini mothers and non-Bahraini fathers may be stateless.⁽⁶⁾ In a limited number of cases, stateless children who lack legal documents, such as birth certificates, have been prevented from enrolling in schools.^(7, 8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bahrain has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Bahrain's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 24 of the Labor Law (9)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 27 of the Labor Law (9)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 1 and 2 of Ministerial Order No. 23 of 2013 (10)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons (11)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No		Article 1 of the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons (11)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Article 1 of the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons; Article 39 of the Child Law (11, 12)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 59 and 68 of the Child Law; Article 30 of the Law on Hallucinogenic Substances and Drugs (12, 13)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 24 of the Defense Force Act (14)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes		Article 59 of the Child Law; Article 113 of the Penal Code (12, 15)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 1 of the Education Act (16)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 7 of the Education Act (16)

* No conscription (14)

The minimum age protection in the Labor Law does not apply to children in certain sectors, such as domestic work in third-party homes.(9) Laws related to child trafficking are not sufficient as trafficking for the purposes of child commercial sexual exploitation is not criminally prohibited.

The law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, as the use of children for prostitution, and the offering, procuring, and use of children for production of pornography and pornographic performances are not criminally prohibited.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Development	Enforce child labor laws, along with the Labor Market Regulatory Authority. Take the lead role in initial mediation to resolve violations of the Labor Law.(1) Refer violations that are not resolved through mediation to the Public Prosecutor's Office. Maintain a hotline to receive criminal complaints of child labor, including its worst forms.(1)
Labor Market Regulatory Authority	Issue work visas to ensure that individuals coming to Bahrain as migrant workers are at least age 18.(5) Enforce the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons.(1) Maintain a hotline to assist migrant workers.(17)
Police Department of the Ministry of Interior	Enforce criminal laws that prohibit the worst forms of child labor. Oversee the 12-person Criminal Investigations Directorate that investigates potential cases of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(18) Refer any identified child victims of human trafficking or illicit activities to the Center for Child Protection.(5) Maintain a hotline to receive criminal complaints of child trafficking.(19)
Public Prosecutor's Office	Prosecute crimes related to child labor and human trafficking.(20)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Bahrain took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2016, the Labor Market Regulatory Authority employed 70 inspectors to conduct 15,000 to 17,000 inspections to ensure compliance with laws, including the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons. No cases of worst forms of child labor were detected in the reporting period.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Protection Center	Meet weekly and coordinate efforts of five government ministries to address cases of child abuse, including child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. Led by the Ministry of Labor and Social Development.(4)
National Committee on Combating Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate policies and laws to combat human trafficking and organize educational and outreach campaigns to raise awareness on trafficking in persons.(23) Led by the Labor Market Regulatory Authority; other members include representatives from eight state entities, plus NGOs.(1)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government of Bahrain funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Protection Center†	In charge of coordination; also provides services, including educational and psychological services and, in extreme cases, placement in foster care.(24)

† Program is funded by the Government of Bahrain.

The Labor Market Regulatory Authority has detected isolated cases of children entering Bahrain with falsified documents to work as domestic workers. In response, this agency posted inspectors at the Bahrain airport to monitor migrant workers and prevent suspected cases of child recruitment.(4) It also mandated using 1 of the 120 preferred recruitment agencies to ensure compliance with laws and regulations.(4, 25)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bahrain (Table 10).

Table 10. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions do not exclude children in certain sectors, including in domestic work.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that child trafficking laws criminally prohibit the trafficking of children for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation.	2016
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit all aspects of commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Publish data on the labor inspectorate funding, the initial training for new inspectors, and the number of inspections conducted at worksites.	2009 – 2016
	Publish data on the initial training for new criminal investigators.	2013 – 2016
Government Policies	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2016
Social Programs	Conduct a comprehensive study of children's activities to determine the extent to which children may be engaged in or at risk for involvement in child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure universal access to education, particularly for stateless children.	2010 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Bangladesh

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Bangladesh made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Education Act of 2016, which makes education compulsory through eighth grade (age 14), was drafted and endorsed by the Prime Minister's cabinet but has not yet been adopted by Parliament. However, children in Bangladesh perform dangerous tasks in garment production. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor in the production of dried fish and bricks. The labor law does not prohibit children from working in informal economic sectors, including in domestic work, on the streets, and in small-scale agriculture. The law also does not specify the activities and number of hours per week of light work that are permitted for children ages 12 and 13. In addition, the number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Bangladesh's workforce, and fines are inadequate to deter child labor law violations.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bangladesh perform dangerous tasks in garment production. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor in the production of dried fish and bricks.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bangladesh.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.3 (1,326,411)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	89.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	1.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.5

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Labour Force Survey, 2013.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including harvesting and processing crops, including tobacco, raising poultry, grazing cattle, gathering honey, and harvesting tea leaves (6-10)
	Drying and processing fish (7, 8, 10)
	Harvesting and processing shrimp (11-13)
Industry	Quarrying and mining, including salt† (8, 14)
	Producing garments, textiles (jute), leather,† footwear,† and imitation jewelry† (1, 7, 15-23)
	Manufacturing bricks,† glass,† hand-rolled cigarettes (bidis),† matches,† soap,† furniture (steel),† aluminum products,† metal utensils, plastic products,† and melamine products (7, 8, 18, 24-29)
	Ship breaking† (13, 30, 31)
	Carpentry, welding,† construction,† and breaking bricks† and stones† (1, 8, 13, 32, 33)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Domestic work (1, 34-36)
	Working in transportation, pulling rickshaws, and street work, including garbage picking, recycling,† vending, begging, shoe repairing, and portering (1, 8, 10, 13, 14, 37)
	Working in hotels, restaurants, bakeries,† and retail and grocery shops (1, 8, 10, 14, 18, 32)
	Repairing automobiles† (10, 14, 32)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in the drying of fish and the production of bricks (2, 3, 7, 28, 38)
	Forced begging (3, 10)
	Use in illicit activities, including smuggling and selling drugs (7, 10, 39)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 40, 41)
	Forced domestic work (3, 7, 10, 42)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

According to the National Education Policy, education is free and compulsory in Bangladesh through eighth grade (age 14). However, several factors contribute to children not attending school, such as inadequate access to water and sanitation facilities and the costs associated with education, including books and uniforms.(8, 43)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bangladesh has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Bangladesh's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	14	Section 34 of the Bangladesh Labor Act (44)

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Sections 372 and 373 of the Penal Code; Sections 78 and 80 of the Children's Act; Sections 3 and 6 of the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act; Section 8 of the Pornography Control Act (46, 47, 49, 50)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Section 79 of the Children's Act (49)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	16, 17	Air Force and Army regulation titles unknown (51, 52)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	No	11	Section 2 of the Primary Education (Compulsory) Act (53)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 17 of the Constitution (54)

* No conscription (55)

In 2016, the Education Act was drafted and endorsed by the Prime Minister's cabinet. After it is adopted by Parliament, this law will make education compulsory through eighth grade (age 14) and bring Bangladesh into compliance with international standards.(43) The 2010 National Education Policy raised the age of compulsory education from fifth grade (age 10) through eighth grade (age 14); however, until the legal framework is amended to reflect the new compulsory education age, the policy is not enforceable.(13, 56)

The Bangladesh Labor Act does not cover the informal economic sectors in which child labor is most prevalent, including domestic work, street work, and work on small agricultural farms with fewer than five employees.(44, 57, 58) Also, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover garment production and fish drying; both are areas of work in which there is evidence that children work in unsafe and unhealthy environments for long periods of time.(45)

Although the labor law stipulates that children older than 12 may engage in light work that does not endanger their health or interfere with their education, the law does not specify the activities or the number of hours per week that light work is permitted.(44)

In addition, the use of children in pornographic performances is not criminally prohibited.(47, 59) The use of children in the production of drugs is also not criminally prohibited.(49) The legal framework also does not prohibit the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.(60)

Research did not uncover a public version of the military regulations that set the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments	Enforce labor laws, including those relating to child labor and hazardous child labor.(61)
Bangladesh Police	Enforce Penal Code provisions protecting children from forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. (57, 62) In the case of the Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Monitoring Cell, investigate cases of human trafficking and enforce anti-trafficking provisions of the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act.(63)
Bangladesh Labor Court	Prosecute labor law violations, including those related to child labor, and impose fines or sanctions against employers.(64)

Organization/Agency	Role
Child Protection Networks	Respond to violations against children, including child labor. Comprises officials from various agencies with mandates to protect children, prosecute violations, monitor interventions, and develop referral mechanisms at the district and sub-district levels between law enforcement and social welfare services.(10)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2015	2016

Unannounced Inspections Conducted	Yes (7)	Yes (65)
Complaint Mechanism Exists	Yes (65)	Yes (61)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	No (65)	No (61)

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Bangladesh's workforce, which includes more than 83 million workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Bangladesh should employ 2,090 inspectors.(66-68) Reports indicate that inspections rarely occur at unregistered factories and establishments, where children are more likely to be employed.(11, 43, 69)

In addition, the penalty of a $62 fine for a child labor law violation is an insufficient deterrent.(70, 71) According to the Ministry of Labor and Employment, information on penalties imposed and fines collected resides with the labor courts.(64) Although research did not reveal information about penalties for cases in 2015, the Government reported that the cases in 2016 are under trial, and penalties have not yet been imposed.(61)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	Unknown
Number of Convictions	Unknown	Unknown
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (63)	Yes (63)

The Government reported that in 2016 it initiated investigations for 168 cases related to forced labor and 122 cases related to sex trafficking. Five children were identified as human trafficking victims, but the nature of the crimes was not provided.(73) The Government also reported that two child trafficking victims were rescued, repatriated, and rehabilitated.(73) However, the TIP Monitoring Cell reportedly lacked the necessary funds and staff to sufficiently address cases of child trafficking.(75) In addition, there is a report that the Child Protection Networks are not operating 2 years after their launch due to a lack of funds.(76)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body
National Child Labor Welfare Council	Coordinate efforts undertaken by various government agencies to eliminate child labor and assess and provide advice on the implementation of the National Child Labor Elimination Policy. Chaired by the Ministry of Labor and Employment, comprises officials representing relevant government ministries, international organizations, child advocacy groups, and employer and worker organizations.(77) Two divisional level councils met for the first time in January 2016.(7)
Counter-Trafficking National Coordination Committee, Ministry of Home Affairs (MHA)	Coordinate the work of government agencies and international and local NGOs on international and domestic human trafficking, including child trafficking, through bimonthly meetings.(63) Oversee district counter-trafficking committees, which manage counter-trafficking committees for sub-districts and smaller administrative units.(63, 78, 79)
Rescue, Recovery, Repatriation, and Integration Task Force, MHA	Coordinate Bangladesh and India efforts to rescue, recover, repatriate, and reintegrate victims of human trafficking, particularly children. Liaise with various ministries, government departments, NGOs, and international organizations that assist trafficked children.(79, 80)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor†

Policy	Description
Child Labor National Plan of Action (2012–2016)	Identified strategies for developing institutional capacity, increasing access to education and health services, raising social awareness, strengthening law enforcement, and creating prevention and reintegration programs.(81)
Domestic Workers Protection and Welfare Policy	Sets the minimum age for domestic work at 14 years; however, children between ages 12 and 13 can work as domestic workers with parental permission.(82) However, is not legally enforceable.(59)
National Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking (2015–2017)	Establishes goals to meet international standards and best practices for anti-human-trafficking initiatives, including prevention of human trafficking; protection and legal justice for victims of human trafficking; development of advocacy networks; and establishment of an effective monitoring, evaluation, and reporting mechanism.(63)
National Education Policy	Specifies the Government's education policy, including pre-primary, primary, secondary, vocational and technical, higher, and non-formal education policies. Sets the compulsory age for free education through eighth grade (age 14).(56)
Seventh Five Year Plan (2016–2020)	Includes the elimination of the worst forms of child labor, with a focus on child domestic workers and other vulnerable groups. Sets out actions to be taken by the Government, including forming a policy for children working in the formal sector, providing assistance to street children to protect them from exploitation, coordinating the Government and other stakeholders for effective rehabilitation, increasing working children's access to formal and non-formal learning, and providing livelihood support to poor households with children. Approved in 2015 and launched in 2016.(83)

† The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(84, 85)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Education Policy.(56)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Urban Social Protection Initiative to Reach the Unreachable and Invisible and Ending Child Labor (2012–2016)	UNICEF, the Ministry of Social Work (MSW), and the Ministry of Women and Children's Affairs (MWCA) 5-year project that provided conditional cash transfers and employment training, outreach and referral services, and social protection services for 500,000 children and 30,000 adolescents.(13, 86)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce (CLEAR) Child Labor Project	USDOL-funded, capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in 11 countries to build the capacity of local and national governments to address child labor.(87) In 2016, a draft report on the legal review of child labor-related laws and policies was prepared by the National Human Rights Commission.(87) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site.
Reaching Out of School Children II (2012–2017)	$130 million World Bank-funded, 6-year program that provides out-of-school children with non-formal education, school stipends, free books, and school uniforms. Helps students attend learning centers called Ananda Schools until the students are ready to join mainstream secondary schools.(88) As of June 2016, has provided education to 690,000 poor children in 20,400 learning centers.(89)
Child Sensitive Social Protection Project (2012–2016)	MSW program, funded by UNICEF, to reduce abuse, violence, and exploitation of children and youth by improving access to social protection services.(65) Provided conditional cash transfers of $26 each month for 18 months to underprivileged children to prevent them from working in child labor.(42) Also includes a stipend program for out-of-school adolescents.(90)
Enabling Environment for Child Rights [‡]	MWCA program, supported by UNICEF, that rehabilitates street children engaged in risky work by withdrawing them from child labor and enrolling them in school. Supports 16,000 children in 20 districts through cash transfers.(91, 92)
Child Help Line 1098 [†]	MSW-implemented and UNICEF-supported 24-hour emergency telephone line. Connects children vulnerable to violence, abuse, and exploitation with social protection services.(93) In 2016, was expanded nationwide.(94)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Bangladesh.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(7, 65)

Although the Government has implemented child protection and non-formal education programs, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs specifically designed to assist children working in the informal garment sector.(23)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bangladesh (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure that the law's minimum age protections apply to children working in the informal sector, including in domestic work, on the streets, and in small-scale agriculture.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the types of hazardous work prohibited for children are comprehensive, in particular by including garment production and fish drying.	2016
	Ensure that the law specifies the activities and the number of hours per week that children between ages 12 and 13 are permitted to perform light work.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits all offenses related to the sexual exploitation of children for pornographic performances.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, particularly in the production of drugs.	2015 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups	2016
	Ensure that the legal framework reflects the policy that education is compulsory through eighth grade and is consistent with the minimum age for work.	2012 – 2016
	Publish the military regulations that set the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment.	2016
Enforcement	Ensure effective enforcement of citations and penalties for labor law violations, including authorizing the inspectorate to assess penalties for child labor law violations and increasing penalties for child labor law violations to ensure an effective deterrent.	2014 – 2016
	Create referral mechanisms among relevant agencies to facilitate the provision of legal and social services to child laborers, including those engaged in the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2016
	Hire a sufficient number of labor inspectors for the size of the Bangladesh workforce.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that labor inspections are conducted with sufficient frequency at unregistered factories and small businesses.	2013 – 2016
	Publish information relating to labor law enforcement, including the number of penalties that were issued and collected for child labor law violations.	2012 – 2016
	Publish information on the enforcement of laws on the worst forms of child labor, including the number of investigators, the number of investigations, the number of prosecutions, and the number of convictions.	2012 – 2016
	Provide police with sufficient resources to enforce violations involving human trafficking, forced labor, and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that Child Protection Networks are adequately funded to provide a functional referral mechanism between law enforcement and social services.	2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Education Policy.	2014 – 2016
Social Programs	Implement programs that seek to address inadequate access to water and sanitation facilities and prohibitive fees associated with education.	2013 – 2016
	Develop and implement programs to address child labor in the informal garment industry.	2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary education. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
67. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country’s total labor force. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development as determined by the UN.

In 2016, Belize made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government secured its first trafficking conviction under the 2013 Anti-Trafficking Law and expanded a conditional cash transfer program to cover 400 vulnerable families. However, children in Belize perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Important gaps in the country's legal framework remain. The minimum age for work is 12, and the country lacks prohibitions against the use of children in illicit activities. In addition, the Government does not appear to have programs that aim to reduce child labor in agriculture, a sector in which child labor remains prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Belize perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Belize.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	1.6 (1,405)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	94.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	1.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		104.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of beans, bananas, citrus fruits, cereals, corn, rice, sugarcane, papayas, and vegetables (5-11)
	Fishing, including for fish, lobster, and conch (10)
	Butchering or livestock raising, including poultry and cattle (10)
Industry	Construction†, carpentry, masonry, wood carving (10)
	Quarrying†, including operating stone crushers (11)
Services	Street vending
	Retail vending (10)
	Yard work, including chopping, using lawnmowers and machetes (10, 12)
	Seamstressing (10)
	Working and cooking in food service, including wielding large mixers and grills (10)
	Auto repair† (10)
	Pumping gas (10)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 8, 9, 11, 13, 14)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous, and as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Belize

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In Belize, approximately 9.5 percent of Mennonite children are engaged in child labor.(10, 12) The school system in Mennonite communities operates under a different cycle to allow children to work in family farms and businesses. (12) Mennonite children often use dangerous tools like machetes, tractors, and ploughs, and operate heavy-duty equipment at sawmills and stone crushers at quarries.(12) During March 2016, non-Mennonite children in northern Belize skipped school to work in Mennonite-owned bean fields to supplement their families' income.(12)

There were anecdotal reports of minors from neighboring countries being trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation.(12, 15, 16) Girls from impoverished communities and LGBTI children are particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation and labor trafficking in Belize.(15, 16) Children in Belize are increasingly being trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation in areas frequented by tourists or seasonal workers, such as truckers and citrus workers.(17, 18) In 2016, there were no official reports of children being used for pornography; however, several videos depicting people appearing to be children surfaced on social media in Belize.(12) Anecdotal reports also indicate that teenage boys ages 12 through 17 were recruited to transport and sell drugs in Belize City.(12)

While primary and secondary education is tuition-free in Belize, children's access to education is sometimes hindered by the cost of school fees, textbooks, uniforms, and meals.(19-21)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Belize has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Belize's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	12	Articles 54, 164, and 169 of the Labor Act; Articles 2–3 of the Shops Act (22, 23)

* No conscription (31)

Belizean law does not conform to international standards since it sets the minimum age for employment at 12 years old.(22, 32) However, the minimum legal age for work in wholesale or retail trade or business is 14.(23) Belizean law is also inconsistent with international standards on hazardous work. Children under age 14 are prohibited from working in industrial undertakings—including activities such as mining, manufacturing, and construction—but children over age 14 are explicitly permitted to work in those types of activities.(22) Though Belizean law indicates that children under age 18 are prohibited from being employed or engaged in any activity that may be detrimental to their health, education, or mental, physical, or moral development, the law does not specify which employment activities are detrimental to children.(22, 24) A list of hazardous work prohibited for all children has not been adopted as law.(18, 33)

The Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act and the Criminal Code prohibit all forms of child sexual exploitation, with the former explicitly prohibiting child pornography.(26, 27) However, consensual sex with a child age 16 or 17 is permitted, including in cases in which a person gives or promises remuneration, goods, food, or other benefits in exchange for the sexual act. This provision leaves these children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(17, 18, 26) Research could not determine whether laws prohibit the use of children in specific illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.(32)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Local Government, and Rural Development	Identify cases and enforce laws related to child labor and hazardous child labor through its Labor Department.(5, 9, 11)
Ministry of Human Development and Social Transformation, Department of Human Services	Receive referrals for child labor cases; train immigration officials, labor inspectors, and the Belize Police Department (BPD) in making referrals; and handle human trafficking cases.(5, 8, 34) Provide victims with welfare services, including medical and social services and counseling assistance.(11, 35)
Belize Police Department (BPD)	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking through Sexual Offense and Family Violence Units.(5, 6, 8)
Office of the Director of Public Prosecution	Prosecute criminal offenses, including cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(36)

* The Government does not publish this information.

In 2016, the Labor Department employed 25 inspectors in 10 offices throughout the country.(11, 12) The budget allocated to the Labor Department for the reporting period was $1,289,134, an increase from 2015.(11, 12) Reports indicate that labor inspections in rural and agricultural areas were hampered by a lack of resources, including vehicles and fuel.(9, 39) While the Labor Department is required to visit every business at least once a year, it usually falls short of this goal.(12) In 2016, due to a lack of staff and transportation, the Government was able to conduct less than 25 percent of its proposed inspections.(12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Belize took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

In 2016, the Belizean judiciary secured the first conviction of child sex trafficking under the 2013 Anti-Trafficking Law, but the judge did not impose jail time.(15) Criminal investigators and police officers lacked sufficient resources—such as vehicles, fuel, office supplies, and adequate training—to effectively investigate violations of criminal law, including the worst forms of child labor.(12, 36)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Committee	Coordinate efforts between ministries to combat child labor and implement the National Child Labor Policy. Led by the Ministry of Labor and 14 government and civil society members.(5, 6, 41) The Committee was dormant in 2016.(42)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Council	Identify and rescue human trafficking victims, train law enforcement officials, and educate the public about the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by the Vice Minister of Human Development and Social Transformation; includes 12 other government agencies and civil society organizations.(2, 5, 6, 43)
National Committee for Families and Children (NCFC)	Promote, monitor, and evaluate Belize's compliance with its national and international commitments to children, including the UN CRC.(35) Met quarterly in 2016, and worked on the National Framework for Children and Adolescents (2017–2030).(42)

The National Child Labor Committee, the Government's lead agency responsible for implementing the National Child Labor Policy, did not convene in 2016.(12, 42) During the reporting period, the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Council partnered with two NGOs to train 422 teachers on identification of victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, and explain their legal responsibility to report these cases.(16)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Policy	Focuses on strengthening child labor laws, creating legislation to address existing gaps, and providing educational assistance to children who have been or who are currently engaged in child labor.(6, 44) Aims to strengthen government institutions and services and train labor officers.(6, 41, 44)
CARE Model	Coordinates the protection, care, and monitoring of sexually exploited and trafficked children. Outlines the role of the Department of Human Services and the BPD in receiving allegations of commercial sexual exploitation of children and referring children to services.(5, 43)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(16, 45–47)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Building Opportunities for Our Social Transformation Program (BOOST) (2011–2016) [†]	Conditional cash transfer initiative to reduce poverty, funded in part by the World Bank. Provides monetary incentives for families that comply with program requirements.(6, 48) Qualifying families must ensure that children ages 5 to 17 maintain an annual school attendance record of 85 percent.(5, 6, 49) In 2016, expanded to include approximately 400 families.(12)
USDOL-funded projects	Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2017) , established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010 and implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, and Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR II) , launched in 2014, a $7 million dollar capacity-building program to reduce child labor, including its worst forms, and implemented by Winrock International in six countries.(50) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(6, 8, 9, 51)

Although the Government of Belize has a program to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children, research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to assist children working specifically in agriculture. The Government continues to face budgetary constraints for social programs that address child labor, and poverty remains high.(8)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Belize (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure the law prohibits commercial sexual exploitation of children ages 16 and 17.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure the minimum age for work is 14 in all sectors.	2013 – 2016
	Adopt a list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children and ensure that all children under age 18 are prohibited from engaging in hazardous work.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that laws prohibit the use of children in specific illicit activities, such as the production and trafficking of drugs.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 into non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Ensure that law enforcement agencies have sufficient resources to conduct labor inspections and criminal investigations, especially in rural areas.	2009, 2011 – 2016
	Publish information on enforcement efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor, including the number of criminal investigations.	2009 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of labor inspections conducted, including at work sites and by desk review.	2015 – 2016
Coordination	Conduct regular meetings of the National Child Labor Committee and develop concrete goals for the committee.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Increase access to education by eliminating fees and providing textbooks, uniforms, and meals.	2011 – 2016
	Develop programs aimed at reducing the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Benin

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Benin made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government established two counseling and rest centers in two markets in central Benin to provide counseling and training opportunities to children exposed to labor exploitation. However, children in Benin are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work and in the production of cotton. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. The national action plan pertaining to the worst forms of child labor expired without the implementation of a new version, and social programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Benin engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work and in the production of cotton.(1-4). Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Benin.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	20.9 (680,004)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	71.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	16.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		76.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2011–2012.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton† and cashew nuts† (3, 4, 7, 8)
	Capturing, cleaning, and descaling fish† (4, 9, 10)
	Raising livestock† (9)
Industry	Collecting,† crushing,† washing,† and sieving stones† for gold mining† and gravel† and granite quarrying† (1, 11-13)
	Construction, including brickmaking† (2, 4, 10, 13)
Services	Domestic work† (1, 2, 4, 13-16)
	Working as mechanics† and in the transportation industry† (4, 11, 13)
	Street vending,† including gasoline (4, 11, 13, 17)
	Dressmaking† and carpentry† (4, 9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Begging† (2, 4)
	Forced labor in domestic work, construction, mining, fishing, granite quarrying, and agriculture, including in the production of cotton, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 4, 8, 12, 14, 16, 18)
	Forced begging (16, 19, 20)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 16, 17, 21)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are mostly trafficked within Benin but also to other countries, primarily Gabon, Nigeria, Lebanon, and the Republic of Congo, for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation, as well as to work in vending, farming, stone quarrying, and the production of handicrafts.(1, 14, 16, 20, 22, 23) Children working in mines and quarries are subject to long working hours and to physical injuries and illnesses from dynamite explosions, falling rocks, collapsing quarry walls, and dust inhalation.(11, 12) A 2016 UNICEF-sponsored survey conducted by the Government of Benin in the cities of Cotonou and Malanville indicated that girls are subjected to sexual exploitation in these two cities.(24, 25)

Traditionally under vidomegon, children, up to 95 percent of them girls, live with relatives or family friends to perform domestic chores in exchange for educational opportunities; however, many children become victims of labor exploitation and sexual abuse.(1, 2, 4, 14, 20, 23, 25) In Northern Benin, marabouts, Koranic teachers, exploit boys in forced begging on the street or in agricultural work.(2, 19)

The constitution guarantees free compulsory primary education; nevertheless, some parents are expected to pay school fees for registration, uniforms, books, and materials.(4, 14) In addition, evidence suggests that incidences of physical, psychological, and sexual abuse, including corporal punishment and rape of students by teachers, prevent some children from remaining in school.(2, 17, 20, 21, 26, 27) Children with disabilities have no access to the regular education system.(4)

In January 2016, the Minister of Interior launched a two-week national awareness campaign to increase birth registration of children to ensure that they have access to services such as education, as 19.8 percent of children under age five continue to be unregistered.(2, 20, 23, 28-30)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Benin has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Benin's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 166 of the Labor Code; Article 210 of the Child Code (31, 32)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 1 of the Hazardous Occupation List (33)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Hazardous Occupation List (33)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 3 and 303 of the Labor Code; Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors; Article 212 of the Child Code (31, 32, 34)

Benin

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 3 and 303 of the Labor Code; Articles 2–4, 6, 18, and 22 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors; Articles 212, 352, and 353 of the Child Code (31, 32, 34)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 3 of the Law on the Prevention and Repression of Violence Against Women and Children; Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors; Articles 212 and 378 of the Child Code (32, 34, 35)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 212 of the Child Code; Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors (32, 34)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 6 of Law 2005–43; Title II, Article 32 of the Constitution (36, 37)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 6 of Law 2005–43 (37)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Articles 2 and 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors (34)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 24 of Act No. 2003–17; Article 4 of the Law on the Prevention of Violence Against Women and Children (35, 38)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of the Constitution; Article 114 of the Child Code (32, 36)

During the reporting period, the Government halted the review process to revise the Labor Code upon a change of administration, and formed a new committee to review the code.(39) Article 22 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors prescribes insufficient penalties, especially in comparison to punishments prescribed for other serious crimes, such as rape. (16, 34)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Civil Service, and Social Affairs (MOLCOSA)	Enforce child labor laws and investigate labor code infractions, including those related to child labor.(17, 21, 40) Provide support to victims of child labor and human trafficking.(2, 21, 39) In 2016, the Ministry of Labor and Civil Service and the Ministry of Family, Social Affairs, and National Solidarity were merged.(39)
Ministry of Interior	Enforce criminal laws related to the protection of minors, including the worst forms of child labor, through the Central Office for the Protection of Minors (OCPM) under the Criminal Police Department.(2, 16, 21) Through its Brigade des Moeurs (vice squad), address human trafficking for sexual exploitation.(25)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Benin took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Labor Inspectorate Funding	Unknown (28)	$6,700 (17)

Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown (28)	Yes (17)
Training on New Laws Related to Child Labor	No (28)	N/A (17)
Refresher Courses Provided	Unknown (28)	Yes (17)

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Number of Labor Inspections	Unknown (28)	27 (17)
Number Conducted at Worksite	Unknown (28)	Unknown (17)
Number Conducted by Desk Reviews	Unknown (28)	Unknown (17)
Number of Child Labor Violations Found	Unknown (28)	1,278 (17)
Number of Child Labor Violations for Which Penalties Were Imposed	Unknown (28)	Unknown (17)
Number of Penalties Imposed that Were Collected	Unknown (28)	Unknown (17)
Routine Inspections Conducted	No (28)	Yes (17)
Routine Inspections Targeted	Unknown (28)	Yes (17)
Unannounced Inspections Permitted	Yes (28)	Yes (17)
Unannounced Inspections Conducted	Unknown (28)	Unknown (17)
Complaint Mechanism Exists	Yes (28)	Yes (17)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (28)	Yes (30)

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor, Civil Service, and Social Affairs (MOLCSSA) employed 55 labor inspectors, 32 fewer than in 2015, as a result of retirements.(17, 39) The Government, with the assistance of UNICEF, held a four-day workshop to train 50 labor inspectors and child protection agents on child labor prevention and increase participants' capacities to address the worst forms of child labor.(17) With the assistance of the French Embassy, the Central Office for the Protection of Minors (OCPM), in conjunction with MOLCSSA, provided training on child trafficking prevention for four judges, 26 police officers, four members of civil society organizations, and religious and traditional leaders.(25)

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Benin's workforce, which includes over 3 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Benin should employ approximately 92 inspectors.(41, 42) The labor inspectorate stated that it lacks material and financial resources to effectively conduct inspections.(2, 16, 17) The OCPM under the Ministry of the Interior works together with Centers for Social Promotion under MOLCSSA to provide social services to child victims and ensure criminal investigation of the cases.(30)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Benin took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (23)	Unknown (17)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	No (28)	N/A (17)
Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (23)	Unknown (17)
Number of Investigations	Unknown (28)	Unknown (17)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown (28)	Unknown (17)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (28)	Unknown (17)
Number of Convictions	Unknown (28)	Unknown (17)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (28)	Yes (17)

OCPM remained understaffed, underfunded, and without adequate office supplies, transportation, and fuel to enforce laws effectively and to provide victims with immediate assistance.(2, 16, 28) The police lacked the transportation resources to investigate human trafficking cases and the tools with which to maintain database records. Court officials were also unable to maintain database records on human trafficking, and lacked the personnel and infrastructure to efficiently prosecute cases.(23)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor	Provide policy guidance; approve programs; and coordinate, monitor, and evaluate efforts to combat child labor in Benin.(2) Led by MOLCSEA and comprised of delegates from multiple Beninese ministries, UNICEF, ILO, trade unions, and NGOs.(21, 43) In 2016, the committee met once to discuss how to enhance activities and partnerships.(30, 39, 44)
National Commission on Children's Rights	Coordinate and promote efforts on children's rights at the national level. Chaired by the Ministry of Justice and comprised delegates from multiple other ministries and representatives of civil society groups, who are appointed by the Minister of Justice.(2) In 2016, the commission did not meet.(39, 44)

The mandates of the National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor and the National Commission on Children's Rights overlap and are a source of confusion.(2) In addition, although there is an information management system at the national level, data are rarely analyzed or used to affect implementation on the ground.(44) The National Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection has not met since 2014 and is no longer operational.(39)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Action Plan to Eradicate Child Exploitation in Markets†	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the major markets of Benin, including Dantokpa in Cotonou, Ouando in Porto-Novo, and Arzèkè in Parakou, and to strengthen child labor laws, raise awareness of child labor in markets, and create social programs for children rescued from labor exploitation in the targeted markets.(45, 46) In 2016, MOLCSEA, in conjunction with UNICEF, completed a documentary film that features the economic exploitation of children in five markets of Benin.(17, 39)
National Policy for Child Protection (2014–2025)	Aims to improve child protection in Benin. Includes components to improve school feeding programs and to combat the worst forms of child labor, with a focus on child trafficking.(17, 46, 47) Implemented by MOLCSEA, which reported in 2016 that it is still in the process of finalizing an action plan for the operationalization of the policy.(17, 30, 46, 47)
UN Development Assistance Framework (2014–2018)	Outlines the collective actions and strategies of the UN system for achieving national development goals, including specific activities to address child labor by increasing access to social protection services.(48)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Research was unable to determine whether the expired National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Benin was renewed. Research was also unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the UN Development Assistance Framework during the reporting period.(30) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Sector Plan.(20, 30)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Understanding Children's Work-Action Against Child Labor (2015–2018)	Government of Canada-funded, 3-year, $750,000 project to combat child labor by supporting data collection and policy efforts related to children's work and youth employment.(49) In 2016, research was unable to determine whether any actions were undertaken.(30)
Government-Funded Shelters†	MOLCSEA-operated Social Promotion Centers that provide food, shelter, education, and vocational training to vulnerable children, including victims of labor exploitation, in 85 centers. OCPM also operates an interim care facility for human trafficking survivors before their placement in a long-term shelter.(21, 39, 43) In 2016, social workers from the Social Promotion Center of Kandi and members of the Réseau des Structures de Protection des Enfants en Situation Difficile trained 20 members of civil society organizations committed to the protection of children's rights on the new child code.(2, 16, 17, 21, 39)

Program	Description
Government-Funded Re-Training Centers [†]	The Ministry of Mines' Social Services offers business management training to families, particularly women, involved in mining and quarrying, and provides protection equipment, including boots and gloves, to mining craftsmen in three cities.(43, 46) MOLCOSA, with the assistance of UNICEF, maintains a vocational school program to train survivors of child trafficking in a trade.(43, 44) In 2016, the Government, with assistance of UNICEF and Caritas, established two counseling and leisure centers in the markets of Zákpotá and Abomey in central Benin to provide counseling and training opportunities to children exposed to labor exploitation.(17)
Benin Global Partnership for Education Program (2014–2017)	Approximately $42.3-million, World Bank-funded project that aims to improve access and equity to quality basic education in highly impoverished districts. In 2016, the primary completion rate in targeted districts increased to 54.4 percent from 40.4 percent in 2011, and 10,700 teachers were provided with a 10-day in-service training.(50)

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(4, 17, 39, 51, 52)

Although the Government of Benin has implemented programs to protect children from human trafficking and participated in programs focused on child labor in quarrying and mining, research was unable to determine whether the Government has conducted programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, or agriculture.(17)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Benin (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Create meaningful penalties for human trafficking crimes involving labor exploitation.	2014 – 2016
Enforcement	Provide consistent training for law enforcement officials on the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2016
	Increase resources, including the number of labor inspectors and criminal investigators, to enforce laws against child labor and provide immediate victim assistance.	2009 – 2016
	Publish data on the type of labor inspections conducted, training for criminal investigators, and the number of criminal investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penalties related to child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2016
	Increase the resources available to law enforcement officials to efficiently track child labor cases.	2015 – 2016
Coordination	Take measures to coordinate efforts at the national level to eliminate duplicative activities, committees, and actors at the local level.	2013 – 2016
	Analyze the data received from national information management systems and disseminate results nationwide.	2013 – 2016
Government Policies	Complete a new National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Benin.	2010 – 2016
	Undertake activities to implement the UN Development Assistance Framework.	2016
	Ensure child labor elimination and prevention strategies are integrated into the Education Sector Action Plan.	2010 – 2016
Social Programs	Increase access to education by eliminating school-related fees, ensuring that children with disabilities have access to regular schools, ensuring the safety of children in schools, and increasing birth registration rates to ensure that children have access to services such as education.	2010 – 2016
	Institute programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and agriculture, and monitor and report annually on the progress of these programs.	2010 – 2016
	Implement the Understanding Children's Work–Action Against Child Labor project.	2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "least developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Bhutan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Bhutan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government increased the number of labor inspectors and established a coordinating mechanism that developed a national child labor action plan. Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Bhutan perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, and engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work. Bhutan's minimum age for work is inconsistent with international standards and education is not compulsory. The Government also has not adopted a national policy to address child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Bhutan perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bhutan. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.8 (6,338)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	84.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	3.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		97.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (3, 6-8)
Industry	Construction,† activities unknown (3)
Services	Domestic work (3, 6-10)
	Work in shops, restaurants, hotel service, and automobile repair (3, 8, 10)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3)
	Forced labor in karaoke bars, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 11)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1)
	Use in illicit activities, including the smuggling of tobacco (10)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

There is a lack of current data on child labor in Bhutan. To date, no national survey on child labor has been conducted.

While the Government provides 11 years of free education to all Bhutanese citizens, children living in remote villages face significant difficulties in accessing public schools, which may increase their vulnerability to labor exploitation.(8, 12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bhutan has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	N/A
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Bhutan's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	13	Sections 170 and 171 of the Labor and Employment Act; Section 7 of the Regulation on Acceptable Forms of Child Labor (13, 14)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Sections 170 and 171 of the Labor and Employment Act (13)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Section 9(e) of the Labor and Employment Act; Section 9 of the Regulation on Acceptable Forms of Child Labor (13, 14)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Sections 6 and 9(a) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 154, 227, and 379 of the Penal Code; Section 221 of the Child Care and Protection Act (13, 15, 16)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 9(a) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 221 and 224 of the Child Care and Protection Act; Sections 227, 379 and 380 of the Penal Code (13, 15, 16)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Section 9(b) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 222–224 of the Child Care and Protection Act; Sections 225, 375–380 of the Penal Code (13, 15, 16)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 9(c) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 216 and 220 of the Child Care and Protection Act (13, 16)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Defense Service Rules and Regulation (17)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Section 9(a) of the Labor and Employment Act (13)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 9.16 of the Constitution of the Kingdom of Bhutan (18)

* No conscription (18)

The minimum age for work is not in compliance with international standards because the Labor and Employment Act allows children under age 14 to work.(13) Bhutan has no compulsory age for education, which may increase the risk of children's involvement in child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Resources (MOLHR)	Investigate child labor complaints and ensure employers comply with child labor laws. Refer cases involving the worst forms of child labor to the police.(19)
Royal Bhutan Police	Investigate and enforce criminal laws relating to the worst forms of child labor.(20) Includes three Women and Child Protection Units and eight Women and Child Protection Desks to enforce laws protecting women and children.(8, 21, 22) Refer abused and exploited children to child welfare officers and the National Commission for Women and Children.(16, 23)
Child Welfare Officers	Protect and assist children in difficult circumstances, including children abused and exploited for illegal purposes.(16)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Bhutan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Labor Inspectorate Funding	$45,000 (8)	$27,000 (8)

The Ministry of Labor and Human Resources has reported that limited resources place constraints on the number of inspections conducted and inspectors employed.(8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Bhutan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

* The Government does not publish this information.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interagency Task Force*	Coordinate the development and drafting of a national child labor action plan. Led by the MOLHR and the National Commission for Women and Children (NCWC). Collaborate with multiple government ministries and agencies. Consists of a national committee and a regional committee.(25)
National Commission for Women and Children	Coordinate the implementation of policies concerning abused and exploited women and children. Advise the Government on legislation and policies for the protection of women and children.(26) Comprises a chairperson and commissioners who represent relevant government agencies and non-government sectors.(26)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established policies to address child labor, including its worst forms. In 2016, the Interagency Task Force drafted a national child labor action plan that is expected to be finalized in 2017.(8) The Government also hosted the South Asia Initiative to End Violence Against Children regional consultation on achieving Sustainable Development Goal 8.7 that focuses on ending child labor, forced labor, modern slavery, and human trafficking.(27)

The Government had policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor; however, child labor elimination and prevention strategies have not been included in these policies.(28, 29)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Project Hope†	NCWC program that provides residential shelters for children at risk of exploitative child labor. Targets children on the street and provides them with counseling, group therapy, and assistance enrolling in school.(19)
Trafficking Victims Shelter†	Respect, Education, Nurture, and Empower Women (RENEW), a Thimphu-based NGO, receives government funding to provide shelter, counseling, and rehabilitation for women and children trafficking victims.(19)

Program	Description
Improving Rural Children's Access to Basic Education with Focus on Primary Education (2014–2018)	$8.58 million WFP-funded program provides financial support to rural primary schools.(31) Aims to increase primary school enrollment, retention, and graduation by providing school breakfasts and lunches to students. Implemented in 232 schools across the country, reaches 37,000 children annually, and supports school construction and kitchen improvements.(19, 31)

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(32, 33)

While the Government of Bhutan has implemented programs that target children at risk for labor exploitation, research found no evidence that these programs target children working in agriculture and domestic service or children involved in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic servitude.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bhutan (Table 10).

Table 10. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure that the laws on child labor comply with the international standard of the minimum age for work.	2010 – 2016
	Make primary education compulsory and ensure that the compulsory age extends to the minimum age for employment.	2010 – 2016
Enforcement	Ensure that the MOLHR has the resources and training necessary to enforce labor laws and to combat child labor.	2014 – 2016
	Publish data on training provided to investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor, and publish data on the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions of crimes involving the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2016
Government Policies	Adopt a policy to address child labor, including its worst forms.	2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies that may address child labor.	2014 – 2016
Social Programs	Conduct a national child labor survey and publish the results.	2013 – 2016
	Implement programs to make education more accessible for children living in remote locations.	2014 – 2016
	Create social programs targeting working children, particularly in agriculture, and children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including forced domestic work.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Bolivia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Bolivia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Bolivia is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a law that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Bolivia's Child and Adolescent Code, passed in 2014, allows children as young as age 10 to be self-employed under certain conditions. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by incorporating into law the Agreement between the Plurinational State of Bolivia and the Republic of Argentina to Prevent and Investigate Trafficking in Persons and Protect and Assist Victims. The Government also signed agreements with Brazil and Peru to combat human trafficking. However, children in Bolivia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and the harvesting of sugarcane. The Offices of the Child Advocate, required by the Child and Adolescent Code to authorize child work and assist victims of child labor, are also absent or underfunded in many municipalities, leaving some children unprotected and vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. In addition, the Government lacks a comprehensive child labor policy.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bolivia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and the harvesting of sugarcane.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bolivia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	7 to 14	20.2 (355,206)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	93.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	18.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		90.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting and harvesting corn, cotton, and peanuts (5-7)
	Production and harvesting of Brazil nuts/chestnuts [†] and sugarcane [†] (2, 5, 6, 8, 9)
	Ranching and raising cattle [†] and plucking chickens (2, 6, 10)
Industry	Mining [†] of gold, silver, tin, and zinc (1, 9-11)
	Construction, [†] including heavy lifting and shoveling (2, 8, 10, 12)
	Production of bricks [†] (10, 13-15)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street vending, shoe shining, and assisting transportation operators (8, 10, 11, 16, 17)
	Domestic work† (10, 11, 18)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in ranching and in the production and harvesting of Brazil nuts and sugarcane (9, 19-21)
	Forced begging and forced labor in mining and domestic service (2, 11, 22-24)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 22, 24)
	Forced to commit illicit activities, including robbery and producing or transporting drugs (2, 22, 24)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children produce and harvest sugarcane and Brazil nuts in the departments of Beni, Pando, Santa Cruz, and Tarija, although recent efforts to combat this practice and other factors have reportedly reduced the prevalence of child labor in these sectors.(1, 6, 8, 9) Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(20, 22, 25) Some indigenous Guaraní families live in debt bondage and work on ranches, including in raising cattle, in the Chaco region of Bolivia.(5, 6, 8) Based on reports, this practice may have been reduced in recent years due, in part, to increased attention to the region and land tenure reform.(8) Bolivian children are trafficked to Argentina, where they are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in agriculture and the production of textiles.(26-29)

Bolivian law requires children to attend school up to age 17. However, attendance rates for secondary education are low, particularly in rural areas and often because children work.(23, 25, 30)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bolivia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Bolivia’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

* The minimum age for combat is 18 per Article 36 of the Law of National Military Service (39)

‡ Age calculated based on available information

In 2016, the Government passed Law 791, which incorporated into Bolivian law the Framework Agreement between the Plurinational State of Bolivia and the Republic of Argentina to Prevent and Investigate Trafficking in Persons and Protect and Assist Victims.⁽⁴²⁾

The 2014 Child and Adolescent Code specifies the conditions under which children may work, in addition to providing a number of other protections.⁽³²⁾ However, its provisions establishing exceptions to the minimum age for work do not conform to international standards.^(43, 44) Article 129(1) of the Child and Adolescent Code establishes the minimum age for work at 14 years, which is consistent with Article 58 of the General Labor Law.^(31, 32) However, Article 129(2) of the Child and Adolescent Code allows children as young as 10 years old to work in self-employment upon authorization by the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate, provided that this work does not adversely affect the child's health or education, and only upon consent of a parent or guardian and after successful medical and psychological evaluations.⁽³²⁾ Allowing children as young as 10 years old to work may affect their schooling, which in Bolivia is compulsory to age 17.^(41, 43, 44) The ILO Committee of Experts has called upon the Government to amend Article 129 of the Child and Adolescent Code to set the minimum age for work, including in self-employment, at 14 years.^(43, 44) Article 129(2) of the Child and Adolescent Code also permits children as young as 12 to work for third parties following the same authorization process.⁽³²⁾ Although ILO C. 138 allows children as young as 12 to engage in light work under certain circumstances, Bolivian law does not specify a list of activities that are permissible for light work, or the number of hours children are permitted to work in these activities.⁽³²⁾

Apprenticeships in Bolivia are regulated by Articles 28–30 and Article 58 of the General Labor Law, which requires that apprentices attend school. However, the General Labor Law does not set a minimum age for participation in apprenticeships.^(31, 45) Articles 108 and 249 of the Constitution require Bolivian males to perform compulsory military service in accordance with national law.⁽³³⁾ Article 1 of Supreme Decree No. 1875, passed in 2014, lowered the minimum age at which compulsory military service may begin from 18 years, as previously established, to 17 years.^(37, 38) Under Article 2 of the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict, to which Bolivia acceded in 2004, state parties must ensure that children under age 18 may not be compulsorily recruited into their armed forces.⁽⁴⁶⁻⁴⁸⁾

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws, in part through its Fundamental Rights Unit, which also addresses forced labor of indigenous peoples.(49) Refer cases to the Labor Courts for adjudication of penalties and unpaid wages.(2) Engage municipal Offices of the Child Advocate to ensure the protection of children's rights. (10, 50) Assist in the implementation of the Child and Adolescent Code, including in the authorization of children's work for third parties from the age of 14.(10, 32)
Municipal Offices of the Child Advocate	Authorize children from the age of 10 to work in exceptional cases and register them in the Government's Child and Adolescent Information System (SINNA), pursuant to the Child and Adolescent Code. Protect the rights and welfare of children, including by accompanying child labor inspectors, and refer criminal child labor cases to prosecutors and for social services.(10, 32)
Attorney General's Office	Oversee all human trafficking investigations and prosecutions.(27) Oversee through its National Coordinator's Office regional prosecutors who, in conjunction with the Bolivian National Police, pursue cases of human trafficking. Maintain a database of human trafficking cases.(27)
Ministry of Justice and Transparency	Create and administer SINNA, in which municipal Offices of the Child Advocate register young workers who are authorized to engage in self-employment or work for third parties, as required by the Child and Adolescent Code.(32)
Bolivian National Police	Maintain the Special Force in the Fight Against Crime (FELCC), which runs 15 investigative human trafficking units, and the Police Unit for Migratory Control and Assistance, which patrols national borders.(10, 51, 52) Refer trafficking victims to departmental social services or Offices of the Child Advocate.(53)

The Child and Adolescent Code requires the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate to authorize children ages 10 to 18 to engage in self-employment, and children ages 12 to 14 to work for third parties, both under certain conditions to ensure children's protection.(32) However, reports indicate that up to 20 percent of municipalities in Bolivia lack an Office of the Child Advocate; many more are reported to lack sufficient resources and the capacity to perform their mandate. This lack of institutional coverage may leave certain children particularly vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms.(2, 10, 54)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Bolivia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

Although the amount of funding allocated to the labor inspectorate was not publicly available, reports indicate that it was insufficient to inspect for child labor nationwide.(55) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Bolivia's workforce, which includes over 4.9 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Bolivia should employ roughly 333 labor inspectors.(56-58)

In 2016, the number of general labor inspections, as well as information on the sectors and geographical regions in which they were conducted, was not publicly available. The Ministry of Labor (MOL) reported that it conducted 250 targeted child labor inspections.(2) Reports indicate that this number was inadequate to address the scope of the problem, particularly in rural and hard to reach areas.(55)

The MOL and the national Office of the Child Advocate continue to develop a registry of children authorized to work by the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate. Research could not find data on the number of children authorized to work in 2016.(50) The Government reports that children who are removed from child labor are referred to the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate for services. However, information on the number of children removed and whether they received services, particularly in cases where an Office of the Public Advocate did not exist, was not publicly available.(2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Bolivia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

* The Government does not publish this information.

In 2016, some criminal law enforcement officials received some training on trafficking in persons issues. However, research could not determine the extent to which trainings included other worst forms of child labor. Children rescued from the worst forms of child labor are often not referred for social services because there are few government-run shelters. Many criminal law enforcement agencies reported that funding levels were inadequate to carry out their mandates and that they sometimes lacked fuel to conduct investigations.(59)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinate national efforts to address child labor issues. Led by the MOL and includes the Ministries of Justice, Education, and Planning, as well as several NGOs.(10)
Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling	Coordinate anti-trafficking efforts and implement national laws and policies on human trafficking and smuggling.(35, 51, 60) Chaired by the Minister of Justice and comprises eight ministries, the Public Advocate, and NGOs.(51)
Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking and Smuggling	Coordinate efforts of the Plurinational Council in Bolivia's nine departments. Comprises officials from the FELCC, the MOL, the Ministries of Migration and Education, the Human Rights Ombudsman, and NGO representatives.(10, 35, 60)

The National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor has been increasingly inactive, and many government agencies and NGOs agree that its central coordinating role has lapsed.(2) Reports also indicate that some of the MOL's departmental sub-commissions on child labor have not been active, due in part to a lack of resources.(10, 23)

The Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling mandates that the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling include NGOs. However, reports indicate that NGOs have not participated fully in the Plurinational Council despite NGOs' efforts for inclusion.(51) Reports also indicate that some Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking and Smuggling have yet to develop department-level plans to combat human trafficking, as mandated by law.(2, 35, 59, 60)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
Plurinational Policy to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons (2013–2017)	Sets national priorities on combating human trafficking and smuggling through five core areas: the prevention of trafficking, remediation and the reintegration of survivors, the prosecution of crimes, the strengthening of national coordination mechanisms, and international cooperation.(60–62)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons (2015–2019)	Establishes eight lines of action drawn from the five core areas of the Plurinational Policy to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons, including building capacity and coordination among criminal law enforcement agencies.(63) In 2016, the Plurinational Council refined the plan, whose updated version awaits approval.(59)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(64)

Bolivia's national policy for addressing child labor, the National Plan for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor (2000–2010), expired in 2010.(65) A new plan was not established during the reporting period.(66) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the national Patriotic Agenda 2025.(23, 67, 68)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Juancito Pinto Subsidy Program [‡]	Government program that provides a conditional cash transfer to all primary school students to increase school attendance and reduce the dropout rate.(53) In 2016, assisted 2,191,526 students with a budget of $68 million.(55)
Human Rights of Children Working in Sugarcane, Brazil Nuts, and Mining [‡]	Human Rights Ombudsman's Office program that promotes the elimination of the worst forms of child labor, along with labor and social protections for working adolescents ages 14 to 17. Launched in 2013 in the Tarija, Potosí, and Beni Departments.(69) Expanded in 2014 to monitor the use of child labor in sugarcane harvesting in Santa Cruz.(70) In 2016, continued to monitor child labor in these high-risk sectors.(55)

Program	Description
Bolivian Foreign Trade Institute's Triple Seal Initiative	MOL collaboration with the Bolivian Institute of Standardization and Quality, UNICEF, and the ILO to develop a voluntary certification program to recognize companies that comply with Bolivian law and ILO conventions on child labor, forced labor, and worker discrimination in the production of their goods.(10, 53, 71) In 2016, engaged with companies in the sugarcane and Brazil nut sectors and launched campaigns to raise public awareness about goods made with child labor.(55)
Child Trafficking Awareness-Raising Campaigns	Government program implemented with the Bolivian Network for the Fight Against Human Trafficking and Smuggling that conducts awareness campaigns to educate the public about the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling. Has reached more than 3,000 government officials and NGO representatives. (26, 50)
Program to Protect the Rights of Children and Adolescents	Government collaboration with UNICEF in 17 Bolivian Brazil nut- and sugarcane-producing municipalities to provide education assistance, with funding from the Government of Italy and the Swiss Cooperation Agency. Seeks to improve living conditions of 2,300 families and reintegrate 3,400 children in school.(72)

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(23, 72-76)

Although Bolivia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem, particularly in the production of Brazil nuts and sugarcane, ranching and cattle raising, mining, domestic work, street work, and commercial sexual exploitation. Although the Juancito Pinto subsidy program continues to expand, reports indicate that the $29 subsidy is insufficient to meaningfully cover costs associated with attending school, such as transportation and school supplies. For example, reports indicate that costs associated with attending school in La Paz's sister city, El Alto, may reach $410 per year.(23)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bolivia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that minimum age protections are extended to all children under 14 years, including in self-employment.	2014 – 2016
	Establish a list of occupations constituting light work, as well as the number of hours permitted in light work, for children ages 12 to 14.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that the law prohibits children under age 14 from participating in apprenticeships.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that the law establishes 18 as the minimum age for compulsory recruitment by the state military, and criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 into non-state armed groups.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Establish and maintain an Office of the Child Advocate in every municipality with sufficient resources to ensure that legal protections are extended to all children who are permitted to work and to coordinate the provision of services to children who are removed from child labor, including its worst forms.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that Offices of the Child Advocate publicly report on the number of children authorized to work and the number of children rescued from child labor and referred for social services.	2015 – 2016
	Provide sufficient funding to increase the capacity of the MOL to ensure the effective enforcement of child labor laws.	2013 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws on child labor to meet the ILO recommendation, and ensure that the number of labor inspections is sufficient.	2013 – 2016
	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that labor inspectors conduct inspections in all sectors and geographical areas.	2011 – 2016
	Publish information on child labor law enforcement, including the overall number of labor inspections, the number of children found in child labor as a result of inspections, the number of violations found, and the number of penalties imposed and collected.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that all criminal investigators, including new employees, receive training on the worst forms of child labor, and make information about trainings publicly available.	2015 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Publish information on the number of criminal child labor investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penalties.	2011 – 2016
	Provide sufficient funding to criminal law enforcement agencies to ensure effective enforcement of laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
Coordination	Ensure that the National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor fulfills its central coordinating role and develops concrete mechanisms to improve coordination among participating agencies and organizations.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that all the MOL departmental sub-commissions designed to combat child labor convene and receive sufficient resources to carry out their functions.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that NGOs participate in the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling, as required by the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that all Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking are fully operational as required by the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Establish and implement a new National Plan for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor.	2010 – 2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Government's national development plan.	2013 – 2016
Social Programs	Expand national programs to increase secondary school attendance.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that there are adequate social services to assist victims of the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Increase the Juancito Pinto subsidy to ensure that school children are able to cover the costs associated with attending school.	2014 – 2016
	Expand social programs to address the worst forms of child labor where hazardous child labor exists, particularly in the production of Brazil nuts and sugarcane, ranching and cattle raising, mining, domestic work and street work, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development as determined by the UN.
57. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

58. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Bosnia and Herzegovina made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina amended the Criminal Code to criminalize all forms of human trafficking within its jurisdiction, thereby harmonizing the law with the rest of the country. Trainings were also held for labor inspectors on human trafficking identification and the national referral mechanism. In addition, the Government funded 16 NGOs to implement programs to address human trafficking. However, children in Bosnia and Herzegovina perform dangerous tasks in street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking. The Government lacks a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms. In addition, the minimum age protections in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, and Brčko District labor codes do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside formal employment relationships. Although forced begging is a problem in the country, labor inspectors do not have jurisdiction to investigate forced begging cases, and training is needed for law enforcement and the judiciary, particularly on how to properly identify and prosecute cases involving child begging.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) perform dangerous tasks in street work.(1-6) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking.(6-8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in BiH. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	8.9 (44,017)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	83.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	10.6

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street work, including begging, vending, washing car windows, and scavenging for scrap metal (1-5, 11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Forced begging and forced domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6-8, 12-14)
	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking (7, 8, 12)
	Use in illicit activities, including for pickpocketing (2, 5, 12)
	Use in the production of pornography (3, 6, 15)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Street begging is the most common form of child labor in BiH.(1, 2, 5, 13, 16) Organized groups sometimes traffic children to lucrative locations and force them to beg, both domestically and internationally, to regional and European Union countries.(2, 12, 14, 17) BiH lacks recent, comprehensive data on the extent and nature of child labor in the country.(5, 6, 13)

Children from the Roma community, the largest minority group in BiH, remain vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 2, 4-8, 12, 13, 18) The Roma custom of paid and arranged marriages between families has resulted in the exploitation of some Roma girls as domestic workers.(6-8, 12) Birth registration is required to attend school in Bosnia. Some Roma children lack identity documents, which may affect their access to education.(6, 17, 19-23) Children out of school are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Sources also indicate that some Roma children face discrimination by some teachers and peers; travel long distances to schools; and are unable to afford school supplies, including clothing and food.(15, 18, 22, 24) In addition, research found that discrimination against some Roma children by school administrators has led to disproportionately high enrollment rates of Roma children in schools for children with intellectual disabilities.(25)

Children with disabilities generally face barriers to accessing education, which may make them vulnerable to child labor.(6) Although the number of school programs for children with disabilities is increasing, parents of such children often receive little support from the Government and many schools are unable to provide accommodations for their disabilities.(6)

Non-state armed groups, such as the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS), recruited adults and their children in BiH for use in armed conflict in Syria.(26, 27)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

BiH has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

BiH is a democratic republic with a bicameral parliament. Governmental responsibility lies within the entities of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH), Republika Srpska (RS), and the self-governing Brčko District (BD).(6) The Government of BiH has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms, at the state, entity, and district levels (Table 4). However, gaps exist in BiH's, FBiH's, RS', and BD's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

In 2016, FBiH amended its Criminal Code to add a criminal prohibition on trafficking in persons in line with international standards.(31, 35) The Criminal Codes of BiH, FBiH, RS, and BD prohibit the incitement to prostitution, forced prostitution, and turning a person over to a third party for the purpose of prostitution.

Laws related to illicit activities in BiH are not sufficient because the use, procuring, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited. Also, minimum age protections in the FBiH, RS, and BD labor codes do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside of formal employment relationships.(28-30) Therefore, most children engaged in street work, the most common form of child labor, are not protected by the law.(1-5, 21, 28-30) In addition, BiH, FBiH, RS, and BD do not have laws that prohibit the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups and children are punished for their association with armed groups.(11, 32-34, 36) Finally, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not include begging, an area of work where there is evidence of associated dangers.(42-44)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role

BD Administrative Support Department	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, in BD.(5)

Ministry of Security	Enforce national policy to prevent the worst forms of child labor. Collect data on human trafficking.(45) Ensure that victims are placed in Government-approved shelters.(45)
State Investigative and Protection Agency (SIPA) and State Border Police (SBP)	Investigate human trafficking crimes and enforce anti-trafficking laws across the entire country (SIPA).(45, 47) Identify victims of human trafficking at the border (SBP).
State, Entity, and FBiH Cantonal-Level Prosecutors' Offices	Prosecute human trafficking, forced labor, enticement to prostitution, and forced begging cases at their respective levels, based on applicable laws.(45, 47)

* The Government does not publish this information.

In 2016, all three entity-level ministries reported that they possessed sufficient resources for inspections and labor inspectors were adequately trained through seminars and internal instruction on how to detect child labor violations.(13, 49) The labor inspectors have a quarterly plan for inspections.(48) A complaint mechanism exists in all entities. Each market inspectorate has a mechanism for receiving online complaints.(48) All three labor inspectorates are authorized to inspect any formal sector site without receiving prior approval; approximately 30 percent of these inspections conducted in 2016 were unannounced.(13) Inspectors who find violations of the child labor law are permitted to assess administrative penalties or issue fines.(5) In 2016, no violations of child labor laws were found in the entities. Forced begging is pursued by entity-level police and state-level prosecutors, although labor inspectors do not have jurisdiction to investigate such cases.(13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in BiH took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, in cooperation with the State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons and the entity level Judicial and Prosecutorial Centers, the OSCE provided trainings for judges and prosecutors on human trafficking for labor exploitation, processing human trafficking cases, and interviewing child trafficking victims in a sensitive manner.(14) The Government continued to train police officers, inspectors, and investigators on human trafficking at its police academies.(12, 14) The Criminal Policy Research Center and the OSCE Mission in BiH organized two multidisciplinary trainings for 85 labor inspectors on human trafficking identification.(14) However, the State Coordinator acknowledged that there was a lack of recognition of forced begging and forced labor cases.(14)

Police refer children detained for begging to appropriate social service providers. NGOs receive funding from either the Ministry of Security or the Ministry for Human Rights and Refugees to provide shelter to these children.(5) However, law enforcement personnel and prosecutors often are unwilling to pursue investigations and prosecutions against parents involved in the trafficking of their children, particularly for forced labor, and the shelters subsequently return the children to the parents who trafficked them.(13)

Furthermore, a government official acknowledged that, although judges and prosecutors receive some basic training on human trafficking through the Agency for Education and Training, additional training is needed, particularly on how to properly prosecute cases involving child begging as a result of human trafficking.(25, 49, 52)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the Department of the State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address other forms of child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department of the State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons (State Coordinator) within the Ministry of Security (MOS)	Coordinate human trafficking victim protection efforts among relevant ministries at the entity level, and among prosecutors at the state, entity, and local levels, as well as with NGOs.(12, 53) Oversee the human trafficking database, which includes data from NGOs, SIPA, SBP, and police agencies and Prosecutors' Offices at all levels.(47) Publish data from this database in its annual report on trafficking.(12) Oversee shelter management and monitor NGOs' compliance with the agreed-upon provisions on victims' assistance.(47)
Strike Force for Combating Trafficking in Persons and Organized Illegal Migration (Anti-Trafficking Strike Force)	Coordinate human trafficking investigations across government agencies.(12) Convene once a month, with additional meetings scheduled as needed.(11, 12, 14, 52) Chaired by the Chief State Prosecutor, includes BiH, FBiH, RS, and BD ministries and agencies.(12, 45) In 2016, it began drafting an action plan to protect children from pornography and internet child exploitation.(14)
Inter-Ministerial Working Group	Monitor implementation of the Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings (TIP Strategy), the corresponding Action Plan, and the National Referral Mechanism.(12, 54) Comprises appointed representatives from the state and entity governments, including labor inspectors and elected representatives from NGOs.(3)
Regional Monitoring Teams	Facilitate coordination among state, entity, and cantonal-level institutions, as well as between NGOs and intergovernmental organizations.(12, 51) In 2016, implemented activities in the national TIP Strategy, Action Plan, and National Referral Mechanism.(14) Labor inspectors were incorporated into the regional monitoring teams in 2016.
Council for Children	Coordinates children's issues among state-level agencies and institutions under the Action Plan for Children of BiH.(55, 56)

Research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor that does not involve trafficking, including its worst forms. A source also indicated the need for the Regional Monitoring Teams to increase their coordination efforts regarding the referral and protection of human trafficking victims.(12, 25)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of BiH has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Counter Trafficking (2016–2019)	Mandates that the Government provide assistance to human trafficking victims, efficiently prosecute trafficking crimes, prevent trafficking in persons, and strengthen collaboration and coordination among stakeholders involved in combating human trafficking in BiH.(12, 57)
Action Plan for Children of BiH (2015–2018)	Designed to take a multidisciplinary approach that aims to continue improving the Government's efforts to protect children's rights.(58)
Action Plan for Solving Problems of the Roma in the Fields of Employment, Housing, and Healthcare (2013–2016)	Aimed to improve the socioeconomic status and social inclusion of Roma. Joint initiative of 12 European countries.(5, 59)
Policy for the Protection of Children Deprived of Parental Care and Families at Risk of Separation in FBiH (2006–2016) and Action Plan (2013–2016)	Called for the development of social protection systems to provide sufficient protection to children without parental care and children separated from their parents.(7)
Council of Europe Action Plan for BiH (2015–2017)	Outlines a comprehensive strategy for cooperative efforts between the Government and the Council of Europe. Includes components designed to increase inclusive education and decrease discrimination against Roma.(60)

Although the Government of BiH has adopted the National Action Plan to Counter Trafficking and the Action Plan for Child Protection and Prevention of Violence Against Children through Information-Communications Technologies, research found no evidence of an overall policy to combat child labor or the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, or illicit activities.(3, 5, 12, 61) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Action Plan for Solving Problems of the Roma in the Fields of Employment, Housing, and Healthcare, Policy for the Protection of Children Deprived of Parental Care and Families at Risk of Separation in FBiH, and the Council of Europe Action Plan for BiH.

Sources also have indicated that the Government has not allocated adequate financial resources for effective implementation of inclusive education initiatives.(24, 62-64)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government of BiH funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Registration Project	UNHCR-funded project, implemented by NGO Vasa Prava , which promotes the registration of Roma people to increase their access to social benefits and schools.(12, 45, 65) Helped 1,300 Roma individuals register for citizenship and enabled 19,000 individuals to apply for social inclusion programs since its initiation in July 2009.(55, 66) In 2016, the Government confirmed the citizenship of 20 individuals.(14)
Daily Centers and Crisis Centers [†]	Center for Social Welfare-supported and NGO-operated day care centers in nine locations across the country for vulnerable children, especially street children.(54, 55) Provide direct assistance for children, including educational activities, counseling, food, and hygiene.(2, 19) In four locations, NGOs also maintain Crisis Centers to provide protection to children found in exploitative labor situations who need emergency access to accommodation and social services.(16) In 2016, 28 children were identified as potential trafficking victims by the centers and were provided assistance.(14)
Assistance for Trafficking Victims [†]	Government program that allocates small grants to local NGOs for the provision of shelter and social services to victims of human trafficking. In 2016, the Ministry of Human Rights and Refugees distributed $32,327 to assist domestic victims, $37,716 to assist foreign victims, and $5,500 for European Anti-Trafficking Day.(14) Services include counseling, educational assistance and job training for domestic victims, and visa and legal services for foreign victims of human trafficking.(49)

Program	Description
Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings and Organized Crime—Phase 2 (2014–2017)	EU-funded project implemented by the International Center for Migration Policy Development in six countries, including BiH. Aims to build the capacity of participating governments to prevent human trafficking by providing policy, legal, and technical assistance.(67) Focuses on improving victim identification, increasing the prosecution of traffickers, and strengthening coordination among stakeholders.(67)
UNICEF Country Program (2015–2019)	UNICEF-funded program. Aims to reduce child poverty and enhance child protection and inclusive education. The Program also aims to create inclusive early education for Roma children, as well as identify gaps in access to education for Roma children and children with disabilities.(68)
United Nations Program and Common Budgetary Framework (2015–2019)	UN funded project implemented by UN-affiliated implementing partners. Goals include inclusive education for Roma children and children with disabilities, as well as social protection for vulnerable individuals.(69)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of BiH.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(14)

Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings and Organized Crime – Phase 2, the UNICEF Country Program, and the United Nations Program and Common Budgetary Framework.

As labor inspectors do not have a mandate to inspect informal work on the streets, staff from Daily Centers are often the first to identify children engaged in hazardous street work. Sarajevo’s Center for Social Welfare’s Mobile Team engages in daily outreach to children on the streets and to families in vulnerable communities.(4, 14) The Mobile Team staff stated, however, that they lack sufficient resources for their work, especially reliable transportation.(2, 25) Government support for outreach to street children in areas outside of Sarajevo varies significantly. Although the majority of Daily Centers collaborate with local Centers for Social Welfare, most Daily Centers are not institutionalized and, therefore, lack consistent financial and technical support.(16, 25) This may limit the ability of Daily Centers to identify and assist children working on the streets. Although the Government provides some social services for low-income families through the Center for Social Welfare, many families do not receive enough assistance to reduce their reliance on child labor, especially begging, as a source of income.(2)

Government officials noted that, although the number of domestic human trafficking victims identified in BiH is significantly higher than the number of foreign human trafficking victims identified, government funding is disproportionately allocated to assist foreigners.(14) As a result, some organizations that provide services to victims of domestic human trafficking may lack adequate financial resources.(3, 14, 25, 56) In addition, research found that most NGOs rely exclusively on grant funding from foreign donors. Their capacities have diminished as foreign assistance to NGOs has declined, creating obstacles for continued implementation of their programs.(14)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in BiH (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that all children are protected by labor law, including those who work in the informal sector, such as children engaged in street work.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that BiH law prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including using, procuring, and offering children for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the laws criminally prohibit the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups, and that children are not punished for engagement in non-state armed groups.	2016
	Include child begging in the list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children for all entities.	2016

	Collect and publish data on the number of child labor investigations, as well as the number of individuals prosecuted, convicted, and sentenced for crimes related to human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation, disaggregated by the age and sex of the victim, in FBiH, RS, and BD.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure that all children identified as being engaged in child labor are referred to appropriate social services.	2013 – 2016
	Increase training for law enforcement prosecutors and judges on how to properly apply criminal law in cases of child labor trafficking, forced labor, and forced begging.	2014 – 2016
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2016
	Improve coordination among Regional Monitoring Teams on the referral and protection of human trafficking victims.	2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor prevention and elimination strategies into new and existing policies.	2009 – 2016
	Adopt a policy designed to address child labor and its worst forms, other than child trafficking, including commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and illicit activities.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that all government policies fulfill their mandate, including the Action Plan for Solving Problems of the Roma in the Fields of Employment, Housing, and Healthcare; Policy for the Protection of Children Deprived of Parental Care and Families at Risk of Separation in FBiH; and the Council of Europe Action Plan for BiH.	2016
	Expand and provide adequate funding for existing programs aimed at improving access to education for Roma children and implementing the commitments to include Roma in society by providing for basic needs.	2010 – 2016
Social Programs	Collect data on children involved in the worst forms of child labor in order to enhance policymakers' ability to identify problems more accurately and to address them more effectively.	2009 – 2016
	Promote inclusive education for minority children, including Roma, by expanding efforts to reduce discrimination in schools, mitigate the costs associated with education, and assist Roma and other families at risk of statelessness to register for citizenship documentation that entitles their children to access school.	2011 – 2016
	Ensure inclusive education for children with disabilities by ensuring that schools have adequate resources to provide the necessary accommodations for them.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that all social programs fulfill their mandate, including the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings and Organized Crime – Phase 2; the UNICEF Country Program; and the United Nations Program and Common Budgetary Framework.	2016
	Institutionalize and provide sufficient funding for Daily Centers to ensure that they have the resources and technical support necessary to assist children involved in child labor and those who are at risk of involvement.	2014 – 2016
	Strengthen social protection programs that provide support to economically vulnerable families in order to reduce their reliance on child labor.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that resources for human trafficking victims are sufficient to meet the needs of domestic victims.	2014 – 2016
	Increase funding for programs that provide social services, including housing, for child trafficking victims.	2015 – 2016

9. UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education, both sexes (%). Accessed December 16, 2016. <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Botswana made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government's Orphan Care Program provided 29,828 orphans with meals and subsidized the cost of school. In addition, the Government continued its Stay-in-School Program, which trains teachers and social workers on how to talk to parents about the importance of education. However, children in Botswana perform dangerous tasks in cattle herding. Key gaps remain in the country's legal framework, including the lack of minimum age for compulsory education and insufficient prohibitions for hazardous work. In addition, social programs do not always reach intended child labor victims, especially those engaged in domestic work and cattle herding.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Botswana perform dangerous tasks in cattle herding.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Botswana. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		99.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (3, 6, 7)
	Herding cattle (1-3, 8-10)
Services	Street work, including vending (1)
	Domestic work (1, 3, 9, 10)
	Work in informal bars, activities unknown (10)
	Truck driver assistance, including unloading goods (11)
	Work outside supermarkets, including carrying bags for customers (11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Forced labor in herding cattle and domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (9, 10)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (8, 10)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Botswana are possibly trafficked within the country for commercial sexual exploitation along major highways by truck drivers.(10) Two NGOs reported that children are engaged in cattle herding in remote rural villages, especially among the San population.(2, 8) UNICEF data published in 2016 reported that 9 percent of children in Botswana are engaged in child labor.(12)

Botswana

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Primary education is free, and poor families receive free meals, toiletries, and school uniforms.(6, 13) Secondary school costs between $38 and $43 per year; however, poor families may receive a tuition exemption.(13, 14) According to UNICEF, 16 percent of children of primary school age are not attending school.(12) The Government has yet to collect and publish child labor data to inform policies and social programs.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Botswana has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Botswana's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Articles 2 and 107 of the Employment Act (15)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 2 and 110 of the Employment Act (15)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 2 and 108 of the Employment Act; Section 24 of the Children's Act (15, 16)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2 and 71 of the Employment Act; Articles 175 and 262 of the Penal Code; Section 114 of the Children's Act; Articles 9 and 10 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act (15-18)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 175 of the Penal Code; Section 114 of the Children's Act; Articles 9 and 10 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act (16-18)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 25 and 57–59 of the Children's Act (16)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 60 of the Children's Act (16)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Section 17 of the Botswana Defence Force Act (19)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Section 26(2) of the Children's Act (16)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Revised National Policy in Education, White Paper No. 12 of 1994; Section 18 of the Children's Act (16, 20)

* No conscription (21)

Under Botswanan law, children working without a contract do not benefit from minimum age protections. Although the Employment Act allows children at age 14 to conduct light work activities, the Government has yet to determine the types of light work activities permitted for children.(22) In addition, the Employment Act prohibits night work and hazardous underground work for children but fails to prohibit other types of hazardous work, including work with dangerous machinery, equipment, and tools.(15) Although the Government has made efforts to compile a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations in recent years, the list has yet to be approved.(23-25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Home Affairs	Enforce child labor laws and policies. In the case of the Commissioner of Labor, authorized by the Employment Act to conduct labor inspections.(6, 15, 23) Facilitate coordination with local leaders and law enforcement officers; posts labor inspectors to District Council offices to carry out their duties.(26)
District and Municipal Council Child Welfare Divisions	Enforce child labor laws at the local levels.(6) Met quarterly during the year.(27)
Botswana Police Service	Investigate cases of the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation of children and child trafficking.(3)
Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security (MDJS)	Monitor suspected human trafficking cases and lead the Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee.(28, 29)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Botswana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Botswana took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown* (26)	N/A (3)

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (26)	Yes (3)

* The Government does not publish this information.

In 2016, the Botswana Police Service launched an investigation into the sex worker population at the Kazungula border with Zambia and Zimbabwe for possible victims of human trafficking; no human trafficking cases were found.(29) The Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security (MDJS) contributed to training and workshops on human trafficking with religious groups, students, and recruitment agencies. In September, MDJS hosted a session at Materspei College to educate students about the dangers of human trafficking and methods that transnational criminals use to lure victims, including via cybercrime.(32) Reports indicate that police are sometimes insensitive when handling cases of violence against women and children and lack investigative training to identify, prosecute, and prevent human trafficking violations.(24, 28, 33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee	Establish a reporting and referral mechanism for children subjected to human trafficking. Created by the 2014 Anti-Human Trafficking Bill and led by the MDJS.(1) Met during the year to develop a draft Human Trafficking National Action Plan.(29)
Advisory Committee on Child Labor	Oversee child labor issues and report to the Government three to four times per year. Includes representatives from government agencies, various NGOs, worker federations, and employer organizations.(3, 11, 23)
Child Labor Committees	Identify child laborers at the village level. Includes social workers; school teachers; members of the Village Development Committees, which are local government structures; labor inspectors; and community leaders, including chiefs and priests.(3, 13)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Kinds of Child Labor	Outlines the Government's plan to address child labor through legislation and policy and includes awareness-raising programs and training on child labor and its worst forms for relevant stakeholders and implementers.(1)
Ministry of Labor and Home Affairs Sustainability Plan	Aims to incorporate addressing child labor issues into the regular duties of labor inspectors. Calls on local leaders and volunteers to identify and refer cases of child labor to social workers and school teachers to monitor attendance and promote retention.(34)

Policy	Description
Ministry and Department Action Plans	Includes plans to address child labor through the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Gender and Child Welfare, the Department of Social Services, and the Police.(35) Contains implementation strategies that aim to improve the safety and protection of children and to identify and help vulnerable children in need.(35)

‡ The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(36, 37)

Child labor elimination and prevention strategies are not included in the following policies: National Plan of Action for Orphans and Vulnerable Children, Botswana National Youth Policy, and National Action Plan for Youth.(13, 38-40) In December, the Government approved spending under National Development Plan 11 to address human trafficking by setting up mechanisms to protect the interests of witnesses and victims.(41)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Government-Funded Programs to Combat Child Labor [†]	NGO-run shelters, with financial support from the Government, that caters to human trafficking victims, including children. The Kagisano Society Women's Shelter that provides temporary shelter to women; in 2016, provided care to four girls who were victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Stay-in-School Program trains teachers and social workers to communicate with parents about the importance of education. National School Feeding Program focuses on providing meals to children (grades 1–7) in all public primary schools in the country, serving over 330,000 school children and Remote Area Dweller Program provides a second meal to schoolchildren in remote, marginalized communities. Orphan Care Program provides orphans with meals and subsidizes the cost of school fees and transportation costs. In 2016, President Khama said 29,828 orphans received aid monthly under the program.(6, 29, 42)

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(43-45)

Although Botswana has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs does not always reach the intended targets, especially in domestic work and cattle herding in which children have been found working.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Botswana (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law's light work provisions are specific enough to prevent children from involvement in child labor.	2016
	Ensure that the law prohibits hazardous work for children younger than age 18 in all relevant sectors, including in agriculture.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the law's minimum age protections apply to children working without a contract.	2010 – 2016
	Establish a compulsory education age equal to or higher than the minimum age of employment.	2010 – 2016
Enforcement	Publish information about the labor inspectorate's training of labor inspectors on child labor issues, the amount of labor violations found and penalties imposed, and the number of convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2016
	Authorize labor inspectors to assess penalties for child labor violations.	2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the existing youth policies.	2011 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Collect and publish data on child labor, including its worst forms, to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2016
	Develop programs to address child labor in domestic work and cattle herding.	2012 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Brazil made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved a new anti-trafficking in persons law that criminalizes child trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation; adopted a Federal Pact for the Eradication of Forced Labor to strengthen the implementation of forced labor policies at the state level and increase information sharing and interagency coordination; and established a national coordination body to collect data on forced labor and human trafficking cases. Criminal law enforcement officials initiated 950 cyber investigations on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. In addition, the Government developed a monitoring system for the National Program to Eradicate Child Labor, allowing state and municipal governments to track program targets. However, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of coffee and in commercial sexual exploitation. There are not enough labor inspectors to provide sufficient coverage of the workforce, and there is a lack of specialized shelters for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Brazil engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of coffee and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-5) In 2016, the Government released the 2015 National Household Survey results, which found 412,000 children, ages 5 to 13, working in Brazil, a 25.6 percent decrease from 2014. The study also found that 65 percent of child laborers ages 5 to 13 work in agriculture.(6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Brazil.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	2.9 (897,018)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	97.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	3.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

	Forced labor in agriculture, including in coffee and manioc (4, 5, 9, 33)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Brazil, child trafficking is a problem, especially in border areas. Brazilian and Paraguayan indigenous children are trafficked for domestic work. Paraguayan indigenous children are trafficked for the purpose of begging. Adolescents, including some from Haiti and South Korea, are trafficked to play in soccer clubs.(1)

While the overall scope and magnitude of the commercial sexual exploitation of children is unknown, the Government acknowledges that it occurs throughout Brazil, with higher rates reported in the North and Northeast regions.(43, 47) Child sex tourism is particularly common in tourist and coastal areas.(43)

In 2016, the Government closed schools in some rural areas, causing students to travel great distances to access education and making them vulnerable to school drop-out.(48) There are low levels of birth registration among indigenous children, which may affect their ability to access education as birth registration documents are often necessary for school enrollment.(33, 49)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Brazil has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Brazil's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 4 of the National Education Law (58)

In October 2016, the Government passed a new anti-trafficking in persons law which criminalizes human trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation, and increases minimum sentences for human trafficking crimes.(53) However, the prohibitions against child trafficking for labor exploitation are insufficient because they require threats, the use of force, or coercion to be established for the crime of child trafficking.

In December 2016, the municipal government of São Paulo passed Law 16.606, establishing a fine of $32,000 to $32 million for establishments complicit in forced labor. In extremely serious cases, when a fine is not paid, or for recurrent offenses, the law provides for the cancellation of the operating license of the establishment and the guilty party is barred from obtaining a new business license for 5 to 10 years.(59) The Senate's Constitution, Justice, and Citizenship Committee approved a bill which criminalizes any attempt to hire a child under age 14 for economic gain; the bill awaits approval from the Chamber of Deputies and President.(60) The Government also passed an inter-ministerial ordinance which updates the criteria for entry and removal from the register of employers caught with forced labor, known as the “Lista Suja” or “Dirty List”.(61) The List, which the Government had not issued since 2014, was published in March 2017 after a legal battle over its release. Although the initial listing contained 85 businesses, 17 were removed shortly after its publication.(62) According to the Ministry of Labor and Social Security, these businesses were removed because they were still appealing their inclusion on the List. The Federal Labor Prosecutor's Office has asked the Ministry of Labor and Social Security for a more detailed explanation regarding the removals.(63)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/ Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security	Conduct labor inspections and enforce child and forced labor laws.(28) The central labor inspection unit develops and proposes guidelines for the annual work plan while 27 decentralized regional units implement labor inspection activities.(64) Additional mobile inspection units, located in every region, conduct inspections where forced labor, including forced child labor, is suspected.(14, 65) Mobile inspection units comprise labor inspectors, labor prosecutors, Federal Police officers, and other law enforcement officials.(14)

Organization/ Agency	Role
Federal Labor Prosecutor's Office	Prosecute child labor and forced labor violations by working with prosecutors from the National Committee to Combat Child and Adolescent Labor, an in-house body that coordinates efforts to combat child labor. Collects fines for forced labor violations and allocates funds for initiatives that address child labor and forced labor.(66)
Federal Police	Investigate some cases of forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(28) Maintain a database to track cases of human trafficking for sexual exploitation.(14)
Federal Public Ministry	Investigate and prosecute cases of forced labor and human trafficking.(67)
Ministry of Justice	Lead efforts to combat human trafficking and oversee Advanced Posts (Postos Avançados) and state-run Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers (Núcleos de Enfrentamento). Advanced Posts (Postos Avançados) identify human traffickers and potential victims in high-transit areas, including airports and bus stations. There are 19 posts in areas with historically high rates of human trafficking.(68) Provide guidance to federal, state, and local government officials on referrals for victims of human trafficking, including to Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers (Núcleos de Enfrentamento), Specialized Social Assistance Reference Centers, and NGOs.(68) The Secretariat for Human Rights coordinates efforts to protect human rights, including combating forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Sponsor Dial 100, a human rights violation hotline that directs child labor complaints to appropriate institutions for follow-up.(28, 69-72)
Federal Highway Police	Identify areas at high risk of commercial sexual exploitation.(73)

In 2016, two labor inspector strikes spanned a total of 8 months, which may have impacted the Government's ability to enforce child labor laws. According to the labor inspector union, the strikes were a result of alleged low pay, little opportunity for career advancement, heavy workload, and lack of adequate security during enforcement activities in remote regions.(74) In December 2016, the Government approved an increase in government employees' salaries, including labor inspectors.(75)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Brazil took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

During the reporting period, the labor inspectorate had a budget of $186,911 for child labor inspections.(20) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Brazil's workforce, which includes over 110 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Brazil should employ roughly 7,360 labor inspectors.(78-80)

In 2016, the Government conducted 5,376 child labor inspections, a decrease from 7,263 inspections in 2015.(14, 20) The states with the most cases of child labor violations include Minas Gerais, Mato Grosso do Sul, Paraná, and Rio de Janeiro.(20)

Upon finding children in hazardous working conditions, Ministry of Labor and Social Security officials immediately remove the children and return them to their families or refer them to social service providers.(14) In 2016, inspectors removed 2,483 children who were found working in violation of the minimum age law from their workplace.(72)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Brazil took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

Although the Federal Police maintain a database to track cases of human trafficking for sexual exploitation, no mechanism is in place to record violations related to other forms of commercial sexual exploitation of children, including in prostitution and pornography.(44)

In 2016, 120 state police officers received training on the investigation of child sexual exploitation on the internet; the training led officials to initiate 950 cyber investigations.(68)

According to the Government, the judicial system does not sufficiently hold perpetrators of child labor law violations accountable, which may lead to a sense of impunity among violators.(14) Furthermore, evidence suggests some police officers and other government officials may be involved in the commercial sexual exploitation of children and are not held accountable in accordance with the law.(3, 68)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor	Lead the implementation of the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents. Led by the Ministry of Labor and Social Security, includes 17 government agencies and representatives from trade unions, business associations, and civil society organizations.(82, 83)
Intersectoral Commission to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents	Monitor implementation of the National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents. Led by the Ministry of Justice's Special Secretariat for Human Rights (SDH).(84, 85)
National Committee to Combat Forced Labor	Coordinate and evaluate the implementation of the National Plan for the Eradication of Forced Labor. Led by SDH.(86)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate activities to address human trafficking, including implementation of the Second Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons. Led by the Ministry of Justice.(87, 88) In 2016, monitored and evaluated the Plan, and began developing the third national action plan.(89)
National Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents	Monitor policies to protect children's rights, including the rights of working children. Includes representatives from the Executive Branch and NGOs.(90, 91)
Interagency Committee to Implement Strategies to Ensure the Protection of Children's and Adolescents' Rights	Coordinate the implementation of policies to protect children's and adolescents' rights, including the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents. Led by SDH.(92)
Labor Justice Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Decent Work	Organize efforts of the labor courts to eliminate child labor and ensure that adolescents have decent work opportunities.(93) Includes 11 representatives from the Superior Labor Court and regional labor courts.(94)
Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers (Núcleos de Enfrentamento)	Coordinate activities carried out by local, state, and federal agencies to combat human trafficking. Established in 16 states and the Federal District.(68)
National Forum of Judiciary Power for Monitoring Demands Related to Labor Exploitation and Human Trafficking (FONTET)*	Collect data on forced labor and human trafficking cases.(68) Represented by the National Judiciary Committee and Judicial State Committees to Combat Forced Labor and Trafficking in Persons.(95) During the reporting period, collected data on 85 million legal cases and uploaded the information into a searchable database.(68)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor†

Policy	Description
National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents (2011–2015)	Guided the Government's efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms.(96) Although it expired in 2015, the Government continued to implement the Plan during the reporting period, and worked on drafting the next edition.(97)
National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents (2013–2020)	Identifies strategies to prevent the sexual exploitation of children, protect children's rights, and assist child victims.(85)
Second Plan for the Eradication of Forced Labor	Establishes the policy framework to address forced labor.(98)
Federal Pact for the Eradication of Forced Labor†	Aims to establish a forced labor database to share research and data, create state-level plans to combat forced labor, and strengthen interagency coordination. Led by the Ministry of Justice's Special Secretariat for Human Rights, and signed by 15 states.(99, 100)
Second National Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2013–2016)	Guides efforts to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking.(88)
National Education Plan (2014–2024)	Aims to expand access to education and improve the quality of education. Plans to allocate 10 percent of Brazil's GDP to public education by 2024.(101)
Integrated Work Plan for the Brazil-Uruguay Border†	Aims to improve collaboration between Government initiatives in border regions; plans to create a Binational Committee for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor to plan and implement awareness campaigns.(102)

‡ The Government has other policies which may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(103)

In 2016, the Government passed a Constitutional amendment that restricts primary spending increases for the next 20 years; the spending cap can only increase by the previous year's rate of inflation. The Government excluded health and education expenses from the ceiling until 2018.(104) According to the National Campaign for the Right to Education, this change in funding will further prevent the Government from meeting the National Education Plan's objectives.(105)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
National Program to Eradicate Child Labor [Programa de Erradicação do Trabalho Infantil (PETI)] [†]	Ministry of Social Development and the Fight Against Hunger (MDS) social assistance program that combats child labor through awareness-raising activities, victim identification and protection, and conditional cash transfers.(65, 106) To receive program benefits, participants must ensure that children are not working and maintain at least 85 percent school attendance.(107) In 2016, MDS launched a monitoring system to allow state and municipal governments to track program targets.(108)
Living Together and Strengthening Links Program [Serviço de Convivência e Fortalecimento de Vínculo (SCFV)] [†]	MDS social assistance program for vulnerable groups, including child laborers. Aims to strengthen familial and communal ties through sports and artistic and cultural activities. Offers services at Social Assistance Reference Centers and Living Centers.(109)
Social Assistance Reference Centers [†]	MDS and SDH program that provides vulnerable populations, including victims of child labor and commercial sexual exploitation, with psychological, social, and legal services.(110, 111) In 2016, there were 2,374 Specialized Social Assistance Reference Centers located throughout the country, a decrease from 2,453 centers in 2015; only 675 centers were certified to assist victims of human trafficking, and many centers lacked necessary funds.(43, 68, 72)
Family Stipend (Bolsa Família) [†]	MDS program that supplements income through cash transfers for families living in poverty and extreme poverty.(32, 112) In 2016, budget increased by $513 million. As of July 2016, 87.5 percent of children ages 6-15 and 76.8 percent of children ages 16-17 met the school attendance requirement.(75) During the reporting period, MDS improved control mechanisms for participation; six federal databases allowed the Government to cross-check data to reduce fraud and ensure only intended program participants receive payments.(75)
Brazil Without Extreme Poverty (Brasil Sem Miséria) [†]	MDS program that lifts people out of extreme poverty by guaranteeing a minimum income; expanding access to public services, including education, health, and citizenship; and increasing job opportunities and income generation for the poorest families.(113) One program component, Caring Brazil (Brasil Carinhoso), targets Bolsa Família participants with children ages 0 to 15 with a monthly family income of less than $22 per person.(114)
Ministry of Education programs [†]	National Program on Job Training and Employment (Programa Nacional de Acesso ao Ensino Técnico e Emprego) for workers and social program recipients, including high school students.(115, 116)
National Household Survey [†]	Government-funded annual national household survey that includes questions about child labor.(6)
South-South Cooperation Projects [†]	Government of Brazil-funded projects implemented by the ILO to combat child labor and promote South-South cooperation.(117) The Support to Caribbean States* project builds the capacity of participating Caribbean countries to enhance the school-to-work transition of youth.(118)
USDOL-funded Projects	USDOL-funded projects implemented by the ILO that aim to combat child labor and forced labor. The Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project improves the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(119) The Project to Consolidate Efforts to Combat Forced Labor in Brazil and Peru combats forced labor, including forced child labor in Brazil and Peru, and shares Brazil's best practices with the Government of Peru and Peruvian stakeholders.(120, 121) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Brazil.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(122, 123)

Because PETI and Bolsa Família are decentralized, local governments are responsible for their implementation. Some municipalities do not have the necessary human and financial resources to fully implement and monitor these programs.(32) Many states also report a lack of resources to adequately assist victims of human trafficking.(68) Research found a lack of specialized shelters for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(33, 43)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR, INCLUDING ITS WORST FORMS

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Brazil (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws do not require threats, the use of force, or coercion to be established for the crime of child trafficking for labor exploitation.	2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
	Ensure that the removal of businesses from the register of employers caught with forced labor is implemented transparently and in accordance with the established criteria.	2016
Enforcement	Publish information regarding the labor inspectorate's funding, number of child labor dedicated inspectors, number of labor inspections conducted, number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed, number of penalties imposed that were collected; as well as the number of criminal violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions achieved.	2012 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors in order to provide sufficient coverage of the workforce. Provide suitable pay and security protection for inspections in remote regions to ensure the continuity of the labor inspection function.	2014 – 2016
	Collect and track data on cases regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including child prostitution and pornography.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that all violators of child labor laws, including the worst forms of child labor, are held accountable in accordance with the law.	2015 – 2016
Government Policies	Monitor the impact of the education sector's spending cap on children's access to education.	2016
	Provide adequate resources to ensure that the goals outlined in the National Education Plan are achieved.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Expand efforts to improve access to primary and secondary education, particularly in rural areas. Expand the accessibility of birth registration services in remote areas and ensure indigenous communities are aware of the benefits of birth registration.	2013 – 2016
	Provide local governments with the necessary resources to fully implement and monitor PETI and Bolsa Família .	2009 – 2016
	Provide adequate resources to state governments to ensure that child trafficking victims receive social services. Ensure the availability of specialized shelters for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.	2012 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 79. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and the least developed countries" equates to "least developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.
80. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

Burkina Faso

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Burkina Faso made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government revised its Hazardous Work List to make the list more comprehensive and began drafting a new National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor. In addition, the Government funded and participated in multiple programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. However, children in Burkina Faso perform dangerous tasks in cotton harvesting. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and in artisanal gold mining. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from engaging in the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burkina Faso engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and in artisanal gold mining. Children in Burkina Faso perform dangerous tasks in cotton harvesting.(1-8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burkina Faso.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	42.1 (2,116,752)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	41.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	21.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		61.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Enquête Démographique et de Santé et à Indicateurs Multiples, 2010.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting, [†] weeding, and harvesting crops, including cotton and mangos (1, 3-8, 11) Raising and herding [†] livestock, including cattle and goats (5, 11-14)
Industry	Artisanal mining [†] of gold, including digging [†] and crushing [†] rock, installing dynamite, [†] working underground, [†] carrying water and other heavy loads, [†] and using cyanide [†] and mercury [†] (1-3, 8, 12, 15-31) Quarrying [†] and transporting heavy loads [†] while working to extract granite (14, 16, 19, 25, 31-36) Work in carpentry [†] and construction (12, 13)
Services	Domestic work [†] (4, 6, 11-13, 26, 37, 38) Street work, including vending [†] (6, 11-13, 36)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (19) Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (11, 26, 39, 40) Farming, including production of cotton and livestock raising, domestic work, begging, gold mining, and quarrying, each as a result of human trafficking (3, 5, 6, 39-45)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Burkina Faso is a destination, transit point, and source for child trafficking to and from other West African countries.(39, 40, 46-48) The Government works with Koranic schools and educators to expose individuals who pose as Koranic teachers to force their students to beg in the streets and then take the profits.(6, 39-41, 44, 49, 50) The practice of confiage, which involves sending a child to live with a relative or friend to attend school in a larger town or city, may place children at risk of internal human trafficking.(44) Child labor in gold mining, especially artisanal gold mining, known locally as orpaillage, continues to increase and leads children to leave school.(5, 8, 50-55)

Although the Law Orienting the Education System mandates free education until age 16, uniform costs, school-related fees, teacher shortages, and school infrastructure shortfalls in rural areas hinder children's access to education.(2, 3, 26, 31, 56) About a quarter of children under age five in Burkina Faso lack a birth certificate. As birth certificates are required to attend school, many of these children remain out of school and vulnerable to child labor.(57, 58)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Burkina Faso has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Burkina Faso's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 152 of the Labor Code; Order Deviating the Age of Admission to Employment (59, 60)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 149–150 of the Labor Code; Article 1 of the Hazardous Work List (59, 61)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code; Articles 3–6 of the Hazardous Work List; Article 77 of the Mining Code (59, 61, 62)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 5 and 153 of the Labor Code; Articles 3–5 of the Law Suppressing the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography; Article 1 of the Law on Combating Trafficking of Persons and Similar Practices (59, 63, 64)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code; Articles 1–5 and 14–15 of the Law on Combating Trafficking of Persons and Similar Practices (59, 64)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code; Articles 3–4, 7–10, and 20 of the Law Suppressing the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography (59, 63)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code (59)

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 6 of the Law Orienting the Education System (66)

* No conscription (67)

In 2016, the Government revised its Hazardous Work List; nevertheless, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not fully cover all tasks in sectors in which child labor is known to occur, including in agriculture and construction. Children are consequently left exposed to conditions that harm their health, safety, and morals.(61) In addition, the light work provisions in the Labor Code are not specific enough to prevent children from involvement in child labor.(59, 60)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Civil Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS)	Enforce labor laws, including child labor laws and laws on the worst forms of child labor, and establish a government policy to combat child labor.(11, 54, 68, 69) Use provincial committees to raise awareness, conduct workshops for community members, and enforce laws at the local level.(46, 70)
Ministry of Women, National Solidarity, and Family (MFSNF)	Protect children's rights, enforce laws against child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor, remove children from exploitative child labor, and provide reintegration services.(11, 68, 71, 72) Operate a free hotline to report child abuse. Maintain civil registry offices in maternity wards to register newborn babies. (2, 19, 73-75) Use its National Council for Childhood to oversee all policies for the survival, protection, development, and participation of children.(76)
Ministry of Territorial Administration, Decentralization and Interior Security (MATDSI)	Enforce criminal laws related to child trafficking.(43) Use its Morals Brigade in the MATDSI National Police Force to oversee criminal cases involving children and women.(77)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce and prosecute criminal laws, including laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(78) Appoint one or more judges who specialize in child protection issues to each high court to oversee juvenile court cases. May also call on MFSNF social workers in charge of child protection to conduct investigations on behalf of vulnerable children, including victims of child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, exploitative child labor, and begging.(79)
Parliamentary Network for the Promotion of Child Rights	Train government officials on children's rights, including child labor laws and other issues affecting children.(3, 80, 81)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Burkina Faso took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

The Government employs 140 labor controllers to assist the 154 labor inspectors, who are in charge of conducting labor inspections; however, the Government indicates it lacks adequate resources to enforce labor laws throughout the country, including the human and financial resources needed to carry out a sufficient number of labor inspections.(2, 39, 68) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Burkina Faso's workforce, which includes over 7 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Burkina Faso should employ roughly 192 inspectors.(83, 84) The Government noted that it is difficult for inspectors to follow up on inspections to ensure their recommendations have been implemented.(85)

The Ministry of Civil Service, Labor, and Social Security publishes an annual report listing 12 types of labor infractions, none of which are related to child labor.(11) Law enforcement collaborates ad hoc with the Ministry of Women, National Solidarity, and Family (MFSNF) to provide social services to child labor victims and the Government is in the process of implementing a Child Labor Monitoring System, which would improve connections between the various actors.(31, 82) It is unknown how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of complaints made to the MFSNF hotline.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burkina Faso took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordination Committee for the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CNC-PAN/PFTE)	Supervise, evaluate, and oversee implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Chaired by the MFPTSS Directorate to Combat Child Labor and its Worst Forms, includes representatives from various civil society organizations, 24 government ministries, and 6 observers from donor countries and international NGOs.(11, 12, 68) Hold meetings twice a year to review efforts to combat child labor and identify needs.(68) In 2016, met twice to develop a new National Strategy to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor and to examine reports from 2014 and 2015, and the report on the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(31)
MFPTSS Directorate to Combat Child Labor and its Worst Forms (DLTE)	Coordinate and lead interagency efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms; collect information on child labor; and conduct awareness raising activities.(86) Serve as the Secretariat for the CNC-PAN/PFTE.(78, 86)
National Committee for Vigilance and Surveillance Against the Trafficking in Persons and Assimilated Practices (CNVS)	Coordinate actions at the national level to combat the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking. Oversee Committees for Vigilance and Surveillance in each of the regions.(39, 46) MFSNF serves as president, and MATDSI is the vice president.(39, 73) Includes representatives from MFPTSS, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Women and Gender, and NGOs.(39)
Child Protection Networks (RPEs)	Assist CNVS with coordinating and facilitating the collection of statistical data on human trafficking, in particular women and children. Established by MFSNF, comprises social workers, magistrates, judges, police officers, health workers, and NGOs in 23 of the country's 45 provinces.(49)

In 2016, the Government trained members of the National Committee for Vigilance and Surveillance Against the Trafficking in Persons and Assimilated Practices on the proactive identification of trafficking victims.(48) Although the Government made efforts to improve its data collection system and monitoring capabilities, poor coordination among ministries and a lack of resources, such as computers and electricity, continued to hamper the Government's ability to fully address child trafficking.(2, 39)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
2015 National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking	Developed by MFSNF and implemented by CNVS, aims to combat human trafficking.(39) Research was unable to determine any updates in 2016.(50)
Communal Action Plan Against Trafficking (2013–2018)	Seeks to prevent child trafficking, raise awareness in local communities, and rehabilitate and reintegrate victims of child trafficking. Piloted in Diebougou. Includes government plans to replicate elsewhere in the country.(39, 49) Research was unable to determine any updates in 2016.(50)
National Parenting Program	Aims to support families in their efforts to provide education and care to their children to reduce their vulnerability to child trafficking.(39, 49) Research was unable to determine any updates in 2016.(50)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(19, 31, 39, 87-89)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the National Plan for Economic and Social Development and the Program for the Strategic Development of Basic Education.(31, 47, 90, 91). Although the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor ended in 2015, a second iteration, covering 2017–2021, is currently in development to expand on the initial National Action Plan.(31, 92)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor*

Program	Description
National Program for the Fight Against Child Labor on Artisanal Gold Mining Sites and Quarries (2015–2019)†	MFSNF program that aims to prevent and withdraw children from working in artisanal gold mines as part of the Government's efforts to eliminate child labor in mining by 2025.(2, 39, 82, 93, 94) Seeks to strengthen child protection systems, improve coordination among stakeholders, and implement existing legislation. Builds on the previous project from 2009–2013 to eliminate child labor in mines and quarries.(82) Approximately $42.9 million, 40 percent of the program costs, to be provided by the Government.(2) In 2016, research was unable to determine whether any actions were undertaken.(50)
USDOL-Funded Projects to Address Child Labor	USDOL projects aim to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor; increase access to education, social protection, and training programs; and improve legislation and national government capacity to address child labor. These projects include Reducing Child Labor Through Education and Services , $5 million project implemented by Counterpart International; Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues , implemented in approximately 40 countries by the ILO; and Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II), implemented in at least eight countries by Winrock International and partners Verité and Lawyers Without Borders.(95-99) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our website .
MFSNF Projects to Combat Human Trafficking†	MFSNF-funded programs aim to combat human trafficking through the operation of 23 transit centers that provide food, medical assistance, and counseling to child trafficking victims and children vulnerable to trafficking.(39, 47, 48, 74) The transit centers aim to reintegrate victims into their communities and to facilitate repatriation of foreign victims when possible.(43) The National Parenting Program assists parents in managing and educating their children to combat child trafficking.(49) Government funds nationwide media campaigns to combat human trafficking by providing advocacy, raising awareness, and building capacity for key actors involved in child protection issues, including child trafficking.(39, 49) In 2016, research was unable to determine whether any actions were undertaken.(50)
World Bank-Funded Projects	Includes the Education Access and Quality Improvement Project (EAQIP), $51 million project to support the Government to increase access to preschool education in the two poorest regions and secondary education in the five poorest regions, and to improve teaching and education. Social Safety Net Project, $50 million project to provide income support to poor households and to lay the foundations for a basic safety net system in Burkina Faso.(100, 101) In 2016, research was unable to determine whether any actions were undertaken.(50)
Resilience and Economic Growth in the Sahel–Enhanced Resilience (REGIS – ER) (November 2013–November 2018)	Over $70 million USAID-funded, 5-year project to increase food security and improve livelihoods in Niger and Burkina Faso. Works to increase the resilience of chronically vulnerable populations in marginal agricultural and agro-pastoral zones in Niger and Burkina Faso, particularly in 25 communes in the marginal agriculture and agro-pastoral belt.(50, 102, 103)
National Strategy on Civil Registration (2012–2016)†	$41.3 million program that aims to achieve universal birth registration by creating information and registration centers funded 30 percent by the Government and the remaining 70 percent by technical and financial partners.(11, 26, 104) In 2016, research was unable to determine whether any actions were undertaken.(50)

† Program is funded by the Government of Burkina Faso.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (3, 11, 31, 105-110)

Although Burkina Faso has social programs to address the worst forms of child labor in the production of cotton and in gold mining, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(2, 3)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Burkina Faso (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the types of hazardous work prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2016
	Ensure that light work provisions are specific enough to prohibit children's involvement in child labor.	2016
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO recommendation.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that labor law enforcement receives sufficient resources to fulfill their mandate, including by conducting an adequate number of inspections and following up after inspections to ensure recommendations have been implemented.	2009 – 2016
	Publish statistics on the enforcement of child labor laws, including the number and type of labor inspections conducted, labor violations found, and penalties imposed and collected.	2009 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Include the number of child labor infractions in the Ministry of Civil Service (MFPTSS) annual report.	2015 – 2016
	Establish a mechanism to log all calls to the child protection hotline and track cases of child labor for referral to law enforcement or social service providers.	2015 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by conducting routine and targeted inspections.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure front-line responders apply standard victim identification and referral procedures uniformly.	2016
	Publish statistics on the criminal enforcement of child labor laws, including the number of investigations, violations found, prosecutions, and convictions.	2016
Coordination	Ensure coordinating bodies receive adequate resources, such as computers and electricity to address mandates.	2015 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Plan for Economic and Social Development and the Program for the Strategic Development of Basic Education policies.	2013 – 2016
	Take steps to implement the 2015 National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking, the Communal Action Plan Against Trafficking, and the National Parenting Program.	2016
Social Programs	Improve access to education by eliminating school-related fees and increasing the number of schools and teachers in rural areas.	2010 – 2016
	Take efforts to register children at birth to ensure access to social services, including education.	2010 – 2016
	Expand existing programs to fully address child labor in the production of cotton and in gold mining.	2009 – 2016
	Undertake activities to support MFSNF projects to combat human trafficking, World Bank-funded projects, and the National Strategy on Civil Registration.	2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children’s work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Burma

NO ASSESSMENT

In 2016, no assessment has been made regarding Burma's efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor because this is the first year that efforts have been assessed and suggested actions provided for Burma. Based on research regarding Burma's efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor, the Government made several efforts, but the military was also complicit in the use of forced child labor. Government efforts in Burma included amending the Shops and Establishments Act and the Factories Act to raise the minimum age for work to 14 and the minimum age for dangerous work to 18 in these sectors. In addition, the military provided its personnel, training centers, and recruitment officials with training and improved age assessment and verification procedures to enhance the military's ability to identify and prevent child soldier recruitment. Burma's military released 112 children and young people who had been recruited into the armed forces as children, and sanctioned 13 officers and 23 non-commissioned personnel for the recruitment and use of children in the armed forces. However, Burma's military continued to use some children as combatants, porters and cooks in conflict areas. Children in Burma also performed dangerous tasks in garment production. Despite steady progress, military oversight and monitoring of recruitment procedures were insufficient to completely eliminate the recruitment of children. In addition, the legal framework does not prohibit the recruitment and use of children by non-state armed groups, and it does not comprehensively identify hazardous work that is prohibited for children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORIAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burma engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict.(1, 2) Children also perform dangerous tasks in garment production.(3) In 2016, the Government published the 2015 Report on Child Labor in Myanmar. The report data show that 1,278,909 children work in Burma, including 60.5 percent in agriculture, forestry, and fishing; 12 percent in manufacturing; 11.1 percent in trades; and 6.1 percent in other services.(4) Table 1 provides a key indicator on children's education in Burma. Data from the 2015 Report on Child Labor in Myanmar is available publicly, although not in its disaggregated format. Therefore, disaggregated data from the 2015 Report on Child Labor in Myanmar is not publicly available for further analysis to calculate additional work and education indicators.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including rubber, sugarcane, beans and pulses, rice, betel nut, and bamboo (7-12)
	Fishing and processing fish and seafood (8-10, 13)
	Forestry, including on teak plantations (10, 14)
Industry	Producing garments (3, 15-19)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Industry	Construction (3, 16, 20, 21)
	Food processing (3, 16, 22)
	Manufacturing, including furniture, bricks, and other products (7, 10, 22, 23)
	Quarrying and mining, including jade and rubies (10, 24)
Services	Domestic work (3, 10, 22, 25, 26)
	Working in teashops and restaurants, including waiting tables and washing dishes (7, 10, 16, 27)
	Street vending, collecting garbage and recyclables, working in transportation, and working in markets (3, 7, 9, 22, 28)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Forced recruitment of children by state and non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (1, 2, 29)
	Forced labor in agriculture, including harvesting bamboo, and producing beans, rice, rubber, sugarcane, and teak (11, 29)
	Forced labor in manufacturing bricks and construction (23, 29)
	Forced labor in domestic work, teashops, and begging (26, 29)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (12, 22, 29)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

While a small number of children are reported to be used by Burma’s armed forces as combatants in armed conflict, active recruitment of children into the Army has been significantly reduced in recent years.(2, 29) In 2016, there were only two verified cases of child recruitment into the military.(30) While there has been a decrease in reports of forced labor by the military, the Army continues to use civilians, including children, for forced labor in conflict areas to porter goods and cook for battalions, and carry supplies.(29) In addition, children are recruited and used in armed conflict by non-state armed groups that are often in conflict with the Burmese military, including the Karen National Liberation Army; the Kachin Independence Army; the Shan State Army-South; and the Ta’ang National Liberation Army in Kachin, Kayin, and Shan States.(1, 29)

While national statistics are available in Burma, research did not uncover sufficient recent information about the detailed nature and prevalence of child labor in Burma, including its worst forms.

Many children face barriers to education, such as long distances to schools and expenses that include uniforms, books, and transportation.(3, 7, 31) In addition, internally displaced and stateless children, in particular, have limited access to education due to an inadequate number of schools.(22, 32)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Burma has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor, but it has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Burma’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

* No conscription (43)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (44)

In 2016, the Government amended the Shops and Establishments Act and the Factories Act, which raised the minimum age for work to 14 in these sectors. The amendment to the Shops and Establishments Act also established 18 as the minimum age for dangerous work in this sector.(33, 34) During the reporting period, a list of hazardous work prohibited for children was drafted and is awaiting government approval.(45)

However, a general minimum age for work has not been established, and as a result, there is no minimum age for work in all sectors in which children are employed, including agriculture and informal work. While some of the sector-specific laws do identify activities that are prohibited for children under age 18, these are not comprehensive, and the minimum age of 16 for hazardous work established in the Child Law and the Factories Act is not in compliance with international standards.(33, 36)

In addition, the legal framework does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation of children, as there are no criminal prohibitions for the procurement and offering of children for the production of pornography or pornographic performances.(36, 37) The legal framework also does not sufficiently prohibit the use of children in illicit activities as the use of children ages 16 and 17 for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited.(36, 40) The legal framework does not prohibit non-state armed groups from recruiting children for use in armed conflict.(41)

Burma's compulsory education age of 10 does not meet international standards as children are not required to attend school up until the minimum age for work, as established by international standards.(36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Factories and General Labor Laws Inspection Department	Inspect factories, shops, and establishments for child labor law violations.(33, 34)
Child Protection Units, Police Anti-Trafficking Units	Enforce criminal laws related to child trafficking, including for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation of children and labor exploitation. Established in the Anti-Trafficking Units of police departments in Rangoon, Mandalay, and Naypyidaw.(46)
Ministry of Defense Committee for the Prevention of Military Recruitment of Underage Children	Sanction perpetrators that recruit or use children in the armed forces.(30)
Department of Social Welfare	Investigate cases in which children need protection and care of the State.(36)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Burma took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

† Dates are from April 1, 2015, to March 31, 2016.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Burma's workforce, which includes over 37 million workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Burma should employ roughly 929 inspectors.(49-51)

In 2016, the Factories and General Labor Laws Inspection Department conducted 60,089 inspections; therefore, each inspector conducted an average of 335 inspections during this period.(41) This is a high number of inspections conducted by each inspector, and it is unknown whether this high number affects the quality of inspections. The number of inspections that were conducted at the worksite or by desk review is also unknown.(41)

In addition, it is unknown whether new and veteran labor inspectors received training on the recently amended child labor laws during the reporting period. Research also did not uncover labor law enforcement data for 2015.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burma took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Unknown
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown	N/A
Refresher Courses Provided	Unknown	Yes (30)
Number of Investigations	Unknown	2 (30)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown	5 (30)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	1 (30)
Number of Convictions	Unknown	Unknown
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Unknown	Yes (46)

In 2016, 13 officers and 23 non-commissioned personnel were sanctioned under military law for complicity in the recruitment or use of children in the military.(30) The military provides an annual refresher training course to senior enlisted personnel on the military regulations prohibiting the recruitment and use of children in the armed forces. UNICEF and ILO also provide training to military officers on the prevention of underage recruitment.(30) Despite these efforts and a continued decline in the recruitment and use of children, Burma's military continued to use children as combatants in armed conflict in violation of the Defense Services Law. Military oversight and monitoring of recruitment procedures were insufficient to prevent the recruitment of children.(29) In addition, the military forced children to work for armed forces in violation of the Ward or Village Tracks Administrative Law.(29, 39)

In addition, it is unknown whether new criminal investigators receive initial training for enforcing laws related to the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period. The number of convictions resulting from the prosecution of the crimes involving the worst forms of child labor is also unknown. Research also did not uncover information regarding criminal law enforcement actions for 2015.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Description
Technical Working Group on Child Labor	Coordinate the implementation of ILO Convention 182, including drafting the list of hazardous work prohibited for children. Chaired by the Ministry of Labor, Employment and Social Security, consists of stakeholders from Government, workers, employers, and civil society.(52) In 2016, validated the draft list of work prohibited for children.(45)
Central Body for the Suppression of Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate government and non-government efforts to address trafficking in persons. Chaired by the Minister of Home Affairs, includes six government agencies and several non-governmental stakeholders. (30)
Township Child Rights Committee	Coordinate local child welfare and protection activities. Led by the Township Administrator, consists of government agencies, including the Department of Social Welfare and the police, as well as NGOs.(53)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Joint Action Plan to Prevent the Recruitment and Use of Children for Military Purposes	Aims to end all government recruitment and use of children in its armed forces. Seeks to ensure the release of children under age 18 from the armed forces and facilitate their reintegration into families and communities. Resulted in 811 children being released since the start of the policy in 2012, including 112 in 2016.(30, 54, 55)

In 2016, the Government was involved in consultations to develop the National Action Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor. (45) Although the Government has adopted a policy to end the military's recruitment and use of children, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor, including the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups, work in hazardous occupations, forced child labor, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government of Burma funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Forced Labor Complaint Mechanism	ILO program, gives citizens a mechanism to lodge complaints of forced labor and seek remedies from the Government.(56)
Hotlines	UNICEF and World Vision-operated hotlines for reporting suspected cases of child recruitment or use by Burma's military.(54)
Myanmar Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour (My-PEC) Project	$5.25 million, USDOL-funded project implemented by ILO to expand the knowledge base on child labor in Myanmar, increase awareness and knowledge of child labor, improve laws to meet international standards, and improve the capacity of stakeholders to address child labor.(57) In 2016, supported the Technical Working Group on Child Labor to develop the hazardous work list and held initial consultations for the development of a National Action Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor. Provided educational services to 1,766 children and livelihood services to 96 households.(45) For additional information about USDOL's work, please see our Website .
SafeYouth@Work Project: Building a Generation of Safe and Healthy Workers	USDOL-funded global project implemented by ILO, with Burma as one of the three pilot countries. In Burma, focuses on young workers ages 15–25 in the construction and agricultural sectors and seeks to improve availability and use of occupational safety and health (OSH) data, improve regulations and programs on OSH, build the capacity of the Government and social partners to promote and enforce compliance with OSH laws and regulations, and increase youth knowledge and awareness of hazards and risks.(58)

In 2016, the Government encouraged the public to report information about cases of child soldier recruitment through dedicated hotlines operated by the UN.(29) In addition, the Department of Social Welfare increased the number of case manager offices in Burma from 27 to 42. Case managers work to provide victims of the worst forms of child labor with rehabilitation and reintegration services.(30) However, the Department of Social Welfare lacks the staff and resources necessary to sufficiently provide services to victims.(30)

Overall, the Government lacks social programs to adequately address the worst forms of child labor, including the recruitment of children by non-state armed forces, the use of forced child labor, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Burma (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict.	2016
	Establish a minimum age for work of at least 14 years for all sectors.	2016
	Ensure that the types of hazardous work prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2016
	Ensure that all forms of child commercial sexual exploitation are prohibited, including procuring and offering of children for the production of pornography or pornographic performances.	2016
	Criminally prohibit the use of children ages 16 and 17 in the production and trafficking of drugs.	2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
	Ensure that the age up to which education is compulsory is the same as the minimum age for work, as established by international standards.	2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Authorize the inspectorate to assess penalties.	2016
	Hire and train a sufficient number of labor inspectors according to ILO recommendations, to enforce labor laws, including child labor regulations.	2016
	Determine whether the inspection ratio for each labor inspector is appropriate to ensure the quality and scope of inspections.	2016
	Establish a referral mechanism between the labor inspectorate and social services.	2016
	Publish information related to labor law enforcement, including the number of inspections conducted at the work site and by desk review, training provided to labor inspectors.	2016
	Ensure that the Defense Services Law is enforced by ceasing the military use of children as combatants in armed conflict and improving military oversight and monitoring of recruitment procedures to prevent the recruitment of children.	2016
	Ensure that the Ward or Village Tracks Administrative Law is enforced by ceasing the military practice of forcing children to work for armed forces.	2016
	Publish data on the number of convictions for violations related to the worst forms of child labor.	2016
Government Policies	Make disaggregated data from the 2015 Report on Child Labor in Myanmar publicly available for analysis.	2016
	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as children being recruited by non-state armed groups, working in hazardous occupations, forced child labor, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2016
Social Programs	Collect and publish sufficient information about the nature and prevalence of child labor, including its worst forms.	2016
	Develop and implement programs to ensure that all children, including displaced and stateless children, can access education.	2016
	Ensure that the Department of Social Welfare has sufficient resources to provide rehabilitation and reintegration services to victims of the worst forms of child labor.	2016
	Develop and implement programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups, the use of forced child labor, and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 50. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

51. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

In 2016, Burundi made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite significant budget cuts to the education sector in the wake of a worsening economic crisis, the Government completed a “Back to School” campaign to provide teaching and learning materials to 32,000 teachers and promote equitable access to and retention in school for 2.6 million students in basic education and continued funding social programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor. However, children in Burundi engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Burundi lacks a compulsory education age that is equal to or higher than the minimum age for work. The Government’s ability to address the worst forms of child labor was constrained by a lack of necessary resources to conduct labor inspections and criminal investigations, adequate and sustained funding for the education sector, sufficient social programs to address child labor in the country, and political stability.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORIAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burundi engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. (1-10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Burundi.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	27.2 (633,126)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	60.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	26.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		61.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of tea, coffee, sugarcane, cotton, palm oil, potatoes, and rice (1, 5, 7, 8, 13)
	Fishing, including preparing materials and equipment, preparing meals for fishermen, loading and unloading materials from vessels, and cleaning the vessels† (1, 5, 7, 8, 13)
	Herding and feeding livestock (5, 9, 13)
Industry	Extracting,† washing, and transporting minerals in mines and quarries, including artisanal gold mines (1, 5-8, 13-15)
	Making and transporting bricks (1, 7-9, 16)
	Construction, including transporting materials, welding, and installing electrical cables† (5)
Services	Domestic work (1, 5-7, 9, 13)
	Street vending, including selling food, newspapers, cigarettes, and used clothes and shoes (5, 6, 9, 13)
	Begging (6)
	Handling and transporting heavy loads† (5, 6)
	Cleaning, cooking, ironing, and laundering clothes in hotels and restaurants (5)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [†]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-7, 9, 10, 15)
	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking (2, 15, 17)
	Forced labor in agriculture, mining, construction, street vending, and begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (9, 10)
	Use in armed conflict as a result of human trafficking (18, 19)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Burundian children are trafficked within the country, often from rural areas, for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(2-4, 10, 20) Women who offer room and board to children sometimes force the children into commercial sexual exploitation in order to pay expenses; brothels are found in the more impoverished parts of Bujumbura, near Lake Tanganyika, along trucking corridors, and in other cities such as Gitega, Ngozi, and Rumonge.(2, 3, 9, 10) Burundian girls are also trafficked internationally for commercial sexual exploitation in Kenya, the Middle East, Rwanda, and Uganda.(10, 18, 21) Evidence also suggests children are trafficked to Tanzania for work in agriculture and forced labor.(10, 22) The armed group Red-Tabara, associated with the Mouvement pour la solidarité et la démocratie (MSD) opposition party, reportedly recruited two children who thought they were being recruited for a job, but were forced to join the group instead.(13, 23) During the reporting period, political instability and conflict may have impacted the Government’s ability to address the worst forms of child labor.(24, 25)

Although the Government abolished school fees in 2012, and the cost of books and uniforms has prevented children from accessing free public schooling. A dearth of well-trained educators and poor infrastructure has also limited educational opportunity; moreover, as birth certificates are required to attend school, many unregistered children remain out of school and vulnerable to child labor.(9, 13, 26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Burundi has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Burundi’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	16	Article 3 of the Labor Code; Article 3 of the Ministerial Ordinance to Regulate Child Labor (27, 28)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 13 of the Ministerial Ordinance to Regulate Child Labor (28)

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 9–15 of the Ministerial Ordinance to Regulate Child Labor (28)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 4 and 10 of the Trafficking in Persons Law (29)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 242–243 and 514 of the Penal Code; Articles 4–6 and 10 of the Trafficking in Persons Law (29, 30)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 519–521 of the Penal Code (30)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 6(c) of the National Defense Troops Law (31)
Non-State Compulsory	No	15	Article 198.2.aa of the Penal Code (30)
Compulsory Education Age	No	12	Legislation title unknown (13)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 17 of the Law on Basic and Secondary Education (32)

* No conscription (33)

The Labor Code prohibits work by children under age 16 in public and private enterprises; however, the law's minimum age protections do not apply to children outside of formal employment relationships.(27, 34, 35) The Penal Code does not prohibit the use of children in the production and trafficking of narcotics.(30) Although the Constitution prohibits the use of children in armed conflict, the Penal Code criminalizes only the use of children under age 15 in armed conflict, leaving children between the ages of 15 and 18 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(30, 36) In addition, the prohibitions against hazardous work are not comprehensive.(28) Education in Burundi is not compulsory through the minimum age for work and research did not uncover a public version of the law establishing compulsory education for review.(13, 37)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Security	Administer and enforce all labor laws, including those on child labor, through the General Directorate of Labor and Professional Development.(38)
National Police	Conduct criminal investigations on the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities.(1, 7) Through its Children and Ethics Brigade, protect children from commercial sexual exploitation.(1)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute cases of the worst forms of child labor.(15)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Burundi took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Burundi's workforce, which includes over 5 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries, Burundi should employ roughly 131 inspectors.(39-41) Research found that financial constraints hamper the labor inspectorate's enforcement of child labor laws.(39) The annual funding to the Labor Inspectorate does not cover fuel costs, per diem, or office supplies; the Inspectorate does not own any vehicles.(13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burundi did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	No (39)	No (13)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	No (39)	N/A (13)

Number of Violations Found	N/A	0 (13)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (39)	0 (13)
Number of Convictions	Unknown	0 (13)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (22)	No (13)

During the reporting period, no training was provided for criminal investigators. Further, 11 people were arrested for child trafficking and forced labor crimes; however, none of the cases were investigated and all of the suspects were released.(13)

In 2016, government officials received a two-and-a-half day counter-trafficking training to clarify the distinctions between trafficking and smuggling, review legislation on human trafficking, enhance victim identification skills, and illuminate best practices on the treatment of victims.(42)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor, including implementation of community development programs that address the education and socioeconomic reintegration of children engaged in or removed from the worst forms of child labor.(38, 43, 44) Comprises nine ministries, including the Ministry of Labor, organizations and representatives from UNICEF, youth associations, and civil-society organizations.(7)
Trafficking in Persons Permanent Commission	Oversee national anti-trafficking in persons efforts, including implementation of the National Action Plan for Combating Trafficking in Persons.(17, 45) Comprises officials from the Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights, and Gender (MSNDPHG) and the Ministries of Justice, Public Security, Foreign Affairs, and Interior.(7)
Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights, and Gender (MSNDPHG)	Coordinate, monitor, and oversee children's advocacy and family service programs conducted by public and private organizations. Develop policies and national laws on the promotion and protection of children and families.(46) Refer cases to police officers and judicial officials for enforcement through its Child Protection Committees at local levels; victims are referred to local NGOs for social services.(22) In 2016, the Labor Inspectorate reported that the entity continued to operate and did not require financial resources as it is based within the communities.(47)

In 2016, the National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and the Trafficking in Persons Permanent Commission were not operational.(13, 48)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Revised Action Plan for the Fight Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2014–2016)	Aimed to eliminate all of the worst forms of child labor by 2015 and contribute to the elimination of all forms of child labor by 2025.(44) Research was unable to determine any updates in 2016.(47)
National Action Plan for Combatting Trafficking in Persons (2014–2017)	Aims to significantly reduce human trafficking in Burundi by 2017 through the adoption of political, social, economic, and institutional measures.(45) Identifies women and children as being the most vulnerable to human trafficking, noting sectors of high prevalence and human trafficker profiles. (15, 45) Research was unable to determine any updates in 2016.(47)
UNDAF (2012–2016)	Plans to develop a database for information on the worst forms of child labor, and legislation and regulations for the education and training of children and adolescents.(49) Research was unable to determine any updates in 2016.(47)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(47, 50)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper.(14, 20, 38)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Centers for Family Development [†]	MSNDPHG-operated centers that address human rights issues, including child exploitation, and reintegrate victims to their home communities.(22) Coordinate with Child Protection Committees to refer victims to local NGOs for care, when necessary.(22) In 2016, no activities were held due to a decrease in public funding.(47)
"Back to School" Campaign [†]	UNICEF and the Ministry of Education launched and completed the 2016 "Back to School" campaign, to promote the equitable access and retention in school of 2.6 million basic education students, half girls. In 2016, 32,000 teachers received teaching and learning materials.(25)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Burundi.

Research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to assist children in agriculture or victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Further, the scope of existing programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Burundi (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Criminally prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, particularly in the production and trafficking of drugs.	2015 – 2016
	Establish by law a compulsory education age equal to or higher than the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children working outside of formal employment relationships.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2012 – 2016
	Ensure that the prohibitions against hazardous work for children under age 18 are comprehensive.	2016
Enforcement	Publish information regarding the type of labor inspections conducted.	2013 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet ILO recommended number of inspectors, and provide sufficient training and resources to all inspectors to ensure that labor inspections, including unannounced and routine targeted inspections, are conducted nationwide.	2009 – 2016
	Establish a referral mechanism between criminal authorities and social service providers.	2009 – 2016
	Provide sufficient training and resources to ensure that criminal investigations and prosecutions take place.	2009 – 2016
Coordination	Ensure that the National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and the Trafficking in Persons Permanent Commission make efforts to combat and prevent child labor, including its worst forms.	2015 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper.	2012 – 2016
	Take steps to implement the National Action Plan for Combatting Trafficking in Persons, the National Revised Action Plan for the Fight Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor, and UNDAF.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Increase access to education by eliminating school-related costs for books and uniforms, increasing the number of well-trained educators, expanding the infrastructure, and increasing birth registration rates to ensure that children have access to education services.	2015 – 2016
	Institute and expand existing programs to address child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2016
	Increase public funding for the Centers for Family Development to undertake activities.	2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 41. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Cabo Verde

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Cabo Verde made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved a National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents and expanded the Code of Ethics Against the Sexual Exploitation of Children to Fogo Island. However, children in Cabo Verde perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Laws do not provide protection for self-employed children and children engaged in un-paid work. In addition, social programs do not target all sectors in which children work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cabo Verde perform dangerous tasks in agriculture.⁽¹⁾ Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cabo Verde.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10 to 14	3.2 (2,392)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	90.1
Combining Work and School (%)	10 to 14	1.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		102.2

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (1, 4)
	Raising livestock (1, 5, 6)
	Fishing, activities unknown (1, 4, 6)
Industry	Treating water (1)
	Construction, including extracting sand (7)
Services	Domestic work (1, 6, 8)
	Street work, including vending, garbage scavenging, [†] car washing, and begging (6, 8)
	Working in hotels and restaurants (1)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6, 8–10)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (6, 11)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Limited research found commercial sexual exploitation of both boys and girls, including in the tourism industry, occurs in Mindelo, Praia, and Santa Maria.⁽⁸⁾

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cabo Verde has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Cabo Verde's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 261 of the Labor Code (12)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 264 of the Labor Code; Article 133 of the Civil Code (12, 13)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 264 and 267 of the Labor Code; National List of Dangerous Work for Children (12, 14)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 14 of Chapter 3 of the Labor Code; Articles 149, 271, and 271-A of the Penal Code (12, 15)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 149 and 271-A of the Penal Code (15)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 144, 145, 148–150, and 271-A of the Penal Code (15)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 8 of the Drug Trafficking Law (16)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 2 of the Military Service Law (17)
State Voluntary	Yes	17	Article 31 of the Military Service Law (17)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 268-C of the Penal Code (15)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15 [‡]	Articles 13 and 20 of the Education Law (18)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 14 of the Education Law (18)

[‡] Age calculated based on available information (18)

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are self-employed or engaged in unpaid work.(12, 19) The Civil Code allows children age 14 to conduct light work; however, the law does not prescribe the number of hours per week permissible for light work, or specify the conditions under which light work may be undertaken.(13, 19)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Organization/Agency	Role
Inspector General for Labor (IGT)	Monitor and enforce child labor laws; work closely with the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA).(20, 21)
Judicial Police and National Police	Judicial Police conduct criminal investigations; National Police make arrests related to the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking.(21, 22)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Cabo Verde took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The Inspector General for Labor (IGT) does not have national coverage because there is only representation on Sal, Santiago, and São Vicente Islands.(23) When IGT inspectors find a case of child labor, they inform the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA) of the case for referral to social service providers.(5) In 2016, 18 children were removed from exploitative work and referred to the appropriate social services.(23)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cabo Verde took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

In 2016, officials investigated a group of individuals for allegedly forcing girls into commercial sexual exploitation.(10)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication in Cabo Verde (CNPETI)	Coordinate the execution of the National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor. Supervised by ICCA.(22, 25)
ICCA's National Unit for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor	Coordinate and monitor the implementation of all national programs and activities to prevent and combat child labor. Counsels victims of child labor and their families.(26)
Children and Adolescent Committee to Prevent and Combat Sexual Abuse and Exploitation	Contribute to the prevention and elimination of child sexual exploitation by coordinating the activities of member organizations and public and private services.(22) Led by ICCA.(27)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor	Prioritizes the eradication of child labor. Outlines specific objectives, including data collection, institutional capacity building, and enhancement of measures to prevent, protect, and remove children from involvement in child labor.(25)
National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents (2017-2019) [†]	Aims to prevent and combat the sexual exploitation of children.(28) In 2016, ICCA conducted a public presentation of the Plan.(29)
Code of Ethics Against the Sexual Exploitation of Children	Guides and governs agencies involved in the tourism sector to combat the sexual exploitation of children and adolescents.(30)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(31)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Awareness Campaigns	Government program implemented by ICCA and the National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication that conducts national awareness campaigns on the worst forms of child labor.(32) In 2016, ICCA conducted awareness raising activities on the National List of Dangerous Work for Children in Boa Vista, Fogo, and Santiago islands.(29)
Help for At-Risk Children [†]	ICCA-implemented program that provides education, health services, and professional training to vulnerable children and their families. Eight day centers for street children vulnerable to sexual and labor exploitation operate on Boa Vista, Fogo, Sal, Santiago, Santo Antão, and São Vicente islands.(33)
Child Emergency Centers and Social Protection and Reintegration Centers [†]	ICCA-implemented program that operates emergency centers for child victims of abuse and sexual exploitation on Santiago, Santo Antão, and São Vicente Islands.(22, 25, 33) The Government also operates five social protection and reintegration centers that provide support and educational integration services to children who have experienced long-term trauma.(5, 8, 22, 33)
Government Efforts to Increase Access to Education [†]	Donor-funded programs implemented by the Government that ensure access to education for disadvantaged children by paying for school fees, materials, and meals.(24)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Cabo Verde.

Research found that programs to assist children involved in agriculture and domestic work are not sufficient to address the scope of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cabo Verde (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children who are self-employed or engaged in unpaid work.	2015 – 2016
	Prescribe the number of hours per week and conditions under which light work may be undertaken.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Make law enforcement data publicly available, including information on the labor inspectorate's funding, training for labor inspectors, number and type of labor inspections conducted, number of child labor violations found, as well as the training for criminal investigators, number of violations found during criminal investigations, prosecutions initiated, and convictions achieved.	2011 – 2016
	Ensure that the IGT receives adequate resources to conduct labor inspections on all islands.	2014 – 2016
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine specific activities related to children's work in agriculture to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2016
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture and domestic work.	2010 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Cambodia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Cambodia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the National Plan of Action on Worst Forms of Child Labor and approved guidelines for addressing child labor in the fisheries sector. The Government also established standardized inspection guidelines to increase the effectiveness of child labor law enforcement. However, children in Cambodia perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Due to challenges in accessing basic education and the absence of a compulsory education requirement, children are vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor. Inadequate resources and training hamper the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws, especially in rural areas and in risk-prone sectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cambodia perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cambodia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	9.4 (276,583)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	85.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	9.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Labour Force and Child Labour Survey, 2012.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Fishing, including deep-sea† and night fishing† (1, 8, 9)
	Peeling shrimp and shucking crabs (8, 10, 11)
	Production of tobacco, cassava, rubber, and rice (2, 9)
	Growing, cutting, carrying, and spraying pesticides† on sugarcane (3, 4, 12-14)
	Logging† for the production of timber (1)
Industry	Making bricks,† including feeding clay into brick-making machines, drying bricks, transporting bricks to the oven,† and loading bricks onto trucks (1, 2, 15-18)
	Production of salt (2, 19)
	Construction,† including operating transportation equipment† (1, 20)
	Production of textiles, including bleaching,† dyeing,† and finishing with chemicals;† garments; and footwear (1, 21-23)
	Production of alcoholic beverages† (1)
	Work in slaughterhouses† for the production of meat† (1)
	Manufacturing of wood and metal† products (1, 2)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Domestic work (1, 24, 25)
	Work as security guards† and in entertainment,† including as bartenders,† masseurs,† dancers,† and waiters† (1)
	Street work, including begging, vending, scavenging, and collecting garbage (2, 20)
	Work as garbage pickers in dumpsites (26, 27)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 5, 12, 28)
	Street vending as a result of human trafficking (29)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (20)
	Forced labor in the production of bricks (18, 20)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation, primarily from Cambodia to Thailand, from Vietnam to Cambodia, and within Cambodia.(5, 30) Children are also trafficked domestically, from rural to urban areas, and internationally, to countries such as Thailand and Vietnam, for forced labor in domestic service, begging, and street vending.(31) In Cambodian brick factories, some children engage in hazardous labor to offset family debt to employers.(18, 32)

Although the Education Law establishes free basic education, children may be charged additional school-related fees that are prohibitive for some families.(2, 20, 33) Other barriers to education include limited transportation to schools in remote areas, lack of drinking water and toilet facilities in some schools, and language barriers and an insufficient number of teachers for ethnic minority children.(2, 20, 25)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cambodia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Cambodia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 2 of the Regulation on the Prohibition of Hazardous Child Labor (35)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 15–16 of the Labor Law; Articles 10, 12, 15–17, and 19 of the Law on Suppression of Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation (34, 37)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 10, 12, 15–17, and 19 of the Law on Suppression of Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation (37)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 15, 28, 33–37, and 41 of the Law on Suppression of Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation; Articles 284, 289, and 346 of the Penal Code (36, 37)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 345 of the Penal Code; Articles 3 and 47 of the Law on Control of Drugs (36, 38)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	The Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (39, 40)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 42 of the Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (39, 40)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 31 of the Education Law (41)

In 2016, the Government of Cambodia adopted the Juvenile Justice Act, which stipulates that minors held in detention must not be subjected to forced labor.(42)

The Labor Law's minimum age protections do not apply to domestic or household workers, which leaves children vulnerable to child labor in this occupation.(34, 43) Laws do not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation of children, as the use or offering of a child for pornographic performances is not criminally prohibited. In addition, laws do not prohibit the recruitment of children under age 18 into non-state armed groups.

Education is free, but not compulsory, through grade nine.(41) The lack of compulsory schooling makes children under age 15 particularly vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to be in school but are not yet legally permitted to work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Child Labor, Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training (MOLVT)	Enforce child-related provisions of the Labor Law and train Commune Committees for Women and Children that oversee local child labor monitoring systems.(44) Includes 24 MOLVT interdepartmental inspection teams.(25)
Cambodian National Police Anti-Human Trafficking and Juvenile Protection Department	Enforce laws against human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, in collaboration with municipal and provincial anti-human trafficking and juvenile protection offices. Commanded by the Ministry of the Interior.(20, 45) Field complaints about human trafficking, which can be filed through the anti-human trafficking hotline.(28)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation (MOSAVY)	Accompany the police on investigations and refer victims of the worst forms of child labor to NGO services.(8)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Cambodia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (47)	Yes (20)

In 2016, the Department of Child Labor (DOCL) employed 33 inspectors based in Phnom Penh and 1 child labor inspector in each of Cambodia's 25 provinces.(47) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training (MOLVT) developed and implemented standardized guidelines for conducting child labor inspections; however, the DOCL did not receive any funding for child labor-specific operations.(20) Although research indicates that the majority of child laborers reside in rural areas and work in the agriculture, forestry, and fishing sectors, child labor inspections are concentrated in the city of Phnom Penh and in formal-sector factories producing goods for export, such as textiles and garments.(1, 20, 48)

The MOLVT has established regulations on hazardous work for children in several sectors, including in agriculture, brickmaking, fishing, tobacco, and cassava production; however, inadequate training limits the capacity of local level authorities to enforce these regulations.(44, 49, 50) For example, in December, MOLVT inspectors visited various brick factories but found no child labor violations, despite numerous reports of children working in brick factories. In addition, sanctions for labor violations, including those related to child labor, are rarely imposed in accordance with the law.(25, 48)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cambodia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, there were 15 to 20 Anti-Trafficking Police officers stationed in each of Cambodia's 25 provinces. During the reporting period, the Anti-Human Trafficking and Juvenile Protection Department (AHTJP) trained 108 police officers on relevant topics, including commercial sexual exploitation of children and child victim interview techniques.(20) The National Committee for Counter Trafficking, in collaboration with NGOs, also provided training on human trafficking to 1,380 law enforcement officials.(20) The Ministry of Interior, however, has not yet introduced anti-human trafficking training into the curriculum of the Cambodian National Police academies.(51, 52)

According to the AHTJP, police rescued 230 children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in the first 9 months of 2016. The Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation also identified 200 potential child trafficking victims, the majority of whom had been forced to beg or sell lottery tickets in Vietnam, and referred them to social services providers.(20)

In Cambodia, judges have discretion to determine whether perpetrators of crimes related to the worst forms of child labor will be imprisoned or fined, as well as the amount of the fine. In part, due to high levels of corruption within the judicial system, the penalties imposed are not uniformly administered and do not adhere to the parameters prescribed by law.(8, 31, 53)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on Child Labor of the Cambodian National Council for Children	Coordinate child labor issues at the national level. Ensure that projects and programs follow the National Plan of Action on child labor. Includes concerned ministries, businesses, trade unions, and NGOs. Oversee Provincial Committees on the Protection of Child Rights and Provincial Committees on Child Labor.(54)
National Committee for Counter Trafficking	Coordinate government, civil society, and private sector efforts to address human trafficking. Focuses on prevention; protection, recovery, reintegration, and repatriation; law enforcement; justice; international cooperation; children's affairs; and migration.(55) Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister and the Ministry of Interior, with 4 vice chair ministries and 14 participating ministries.(55) Oversee Provincial Committees for Counter Trafficking (PCCT) in each province.(52) In 2016, five additional PCCTs developed provincial plans of action and received funding for anti-human trafficking activities.(32)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action on Worst Forms of Child Labor (2016–2025) [†]	Aims to build the capacity of law enforcement officers, strengthen the enforcement of relevant laws, raise public awareness of child labor issues, and enhance child labor monitoring systems at the community level.(20)
National Policies on the Elimination of Child Labor in the Fisheries Sector	Two policies aimed at addressing child labor in the fisheries sector, including the National Plan of Action to Tackle Child Labor in Inland and Coastal Fisheries and the Action Plan for Gender Equality Promotion and Child Labor Elimination in the Fisheries Sector. These policies seek to prevent and withdraw children from child labor and promote increased access to education and livelihood opportunities.(56, 57) In 2016, the Fisheries Administration approved Guidelines on Child Labor in the Fisheries Sector, which specify actions needed to eliminate child labor in fishing.(58)
Policy on Childhood Development and Protection in the Agricultural Sector (2016–2020)	Establishes a strategic framework to protect children working in the agricultural sector. Goals include preventing and reducing child labor, especially in hazardous work, and improving agricultural vocational training for youth ages 15 through 17.(9)

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action on the Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, Labor, and Sexual Exploitation (2014–2018)	Aims to prevent and eliminate all forms of human trafficking, including by strengthening labor law enforcement to protect children from exploitation in entertainment venues; integrating anti-human trafficking and child safety issues into the public school curriculum; and promoting the inclusion of vulnerable children in both formal and informal education.(55)
The Education Strategic Plan (2014–2018)	Seeks to ensure equitable access to education and to improve the education system's response to human trafficking and child labor.(59) In 2016, the Ministry of Education, Youth, and Sport approved the Child Friendly Schools guidelines on tackling child labor, which will be implemented nationwide.(60)
National Social Protection Strategy (2011–2015)	Aims to expand access to healthcare, nutrition, and educational services, and to promote the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.(46, 61) In 2016, MOSAVY finalized an updated strategy, which is awaiting final approval.(46)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (62–66)

Many poor households in rural communities struggle to access the services provided by the National Social Protection Strategy. Insufficient access to a social protection safety net increases the vulnerability of children to involvement in child labor as a means to supplement family income.(67)

The Government has not specifically included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the National Employment Policy and the Multilingual Education National Action Plan.(68, 69)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Commune Committees for Women and Children [†]	MOLVT and provincial government advisory entities that raise awareness about child labor regulations, promote school attendance, collaborate with provincial labor departments to monitor for child labor violations, and refer children at risk of or engaged in child labor to protection services.(20, 44, 70)
Cambodians EXCEL: Eliminating Exploitative Child Labor through Education and Livelihoods (2012–2016)	$10 million, USDOL-funded, 4-year project to combat child labor in agriculture, fishing, and domestic service. Provided educational services to a total of 29,755 child laborers and at-risk children and livelihoods support services to 14,291 households.(67) In 2016, contributed to the finalization and approval of the National Plan of Action on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(60) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
Cambodia Countering Trafficking in Persons (2015–2019)	$8.5 million, USAID-funded, 4-year program implemented by Winrock International to strengthen the capacity of government and community stakeholders to prevent human trafficking, protect at-risk populations, and increase the number of successful prosecutions of perpetrators.(71, 72)
Better Factories Cambodia	USDOL, Government of Cambodia, Garment Manufacturers in Cambodia, and ILO-funded program to monitor garment factories' compliance with national and international labor standards, including those related to child labor.(73) In 2016, identified 16 underage workers in garment factories. In 12 of the 16 cases, factories agreed to participate in a remediation program.(73) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
UN WFP Country Program (2011–2018)	Multi-government and private sector-funded, 8-year program implemented in collaboration with the Government of Cambodia that includes a school feeding program for children in need. In 2016, provided food assistance to 29,120 people.(74)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Cambodia.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(75)

Although Commune Committees for Women and Children serve an important role in awareness raising and child labor monitoring at the local level, these committees are underfunded and have insufficient technical capacity to facilitate provision of adequate social protection services to children involved in or at risk of child labor.(70)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cambodia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions apply to children working as domestic workers.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit the offering and use of a child for pornographic performances.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
	Institute a compulsory education age that is at a minimum equal to the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2016
Enforcement	Collect and publicly release data on the number of penalties collected for child labor violations and on the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions for crimes related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Provide sufficient resources for the enforcement of child labor laws to ensure that inspections are conducted throughout the country, especially in rural areas and in the informal sector.	2010 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating targeted inspections based on analysis of data related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents.	2009 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspection system by permitting and conducting unannounced inspections.	2016
	Build the capacity of local-level authorities to enforce child labor regulations, including in agriculture, tobacco, cassava, and fishing.	2012 – 2016
	Increase anti-human trafficking training for law enforcement officers, including at Cambodian National Police academies.	2014 – 2016
	Uniformly administer penalties for violations of laws on child labor, including its worst forms, in accordance with the parameters prescribed by law.	2009 – 2016
Government Policies	Expand coverage of the National Social Protection Policy in rural areas to ensure that poor children and their families have access to services that may mitigate the risk of involvement in child labor.	2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Multilingual Education National Action Plan and the National Employment Policy.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Increase access to free basic education by eliminating unofficial school fees and addressing issues related to limited transportation, inadequate school infrastructure, insufficient number of teachers, and language barriers.	2013 – 2016
	Increase funding and enhance training for Commune Committees for Women and Children to enhance child labor monitoring and social services provision at the subnational level.	2016

6. UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education, both sexes (%). Accessed December 16, 2016; <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Cameroon made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed a new penal code, which incorporated elements of the 2011 Anti-Trafficking Law; launched a $12 million Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program; and negotiated the identification and repatriation of 14 girls who were trafficked to Kuwait, Lebanon, and the United Arab Emirates for forced labor in domestic work. However, children in Cameroon perform dangerous tasks in cocoa production and engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, nor has it prohibited the use of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cameroon perform dangerous tasks in cocoa production. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cameroon.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	56.2
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	79.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	52.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		73.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Enquête Démographique et de Santé et à Indicateurs Multiples, 2011.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of bananas, cocoa, coffee, onions, palm oil, rubber, and tea, including handling pesticides, machetes, clearing fields, climbing trees, and lifting heavy loads† (4, 5, 8-15) Raising livestock (4, 13) Fishing (4, 13, 16)
Industry	Working in artisanal gold mines† and gravel quarries,† transporting heavy loads† of sand or gravel, breaking stones, and digging or standing in stagnant water to extract minerals (3, 12, 13, 15-17) Construction, including carrying heavy loads† of water, concrete, cement, and bricks (12, 13, 15)
Services	Domestic work (4, 12, 13, 15, 18) Working in transportation (12, 13) Street work, including carrying heavy luggage,† vending, and begging (11-13, 15, 19-22)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 13, 15, 20, 23-25) Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict, including as suicide bombers and concubines (26-34) Forced labor in agriculture in the production of cocoa, cotton, onions, and tea; fishing; livestock raising; domestic work; spare parts shops; in artisanal gold mines and gravel quarries; street vending; and construction, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 13, 15, 25) Forced begging as talibés in Koranic schools (12, 35, 36)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Cameroon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Cameroon is a source, transit, and destination country for child trafficking from neighboring countries in Central and West Africa.(3, 12, 22, 37) Some parents may entrust their children to intermediaries who pretend to offer education and employment opportunities but instead subject the child to forced domestic work as a result of internal human trafficking.(25, 29) However, improved public awareness about this type of child trafficking has reduced this practice, and perpetrators are increasingly resorting to kidnapping children for human trafficking purposes.(3) Enforcement officials are also becoming more vigilant about requiring parental authorization for children traveling without their parents, and border crossings are increasingly well monitored, particularly at the borders of Nigeria and the Central African Republic.(3)

Although Decree N° 2001/041 on the Organization of Public Schools guarantees free education in Cameroon, families are required to pay for uniforms, books, and other school-related fees.(11, 22, 38-42) A lack of schools and teachers in rural areas also hinders access to education.(19, 22, 40, 41, 43) In addition, children in refugee camps have difficulty accessing education due to a lack of school infrastructure, teachers, language barriers, and resources to pay for school-related expenses.(41, 44-47) Numerous attacks by Boko Haram have closed many schools in northern Cameroon, but some schools reopened for the 2016–2017 school year. Although the Government has dedicated $8.7 million to reconstruct schools in the Far North region, some contractors and teachers are unwilling to work in areas affected by Boko Haram.(22, 27, 33, 34, 36, 39, 44, 45, 48-51) Teacher and student strikes in the Northwest and Southwest regions at the end of 2016 also disrupted students' access to education.(36, 52-54)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cameroon has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Cameroon's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Section 86 of the Labor Code; Article 2 of Order N° 017 on Child Labor (55, 56)

Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 46 (2), 47, and 48 of the Decree on the Organization of Public Schools (42)

* No conscription (65)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (39)

A new Penal Code was passed in July 2016, which includes a new provision punishing parents with a fine of $80–$800 if they choose not to enroll their children in school, despite having adequate means. The new Penal Code also incorporated the 2011 Law Relating to the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Slavery.(57) However, the human trafficking provisions remain discordant with international standards, as they require threats, the use of force, or coercion to be established for the crime of child trafficking, and individuals ages 16 to 18 are not considered children.(57, 58) In addition, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under age 18 are not comprehensive, as work under water or work at dangerous heights are not prohibited.(18, 56) The Government has acknowledged the need to update the hazardous work prohibitions and is planning to incorporate updates into a revision of the Labor Code.(11, 18)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MINTSS)	Lead efforts to enforce child labor laws, promote decent working conditions, and lead the National Committee to Combat Child Labor (CNLCTE).(11, 66, 67) Advocate on behalf of victims, present complaints to court, and provide social services to victims of child labor.(68)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Prosecute cases referred by the General Delegate for National Security (DGSN) or the Ministry of Defense's National Gendarmerie (SED) and contribute to investigations as appropriate.(13, 68)
Ministry of Social Affairs (MINAS)	Lead efforts to combat human trafficking, provide social services and repatriation assistance to victims according to the National Referral System, and maintain a hotline for reporting child labor violations.(11, 13, 29, 69, 70) Through its Minors Brigade, work with local police stations to investigate child trafficking and the use of children in hazardous work.(8, 71, 72) Through its Joint Mobile Brigade, prevent and combat the phenomenon of street children through identification, reintegration, and education.(8, 73)
Ministry of Women's Empowerment and Family (MINPROFF)	Promote and protect the rights of the child, including by combating sex tourism and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(11)
Ministry of Defense's National Gendarmerie (SED)	Enforce criminal laws against child trafficking and investigate violations of child labor laws in both rural and urban areas.(13, 73) Conduct initial investigations before referring cases to the MOJ or Ministry of Defense.(13)

Cameroon

Organization/Agency	Role
General Delegate for National Security (DGSN)	Enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor and investigate violations in urban areas.(13, 73) Through its Special Vice Squad, investigate cases of human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and other forms of abuse against women and children through regional and international police cooperation.(13, 18) Refer cases to the MOJ or Ministry of Defense.(13)
Ministry of Territorial Administration and Decentralization	Enforce child labor laws at the regional level. Local representatives may settle child labor disputes amicably or refer the case to the SED, DGSN, or MOJ for further investigation and prosecution.(73)

Although many agencies may be involved in the investigation and prosecution of a case, there is no official mandate requiring them to work together or hierarchically. In theory, this allows a greater number of cases to be addressed, but research was unable to determine whether this was the case.(13)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

* The Government does not publish this information.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Cameroon's workforce, which includes over 9 million workers.(76) According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Cameroon should employ roughly 607 labor inspectors.(76-78) The Labor Inspectorate lacked the necessary resources to carry out its mandate during the reporting period, and inspectors were tasked with reconciliation duties, which may detract from time devoted to their primary duties.(13, 39, 55) In addition, child labor violations are not specifically targeted during inspections because existing legislation does not explicitly extend to the informal sector in which the majority of child labor occurs.(13, 79) Although the Ministry of Social Affairs (MINAS), Interpol, and the police all maintain hotlines for reporting the worst forms of child labor, research was unable to determine how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of complaints made to these lines.(18, 75)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (1)	Yes (13)

* The Government does not publish this information.

It is unclear how many investigators the Government employed in 2016, although officers from the National Police and National Gendarmerie, Special Vice Squad, and Cameroon Border Police all worked to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. In general, these agencies do not receive adequate funding or training to investigate the worst forms of child labor, and high staff turnover is a challenge.(3, 13, 37, 39) As a result, the Government relies heavily on NGOs to bring child trafficking cases to its attention and provide services to victims.(3, 37) The Government acknowledges that a lack of awareness of child trafficking issues also prevents Cameroonian citizens from reporting offenses to enforcement agencies and that children may be afraid to speak against perpetrators in court.(29, 37) There are also some reports that the Government holds boys in detention for prolonged periods due to suspicion of being affiliated with Boko Haram elements.(28, 49, 50, 81, 82)

There are no comprehensive statistics on criminal child labor law violations, although two regional task forces and local NGOs reported at least five cases of child trafficking in 2016, some of which were settled outside the judicial system.(13) The Government prosecuted 11 cases related to human trafficking, nine of which involved children. These prosecutions resulted in seven convictions, but the Government did not disaggregate the convictions by cases involving minors.(74) Convictions in two cases of child trafficking initiated in the previous reporting period ultimately were prosecuted as other crimes. In one instance, a 14-year-old victim was punished for stealing a cow as compensation for forced labor, and in the other, a local mayor and five others were sentenced to 8 years of imprisonment and a fine of $48,800 for kidnapping a 14-year-old girl.(29) Research indicates some government officials in the Northwest region were also investigated for complicity in a child trafficking ring during the reporting period.(29)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Combat Child Labor (CNLCTE)	Coordinate government efforts to eradicate child labor by 2017, propose measures to harmonize Cameroon's legal framework to international standards, and implement the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children (PANETEC).(67, 83, 84) Led by MINTSS.(67, 83)
Inter-Ministerial Committee (IMC)	Coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking; chaired by the Secretary General of the Office of the Prime Minister and includes members of eight ministries, law enforcement personnel, civil society organizations, and NGOs.(29, 37) Oversee two Regional Taskforces on Trafficking in Persons.(14, 29, 85)

The CNLCTE and IMC failed to meet in 2016 due to a lack of funding, and the Regional Taskforces on Trafficking in Persons were ineffective during the reporting period.(29, 74) This severely hindered government efforts to coordinate and share relevant information between government offices and stakeholders in the NGO community.(36, 37)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
PANETEC (2014–2016)	Aimed to eradicate the worst forms of child labor by 2016, including forced domestic work. Reinforced the Government's institutional framework, including by harmonizing national laws with international standards, providing quality universal primary education, and allocating additional resources to the labor inspectorate.(11, 13, 86, 87)
Trafficking in Persons Action Plan (2014–2019)	Outlines efforts to combat human trafficking.(3)
MOJ's National Action Plan for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in Cameroon (2015–2019)	Aims to combat exploitative child labor by disseminating standard operating procedures for the National Referral System, raising awareness about how to identify and report cases of child trafficking, increasing punishments for offenders, and building the capacity of labor inspectors.(13, 66, 88) Also aims to improve access to education for vulnerable groups by increasing the number of teachers and classrooms, establishing a legal framework to regulate parent–teacher associations, and increasing the rate of educational attainment for girls.(88)
Decent Work Country Program (2014–2017)	Incorporates child labor concerns into the strategy for work.(9)

The National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children (PANETEC) was endorsed by stakeholders in 2014, but the Government's failure to formally endorse it limited its implementation.(13, 29, 89) Although routine activities carried out by various ministries may support policies related to child labor, no activities were undertaken to implement specific policies during the reporting period due to a lack of resources.(36) Furthermore, the Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the PRSP (2010–2020), the UNICEF Country Program Action Plan (2013–2017), or the IMC's National Gender Policy Document (2011–2020).(90–92)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Project to Fight the Phenomenon of Street Children (Project 559)†	MINAS-funded program that gathers information on street children and offers health care, education, and psychosocial care.(3, 39) In 2016, provided shelter to 92 children removed from Boko Haram elements, identified and provided reintegration or reinsertion services to 265 street children, and facilitated primary education for 5,250 indigenous Baka children.(13)
Country Program Action Plan (2013–2017)†	UNICEF- and MINAS-implemented program that aims to improve social protection and preventive health care, and to ensure access to primary education.(1, 71, 92) In 2016, provided psychosocial support, identification, and reintegration or reinsertion services to children displaced by Boko Haram elements in the Far North region.(13)
School Feeding Programs	Programs that provide meals to improve educational access for girls.(8, 38) The $12 million U.S. Department of Agriculture-funded McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program* improves literacy and nutrition in 92 primary schools, benefitting 40,000 children in the Northwest region.(13) In 2016, the WFP provided meals to 3,200 children in northern Cameroon but discontinued its program after May due to lack of funding.(93)
Social Safety Nets (2014–2018)	$50 million World Bank-funded program implemented by the Ministry of Economy, Planning, and Regional Development that provides direct cash transfers to vulnerable families in exchange for commitments by parents to send their children to school.(38) By the end of 2016, provided cash transfer or cash for work to 208,203 individuals in the regions of Adamaoua, the Far North, North, and the cities of Douala and Yaoundé.(94, 95)

† Program is funded by the Government of Cameroon.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(3, 13, 20, 29, 66, 73)

Although the Government has implemented programs to assist victims of child trafficking and children engaged in street work and domestic work, the scope of these programs is insufficient and does not fully address the extent of the problem; in addition, funding was reduced during the reporting period.(1, 29) Government-run centers can temporarily house victims, but space is insufficient, and these centers are often staffed by law enforcement officials or employees without appropriate training.(37) In addition, research did not find evidence of programs to specifically address child labor in agriculture, mining, and quarrying.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cameroon (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s)
Legal Framework	Ratify the Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2013 – 2016
	Criminally prohibit the use of children for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
	Establish a minimum age for compulsory education that is consistent with the minimum age for admission to work.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children are comprehensive and include work under water or work at dangerous heights.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that laws prohibiting child trafficking do not require threats, the use of force, or coercion to be considered child trafficking and that all children under age 18 are protected.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors according to the ILO recommendation.	2009 – 2016
	Collect and publish comprehensive statistics on enforcement efforts, including the total number and type of inspections conducted, violations found, penalties imposed, and convictions obtained.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that labor inspectorates and criminal law enforcement agencies receive an adequate amount of funding with which to conduct inspections and investigations, and that labor inspectors are able to carry out their primary duties of inspection and monitoring.	2009 – 2016
	Strengthen the Labor Inspectorate by initiating targeted inspections based on analysis of data related to at-risk sectors and patterns of serious incidents, including in the informal sector.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure all hotlines for reporting the worst forms of child labor are operational and establish a mechanism to log all calls and track cases of child labor for referral to law enforcement or social services providers.	2015 – 2016
	Raise awareness of child trafficking issues to encourage citizens to report offenses to enforcement agencies.	2016
	Ensure that boys and girls are not held in detention without reasonable evidence of wrongdoing and that victims are not punished for the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure government officials are not complicit in perpetuating the worst forms of child labor.	2016
Coordination	Ensure that existing coordinating mechanisms have clear mandates and are allocated sufficient resources to carry them out.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure existing policies, such as PANETEC, receive adequate resources and are implemented.	2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the PRSP and the IMC's National Gender Policy Document.	2010 – 2016
Social Programs	Ensure that all children, regardless of refugee status, have access to education by eliminating school-related fees and teacher strikes. Make additional efforts to provide all children with birth registration.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the number of schools and teachers is adequate throughout the country.	2009 – 2016
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem in Cameroon and institute programs to address child labor in agriculture, mining, and quarrying.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that all government-run shelters have sufficient space to accommodate victims and are staffed by employees with the appropriate training to support victims.	2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. - UCW. Analysis of Child Economic Activity and School Attendance Statistics from National Household or Child Labor Surveys. Original data from Enquête Démographique et de Santé et à Indicateurs Multiples, 2011. Analysis received December 15, 2016. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. For more information on sources used, the definition of working children and other indicators used in this report, please see the "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" in the Reference Materials section of this report.

76. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited January 19, 2017]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/rankorder/2095rank.html>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
77. UN. "World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex." (2012); http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.
78. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

In 2016, the Central African Republic made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Assembly ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict before submitting it to the President for approval, and the Government launched a National Recovery and Peacebuilding Plan. In addition, the Ministry of Education issued an official directive providing free school admission to children from internally displaced persons camps, and 1,526 child soldiers were released from armed groups under the Bangui Forum Agreement. However, children in the Central African Republic engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in illicit activities and armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment by nongovernmental armed groups. An estimated 1.4 million children lacked access to education as a result of ongoing instability, and limited resources hampered the Government's ability to implement policies and programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Central African Republic (CAR) engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in illicit activities and armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment by nongovernmental armed groups.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in CAR.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	31.0 (373,742)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	63.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	28.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		44.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Working in agriculture, activities unknown (1)
	Working in forestry, including carrying tools and assisting with slaughter (8)
	Fishing, activities unknown (1)
Industry	Diamond and gold mining† (1, 9-13)
	Working in sawmills, forges, and foundries, including sharpening sawblades and maintaining fires (1, 8)
	Construction, activities unknown (1)
Services	Domestic work (14)
	Street work, including carrying heavy loads, garbage scavenging, and market vending (1, 8, 9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict, including as porters, concubines, domestic workers, and guards (2, 3, 5, 15-26)
	Domestic work, working in agriculture, markets, and mining, including in diamond mines, each as a result of human trafficking (2, 26-28)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 26-31)
	Use in illicit activities, including as spies for armed forces and carrying stolen goods (2, 4, 5, 32, 33)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

Central African Republic

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Sectarian violence has plagued CAR since 2013, and although a new President and National Assembly were elected in February 2016, the new Government has limited authority outside of the capital.(4, 24, 32, 34-36) Non-state armed groups continued to forcibly recruit children during the reporting period, some as young as age 8.(2, 3, 5, 22, 37-39) There was also a significant increase in the number of children abducted for forced soldering by the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), a rebel group that operates in CAR.(2, 25, 32, 38, 39) The Government worked with the UN Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in CAR (MINUSCA), UNICEF, and other partner agencies to prioritize these children's demobilization and reintegration into community life.(1, 20, 35, 40) There were no new allegations of children in refugee camps subject to commercial sexual exploitation in exchange for food or other compensation by peacekeeping troops, although displaced children remain vulnerable to child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation by organized criminal groups.(26, 41)

In 2016, the Ministry of Education issued an official directive providing free school admission to children from internally displaced persons (IDP) camps and waiving school exam fees for refugees, IDPs, and returnees.(26, 42-44) The Government has also waived birth registration requirements for primary school enrollment in areas still affected by conflict and is making a concerted effort to ensure all children have birth registration, including by providing free birth registration to all children born during the conflict, from 2012 – 2014, and by rebuilding the national civil administration.(24, 26, 28, 44-48) As birth registration is required for secondary school enrollment, lack of birth registration may be a barrier to education for some children.(41) An estimated 33 percent of school-age children had difficulty accessing education because of school fees, an absence of teachers, security concerns, and unavailability of schools, especially in rural areas.(4, 13, 26, 28, 34, 45, 49-52) As of April 2016, an estimated 25 percent of schools throughout the country were non-functional due to destruction, damage, or looting as a result of the conflict, and others were occupied by displaced civilians or armed groups, causing some students to lose more than 2 years of schooling.(3-5, 13, 15, 22, 24, 31, 33, 45, 46, 49, 50, 52-56) However, the Government indicates that with the exception of the three provinces in which conflict persists, 98 percent of schools reopened for the 2016–2017 school year.(26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

CAR has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

In 2016, the Government ratified the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child.(43, 44) The National Assembly ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict, and it is awaiting approval from the President.(8, 43, 44)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in CAR's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 259 of the Labor Code (57)

* No conscription (24, 60)

A draft of the Child Protection Code was revised to harmonize its protections with the CRC and was sent to the National Assembly for adoption.(26, 44) In 2016, the Government, with the support of UNICEF, conducted a study of child labor with the intention of updating the list of hazardous activities prohibited to children.(1) The existing types of hazardous work prohibited for children are not comprehensive and do not cover diamond mining, an area of work in which there is evidence of children working in hazardous conditions and carrying heavy loads.(9-11) Additionally, the law does not sufficiently prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children, as the possession and distribution of child pornography are not criminally prohibited.(57, 59)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Modernization of Administration, Labor, Employment and Social Protection (MOL)	Monitor and enforce laws related to child labor.(1)
Ministry of Justice	Protect the rights of the child and combat the worst forms of child labor through its courts and tribunals.(8) In 2016, created a national Rapid Response for Child Protection team.(28, 62)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Promotion of Gender, and Humanitarian Action (MSA)	Oversee child soldier issues and lead the Government's anti-trafficking policy efforts through the National Council on Child Protection. Refer victims of child trafficking to NGOs and maintain an orphanage for children at risk of child trafficking.(38, 47)
Special Criminal Court	Investigate serious human rights abuses committed since 2003, including the use of children in armed conflict. Comprises national and international magistrates.(12, 43, 63-65)

The Special Criminal Court was not operational in 2016, and the only functioning juvenile court in CAR lacks the staff and resources to conduct investigations.(3, 12, 13, 22, 25, 26, 35, 62, 63, 65, 66) The weak judicial system, absence of state authority

Central African Republic

outside the capital, and limited resources hinder the Government's ability to combat the worst forms of child labor.(3, 13, 24-26, 33, 38) In addition, all 135 lawyers in CAR are in Bangui, and some magistrates have been prevented from being deployed to the regions due to threats by armed groups or continued insecurity.(14, 25)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in CAR took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

Research indicates that violations were common in all sectors of the economy.(14, 67-69) Although child labor violations may be reported in person to the labor inspectorate in Bangui, there is no mechanism to report child labor violations in other parts of the country.(67) Although the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, Social Security, and Employment is supposed to work with the Ministry of Justice; Ministry of Social Affairs, Promotion of Gender, and Humanitarian Action; and UNICEF to provide assistance to victims of child labor, a lack of resources limited the ability of these ministries to provide adequate support to victims.(41, 67) During the reporting period, UNICEF provided training to regional directors and labor inspectors responsible for enforcing child labor laws.(1)

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of CAR's workforce, which includes over 2.4 million workers.(70) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, CAR needs about 56 inspectors.(70-72) The Government's efforts to combat child labor were hindered by a lack of labor inspectorate capacity and inadequate financial and material resources, including transportation, office facilities and supplies, and computers.(1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in CAR took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Research indicates members of the armed forces and the Central African Office for the Suppression of Banditry committed extra-judicial killings of minors suspected to be members of rival factions. Research also found that law enforcement officials detained some children released from the LRA for interrogation rather than turn them over to social services providers, and children may have been held in detention centers with adults despite a 2016 decree that states children and adults should be kept separate.(25, 28, 44) Criminal acts were widely resolved through traditional methods across the country, often to the exclusion of formal legal proceedings.(2) Research also indicates that government officials outside of the capital may lack the means and capacity to enforce the law, including not having access to copies of relevant laws.(47, 62, 73) In addition, the Government primarily relies on NGOs to provide social services to victims.(28, 41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on trafficking or other type of child labor, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interministerial Committee to Combat Human Trafficking	Investigate and combat human trafficking in CAR. Overseen by the Ministry of Public Security.(73)
Disarmament, Demobilization, Reinsertion, and Repatriation Committee (DDRR)*	Secures the release of children used in armed conflict and provide appropriate care.(38) In October 2016, with the support of MSA and the UN, hosted an international workshop on the use of children in armed conflict and conducted a mission to Vakaga prefecture to verify and separate 133 children affiliated with armed groups.(42)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

The National Child Protection Council in the Prime Minister's Office no longer appears to be functioning, and research was unable to determine whether the Interministerial Committee was active in 2016.(8, 28)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Bangui Forum Agreement	Formal agreement signed by 10 armed groups and the Transitional Government on May 5, 2015, to end the recruitment and use of children in armed combat and to facilitate the separation of children from the ranks of armed groups.(3, 5, 12, 20, 38, 40) Between January and March 2016, 1,526 child soldiers were released from armed groups and received psychosocial support and reintegration services from UNICEF.(21)
Child Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Policy	Based on the Bangui Forum Agreement, MSA policy that aims to facilitate a policy to disarm, demobilize, and reintegrate child soldiers in CAR in cooperation with UN agencies, other ministries, and armed groups.(1, 3, 21, 24, 44) Through its National Strategy for Community Reinsertion of Children Formerly Associated with Armed Groups, provides temporary care to children separated from armed groups and establishes child protection networks (RECOPE) throughout the country.(21, 37, 43) By the end of 2016, 7,506 children had been removed from armed groups.(43, 44)

Policy	Description
National Recovery and Peacebuilding Plan (RCPA) (2017–2021) [†]	Aims to re-establish peace, security, and support reconciliation, including by disarming and reintegrating children associated with armed groups, promoting legal reform, seeking justice for victims, and improving access to education. Aims to construct 218 schools and 1,200 school canteens, to train 1,000 teachers, and to distribute 150,000 school kits.(24, 26)
National Strategy for the Community-based Reintegration of Children Associated with Armed Groups in CAR [†]	Aims to coordinate the reintegration of ex-combatant children into communities as civilians and prevent re-recruitment by armed groups.(75)
UNDAF (2012–2016)	Aims to continue peace-building efforts, strengthen the rule of law, and accelerate progress toward the Millennium Development Goals. Commits to improving reintegration activities for child ex-combatants, improving access to protective services for children, and increasing primary school attendance and access to quality education.(27, 76)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government of CAR has adopted the Bangui Forum Agreement, which seeks to address child soldiering, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.(47) A draft of a national policy addressing the elimination of child labor has yet to be adopted.(48, 68) Research was unable to determine whether the UNDAF was implemented during the reporting period.(8, 67) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Strategy for the Education Sector (2008–2020).(77)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Awareness Raising Programs*	MOL program aims to raise awareness of child labor and international conventions. In 2016, local inspectorates conducted awareness-raising campaigns in the forested and mining areas of Lobaye and Mambere-Kadei Prefectures, where children are vulnerable to exploitation.(1, 43, 44)
Shelters for Unaccompanied Children	MSA- and UNICEF-supported centers in Bangui provide immediate care, food, and psychosocial support to unaccompanied children and former child soldiers.(38, 78) In 2016, the Government adopted national guidelines for the care of children in temporary care.(43, 44)
Education Programs	Programs to restore educational infrastructure. Includes: $23.4 million European Union-funded Education Program which will rehabilitate and equip more than 300 schools in 4 prefectures and the capital; Bangui Ministry of Mines and Ministry of National Education and Scientific Research program to construct schools in mining zones; and UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs' Education Clusters led by UNICEF and in collaboration with the Ministry of Education, that provides access to education in conflict-affected areas .(1, 42-44, 49, 51, 53, 79-81) In 2016, trained 1,312 teachers and 1,518 volunteer teachers; constructed or rehabilitated 144 schools; distributed school kits and textbooks to 390,000 students and 6,000 teachers; established new Temporary Spaces for Learning and Child Protection (ETAPE), which serve 40,258 children; and reopened 5 schools in Kaga-Bandoro.(36, 44, 51, 55)
Birth Registration Campaign [†]	In support of the 2014 decree mandating free birth registration to children born during the 2012–2014 conflict, opened 176 civil registration centers in areas affected by conflict; registered over 25,000 children since 2014. In 2016, provided birth registration to 8,199 children in Bangui, Bimbo, and Begoua and to 1,951 children in 3 other provinces.(44)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of CAR.

Although the Government participates in a program that assists former child soldiers, coordination with non-government actors is weak and the scope of this program is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(3, 13, 37, 82) The Government was unable to provide direct reintegration programs to former child soldiers due to a lack of resources, which left victims vulnerable to exploitation or re-recruitment by armed groups.(2, 3, 8) Research found no evidence that the Government has programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, largely due to a lack of governmental capacity and funding.(14)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in CAR (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict.	2013 – 2016
	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, and ensure that the types of hazardous work prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2013 – 2016
	Establish criminal prohibitions for possession and distribution of child pornography.	2009 – 2016
	Publish the Government's legislation for a minimum age for voluntary military service.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Ensure that courts are operational and that citizens can report violations and access formal judicial processes throughout the country.	2016
	Publish information on the labor inspectorate's funding level, type of training provided to inspectors and investigators, and data related to enforcement efforts, including the number and type of investigations conducted, violations found, penalties imposed and collected, and whether routine and unannounced inspections were conducted.	2014 – 2016
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in accordance with the ILO's recommendation and ensure enforcement officers have the resources necessary to fulfill their mandate.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that enforcement agencies have sufficient resources and allocated funding to enable government officials to enforce laws related to child labor throughout the country and provide services to victims.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that children are not subject to unlawful punishment, are not kept in detention centers with adults, and are turned over to social service providers when released from armed groups.	2016
Coordination	Ensure coordinating mechanisms are functional and combat all forms of child labor, including all its worst forms.	2011 – 2016
Government Policies	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2016
	Implement established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms.	2013 – 2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into education and poverty reduction policies.	2009 – 2016
Social Programs	Ensure that children in displaced persons camps are not vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.	2016
	Improve access to education by eliminating school-related fees, making additional efforts to provide all children with birth registration, establishing an adequate number of teachers and classrooms throughout the country, and ensuring that schools are safe spaces and free from armed groups.	2009 – 2016
	Expand programs to assist former child combatants and children associated with armed groups and improve coordination among relevant actors.	2013 – 2016
	Implement programs to address the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. In 2016, Chad made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved a Five-Year Plan for Development that aims to strengthen the Labor Inspectorate's directorate charged with combating the worst forms of child labor and drafted a guide for law enforcement officials on assisting victims of human trafficking. The Project to Revitalize Basic Education in Chad, which is led by the Ministry of Education, received an additional $7 million from UNICEF and UNESCO to expand access to education for 8,500 children affected by conflict. However, children in Chad engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in cattle herding and domestic work. The country's legal framework does not contain criminal penalties for forced child labor, child trafficking, or the use of children in illicit activities.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chad engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in cattle herding and domestic work.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Chad.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	48.8
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	49.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	28.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		38.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2014 – 2015.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cultivating and harvesting crops, including rice and corn (1)
	Collecting and chopping wood (5, 6)
	Production of charcoal (1)
	Herding cattle (1, 9)
	Fishing, including catching, smoking, and selling fish (1)
Industry	Building walls (6)
	Gold mining [†] (1)
	Working in auto repair shops (1)
	Making bricks (6, 10)
Services	Domestic work (1-3, 5, 6)
	Street work, including vending, garbage scavenging, and carrying heavy loads [†] (1, 6, 9, 11)
	Begging (2, 12)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3-6)
	Forced labor in domestic work, fishing, herding cattle, begging, street vending, and agriculture, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-5)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Child trafficking occurs primarily within Chad for the purposes of forced labor in cattle herding and domestic sex tourism. Children are occasionally trafficked to neighboring countries for forced labor in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 3, 4) Domestically, boys known as mahadjirine may be sent to Koranic schools to receive an education, but they are forced to beg and to surrender the money they receive to their teachers.(2-4)

The Constitution and the Law Orienting the Education System mandate free and compulsory education in Chad.(13, 14) However, there is a lack of schools, classrooms, and teachers throughout the country. Some schools do not offer all grade levels, and parents are often required to pay for school-related fees, which may prevent some children from attending school.(15-17) In addition, some schools near Lake Chad were occupied or attacked by Boko Haram elements, or closed as a result of military operations, forcing approximately 180,000 children ages 3 to 17 to miss the 2015–2016 school year.(12, 18-22) In September 2016, teacher strikes closed schools throughout the country for several months. Only 7 of the 450 public schools in the Lake Region opened for the 2016–2017 school year, leaving more than 200,000 children unenrolled.(1, 23-26) The Government, supported by UNICEF and other partners, encouraged schools to reopen by distributing school supplies to more than 22,000 children, but the majority of schools remain closed, with the exception of 64 schools located in refugee camps in Eastern and Western Chad.(24)

During the reporting period, Chad experienced an economic crisis, which led to significant cuts to public servant allowances as part of severe austerity measures, as well as internal unrest due to presidential elections. These issues affected the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.(1, 21, 27, 28)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Chad has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Chad's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 52 of the Labor Code; Article 1 of the Decree Relating to Child Labor (29, 30)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 6–7 of the Decree Relating to Child Labor (29)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 6 of the Decree Relating to Child Labor (29)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	No		Article 20 of the Constitution; Article 5 of the Labor Code (14, 30)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 279–282 of the Penal Code; Articles 81–85 of the Law on Cyber Security and Fight Against Cyber Criminality (12, 31)

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	20	Article 32 of the Law on the Organization of the Armed Forces; Article 22 of the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child (32, 33)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 32 of the Law on the Organization of the Armed Forces; Article 1 of the Ordinance Prohibiting the Use of Children in Armed Conflict; Article 52 of Military Statute N° 006/PR/06 (32, 34, 35)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 1 of the Ordinance Prohibiting the Use of Children in Armed Conflict (34)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16 [‡]	Articles 21, 23, 25, and 28 of the Law Orienting the Education System; Article 35 of the Constitution (13, 14)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 9 of the Law Orienting the Education System; Article 35 of the Constitution (13, 14)

[‡] Age calculated based on available information (13)

In December 2016, the National Assembly adopted a new Penal Code that has provisions criminalizing trafficking in persons; it is awaiting signature by the president and promulgation.(36) Several laws are awaiting approval by the National Assembly, including the Child Protection Code, Labor Code, and Family Code, which contain additional provisions criminalizing child trafficking and extending protection to children working in the informal sector.(1, 2, 37-41) A draft law on trafficking in persons, which has been pending adoption by the General Assembly since March 2015, will bring Chad's laws into compliance with international standards.(4, 36, 42-44) Existing laws do not criminally prohibit child trafficking.(14, 30, 31)

In addition, the Decree Relating to Child Labor prohibits certain hazardous activities for children under age 18 and some other activities for children under age 16.(29, 41) This means that children ages 16 and 17 can work legally in hazardous tasks, such as working with hand- or foot-powered machinery, operating machinery with sharp blades, and working on scaffolding in construction sites.(29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Employment, and Social Dialogue (MOL)	Implement and enforce child labor laws.(1, 15) Includes a directorate and specific point of contact to assist in coordinating child protection and human trafficking issues.(45)
Ministry of Justice, Human Rights, and Guardian of the Seal (MOJ)	Draft and enforce laws and coordinate efforts to protect human rights.(1) Through its Directorate for Protection and Legal Monitoring of Children, enforce child labor laws.(46)
Ministry of Women, Childhood Protection, and National Solidarity (MWCPNS)	Protect children's rights, provide temporary shelter to victims, and assist with reintegration when appropriate.(4, 36) Through its Child Protection Directorate, lead Government efforts on child protection, including child labor, and liaise with the Child Protection Directorate at the MOJ.(36) In 2016, drafted a guide for civil society and law enforcement officials on assisting victims of human trafficking, particularly during investigations and prosecutions.(36)
National Police	Enforce and investigate criminal laws against child labor, including child trafficking, and refer them to the MOJ for prosecution. In the case of the Child Protection Brigade, specifically monitor violations of children's rights.(1) Located throughout the country.(45, 47)

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Child Protection Committees did not carry out activities during the reporting period due to a lack of resources. Research indicates that although the Child Protection Brigade within the National Police is tasked with responding to child welfare concerns, it was not well-known by the public.(1) In addition, the judicial system ceased functioning in November 2016 when magistrates and court clerks went on strike to protest government austerity measures.(26)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Chad did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

* The Government does not publish this information.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Chad's workforce, which includes almost 5.5 million workers.(50) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Chad should employ roughly 136 labor inspectors.(50-52) Inspectors lack sufficient resources such as equipment, transportation, and fuel to conduct investigations outside the city where they are based.(15, 36) In 2016, the labor inspectorate did not receive any funding to conduct inspections, and inspectors were on strike from September 2016 to January 2017 to protest the nonpayment of salaries and government austerity measures.(1, 36, 46) Research indicates that the informal sector, in which the majority of children work, is largely unmonitored, and some establishments in the formal sector may go years without receiving an inspection.(2, 15, 48)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Chad took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (12)	Unknown (1)

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	2 (49)	0 (1)
Number of Convictions	3 (12)	0 (1)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (12)	Yes (1)

Research indicates that investigators had inadequate resources, which hindered their ability to respond to complaints of child labor violations.(1) All newly hired law enforcement officials—including police, military, judiciary officials, and social workers—receive a mandatory course on child protection as part of their training.(12, 49, 53)

Civil society organizations typically assist with providing temporary shelter, legal assistance, and family reintegration; they also track prosecutions and convictions.(12, 45) An underdeveloped judicial system, inadequate deterrents, and under-enforcement of existing penalties pose barriers to prosecution.(4, 15, 45) Police and traditional leaders sometimes resolved cases of child trafficking outside the legal system.(15) In addition, the police commissioner in Kélo was arrested in February 2016 following allegations of complicity in a child trafficking network; the investigation remains ongoing.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Working Group on the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate government efforts on child trafficking, including by providing training, conducting awareness-raising activities, and strengthening the network of government organizations that address human trafficking.(45, 54) Chaired by the MWCPNS's Child Protection Directorate and includes representatives from four other ministries, including the MOL.(36)
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons (ICTIP)	Coordinate government efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms, and propose revision of national legislation to conform to international standards.(12, 36, 55, 56) Led by the MOJ's Directorate General of Human Rights and includes representatives from four ministries, including the MOL, international NGOs, and civil society organizations.(36)
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Soldiers	Coordinate government efforts to eliminate the use of children in armed conflict and address the worst forms of child labor.(36) Located in each of the eight military regions and includes representatives from the government, army, gendarmerie, and civil society organizations.(36) Conduct awareness-raising activities and trainings in the military.(10, 57, 58)
MWCPNS's Regional Child Protection Committees	Coordinate regional government efforts to address the worst forms of child labor.(59) Includes representatives from three ministries and the police.(10)

None of the coordinating bodies met in 2016, and the Government noted that a lack of technical and financial resources has hampered its ability to improve its coordination and response to child labor.(36, 46)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
2013 Child Soldiers Action Plan	Aims to permanently eliminate the use of child soldiers in partnership with the UN.(37, 58, 60-62) Integrates training modules on child soldiers for all military personnel and includes monitoring and age verification in all military training centers by officials from the MOJ, the MWCPNS, and the Ministry of Defense.(4, 45) In 2016, developed modules on child soldiers with the support of UNICEF and integrated them into all military training, established cells to perform age verification at military centers, and raised awareness of child soldiering issues in all eight military zones. In addition, conducted several joint missions with government and UN representatives to sites in the Lake region housing alleged Boko Haram affiliates who had surrendered. Children were referred to a transition center in Bol for family reunification.(22, 24, 25)

Policy	Description
N'Djamena 2010 Declaration of Regional Conference: Ending Recruitment and Use of Children by Armed Forces and Groups	Represents a commitment among six signatory countries, including Chad, to eliminate the use of child soldiers in their territories.(37, 63) Forms the basis for the 2013 Child Soldiers Action Plan and accompanying UNICEF Roadmap.(47)
MWCPNS's 2016 National Action Plan	Aims to provide free birth registration to 27,000 children in targeted areas, establish or strengthen the capacity of 70 child protection committees, reinforce law enforcement comprehension of standards on child protection, and develop a system for preventing and responding to cases of child exploitation.(64) In 2016, carried out many of its planned activities.(46)
Five-Year Plan for Development (2016–2020) [†]	Ministry of Economy and Development Planning policy which aims to conduct a survey on child labor every three years, increase the rate of birth registration, increase educational opportunities, and strengthen the human and financial capacity of the MOL's directorate charged with combating the worst forms of child labor.(65)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(66)

Although the Government has adopted policies on child trafficking and child soldiers, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor in domestic work, and herding cattle. Although the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons began drafting a National Action Plan on Human Trafficking, it was never completed.(46)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Transition Centers [†]	Run by the Ministry of Defense; provides family reunification and reintegration assistance to former child soldiers. MWCPNS, in collaboration with UNICEF, assists in demobilizing and reinserting child soldiers.(37, 55) In December 2016, reunited 58 children with their families.(22)
Reception Centers [†]	Run by MWCPNS and UNICEF, centers located throughout the country provide temporary assistance to victims of child trafficking, including food, education, medical, and psychological care, and reintegration services.(4, 45) The National Solidarity Fund, maintained by Prime Minister's Office, funds temporary shelter or reunification assistance for victims.(36) Child Protection Directorates at various ministries work together to provide support and reintegration services to victims of exploitation.(36)
UNICEF Country Program	In support of the UNDAF, aims to increase primary school enrollment, support training of community teachers, and promote birth registration rates.(67) Establishes child-friendly spaces and schools in refugee camps.(68) In 2016, drafted the UNICEF Country Program (2017–2021), which continues promotion of birth registration and access to education, and aims to promote a justice system that is sensitive to child rights.(28)
Project to Revitalize Basic Education in Chad (PREBAT)	$47.4 million program implemented by UNESCO and UNICEF, led by the Ministry of Education in support of the Transitional Education Plan, which aims to promote access to education, improve physical infrastructure, and reduce educational costs.(69, 70) In February 2016, an additional $7 million was approved to provide school lunches and access to education for 8,500 children in the Lake Chad region affected by conflict.(69) By the end of 2016, constructed 1,300 classrooms, distributed almost 2 million textbooks to teachers, and provided training to 1,100 teachers.(71)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Chad.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(55, 57, 58, 72)

Research indicates that the Government decreased funding to existing programs during the reporting period due to austerity measures, and it lacks the capacity to provide adequate care and reintegration support for demobilized child soldiers.(1, 40) Although Chad has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem adequately, particularly forced child labor in herding, begging, and domestic work.(9)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Chad (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws specifically prohibit children from being used, offered, or procured for illicit activities.	2011 – 2016
	Establish criminal prohibitions for debt bondage, slavery, and forced labor of children.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit both domestic and international child trafficking for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, and all the steps in the trafficking process, including recruiting, harboring, transporting, transferring, and receiving.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that all children under age 18 are prohibited from engaging in hazardous occupations or activities.	2014 – 2016
Enforcement	Ensure that law enforcement agencies receive sufficient resources to carry out their mandate and that their role is understood by the public.	2016
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors in accordance with the ILO recommendation and ensure that inspectors have adequate resources to carry out their mandate.	2012 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing inspectors to assess penalties, and by providing sufficient resources to conduct inspections in both the formal and informal sectors and prosecute offenders.	2014 – 2016
	Institutionalize training for labor inspectors, including at the beginning of their employment, and provide regular refresher courses.	2014 – 2016
	Publish information about whether unannounced inspections are permitted.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that penalties are severe enough to deter offenders and are enforced according to the law.	2015 – 2016
	Investigate allegations of government officials who are complicit in a child trafficking network and ensure that no Government of Chad officials are complicit in perpetuating the worst forms of child labor.	2016
Coordination	Ensure that coordinating committees receive adequate resources to meet and carry out their mandates to coordinate and respond to child labor issues.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Adopt a policy to combat all worst forms of child labor in Chad, including commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor in domestic work, and herding cattle.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that all policies are implemented as intended.	2016
Social Programs	Ensure access to education for all children by eliminating school-related fees, preventing prolonged teacher strikes, continuing to provide scholarships to students, ensuring that schools are safe spaces, and improving access to schools throughout the country.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that existing programs receive adequate funding and are able to support demobilized child soldiers.	2016
	Establish or expand programs to provide services to children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, such as use of forced labor in herding, begging, and domestic work.	2009 – 2016

7. UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education, both sexes (%). Accessed December 16, 2016; <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of cur-

- rent primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
51. UN. "World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex." (2012); http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.
52. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

Chile

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Chile made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor began implementing the National Strategy to Eradicate Child Labor, strengthened Regional Advisory Committees for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers, and supported the design and implementation of regional operating plans to address child labor at the local level. The Government created 21 new Offices for the Protection of Children's Rights, published a comprehensive guide for the detection and referral of human trafficking victims, including children, and began updating its list of hazardous occupations for children. However, children in Chile perform dangerous tasks in construction. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production and distribution of drugs, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in commercial sexual exploitation. Information regarding the number of criminal violations found and prosecutions initiated related to the worst forms of child labor is not publicly available.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chile engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production and distribution of drugs, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in commercial sexual exploitation. Children also engage in construction, an industry that is considered dangerous in Chile.(1-12) The results of the 2012 National Survey on Activities of Children and Adolescents (Encuesta de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes) indicate that 70.6 percent of working children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in work classified as dangerous.(8, 10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Chile.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.8 (94,025)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	99.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	4.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(13)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Encuesta de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes Survey, 2012.(14)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting, collecting, and selling crops, including wheat, and working on agricultural loading docks (4, 10, 12)
	Livestock rearing and raising farm animals (9, 10, 12)
	Forestry,† activities unknown (9, 10)
	Hunting, activities unknown (9, 10)
	Fishing,† activities unknown (9, 10)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (4, 8-10, 12, 15)
	Production of ceramics and books (4, 12)
Services	Repairing shoes and garments (4, 12)
	Domestic work (4, 8, 10, 16)
	Working in retail, hospitality, and restaurants (4, 12, 15, 17, 18)
	Street work, including street vending and washing cars (4, 8, 9, 15, 19)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Use in illicit activities, including in the production and distribution of drugs, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-7, 11, 12, 20)
	Forced labor in agriculture, mining, construction, street vending, domestic work, and garment and hospitality sectors (3-5, 11, 12, 18)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 4, 6-8, 12, 18, 20)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Chile, children are subjected to human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work.(3, 11, 16) In 2016, the National Minors' Service (SENAME) detected 346 cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children—the majority of them Chilean.(20) Children are also used to steal, or to produce, sell, and transport drugs on the borders with Peru and Bolivia.(4, 11) In 2016, the Government identified 184 children—some of whom may have been trafficking victims—involved in illicit activities, including drug trafficking and theft.(20, 21)

Indigenous children and adolescents from Otavalo, Ecuador, are especially vulnerable to human trafficking for labor exploitation in Chile.(2, 18) Children are also involved in street work, especially in Santiago, including selling handicrafts, clothes, or other goods.(22-24) In 2016, SENAME detected 730 cases of children involved in the worst forms of child labor, including 68 in hazardous labor.(20) The Government reports that 90 percent of working children between the ages of 5 and 17 are engaged in hazardous work.(25)

Education is compulsory in Chile through secondary school.(26) However, barriers to education exist, including a lack of transportation in rural areas.(18)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Chile has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). The legal framework appears to be sufficient to address and protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

‡ Age calculated based on available information (26)

Chilean law does not sufficiently protect children from forced labor as it does not generally prohibit forced labor except when it results from human trafficking.

In 2016, the Government began updating its list of hazardous occupations and prohibited activities for children.(18) The President also sent a draft bill to Congress to create the Children's Rights Defender's Office.(18)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MINTRAB)	Design and implement national strategy on child labor and generate public awareness of child labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(8, 36) The National Labor Directorate, functioning in parallel with MINTRAB, enforces child labor laws.(18)
National Minors' Service (SENAME)	Coordinate the provision of services to vulnerable children in collaboration with Rights Protection Offices.(37, 38) Operates under Ministry of Justice.(18)
National Investigations Police (PDI)	Investigate and prevent the worst forms of child labor by conducting community outreach activities, including trainings and information sessions.(39) Operates under Ministry of Interior.(18) Within PDI, sex crime brigades (BRISXME) specifically look for CSEC.(40)
National Uniformed Police (Carabineros)	Investigate, prevent, and detect crimes, including child labor violations, by conducting community policing and specialized investigations. The Directorate for Family Protection provides specialized orientation on policies and operating plans for detection and prevention of domestic violence and child abuse, including sexual exploitation of children.(20) Operates under Ministry of Interior.(18)
National Prosecutor's Office (Fiscalía Nacional)	Investigate and prosecute crimes, including those involving commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking of children. Train and coordinate with interagency partners, including the PDI and Carabineros, and regional and local prosecutor's offices.(41, 42)
Rights Protection Offices (Oficinas de Protección de Derechos)	Refer cases of children whose rights have been violated to appropriate social services, and monitor and raise awareness of the worst forms of child labor. Located in municipalities throughout the country and part of a social protection network overseen by SENAME.(9)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Chile took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Labor Inspectorate Funding	$30,464,007 (17)	$30,590,726 (18)

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (17)	Yes (18)

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Chile's workforce, which includes over 8 million workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Chile should employ about 585 labor inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(18, 43-45) Additionally, the Labor Inspectorate has only 133 vehicles to conduct inspections in all of Chile, and must share them with other departments of the Directorate.(18)

In 2016, the Government conducted two qualitative studies on child labor in the agricultural and commercial sectors.(18, 46-48)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Chile took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Yes (18)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	N/A

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	23 (21)
Number of Convictions	30 (17)	21 (20)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (17)	Yes (18)

In 2016, the Interagency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons published a comprehensive guide to facilitate detection and referral of trafficking victims, including children.(21, 49) The Government opened 266 investigations related to commercial sexual exploitation of children—including 103 for promotion or facilitation of commercial sexual exploitation of children, 12

for procurement of sexual services from children, and 151 for production of pornographic material involving children.(18) The Government also initiated seven prosecutions for facilitation of prostitution of children, five for solicitation of sexual services from children, and convicted three individuals for facilitation of prostitution of children and three individuals for labor trafficking of children.(21) However, the penalties for promoting or facilitating the commercial sexual exploitation of children are not commensurate with those for other serious crimes.(11) Additionally, all sentences for crimes involving children were served on parole.(20)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor	Oversee implementation of the “National Strategy for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers (2015–2025),” formulated with the Social Observatory to Eradicate Child Labor.(20) Led by MINTRAB, includes representatives from the Ministries of Agriculture, Education, and Justice; the National Statistics Institute; the National Tourism Service; SENAME; the PDI and the National Uniformed Police.(50) In 2016, met regularly and brought together civil society organizations and government agencies to raise awareness, provide services to victims, and protect victims’ rights.(12)
Regional Advisory Committees for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Workers	Replicate the functioning of the National Advisory Committee at the regional level.(18) Led by the Regional Secretary of Labor, committees bring together local government agencies, civil society organizations, and the business community to address child labor. In 2016, committees began implementing a strategy to eradicate child labor and operating plans at the regional, provincial, and municipal levels, in line with the National Strategy 2015–2025.(18, 51, 52)
Worst Forms of Child Labor (WFCL) Task Force	Oversee the WFCL Registry, which tracks incidents of the worst forms of child labor and provides information on programs designed to assist child workers.(53) Compile data in the WFCL Registry and present it to the National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor and other government stakeholders.(20) In 2016, maintained the registry and continued to implement a multisector protocol to identify, register, and care for children and adolescents who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(12)
National Council for Children	Integrate efforts across government agencies to uphold the rights of the child. Implement policies, strategic plans, and programs at national, regional, and local levels.(17) Managed by the Ministry General Secretariat of the Presidency.(17)
Interagency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate the Government’s anti-human trafficking efforts. Led by the Ministry of the Interior, comprises law enforcement agencies, the Ministry of Foreign Relations, the Ministry of Justice, the National Prosecutor’s Office, SENAME, and others.(54)
Social Observatory to Eradicate Child Labor	Established by Decree No. 131 to coordinate the study of child and adolescent labor issues among working groups, foundations, educational study centers, and institutions. Conduct technical studies on child and adolescent labor issues and evaluate current child labor elimination policies.(1, 55) Disaggregate child labor survey data from the 2012 National Survey on Activities of Children and Adolescents.(55)

In 2016, the Government strengthened the Regional Advisory Committees and supported the implementation of regional strategies based on the challenges experienced by Chile’s diverse local communities.(18) With assistance from the ILO, each regional government developed operating plans to combat child labor and planned at least two activities related to child labor in 2016.(18)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor†

Policy	Description
National Strategy for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers (2015–2025)	Establishes a strategy to eradicate child labor by (1) combining efforts across national and regional agencies and private and public entities and (2) requiring regions to establish a strategy adapted to issues particular to the area to effectively eradicate child labor.(56) The Ministry of Labor oversaw the implementation of regional strategies, including the design and implementation of regional operating plans.(20)

Policy	Description
National Policy for Childhood and Adolescence (2015–2025)	Creates an Integrated System of Guarantee of Rights and an Inter-Agency Task Force, which is developing a 2016–2025 plan of action for childhood and adolescence. MINTRAB also participates and provides information and guidance regarding child labor.(57, 58) The National Council for Children worked with Congress to pass a bill to create a new system guaranteeing the rights of children in accordance with the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.(20)
Anti-Trafficking National Action Plan (2015–2018)	Acts to prevent and combat human trafficking, with a focus on women and children. Encompasses four strategic areas: (1) prevention and awareness raising, (2) control (prosecution), (3) victims' assistance and protection, and (4) interinstitutional cooperation and coordination.(59) The Government provided specialized training on trafficking to law enforcement and judicial officials and published a comprehensive guide on identifying and referring trafficking victims.(20)
Cooperative Agreement for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers in Chile	Creates mechanisms to detect child labor in the capital region school system. Signed by the Ministry of Education and MINTRAB.(60) Provided for 24 training programs on child labor through the Ministry of Labor to educate stakeholders, including teachers and students.(20)
Inter-Agency Protocol on Assistance for TIP Victims	Creates a system to register, monitor, and assist victims of trafficking. Provides safe housing; health and psychological services; and legal, employment, and immigration assistance.(21) Coordinated by the Under Secretariat for Crime Prevention and Citizen Security at the Ministry of the Interior.(21) In 2016, two adolescent minors received assistance under this protocol.(21)
Chilean Ministry of the Interior and Public Security and U.S. Department of Homeland Security Joint Statement on Trafficking in Persons	Seeks to enhance collaboration and information exchanges between enforcement agencies on combating human trafficking and protecting vulnerable populations. Signed in 2015 by Chile and the United States.(61) The PDI provided training to Chilean and Peruvian border police to increase cross-border law enforcement cooperation and the U.S. Department of Homeland Security provided training for officers from Chilean Customs, Carabineros, and Navy to build host national capacity for targeting and risk management in the seaport and maritime environment, including rescue of trafficking victims.(20)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(62–64)

In 2016, the Government began implementing the National Strategy to Eradicate Child Labor and took important steps to ensure that this strategy remains a priority, including establishing regional advisory committees to address child labor and protect young workers.(18)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Guides on Eliminating Child Labor and Safe Work for Adolescent Workers	MINTRAB collaborates with the Confederation of Production and Commerce and the Chilean Safety Association to fight against child labor. Distributes guides to employers on eliminating child labor through public-private partnerships, and develops and distributes a manual to promote safety for adolescent workers.(65)
Regional Action Group for the Americas [‡]	Conduct prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America.(66) Administered in Chile by the National Tourism Service (SERNATUR), conducts child labor prevention and awareness-raising campaigns in the tourism sector.(8) SERNATUR conducted regular training nationally for tourism students and businesses on commercial sexual exploitation of children. Collaborated with the PDI to provide training to 110 hotels, travel agents, and tour operators that applied for quality certification seals.(20)
SENAME Programs for Children at Risk of or Engaged in the Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Approximately 125 programs serving disadvantaged youth and children at risk of or engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation. Includes projects implemented along with municipal governments and involves 126 local branches of the Office for the Protection of Children's Rights (OPCR).(1, 9, 21, 37, 67) In 2016, SENAME added 21 OPCRs.(21)
Here I am and I act (Aquí Estoy y Actuo)	led by Fundacion Telefonica and MINTRAB under the fifth principle of the UN Global Pact to help businesses contribute to the eradication of child labor in supply chains. Adopted by 17 businesses, this program feeds into the National Strategy for the Erradication of Child Labor.(68, 69)

Program	Description
Programs on Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (CSEC)	Administered by SENAME, includes 17 programs and 1 residential center to serve victims of CSEC.(21) The Child Labor Survey on CSEC is a collaboration of the Government and ILO to collect data on CSEC from police and other governmental agencies.(7, 8) In 2016, SENAME continued its social media campaign, “There is no Excuse: Commercial Sex with Those Under 18 is a Crime.”(18)
Indigenous Language Sector Program (Sector de la Lengua Indígena) [†]	Ministry of Education program that seeks to increase the quality of education available to indigenous children. (70) The Ministry of Education finalized fifth and sixth grade study programs for the indigenous languages Aymara , Quechua , and Rapa Nui y Mapuzugun .(20)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Chile.

[‡]The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(9, 37, 71-75)

Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Guides on Eliminating Child Labor and Safe Work for Adolescent Workers and the Here I Am and I Act program.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Chile (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits forced labor.	2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 into non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Hire a sufficient number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO recommendation.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that inspectors receive adequate resources, such as transportation, to effectively carry out their duties.	2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating targeted inspections based on analysis of data related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents.	2015 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of child labor violations found for which penalties were imposed and collected, and criminal violations found related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that penalties for promoting or facilitating the commercial sexual exploitation of children are commensurate with those for other serious crimes.	2016
Social Programs	Improve access to education for all children by removing barriers such as a lack of transportation in rural areas.	2016
	Undertake activities to implement the Guides on Eliminating Child Labor and Safe Work for Adolescent Workers and the Here I Am and I Act Program.	2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children’s work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. 43. UN. “World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex”; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies,” “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies,” and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

44. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

45. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited March 18, 2016]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.

In 2016, Colombia made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government eliminated the requirement that victims of human trafficking file an official complaint before they are able to receive non-emergency services and enacted by decree the National Strategy to Combat Trafficking in Persons for 2016–2018. The Ministry of Labor conducted 274 child labor inspections targeting high-risk sectors, compared to none in 2015, and signed an agreement with the Governor of Cundinamarca and Mayor of Pasto to combat child labor and protect adolescent workers. The Government also signed and ratified a peace accord with the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) in November 2016, under which the FARC committed to stop recruiting minors and release from their service all children under age 15. This led to the release of some illegally recruited minors used in armed conflict and the establishment of a protocol for the release of remaining children. In addition, the Government launched a pilot program to address child labor in unrefined brown sugar (panela) production. However, children in Colombia perform dangerous tasks in street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Government does not provide assistance to children engaged in street work or employ a sufficient number of labor inspectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Colombia perform dangerous tasks in street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.⁽¹⁻³⁾ In 2016, the Government published results from the 2015 National Household Survey, which shows child labor among children ages 5 to 17 decreased from 9.3 percent in 2014 to 9.1 percent in 2015.⁽⁴⁾ However, the survey results do not disaggregate information on health, occupational safety, or sectors in which children work, including priority sectors identified by the Government for child labor reduction, such as coffee and sugar cane.⁽⁵⁾ Furthermore, the Government does not conduct research on child labor for hard-to-reach populations, including children engaged in street work.⁽⁵⁾

Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Colombia.

	Use in armed conflict by illegal armed groups, sometimes as a result of force, to perform intelligence and logistical activities, store and transport weapons, and engage in commercial sexual exploitation (11, 31)
	Use in illicit activities, including in forced begging, by gangs to commit homicides and traffic drugs, and in the production of marijuana, poppies, and coca (stimulant plant), sometimes as a result of human trafficking, (2, 3, 9, 11, 22, 29, 32, 33)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Colombia are used for commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities. Between January and November 2016, the Government registered 292 cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children, of which 247 were girls.(11) Most of these girls came from Antioquia, Atlántico, Bogotá, Bolívar, and Valle del Cauca.(11, 34). Commercial sexual exploitation of children takes place more often in private homes rented through the Internet than in commercial establishments.(11) In mining areas, trafficking of children—for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation—is common, especially in Antioquia; Bajo Cauca; Barranco Minas, Guainía; and Northern Cauca.(35)

In Cartagena, children are forced by gangs to commit homicides and engage in commercial sexual exploitation.(36) Children also work on the streets of Cali and Medellín.(1, 20) In Cartagena, children—many of them Afro-Colombian—sell fruits and handicrafts in urban markets and offer services to tourists.(21, 36) In some cities, children in street work sell gum and sweets, guard parked vehicles, or work in recycling.(11)

The recruitment and use of children by illegal armed groups remained widespread and underreported in 2016, despite reaching a historic low after the Government signed a peace accord with the FARC.(11, 37) As a result of the peace accord, FARC released 13 minors to the Red Cross.(11) No additional minors were released by the end of the reporting period.(11)

Accessing education and high rates of school dropout continue to be challenges for many children, especially indigenous and Afro-Colombian children. Access to education is hindered by internal armed conflict, impassable routes, and long distances between children's homes and schools in rural areas.(11, 38, 39) For the small number of children from ethnic groups who may not speak Spanish as a first language, language barriers may also make education difficult to access.(19) Children who do not attend school are often the most vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor in Colombia.(21, 32)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Colombia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The legal framework in Colombia appears to be sufficient to address and protect children from child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 162 of Law 599; Article 20 of Law 1098; Article 14 of Law 418 (40, 43, 44)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Decision C-376/10 of the Colombian Constitutional Court (46)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 1 of Decree 4807 (47)

In 2016, the Government eliminated the requirement that victims of human trafficking file an official complaint before they can receive non-emergency services.(48)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Colombia

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Inspection, Monitoring, Control, and Territorial Management Department	Receive complaints of labor law violations and conduct labor inspections, including inspections to verify labor conditions for adolescent workers and compliance with other child labor provisions. Operate the Integrated Registration and Information System for Child Labor (SIRITI), a child labor monitoring system that identifies children engaged in or at risk of child labor.(2, 49) Oversee the Internal Working Group on Child Labor Eradication.(50)
Ministry of the Interior (MOI)	Operate a hotline through its Anti-Trafficking in Persons Operations Center to report and track cases of human trafficking, and facilitate access to social services for victims.(51)
National Police	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(49)
Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being (ICBF)	Process child labor complaints; operate hotlines to report child labor cases, including its worst forms; and provide social services to children engaged in or at risk of child labor.(2, 52, 53) Operate 40 mobile units to coordinate government actions to protect children's rights, including with regard to child labor. Provide support to demobilized child soldiers by strengthening family networks and increasing access to health services, food, education, and shelter.(19)
Attorney General's Office (AGO)	Investigate and prosecute cases of child recruitment for armed conflict, commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and human trafficking.(2, 40) Oversee the Articulation Group for Combating Trafficking in Persons, which includes four prosecutors that focus on investigation and prosecution of cross-border human trafficking and other related crimes.(54)
Office of the Ombudsman	Promote the rights of children and adolescents and monitor policies related to children's human rights. Operate an early warning system to prevent the recruitment of children by illegal armed groups.(40)
Ministry of Health and Social Protection	Provide health services to victims of sexual violence, including child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(55)
National Training Service (SENA)	Collect fines imposed by the MOL for labor law violations.(56)

† Data are from January 2015 to December 2015.

‡ Data are from January 2016 to October 2016.

While the Government reported it had sufficient resources to conduct its work, resource allocation varied across offices, with fewer resources provided to rural offices such as those in Amazonas and Vichada.(11) In some cases, inspectors carried out inspections only in a small fraction of the department due to a lack of resources to reach areas that may be accessible only by boat or small planes.(2)

Although the Ministry of Labor (MOL) hired additional labor inspectors in 2016, the number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Colombia's workforce, which includes more than 24 million workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Colombia should employ about 1,629 inspectors.(11, 59-61) In 2016, the Government increased its child labor inspections, and, for the first time, conducted targeted inspections to prevent child labor. However, only one inspection was conducted in Bogotá, where the greatest incidence of child labor occurs.(11) The MOL also disseminated guidance on inspection strategies and preventive assistance to its regional and special labor offices.(11) However, the lack of adequate practical training for new inspectors hampered the labor inspectorate's enforcement of child labor laws.(11)

Despite the requirement that children between the ages of 15 and 17 obtain work authorization from the MOL, the 2014 National Household Survey found many adolescents worked without permits.(5) Due to a lack of compliance with child labor laws, the MOL revoked 124 work authorizations in 2016.(11) The MOL received 49 complaints for violations of child labor laws, which resulted in the issuance of 3 sanctions.(11) Research could not determine whether these fines were collected.(11) Between January and November 2016, 3,394 children were identified by the Government to be in need of assistance as a result of being removed from child labor.(11)

To combat child labor in the mining sector, the ICBF requires its regional offices to coordinate with the MOL regional offices during inspections of mines and quarries and to provide social services to children found working in mining.(62) However, it is unclear whether such coordination occurs in practice.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Colombia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

Number of Investigations	Unknown	2,240 (11)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown	Unknown
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	374 (11)
Number of Convictions	Unknown	258 (11)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (2)	Yes (11)

In 2016, the Attorney General's Office (AGO) conducted 2,240 investigations of crimes related to the worst forms of child labor, including investigations of trafficking in persons for child commercial sexual exploitation.(11) The National Police also apprehended nine child traffickers.(11) Despite these efforts, the Government noted that insufficient resources hampered its capacity to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(2, 11, 63)

In 2016, ICBF allocated more than $5.3 million to provide services to child victims, and between January and November, it registered 292 child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and 46 child victims of trafficking.(11) However, the full scope of the problem is unknown, as few complaints of commercial sexual exploitation of children are filed.(36) In addition, some children's parents are afraid to file complaints because many of their recruiters are locally known individuals.(36) Commercial sexual exploitation of children is also underreported because victims are afraid to testify or otherwise be identified by the accused as part of the judicial process.(19)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interagency Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CIETI)	Coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the MOL, the Committee includes 13 government agencies and representatives from trade unions, business associations, and civil society organizations.(11) Oversee 32 department-level CIETIs, each comprising municipal-level committees, throughout the country.(64) In 2016, the MOL and ICBF drafted the preliminary public policy and roadmap for the National Policy to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor and Protect the Young Worker (2016–2026).(11)
National System of Family Well-Being	Promote interagency coordination to protect children's rights, including rights related to child labor. (11) Design, implement, monitor, and evaluate policies that affect children from early childhood to adolescence. Comprises the offices of the President and Vice President, 15 government ministries, and other government agencies. Overseen by the ICBF.(11)
National Interagency Committee for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Implement efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by the Ministry of Health and Social Protection, comprises 15 government agencies.(11) In 2016, held 3 meetings to discuss the execution of the National Policy to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor and Protect the Young Worker and 10 work sessions to develop a draft policy to prevent commercial sexual exploitation of children.(11)
Interagency Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons (Comité Interinstitucional de Lucha Contra la Trata de Personas)	Lead and coordinate efforts among government agencies to combat human trafficking. Created by Law 985 and chaired by the Ministry of the Interior, comprises 16 government entities and 6 permanent invitees, including private sector and international organizations.(2) In 2016, distributed modified trafficking victim identification materials to better identify vulnerable populations.(37)
Inter-sectorial Commission for the Prevention of the Recruitment and Use of Children by Illegal Armed Groups (CIPRUNA)	Coordinate efforts to prevent child recruitment by illegal armed groups, including for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation. Created by Law 552 and led by the High Commissioner for Post-Conflict, Human Rights and Security, comprises 23 entities, with the AGO and the MOL as permanent members.(65, 66) In 2016, CIPRUNA and the ICBF referred 170 cases of forced recruitment of children to the AGO.(11)
Work Group to Assess Acceptable Activities for Adolescent Work in Coffee, Cotton, Sugar, and Rice	Coordinate with universities to research and assess types of activities that may be permitted for adolescents authorized to work in the coffee, cotton, sugar, and rice sectors. Created in 2014, comprises the UN Food and Agriculture Organization, the ILO, Department of National Planning, National Department of Statistics, Ministry of Agriculture, Ministry of Health, and the MOL.(64)

In 2015, the last year for which information is available, regional government officials recognized a need for increased coordination and information exchange between regional ICBF and MOL offices and the national headquarters to ensure the effective implementation of child labor policies.(21, 63, 67)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor†

Policy	Description
Child Labor Pact (2014–2018)	Aims to reformulate policies on the prevention and eradication of child labor and include them in national strategies; improve coordination among the MOL and other government agencies, the ILO, and industry associations; raise awareness of child labor issues in capital cities and tourist destinations; and train department-level officials on laws related to child labor and services available to victims.(64)
National Strategy for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (2016–2018)†	Aims to prevent human trafficking by raising awareness to detect potential victims, provide immediate assistance to victims, promote inter-institutional collaboration, strengthen and develop international cooperation mechanisms, and develop a data-gathering mechanism.(68) Established by Decree No. 1036 in 2016 and led by the Interagency Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons.(69)

Policy	Description
Final Agreement for the End of Conflict and Construction of a Stable and Lasting Peace [†]	Signed by the Government and the FARC, and ratified by the Colombian Congress in November 2016 to end the armed conflict.(11, 69) Agreed to conduct a child labor eradication campaign, take immediate measures to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, strengthen the system for on-site labor inspections, and create a mobile inspection unit to reach rural areas.(11, 69) Also establishes the National Council for Reincorporation to oversee the demobilization and release of minors from the FARC's ranks.(11)
National Policy to Prevent the Recruitment of Children and Adolescents by Illegal Armed Groups	Directs actions to prevent the recruitment and use of children by illegal armed groups. Aims to address violence against children, including the worst forms of child labor, and improve interagency coordination.(70)
National Development Plan (Todos por un Nuevo País) (2014–2018)	Outlines Colombia's strategy to promote inclusive economic growth and national development. Seeks to improve access to quality education, lengthen the school day to 7 hours, and provide preschool for children under age 5.(71) In 2016, included a new requirement that the child labor survey be conducted annually.(11)
Memoranda of Understanding for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor in the Transport Sector (2015–2016) and for the Promotion of Respect for Children's and Adolescent's Rights in the Production of Coffee (2015–2016)	Signed in 2015 and expired in December 2016.(2) Promoted cooperation between the MOL and the Colombian Federation of Cargo Transporters and Logistics and the National Federation of Coffee Growers (FEDECAFE) to prevent and combat child labor in the transportation and coffee sectors.(2, 72) In 2016, the MOL and FEDECAFE reached an agreement with 560,000 coffee-growing families to abide by child labor laws, conduct awareness-raising campaigns, and establish a working group to identify activities in which children can legally participate.(11, 73) Under this agreement, the Public Employment Service also agreed to establish job centers in the municipalities prioritized by FEDECAFE to support hiring adults.(11)
Agreement Between the MOL, Governor of Cundinamarca, and Mayor of Pasto [†]	Agreed to prevent, deter, and eradicate child labor in its worst forms and protect adolescent workers.(17, 74)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(11, 64, 75)

In 2016, the Government continued to draft the National Policy to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor and Protect the Young Worker, intended to replace the previous policy that expired in 2015.(11) The new policy aims to strengthen prevention strategies, update the list of hazardous activities, develop a list of activities permitted for young workers, develop cost-efficient mechanisms to identify child laborers, design coordination mechanisms with the private sector and unions, and generate programs in rural areas. In addition, in June 2016, the Government approved a national plan to prevent and eradicate the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(19)

Officials in some departments reported experiencing difficulties in implementing child labor policies due to a lack of current, reliable data on child labor. A lack of resources and training to update the MOL Integrated Registration and Information System for Child Labor has contributed to this situation.(17, 21, 63, 64, 67)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Child Labor in Mining Prevention Program (Prevenir es Mejor)	Secretariat of Mining and Office of Infancy, Adolescence, and Youth program in Antioquia, provided 438 children with life skills training, legal and psychological support, and recreational activities to prevent and eradicate child labor in the mining sector.(76)
Projects Addressing Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children [†]	Eyes Everywhere (Ojos en Todas Partes), a public awareness campaign that aims to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism sector. Led by Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Tourism, and implemented in coordination with ICBF and the National Tourism Fund.(2, 77) Sexual Violence – The Importance of the First 72 Hours, campaigns to train psychosocial teams and other service providers on how to conduct investigations related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children and provide assistance to victims.(11) In 2016, more than 183 family commissioners and psychosocial teams from Antioquia, Cundinamarca, and Huila were trained as part of this campaign.(11)

Program	Description
Projects Addressing Trafficking in Persons	Eye on Trafficking [†] aims to increase awareness of human trafficking among high school students; School Environments in Coexistence and Peace [†] focuses on identifying potential trafficking victims; and The Butterflies, a comic book released by Women's Link Worldwide, Renacer Foundation, and UNODC, aims to raise awareness about human trafficking among children and adolescents.(11)
Development for Social Prosperity Programs [†]	More Families in Action (Más Familias en Acción) uses a conditional cash transfer program seeking to combat poverty and build human capital; United Network (Red Unidos), coordinates actions to reduce inequality and end extreme poverty; Healthy Generations (Generaciones con Bienestar), operates a children's rights program offering cultural and recreational activities for children ages 6 to 17 identified as vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor; and Youth in Action (Jóvenes en Acción) provides technical job training and conditional cash transfer for vulnerable urban youth ages 16 to 24.(78-84)
Mobile Teams for Comprehensive Protection – Child Labor (EMPI)	Led by ICBF, assist families vulnerable to child labor by linking them to the National System of Family Well-Being. (11) Between January and November 2016, assisted 1,429 children engaged in child labor, operating in 8 cities, including Arauca, Barranquilla, Bogotá, Cartagena, Ocaña, Riohacha, Sincelejo, and Soacha.(11, 85)
ICBF Projects [†]	Colombia Network Against Child Labor (Red Colombia contra el Trabajo Infantil), a public-private partnership that builds on the UN Global Pact Initiative to create collaboration between Colombian businesses and the MOL to eliminate child labor. In 2016, implemented the “Stick your tongue out at child labor” social media campaign. (86-88) Healthy Generations, a project that aims to prevent child labor and protect young workers in 58 municipalities. In 2016, served 117,214 children in 32 departments and launched a pilot program in coordination with the Association of Sugar Cane Growers to prevent child labor in the agricultural sector, especially in panela production, serving 720 at-risk children in Cauca and Valle de Cauca.(11)
Decent Work Program	Project implemented by the ILO to promote decent work, including combating child labor.(89, 90)
National Household Survey [†]	National Administrative Department of Statistics annual national household survey that includes questions on child labor.(91)
INGRUMA Indigenous Training Center	Funded by USAID to provide specialized services to indigenous youth who have been victims of child soldiering. (92, 93) As of 2016, 18 youth have graduated from the Training Center.(37)
We Are a Treasure (Somos Tesoro) (2013–2017)	USDOL-funded $9 million project to combat child labor and promote safe work in the mining sector. Implemented by PACT, Inc., in partnership with the Alliance for Responsible Mining, Mi Sangre Foundation, and the Fund for Environmental Action and Childhood.(94-96) In 2016, 10 municipalities included a commitment to prevent and reduce child labor in their municipal development plans, and in partnership with the Government and ILO, designed and implemented a training program to strengthen local technical capacities aimed at preventing and reducing child labor in mining.(97, 98) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Colombia.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(99-103)

Research did not find evidence of programs to assist children engaged in street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Colombia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Ensure that labor inspectors have sufficient resources to perform inspections.	2009 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor to meet the ILO recommendation.	2009 – 2016
	Publish information on child labor law enforcement efforts, including the number of penalties imposed that were collected for labor violations.	2009 – 2016
	Improve coordination between the ICBF and MOL to enforce child labor laws in the mining sector.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that all adolescents who work in allowable activities have received the legally required authorization from the MOL.	2015 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of violations related to the worst forms of child labor, as well as initial training for new labor inspectors and criminal investigators.	2014 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Take steps to protect the identity of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, especially for those on whose behalf complaints are filed.	2014 – 2016
	Provide sufficient resources to criminal law enforcement officials to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2016
Coordination	Ensure that information is exchanged among coordinating bodies at the national and regional levels.	2012 – 2016
Social Programs	Publish information about activities in which children and adolescents work, including disaggregating information about health, occupational safety, and sectors where children work, especially in the production of coffee and sugarcane, and in street work.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that children are protected from armed conflict while in school.	2013 – 2016
	Expand efforts to improve access to education for all children, particularly for indigenous and Afro-Colombian children, including by improving transportation infrastructure, building more schools in rural areas, and offering instruction in local languages.	2013 – 2016
	Implement programs to address child labor, including in street work.	2012 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 59. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited January 19, 2017 <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/rankorder/2095rank.html>]. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
60. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
61. UN. "World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex". New York City; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Comoros

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Comoros made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the National Policy for the Protection of Children, which includes a component to combat the worst forms of child labor. The Government's Monitoring Group for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons also met several times during the year and drafted a new action plan to combat human trafficking. However, children in Comoros perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work. A gap between the minimum age for work and the age for compulsory education leaves children ages 13 to 15 vulnerable to child labor. In addition, limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Comoros perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Comoros.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	23.0 (42,145)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	81.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	20.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		76.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2012.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of manioc, [†] beans, [†] vanilla, [†] cloves, [†] and ylang-ylang [†] (1, 5, 6, 9, 10)
	Animal husbandry [†] (3)
	Fishing, [†] activities unknown (3, 5, 6, 9)
Industry	Carpentry, [†] activities unknown (3)
	Extracting and selling marine sand [†] (6)
	Construction, [†] activities unknown (3)
Services	Domestic work [†] (1-3, 9, 11, 12)
	Street work, activities unknown (3, 5)
	Repairing cars and bicycles, [†] including tire vulcanization [†] and battery charging [†] (3)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Forced labor in domestic work, street vending, baking, fishing, and agriculture (4, 6, 10)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 4)

[†] Determined hazardous by national law or regulation.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some parents who are unable to care for their children send them to wealthier families that are expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling to the children in exchange for housework. In practice, some of these children receive care and an education, while many become domestic workers and are victims of labor exploitation and abuse.(4-6, 13) In Comoros, it is a traditional practice to send children to Koranic teachers to receive an education. Some Koranic teachers, however, force their students to work; girls usually perform domestic work and boys perform agricultural labor.(4, 6, 13) In nearby Mayotte, which is administered by France, reports indicate that there are over 3,000 unaccompanied children from Comoros, some of whom are exploited in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic work.(4, 14, 15)

Although the Constitution guarantees free compulsory primary education, this provision is not enforced effectively, and many children, especially girls, do not attend school.(6, 16) Also, the lack of school infrastructure and the limited availability of teachers impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 6, 9, 12, 17)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Comoros has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). The legal framework in Comoros appears to be sufficient to address and protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 129 of the Labor Code (18)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 131(d) of the Labor Code; Article 7 of Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (18, 19)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		List of Dangerous Occupations; Article 131(d) of the Labor Code; Article 7 of Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (18-20)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2.1 and 131 of the Labor Code; Article 13 of the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (18, 19)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 131 of the Labor Code; Article 13 of the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (18, 19)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 131 of the Labor Code; Articles 8–11 and 13 of the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking; Articles 322 and 323 of the Penal Code (18, 19, 21)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 131(c) of the Labor Code; Article 6(c) of Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (18, 19)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 41 of Law No. 97-06/AF (22)

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Non-state Compulsory	Yes		Article 6(a) of Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking(19)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12	Article 2 of the Outline Act on the Education System (23)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 1 of the Outline Act on the Education System; Preamble of the Constitution (23, 24)

* No conscription (25)

The Government has drafted a Penal Code and a Code of Criminal Procedures that increase the penalties for human trafficking crimes and has also submitted a proposal to ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons; however, neither of these legislative proposals was enacted during the reporting period.(4, 15, 26, 27)

The Labor Code allows children under the minimum age to perform light work in domestic work or agriculture as long as it does not interfere with education or with physical or moral development.(18) The Labor Code, however, does not specify the conditions under which light work may be conducted or limit the number of hours for light work, as defined by international standards on child labor.(28) In addition, children working in unpaid or non-contractual work do not have the same protections under child labor laws and regulations as do children working in contractual employment.(5, 28)

Children in Comoros are required to attend school only up to age 12. This standard makes children ages 13 through 15 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor as they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work.(29, 30)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws, investigate allegations of child labor, and refer cases of the worst forms of child labor for criminal investigation.(3, 4, 6)
Police Morals and Minors Brigade	Investigate allegations of child abuse, including child trafficking, and refer cases for prosecution.(3, 4)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Prosecute criminal cases, including those related to child trafficking.(3, 15)
National Commission for Human Rights and Freedoms (CNDHL)	Receive complaints of the worst forms of child labor, investigate violations, and refer cases to the MOJ for prosecution.(3, 31)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Comoros did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Unannounced Inspections Permitted	Unknown	Unknown
Unannounced Inspections Conducted	No (10)	No (10)

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Unknown	Unknown

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) employed four labor inspectors: two in Grand Comore, one for Anjouan, and one for Mohéli.⁽³⁾ The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Comoros's workforce, which includes over 245,000 workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Comoros should employ about 6 inspectors.^(10, 32-34) Reports indicate there is a lack of equipment, transportation, and funding available to conduct child labor inspections and legal proceedings.^(3, 6, 15)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Comoros did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	No (10)	No (3)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	N/A
Refresher Courses Provided	No (10)	No (3)
Number of Investigations	0 (35)	0 (3, 15)
Number of Violations Found	0 (35)	0 (3)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (35)	0 (3, 15)
Number of Convictions	0 (35)	0 (3, 15)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Unknown	No (5)

Reports indicate that a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding inhibit criminal law enforcement efforts on the worst forms of child labor.^(1, 4, 5, 15) Police are unable to open an investigation unless the victim self-reports the alleged crime at the police station and can pay the expenses associated with the investigation, including fuel and telephone fees; therefore, investigations are reactive and depend on the victim's wealth and knowledge of the criminal justice system, making investigations of cases involving victimized children unlikely.⁽⁵⁾

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee Against Child Labor	Coordinate government efforts on child labor, including the implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor. Chaired by the Ministry of Labor. ^(12, 13, 28, 36)
Monitoring Group for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate actions against human trafficking and implement the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan. Headed by the Secretary General of the Government and includes representatives from the MOL, MOJ, CNDHL, and police. ^(4, 5, 10) In 2016, met several times to draft a new Action Plan. ⁽⁴⁾

The National Committee Against Child Labor was inactive during the reporting period.⁽³⁷⁾

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan	Includes the goals of enhancing the legal framework to prevent human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and providing effective protection and care for victims.(5, 13, 38) In 2016, the TIP Task Force drafted a new action plan, which was not validated because of the presidential elections.(4, 15, 35)
National Policy for the Protection of Children (2016–2021) [†]	Aims to improve child protection in Comoros; includes components to combat the worst forms of child labor, with a focus on child trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Health.(3)
Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development (2015–2019)	Aims to reduce poverty, promote sustainable development, and increase access to social services. Integrates strategies that target child labor.(4, 26, 39)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2016, the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor remained unfunded.(37)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government of Comoros funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Protection Units [†]	Government program that provides social and reintegration services to vulnerable and sexually abused children. Comprises three government-operated units on the islands of Anjouan, Grande Comore, and Mohéli.(4, 5, 26)
Decent Work Country Program (2015–2019)	Program that aims to guarantee labor rights and extend social protection programs for vulnerable populations, including by improving the operational environment for the elimination of child labor and its worst forms.(11) Overseen by the MOL and supported by the ILO. In 2016, conducted raising awareness campaigns to improve access to decent work for youth.(11, 40)
UNICEF Country Program (2015–2019)	$20,885 UNICEF-funded program that supports the Government's efforts to strengthen children's rights to survival, development, education, protection, and social inclusion.(1, 26). In 2016, continued to fund shelters for victims of the worst forms of child labor operated by the NGO Service d'Ecoute .(3, 12)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Comoros.

Although the Government has in place programs that target child labor, their scope is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in agriculture and domestic work.(15) Comoros also lacks a specific program to assist children exploited by religious instructors.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Comoros (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that the law's light work provisions prescribe the number of hours per week that light work may be undertaken, and specify the conditions under which light work may be conducted, as defined by international standards on child labor.	2012 – 2016
	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions and protections apply to children in unpaid or non-contractual work.	2015 – 2016
Legal Framework	Raise the compulsory education age to 15 to be equivalent to the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Carry out inspections and criminal investigations to enforce compliance with the laws that address child labor.	2009 – 2016
	Increase the resources, training, available transportation and equipment, and number of criminal law investigators and labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws on child labor to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2009 – 2016
	Publish information on the labor inspectorate's funding, the number of criminal investigators, law violations and penalties assessed, and criminal investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to cases of the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2016
	Establish referral mechanisms between labor and criminal law enforcement agencies and social welfare entities.	2014 – 2016
Coordination	Ensure that the National Committee Against Child Labor actively carries out its responsibilities related to the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Fund and implement the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.	2016
Social Programs	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education accessible for all children, including girls, by increasing school infrastructure and teacher availability.	2014 – 2016
	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in fishing, carpentry, construction, and street work to inform policies and programs.	2016
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem, particularly in agriculture and domestic work.	2009 – 2016
	Implement a program to assist children exploited by religious instructors.	2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Democratic Republic of the Congo made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a revision to the Labor Code that raised the minimum age of work to 18 and launched a Human Development Systems Strengthening Project that aims to increase access to birth registration and improve school infrastructure. As part of its Child Soldiers Action Plan, the Joint Technical Working Group established new committees in Tanganyika and North Kivu and validated standard operating procedures for age verification in military recruitment. The Government also worked with the UN to investigate individuals accused of forcibly recruiting children and initiated plans for making reparations to former child soldiers. However, children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced mining of gold, tin ore (cassiterite), tantalum ore (coltan), and tungsten ore (wolframite), and are used in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forcible recruitment or abduction by non-state armed groups. A lack of trained personnel, resources, and poor coordination hampered the Government's efforts to combat child labor, and laws mandating free primary education are not enforced.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the mining of gold, tin ore (cassiterite), tantalum ore (coltan), and tungsten ore (wolframite), and are used in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forcible recruitment or abduction by non-state armed groups.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the DRC.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	35.8
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	77.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	37.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		66.8

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Agriculture	Farming, including tilling fields, planting seeds, watering crops, carrying heavy loads,† weeding, harvesting crops, and use of chemical products and machetes in the production of coffee, peanuts, tea, quinine, eggplant, manioc, sweet potatoes, leafy greens, corn, beans, rice, cassava leaves, and other vegetables (3, 8-13)
	Fishing, including maintaining fishing tools, baiting hooks, transporting heavy loads, the use of explosives, and salting, smoking, and packaging fish (8, 9, 13)
	Herding and raising livestock such as chickens, goats, and pigs, including cleaning cages or stalls, disposing of waste, and feeding animals (9, 12-14)

	Use in illicit activities, including for spying, stealing, carrying stolen goods, smuggling minerals, and distributing drugs (4, 18, 32-34)
	Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict, including as bodyguards, messengers, porters, domestic workers, spies, check point monitors, looters, and concubines (4, 29, 35-39)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2016, members of indigenous and foreign non-state armed groups—including the Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA), Forces Démocratiques de Libération du Rwanda (FDLR), Nduma Défense du Congo (NDC/Cheka), Force de Résistance Patriotique en Ituri (FRPI), Mayi Mayi groups, and other armed groups—continued to abduct and recruit children to be used in their units.(37-41) Some victims of child trafficking were recruited at refugee camps in neighboring countries and transported through DRC to participate in armed conflict.(27) Child labor in artisanal mining is prevalent in the provinces of Katanga, Eastern and Western Kasai, North and South Kivu, and Orientale, and the commercial sexual exploitation of girls and sometimes boys is prevalent around mining sites.(2, 4, 14) However, a comprehensive, standalone, child labor survey has never been conducted in the DRC.(13, 42)

Although the Government has mandated free primary education, these laws were not implemented throughout the country and some families are required to pay for school uniforms, tuition, and additional fees, which may be prohibitive.(2, 8, 9, 13, 19, 21, 25, 40, 43-45) Many schools throughout the DRC are oversubscribed, understaffed, poorly maintained, or require students to travel long distances.(2, 8, 12, 45, 46) Schools in eastern DRC may be closed due to the conflict, or occupied by armed groups or internally displaced persons.(5, 8, 29, 37, 39-41, 47) There are also reports that children may be forcibly recruited or sexually abused on their way to school or subject to physical or sexual abuse at school.(27, 29, 40, 47) Children may sometimes join armed groups or engage in child labor in artisanal mines hoping to earn money, and internally displaced children often have difficulty accessing education.(2, 9, 15, 17, 19, 22, 46, 48) Low rates of birth registration leave many children vulnerable to child labor.(9, 40, 46, 49)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The DRC has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the DRC's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

‡ Age calculated based on available information (43, 50, 60)

In July 2016, the Government adopted revisions to the Labor Code that raise the minimum working age to 18, prohibit children from working at night in either public or private enterprises, and permit children ages 16 and 17 to engage in light work as determined by the Ministry of Labor. However, the fine for violating the minimum age law is $16, and penalties for forced child labor are not commensurate with penalties imposed for other worst forms of child labor.(50, 52) Other laws awaiting adoption include a law to establish specialized mixed chambers to try war crimes, including the recruitment and use of child soldiers; the implementing decree for the Child Protection Code; and a Mining Code revision that punishes forced child labor on mining sites.(20, 29, 31, 61-63)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Labor, and Social Welfare (MOL)	Investigate cases related to child labor, including its worst forms.(9, 40) Refer cases of child labor to the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ) for prosecution.(64)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ)	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor.(9, 27) Oversee four juvenile courts in Kinshasa, 18 UNICEF-funded child protection courts throughout the country, and assist the International Criminal Court in conducting investigations and prosecutions against individuals who allegedly used children in armed conflict.(64, 65)
Ministry of the Interior	Through its Congolese National Police Unit for the Protection of Women and Children, enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(62, 66) Through its Police for Child Protection and Combating Sexual Violence (PEVS), combat conflict-related sexual and gender-based violence against women and children, protect children and women who are victims of physical abuse, and ensure demobilization of children. MOI refers all cases to the MOJ for prosecution, and assists victims in seeking justice.(62, 65, 67-70)
Ministry of Gender, Children, and Family (MOGCF)	Oversee and investigate cases related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(9, 27)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Solidarity, and Humanitarian Action (MINASA)	Monitor humanitarian programs and coordinate with UNICEF, USAID, and NGOs to provide social services to vulnerable groups, including street children, trafficking victims, and child soldiers.(27, 71, 72)
Ministry of Defense (MOD)	Investigate and use military courts to prosecute military officials suspected of recruitment and use of child soldiers or forced labor of civilians. Lead the implementation of the Child Soldiers Action Plan.(27, 49) Through its Department of Child Protection (DISPE), coordinate actions with UNICEF.(66)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in the DRC took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of DRC's workforce, which includes over 3.1 million workers.(74) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, the DRC should employ 777 inspectors.(74-76) The Inspector General has requested the permission and resources to hire new inspectors for the past three years without success, and acknowledges inadequate human and financial resources hinder the inspectorate's ability to conduct investigations throughout the country.(3, 4, 21, 70) In addition, research found conflicting information on whether inspectors are authorized to assess penalties.(3, 51)

By the end of 2016, Government officials, in cooperation with IOM and USAID, validated over 200 artisanal mines as free of child labor.(27, 65, 77, 78) However, labor laws are rarely enforced in the informal and artisanal mining sectors, where the majority of child labor is found.(9, 40) Although child labor violations may be reported to the Children's Court, research indicates this mechanism is not effective.(3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in the DRC took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, the Presidential Adviser on Sexual Violence and Child Recruitment began exploring a data collection project on forced prostitution and sexual slavery, including the use of girls as concubines.(27, 65) During the reporting period, the Government also significantly increased its prosecution efforts related to the worst forms of child labor, worked with the UN to investigate individuals accused of forcibly recruiting children, and initiated plans for making reparations to former child soldiers formerly associated with Thomas Lubanga, who was convicted in March 2012 for the forced recruitment of children in armed conflict.(27, 40, 79, 80) In addition, the Armed Forces of the DRC (FARDC) engaged in military operations against armed groups that used child soldiers, which led to the surrender and escape of some children.(27) Research indicates that some law enforcement officials and members of the judiciary may lack the knowledge, capacity, or resources to investigate and prosecute child labor violations effectively.(27, 49) The justice system also lacks independence, funding, capacity, and legitimacy, which weakens its ability to enforce laws and prosecute violators.(27, 31, 35, 81)

There were reports that some children associated with armed groups were detained, held in cells with adults, interrogated, and beaten, despite the enactment of a 2012 directive that requires that all children separated from armed groups be immediately transferred to the UN.(4, 31, 40, 41, 48, 82-85) The UN Organization Stabilization Mission in the DRC (MONUSCO) and FARDC officials conducted a joint mission to a military prison in March 2016 and identified 22 children who had been unlawfully detained; they began working with the Government to have the children transferred.(83)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Commission (UEPN-DDR)	Led by the MOD, coordinate the identification, verification, and release of child soldiers by collaborating with the UN Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO), UNICEF, and NGOs.(27, 89) Through its Children Associated with Armed Forces and Armed Groups unit, coordinate the identification, verification, and release of children associated with armed groups and refer them to social service providers for family reunification and reinsertion.(3, 89)
Joint Technical Working Group (JTWG)	Coordinate implementation of the Child Soldiers Action Plan. Led by the MOGCF and includes representatives from four other ministries and the UN.(49) Through its Provincial JTWGs, coordinate implementation at the provincial level in North Kivu, South Kivu, and Orientale provinces.(49, 81) In 2016, met regularly and established a new Provincial JTWG in Tanganyika and a sub-regional JTWG in North Kivu.(27)
Working Group on Trafficking in Persons*	Analyzes human trafficking trends and discuss strategies to lobby for comprehensive trafficking legislation and an interministerial coordinating body. Led by IOM and the U.S. Embassy; includes representatives from three ministries, civil society organizations, and other government officials.(27)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

Rapid decentralization left some new leadership positions vacant without adequately trained staff to fill them. A lack of resources, trained personnel, poor coordination among relevant ministries, and competing priorities have impeded the Government's efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.(27, 49) Although the UEPN-DDR is meant to take the lead on child soldier issues, research indicates this did not always happen in practice.(27) The National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor did not carry out any activities in 2016 due to a lack of funding and a proposed committee to combat human trafficking remains stalled for the third consecutive year.(3, 27)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor†

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NAP) (2012–2020)	Developed by the NCCL in consultation with UNICEF to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the DRC by 2020.(8, 90, 91) Promotes the enforcement of legislation on the worst forms of child labor; awareness raising and empowering communities to stop child labor practices; universal primary education; prevention and reintegration services; improved monitoring and evaluation efforts; and improved coordination of stakeholders.(8, 91)
Action Plan to End the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers (Child Soldiers Action Plan)	UN-backed plan which aims to prevent and end the use of children in armed forces, provide support and reintegration services, pursue accountability for perpetrators, and create a partnership framework for the UN and the Government.(92, 93) In April 2016, the JTWG, UNICEF, and MONUSCO validated standard operating procedures for age verification to help the Armed Forces of the DRC (FARDC) avoid underage recruitment, which successfully prevented over 191 children from enlisting.(27, 38) In October 2016, hosted a conference with civil society and the military to evaluate implementation of the Child Soldiers Action Plan and create a roadmap for continued work through 2019.(27)
UEPN-DDR's National Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Plan (PNDDR) DDR III	Aims to significantly improve the security situation in Eastern Congo by eradicating armed groups and providing rehabilitation and reintegration services to 12,205 demobilized combatants, including children.(65, 94-96) Implemented with the support of the UN and international partners in support of the 2013 Framework Agreement for Peace, Security and Cooperation for the DRC and the Great Lakes Region.(95, 97, 98) Includes a 2013 directive that requires the immediate transfer of all demobilized or detained children to humanitarian organizations.(49) In 2016, cooperated fully and collaborated closely with the UN to identify and remove children from the FARDC, allowing frequent and often unfettered access to its bases.(27, 49, 85)
National Action Plan Against Sexual Violence in Conflict	MOGCF policy in support of UN resolution 1325 on women, peace, and security, that aims to combat sexual violence against girls as part of armed conflict and ensure prosecution of perpetrators.(99)

†The Government had other policies that may have an impact on child labor.(18, 31, 66, 100)

The Government has not integrated child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the UN Development Assistance Framework (2013–2017). The National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor has been awaiting approval from the National Labor Council since 2015.(65)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
World Bank-funded Projects	Projects in support of re-establishing peace and stability. Includes Reinsertion and Reintegration Project (2015–2019) , a $21 million project that aims to assist with social reintegration for the child combatants identified as part of DDR III; Support to Basic Education Program (2013–2017) , a $100 million project implemented by the Ministry of Primary, Secondary, and Vocational Education that aims to increase access to education; and the Human Development Systems Strengthening (2016–2020) ,* a $41.1 million project which aims to increase birth registration and improve school infrastructure through an information management system.(46, 98, 101-105)
Program to Support Vulnerable Children	$4 million Government of Japan-funded program that aims to provide education, vocational training, reintegration kits, and school feeding programs to 13,000 children and construct a training center for youth in North Kivu Province.(106)
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2016)	$44.5 million ILO-implemented program to contribute to the consolidation of peace and reconstruction in the DRC by promoting social protection and decent work for youth, as well as ensuring that child protection agencies use the NAP.(107)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

The scope of existing child DDR programs is insufficient and tensions with FLDR ex-combatants impede successful implementation. In addition, the process is slow, collaboration between partners is weak, and reintegrated child soldiers remain vulnerable to re-recruitment and stigmatization.(27, 31, 33, 36, 48, 85, 108) Outreach campaigns targeting girls resulted in an increase in girls separated from armed groups, but more attention still needs to be given to girls in the DDR process; girls make up an estimated 30 to 40 percent of children associated with armed groups, but only 8 percent have been demobilized.(32, 42, 48, 82, 108-110) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Program to Support Vulnerable Children or the Decent Work Country Program (2013–2016) during the reporting period.(66) Research also indicates the Government needs to strengthen its efforts to assist street children, integrate child labor issues into existing agricultural programs, and implement programs specifically designed to assist children engaged in mining, forced labor in domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation.(29-31)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the DRC (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish by law a compulsory education age that extends to the minimum age for employment.	2013 – 2016
	Raise penalties for the use of underage child labor and forced or compulsory labor to be commensurate with other serious crimes.	2013 – 2016
	Issue appropriate decrees to ensure that enacted laws are implemented.	2013 – 2016
Enforcement	Implement existing laws, including those that provide for free education and require demobilized children to be handed over to child protection actors for social services and reintegration assistance. Cease the practice of beating children and/or detaining children with adults for engaging in the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2016
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors in accordance with the ILO recommendation and ensure that they receive adequate resources and training to carry out their duties throughout the country.	2011 – 2016
	Ensure that judges, prosecutors, and investigators are knowledgeable about child labor issues and can investigate and prosecute violations through the judiciary.	2011 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing inspectors to assess penalties, conducting routine and unannounced inspections, including in the informal sector, and ensuring a functional complaint mechanism.	2015 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Publish information on enforcement data, including the number of prosecutions initiated.	2009 – 2016
Coordination	Improve coordination among relevant ministries and ensure that they receive adequate resources to combat the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that UEPN-DDR is able to coordinate the Government's DDR III program as intended.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the NCCL receives a dedicated budget and is able to carry out activities in support of its mandate.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure action plans to combat the worst forms of child labor have adequate resources and are fully implemented.	2011 – 2016
Social Programs	Conduct a standalone child labor survey.	2013 – 2016
	Improve access to education for all children, including those who are internally displaced, by eliminating school-related fees, regulating classroom size, training additional teachers, building additional schools, and ensuring that schools are safe and students are not subjected to sexual abuse while at school.	2012 – 2016
	Ensure that all children are registered at birth or have identification documents.	2012 – 2016
	Expand efforts to address the needs of demobilized children and integrate stigmatization, gender, and re-recruitment concerns into programs to reintegrate such children.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure existing social programs are implemented as intended and establish or expand efforts to address exploitative child labor.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
75. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
76. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Congo, Republic of the

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Republic of the Congo made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued to implement a social safety net program that provided cash transfers to 3,455 households and rescued 13 children from forced domestic work that resulted from human trafficking. However, children in the Republic of the Congo perform dangerous tasks in domestic work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has yet to ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons and there is no mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor at the national level, including all its worst forms. The Government failed to allocate funding to the Ministry of Labor and Social Security or the Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and Solidarity to combat child labor and child trafficking. In addition, information on children's work is extremely limited because there has never been a national child labor survey or similar research conducted in the Republic of the Congo.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Republic of the Congo (ROC) perform dangerous tasks in domestic work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in ROC.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	27.9 (286,137)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	90.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	29.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		74.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Deuxième Enquête Démographique et de Santé du Congo (EDSC-II) Survey, 2011–2012.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including in the production of manioc, peanuts, corn, plantains, potatoes, and sugar cane (2-4, 8-10) Catching and smoking fish (2)
Industry	Working in stone quarries, including breaking stones (2, 4, 8)
Services	Domestic work (4, 11) Working in transportation as bus touts (4, 8) Market vending and carrying heavy loads (2, 4, 8)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3, 8, 12-14)
	Forced labor in farming, including in the production of cocoa, and in domestic work, working in stone quarries, fishing, and market vending, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 5, 8, 15)
	Forced labor of indigenous Baka children in farming, including in the production of sugar cane, and in fishing, hunting, and domestic work (8, 16)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children from West African countries, indigenous communities, and the Democratic Republic of the Congo are trafficked to larger cities within ROC such as Pointe-Noire and Brazzaville for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 3, 8, 17, 18) Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to forced labor in agriculture.(1-3, 8, 19) Information on children's work is limited because there has never been a national child labor survey or similar research conducted in ROC.(20)

The Constitution stipulates that education is free until age 16; however, some parents are required to pay for books, uniforms, and school fees, which may limit access to education for some children.(2, 19, 21) Over-enrollment, poor administration of the education sector, a lack of teachers, and sexual abuse in schools also pose barriers to education for some children.(2, 19, 21, 22) Indigenous children throughout the country experienced discrimination, linguistic barriers, prohibitive school fees, and long distances to schools.(2, 19, 23) Some children in the Pool region had difficulty accessing education during the reporting period due to political instability.(24-29) There was no evidence that the Government restricted access to post-primary education for refugees. The UNHCR provides the majority of education for refugee children but reduced its support during the reporting period due to budget constraints, resulting in a 21 percent decrease in enrollment rates.(19)

During the reporting period, the Government was preoccupied with the presidential election, the resulting unrest, and the change in administration, which may have impeded its efforts to combat child labor.(30-32)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Republic of the Congo has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in ROC's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

* No conscription (20, 38, 39)

A draft revision to the Hazardous Work List of 1953 has been pending since 2012, and a draft anti-trafficking law that includes more severe penalties for offenders has been awaiting adoption by the Parliamentary Committee since 2013.(18, 28, 32, 40-42) Research indicates that existing laws regarding child trafficking may not be specific enough to facilitate enforcement, and existing laws allow children under age 18 to be voluntarily recruited into the state armed group with the child and parents' consent.(8, 34) In addition, existing penalties for the worst forms of child labor may not be severe enough to serve as deterrents because they are not commensurate with penalties for other serious crimes.(1, 2, 34)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws and monitor officially registered businesses.(2, 3, 19)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ)	Enforce criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor.(2, 3) Dedicate two judges—one judge in Brazzaville and one in Pointe-Noire—to child protection cases.(11)
Ministry of the Interior's National Police	Enforce criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor and conduct initial investigations in cases of forced labor, human trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities.(2, 3)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and Solidarity (MSA)	Promote the rights of vulnerable groups and contribute to anti-trafficking efforts by identifying and providing social welfare assistance to victims.(2, 19) Through its Task Force, lead efforts to combat human trafficking in Pointe-Noire, designate foster families to receive victims, and assist in repatriating or reintegrating victims.(2, 3)
Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation	Coordinate with the MSA in repatriating victims of child trafficking and monitor bilateral and multilateral agreements with neighboring countries to combat human trafficking.(3)

Due to budget constraints, the Government has not disbursed funding to the MSA for human trafficking-related programming for more than two years, despite its inclusion in the budget.(2, 32)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in the Republic of the Congo took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of the Republic of the Congo's workforce, which includes more than 1.8 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, ROC should employ roughly 120 labor inspectors. (44-46) Training opportunities for labor inspectors are very limited, and the Government did not allocate any funding to the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOL) in 2016 for inspections targeting child labor.(2, 9) Due to a lack of staff, labor inspections are typically limited to the formal sector, leaving children in the informal sector without legal protection. Penalties were also rarely applied for violations of the Labor Code.(2, 47) In addition, inspectors do not have access to government vehicles and rely on the employers being inspected to provide transportation.(2, 8, 47) Research was unable to find information on the complaint mechanism or the reciprocal referral mechanism.(28)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Republic of the Congo took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

The MSA, the MOL, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ), and the National Police work together to enforce criminal laws against child trafficking; however, their efforts were limited to Brazzaville and Pointe-Noire, and the number of investigations conducted was insufficient given the scope of the problem.(2, 32) In 2016, only an NGO identified victims of child trafficking, which paid a fee of $16 to the local police for assistance in rescuing each victim.(32) The MSA and the MOJ reported difficulties in prosecuting offenders due to a weak judicial system and criminal law enforcement officials' and judges' unequal knowledge of anti-trafficking legislation and the Child Protection Code.(1, 3, 8, 32) In addition, the two judges dedicated to child protection have not tried any cases since their appointments in 2013.(2, 32) The Police Commander in Pointe-Noire noted that additional training is needed, particularly for lower-level police officers who may be illiterate or have received minimal training.(32)

To comply with the standards of the Palermo Protocol, the Government mandates that all human trafficking cases be prosecuted as felonies, rather than as delicts, which is a more severe violation than a misdemeanor but less severe than a felony. Felony courts meet infrequently and irregularly, due to a lack of resources, a large backlog of cases dating over five years, and complex prosecution requirements.(1, 32) Rather than prosecuting child trafficking cases, the MSA Task Force may summon those accused of child trafficking.(2, 8, 28, 32) Although these summons often resulted in the accused trafficker paying for the victim's repatriation and reintegration kit, they did not deter the perpetrators from trafficking.(1, 2, 16)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a Task Force to combat child trafficking in Pointe-Noire, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MSA Task Force	Function as the Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire to coordinate all efforts to combat child trafficking in Pointe-Noire with UNICEF's support. Composed of government representatives and civil society organizations.(3, 11, 16) Prevent, identify, and rescue children of West African origin from situations of child trafficking, including by raising public awareness and by repatriating or reintegrating victims of child trafficking.(11, 16)

The MSA Task Force met three times in 2016 to facilitate reparation payments from alleged traffickers to victims but did not carry out any other activities due to a lack of funding.(32) The Task Force continues to rely heavily on a local NGO to initiate investigations, sometimes with police assistance in exchange for a fee paid by the NGO. In addition, the MOJ and the MSA have expressed concern that the MSA Task Force does not include a representative from the MOJ.(16) Weak inter-ministerial coordination, reduced funding, and poor recordkeeping continue to challenge the Government's ability to coordinate its efforts to address human trafficking.(1-3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (2014–2017)	Aims to establish a National Commission to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, develop systems for monitoring and evaluation, strengthen the legal framework, and provide social services to victims of human trafficking.(49) Includes public awareness campaigns, training for law enforcement officials, and improvement of enforcement activities related to child trafficking.(43)

Although the Government has adopted the National Action Plan to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, the Government failed to allocate resources to the National Action Plan, and research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.(1, 16) Research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.(3, 50) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the National Development Plan (2012–2016), the Education Sector Policy (2015–2025), and the Cost Free Identity Document Policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Safety Net Program (LISUNGI) (2014–2018) [†]	$17 million Government and World Bank-funded project that grants improved access to health and education services to poor families in Brazzaville, Cuvette, and Pointe-Noire.(2, 8, 51) Includes a pilot cash transfer program to cover 5,000 households, and an evaluation system to measure the change in project participants' situations.(8, 51-53) In 2016, provided regular cash transfers to 3,455 households.(54) By the end of 2016, funding commitment from the Government was not met.(2)
School Feeding Programs [‡]	Programs throughout the country that aim to reduce dropout rates and encourage school attendance.(2) The Government and U.S. Government's McGovern-Dole International's Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program, implemented by the International Partnership for Human Development, provides school lunches to approximately 150,000 students.(2, 9) The WFP's program targets about 100,000 students annually. In 2016, these two programs provided assistance to 246,000 students.(11, 55)
Observe, Reflect, Act (ORA) Schools [†]	Ministry of Education program supported by UNICEF, the EU, and the WFP to improve access to education for indigenous children through a 2- or 3-year preparatory program.(18, 23, 56) Identifies children who should be added to the civil register, provides school supplies to students, and raises awareness among indigenous families about the importance of education.(18, 57)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of the Republic of the Congo.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(2, 3, 8, 11, 14, 16)

Although the Government has implemented programs to assist victims of child trafficking, these efforts are focused on West African victims. Research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, such as forced labor in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 32) However, the Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement existing programs during the reporting period, and current funding levels are not sufficient to address the scope of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Republic of the Congo.(11, 43)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Republic of the Congo (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the minimum age for voluntary military service is no lower than age 16, and that safeguards exist to protect children ages 16 and 17 in the armed forces.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that legislation is specific enough to facilitate enforcement and that penalties for violating laws regarding the worst forms of child labor are severe enough to serve as deterrents.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors and investigators to meet the ILO recommendation and ensure that they receive adequate resources to effectively enforce labor laws throughout the country.	2010 – 2016
	Publish information related to enforcement statistics, including the funding level for the labor inspectorate, the number and type of labor inspections conducted, violations found, and penalties imposed and collected for child labor violations.	2014 – 2016
	Institutionalize training for labor inspectors, investigators, and law enforcement, including at the beginning of their employment and through periodic refresher courses.	2014 – 2016

Congo, Republic of the

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by conducting a sufficient number of routine and unannounced inspections to enforce labor laws throughout the country, including in the informal sector, and ensure that penalties are applied in accordance with the law.	2015 – 2016
	Remove barriers to enforcement and prosecution by strengthening the judicial system, conducting an adequate number of investigations to protect victims throughout the country, training prosecutors on existing laws, and allocating resources to the judges responsible for child protection cases.	2014 – 2016
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including all its worst forms.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that coordinating bodies include all relevant ministries and receive adequate resources to function as intended.	2014 – 2016
	Improve inter-ministerial coordination and recordkeeping to effectively combat human trafficking issues.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure that policies receive adequate funding to carry out activities as intended.	2016
	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant forms of child labor, such as domestic work and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.	2013 – 2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2009 – 2016
Social Programs	Conduct a national child labor survey or similar research to determine the activities carried out by working children to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2016
	Improve access to education for all children regardless of status or ethnicity by eliminating all school-related fees, regulating classroom size, building additional schools, training additional teachers, and ensuring that students are not subject to sexual abuse.	2009 – 2016
	Institute programs to address the worst forms of child labor in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that social programs are implemented as intended.	2016
	Increase funding levels to address the full scope of child labor, including its worst forms, and ensure the sustainability of social programs.	2012 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
 45. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "least developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Costa Rica made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Institute of Statistics and Census conducted the National Household Survey, which contained a child labor module. The Ministry of Labor and Social Security launched a scholarship program with the Joint Institute for Social Aid to cover educational expenses for children engaged in child labor and signed agreements with El Salvador and Guatemala to work together to eradicate child labor in their countries. However, children in Costa Rica perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Existing social programs are insufficient to reach all child laborers, and resources for the Government's child labor law enforcement agencies are inadequate.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Costa Rica perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Costa Rica.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.4 (34,494)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	4.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		99.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(13)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4 (MICS 4), 2011.(14)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting bananas and pineapple (15)
	Picking coffee (2-4, 15-18)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Research indicates that Ngäbe Buglé indigenous children in Costa Rica travel with their families to coffee farms. Coffee pickers are paid by the number of baskets they fill, and children reportedly participate in the coffee harvest with their families by collecting beans from the ground and from shorter plants.(3, 16-18) Access to education remains a challenge for children from indigenous and afro-descendant communities.(23, 24) Ngäbe Buglé children migrating with their families to coffee farms may face additional challenges accessing social services due to long distances to service providers, language barriers, and difficulties obtaining required documents from government institutions.(3, 16-18)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Costa Rica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Costa Rica's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS)	Investigate reports of child labor, including hazardous and forced child labor, and enforce child labor laws.(11, 19) Protect adolescent labor rights by conducting school and workplace visits, providing referrals to government services, and writing socio-labor studies and technical reports.(20, 25)
Prosecutor's Office	Enforce criminal laws protecting children, including laws prohibiting forced child labor, human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. Administer the following investigative and prosecutorial units: the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit against Trafficking in Persons, the Organized Crime Unit, the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit for Gender Issues, and the Juvenile Justice Unit.(19)
Judicial Investigative Police	Conduct investigations of child labor violations, including child trafficking, child commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.(11, 19)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Costa Rica took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2016, enforcement of child labor laws remained a challenge due to the lack of resources for inspections, including for transportation.⁽⁴⁾ The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Costa Rica's workforce, which includes over 2 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Costa Rica should employ roughly 153 inspectors.⁽⁴²⁻⁴⁴⁾ The Ministry of Labor and Social Security reported it had insufficient personnel and transportation resources to enforce labor laws. Government monitoring and enforcement of child labor laws was particularly limited in the informal sector, where much of child labor, especially hazardous adolescent work, occurs.^(2, 4, 10, 39, 45) Informal work is more common in agriculture than in other sectors in Costa Rica.⁽²⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Costa Rica took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

The Judicial Investigative Police reported an inadequate number of investigators, resulting in the slow processing of trafficking cases.⁽⁴⁾

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MTSS Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA)	Coordinate government policies and programs to combat child labor. ^(2, 5, 6) Monitor implementation of the Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in Costa Rica. Provide technical assistance to government ministries and design social programs to combat child labor. ⁽⁴⁸⁾ Oversee the Inter-Institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors. ^(6, 49) In 2016, OATIA provided child labor training and consultation services to 2,464 individuals, including through partnerships with the Ministries of Agriculture and Culture, and signed a cooperative agreement with the Social Welfare Institute (IMAS) on the eradication of child labor. ^(37, 40)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Elimination of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Work	Develop and promote policy and program initiatives focused on eliminating child labor and regulating adolescent work. Overseen by OATIA and includes a technical secretariat that comprises representatives from various sectors.(5, 6)
National Child Welfare Agency (PANI)	Ensure child labor victims receive interagency social services, including temporary shelter, legal advice, and victim counseling. Responsible for reintegrating child labor victims into the educational system.(11, 25)
National Commission to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONACOES)	Address child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of minors.(11, 19) Report to the National Council of Childhood and Adolescence with legal standing under PANI, the body's lead agency.(19, 37)

The Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA) indicated that staff turnover and weak implementation of relevant protocols limit the Government's ability to address child labor, noting staff need a national child labor database to strengthen coordination and additional training on applying manuals and protocols.(5)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
2010–2020 Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in Costa Rica	Aims to eradicate all forms of child labor in Costa Rica by 2020 by strengthening anti-poverty, health, and educational programs and policies, and by raising awareness on child labor.(50–52)
Inter-Institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors	Outlines service provision for child laborers through collaboration between the MTSS, PANI, the Ministry of Education, and IMAS, as well as their regional and local agencies and the private sector.(2, 5, 53)
National Plan for Development (2015–2018)	Incorporates efforts to decrease child labor into national education and poverty reduction strategies.(21, 54)
Bridge to Development (2015–2018)	Aims to reduce poverty and eliminate vulnerability, including child labor, by providing social services to families in poor communities.(5, 10, 52, 55)

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor of Costa Rica signed agreements with Guatemala and El Salvador to work together to eradicate child labor in their countries, including through a knowledge exchange on Costa Rica's implementation of a business network against child labor and El Salvador's child labor monitoring and evaluation system.(37, 40, 56) The Coordination Agreement on Labor Migration between the Ministries of Labor of Costa Rica and Panama aims to strengthen dialog on labor migration between the two countries, with an emphasis on indigenous Panamanian migrant workers and their families; however, child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been fully integrated into this policy.(57)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
2016 National Household Survey†	National Institute of Statistics and Census survey, with child labor module, conducted in July 2016.(3, 4, 58)

Face of Justice Shelter†	NGO-run shelter for child victims of human trafficking that provides PANI-funded monthly subsidies to victims and care from full-time staff, including a trauma psychologist and health practitioner.(12)

Program	Description
Houses of Joy (Casas de la Alegría)†	Public-private alliance that provides culturally sensitive daycare and meals to indigenous children whose parents work on coffee farms in Coto Brus and Los Santos. Aims to promote social inclusion and developmental opportunities for indigenous children and provide an alternative to child labor in the coffee harvest.(3, 10, 16, 59-61) IMAS funds meals, caregiver salaries, and training; farm owners provide the land and classroom, with financial contributions from UNICEF for building and teaching materials. Began as a pilot in 2014 with 6 centers serving 175 children; by 2016, expanded to 17 centers serving 600 children.(10, 16, 37, 46, 59-61)
Let's Get Ahead Program (Avancemos)†	IMAS program that provides monthly conditional cash transfers to low-income families to keep children in school and out of exploitative work.(2, 11, 19, 62, 63) In 2016, launched a new scholarship program by the MTSS and IMAS that provides monthly education subsidies to families with children engaged in child labor.(64, 65)
Age Classroom (Aula Edad)†	Ministry of Education program that targets children and adolescents who have never been to school or who dropped out, adolescent mothers and workers, and foreign migrant adolescents to help them complete primary school.(10, 66, 67)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Costa Rica.

While the Government continues to support initiatives to eradicate child labor, current programming does not reach all children who are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation or in dangerous labor in agriculture. According to OATIA, existing social programs were insufficient to fully address the problem of child labor, including its worst forms, and additional staff and funding are required to assist children engaged in child labor and their families.(5, 10)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Costa Rica (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors trained and responsible for providing enforcement of child labor laws to meet international standards.	2015 – 2016
	Increase child labor inspections in the informal sector, particularly in agriculture.	2015 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by permitting inspectors to determine and assess penalties for child labor violations.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure adequate funding for human resources, transportation, and training for labor and criminal law enforcement agencies.	2013 – 2016
Coordination	Strengthen coordination mechanisms by providing additional training on protocols.	2015 – 2016
	Increase coordination and information sharing between government agencies responsible for monitoring and evaluating child labor cases.	2015 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Coordination Agreement on Labor Migration between the Ministries of Labor of Costa Rica and Panama.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education accessible for all children, including children from indigenous and afro-descendant communities, by expanding existing social programs to strengthen school retention and completion for children and adolescents, particularly at the secondary level.	2015 – 2016
	Increase access to education and other services for indigenous children in coffee growing areas to ensure they have alternatives to participating in the coffee harvest.	2015 – 2016
	Expand programs to reach more children working in agriculture and being subjected to commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2016
	Increase the financial and human resources dedicated to key social programs to address child labor.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
44. UN. World economic situation and prospects 2012 statistical annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Côte d'Ivoire made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government enacted the Anti-Trafficking Law that carries more stringent penalties for offenders and adopted a Constitution that explicitly prohibits child labor and enshrines the right to education for both boys and girls. The National School of Administration integrated new modules on child labor into the curriculum for labor inspectors. With the assistance of UNICEF, the Government published a report on the expansion of its child labor monitoring system, SOSTECI, that included child labor prevalence data in three departments. In addition, the First Ladies of Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire signed a joint declaration and cooperative agreement against cross-border human trafficking. The Government also launched a Ten-Year Education Training Plan and entered a partnership agreement with the International Cocoa Initiative to expand SOSTECI and improve school infrastructure in support of the National Action Plan for the Fight Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor. However, children in Côte d'Ivoire engage in the worst forms of child labor in the harvesting of cocoa and coffee, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Gaps remain in enforcement efforts, and the labor inspectorate is not authorized to assess penalties.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Côte d'Ivoire engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of cocoa and coffee, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-6) According to a report by Tulane University published in 2015 that assessed data collected during the 2013–2014 harvest season, the cocoa sector employed an estimated 1,203,473 child laborers ages 5 to 17, of which 95.9 percent were engaged in hazardous work in cocoa production.(7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Côte d'Ivoire.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	31.5 (1,682,754)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	63.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	21.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		63.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(8)

Source for all other data: Enquête Démographique et de Santé en Côte d'Ivoire (EDSCI-III) Survey, 2011–2012.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cocoa, including burning [†] and clearing fields; cutting down trees [†] to expand cocoa plantations; spraying pesticides; [†] harvesting, drying, and fermenting cocoa beans; using sharp tools to break pods; and transporting heavy loads of cocoa pods and water (3-7, 10-12)
	Production of cereals, pineapple, bananas, and coffee, including applying chemical fertilizers, [†] spraying pesticides, [†] cutting down trees, [†] and burning [†] and clearing fields (3, 4, 13, 14)
	Production of palm oil, honey, [†] and rubber (4, 6, 15)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Fishing, including deep sea diving;† repairing and hauling nets; cleaning, salting, drying, descaling, and selling fish (6, 14-16)
	Livestock raising and slaughtering† (15, 16)
	Production of charcoal† (3, 6, 15)
Industry	Mining, including crushing† and transporting stones,† blasting rocks,† working underground,† mining for diamonds, and extracting gold with chemicals† (6, 10, 13-15, 17-20)
	Manufacturing, including repairing,† lubricating,† or cleaning machinery while in operation† (14, 15)
	Construction, activities unknown (14)
Services	Domestic work† (10, 13, 14, 21, 22)
	Working in transportation, carrying goods,† and washing cars (3, 6, 10, 13, 14)
	Street vending and commerce (3, 10, 13, 14)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in mining, carpentry, construction, domestic work, street vending, restaurants, and agriculture, including in the production of cocoa, coffee, pineapple, cotton, and rubber, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2-4, 11, 16, 22-25)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 22, 26)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (10)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (18, 26, 27)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are subjected to human trafficking within Côte d'Ivoire and are taken from Côte d'Ivoire for exploitation in other countries. Increasingly, girls from Côte d'Ivoire are subjected to human trafficking in the Middle East for forced labor in domestic work or brought from Nigeria to Côte d'Ivoire for commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 26, 28) Children from neighboring West African countries are brought to Côte d'Ivoire primarily for forced labor in agriculture, especially in cocoa production, and for forced begging and work in mining, construction, domestic work, street vending, and commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 3, 5, 12, 21, 26) A study by the ILO and the Government of Côte d'Ivoire in 2011 estimated that 55 percent of children subject to forced labor in rural areas work in agriculture.(3)

Although the Law on Education provides for free education, students are often required to pay for textbooks, school fees, or uniforms, which may be prohibitive to some families.(16, 29-34) An estimated 2 million children ages 6 to 15 are not enrolled in school in Côte d'Ivoire, with the highest rates of non-enrollment found in the North, Northwest, and West regions.(34) The Government constructed 19,249 new classrooms between 2011 and 2016, but a lack of teachers, transportation, sanitation facilities, and schools, particularly in rural areas, remains. Research also suggests that some students are physically and sexually abused at school, which may deter some students from attending school.(10, 16, 20, 30, 34-43)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Côte d'Ivoire has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Côte d'Ivoire's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 23.2 of the Labor Code; Article 16 of the Constitution (44, 45)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 2 of the Hazardous Work List (46)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 3–12 of the Hazardous Work List; Articles 6 and 19 of the Prohibition of Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor Law (9, 46)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 5 of the Constitution; Articles 7, 11–14, 20–23, and 26 of the Prohibition of Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor Law; Article 3 of the Labor Code (9, 44, 45)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 5 of the Constitution; Articles 11, 12, 20–22, and 26 of the Prohibition of Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor Law; Article 370 of the Penal Code; Articles 4.4 and 6 of the Anti-Trafficking Law (9, 45, 47, 48)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 8, 9, 15, and 24–29 of the Prohibition of Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor Law; Articles 4.4 and 6 of the Anti-Trafficking Law (9, 48)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 4 and 30 of the Prohibition of Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor Law (9)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes*	18	Article 82 of the Armed Forces Code (49)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Articles 2, 8, and 116 of the Armed Forces Code; Articles 7, 8, and 18 of the Law Determining the Conditions for Entering the Military (49, 50)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Articles 4 and 31 of the Prohibition of Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor Law (9)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 10 of the Constitution; Article 2.1 of the Law on Education (45, 51)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 2 of the Law on Education (51, 52)

* No conscription (50, 53, 54)

In December 2016, the Government adopted the Anti-Trafficking Law that supplements the 2010 Prohibition of Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor Law. The new law includes tougher penalties and formalizes victim protection and assistance measures.(28, 48) The Government also adopted a Constitution by referendum, which explicitly prohibits child labor and enshrines the right to education for both boys and girls.(45, 55) A draft law providing greater protection to domestic workers is also under consideration. This law would allow labor inspectors to inspect private homes for labor violations.(56)

The existing hazardous work list is not comprehensive, as it does not prohibit children from using dangerous equipment or tools in the cocoa sector. However, an updated hazardous work list drafted in 2016 is currently under consideration and prohibits the use of machetes and other sharp tools. A new bylaw that determines the activities, number of hours and conditions under which light work may be permitted is also under consideration.(57-59)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Social Protection (MEPS)	Enforce labor laws.(10) Implement the child labor monitoring system, Système d'Observation et de Suivi du Travail des Enfants en Côte d'Ivoire (SOSTECI), which enables communities to collect and analyze statistical data on the worst forms of child labor.(1, 14, 60, 61) Through its Direction of the Fight Against Child Labor, develop, monitor, and enforce laws related to child labor and collaborate with the Anti-Trafficking Unit (ATU) on cases of child trafficking.(21, 26, 30) In 2016, changed its name from the Ministry of Employment, Social Affairs, and Professional Training (MESAPT).(10)
Ministry of Interior and Security	Through its ATU, leads efforts to enforce criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor.(2, 10, 62, 63) Through its Mondaine Brigades, combat commercial sexual exploitation, including exploitation of children.(28)
Ministry of Justice	Investigate and prosecute crimes related to child labor, including its worst forms.(10)
Ministry of Women, Child Protection, and Solidarity (MWCPS)	Lead the Government's efforts to combat human trafficking and implement a National Policy on Child Protection.(26, 28, 53, 64, 65) Maintain a hotline for child labor issues, and respond to complaints.(26, 28, 31, 53, 64, 66)
National Commission of Human Rights (CNDHCI)	Maintain a hotline for reporting human rights abuses. From June to December 2016, received 264 calls, resulting in the identification of at least 1 case of child trafficking.(67)

Coordination among Government ministries on criminal law enforcement is inefficient, causing delays in delivering assistance to victims of human trafficking.(2, 26)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Côte d'Ivoire took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

‡ Data are from January 1, 2016 to September 30, 2016.

New modules on child labor were integrated into the National School of Administration's curriculum following the adoption of the 2015 Labor Code. These modules were used to train 46 candidates who are expected to graduate in 2017 and begin work as labor inspectors in 2018; 36 are expected to graduate at the end of the 2016–2017 school year.(43, 63, 67) However, the number of labor inspectors will still be insufficient for the size of the Côte d'Ivoire's workforce, which includes over 8 million workers.(70) According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Côte d'Ivoire should employ about 541 inspectors.(70-72)

Although the labor inspectorate received a 10 percent increase from its 2015 budget, a lack of resources, including insufficient staff, office facilities, and transportation, hampers the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(10, 13, 16, 30, 64, 73, 74) Research found that as a result of a lack of authority to assess penalties for labor violations, some labor inspectors fail to document identified child labor violations due to the perceived futility of doing so, given the limited capacity of law enforcement to investigate reported violations and the frequency of inspection findings not being reported to the courts.(16, 30, 69, 75) Although most inspections focus on formal sector establishments, in 2015 the government implemented a pilot project to conduct more labor inspections in the informal sector, where the majority of child labor is found.(10, 74) The Government is evaluating how this pilot project can be scaled up.(10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Côte d'Ivoire took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (64, 68)	Yes (64)

In 2016, the National Police's Anti-Trafficking Unit (ATU) received a budget of $4,592, a decrease of approximately 30 percent from its 2015 budget.(10, 67) The ATU employed 13 Abidjan-based investigators to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor. The ATU has acknowledged that it lacks adequate staff and relies on regional police forces to enforce criminal child labor laws throughout the country.(2, 28, 64, 77) In addition, research indicates that laws on the worst forms of child labor may not be well understood by criminal law enforcement officials, impeding their ability to carry out effective enforcement.(12, 13, 28, 79) To improve knowledge of children's rights, including child labor, the Government provided training to 144 law enforcement officials during the reporting period.(10)

Insufficient monitoring of movement along the borders makes it difficult to detect cases of human trafficking. The Ministry of Interior and Security is reviewing a proposal by IOM to double the number of official border crossings and implement improved surveillance.(77) However, between May 2015 and November 2016, the Ministry of Interior and Security's Mondaine Brigade conducted several operations to rescue 116 Nigerian women and girls trafficked to Côte d'Ivoire for commercial sexual exploitation. Law enforcement officials arrested 36 Nigerian traffickers as a result of these operations, and 5 were sentenced to 20 years of imprisonment.(26)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Monitoring Committee on Actions to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CNS)	Supervise, monitor, and evaluate all government activities related to child labor and child trafficking, including making policy recommendations and harmonizing laws with international conventions.(80, 81) Chaired by the First Lady of Côte d'Ivoire and comprises 14 international and domestic partners.(21, 62, 80, 82) In 2016, with the assistance of UNICEF, published a report on the expansion of SOSTECI that included prevalence data from three departments on child labor.(28)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CIM)	Design, coordinate, and implement all government actions to combat the worst forms of child labor, and monitor relevant programs implemented by partner organizations.(80, 82, 83) Chaired by MEPS, includes representatives from 13 other ministries.(21, 80, 82, 83) In 2016, in collaboration with CNS, hosted a meeting between the First Ladies of Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire that resulted in a joint declaration and cooperative agreement against cross-border trafficking.(84, 85)
National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking and Child Exploitation (CNLTdP)	Dedicated to combatting child trafficking and chaired by MWCPS.(56, 63, 69) In 2016, received an operating budget of $10,210.(10) Research was unable to determine whether the committee was active in 2016.(43)

Although the National Monitoring Committee on Actions to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CNS) and Interministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CIM) coordinate strategic-level efforts, operational progress is hindered by a lack of coordination among the various ministries, which some NGOs and companies have also noted. The lack of coordination among ministries can also result in disjointed or duplicated efforts.(1, 13, 28, 56) The new Anti-Trafficking Law provides for the creation of a National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons, expected to be created in 2017.(10, 28)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor†

Policy	Description
2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol (2010 Declaration) and Its Accompanying Framework of Action	Joint declaration by the Governments of Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, and the United States, and the International Cocoa and Chocolate Industry.(60, 86, 87) Provides resources and coordinates with key stakeholders on efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas.(86, 87) Ensures that all project efforts implemented under the Declaration and Framework align with Côte d'Ivoire's national action plans to promote coherence and sustainability.(60, 86, 87) USDOL-funded projects and some industry-funded projects carried out activities in support of this policy during the reporting period.(88)
Partnership Agreement‡	Forms an agreement between the International Cocoa Initiative and CNS in support of the National Action Plan for the Fight Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Aims to reinforce and expand SOSTECI and improve school infrastructure.(85, 89)
Joint Declarations Against Cross-Border Trafficking‡	In 2016, promulgated a bilateral declaration and cooperative agreement that Côte d'Ivoire signed with Ghana to combat the worst forms of child labor by targeting high-risk child labor sectors, providing protection to victims, improving coordination, and prosecuting offenders.(90-92) Also enacted a bilateral agreement to combat trafficking with Burkina Faso in 2016.(26)
National Development Plan (2016–2020)‡	Aims to improve governance and accelerate human capital development, including by combatting child labor. Allocates almost $6.1 million over 5 years to conduct diagnostic studies on child labor and child trafficking; creates a unit to combat the worst forms of child labor in regional labor inspectorate offices; expands SOSTECI into 10 new departments; constructs 3 transit centers; and develops a national action plan to combat human trafficking, particularly of girls.(93)
Compulsory Education Policy	In support of the Law on Education, aims to achieve 100 percent enrollment in primary school by 2020 and 100 percent enrollment in junior high by 2025.(32, 94) Allocates $1.34 billion to modernize the education system, including by building new classrooms, providing free textbooks to low-income families, and providing additional pedagogical training to teachers.(32) In 2016, reopened applications for Pedagogical Training Centers to provide training for 5,000 teachers for the 2017–2018 academic year.(95, 96)
National Policy on Child Protection (PNPE) (2012–2022)	Led by the MSFWC, seeks to reduce the incidence of violence, abuse, and exploitation of children.(97) Regional coordination mechanisms, led by prefects, oversee implementation and bring together relevant actors to identify specific problems in the region.(53, 68)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

‡ The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(33, 34, 67, 69)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the World Bank's Country Partnership Framework.(98) A draft of the Decent Work Country Program (2016–2020) is awaiting validation and will include child labor concerns.(67, 99)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
National Action Plan for the Fight Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NAP) (2015–2017) [†]	Coordinated by the CNS and the CIM, $25.8 million project aims to significantly reduce the number of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor by improving the legal framework, sensitizing high-risk communities to the dangers of exploitative child labor, improving victim services, building the capacity of law enforcement, and improving educational infrastructure.(14, 82) The Government provided $15 million in funding.(78) In 2016, began construction on three shelters.(28)
National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking (2016–2020) [†]	With the support of UNODC and coordinated by CNLTdP, $14.8 million project drafted to prevent human trafficking, expand social services for victims by improving physical infrastructure, provide training for law enforcement personnel and other stakeholders, promote coordination, and collect data on human trafficking.(64, 77) The Government committed to provide $3.2 million over 5 years to implement the plan.(2) In 2016, MWCPS, with support from UNODC and the Embassy of Japan, began a mapping project to identify all existing shelters and transit centers for victims of child trafficking.(28)
National Awareness Campaign Against Child Labor (2015–2017) [†]	CNS-led national awareness campaign against child labor, disseminates information to increase public awareness through television and radio broadcasts, billboards, and newspapers in French and local languages. Calls on national actors to take a greater role in media campaigns to raise awareness about child labor.(69, 77)
USDOL-Funded Projects in Support of the 2010 Declaration	USDOL projects in cocoa-growing areas of Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire that aim to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, through research, improved monitoring and enforcement, and implementation and expansion of SOSTECI. These project include: Survey Research on Child Labor in West African Cocoa Growing Areas (2012–2016) , $1.5 million project implemented by the Payson Center for International Development at Tulane University; Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR) (2013–2017) , $7.95 million project implemented in at least 10 countries by the ILO; Assessing Progress in Reducing Child Labor in Cocoa-Growing Areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana (2015–2019) , $3 million project implemented by NORC at the University of Chicago; and Eliminating Child Labor in Cocoa (2015–2019) , $4.5 million project implemented by the International Cocoa Initiative.(100–103) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
Industry-Funded Projects	Industry-funded projects to increase sustainability in the cocoa sector, improve farmer livelihoods and access to education, and combat the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas. Some projects may be in support of World Cocoa Foundation (WCF)'s CocoaAction (2014–2020) strategy and the 2010 Declaration .(88, 104)
Centers for Vulnerable Children [†]	Operates approximately 110 MWCPS- and MEPS-funded social centers and mobile schools throughout the country that receive women and children who are victims of crime or violence, including children who are victims of the worst forms of child labor. International NGOs also operate additional centers that provide meals and basic education.(77, 105) In 2016, First Lady Dominique Ouattara and CNS initiated construction on three reception centers in Bouaké, Ferkessédougou, and Soubré in support of the NAP and the National Development Plan to house victims of child trafficking.(85, 93, 106)
School Feeding Programs [†]	These programs aim to raise school attendance rates in rural areas, particularly among girls, by providing school meals. Includes the Integrated Program for Sustainable School Feeding , a $42.5 million WFP-funded program; the Ministry of National Education School Feeding Program; and the McGovern-Dole School Feeding Program , a $31 million joint initiative between WFP and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, in coordination with the Ministry of National Education.(64, 107, 108)
Emergency Support Project for Basic Education (2012–2017)	$41.4 million World Bank-funded project to improve access to basic education by constructing and rehabilitating classrooms and school latrines.(109) By the end of 2016, built 1,000 new primary school classrooms, rehabilitated 267 classrooms, rehabilitated 8 teacher training centers, and trained 15,253 teachers.(110)
Community Animation Program for Child Protection (2015–2020) [†]	$228,168 MWCPS program as part of the National Policy on Child Protection, implemented with technical assistance from UNICEF, provides a service package for behavior change and improving communication at the community level that can be tailored to meet local needs.(10, 67, 111) Between 2015 and 2016, piloted the approach in 351 communities with plans to expand to 1,500 communities by 2020.(67)
National Solidarity Fund* [†]	$2.5 million fund that provides assistance to poor households. In 2016, revised to include victims of human trafficking as project participants.(28, 112)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Côte d'Ivoire.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(10, 61, 68, 113, 114)

Although the Government maintains programs and coordinates with stakeholders to help children working on cocoa farms, the scope of existing programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(7, 64) SOSTECI has been implemented in several cocoa-growing communities, but it has not been expanded throughout the country because it requires a significant amount of resources for full implementation.(64, 77, 115) In addition, the Government primarily relies on NGOs to provide social services to victims of child trafficking. Research indicates that there is poor coordination among service providers, the distribution of services throughout the country is uneven, and existing programs do not adequately address all sectors where child labor is present.(2, 26, 28, 77)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Côte d'Ivoire (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2016
Enforcement	Improve coordination among ministries related to exploitative child labor and ensure that victims receive appropriate services.	2016
	Ensure that labor inspectorates and criminal law enforcement agencies receive an adequate amount of funding to conduct inspections and investigations throughout the country, and that penalties are enforced according to the law.	2014 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing the inspectorate to assess penalties.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that inspectors and investigators receive training on new laws related to child labor.	2016
	Publish information about whether routine inspections are conducted and whether they target high-risk sectors.	2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in accordance with the ILO recommendation.	2009 – 2016
	Improve monitoring of activity along the borders to enable the Government to identify and prevent transnational human trafficking activity.	2015 – 2016
Coordination	Improve coordination among ministries included in CNS and CIM.	2012 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2013 – 2016
Social Programs	Improve access to education by eliminating all school-related fees, providing all children with birth certificates, improving the accessibility of schools, ensuring that schools are free of physical and sexual abuse, and increasing the number of teachers, sanitation facilities, and schools, particularly in rural areas.	2011 – 2016
	Replicate and expand models such as SOSTECI that address exploitative child labor to effectively implement government policies to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that victims of the worst forms of child labor are able to access social services throughout the country.	2015 – 2016

8. UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education, both sexes (%). Accessed December 16, 2016; <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of cur-

- rent primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
71. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "least developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.
72. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

Djibouti

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Djibouti made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Law on the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Illicit Smuggling of Migrants, which criminally prohibits domestic and international trafficking and addresses all acts in the trafficking process. However, children in Djibouti perform dangerous tasks in street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, the law neither establishes a minimum age for hazardous work nor fully protects children from all forms of commercial sexual exploitation. Law enforcement efforts were inadequate to prevent and combat child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Djibouti perform dangerous tasks in street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Djibouti.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	12.3 (23,693)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	67.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	10.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		64.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2016, published by the UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's Analysis of Statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Caring for livestock (1, 6)
	Farming, activities unknown(6)
Services	Domestic work† (1, 6, 7)
	Street work, including shining shoes, washing and guarding cars, cleaning storefronts, sorting merchandise, collecting garbage, begging, and selling items, including khat (1, 2, 6, 7)
	Working in restaurants, small shops, and family businesses (1, 6, 7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 6, 8-10)
	Forced domestic work and begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3, 6)
	Use in illicit activities (3, 6, 10)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Limited evidence suggests children, including undocumented migrant girls, are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation in Djibouti City and the Ethiopia-Djibouti trucking corridor.(6, 9) Girls from poor Djiboutian families may engage in commercial sexual exploitation as a means of income.(1)

While primary and middle school are tuition-free, other school-related expenses or family pressures may prevent children from attending school.(6, 11) Enrollment rates are lower for girls, children living in rural areas, and children living in poverty.(6, 12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Djibouti has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Djibouti's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	16	Article 5 of the Labor Code (13)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 108 and 110 of the Labor Code (13)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 110 of the Labor Code (13)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2 and 290 of the Labor Code; Article 23 of the Law Regarding Terrorism and Other Serious Crimes (13, 14)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on the Fight Against the Trafficking of Persons and the Illegal Smuggling of Migrants; Article 23 of the Law Regarding Terrorism and Other Serious Crimes; Articles 10 and 15 of the Penal Code (14-16)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 462 and 463 of the Penal Code; Article 1 and Article 8 of the Law on the Fight Against the Trafficking of Persons and the Illegal Smuggling of Migrants (15, 16)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 355, 356, and 461 of the Penal Code (16)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 1 of the National Army Amendment Decree (17)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Articles 149–151 and 461 of the Penal Code (16)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 4 of the Law on the Orientation of the Education System (18)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 16 of the Law on the Orientation of the Education System (18)

* No conscription (19, 20)

During the reporting period, the Government passed new legislation that strengthens the legal framework on human trafficking. The law prohibits all forms of human trafficking and prescribes sufficiently stringent penalties.(10, 15)

Sources indicate that the Labor Code's minimum age provisions are not applied effectively to children working outside formal employment relationships.(13, 21-23) In addition, although the Labor Code prohibits the employment of children

Djibouti

between the ages 16 and 18 in domestic work, hotels, and bars, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not include street work, an area of work in which there is evidence of work in an unhealthy environment.(13, 21, 23)

The law does not specifically criminally prohibit the offering of a child for prostitution, the production of pornography, or pornographic performances, or the use of a child for prostitution.(15, 16)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce all labor laws, including child labor laws and regulations.(2) Through its Inspectorate of Labor and Social Laws, regulate youth employment.(24)
National Police, including the Vice Squad	Enforce criminal laws and investigate crimes related to the worst forms of child labor.(25)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute child labor cases after they have been referred by MOL.(2)
National Commission on Human Rights	Receive complaints and investigate cases of human rights violations, including the worst forms of child labor.(26, 27) Assist victims in obtaining legal aid to prosecute violators.(26)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Djibouti took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Labor Inspectorate Funding	Unknown	$5,649.71 (28)

According to the Government, the labor inspectorate has insufficient funding and training to adequately enforce child labor laws.(2, 6) In 2016, the Government held trainings on the new Law on the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Illicit Smuggling of Migrants.(11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Djibouti did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Yes (28)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown	Yes (28)

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (2)	Unknown (10)
Number of Convictions	0 (2)	Unknown (10)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	No (2)	No (10)

The Government continued to detain street children, including potential child trafficking victims, following sweeps to clear the streets ahead of holidays and national events. Immigration officials worked with IOM to assist in returning unaccompanied minors to their countries of origin, including the provision of space for a second Migration Response Center in Loyada.(3, 11, 20) In late December 2016, the Government passed a law that allows unaccompanied minors to apply as asylum seekers.(11, 31)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established an Anti-Trafficking Working Group, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Anti-Trafficking Working Group	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Justice and includes the Ministry of Labor.(3, 28)
National Council for Children (CNE)	Promote children's rights. Led by the Prime Minister and includes eight other agencies, representatives from NGOs, the private sector, and elected officials.(32)

Research found no evidence of coordination mechanisms to combat the worst forms of child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons (2014–2020)	Aims to strengthen the legislative framework to combat human trafficking, protect and assist human trafficking victims, and establish a national referral mechanism between law enforcement officials and social service providers.(33) In 2016, with the support of UNODC, approved training of trainer modules to assist law enforcement officials in the identification of trafficking in persons cases.(20, 28)
UNDAF (2013–2017)	Provides access to basic social services to protect children against all forms of violence and exploitation. Includes plans for boys and girls in both rural and urban areas to have equal and quality access to basic education.(34) In 2016, research did not determine whether any activities were undertaken.(28)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Strategy and the Education Sector Strategic Plan.(1, 35) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement UNDAF during the reporting period.(28)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description and Objectives
USDOS-Funded Strengthening the National Criminal Justice System's Response to Trafficking in Persons in Djibouti	$500,000 USDOS-funded program, implemented by UNODC in partnership with the Government, that establishes a national referral mechanism for victims of human trafficking and a mechanism for data collection, raises awareness of human trafficking, and conducts law enforcement trainings.(20, 30)
National Family Solidarity Program [‡]	Government-funded program implemented by the State Secretariat for National Solidarity that establishes cash transfers to support Djiboutian households in extreme poverty.(36) In 2016, the program continued to provide cash transfers to families.(11)
UNICEF-Funded Projects	Humanitarian Action for Children Project and UNICEF Country Program (2013–2017) that promotes access to quality education for children, especially from rural and poor urban areas, increases birth registration, and provides support for orphans and vulnerable children.(35, 37, 38) In 2016, IOM and UNICEF hosted a workshop with Government officials, including law enforcement officials, who work on unaccompanied minor issues to validate a referral mechanism to address the issue of unaccompanied migrant children, particularly those trafficked.(11)
World Bank-Funded Programs	Enhancing Income Opportunities Program (2015–2019), in partnership with the Government, aims to provide at least 2,200 youth with basic life skills training, coaching in business plan development, and access to finance. Access to Quality Education Project , a Global Partnership for Education-funded program, in collaboration with the World Bank and Government, seeks to improve the learning environment in the first three years of primary education and to construct classrooms, rehabilitate and extend schools in rural areas, train teachers, procure student learning materials, and distribute hearing aids and glasses to students who need them.(12, 39, 40) In 2016, project activities began.(11)
World Food Programme-Funded Projects in Support of Food Security	Alleviates food insecurity and builds resiliency. Support for the National School Feeding Programme provides daily meals at schools for 17,900 children. Enhancing the Resilience of Chronically Vulnerable Rural, Urban and Refugee Populations and Reducing Undernutrition in Djibouti increases resilience of rural food-insecure populations to shocks.(41–43) In 2016, projects continued activities.(11)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Djibouti.

[‡] The Government had other programs that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(1, 10, 20, 25, 30)

Although the Government of Djibouti has implemented programs that target migrant children, research found no evidence of programs to assist children involved in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Djibouti (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children working outside formal employment relationships.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit the use and offer of a child for prostitution, production of pornography, and pornographic performances.	2012 – 2016
Enforcement	Publish data on number of criminal investigations, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by allowing the assessment of penalties, providing refresher courses, and providing information on the number of unannounced labor inspections conducted.	2015 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Provide additional resources to the labor inspectorate and criminal law enforcement agencies so that more inspectors and officers can be hired and receive adequate training.	2011 – 2016
	Cease the detention of street children and establish referral mechanisms between labor and criminal law enforcement agencies and social service providers so that exploited children, particularly victims of child trafficking, receive appropriate care and reintegration services.	2014 – 2016
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2009 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2014 – 2016
	Undertake activities to implement UNDAF.	2016
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in agriculture to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2016
	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education accessible for all children, including girls, by removing other school-related expenses.	2015 – 2016
	Implement programs to specifically address children involved in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Dominica made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued efforts to develop a list of hazardous occupations for children and harmonize legislation on the legal age for employment. Although research is limited, there is evidence that children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation in Dominica. The Government's ability to prevent children from becoming engaged in exploitative work is limited due to exceptions to the minimum age for hazardous work. The country also lacks prohibitions against the use of children in prostitution, pornography, or pornographic performances or the use of children in illicit activities, including producing and trafficking of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Limited evidence suggests girls under age 16 engage in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation in Dominica, with remuneration including rides, clothing, or cell phones. However, no current research on the child labor situation in Dominica is available.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Dominica. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		111.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(3)

Source for all other data: Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Dominica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 2).

Table 2. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3). However, gaps exist in Dominica's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 3. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	16	Articles 2 and 46 of the Education Act 1997 (5)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No	18	Articles 2, 4, 5, and 7 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act (6)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 2, 4, 5, and 7 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act (6)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 2 of the Education Act 1997 (5)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 15 of the Education Act 1997 (5)

† No standing military (10)

Article 46 of the Education Act prohibits the employment of children ages 5 to 16 during the school year, but allows students ages 14 and older to work during school vacations or in school-sponsored employment training programs without defining the conditions, specific activities, or number of hours permissible for light work.(5) In addition, the Apprentices Act permits children as young as age 10 to serve as apprentices, and includes conditions in which such children may be compelled to serve as apprentices.(11)

Article 7 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act prohibits children under age 18 from working at night, unless they are working with members of their family, but includes exceptions for children over age 16 to perform night work in certain industries or in case of emergencies without including provisions to ensure that they receive proper training or that their health, safety, and morals will be protected.(6) During the reporting period, the Government continued efforts to develop a list of hazardous occupations for children and harmonize legislation on the legal age for employment.(1) The Government has yet to enact laws or regulations explicitly prohibiting the use of children in prostitution, pornography, pornographic performances, or illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.(12)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of National Security, Labor, and Immigration (MNSLI)	Conduct inspections and enforce laws related to child labor. Authorized to conduct unannounced inspections at any location with employees and take legal action against employers violating child labor laws.(13-15) Report children found in exploitative labor situations to police and social services.(13-15)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Health (MOH)	Conduct inspections and enforce laws related to child labor. Report children found in exploitative labor situations to police and social services.(13, 14)
Police Force	Enforce criminal laws, including those related to child labor.(14)
Social Welfare Division, Ministry of Social Services, Family, and Gender Affairs	Provide social services, including education, housing, counseling, and financial aid in child labor cases.(13, 15, 16)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Dominica took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

In addition to the 4 labor inspectors employed by the Ministry of National Security, Labor, and Immigration (MNSLI), the Ministry of Health (MOH) employs 17 health and safety inspectors and 12 fire inspectors who also inspect for labor violations.(15) Government officials report that while the number of labor inspectors is sufficient to inspect labor violations, too few technical officers are available to effectively enforce labor laws.(15)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Dominica did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Basic Needs Trust Fund	Caribbean Development Bank-implemented program to reduce poverty through livelihood services, improved infrastructure, capacity-building projects, and technical services.(18, 19)
Education Trust Fund†	Ministry of Education (MOE) program that provides financial assistance for textbooks, transportation, and registration and exam fees to students in secondary school who would otherwise be unable to complete their education.(14, 20)
School Textbook Provision Scheme†	MOE program that subsidizes the cost of textbooks for primary and secondary school students.(14, 21)
School Feeding Program†	MOE program that provides lunch to primary school students in targeted areas.(14, 22)
CHANCES†	Ministry of Social Services, Family, and Gender Affairs program that supports an emergency residential shelter to provide short-term services to abused and neglected children. May accept victims of the worst forms of child labor.(13, 15, 17, 23)
Break the Silence Awareness Program†	Ministry of Social Services, Family, and Gender Affairs program that raises awareness and encourages reporting of child abuse cases.(15) Managed by the Child Abuse Prevention Unit in the Social Welfare Division.(23)

† Program is funded by the Government of Dominica.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Dominica (Table 8).

Table 8. Suggested Government Actions to Prevent Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Define the conditions, activities, and number of hours permissible for light work.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that the minimum age for night work is 18 for all children or that children receive adequate training and that the health, safety, and morals of children are protected.	2015 – 2016
	Enact legislation to expressly prohibit child prostitution and the using, procuring, or offering of a child for the production of pornography or pornographic performances.	2011 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2016
	Make information for the MNSLI and the MOH regarding the annual funding levels publicly available.	2014 – 2016
	Employ a sufficient number of technical officers to provide adequate labor law enforcement.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that labor inspectors and criminal investigators receive training on the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure the police have sufficient funding to enforce criminal laws.	2016
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.	2016
Government Policies	Adopt policies to address the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.	2016
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine whether any other forms of child labor exist in Dominica.	2014 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Dominican Republic

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Dominican Republic made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the year, the Government of the Dominican Republic made efforts by implementing initiatives that aim to remove children and youth from exploitative street work through the Roadmap towards the Elimination of Child Labor, and providing vocational training programs and labor rights education to 40,000 at-risk youth through the social program Progressing with Solidarity (PROSOLI). In addition, the Ministry of Education released a directive that eliminates the eighth-grade national exam, a barrier for children without identity documents to continue their education to secondary school. However, the Dominican Republic is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a practice that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. While Dominican law and polices prohibit the exclusion of children from the educational system based on a lack of identity documents, there are reports that some children, particularly those of Haitian descent, were prevented by primary and secondary school officials from attending or completing public school in both urban and rural areas if they could not present birth certificates or other identifying documents, making them more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Children in the Dominican Republic are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Other gaps remain, including limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws. Social programs for victims of harmful agricultural work and commercial sexual exploitation also do not appear to address the scope of these problems.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Dominican Republic perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Dominican Republic.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in the Dominican Republic are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in touristic locations and major urban areas. The porous border between Haiti and the Dominican Republic has allowed some children to be trafficked into the Dominican Republic, where they have been engaged in commercial sexual exploitation or forced to work in agriculture, domestic work, street vending, or begging.(2, 3, 18, 19, 26, 27, 31) Some children, including Haitian children and Dominican-born children of Haitian descent, work in sugarcane production, a hazardous occupation, often alongside their parents, and live in communities that often lack adequate housing and basic services.(4, 7-10, 32)

Children of undocumented migrant parents, many of Haitian descent, are particularly vulnerable to labor exploitation, because they do not possess birth or residency documents. (3, 32-34) Many Dominican-born persons of Haitian descent, including children, remain in undocumented status as a result of the 2013 Constitutional Tribunal Judgment, and were not able to obtain legal residency documents under Law 169-14 and the National Plan to Regularize Foreigners during the reporting year.(11, 32, 35-38) Moreover, the Government continued to involuntarily repatriate to Haiti undocumented individuals including 2,551 unaccompanied children. This practice increases the likelihood that these children will engage in child labor, including its worst forms, as some reside in camps in Haiti near the border with the Dominican Republic where schools and other basic services are not available.(39-42) In addition, the children who remain in the Dominican Republic after their parents have been repatriated to Haiti are also vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(32, 42)

National law guarantees free public education, requiring that all children attend school until age 18, and prohibits the exclusion of children from the educational system based on a lack of identity documents. (18, 42-46) However, in practice, some public primary and secondary schools in both urban and rural areas deny access to children who cannot present birth certificates or identity documents, mainly children of Haitian descent, sometimes due to the lack of understanding of national laws and policies. (11, 12, 42, 47-50) The Ministry of Education also continued to lack a formal complaint and redress system to handle these school denial cases. (51) In addition, the current Operations Manual of Public Education Centers of the Ministry of Education incorrectly requires school administrators to require children to present identity documents to enroll in school.(52, 53) Some primary and secondary schools permitted access without birth certificates, but required such documentation for the eighth and twelfth grade national exams required for graduation during the 2015-2016 school year. (11, 18, 34, 53, 54) In August 2016, the Ministry of Education released a directive that eliminates the eighth-grade national exam, which was a requirement to graduate from primary school, beginning in the 2017-2018 school year.(18, 42, 55, 56) However, in contradiction to national law, some schools continued to require children to present identity documents in order to take the twelfth grade national exam to graduate from secondary school.(11, 42, 57) Without the opportunity to graduate from secondary school and pursue higher education, and with limited access to formal sector

Dominican Republic

work as adults, children without identity documents have less incentive to enroll or remain in school. Out-of-school children are at increased risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor. (11, 27, 48, 50, 53, 58, 59)

Research did not identify evidence of actions taken by government authorities during the year to adequately address the aforementioned practices, such as by providing training to school officials, conducting public awareness campaigns, or taking disciplinary action against officials who violate laws or policies regarding the education of undocumented children. This lack of proactive steps delayed the government's advancement in addressing the worst forms of child labor within the country.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Dominican Republic has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the Dominican Republic's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

* Articles 96, 231 and 232 of the Organic Armed Forces Law (No. 139-13) state that there is no conscription in peacetime and that compulsory military recruitment may be authorized in situations of national defense or emergency. (66)

† The minimum age for voluntary military service is 18. However, children ages 16 to 18 may enlist for training with parental consent. (66)

‡ Age calculated based on available information. (44, 63)

Article 410 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents prescribes penalties of 3 to 10 years of imprisonment for the commercial sexual exploitation of children. UNICEF has stated that these penalties may not be severe enough to deter the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the Dominican Republic. (1, 43)

Article 2 of the Resolution on Hazardous Work for Persons Under Age 18 specifies activities that the Government deems hazardous and prohibits them for children under age 18. Article 3 of the same Resolution allows children ages 16 to 18 to engage in some hazardous activities, such as the use of industrial machines, as part of vocational training programs and only when properly trained, supervised, and protected. (61) Despite these protections, Article 251 of the Labor Code sets the general minimum age for hazardous work at 16. (60) The ILO has called upon the Government to amend the Labor Code to ensure that children ages 16 to 18 who are permitted to engage in hazardous activities are fully protected. (67)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MT)	Lead efforts to eliminate child labor; conduct labor inspections; and direct the Child Labor Unit (UTI) to investigate child labor. Refers children found in exploitative conditions to social services, mainly CONANI. (11, 18, 59, 68).
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI)	Promote policies to eradicate all forms of violence against children, including child labor, as well as improve the employability of young people. (11, 59, 69) Coordinate with the MT to protect children against labor exploitation and enforce labor laws. (11, 59, 69, 70) Receive victims of child labor through 43 municipal-level offices for psychological evaluation and refer them for services. (69, 70).
Office of the Attorney General (AG)	Prosecute crimes involving children, including criminal violations related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children and other worst forms of child labor. Oversee the Special Prosecutor for Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking, which receives notifications of alleged violations related to the worst forms of child labor through a hotline. (3, 18, 30, 70)
National Police's (PN) Trafficking in Persons Unit and the Directorate of Migration (DGM)	Enforce criminal laws, including those prohibiting the worst forms of child labor, and coordinate with the AG in the prosecution of perpetrators. Under the Ministry of the Interior. (11, 18, 30, 71)
Specialized Corps for Tourist Safety	Prevent child sex abuse and commercial sexual exploitation in touristic areas, rescue child victims, and arrest and bring to justice child sex offenders. Overseen by the Ministry of Defense. (69)

[‡] Data are from January 01, 2016 to October 31, 2016 (20).

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of the Dominican Republic's workforce, which includes over 5.1 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, the Dominican Republic should employ roughly 341 labor inspectors.(73-75) Despite the reduction in the overall funding for the labor inspectorate compared to 2015, an additional $140,000 was allocated to the MT to increase labor law enforcement actions to combat child labor during 2016.(18, 20)

The MT's process for labor inspections includes a preliminary visit, during which inspectors inform employers of violations and establish periods for remediation but do not issue fines. Upon expiration of the remediation periods, inspectors conduct re-inspections to determine whether the violations have been remedied.(60, 76, 77) If re-inspections find that the identified violations persist, the MT files infraction reports with the local office of the MT, which then transfers the infraction reports to the relevant local court for adjudication.(60, 76, 77) This two-tiered inspection process puts a strain on the Inspectorate's limited human and financial resources and may not sufficiently deter employers from exploiting children in the workplace, particularly in remote rural areas where re-inspections are more difficult and less consistent. In addition, evidence suggests that some inspection reports do not set a timeframe for the remediation of the violations identified.(78) Furthermore, the lack of published information on the results of inspections prevents a complete understanding of how effective this inspection system is in practice.(18)

Although the 2008 General Inspection Protocol and the 2011 Inspection Protocol for Agriculture instruct inspectors to assess child labor violations by reviewing workers' identity documents and employers' records, making observations, and conducting interviews, the widespread lack of identity documents impedes both inspectors and employers from verifying the ages of workers and guaranteeing that children under age 18 are not participating in dangerous or unhealthy work.(7, 12, 58, 76, 77) The MT has indicated that improvements could be made with respect to how inspectors conduct interviews, ask follow-up questions, and use inspection data to strengthen the inspection system.(12) Moreover, reports indicate that in some cases, Spanish-speaking inspectors working without translation assistance have been responsible for interviewing Creole-speaking workers with limited or no Spanish-language abilities, which has further hindered the efficacy of those inspections.(18)

From January through October 2016, the MT conducted 84,474 labor inspections. (18, 20) During this period, each inspector conducted an average of 461 inspections. It is unknown whether the high number of inspections conducted by each inspector affects the quality of inspections. Some NGOs and labor unions have reported that inspections are not always conducted in a timely manner after requests are made. In addition, evidence suggests that inspection reports often contain errors and contradictions that undermine the credibility of these reports, including by limiting the sample size of worksites for inspection in large rural facilities.(1, 15, 78) Reports also indicate that substandard labor inspection reports have hindered the ability of the Office of the Attorney General (AG) to pursue prosecutions on criminal matters involving child labor issues.(15)

A formal referral mechanism is in place that allows the MT to refer child victims of exploitative labor conditions found during labor inspections to the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI) for social services. During the reporting period, the MT reported that it removed 103 victims of child labor, mainly from the agriculture, fishing, and services sectors and transferred them to CONANI where they received social and reintegration services.(18, 20)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Dominican Republic took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, the AG’s Special Prosecutor for Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking employed five investigators to conduct investigations regarding the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation. However, reports indicate that its capacity to identify, investigate, and prosecute criminal cases related to the worst forms of child labor is limited due to resource constraints.(1, 18) Similarly, the National Police (PN) maintains a Trafficking in Persons Unit, but reports indicate that it did not investigate trafficking in persons crimes during the reporting period also due mainly to a lack of resources.(18, 30)

In 2016, the AG reported that it removed 63 victims of the worst forms of child labor and transferred them to CONANI where they received social and reintegration services.(30) Despite these efforts, reports indicate that CONANI does not have the resources, facilities, and institutional capacity to meet the demand for services nationwide.(3, 18, 30, 79) In addition, reports indicate that coordination between the MT and the AG has been limited due mainly to a lack of resources and that not all criminal violations identified by the MT have been referred to, and subsequently investigated and prosecuted effectively, by the AG.(15)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor (CDN)	Develop evidence-based policies to combat child labor and coordinate efforts of 48 Local and Municipal Committees to implement CDN efforts at the local level. Overseen by the MT and composed of ministerial representatives, labor unions, private sector, and NGOs.(11, 18, 19, 59, 81) In 2016, the CDN met to implement activities under national action plans, including awareness raising campaigns in agricultural zones and training labor inspectors on child labor laws.(18, 82, 83)
Inter-Institutional Commission Against Child Abuse and Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Coordinate actions to combat commercial sexual exploitation and child abuse. Led by CONANI and the MT, and includes representatives from local and international organizations, and the Hotel and Restaurant Association.(18, 30, 69) In 2016, organized workshops to raise awareness of the code of conduct to combat commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourist sector.(84, 85)
Inter-Agency Commission Against Trafficking in Persons (CITIM)	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking and responsible for developing and implementing national plans. Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and comprises 14 government agencies, including the MT and law enforcement agencies.(3, 36, 86) In 2016, met multiples times to implement protocols to identify and assist child trafficking victims.(3, 30)
Social Policies Coordination Cabinet (GCPS)	Coordinate all social policies and conditional cash transfer programs, such as the Progressing with Solidarity Program (PROSOLI). Led by the Vice President.(18, 59) In 2016, implemented activities to expand social protection services to groups vulnerable to human trafficking and forced labor.(87)

Reports indicate that the Local and Municipal Committees of the National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor (CDN) face limitations in their coordination efforts due to a lack of resources.(88)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Strategic Plan to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (PEN) (2006–2016)	Identifies the roles and responsibilities of government agencies and municipal representatives in eradicating the worst forms of child labor. Prioritizes prevention, protection, assistance, and the progressive eradication of the worst forms of child labor.(18, 68, 89) In 2016, launched media campaign to mobilize communities to report cases of child labor, especially in rural and agricultural zones.(20)
Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in the Dominican Republic (2016–2020)	Aims to eliminate child labor by 2020. Sets targets and indicators for poverty reduction, health, education, institutional coordination, awareness-raising, and information sharing.(18, 20, 59, 90) In 2016, partnered with the ILO to implement initiatives that aim to remove children and youth from exploitative street work.(11)
National Action Plan Against Human Trafficking and the Smuggling of Migrants	Aims to combat human trafficking and the smuggling of migrants through strategic objectives, including prevention, investigation and prosecution, and victim assistance and protection.(79, 86, 91) The Government reported that this plan remained in effect for 2016 despite the fact that the policy indicated its conclusion in 2014. In 2016, conducted training sessions for judges on human trafficking.(30)
Education Pact (2014–2030)	Seeks to improve the quality of, and access to, primary and secondary education by increasing attendance and graduation rates, and enrolling more students in the Extended School Day Program. Includes strategies to combat child labor.(59, 92, 93) Implemented by the Ministry of Education and supported by World Bank. In 2016, focused on improving recruitment and training of school teachers.(93)
National Development Strategy 2030 (END)	Aims to reduce poverty and inequality, and includes programs that aim to combat child labor and provide universal education to all children. Includes strategies to expand access to secondary school, including for students without identity documents.(20, 59, 94) Implemented by the Ministry of Economy.(94) In 2016, carried out activities to improve access to education and health services to children living near sugarcane plantations (bateyes).(95)

[‡] The Government has other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (1, 70, 84, 96, 97)

Efforts to implement child labor elimination policies in the Dominican Republic have been slowed by an insufficient allocation of resources.(71, 96)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, including the Dominican Republic, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor in the Dominican Republic and improve the evidence base on child labor through research. For additional information about USDOL's work, please see our Web site.(98)
Progressing with Solidarity (PROSOLI)†	Government program that provides conditional cash transfers for low income families to increase children's school attendance and reduce child labor.(59, 70, 96, 97). In 2016, launched an action plan to combat violence against children and provided vocational training programs and labor rights education to 40,000 at-risk youth.(96, 99, 100) In addition, the Vice President's Office reported that PROSOLI's School Attendance and School Subsidy Incentives in 2015 benefited 325,217 students, reducing school dropout rates among project participants by 3.8 percent and children's vulnerability to child labor.(69, 97)
Progressing Together (Progresando Unidos)	Government program financed by the World Bank that aims to reduce extreme poverty among 180,000 participants in 14 provinces, including Santo Domingo. Includes activities that enhance access to decent work for youth.(101, 102) In 2016, provided technical and vocational training programs to 42,000 at-risk youth.(103)
Extended School Day Program (Jornada Escolar Extendida)†	Ministry of Education program to extend school hours to a full day (8 a.m. to 4 p.m.) to improve educational achievement and reduce child labor.(12, 104, 105) A 2016 study showed that the program contributed to increasing the school enrollment rate from 87.56 percent in the 2011-2012 school year to 94.14 percent in 2015-2016.(106)
Regional Initiatives for the Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America and the Caribbean (2014–2018)	$2.2 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO that aim to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean, including the Dominican Republic. Seeks to develop information systems on the worst forms of child labor and increase youth employment in the Dominican Republic.(107)
Empowering and Supporting the Human Rights of Children and Youth (2012–2018)	$1.2 million Government of Canada-funded, 6-year project that aims to build the capacity of government agencies and civil society organizations that are responsible for protecting children, especially those of Haitian descent, from sexual and labor exploitation.(108)
Line 700 Hotline†	Office of the First Lady's free hotline to enable citizens to report cases of the worst forms of child labor. In 2016, conducted awareness campaigns to increase its visibility. (69, 109)
Rooms to Grow and Learn†	Government after-school programs that seek to prevent children from working by keeping them in a creative learning environment outside of normal classroom hours.(12, 110, 111)
Youth Alert Program (2012–2017)	USAID-funded project to protect at-risk youth from crime and promote access to education and vocational training programs, including for youth without identity documents. During 2016, benefited 55,203 youth, including by assisting 841 to obtain identity documents.(50, 112, 113)
UNICEF Country Program (2012–2016)	$13.7 million UNICEF funded program that supports the Government's efforts to improve education, health, social inclusion, and protection for children in the Dominican Republic. Includes projects to increase birth registration rates and build the capacity of relevant government agencies to protect children from violence, sexual exploitation, and trafficking.(114-116)

† Program is funded by the Government of the Dominican Republic.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(16, 69, 71, 104, 117, 118)

In an effort to improve the national education system, the Government has allocated 4 percent of the national GDP in its budget for primary and secondary education for the fourth consecutive year.(18, 20, 59) While the Progressing with Solidarity (PROSOLI) program has been effective in reducing child labor and increasing school enrollment among its project participants, the program requires participants to present identification documents to access program benefits, which limits the participation of those individuals lacking such documentation, many of whom are particularly vulnerable to child labor.(12) Although the Dominican Republic has programs that target the worst forms of child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly commercial sexual exploitation and harmful work in agricultural areas.(31, 86)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Dominican Republic (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Amend the Labor Code to raise the general minimum age for hazardous work to 18 and ensure that children ages 16 to 18 who are permitted to engage in hazardous activities are fully protected by the law.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that penalties for the commercial sexual exploitation of children are adequate.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
	Ensure the law establishes a minimum age of 18 for compulsory military recruitment in situations of national defense or emergency.	2014 – 2016
Enforcement	Take concrete steps to remedy violations of Dominican law and policies that allow all children without birth certificates or other identity documents to enroll in primary and secondary education and complete schooling, including by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Undertaking training of school administrators; ■ Conducting public awareness campaigns; ■ Establishing a complaint and redress system; and ■ Penalizing those school officials that violate the law or policies regarding school registration for undocumented children. 	2011 – 2016
	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015 – 2016
	Publish complete information on the number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed and collected, as well as the training for criminal law investigators related to the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors and resources for criminal investigators responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce, especially in remote rural areas.	2009 – 2016
	Strengthen the enforcement of child labor laws by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Reforming the two-tiered inspection system to support the MT's ability to enforce laws prohibiting child labor and discourage the use of child labor by employers; ■ Following the MT's 2008 General Inspection Protocol and 2011 Inspection Protocol for Agriculture to establish a system to verify the age of young workers to better protect children without birth certificates or other legal documentation from exploitation; ■ Training inspectors to improve the quality of interviews, gather consistent documentation, conduct timely re-inspection to ensure compliance, and use inspection data to enable prosecution; and ■ Ensuring that labor inspectors, as needed, are able to communicate with Creole-speaking workers, including those who may be underage, to adequately conduct inspections for child labor violations. 	2012 – 2016
	Examine whether the inspection ratio for each labor inspector is appropriate to ensure the quality and scope of inspections.	2016
	Ensure CONANI has sufficient resources and facilities to provide the necessary care for victims of the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Improve coordination between the MT and the AG to ensure violations are effectively investigated and prosecuted.	2013 – 2016
Coordination	Ensure that the CDN's Local and Municipal Committees have sufficient resources to effectively coordinate efforts to address child labor.	2013 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure that appropriate funding exists to effectively implement and coordinate policies related to child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education accessible for all children, including those of Haitian descent, by — <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Ensuring that all children are able to obtain identity documents to reduce their vulnerability to labor exploitation; and Addressing the specific educational needs of vulnerable populations, including unaccompanied migrant children, children of parents who have been deported, and undocumented children. 	2011 – 2016
Social Programs	Eliminate the requirement that individuals present identity documents to participate in social programs intended to combat child labor, including in the PROSOLI program.	2012 – 2016
	Expand social protection programs, particularly in commercial sexual exploitation and harmful agricultural work.	2010 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
75. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies;" "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Ecuador made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government significantly increased the number of labor inspectors, up from 139 in 2015 to 206. The Government also piloted a multi-sectoral protocol designed to facilitate identification and referral of child labor cases at the local level and developed a tool to collect information on child labor cases and better identify, assist, and monitor children in child labor. In addition, the Government launched “Give Dignity,” a campaign to further the goals of the National Program to Combat Child Begging, and signed 38 cooperative agreements to implement the program investing over $1.5 million to provide social services and training to more than 6,000 people, including child beggars. However, children in Ecuador perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. In addition, Ecuador lacks effective coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms, and child labor programs that provide adequate coverage of the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ecuador perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Ecuador.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.5 (115,930)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	97.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	3.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		108.8

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of bananas, [†] palm oil, [†] timber, [†] and flowers, [†] including the use of chemical products and machetes (3, 7-12)
	Fishing [†] (11-13)
Industry	Gold mining [†] and small-scale mining [†] (13, 14)
	Production of bricks [†] (4, 15)
	Construction, [†] including loading construction material, mixing materials to make concrete, and brickwork (4, 12, 15, 16)
Services	Domestic work [†] (11)
	Unpaid household services (2)
	Street work, including begging, shoe shining, selling newspapers, and vending (10-13, 17, 18)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (17, 19-22)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking and robbery (4, 22)
	Forced recruitment of children by Colombian non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict.(16, 23, 24)
	Use in the production of pornography (10)
	Forced labor in domestic work, street vending, and begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (18, 21, 25, 26)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Most children in child labor in Ecuador work in agriculture on small- and medium-sized farms; many of them perform dangerous tasks, such as using chemicals and machetes in banana and palm plantations.(4)

Children in Ecuador, particularly girls from poor families and migrant children from other Latin American countries, are also used in commercial sexual exploitation, including around illegal mines.(3, 4). Often migrating from rural towns to larger cities, children also engage in hazardous work in the production of construction materials.(4) In 2016, the Government reported an increase in human traffickers’ use of social media to recruit children.(4) Some of these children are trafficked to be exploited abroad, either sexually or for labor, while others are used in illicit activities, including drug trafficking and robbery. Children are also trafficked from small towns in the highlands to larger cities to be forced into begging and street vending.(4). Indigenous, Afro-Ecuadorian, and Colombian refugee children are especially vulnerable to human trafficking and are often recruited into forced labor under false promises of employment.(22)

Despite education being free in Ecuador, children face barriers to accessing education, including having to pay for uniforms and books, lack of space in public schools, and lack of transportation for children who must attend schools far from their homes.(27, 28) The 2016 earthquake exacerbated the problem of children traveling long distances to reach schools. Many indigenous children abandon school early, both in rural and urban areas.(12, 20) Specifically, almost half of all indigenous children in rural areas, and 37 to 40 percent of those in urban areas, do not attend secondary school, which can make them more vulnerable to child labor.(29) In March 2016, the Ministry of Education began implementing an administrative management system that was modified to capture child labor data to expand the knowledge base on child labor.(30)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ecuador has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). The legal framework in Ecuador appears to be sufficient to address and protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Section 5, Article 46 of the Constitution; Title V, Chapter 1, Article 82 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code (31, 32)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Title I, Article 2 and Title V, Chapter 1, Article 87 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code (32)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Title II, Chapter 1, Article 5 and Chapter 2, Article 8 of Resolution No. 016 of 2008; Article 5 of Ministerial Accord MDT–2015–0131 (33, 34)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 82, 91, 105, and 213 of the Integral Penal Code(3, 35)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 91, and 213 of the Integral Penal Code (35)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 91, 101, 103and 104 of the Integral Penal Code (35)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Articles 219 and 220 of the Integral Penal Code (35)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Title III, Chapter 4, Article 57 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code; Article 161 of the Constitution.(31, 32)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Section IV, Article 127 of the Penal Code; Title III, Chapter 4, Article 57 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code ; Article 161 of the Constitution.(31, 32, 35)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Chapter 5, Article 38 of the Organic Intercultural Education Law (36)
Free Public Education	Yes		Title VII, Article 4 of the Organic Intercultural Education Law; Chapter 5, Article 28 of the Constitution (31, 36)

* No conscription (31)

The law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, as the use, procuring, and offering of children for pornographic performances is not criminally prohibited.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Industrial Relations (MOL)	Monitor child labor, conduct labor inspections at work sites, and enforce child labor laws in the formal sector. Administer sanctions against companies found using child labor and collect fines.(3, 8, 10)
Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion (MIES)	Provide remediation services to child laborers and their families. Assist victims of child labor found in the informal sector.(3, 37) With the Institute for Children and Families (INFA), provide social services and assist children who are victims of abuse, human trafficking, exploitative child labor, and sexual exploitation.(37, 38) Run seven protection centers staffed by social workers, doctors, psychologists, and educators.(37)
Attorney General's Office	Enforce criminal laws against child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking.(16, 39)
Ministry of Interior	Oversee and evaluate all police actions, including the Judicial Anti-Trafficking Police Unit (ATU) and the National Police Unit for Crimes against Children and Adolescents (DINAPEN). ATU investigates human trafficking cases, rescues victims, and arrests traffickers.(10) DINAPEN investigates all crimes against children, including abuse, sexual exploitation, sex tourism, smuggling, kidnapping, exploitative child labor, and forced labor.(18, 40) DINAPEN anti-trafficking unit also investigates child trafficking cases.(3)
Office of the Prosecutor	Try cases related to the worst forms of child labor.(10)
Ministry of Education	Help victims of child labor reintegrate into school through the Special Protection program.(41)

According to the ILO, one of the major obstacles in combating child labor in Ecuador is the absence of an effective mechanism for receiving, routing, and addressing child labor charges and complaints.(4) While the Government has created new mechanisms for identifying and referring child labor victims, it does not apply them consistently and uniformly.(4) Children recruited to commit illegal acts may end up in juvenile detention centers, despite Ecuadorian law prohibiting this. In addition, while Ecuadorian laws and regulations governing child labor are comprehensive, those regarding hazardous work are not equally enforced in rural areas and family-run businesses.(4)

Although the Government significantly increased the number of labor inspectors in 2016, they are insufficient for the size of Ecuador's workforce, which includes more than 4.8 million workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Ecuador should employ about 323 labor inspectors.(3, 4, 42-44) Furthermore, inspectors often lack the necessary resources, such as transportation, to fulfill their mandate.(3, 4, 39) Training guides for labor inspectors developed by the Government and ILO were released in 2016.(4, 39) In May 2016, training for labor inspectors on child labor and labor risks was extended to also include field officers from the Ministry of Labor's Project to Eradicate Child Labor.(30) The Government also organized a training of trainers on child labor eradication.(45) However, labor inspectors still lack adequate knowledge of child labor laws and processes for referring children to the appropriate social services and imposing penalties consistent with the law.(3)

In 2016, the Government implemented the National Plan of Progressive Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (2014–2017), a strategy to identify the most risk-prone sectors for child labor and improve the quality and targeting of inspections.(3, 46)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Ecuador took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

National Police Unit for Crimes against Children and Adolescents (DINAPEN) officers lack sufficient human and material resources to adequately investigate the use of children in the trafficking of drugs.(3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-institutional Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinate Government efforts to combat child labor.(3) Last convened in April 2016.(46)
Inter-Agency Committee against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate Government efforts to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking. Established as part of the National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, Sexual and Labor Exploitation, and other Forms of Exploitation.(39) Led by MOI, involves several ministries and government agencies.(16)
Coordinating Ministry of Social Development (MCDS)	Convene government ministries to discuss issues, including child labor.(3) In 2015, improved protection and shelter services for victims of human trafficking.(39)
National Council for Intergenerational Equity (CNII)	Coordinate interagency efforts to protect vulnerable populations, including children.(3)
Local Autonomous Governments	Participate in coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor and implement the guidelines provided by CNII.(3) Mayors are held accountable to ensure that children do not work, and can be fined if children are found working.(47)
Ministry of Tourism and DINAPEN	Coordinate prevention work against the commercial sexual exploitation of minors.(39, 48)
Inter-Agency Table for the Eradication of Child Labor (Mesa Interinstitucional de Erradicación del Trabajo Infantil)	Coordinates regional efforts to address child labor.(49) Participants include MIES; regional councils of Childhood and Adolescence; Ministries of Education, Labor, and Interior; MCDS; DINAPEN; and the Attorney General's Office.(49) Met regularly in 2016 or when a new case regarding child exploitation was presented.(46)

Weak coordination between ministries providing social services has caused difficulties in ensuring that children rescued from working in the informal sector receive adequate social assistance.(4) In 2016, the Government launched Sistema Unico de Registro de Trabajo Infantil (SURTI), a platform to register and monitor child labor cases; improve coordination between government agencies, ministries, and police assisting child labor victims; and inform public policies relating to child labor prevention and eradication.(50) The Government also participated in piloting the Routes of Restitution of Rights in Child Labor (RRD), a multi-sectoral protocol designed to facilitate identification and referral of child labor cases at the local level in Guamote and Quinde.(4, 51, 52) Research was unable to determine if SURTI and RRD are linked.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan to Eradicate Child Labor (2015–2017)	Establish strategy to eradicate child labor in Ecuador by 2017.(3) The Plan, approved in 2016, is being implemented.(46)
National Plan for Good Living (2013–2017) (Plan Nacional del Buen Vivir)	Improve living conditions for all citizens and promote social inclusion and decent work, including eradicating child labor.(53) In 2016, the Government implemented the awareness-raising campaign, Ecuador Without Child Labor.(46)
National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, Sexual and Labor Exploitation, and other Forms of Exploitation	Establish processes to prevent, investigate, and impose legal sanctions against human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and other forms of abuse. Enacted by decree in 2006 to protect and restore the rights of victims.(22, 54, 55) In 2016, the Government trained labor inspectors and other relevant actors on the List of Hazardous Occupations or Activities prohibited for children.(46)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
UDSOL-funded initiatives	Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (GAP) , a $15.9 million project implemented by the Global March to End Child Labor.(56) Building Effective Policies Against Child Labor in Ecuador and Panama (2012–2016) , a $3.5 million project implemented by the ILO.(57) EducaFuturo Project (2012–2017) , a $6.5 million project implemented by Partners of the Americas, in collaboration with Expoflores, COMUNIDEC, and FUDELA.(58) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site.
Project to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI) (2014–2017)	MOL project under the National Plan for Good Living to prevent hazardous child labor in agriculture, manufacturing, construction, and mining. In the first trimester of 2016, PETI launched awareness raising campaigns in 13 cities, reaching around 3,500 people nationwide.(46, 59) In 2016, PETI trained and raised awareness of 20,755 people on child labor and referred 368 children and adolescents to receive social services due to their vulnerability to child labor.(46)
Business Network for a Child Labor Free Ecuador	UN initiative, works to gain commitment from participating industries to promote the prevention and elimination of child labor in their supply chains.(60–62) In 2016, coordinated donations to benefit children affected by the April 2016 earthquake.(46) Through this program, the Government and the Government of Brazil exchanged best practices to address child labor.(46)
Prevention of Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents†	Ministry of Tourism program that seeks to prevent commercial sexual exploitation by creating regulations and awareness campaigns in the tourism sector.(63) In 2016, for the first time, all travel agencies and tourist guides were required to take online training on how to detect child labor exploitation in all its forms to obtain work permits in the tourism industry.(46)
National Program to Combat Child Begging†	Raises awareness about child begging; aims to facilitate social services for children begging in the streets.(64, 65) In 2016, the Government launched “Give Dignity” (Da Dignidad), a campaign to further program goals, and signed 38 cooperative agreements, investing over $1.5 million and helping more than 6,000 people.(65) Although no recent statistical data are available on the magnitude of begging, 417 children were rescued from begging in the streets of Duran, Guayaquil, and Saborondon between January and March 2016.(46)
Eloy Alfaro Workers’ Symphonic Orchestra (Orquesta Sinfónica de los Trabajadores Eloy Alfaro)*†	Established by MOL in 2016, orchestra performs to raise awareness of child labor. Comprises more than 200 former child laborers from Quito and Cuenca. MOL provides funding for daily music lessons for the children.(4) In 2016, performed a child labor awareness-raising concert, with 1,000 people attending.(46)
Grants for Human Development†	MIES conditional cash transfer program supplements household income, targeting vulnerable families.(14, 66, 67) In 2016, budgetary constraints reduced the number of families in the program by 75 percent.(4)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Ecuador.

‡ The Government has other social programs which may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(4, 10, 56, 68)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ecuador (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law prohibits the use, procurement, and offering of children for pornographic performances.	2016
	Ensure that the law specifically prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and distribution of drugs.	2016
Enforcement	Publish the number of labor inspections done by site visit and desk review, penalties imposed and collected for child labor violations, and criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions and convictions relating to the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that children recruited by adults to commit illegal acts are not placed in juvenile detention centers.	2016
	Ensure that laws and regulations governing child labor, and especially hazardous labor, are enforced consistently throughout the country, including in rural areas and family-run businesses.	2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing child labor laws in accordance with the ILO recommendation.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that inspectors receive sufficient resources, such as transportation and translators, to effectively carry out their duties.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that labor inspectors have sufficient knowledge of existing laws, penalties, and processes for referring victims to social services.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that police investigators receive sufficient resources to investigate cases of the worst forms of child labor.	2016
Coordination	Strengthen coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education, particularly secondary education, accessible for all children, including indigenous children and children from rural areas, by removing school-related fees, increasing classroom space, and providing adequate transportation.	2014–2016
	Expand child labor programs that target the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
43. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
44. UN. "World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex"; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Egypt

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Egypt made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government participated in a school feeding program that reached 13.3 million students and participated in a new program intended to expand access to education to 36,000 children. Almost all Syrian refugee children were enrolled in formal or non-formal education in 2016. The Government held trainings and awareness-raising events on issues of child trafficking. However, children in Egypt are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in quarrying limestone and in commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking. The Government did not publish data on the enforcement of child labor laws. In addition, programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Egypt engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in quarrying limestone and in commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking. (1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Egypt.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10 to 14.	2.9 (246,179)
Attending School (%)	10 to 14	93.8
Combining Work and School (%)	10 to 14	1.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		103.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Survey of Young People in Egypt, 2009.(8)

Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are not comparable with data published in the previous version of this report because of differences between surveys used to collect the data.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton (3, 9-11)
	Caring for livestock (3, 12)
	Fishing, activities unknown (3, 13)
Industry	Quarrying [†] limestone (1-4)
	Making bricks (3, 14-16)
	Working in carpentry workshops (3, 17)
	Construction, activities unknown (3, 18)
	Working in aluminum factories (3, 19)
Services	Domestic work (3, 12, 20)
	Repairing automobiles (3, 14)
	Street work, including selling goods, collecting garbage, and sweeping (3, 11, 17, 21)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [†]	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking (3, 5)
	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking (3, 5, 6)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 5, 22)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some girls are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation under the pretext of “temporary marriage” to wealthy foreign men, mostly from Persian Gulf countries.(3, 5) Some Egyptian children are trafficked to Italy, where they are used for bonded child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and illicit activities.(5, 23-27)

According to the Child Law, education is free through the basic level, consisting of 6 years of basic and 3 years of preparatory education.(28, 29) However, in practice, some schools charge fees for attendance, and the costs of books and uniforms are prohibitive for many families. As a result, children drop out of school.(13) In addition, cultural factors prevent some parents from sending their daughters to school.(13)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Egypt has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Egypt's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 64 of the Child Law (28)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 1 of Ministry of Manpower's Decree 118 (30)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 1-2 of Ministry of Manpower's Decree 118 (30)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 89 of the Constitution; Article 291 of the Penal Code as amended in the Child Law; Articles 2-3 of the Law on Combating Human Trafficking (28, 29, 31)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 89 of the Constitution; Article 291 of the Penal Code as amended in the Child Law; Articles 2-3 of the Law on Combating Human Trafficking (28, 29, 31)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Article 116- bis (a) of the Child Law and Article 291 of the Penal Code as amended in the Child Law; Articles 2-3 of the Law on Combating Human Trafficking (28, 31)

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 34 of the Law on Narcotics; Article 65 of the Child Law; Article 2.2 of Ministry of Manpower's Decree 118 (28, 30, 32)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 1 of the Law on Military and National Service (33)
State Voluntary	Yes	15	Ministry of Defense Guidelines on Youth Volunteers in the Armed Forces (34)
Non-State Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 7-bis(b) of the Child Law (28)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15 [‡]	Article 59(1) of the Child Law; Articles 80 and 238 of the Constitution (28, 29)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 54 of the Child Law (28)

[‡] Age calculated based on available information (29)

Laws prohibiting the commercial sexual exploitation of children are not comprehensive enough to criminally prohibit the procuring of a child in all circumstances for pornography or pornographic performances.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Manpower	Enforce child labor laws and regulations, including receiving and investigating child labor complaints.(35) Inspectors conduct routine labor inspections and refer instances of illegal child labor to the Ministries of the Interior and Justice.(36)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforce laws and regulations prohibiting human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(37)
Ministry of Justice, Prosecutor General's Office	Prosecute violation of laws related to the worst forms of child labor and human trafficking.(37)
Ministry of Local Development	Provide administrative and logistical support for the enforcement of child labor laws.(38) Administer the Child Protection Committees.(36)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Egypt took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2016, the Government held 22 training events, including for prosecutors, law enforcement officials, and judges. The Government also held awareness-raising events on topics such as child trafficking, reaching almost 4,000 individuals.⁽⁴¹⁾ The Government investigated 11 cases of selling children, kidnapping children for the purpose of exploitation, and using children in illicit activities, and charged 2 individuals. However, comprehensive statistics on the number of investigations, violations, and prosecutions were unavailable because the data that the Government provided did not distinguish among several categories of cases, including child trafficking and organ trafficking.⁽⁴¹⁾

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for Childhood and Motherhood (NCCM)	Coordinate enforcement of laws related to child labor, including its worst forms. ⁽³⁾ Provide technical support and training for the Ministry of Manpower's inspectors on child labor. ⁽³⁶⁾ Identify and monitor at-risk children. Manage two 24-hour hotlines, receiving reports of child labor and child trafficking. ⁽³⁶⁾
National Coordinating Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate the efforts of the Ministries of Manpower, Justice, Social Solidarity, and the Interior; the Council for Human Rights, Childhood, and Motherhood; and the Council for Women to draft a National Strategy to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor. ⁽³⁵⁾
National Coordination Committee on Preventing Illegal Migration and Combating Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking. In 2016, merged with the National Coordinating Committee on Combating and Preventing Illegal Migration to improve coordination and accelerate Government efforts to address human trafficking. ^(3, 42) Led by an Ambassador appointed by the Prime Minister, the new committee comprises 18 government entities, including the Ministries of the Interior and Manpower. ⁽³⁹⁾

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Protection Committees	Coordinate child protection efforts at the local level. Organized by the Ministry of Local Development and the NCCM, and chaired by the local governors in each governorate, with subcommittees at each police station.(36)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Second National Plan of Action Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Aims to provide timelines and identify roles of Government agencies responsible for assisting children engaged in child labor.(35) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
Third National Plan of Action Against Human Trafficking (2016–2021) [†]	Aims to maintain referral mechanisms, train law enforcement officials, and combat trafficking of street children.(35, 42)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Enhancing Access of Children to Education and Fighting Child Labor (2014–2018)	$65 million, EU-funded, 4-year project implemented by the WFP provides food security for up to 100,000 children at risk of child labor, and financial assistance to 400,000 family members to compensate for wages that child labor would have otherwise generated, enabling children to attend school. Supports 50,000 households in income-generating activities to help keep their children in school.(43) By the end of 2016, the project reached 13.3 million students in 16 governorates. The Government is working to expand this project to include all students enrolled in public schools.(3)
Expanding Access to Education and Protection for at Risk Children in Egypt (2016–2021) [*]	$32 million, EU-funded, project implemented by UNICEF in cooperation with the Ministry of Education and NCCM to expand access to education for 36,000 children, including 6,000 children with disabilities, and to support 15 Child Protection Committees in 15 governorates.(44)
Solidarity and Dignity Initiative of the Cash Transfer Program (2015–2017) [†]	Provides a monthly income supplement to poor families, conditional on keeping their children at school, or unconditional for the elderly and family members with disabilities. The Initiative aims to reach 1.5 million households by 2017.(45)
Positive Life Alternatives for Egyptian Youth at-Risk of Irregular Migration Program (2015–2017)	$3.2 million, USAID-funded, 2-year project implemented by the IOM supports activities that include the goal of eliminating the worst forms of child labor, specifically through raising awareness among children and youth on the dangers of irregular migration and trafficking in persons, and building technical capacity of service providers for at-risk children.(46, 47) In 2016, the project held a workshop and study tour for 28 Government officials and community leaders in advance of a campaign to raise awareness about the risk of irregular migration and increase prosecutions and convictions of traffickers.(39)
Shelters for Children [‡]	Shelters operated by the Ministry of Social Solidarity for victims of trafficking, and Dar as-Salam, operated by the NCCM and an NGO called Face, for a variety of project participants, including child victims of trafficking and forced labor. Dar as-Salam provides social services, including psychological counselling and health services.(41) In 2016, just under 5,600 children benefited from Dar as-Salam services.(41)

^{*} Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Egypt.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(3, 48, 49)

As of August 2016, UNHCR announced that almost all Syrian refugee children were enrolled in formal or non-formal education.(50) In 2016, the National Council for Childhood and Motherhood (NCCM) held 66 awareness-raising events on human trafficking, reaching approximately 3,000 teachers, students, and residents in areas determined to be at high risk of human trafficking. The NCCM also printed pamphlets on the dangers of child trafficking and raised awareness of existing social services.(41) Although Egypt has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Egypt (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law clearly criminally prohibits the procuring of children for pornography and pornographic performances under all circumstances.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Publish information on the labor inspectorate funding; the number of child labor inspectors, their training, and whether they can assess penalties; the number of penalties imposed that were collected; whether routine and targeted inspections were conducted; and whether unannounced inspections were permitted and conducted.	2011 – 2016
	Publish information on the training of criminal investigators, the numbers of violations found, and convictions.	2011 – 2016
Government Policies	Take steps to implement the Second National Plan of Action Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor.	2016
Social Programs	Ensure universal access to free public education, especially for girls, by addressing the cost of school fees, supplies, and other barriers to education.	2010 – 2016
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2010 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, El Salvador made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved regulations to facilitate the enforcement of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons, including on the referral of criminal child labor cases between law enforcement and social service agencies. The National Council for Children and Adolescents designed a mechanism to monitor the implementation of the National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents. In addition, the Government passed the Educated El Salvador Plan, which aims in part to increase security in schools and improve access to education for vulnerable groups, including children engaged in child labor. However, children in El Salvador engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of sugarcane and in illicit activities, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Law enforcement agencies continue to lack sufficient resources to fully enforce child labor laws, and no penalties for child labor violations were issued in 2016.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in El Salvador engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of sugarcane and in illicit activities, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in El Salvador.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	5.9 (68,431)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	6.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		104.6

	Use by gangs to perform illicit activities, including committing homicides, extortion, and trafficking drugs, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4-6, 13, 21-23)
	Forced begging, domestic work, and street work (2, 5, 6, 11, 23)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2016, El Salvador, like Honduras and Guatemala, continued to be a principal source of the high numbers of unaccompanied children from Central America who were found migrating to the United States.(24, 25) These children often lack economic and educational opportunities and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and recruitment by gangs for illicit activities, such as committing homicides and trafficking drugs.(26-28) Children often emigrate to escape violence, extortion, and forced recruitment by gangs, in addition to seeking economic opportunities and family reunification. Once en route, they become vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 26-29)

Child labor in El Salvador is predominantly male, with boys comprising approximately two-thirds of child laborers ages 5 to 17.(12, 30-32) However, girls comprise the majority of children engaged in domestic service in third-party homes.(2, 12, 19) Children are recruited into gang activity or are threatened by gangs while at school, including through extortion, which may cause children to stop attending school. Children who do not attend school are also more vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms.(5, 6, 21, 29, 33-37) Although government programs have expanded basic education coverage, gang violence, including the extortion of school children, has hindered efforts to increase school enrollment and decrease dropout rates.(36-40) The Educated El Salvador Plan, passed in 2016, outlines additional government efforts to address this problem.(37)

Multiple reports, including by a third-party monitoring group, indicate that the use of child labor in the sugarcane harvest has declined since 2010.(9, 41, 42) However, research could not find official government statistics on the number of children engaged in the production of sugarcane. The published report of the 2015 Multipurpose Household Survey does not contain information on the number of children working in this sector.(12) The Government does not appear to conduct research on hard-to-reach populations who are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in illicit activities.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

El Salvador has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The legal framework in El Salvador appears to be sufficient to address and protect children from child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS)	Inspect registered businesses for labor violations, including child labor.(10, 20) Maintain a child labor unit dedicated to child labor law enforcement issues.(52) Refer cases of alleged crimes of the worst forms of child labor to the Office of the Attorney General.(10)
Office of the Attorney General (AG)	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Maintain the AG's Special Unit on Trafficking in Persons and Related Crimes that consists of 12 prosecutors who investigate human trafficking and related crimes.(6, 10, 11, 47) Refer exploited children to the Salvadoran Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Adolescents (ISNA) for social services.(10)
National Civilian Police (PNC)	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Maintain the PNC's Special Unit on Trafficking in Persons and Related Crimes that investigates cases of human trafficking, including child trafficking.(10, 20, 47) Maintain a hotline that receives complaints about human trafficking for sexual and labor exploitation.(53)
Salvadoran Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Adolescents (ISNA)	Receive referrals from law enforcement agencies on cases of criminal exploitation of children, including for forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation. Provide child victims with services, including shelter, medical attention, psychological help, and legal advice.(54)

* The Government does not publish this information.

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS) reported that its level of funding was inadequate and hampered the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(6) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of El Salvador's workforce, which includes more than 2.7 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, El Salvador should employ roughly 186 inspectors.(58-60) In 2016, the MTPS reported that it conducted 1,008 child labor-specific inspections, through which it found 8 child labor violations. Research did not find information on the sectors or geographical regions in which these inspections were conducted, or on the activities in which these children were engaged.(6)

Reports indicate that the inspection process, which may include complaint-driven and unannounced inspections, can entail multiple visits per site and that the MTPS's process to issue penalties can sometimes take up to 6 months. The Government reports that the Labor Committee of the Legislative Assembly is drafting an updated Labor Procedures Code, which will include provisions to streamline the issuance of penalties.(55, 61) The Salvadoran Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Adolescents (ISNA) reported that in 2016 it assisted 14 children engaged in child labor, including 1 child engaged in dangerous work.(62)

Article 627 of the Labor Code specifies a default fine of no more than $60 per violation of all labor laws, including child labor laws.(44) Reports indicate that this amount is insufficient to deter labor violations.(6) The Government is currently reviewing national legislation to ensure that monetary penalties for all labor violations are proportionate to the nature of the offense.(55, 61, 63)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in El Salvador took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, the Office of the Attorney General (AG) provided training on the 2014 Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons to the National Civilian Police (PNC), immigration officials, and child protection officials. The National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA) also provided trainings on human trafficking issues to immigration officials and trained 25 officials on child commercial sexual exploitation.(6)

In 2016, the AG reported that 6 defendants were convicted in 26 cases of child commercial sexual exploitation involving 35 female victims, with sentences ranging from 8 to 10 years of imprisonment.(6) Criminal law enforcement agencies in El Salvador have reported that they lack sufficient resources to fully investigate and prosecute crimes, including the worst forms of child labor.(16) In addition, reports indicate that increased coordination between the PNC and the AG is needed to improve the investigation and prosecution of criminal child labor violations.(55) In October 2016, the Government approved regulations to facilitate the enforcement of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons and the coordination between the PNC and the AG to improve the investigation and prosecution of criminal child labor violations. The regulations also facilitate the interagency referral of criminal child labor cases between law enforcement agencies and ISNA for social services.(6)

ISNA reported that in 2016 it assisted 40 children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including 16 victims of human trafficking, 13 victims of commercial sexual exploitation, and 11 victims of forced begging.(62)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (CNETI)	Determine and implement government efforts to combat child labor, including the Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms. Chaired by the MTPS and includes 12 government agencies, along with representatives from labor unions, business associations, and NGOs.(2, 12, 20, 65) Use a Web-based monitoring system that allows government agencies to share and analyze information to coordinate the implementation of the Roadmap.(66-68)
National Council Against Trafficking in Persons (CNCTP)	Coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking and implement the National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons.(69) Led by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security and composed of 11 government agencies.(1, 47, 70)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA)	Develop policies to protect the rights of children, including those regarding child labor, and implement LEPINA and the National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (PNPNA).(45, 71, 72) Composed of Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights, ISNA, the Ministry of Public Security and Justice, the AG, the Human Rights Ombudsman, and other agencies. (20) In 2016, provided technical assistance in developing Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights, per LEPINA, and reviewed and created a model to monitor PNPNA implementation.(6, 73)
Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights	Implement CONNA's policies, including the PNPNA, at the departmental and municipal levels, as well as receive complaints of child rights violations at the departmental level.(45, 74-76)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms	Serves as the Government's principal policy for eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Aims to eliminate all child labor by 2020, including by reducing poverty, improving education and health, protecting children's rights, and raising awareness on child labor.(1, 12, 77, 78)
National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (PNPNA) (2013–2023)	Sets government policies aimed at guaranteeing children's rights and protecting them from violence and harm, including the worst forms of child labor. Other objectives include improving health services and access to quality education for children, including children with disabilities, and reducing poverty.(12, 72)
National Action Plan for the PNPNA (2014–2017)	Sets a framework for implementing the PNPNA for 2014–2017. Aims to address PNPNA objectives, including the prevention of violence, the promotion of access to quality education, and the elimination of child labor by focusing on children's and adolescents' rights, gender equality, and social inclusion.(12, 79, 80)
National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons	Defines a comprehensive plan to combat human trafficking of adults and children for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Aims to improve prevention efforts, victim assistance, prosecution, interagency coordination, training, and anti-corruption efforts.(1, 81, 82)
Educated El Salvador Plan [‡]	Outlines six priorities for improving El Salvador's national education system, including increasing security in schools and improving access to education for vulnerable groups, including children engaged in child labor.(37) The Legislative Assembly has yet to fund the plan.(6)
Alliance for Prosperity in the Northern Triangle	Aims to create economic growth, increase educational and vocational training opportunities for youth, and reduce violence in Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador, in part to reduce the number of unaccompanied minors who leave El Salvador and these countries for the United States and who are vulnerable to human trafficking. Signed by the presidents of each country in 2014.(83-85)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(6, 86-92)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Youth Policy (2010–2024).(93)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL-funded, $14 million Eliminating Child Labor in El Salvador Through Economic Empowerment and Social Inclusion (2010–2016), $13 million Youth Pathways–Central America (2015–2019), and Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development . Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
Don't Risk Your Lives Public Awareness Campaign [†]	CONNA campaign that educates children and their families to the dangers of irregular and unaccompanied migration, including the risks of being trafficked and forced to engage in commercial sexual exploitation. Supported by UNICEF and the IOM.(55, 61, 94)

Program	Description
Public Awareness Campaigns on Child Labor [†]	Government public-awareness campaigns implemented by the Ministry of Education (MINED), the MTPS, the Ministry of Health, and CONNA to inform children about the dangers of child labor, including manufacturing and handling fireworks.(13, 16, 95, 96) During the reporting period, the MTPS, with the support of the EU and CARE International, and the Ministries of Governance and Agriculture, each conducted awareness campaigns.(13)
Public Awareness Campaign on Dangers of Irregular Migration [†]	Ministry of Foreign Affairs campaign to raise public awareness about the dangers of irregular migration, including the risk of human trafficking. Conducted through traditional and social media channels.(62)
Solidarity Communities Programs [†]	Government programs that aim to reduce social exclusion and boost household income by increasing access to public services and building human capital. Includes Health and Education Bonus Programs that assist families with cash transfers conditioned on children's school attendance and health checkups.(1, 97) Includes the Temporary Income Support Program (PATI) that provides financial support and vocational training to beneficiaries ages 16 and older.(1, 97) In 2016, program assisted families across 125 municipalities with the highest rates of poverty.(98)
School Prevention and Security Plan [†]	Programs implemented by MINED, the Ministry of Justice and Public Security, and the PNC in schools with high levels of violence. Includes activities such as the provision of psychological help, skills workshops for youth, and increased police patrols.(99, 100) Expanded in 2015–2016 to operate in approximately 1,000 schools.(40)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of El Salvador.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(11, 16, 90, 99, 101-107)

The Government implements several programs to reduce the worst forms of child labor by assisting poor families and school children; however, research found no evidence that the Government has programs that assist child laborers who may not be living with their families or attending school, such as children engaged in domestic work. Research could also not determine whether the Government's efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor in the production of sugarcane addressed the full scope of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in El Salvador (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Provide sufficient funding and resources to the MTPS and criminal law enforcement agencies to fully enforce child labor laws.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that the number of labor inspectors is sufficient to fully enforce child labor laws.	2014 – 2016
	Publish information on whether routine inspections are targeted to high-risk sectors, as well as on the sectors and geographical regions in which inspections are conducted and on the activities in which children are engaged as a result of inspections.	2014 – 2016
	Strengthen enforcement of child labor and other laws by streamlining the labor inspection process and the issuance of fines.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that penalties are imposed and fines are collected for child labor violations.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that monetary penalties for child labor violations are proportionate to the nature and seriousness of the offense.	2009 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of criminal prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Improve coordination between the PNC and the AG in their investigation and prosecution of criminal cases, including by implementing the regulations of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Youth Policy for 2010–2024.	2014 – 2016
Social Programs	Collect and publish government statistics on the number of children engaged in the production of sugarcane.	2016
	Conduct a study on the use of children in illicit activities.	2009 – 2016
	Improve children's access to education by ensuring that school children are safe in schools.	2011 – 2016
	Implement programs to address child labor in domestic work and expand programs to combat child labor in the production of sugarcane.	2014 – 2016

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 58. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited March 18, 2017]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
59. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
60. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies;" "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Eritrea

NO ADVANCEMENT – NO EFFORTS AND COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2016, Eritrea made no efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor and was also complicit in the use of forced child labor. In addition to not making any efforts, Eritrea is receiving an assessment of no advancement due to its continued requirement that children in grades 9 to 11 participate in a national program called Maetot, where they engage in compulsory labor in agricultural, environmental, and hygiene-related public works projects. Children were also forced to enroll in the Government's compulsory military training program. The Government does not make law enforcement data publicly available and national laws and regulations do not identify hazardous occupations or activities prohibited for children. In addition, the Government does not have a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Eritrea engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Eritrea. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		39.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(3)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including the production of corn, wheat, and sorghum (1, 5)
	Herding livestock (1)
Industry	Small-scale manufacturing (6, 7)
	Mining (8)
Services	Domestic work (1, 6)
	Working in garages, bicycle repair shops, tea and coffee shops, and metal workshops (1, 6, 9)
	Street work, including selling cigarettes, newspapers, and chewing gum; cleaning cars; begging; and transporting goods on donkey carts or tricycles (1, 10, 11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (7, 12)
	Compulsory participation in Active National Service or the Popular Army prior to the age of 18 for military training, and in agricultural and domestic work (1, 12-16)
	Forced labor, including in agriculture and begging (8, 12, 13, 16, 17)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The Ministry of Education operates a national program, Maetot, under which children in grades 9 to 11 are required to engage in compulsory labor in public works projects during their summer holidays, in some cases for as long as 2 months.(1, 12, 16, 18) Adolescents may be required to dig irrigation ditches or canals, maintain agricultural terracing, or produce and maintain school furniture.(1, 16)

The Proclamation on National Service No. 82/1995 establishes compulsory military training and service, known as Active National Service, for all citizens ages 18 to 40.(19) To graduate from high school and meet the compulsory training component of National Service, students are required to complete their final year of schooling (grade 12) at the Sawa Education and Military Training Camp; these students have typically reached age 18, but some are reportedly younger.(1, 12, 13, 15, 19) Limited evidence suggests that military training includes military discipline and procedures, weapons training, and a 2- to 4-week war simulation.(15) Research found that some students are forced to conduct agricultural activities on government-owned farms, in addition to their military training, and girls may be subject to forced domestic work in military training centers.(16)

The uncertain length of service, inability to earn higher wages in the private sector, and notoriously harsh working conditions in the National Service provoked a significant number of youth, including unaccompanied minors, to flee Eritrea and may have also encouraged many to resort to the use of international smuggling or human trafficking networks.(12, 13, 15, 20-22) Adolescent children who attempted to leave Eritrea were sometimes detained or forced to undergo military training, despite being younger than the minimum age of 18 for compulsory military recruitment.(12, 15, 21)

Children face difficulty accessing education due to a shortage of schools; the inability to afford uniforms, supplies, and transportation; and a lack of birth registration, which is required to attend school.(1, 23)

Research did not find information on whether the Government made an effort to collect or publish data on the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Eritrea has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention		Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Eritrea's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	14	Article 68 of the Labour Proclamation (24)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 565 and 605 of the Penal Code (25)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 605–607 of the Penal Code (25)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 594–595, 604–605, and 609 of the Penal Code (25)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Article 510 of the Penal Code (25)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	Articles 7 and 8 of the Proclamation on National Service (19)
State Voluntary	N/A
Non-State Compulsory	No		Article 282(d) of the Penal Code (25)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	No

In May 2015, the Government announced that it was considering the establishment of a new Criminal Code that contains prohibitions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. However, the Code has not yet been proclaimed.(26) Laws regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children are insufficient because the procurement and offering of a child for prostitution and the use, procurement, and offering of a child for the production of pornography and pornographic performances are not criminally prohibited.(25)

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working outside formal employment relationships, such as those who are self-employed.(24, 27)

Article 69 of the Labour Proclamation authorizes the Minister to issue a list of activities prohibited to children under age 18; however, the Government has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.(24, 28) Laws related to the use of children in illicit activities are not sufficient because offering and procuring a child for the production and trafficking of drugs are not criminally prohibited.(25) Minimum age for voluntary military service is not applicable to Eritrea because all citizens ages 18 to 40 have the compulsory duty of performing Active National Service under the Proclamation on National Service No. 82/1995.(19)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and most enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Welfare	Enforce child labor laws.(26) According to the Government, child labor inspectors operate in every administrative zone.(29)
Popular Army	Perform night patrols and refer cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children or other exploitative practices to the Eritrean Police.(10, 18)
Eritrean Police	Enforce laws and investigate referred cases of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(10, 18)
National Security Administration	Work with the Eritrean police to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(30)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Eritrea took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
Comprehensive Child Policies	Aims to prevent and eliminate child labor in Eritrea. Aligns with the UN Strategic Partnership Cooperation Framework.(18)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(31, 32)

Although it does not appear that there are any laws that provide for free and compulsory education, there is a policy that sufficiently provides for free and compulsory education.(32)

Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Comprehensive Child Policies. The Government's compulsory military training requirement for Active National Service for students in grade 12 may diminish the impact of Eritrea's policies to combat the worst forms of child labor on all those wishing to obtain high school diplomas. In addition, the Government's continued use of compulsory labor through the Maetot program may also diminish these efforts.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government participated in one program that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
UNICEF Country Program (2013–2016)	UNICEF program, in collaboration with the Government, that improved the quality of basic education.(23) UNICEF also worked with the Ministry of Labor to provide social integration and counseling services to approximately 3,500 children vulnerable to street work.(33)

Although the Government participates in a program that targets children vulnerable to street work, the scope of this program is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Furthermore, research found no evidence of programs that target children working in agriculture and domestic work and that specifically address the worst forms of child labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Eritrea (Table 10).

Table 10. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify ILO C. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.	2013 – 2016
	Establish a minimum age for hazardous work and determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that all children are protected by minimum age laws, including those who are self-employed.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that procuring and offering a child for prostitution and using, procuring, and offering a child for the production of pornography and pornographic performances are criminally prohibited.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that procuring and offering a child for the production and trafficking of drugs are criminally prohibited.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish by law an age up to which education is compulsory that is the same as the minimum age for work.	2016
	Establish by law free basic public education.	2016
Enforcement	Collect data on labor and criminal law enforcement and make the data publicly available.	2009 – 2016
Coordination	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure that the Comprehensive Child Policies are implemented.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that children under age 18 are not recruited into Active National Service.	2009 – 2016
	Cease requiring children to perform compulsory labor under the Maetot program during the school break.	2009 – 2016
Social Programs	Ensure that all children have access to education by building more schools, removing financial barriers, and increasing birth registration.	2010 – 2016
	Conduct research on child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2016
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of children in street work. Institute programs to address child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work, and the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Ethiopia made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the Overseas Employment Proclamation that prohibits employment agencies from recruiting workers younger than 18 and allows the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs to revoke the license of any agency that violates the prohibition. The Government also established a mechanism to refer victims of human trafficking to social services and trained labor inspectors, police officers, and judges on child labor issues. In addition, the Government adopted the National Human Rights Action Plan, which includes efforts to eliminate child labor, and participated in and implemented several programs to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Ethiopia perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work and textile weaving. The law in Ethiopia does not include free basic education or a compulsory age for education, leaving children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Social programs to combat child labor have not sufficiently targeted sectors with high incidences of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ethiopia perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work and textile weaving.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ethiopia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	22.0 (5,545,319)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	54.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	17.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		53.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2011.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting and harvesting apples, bananas, coffee, cotton, and khat (6-10)
	Herding livestock, including cattle (7, 10-13)
	Fishing,† activities unknown (7, 10, 13)
Industry	Mining† gold (6, 13)
	Quarrying† (7)
	Construction,† including carrying heavy loads and digging (7, 10, 13-15)
	Making pottery products (7)
	Traditional weaving of (hand-woven) textiles (7, 13, 16)
Services	Domestic work† (1-3, 9, 10, 14)
	Unpaid household services, including carrying heavy loads of water and firewood (7, 9, 13)
	Street work,† including as shoe shiners, assistants to taxi drivers, vendors, porters, and beggars (1, 7, 10, 12, 13, 17)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [†]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 12, 17, 18)
	Forced labor in domestic work, herding, street vending, and traditional weaving of hand-woven textiles, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 7, 10, 13)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Sources indicate that children are trafficked from rural areas to Addis Ababa and to other regions of the country for forced labor in the weaving industry or to work as domestic servants.(3, 7, 10) According to IOM officials, the severe drought of 2015-2016 increased internal trafficking.(10, 19)

After ongoing protests in the Oromia region, the Government temporarily closed schools for weeks, disrupting children’s access to education through the presence of security forces and arrests of both teachers and students.(20) In addition, the continued lack of adequate schools and trained teachers in rural areas increases children’s risk of entering the workforce at a young age. The cost of school supplies also keeps some children from attending school.(10, 13, 21, 22) In the Southern Nations, Nationalities, and Peoples’ Region (SNNPR), sexual abuse and harassment of girls in schools is an additional barrier to education.(22)

In August, the Government launched a public awareness campaign to increase birth registration of children to ensure that they have access to services such as education, because birth certificates are required for initial school registration.(10, 23-26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ethiopia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Ethiopia’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

* No conscription (30)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (27)

In 2016, the Government of Ethiopia enacted Ethiopia's Overseas Employment Proclamation, which restricts overseas employment of Ethiopians to those 18 or older and allows the Government to revoke the license of any employment agency that violates the law. The ban on regular migration, however, has increased irregular migration, increasing vulnerability to trafficking.(19, 32)

Not all Ethiopian laws related to child labor are completely in compliance with international standards. Article 89(5) of the Labour Proclamation allows children ages 14 to 16 to engage in certain forms of hazardous work, if the work is performed following a government-approved vocational training course, in contradiction to ILO Convention 138.(27, 33) The minimum age provisions of the law do not apply to children working outside of a contractual employment relationship.(10, 33) The types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover traditional weaving, an area of work in which there is evidence of using dangerous machinery, equipment, and tools; or work that involves the manual handling or transport of heavy loads.(27, 28)

Although it does not appear that there are any laws that provide free basic education or a compulsory education age, government policy sufficiently provides for free basic education through grade 10.(10, 13, 14, 26, 33, 34)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA)	Conduct labor inspections of formal worksites at the regional level through its regional Bureaus of Labor and Social Affairs (BOLSAs).(10, 35) Through its Occupational Safety and Health Case Team (OSHCT), enforce occupational safety, health, and wage and hour protections, which include child labor laws.(12, 24, 35) Collect and analyze data and make policy recommendations on labor.(8, 35)
Ethiopian Federal Police Commission	Investigate criminal violations of laws that protect against the worst forms of child labor.(6, 14, 36) Through its Special Child Protection Units in 10 Addis Ababa sub-city police stations, work to combat the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking.(37, 38) Through its Human Trafficking and Narcotics Section, collaborate with the prosecutor's office to investigate human trafficking, prosecute offenders, and report and collect human trafficking data.(14)
Office of Attorney General	Prosecute criminal violations of child labor laws. Lead the Anti-Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants Task Force.(10, 24, 36)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Women and Children's Affairs	Develop and implement programs to protect vulnerable children and monitor alleged violations of child protection laws, including the worst forms of child labor.(2, 39)

Given that construction is an industry with evidence of child labor, during the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA) signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the Ministry of Construction (MOC) to ensure that MOC considers labor inspection reports of a company when reviewing its construction license.(10)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Ethiopia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

[‡] Data are from September 11, 2015 to December 31, 2016.

Labor inspectors received regular training on domestic and international laws pertaining to work prohibited for youth laborers, as well as techniques to identify child laborers, including on the new Revised Overseas Employment Proclamation. In October 2016, MOLSA conducted a workshop for 46 regional and Addis Ababa labor inspectors in labor standards, including child labor.(10, 36)

The penalties for violating child labor laws, outlined in Article 185 of the Labour Proclamation, are low and do not generally deter violations.(27, 35) Despite a higher budget for the labor inspectorate, scarce resources and an insufficient staff prevent proper enforcement of child labor laws, particularly in the agricultural sector in rural areas, at construction sites in urban areas, and at sites of domestic work.(10, 15, 35) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Ethiopia's workforce, which includes over 49 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Ethiopia should employ roughly 1,232 inspectors.(15, 40, 41)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Ethiopia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, the IOM, in collaboration with the Office of the Attorney General (OAG) and the Ethiopian Federal Police Commission, conducted anti-trafficking workshops for police at the Police University College and developed a training manual. The IOM also provided two trainings on the Anti-Trafficking Proclamation and on investigation skills for trafficking crimes for approximately 70 police, prosecutors, and judges in Harar and Dessie.(10) The OAG and the ILO held a workshop for 80 members of the media on the Anti-Trafficking Proclamation to build awareness.(19)

The UNODC provided training to about 100 police officers and judges to increase their capacity to investigate and hear trafficking cases, in addition to providing a separate training for 70 judges and prosecutors using a new virtual reality module that mimics the scene of a human trafficking crime. MOLSA, together with World Vision International, conducted two trainings for judges regarding labor laws generally, including how to spot child labor.(10, 42)

The SNNPR's Bureau of Labor and Social Affairs officials reported one case in which a trafficker was convicted of running a child begging and garbage collection ring and was sentenced to jail.(10)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate activities on the worst forms of child labor. Members include MOLSA, the Ministry of Women and Children's Affairs, and the Ministry of Education.(14)
MOLSA National Forum to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Combat the worst forms of child labor at the national level. Meet twice a year. Include participants from the Ethiopian Employers' Federation and Confederation of Ethiopian Trade Unions.(14)
National Steering Committee Against Sexual Exploitation of Women and Children	Develop action plans and coordinate activities against the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(21, 39)
National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Address international exploitation, including the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister, with representatives from five Government ministries and regional presidents that meet twice a year.(31, 43)
National Anti-Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants Task Force	Develop action plans quarterly and coordinate activities against trafficking in persons and migrant smuggling through the leadership of the Office of Attorney General, with representatives from 31 government stakeholders, as well as international organizations such as the IOM, ILO, and UNODC.(19, 31) In 2016, met to review implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons and harmonize national and regional structures.(10, 31, 38, 43)
Child Protection Committees, Child Rights Committees, and Orphans and Vulnerable Children Task Forces	Promote children's rights, provide children with food and school supplies, and train members on child labor issues, case management, international child labor standards, and Ethiopian child labor laws. Include children, police, health workers, and teachers.(8, 39)

Ethiopia

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Research was unable to determine whether the National Steering Committee on the Worst Forms of Child Labor and the MOLSA National Forum convened during the reporting period, indicating that limited committee budgets may still affect the ability to operate and coordinate efforts to address child labor.(10, 15)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2013–2016)	Includes guidelines on child labor identification, withdrawal, reintegration, and educational policies. Overseen by the National Steering Committee on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(8, 24) Three workshops conducted by MOLSA with other stakeholders in 2016 to deliberate on the second stage of the National Action Plan 2017–2021, currently awaiting final approval.(10)
National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2015–2020)	Examines legal and institutional frameworks and responses related to existing human trafficking. Aims to provide guiding principles based on international best practices for human anti-trafficking action and the institutional structures and inputs needed to effectively combat human trafficking.(44)
National Youth Policy	Condemns the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and illicit work through direction by the Ministry of Youth, Sports, and Culture. Lacks a detailed and specific action plan related to preventing the worst forms of child labor.(45, 46) Government announced a new $435 million revolving “youth fund” in 2016 to fund activities of the policy.(36, 45)
UNDAF (2016–2020) [†]	Promotes improved access to education and livelihood services for vulnerable children. Seeks to protect children from abuse, violence, and exploitation, and rehabilitate them.(47)
National Human Rights Action Plan (NHRAP) II (2016–2020) [†]	Aims to develop a comprehensive and structured mechanism to strengthen human rights in Ethiopia, building upon NHRAP I, which included efforts to eliminate exploitative child labor. Approved in December 2016.(48, 49)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(10, 15, 36, 39, 46, 50-56)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Sector Development Program or the National Technical Vocational Education and Training Strategy.(57, 58)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects to Address Child Labor	USDOL projects in Ethiopia aim to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, through research, capacity building, and increased access to education and decent work opportunities. These projects include Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (2013–2017), implemented in at least 10 countries by the ILO; Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017), implemented in approximately 40 countries by the ILO; and Engaged, Educated, Empowered, Ethiopian Youth Project (2014–2018), a $10 million project implemented by World Vision, Inc.(59-61) For additional information about USDOL’s work, please visit our website .
Social Cash Transfer Program (2011–2017)	In partnership with UNICEF, the Government provides vulnerable populations, including child laborers, with cash transfers in the Oromia and SNNPR regions to improve school attendance and enrollment and to support children’s health in targeted districts.(62) In 2016, UNICEF support in Tigray stopped, and beneficiaries in that region are now supported by PSNP4 and the regional Tigray Government.(36)
Productive Safety Net Program Phase IV (PSNP4) [†] (2014–2020)	$3.5 billion, 6-year project co-funded with the World Bank that includes several components, including cash and in-kind transfers to orphans and vulnerable children and households without able-bodied adults who can work. In 2016, the World Bank approved additional financing of US $100 million to scale up safety net support to an estimated 4.5 million clients affected by the El Nino-induced drought.(36, 63, 64)

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (DWCP) (2013–2016)	A tripartite (government, workers, and employers) partners-initiated program, guided by a National Steering Committee and funded by the Governments of the United Kingdom and the Netherlands. The program addresses country priorities identified by the constituents in collaboration with the ILO country office, which supports the integration of decent work priorities with Ethiopia's national development agenda as set out in the Growth and Transformation Plan (2015/16–2019/20) and UNDAF.(65) The program was extended through 2016 with the next generation of DWCP in development.(36)
General Education Quality Improvement Project II (2014–2018)	$50 million World Bank-funded project, with additional donor support, that aims to improve learning conditions in Ethiopia through curriculum development, textbook assessment, teacher training, and school construction.(36, 66) In 2016, the project held a two-day national workshop on project implementation and forward planning. To date, the project has delivered more than 64 million textbooks to Ethiopian schools.(66)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Ethiopia.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(3, 10, 15, 36, 55, 67-69)

Although the Government participates in and implements several programs to combat child labor, these programs do not sufficiently target sectors with high incidences of child labor, such as agriculture and domestic work.(10)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ethiopia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Raise the minimum age at which children may enter hazardous work following vocational training from age 14 to age 16, in line with ILO C. 138.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the types of hazardous work prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2016
	Ensure that all children are protected by child labor laws, including children working in non-contractual employment.	2009 – 2016
	Establish by law, free basic education and an age up to which education is compulsory that is consistent with the minimum age of employment.	2012 – 2016
Enforcement	Ensure that Occupational Safety and Health Case Team (OSHCT) and Bureau of Labor and Social Affairs (BOLSA) inspectors have sufficient resources to conduct systematic inspections in all labor sectors.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that penalties are high enough to deter child labor law violations.	2013 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO recommendation.	2015 – 2016
	Gather and publish information on the numbers of child labor law violations found, citations issued, and penalties applied; and whether unannounced inspections are conducted.	2009 – 2016
	Enforce the Labour Proclamation by authorizing the inspectorate to determine and assess penalties when child labor law violations are found.	2013 – 2016
	Publish data on the training of investigators, number of criminal investigations, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
Coordination	Ensure that the established coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor have adequate funding to operate effectively.	2015 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Sector Development Program and the National Technical Vocational Education and Training Strategy.	2013 – 2016
	Include an action plan on the worst forms of child labor for the National Youth Policy.	2009 – 2016
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the types of activities carried out by children working in fishing to inform policies and programs.	2015 – 2016
	Increase access to education by increasing school infrastructure, especially in rural areas; eliminating school-related costs; implementing programs that protect communities from droughts and floods; addressing sexual abuse and harassment of girls in schools; providing teacher training; and increasing birth registration rates of children to ensure that they have access to services such as education.	2010 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Develop social protection programs to prevent or withdraw children from agriculture and domestic work.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Fiji made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched a national 24-hour toll-free helpline for children to seek counseling, advice, and referrals for support services, as well as to report cases of child neglect and abuse. In addition, the Government led student leadership seminars in Labasa and Nadi through its Tackling Child Labor Through Education Project. However, children in Fiji perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Fiji has limited support services for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Fiji perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Fiji. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		106.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(5)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cutting, [†] loading, [†] weeding, and spraying chemicals [†] on sugarcane (7, 8)
	Planting, picking, and using chemicals [†] on tobacco (3, 9)
	Collecting and splitting coconuts, harvesting rice; planting, harvesting, weeding, and spraying fertilizers on roots (including dalo and yaqona); and planting and harvesting other kinds of fruits and vegetables [†] (3)
	Pig farming and goat and cattle herding (3)
	Fishing [†] and deep-sea diving [†] (3, 9)
Services	Street work, including pushing wheelbarrows for shoppers in markets, vending, washing cars, shining shoes, and begging (2, 3, 10-13)
	Domestic work (3, 13)
	Working in garages or in retail shops (4, 10, 13)
	Selling fruit (3, 10)
	Collecting bottles [†] and scrap metal [†] (3, 13)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [†]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 14-18)
	Forced labor in agriculture, begging, domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 18-20)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (3, 13)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Commercial sexual exploitation of children continued to occur in Fiji, particularly by family members, taxi drivers, foreign tourists, businessmen, and crew on foreign fishing vessels.(2, 3, 17, 18) Parents sometimes send their children to live with families in cities or near schools to facilitate their continuing education and to perform light household work. Research found that some of these children are vulnerable to involuntary domestic work or are forced to engage in sexual activity in exchange for food, clothing, or shelter.(2, 18, 21, 22)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Fiji has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Fiji's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 92 of the Employment Relations Promulgation (23)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 40 of the Employment Relations (Administration) Regulations; Hazardous Occupations Prohibited to Children Under 18 Years of Age Order (9, 24)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Hazardous Occupations Prohibited to Children Under 18 Years of Age Order (9)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 6 and 91 of the Employment Relations Promulgation; Articles 20 and 21 of the Immigration Act; Articles 102 and 103 and 111–121 of the Crimes Decree; Article 10 of the Constitution of the Republic of Fiji (23, 25-27)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 91 of the Employment Relations Promulgation; Article 20 of the Immigration Act; Article 10 of the Constitution of the Republic of Fiji; Articles 111–121 of the Crimes Decree (23, 25-27)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 91 of the Employment Relations Promulgation; Articles 225–227 of the Crimes Decree; Juveniles (Amendment) Act (23, 27, 28)

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 91 of the Employment Relations Promulgation; Article 58 of the Juveniles Act (23, 29)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes*	18	Article 7 of the Royal Fiji Military Forces Act (30)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 7 of the Royal Fiji Military Forces Act (30)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Compulsory Education Order; Compulsory Education Regulations (31)
Free Public Education	No

* No conscription (30)

The Employment Relations Promulgation specifies the conditions under which children ages 13–15 may engage in light work, but does not include a list of activities that are permissible.(4, 23)

Although it does not appear that there are any laws that provide free basic education, the Government has a policy that provides for free basic education.(32, 33)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Productivity, and Industrial Relations	Monitor compliance with the minimum age for employment requirements and the Employment Relations Promulgation.(1, 11) Oversee 14 Divisional Labor Offices responsible for investigating cases of child labor and making appropriate referrals.(11) In the case of the Child Labor Unit, coordinate activities at the national, divisional, and district levels through interagency committees on child abuse, including conducting trainings on child labor and maintaining a 24-hour phone line to accept reports of child labor and refer children to social services when appropriate.(4, 11)
Employment Relations Tribunal	Adjudicate alleged violations of child labor provisions in the Employment Relations Promulgation.(4)
Fiji Police Force	Enforce laws on child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and illicit activities. Maintain a Human Trafficking Unit and provide training to other police units focused on combating human trafficking.(11, 34). Employ five officers responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(4) Collaborate with the Australian Federal Police to combat potential child sex tourism by Australian nationals that comprise the largest tourist group visiting Fiji.(21)
Department of Immigration	Coordinate with the Fiji police force to investigate cases involving underage victims of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, which are then tried in the criminal court system.(34, 35)
Departments of Social Welfare and Public Prosecutions	Enforce laws on child trafficking.(1) Operate four homes and provide social services for child trafficking victims.(11, 36)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Fiji took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2015	2016

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (12)	Yes (4)

[‡] Data are from January 1, 2016 to November 30, 2016.

Information was not available on the amount of funding dedicated to labor inspections. However, in 2016, the aggregate estimated operating expenditures for the Ministry of Employment, Productivity, and Industrial Relations (MEPIR) were $7.75 million.⁽⁴⁾ In addition to MEPIR's 68 labor inspectors, there were also 30 health and safety inspectors and 40 police officers, as well as farmers from Fiji's northern and western divisions, who have received training on child labor and may provide coverage when needed. All labor inspectors are trained by MEPIR's Child Labor Unit on child labor, including hazardous work.⁽⁴⁾ Other civil society organizations and district community leaders involved in child protection also received training on this topic. As of November 2016, labor inspectors conducted 3,475 targeted routine inspections in the retail, manufacturing, and agricultural sectors in which children in Fiji are known to be employed. Inspections are conducted in the workers' language, including English, Hindi, and vernacular Fijian.⁽⁴⁾

In April 2016, the Ministry of Women, Children and Poverty Alleviation launched a national 24-hour toll-free helpline for children to seek counseling, advice, and referrals for support services, as well as to report cases of child neglect and abuse. Calls are screened for their authenticity and referred to the Ministry of Children, which can further refer the caller to the appropriate agency. Data were unavailable on the number of calls received related to child labor.⁽⁴⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Fiji took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (37)	Yes (34)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	Yes (4)
Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (38)	Yes (34)
Number of Investigations	4 (38)	Unknown (34)
Number of Violations Found	3 (12)	5 (34)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (38)	0 (34)
Number of Convictions	0 (12, 38)	0 (34)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (20)	Yes (34)

In 2016, the Minister for Employment recorded five child labor violations, and these children were referred to schools to receive vocational and technical training.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Agency Network	Focus on child labor issues at the district and provincial level. Monitor and report cases of non-compliance. Conduct awareness-raising activities in collaboration with the Child Labor Unit.(39) Comprises interagency committees in nine towns in Fiji.(1, 40)
Inter-Agency Taskforce on Beggars	Address issues concerning children who beg and other exploited children.(1) Enforce zero-tolerance policy on child begging.(12)
Inter-Agency Trafficking Task Force	Implement the National Plan of Action to Eradicate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking. Headed by the Department of Immigration.(1, 11, 36)

The Inter-Agency Trafficking Task Force has not been active since 2012.(11, 12) This lack of coordination may limit the Government's effectiveness in efforts to combat child trafficking.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action to Eradicate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking	Guides the Government's efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons. Focuses on increasing public awareness and education on human trafficking-related issues and prioritizes anti-trafficking training for Government officials.(36) Chaired by the Immigration Department, with the Fiji Police Force's Human Trafficking Unit serving as the lead coordinator.(12) Government coordinated interagency efforts to investigate and begin formal charges in suspected human trafficking cases.(21)
Free Education Grant	Provides 12 years of tuition-free education for children with Fijian citizenship in 904 eligible primary and secondary schools. Provided approximately $97 million for tuition-free education and textbooks during the 2016–2017 fiscal year, an increase from the previous year.(22, 32, 41-43)

In 2016, the Government incorporated the 5-year Strategic Plan for Combating Child Labor, including its worst forms, into the draft National Action Plan for Child Labor. Neither the Strategic Plan nor the National Action Plan, however, has been approved.(4, 22, 44) In addition, the Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Pacific UN Development Assistance Framework.(45, 46)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Tackling Child Labor Through Education Project (2015–2017)	European Union-funded project that seeks to enhance coordination, enforcement, and monitoring mechanisms to build the capacity of stakeholders in the implementation of policies and programs on formal and non-formal education, school retention, and access to education for out-of-school children; and to promote research and raise awareness on child labor issues.(47) Organized student leadership seminars in Labasa and Nadi to advocate positive change on child labor issues.(48)
Safety Net Project†	Program that funds rehabilitation services for female victims of commercial sexual exploitation under age 18. Receive referrals from various entities, including the Fiji Police.(49)

Program	Description
Food Voucher and Bus Fare Assistance [†]	Ministry of Education program that provides food vouchers and subsidized bus fares for families who earn less than $7,382 as combined income, to offset the cost of education for children attending remote schools.(22, 39, 41)
Tuition-Fee Free Grant [†]	Ministry of Education began to provide a subsidized tuition fee-free grant for early childhood education centers or students attending preschool. Government allocated $1,561,476 to all special-needs primary schools, an increase of $267,343.(22)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Fiji.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(12, 38)

Fiji has insufficient social programs available to address the particular needs of child victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, especially for boys and for children in remote areas.(37, 50) NGOs provide limited support services, but these are concentrated in the capital city of Suva.(37, 40, 50)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Fiji (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography; UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict; and the Palermo Protocol.	2013 – 2016
	Establish by law free basic public education.	2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
	Ensure that the law's light work provisions are specific enough to prevent children from involvement in child labor.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Publish information on the labor inspectorate funding and the number of criminal law enforcement investigations related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Publish data on the number of calls received through the national 24-hour toll-free helpline related to child labor	2016
Coordination	Ensure that the Inter-Agency Trafficking Task Force meets regularly to address implementation of the National Plan of Action to Eliminate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Finalize and implement the National Action Plan for Child Labor and 5-year Strategic Plan for Combating Child Labor, including its worst forms.	2013 – 2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into Fiji's country program framework for the Pacific UN Development Assistance Framework for the Pacific Region.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Increase the availability of support services for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, including effective counseling and specialized shelters.	2010 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. In 2016, Gabon made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking established Local Vigilance committees in all nine regions, and initiated eight prosecutions against individuals for using child labor. However, children in Gabon perform dangerous tasks in domestic work and transportation. The Government lacks prohibitions against the use of children in illicit activities and does not criminally prohibit slavery or the use of children for pornographic performances. Labor inspectors lack basic resources necessary to conduct investigations, such as transportation, fuel, and office supplies. Additionally, the Government lacks a general policy to address child labor, reduced funding to the Interministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking, and reduced financial support to social programs to address child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Gabon perform dangerous tasks in domestic work and transportation.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Gabon. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	22.3 (83,073)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	94.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	23.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Deuxième Enquête Démographique et de Santé au Gabon (EDSG-II) Survey, 2012.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Fishing, including the production and sale of smoked fish (10)
Industry	Mining, including in sand quarries (2, 11)
	Working in brick factories (2)
Services	Domestic work (2-4, 12)
	Street vending, including cleaning market spaces at night and carrying heavy loads (1, 2, 13)
	Garbage scavenging (2)
	Work in restaurants (11)
	Working in transportation and as mechanics (2, 3, 11, 14, 15)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in markets or restaurants, handicraft shops, mining, farming, animal husbandry, fishing, domestic work, and as mechanics, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5, 7, 16)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5-7, 13, 17)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Gabon

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Gabon is primarily a destination and transit country for victims of child trafficking from other countries in Central and West Africa.(3, 4, 6, 7, 13, 15, 16, 18) There is limited evidence of child trafficking occurring within Gabon, although some parents entrust their children to intermediaries who subject them to child trafficking rather than providing education and work opportunities.(7, 16, 19) There is limited information about specific activities carried out by child labor in the agriculture, industry, and service sectors.

Although the Law on General Education guarantees the right to free and compulsory education, in practice, students were often required to pay for supplies and school fees, which may be prohibitive.(15, 20-22) Rural areas have a lack of schools and teachers, and education beyond primary school is often unavailable.(2, 15, 23) Reports suggest that some children, especially girls, are sexually abused at school.(5, 11, 15, 24) Some indigenous groups and children living in remote areas do not have access to birth registration, which is required for school enrollment; out of school children are more vulnerable to child labor.(11, 20)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Gabon has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Gabon's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 177 of the Labor Code; Article 2 of Decree N° 0651/PR/MTEPS Establishing Individual Exceptions to the Minimum Age for Admission to Employment (25-28)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 177 of the Labor Code (25, 26)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No		Article 177 of the Labor Code (25, 26)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	No		Article 4 of the Labor Code; Articles 3, 11–13, and 20 of Law N° 09/04 Preventing and Fighting Against Child Trafficking (25, 29)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 3, 11–14, and 20 of Law N° 09/04 Preventing and Fighting Against Child Trafficking; Decree N° 0031/PR/MTEEF on Children's Work; Article 278 bis of the Penal Code (29-32)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 260, 261, and 263 of the Penal Code(32)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	No*

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
State Voluntary	Yes	20	Act N° 004/98 (33)
Non-State Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 1 of the Constitution; Article 2 of Act N° 21/2011 on General Education; Article 344.8 of the Penal Code (22, 32, 34)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 1.18 and 1.19 of the Constitution; Article 2 of Act N° 21/2011 on General Education (22, 34)

* No conscription (33, 35)

Article 2 of Decree N° 0651/PR/MTEPS Establishing Individual Exceptions to the Minimum Age for Admission to Employment permits children under age 16 to perform light work with parental permission. However, it does not set a minimum age for light work or include a list specifying the kinds of light work allowed.(28, 36)

Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient, as slavery and child trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation are not criminally prohibited.(10, 25, 29, 32) The law also does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, as the production of pornography and procuring or offering children for pornographic performances are not criminally prohibited.(32) Research did not uncover a public version of Act N° 004/98 governing voluntary service in the State armed forces for review.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Employment (MLE)	Receive, investigate, and address child labor complaints through its inspectors.(20) Refer cases of child trafficking to the Ministry of the Interior's Police Force for investigation and the Ministry of Family and Social Development (MFSD) for social services.(2)
Ministry of Family and Social Development (MFSD)	Provide social services and assistance to vulnerable children; assist in repatriation or resettlement processes for victims of child trafficking; operate shelters for victims of child trafficking.(2, 7) Maintain a helpline for victims of child trafficking and reinsert victims of child trafficking and exploitation with their families.(37, 38)
Ministry of the Interior's Police Force	Enforce laws, investigate child labor violations, and refer cases to the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights for prosecution.(2, 20, 39)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Enforce child labor laws by prosecuting child labor complaints.(2, 20) Assist in supporting victims of child trafficking while prosecutors and investigators prepare their case.(40)
Local Vigilance Committees	Administered by the Interministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking (CNSLTE). Monitor potential cases of child exploitation and human trafficking at the local level. Identify, intercept, and provide assistance to children at risk of child trafficking.(15, 39, 41, 42)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Gabon took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

In principle, the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MLE) sends newly hired labor inspectors to Cameroon for a one-time training at the Regional African Center for Administration Work, but this has not happened since 2014 and no new labor inspectors were recruited during the reporting period.(44) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Gabon's workforce, which includes over 674,000 workers.(47) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Gabon should employ roughly 45 inspectors.(47-49) Inspectors lack the resources necessary to conduct inspections, including transportation, fuel, and office supplies, and there is a lack of enforcement in the informal sector.(2, 20) Although inspectors have the authority to proactively plan inspections, they did not do so in 2016.(2) Additionally, labor inspectors in Gabon are tasked with reconciling labor disputes, which may detract from their primary duties of inspection and monitoring.(50)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Gabon took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

Number of Convictions	0 (7)	0 (2)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (10, 43, 46)	Yes (2)

* The Government does not publish this information.

Like labor inspectors, investigators lack resources such as transportation, fuel, and office supplies.(2) Additionally, the prosecution of child trafficking cases can be difficult since the Criminal Court only meets twice per year, has a backlog of cases, and is not mandated to prioritize cases involving children.(7, 17) The 11 prosecutions from 2015 are still pending.(44)

In addition, it is not clear how many cases of exploitative child labor were identified as a result of calls made to the MLE's hotline for child trafficking victims.(16, 37, 38)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking (CNSLTE)	Coordinate national efforts against child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor. Led by the MLE and includes representatives from four other ministries.(2) Operate a hotline for victims of child trafficking, maintain provincial offices and centers for child trafficking victims, remove children from exploitative labor situations, provide social services, and repatriate victims when appropriate.(2, 7, 15, 16, 19, 30, 37) In 2016, established Local Vigilance committees in all nine regions, assisted in the prosecution of individuals for using child labor.(2, 52)
National Observatory for Children's Rights	Coordinate the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, including the promotion of children's right to education and protection against all forms of exploitation and abuse.(15, 53)

In 2016, budget constraints and a lack of communication between ministries limited the ability of the CNSLTE to effectively coordinate government actions and collect data. Research indicates that members of the Interministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking (CNSLTE) occasionally use personal funds to assist victims due to a lack of resources.(10, 43)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
CNSLTE's 2016-2017 Plan of Action†	Aims to address the worst forms of child labor with a focus on increasing prosecution of offenders and shortening the length of time victims spend at shelters.(44) In 2016, held two awareness raising sessions about child trafficking.(40)
National Manual of Procedures for the Care of Child Victims of Trafficking	Establishes a series of procedures to return victims of child trafficking to their country of origin or facilitate their integration into Gabon.(19) Disseminated by the CNSLTE.(19)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2016, research found no evidence of a general policy to address child labor. Although the Government of Gabon drafted separate bilateral agreements with Benin, Cameroon, Guinea, Mali, Nigeria, and Togo to combat child trafficking, the agreements have not been signed by all parties.(3, 11, 15, 21, 54) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the UNDAF (2012–2016), Gabon Emergent Strategic Plan (2011–2016), National Youth Policy of Gabon, and the Education Policy (2010–2020).(53, 55-57) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Manual of Procedures for the Care of Child Victims of Trafficking or the Gabon Emergent Strategic Plan (2011–2016).

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Shelters for Children in Need†	Shelters in Libreville and Port-Gentil supported by the Government and civil society organizations that provide social services to victims of child labor, child trafficking, and other vulnerable children.(7, 14, 16, 18, 37) The Government provides in-kind support, such as social workers, medical supplies, food, and office supplies. In 2016, provided services to at least 15 children and repatriated 4 victims.(2)
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2016)	Promotes decent work conditions with a focus on creating job opportunities for youth and promoting social protection.(58)

† Program is funded by the Government of Gabon.

‡The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(10, 40, 58)

Although Gabon has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(2) Research indicates that shelter space is insufficient to accommodate all victims and funding for Government-run shelters decreased for the third consecutive year. The Government also decreased funding for NGOs providing social services to human trafficking victims and other vulnerable children.(2, 7, 17, 40) The Government also failed to provide funding to UNICEF as part of its Country Program Action Plan and research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Decent Work Country Program (2013–2016) during the reporting period.(59)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Gabon (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish criminal prohibitions for slavery and child trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation.	2015 – 2016
	Establish criminal prohibitions for the production of child pornography, and procuring or offering children in pornographic performances.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the legal framework prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including both the production and trafficking of drugs.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
	Ensure that the legal framework for light work establishes a minimum age no younger than 13, determines the activities considered light work, and specifies the conditions under which light work may be undertaken.	2013 – 2016
	Make publicly available the law governing voluntary service in the State armed forces.	2016
Enforcement	Publish information on the funding level for the labor inspectorate and ensure that inspectors and investigators receive adequate funding and resources to carry out inspections and investigations.	2009 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing inspectors to assess penalties, and conducting routine and unannounced inspections.	2014 – 2016
	Publish information on the enforcement of child labor laws, including the number and type of inspections conducted, number of investigations conducted, and violations found.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that both civil and criminal violations of child labor laws are punished in accordance with the law.	2016
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors in accordance with the ILO recommendation and ensure that labor inspectors are able to carry out their primary duties of inspection and monitoring throughout the country, including in rural areas.	2009 – 2016
	Establish a mechanism to log all calls to the MLE's child protection hotline and track cases of child labor for referral to law enforcement or social services providers.	2014 – 2016
Coordination	Ensure that the CNSLTE has sufficient funds to carry out its mandate, including improving communication and coordination among ministries.	2013 – 2016
Government Policies	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant forms of child labor, such as domestic work, work in transportation, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2015 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Government Policies	Sign agreements with origin countries to combat child trafficking.	2014 – 2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies, and ensure policies are implemented as planned.	2014 – 2016
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the specific activities carried out by children working in agriculture, industry, and the service sector to inform policies and programs.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure children have access to education by eliminating school fees, increasing the number of teachers and schools in rural areas, and ensuring schools are free from sexual abuse. Make additional efforts to provide all children with birth registration.	2010 – 2016
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem and ensure the Government continues to provide adequate support.	2010 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
49. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies;" "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, The Gambia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched the Child Protection Strategy that includes actions to address the worst forms of child labor. In addition, the Child Protection Alliance trained government officials on the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Gambia Tourism Board continued to educate the public about child sex tourism and the consequences of violating the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children and the Tourism Act. However, children in The Gambia continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging. Gaps in the law remain, including a need to increase the compulsory education age to the minimum age for work. In addition, labor law and criminal law enforcement efforts are limited.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in The Gambia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in The Gambia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	36.4 (180,954)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	65.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	29.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		70.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS3 Survey, 2005–2006.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including protecting crops by chasing animals (1, 7)
Industry	Working in carpentry, masonry, sewing, plumbing, and in metal welding workshops† (1, 8, 9)
Services	Domestic work (1, 2, 4, 8)
	Street work, including begging and vending (1, 4, 10-12)
	Scavenging for scrap metal and jewelry at dump sites (1)
	Working as taxi and bus attendants (1, 4)
	Working as auto mechanics† (1, 9, 10)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 12-15)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers (1-3, 7)
	Forced labor in domestic work and street vending, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In The Gambia, children are internally trafficked and subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and domestic work. Girls and boys from West African countries, including Benin, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Nigeria, Senegal, and Sierra Leone are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation in The Gambia.(3) European tourists also subject children to commercial sexual exploitation in brothels and motels in tourist areas.(3, 8, 13, 16) In The Gambia, it is a common practice to send boys to receive education from Koranic teachers, marabouts. Some Koranic students, or almudus,

Gambia, The

are forced by their teachers to beg in the streets for money and food.(3, 8, 13, 17) Some marabouts also force students to sell items on the street and in rural areas or to work in agriculture for long hours.(8)

Article 30 of the Constitution mandates free compulsory education; however, families are often required to buy books and uniforms for their children and contribute to the school fund, which is used to pay for school activities. Absence from school due to unpaid fees increases children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor.(18, 19) In addition, a report indicates a cultural preference to educate boys, which may cause girls to be more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. To address this issue, the Government waived school fees for girls.(17, 18) During the reporting year, the Government finalized a new education policy that provides additional technical and vocational education and makes school more affordable by abolishing basic and secondary education fees. The policy also emphasized the need to increase enrollment of girls in school.(20, 21) The Government has not conducted research to determine the activities carried out by children, including in agriculture and domestic work, to inform policies and social programs.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Gambia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Gambia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 43 of the Children's Act (22)

In The Gambia, children are required to attend school until age 12, at which point they are permitted under Section 51 of the Children's Act to work as an apprentice in the informal sector. This requirement makes children ages 13 to 15 that are not engaged in apprenticeships in the informal sector particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(18, 19, 27) Section 43 of the Children's Act, however, permits children at age 16 to do light work, or work that does not jeopardize the health or safety of the child and does not interfere with school attendance.(22) A report indicates that the minimum penalties for trafficking violations are not harsh enough to deter perpetrators.(4)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Social Welfare (DSW)	Combat forced child labor and coordinate the handling of trafficking victims, working closely with social welfare officers in police units.(8, 28) Monitor, through the operation of five Neighborhood Watch Groups, suspected cases of child abuse or child commercial sexual exploitation in urban areas near tourist sites. Operate a 24-hour hotline to address human trafficking and maintain a database of individuals suspected of pedophilia or child trafficking, in collaboration with The Gambia Tourism Board.(3) Maintain an electronic database that contains information on cases requiring child protection, including those involving labor and human trafficking violations.(3)
Child Protection Alliance (CPA)	Promote children's rights and child protection services. Raise awareness about child exploitation.(29-31) Include Government departments, civil society organizations, UN agencies, NGOs, child and youth organizations, and bilateral institutions.(30). Train journalists about child sex tourism and government officials on the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.(32, 33)
National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons (NAATIP)	Investigate suspected cases of trafficking. Includes investigators, police, members of the National Intelligence Agency, and five prosecutors.(34) Gather evidence for NAATIP Director, who can recommend that the NAATIP prosecutor file charges for trafficking violations.(34)
The Gambia Tourism Board	Combat commercial sexual exploitation of children in tourist areas.(8). Educate the public about child sex tourism and the consequences for violating the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children and the Tourism Act.(35)
Tourism Security Unit	Prevent unaccompanied children from entering tourist areas and patrol tourist areas for child labor and criminal violations, such as commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking. Has a dedicated child protection division.(8, 28)
Gambia Police Force Child Welfare Unit	Oversee all situations involving children's welfare.(31) Work with the CPA, DSW, NGOs, and other agencies to assess and identify children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(10)
Child Protection Committees	Raise awareness and report cases of labor issues, including child labor, to the authorities. DSW operates 15 Child Protection Committees across the country.(1, 10, 28, 36)
Neighborhood Watch Groups	Monitor neighborhoods for child exploitation. Maintain five existing groups established by DSW in urban areas near tourist resorts.(28) Receive allowances and cell phone credit for members.(28)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in The Gambia did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Gambia's workforce, which includes over 700,000 workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less-developed economies, The Gambia should employ about 19 inspectors.(38-40) A source indicates that inadequate transportation and a lack of fuel presented a challenge for inspectors to carry out their duties.(1, 8) Child laborers found during labor inspections are referred to the Department of Social Welfare (DSW).(28)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in The Gambia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

* The Government does not publish this information.

During the reporting year, government officials attended training sessions sponsored by UNODC. The sessions focused on teaching attendees about useful tools to dismantle the efforts of criminal organizations that benefit from global criminal activities such as child trafficking.(41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department of Social Welfare (DSW)	Coordinate Government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.(8)
National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons (NAATIP)	Coordinate, administer, and monitor the implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Act and share information among law enforcement agencies. Led by the National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons, meetings are convened monthly.(8, 28) Although the funding was unknown during the year, the investigators revealed the funding was insufficient to cover training costs and there continues to be inadequate transportation and supplies to conduct inspections.(37)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
Child Protection Strategy (2016–2020)*	Outlines strategies to improve child protection, including addressing the worst forms of child labor by increasing awareness and strengthening coordination among government agencies.(42)
Code of Conduct of The Gambia Tourism Authority for the Protection of Children	Raises awareness of commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism industry and among tourists.(8, 43) At the beginning of the annual peak tourism season, trains new hotel staff on the Code.(8)
National Trafficking In Persons Action Plan (2012–2016)	Establishes a plan to combat human trafficking and NAATIP is responsible for implementation of the plan.(28)

* Policy was launched during the reporting period.

‡ The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (44, 45)

In 2016, the Government passed a new Education Sector Policy, but child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to be integrated into the policy. Although the Government has adopted the Trafficking MOU with Senegal, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.(1) A report indicates that The Gambia has a weak policy framework and limited coordination capacity to provide child protection services to children who are abused and exploited.(12)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Combating Child Sex Tourism Project	CPA project, funded by ECPAT Netherlands, that raises awareness about commercial sexual exploitation of children and the Tourism Offences Act and the Code of Conduct among Tourism Security Unit personnel, hoteliers, travel agencies, and other tourism stakeholders.(1, 46)
Results for Education Achievement and Development (READ)	$8.5 million World Bank-funded project that focuses on increasing access to basic education and improving the quality of education in lower basic schools.(47)
Street Children Center [†]	DSW, with support from international organizations, foreign NGOs, and local businesses, runs a drop-in center in Talinding Kunjang that provides medical care, food, and counseling to street children, including human trafficking victims and almudus .(8, 28, 36) Works to prevent children from returning to street begging.(17, 48)
Conditional Cash Transfers to the Majaalist [†]	Ministry of Education program gives marabouts food rations and approximately $2.56 monthly for each student if the marabouts do not force students to beg.(28) Provides teachers for English, mathematics, and science to Koranic schools. More than 1,000 children have benefited from the program.(1, 8, 49)

† Program is funded by the Government of The Gambia.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(50-52)

Gambia, The

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Government participated in a “Smart Initiative” project that focuses on using technology to improve access to education.(53)

Although The Gambia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem to reach all children working in agriculture and domestic work and those vulnerable to human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in The Gambia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Adopt legislation that increases the age of compulsory education to 16 so that it is commensurate with the minimum age for work.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure penalties for trafficking violations are harsh enough to deter violations.	2016
Enforcement	Employ enough labor inspectors to provide sufficient coverage for the workforce.	2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating targeted inspections based on analysis of data related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents.	2016
	Provide labor law enforcement with sufficient staffing and financial resources to conduct inspections.	2013 – 2016
	Publish information about the labor inspectorate’s funding, training related to child labor, inspections, violations found, and penalties collected.	2012 – 2016
	Publish information about the criminal law enforcement violations found, prosecutions, and convictions concerning the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
Coordination	Ensure the NAATIP has sufficient funding to provide training on trafficking in persons and other worst forms of child labor.	2012 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure that child labor elimination and prevention strategies are integrated into the Education Policy.	2015 – 2016
	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Expand existing programs to address child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and children working in the street.	2010 – 2016
	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children, including in agriculture and domestic work, to inform policies and social programs.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that children can complete primary school by subsidizing or defraying the cost of books, uniforms, and other fees.	2010 – 2016
	Expand existing programs to address children working in agriculture and domestic work.	2015 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. - For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Georgia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Georgia is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a law that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. The Government failed to remedy the abolition of its labor inspectorate, caused by its adoption of the 2006 Labor Code. Since that time, the Government has lacked a functioning labor inspection mechanism to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by publishing a National Child Labor Survey and both enacting and drafting legislation intended to improve ease of access to social services for children living and working on the street. Children in Georgia perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced begging. The Government lacks a coordinating mechanism to address child labor. In addition, the compulsory education age left 15-year-old children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school, but are not legally permitted to work full-time.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Georgia perform dangerous tasks in agriculture.(1-7) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging.(5-7) In 2016, the National Statistics Office of Georgia (GEOSTAT) published the results of a National Child Labor Survey conducted with ILO support in 2015.(8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Georgia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	2.9 (13,547)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	96.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	3.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		120.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from National Child Labor Survey, 2015.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (1, 4, 11)
Services	Street work, including begging and collecting scrap metal (11-13)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5-7, 14)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5-7, 14)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Although estimates regarding the ethnicity and origin of children working on the street vary widely, sources report that children from Roma and Azerbaijani Kurd ethnic minorities make up a significant proportion of these children.(15) NGOs note that a lack of current data on the number and circumstances of children working on the street hinders effective targeting of social services.(15)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Georgia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Georgia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 4 of the Labor Code of Georgia (16)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 4 of the Labor Code of Georgia (16, 17)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 30 of the Constitution of Georgia; Articles 143-i, 143-ii, and 143-iii of the Criminal Code of Georgia; Law of Georgia on Combating Human Trafficking (18-20)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 143, 143-i, 143-ii, 143-iii, and 172 of the Criminal Code of Georgia; Law of Georgia on Combating Human Trafficking (19, 20)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 171, 253, 255, 255-1, and 255-2 of the Criminal Code of Georgia (20-22)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 171 of the Criminal Code of Georgia (20, 21)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	Articles 9 and 21 of the Law of Georgia on Military Duty and Military Service (23, 24)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 10 of the Law of Georgia on Military Duty and Military Service (22-25)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15 [‡]	Articles 2 and 9 of the Law of Georgia on General Education (26, 27)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 22 of the Law of Georgia on General Education (26)

[‡] Age calculated based on available information (26, 27)

In June 2016, Parliament adopted a legislative package proposed by the Interagency Coordination Council on Combating Trafficking in Persons, which amended 10 different laws.(28) Among other issues, these legislative changes expanded the child protection referral mechanism by establishing a legal duty to report suspected child trafficking to the police and Social Service Agency for a broader list of individuals and institutions.(14) The legislation also improved access to the identification cards necessary for obtaining government assistance for children living and working on the street.(28) Despite this effort, the identity card requirement remains a significant barrier to street children's access to social services. As a result, in 2016, the Government drafted legislation that would eliminate this requirement.(28)

The compulsory education age leaves 15-year-old children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor because they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work full time. In addition, although Article 4 of the Labor Code establishes age 14 as the minimum age for participation in work that is not harmful to the moral, physical, and mental development of the child, the law does not specify specific activities in which children under the legal working age are allowed to engage or the hours they are allowed to work.(16, 29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Health, and Social Affairs (MoLHSA)	Oversee child welfare issues and address labor matters.(21) Receive complaints through the Child Protection and Social Programs sub-department, and refer complaints of child labor violations to law enforcement agencies for investigation.(30)
Department of Labor Inspection within MoLHSA	Pilot program designed to enforce occupational safety and health laws, and prohibitions of forced labor and human trafficking.(11)
Department of Labor and Employment Policy within MoLHSA	Address labor and employment issues, and revise existing laws and policies to be in accordance with international standards.(27)
Social Service Agency within MoLHSA	Administer social benefits such as targeted social assistance, health care, and vouchers for day care. Employ social service agents who identify qualifying families for services and social workers who oversee child protection and family welfare cases.(11)
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MoIA)	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor and child trafficking, and investigate NGO and civilian reports of potential child labor violations.(2, 3, 21)
Central Criminal Police Department within the MoIA	Lead criminal investigations of trafficking in persons, including the trafficking of children, through the Division for Combating Illicit Trafficking of Drugs, Human Trafficking, and Irregular Migration.(30) Identify human traffickers and systematize data on traffickers across various agencies through the Information-Analytical Department.(31) Investigate possible human trafficking schemes by deploying teams of two law enforcement officials in Mobile Units to investigate companies offering suspicious work opportunities abroad.(30, 32)
District Police Units within the MoIA	Collect information on minors within each jurisdiction and visit minors' families to inform them of their rights. Conduct classes for school teachers on children's rights.(33)
Prosecutor General's Office within the Ministry of Justice	Investigate large-scale cases of child trafficking.(3)
Joint Child Referral Mechanism	Ensure interagency coordination of the enforcement of child labor laws and enumerate the procedures for referring children subject to any form of violence, including labor exploitation, to child protective services. (2, 30) Once any ministry identifies a case of child exploitation, the MoIA registers the case. MoLHSA then assesses the child's condition, provides shelter and rehabilitation services to the child as needed, and monitors the child's case.(3)

In March 2015, the Prime Minister signed Decree No. 81, which established a Department of Labor Inspection within the Ministry of Labor, Health, and Social Affairs (MoLHSA). In April 2015, MoLHSA issued a statute establishing the competencies of the Department of Labor Inspection.(34-36) However, Article 3 of the Law on Oversight of Entrepreneurial Activity states that any government agency charged with oversight of private enterprise requires a court order to enter the premises of a place of business or even review documents from the employer.(37) This provision obstructs the Department of Labor Inspection from enforcing Georgia's labor laws through inspections, in accordance with international norms.(38) Although labor monitors are permitted to enter businesses without the permission of the employer if there are grounds to believe that monitoring may uncover a case of human trafficking, monitors remain unable to inspect for violations of other provisions of the labor code, including laws on child labor.(39) In addition, labor monitors are unable to impose sanctions or assess penalties for violations found.(38)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, Georgia lacked a labor inspectorate to enforce laws on child labor, including its worst forms.(11)

Georgia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

However, the Department of Labor Inspection, a pilot initiative established in 2015 to monitor compliance with occupational safety and health laws and laws prohibiting forced labor and human trafficking, continued to function during the reporting period.(11, 28, 34) The pilot program is an initial step toward establishing a labor inspectorate, intended to build the capacity and credibility of the inspectorate when the inspectorate is fully established.(40) Currently, except in cases of suspected human trafficking or forced labor violations, the Department of Labor Inspection is only able to conduct monitoring of the 150 companies that volunteered to participate in the pilot program and must give companies 5 days' notice prior to a monitoring visit.(34, 41, 42) In addition, a source reported that because the State Monitoring Program does not have sanctioning authority and its findings are confidential, the monitoring has little impact on workers.(38)

During the reporting period, the Department of Labor Inspection received a budget of $230,000 and employed 25 labor monitors. Monitors conducted 225 monitoring site visits, including 7 unannounced inspections, and found no violations of child labor laws.(28) Inspectors received training from the ILO. The Department for Inspection of Labor Conditions purchased specialized equipment to test for compliance with occupational safety and health standards.(28)

In 2016, the Social Service Agency under MoLHSA provided services to 710 children found living or working on the street.(28) Of these children, 90 were provided with personal documentation, and others were enrolled in the education system, put in the care of social services, or enrolled in social programs.(13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Georgia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

Number of Convictions	1 (15)	5 (28)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (11)	Yes (28)

Training on trafficking in persons and combating child exploitation was conducted for investigators, prosecutors, and judges, including training on combating child trafficking and online sexual exploitation of children.(28, 43)

Research found that the police have, in some instances, refused to investigate cases of forced begging raised by NGOs, claiming that street begging could not be considered a violation of children's rights under the current legislation.(15)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established coordinating mechanisms to combat human trafficking and promote child welfare, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Rights Council*	Monitor implementation of the Child Rights chapter of the National Human Rights Action Plan, which is based on provisions of the UN CRC. Replace the Inter-Ministerial Coordination Council on Childcare, which was disbanded upon completion of the Action Plan for Child Welfare and Protection (2012–2015).(28)
Interagency Anti-Trafficking Coordination Council for the Implementation of Measures Against Human Trafficking	Coordinate government efforts against trafficking in persons and children, including efforts to protect and rehabilitate victims.(3) Refer child victims to shelters to receive social services.(2) Chaired by the Minister of Justice and comprises representatives from state agencies and non-state entities.(30) In 2016, approved the National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons for 2017 and opened competition for NGOs to propose a plan for identifying and mapping the population of children living and working on the street.(14)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Human Rights Strategy (2014–2020)	Identifies human rights priorities, including the protection of child rights. Led to the adoption of a National Action Plan on the Protection of Human Rights 2014–2016, which includes objectives to strengthen the provision of services to vulnerable children, such as those living and working on the streets, and requires implementation of ILO C. 138 and C. 182.(44, 45)
Anti-Trafficking Action Plan (2015–2016)	Supports implementation of activities to address human trafficking, including the exploitation of children. Focuses on identifying street children and including them in formal education, as well as ensuring that shelters for human trafficking victims properly accommodate child victims.(46)
EU Association Agreement and Association Agenda (2014–2016)	Outlines a framework for cooperation between Georgia and the EU. Requires Georgia to institute a number of initiatives to protect children's rights, including addressing child poverty, providing adequate resources to the Public Defender to undertake work for children, and focusing on measures to protect children against all forms of violence.(3, 47)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries. Supported the National Statistics Office of Georgia (GEOSTAT) in conducting a National Child Labor Survey, the results of which were published in 2016.(48) For additional information on USDOL's work, please see our Web site .
Improved Compliance With Labor Laws in the Democratic Republic of Georgia	$2 million USDOL-funded grant implemented by the ILO to work with the Government to improve its ability to enforce labor laws, including child labor laws, and adhere to international labor standards.(43) Key objectives of the project include supporting the establishment of effective labor law enforcement mechanisms in Georgia through labor inspection and promoting effective tripartite cooperation.(49)
Targeted Social Assistance Program and Child Benefit Program†	Social Service Agency-administered social assistance programs designed to eliminate poverty, especially child poverty. The Child Benefit Program is intended to halve extreme poverty among children, and covers about a quarter of the most vulnerable families with children.(50)
Social Rehabilitation and Childcare Program†	Government program, with a 2016 budget of $9.6 million, that provides assistance to children at high risk of abandonment and children with disabilities; also places abandoned children in appropriate care.(3, 11, 28)
State Fund for Protection and Assistance of (Statutory) Victims of Human Trafficking†	MoLHSA program to protect, assist, and rehabilitate trafficking and domestic violence victims, including minors.(3, 51) Implements the Government's Rehabilitation and Reintegration Strategy, which includes operating trafficking shelters in Batumi and Tbilisi.(2, 52) In 2016, received a total budget of $2.75 million.(11)

Program	Description
Education-Focused Programs for Vulnerable Children	The Ministry of Education and Science funds multiple programs to promote the inclusion of vulnerable children in education. Initiatives include a program designed to increase the school participation of street children, victims of forced begging, and children who are seasonal agricultural workers; a program to increase the number of Georgian language teachers in communities with large ethnic minority populations; and a program to distribute free textbooks to public school students.(11, 30, 42, 53)
UNICEF Country Program (2016–2020)	Joint effort by UNICEF and the Government of Georgia to improve social inclusion of the most vulnerable children.(54)

† Program is funded by the Government of Georgia.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Georgia (Table 10).

Table 10. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2016
	Increase the age up to which education is compulsory to 16, the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the law's light work provisions are specific enough prevent children from involvement in child labor.	2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Establish a functioning Labor Inspectorate to enforce child labor legislation. Ensure that the Labor Inspectorate has funding to provide a sufficient number of inspectors; that inspectors are capable of performing quality targeted, complaint-based, and unannounced inspections; that inspectors have the ability to assess penalties; and that data on the number and type of inspections, violations, and penalties are made publicly available.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that legislation permits the Department for Inspection of Labor Conditions to enter the premises of all businesses to conduct unannounced inspections, and empowers monitors to impose sanctions for the violation of labor laws.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that labor monitors inspect for compliance with the full range of labor laws, including laws against child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that cases of forced begging are recognized as criminal acts and receive appropriate and thorough investigation by the Police.	2014 – 2016
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2009 – 2016
Social Programs	Conduct a survey on the number and circumstances of children living and working on the street, to facilitate effective targeting of policies and programs.	2015 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Ghana

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Ghana made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government drafted regulations to the Labor Act that include protections for child domestic workers and developed standard operating procedures to refer victims of child trafficking to social service providers as part of the Child Protection Compact. In addition, the Government continued developing the National Plan of Action Phase II on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Labor, signed memoranda of understanding with 20 institutions responsible for its implementation, and expanded its Livelihood Empowerment Against Poverty program into 28 new districts. The Ministry of Local Government and Rural Development also introduced a new program to transition from a manual birth registration process to automated registration, which is likely to increase the number of children with birth certificates and facilitate school registrations and employment age verification. However, children in Ghana continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in fishing and cocoa harvesting. Resource constraints severely limited the Government's ability to fully implement policies and social programs during the reporting period.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ghana engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in fishing and cocoa harvesting.(1-7) According to a report by Tulane University that assessed data collected during the 2013–2014 harvest season, there were an estimated 918,543 child laborers ages 5 to 17 in the cocoa sector, which represents a 6.4 percent decline in the number of child workers in cocoa production since the 2008–2009 harvest season.(8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ghana.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	24.7 (1,721,914)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	91.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	25.3

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Producing cocoa, including land clearing, using machetes and cutlasses for weeding, collecting cocoa pods with a harvesting hook, breaking cocoa pods, working in the vicinity of pesticide spraying, and carrying heavy loads† of water (2, 3, 8, 11-14)
	Production of palm oil and cotton (14)
	Herding livestock (15, 16)
	Fishing for tilapia, and to a lesser extent for mudfish, catfish, and electric fish, including preparing bait, nets, and fishing gear; launching, paddling, and draining canoes; diving for fish; casting and pulling fishing nets and untangling them underwater; sorting, picking, cleaning, smoking, transporting, and selling fish; cleaning and repairing nets; and building and repairing boats (1, 2, 4-6, 13, 17-20)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Industry	Quarrying [†] and small-scale mining, [†] sometimes for gold, including using mercury, digging in deep pits, crushing rocks by hand, carrying heavy loads, [†] and machine operation [†] (2, 7, 14, 18, 21-27)
	Manufacturing, activities unknown (7, 14)
	Bricklaying (15)
Services	Domestic work (12, 18)
	Transporting heavy loads as kayayes [†] (4, 18, 28-30)
	Work in transportation, activities unknown (7)
	Electronic waste and garbage scavenging, including sorting scavenged items and transporting items for sale (27, 31-37)
	Street work, including begging, small-scale vending, and work at restaurants (7, 14, 38, 39)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (16, 18, 29, 40-43)
	Forced labor in begging; agriculture; fishing, including for tilapia; artisanal gold mining; domestic work; and street work, including vending and carrying heavy loads, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 4, 6, 11, 16, 19, 20, 41, 44-48)
	Forced ritual servitude for girls known as trokosi , including in domestic work for priests (4, 18, 29, 42, 44, 49, 50)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The majority of children subject to human trafficking are transported within Ghana for forced labor in cocoa, domestic work, and aquaculture. Children as young as 4 years old are subjected to forced labor in fishing in the Lake Volta region, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (16, 20, 29, 42-44, 48, 51, 52) Children also engage in hazardous work in the cocoa sector, including the use of sharp tools and exposure to agro-chemicals. (8, 14)

According to the Constitution and Education Act, primary education in Ghana is free and compulsory from kindergarten through junior high school. (53, 54) However, in practice, children must pay for school uniforms, fees, and materials, which may be prohibitive for many families. (1, 4, 12, 25, 31, 55-57) The Government has made efforts to increase the accessibility of public education, including by providing school uniforms and lifting birth registration requirements for enrollment. However, in isolated incidents, children without uniforms or birth registration may risk being turned away from schools, and out of school children are more vulnerable to child labor. (56, 58) In addition, factors such as a shortage of classrooms, long distance to schools, overcrowding in urban areas, sexual harassment of girls in schools, and poor educational infrastructure, particularly in rural areas, severely limit access to education for many children. (1, 12, 25, 55, 56)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ghana has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Ghana's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Section 89 of the Children's Act (59)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Section 91 of the Children's Act (59)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 28.1d, 28.2, and 28.5 of the Constitution; Article 7 of the Labor Regulations Legislative Instrument; Sections 91 and 92 of the Children's Act; Article 58 of the Labor Act (53, 59-61)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 16.1 and 16.2 of the Constitution; Articles 116 and 117 of the Labor Act; Sections 1–3 and 42 of the Human Trafficking Act; Sections 1 and 2 of the Human Trafficking Prohibition Legislative Instrument (53, 60, 62, 63)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Sections 1 and 2 of the Human Trafficking Act; Sections 1 and 2 of the Human Trafficking Prohibition Legislative Instrument; Articles 21–25 of the Labor Regulations Legislative Instrument (61, 62)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Sections 107, 108, 110, 111, 274–277, and 279–283 of the Criminal Code; Section 101A of the Criminal Offenses Act; Article 7(2) of the Labor Regulations Legislative Instrument (61, 64, 65)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes*	20	Armed Forces Regulations (Administration) Volume I (66-68)
State Voluntary	Yes	20	Armed Forces Regulations (Administration) Volume I (66-68)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15 [‡]	Article 2.2 of the Education Act (54, 66)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 25.1.a of the Constitution; Articles 1.1, 1.2, and 2.2 of the Education Act (53, 54)

* No conscription (69)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (66)

In 2016, Ghana drafted Regulations to the Labor Act, which include protections for domestic workers, including minimum age for employment.(70-72) Although Ghana has two Hazardous Activities Frameworks, which include detailed types of hazardous activities prohibited to children, neither is considered a legal instrument and no penalties can be imposed for violations of the activities listed in the Frameworks.(73, 74) Furthermore, laws regarding the types of hazardous work prohibited for children are not comprehensive as they do not cover the use of sharp tools in cocoa production or lake fishing, an area of work where there is evidence of children working underwater, for long hours, and at night.(59, 61) In addition, Ghana's laws do not specifically criminally prohibit the use of a child in pornographic performances.(75)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Labor Relations (MELR)	Through its Child Labor Unit (CLU), enforce child labor laws, oversee child protection committees at the district level, and implement the Ghana Child Labor Monitoring System (GCLMS) through the National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa (NPECLC).(2, 4, 25, 56, 76-79) Through its District Assemblies, investigate child labor violations in the informal sector, educate employers on compliance with child labor laws, and conduct inspections.(1, 56)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of the Interior (MOI)	Through its Ghana Police Service (GPS), investigate, arrest, and prosecute cases related to the worst forms of child labor and operate a 24/7 hotline for reporting crimes.(40) Within the GPS, the Domestic Violence and Victims Support Unit (DOVVSU) and Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) work together to investigate cases and provide support to victims.(4, 40, 44, 47) Through its Ghana Immigration Service (GIS), combat human trafficking through Anti-Human Smuggling and Trafficking Units (AHSTIP) located in Accra and at three major border crossings.(76, 80, 81) In 2016, created a 35 member GIS and GPS task force at the Accra airport to combat human trafficking, which operated for part of the year.(76, 81-84)
Ministry of Justice's Office of the Attorney General (MOJ/AG)	Combat child labor by prosecuting child labor and child trafficking crimes.(40, 79) Within the Economic and Organized Crime Office, the Human Trafficking Unit shares responsibility with the AHTU for combatting human trafficking, confiscate proceeds from human trafficking, and provides ongoing training for law enforcement on prevention measures.(76, 85)
Minerals Commission	Inspect licensed mining sites and raise awareness of laws on the mining sector with criminal law enforcement agencies.(25)
Ministry of Gender, Children, and Social Protection (MOGCSPP)	Combat child labor and human trafficking.(76, 79, 86) Through its Department for Social Welfare (DSW), operate shelters for vulnerable children, administer juvenile justice, and implement programs to combat child labor.(76, 86-88) Through its Human Trafficking Secretariat, oversee the creation, implementation, and review of human trafficking policies and ensure proper monitoring, evaluation, and data collection.(40) In 2016, created and disseminated a template to collect data on human trafficking, funded an anti-human trafficking training at the police academy, and conducted an on-site simulation at the airport in Accra for the GIS and GPS task force.(76, 82)
Community Child Protection Committees (CCPCs)	Receive complaints of child labor violation at the district level and report cases to the GPS, DSW, or traditional authorities, who work with the police to conduct investigations.(25, 40, 78) Participate in the GCLMS to monitor, prevent, and withdraw children from the worst forms of child labor in more than 600 communities nationwide as part of the Child and Family Welfare Policy.(15, 39, 57)

Although the Office of the Attorney General is responsible for prosecuting child trafficking violations, in practice it is often left to the prosecutors of the Ghana Police Service (GPS), who often have minimal formal legal training.(40, 84)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Ghana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Ghana

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Ghana's workforce, which includes almost 12 million workers.(90) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Ghana should employ roughly 799 inspectors.(90-92) Inadequate resources, including funding, transportation, office space, and office supplies, hamper the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(25, 40, 56, 93) Research also indicates that few cases of child labor violations are reported, and even fewer cases result in prosecution because judges, police, and labor inspectors are sometimes unfamiliar with child labor laws.(56, 94) In addition, it is not known how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of calls made to the GPS's 24/7 hotline.

In 2016, the MELR mandated its Chief Labor Officer to investigate unlicensed recruitment agencies, which frequently recruit children for domestic work, and publicly posted a list of registered recruitment agencies to counteract unlawful recruitment activities.(79, 81, 95, 96) The Ministry of Fisheries and Aquaculture Development also stopped two fishing boats that were suspected of employing victims of child trafficking.(51, 97) Formal referral mechanisms continued to be hindered by lack of shelter space and transportation for victims.(40)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Ghana took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

* The Government does not make this information publicly available.

During the reporting period, the GPS's Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) employed approximately 57 investigators and the GIS's Anti-Human Smuggling and Trafficking Unit (AHSTIP) increased its staff from 5 to 8. However, both GIS and the AHTU noted a lack of transportation, human and financial resources, and collaboration with other government officials, which hampered enforcement efforts.(40, 47, 51, 76, 81, 84) In addition, data on human trafficking are not collected systemically, and information is often not conveyed from regional offices to the headquarters in Accra.(85) Victims are sometimes required to bear the costs of investigations, including medical exams and transportation to arrest the suspect.(42)

In 2016, IOM worked with the Government to develop standard operating procedures to refer victims of child trafficking to social service providers as part of the Child Protection Compact Partnership.(40) In addition, state attorneys reviewed all 217 open human trafficking cases during the reporting period and recommended prosecution in five cases as a result.(81, 82, 84) With support from UNICEF, the MOGSP also printed and disseminated 4,000 copies of the Human Trafficking Act to law enforcement and social service providers during the year.(76, 81, 84) In April 2016, an individual accused of child trafficking in the Lake Volta region was convicted of employing a child in hazardous work and was sentenced to pay a fine.(100) Research indicates that some Government officials may be unfamiliar with how to identify cases of domestic human trafficking, which limits the Government's ability to investigate and prosecute these offenses.(76)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor (NSCCL)	Oversee Government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor and support the implementation of the GCLMS, a monitoring, data collection, and referral mechanism.(40, 77, 85) Led by the CLU and includes representatives from other ministries, employers' and workers' organizations, and civil society.(1, 40, 77, 101) In 2016, continued developing the National Plan of Action Phase II on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Against Child Labor (NPA2) (2016–2020) and signed memoranda of understanding with 20 stakeholder institutions to implement the plan.(79)
MELR's CLU	Coordinate Government programs to combat child labor and provide technical support to ministries, departments and agencies, employers' and workers' organizations, and international agencies such as the ILO, IOM, and UNICEF.(1, 40) In 2016, received $22,181 from the Government and $22,482 from partner organizations, which was insufficient to carry out all planned activities.(40, 102)
Human Trafficking Management Board (HTMB)	Intersectoral board chaired by the MOGCSP that includes representatives from law enforcement, ministries, and civil society.(40) Advise the MOGCSP on human trafficking policy; rehabilitate and re-integrate victims; and oversee the Human Trafficking Fund, which provides financial support to victims, including children.(40, 62, 63) In 2016, began drafting a National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Human Trafficking in Ghana with donor support.(76)

Although the Government created an ad hoc committee in 2016 to improve coordination of enforcement and prosecution efforts against human trafficking cases, the appointment of its National Trafficking in Persons Coordinator expired on January 6, 2017. It is unclear whether a new coordinator will be appointed and if the committee will continue to function.(76, 81, 103) In addition, the HTMB has not yet received funds to provide assistance to victims.(84)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action Phase II on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Against Child Labor (NPA2) (2016–2020)†	Aims to fill in gaps identified in the first NPA (2009–2015), improve coordination, and reduce the worst forms of child labor to 10 percent by 2020, with a focus on the fishing, mining, and agricultural sectors, including cocoa, palm oil, and cotton production, and children engaged as kayayes , trokosi , domestic workers, and in commercial sexual exploitation.(14, 40, 79)
Hazardous Child Labor Activity Frameworks	Created by working groups and includes both the Hazardous Child Labor Activity Framework and the Hazardous Child Labor Activity Framework for the Cocoa Sector. Both frameworks were developed in consultation with workers' and employers' organizations and identify hazardous activities which should be prohibited for children.(74, 104, 105)
2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol (2010 Declaration) and Its Accompanying Framework of Action	Joint declaration by the Governments of Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, and the United States, and the International Cocoa and Chocolate Industry.(106–108) Provides resources and coordinates with key stakeholders on efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas.(106, 107) Ensures that all project efforts implemented under the Declaration and Framework align with Ghana's national action plans in order to promote coherence and sustainability.(106–108) USDOL-funded projects and some industry-funded projects carried out activities in support of this policy during the reporting period.(108)
Bi-Lateral Commitments to Combat Cross-Border Trafficking†	Joint declaration signed by the First Ladies of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana to combat the worst forms of child labor and advocate for sub-regional cooperation with other First Ladies.(109) A subsequent cooperative agreement between the two governments further operationalizes the declaration, which targets high-risk sectors, provides protection to victims, improves coordination, and prosecutes offenders.(110, 111) The MOU with the Government of Jordan formalizes labor recruitment practices and provides for support and repatriation of Ghanaian victims of human trafficking in Jordan.(76)
MELR's National Employment Policy	Aims to create decent jobs and improve the legal framework regarding labor, including reinforcing regulations prohibiting child labor.(112)
Minerals and Mining Policy of Ghana	Prohibits child labor in mining and stipulates children who visit mining sites must be supervised.(113)
Child and Family Welfare Policy	Aims to strengthen social protection for children, improve inter-ministerial coordination, and empower youth.(25, 47, 66) Led by the MOGCSP, formalizes the referral of child protection cases, including the worst forms of child labor, between the police and the Department of Social Development.(40, 47) In 2016, held a two-day workshop for civil society and enforcement agencies on how to implement the policy.(114)
UNDAF Action Plan (2012–2016)	Aims to provide education or vocational training opportunities to 5,000 children ages 5 to 17 who have been withdrawn or are prevented from engaging in child labor.(115)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2016, the MOGSP resumed work to draft a national plan of action to combat human trafficking.(76, 81, 116) Although the NPA2 to combat child labor was approved in 2016, the Cabinet must issue a memorandum authorizing its implementation, which was delayed into 2017 due to a change in Government.(40) The Government also approved a National Migration Policy during the reporting period, but like the Free Compulsory Universal Basic Education (F-CUBE), it does not include child labor elimination and prevention strategies .(48, 117) Overlapping objectives and poor coordination hindered the effective implementation of policies during the reporting period. (18, 87)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL projects in support of the 2010 Declaration in cocoa-growing areas of Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire that aim to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, through research, improved monitoring and enforcement. These projects include: Survey Research on Child Labor in West African Cocoa Growing Areas (2012–2016) , $1.5 million project implemented by the Payson Center for International Development at Tulane University; Assessing Progress in Reducing Child Labor in Cocoa-Growing Areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana (2015–2019) , $3 million project implemented by NORC at the University of Chicago; and Mobilizing Community Action and Promoting Opportunities for Youth in Ghana's Cocoa-Growing Communities (MOCA) (2015–2019) , $4.5 million project implemented by Winrock International. Projects that address child labor in other sectors include: Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017) , a global project implemented by the ILO which completed a report on child labor and youth employment in Ghana in 2016, and CARING Gold Mining Project (ASGM) , $5 million project implemented by the ILO in Ghana and the Philippines.(118-123) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
USG-Funded Projects	USG-funded projects aim to improve child protection measures in partnership with the host government. Includes: Child Protection Compact Partnership (2015–2020), $5 million USDOS-funded project implemented by IOM and local NGO Free the Slaves; Sustainable Fisheries Management Project (2014–2019), $24 million USAID-funded project implemented by CRC/URI which includes activities aimed at reducing child labor in the fishing sector; the Complementary Basic Education Program, a $40 million joint contribution between USAID and the UK's Department for International Development (DFID) to support Ghana's Ministry of Education to educate and re-integrate out-of-school children into the basic school system; and the $37 million USAID-UNICEF jointly funded Learning Support program, which helps increase inclusive education services to special needs children in primary schools.(84, 124-127)
Industry-Funded Projects	Industry-funded projects aim to increase sustainability in the cocoa sector, improve farmer livelihoods, improve access to education, and combat the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas. Some projects may be in support of the World Cocoa Foundation (WCF)'s CocoaAction (2014–2020) initiative and the 2010 Declaration .(108, 128)
Awareness Raising Activities*†	Large-scale events by MOGSP, AHTU, MOI, and MELR to raise awareness of child trafficking issues through radio and television broadcasts, public events, and community awareness activities.(76, 81)
Livelihood Empowerment Against Poverty (LEAP)†	MOGSP-administered conditional cash transfer program that provides monetary grants to poor households with orphans and vulnerable children on the condition that children attend school, receive vaccinations, and regularly visit health care facilities. An original provision that children do not engage in child labor in order to receive benefits was removed in 2012.(25, 38, 75, 129, 130) In 2016, expanded into 28 additional districts with 43,368 new participants and increased the number of beneficiaries in existing districts.(40, 102)
Educational Programs†	The Ghana Cocoa Board's Child Education Support Program rehabilitates and builds schools in cocoa growing areas.(131, 132) Ministry of Education-funded programs under F-CUBE that aim to increase school attendance and enrollment.(38, 117, 129) Includes the Ghana School Feeding Program, which aims to reduce malnutrition and improve attendance among students; the Capitation Grant Scheme, which helps defray the cost of basic education for students in public primary schools; and the Ghana Education Service – Girls Education Unit, which places girls' education officers at the regional and district levels, and mobilizes communities to enroll more girls in school.(1, 38, 130, 133, 134) Includes the distribution of 400,000-500,000 free school uniforms and exercise books to districts with poor enrollment rates.(102, 130, 134)
Programs to Assist Kayayes †	MOGSP program that provides rehabilitation and reintegration support for kayayes . In 2016, provided training and small business opportunities to 400 kayayes .(102)
mBirths*	Ministry of Local Government and Rural Development program, supported by UNICEF and Tigo, to transition from a manual birth registration process to automated birth registration.(58, 135)

Program	Description
From Street to School*†	MOGCSP program which aims to remove children from the street and reintegrate them into family and educational settings.(88)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Ghana.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(40, 41, 136)

In 2016, the Government failed to allocate funding to the Human Trafficking Fund for victim support and the National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa (NPECLC), which ceased to function as a result.(14, 76, 96, 137, 138) The CLU, the AHTU, MOGCSP, and local NGOs cite the lack of funding as one of the primary obstacles in implementing programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.(40, 81, 85) In addition, Government-run shelters for child victims are poorly run and did not receive sufficient funding during the reporting period. Furthermore, a DSW-operated shelter for child trafficking victims and victims of other forms of abuse in Accra shares its space with a detention center for juvenile offenders, which presents safety concerns for victims of child trafficking.(4, 6, 40, 41, 44, 84, 136, 139)

Although the Government has worked closely with industry, NGOs, and international organizations to implement child labor programs in cocoa, fishing, and mining, the magnitude of these programs remains insufficient to address the scope of the problem.(66)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ghana (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit the use of children in all illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
	Ensure that the types of hazardous work prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit all forms of commercial sexual exploitation of children, including the use of a child in pornographic performances.	2014 – 2016
Enforcement	Ensure prosecutors who have received sufficient legal training oversee and lead the prosecution of cases of the worst forms of child labor, and that government officials, including judges, police, and labor inspectors, are familiar with the provisions of laws protecting children.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure agencies responsible for child labor laws coordinate effectively and improve the exchange of information.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that training is institutionalized for labor inspectors and publish information about the training system.	2013 – 2016
	Publish information on the amount of funding allocated to the labor inspectorate and ensure inspectorates have adequate resources, including office space, transportation, and supplies to effectively carry out their mandate.	2009 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by ensuring inspectors conduct routine and unannounced inspections, and are authorized to assess penalties for labor violations.	2014 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of child labor violations found, criminal violations found, penalties issued, penalties collected, and convictions made.	2010 – 2016
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors and investigators responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in accordance with the ILO recommendation.	2010 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Ensure victims are not required to incur the costs related to prosecuting offenders, and that there are sufficient social services available to support victims.	2016
	Establish a mechanism to log all calls to the child protection hotline and track cases of child labor for referral to law enforcement or social services providers.	2014 – 2016
Coordination	Ensure that all coordinating bodies receive adequate funding to convene on a regular basis and fulfill their respective coordinating roles.	2013 – 2016
Government Policies	Improve policy implementation by clarifying objectives and improving coordination.	2015 – 2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2013 – 2016
Social Programs	Improve access to education by eliminating school-related fees, permitting children without uniforms to attend class, increasing the number of classrooms, improving access to schools, and prohibiting sexual harassment in schools. Make additional efforts to ensure all children receive birth registration.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that all social programs receive sufficient funding to carry out their objectives.	2014 – 2016
	Expand the availability of government-supported shelter services for child victims and ensure victims are not housed in the same facilities as juvenile offenders.	2016
	Create, replicate, and expand effective models for addressing exploitative child labor.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 90. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited January 19, 2017]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
91. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

92. UN. "World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex." (2012); http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Grenada made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government joined the Regional Initiative to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2020. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Grenada, no study of child labor has been done to confirm this. The Government's ability to prevent children from becoming engaged in the worst forms of child labor is limited because existing laws do not comprehensively prohibit child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. In addition, there is a lack of prohibitions against children's involvement in hazardous work and illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Grenada.(1) According to the Education Act, public education is free and all children are required to attend school until age 16. However, in practice, some school boards deny access to pregnant girls and adolescent mothers.(2-4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Grenada has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2). However, gaps exist in Grenada's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 2. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	16	Article 32 of the Employment Act (5)

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 137 and 188 of the Criminal Code; Article 12 of the Electronic Crimes Bill; Article 10 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act (7-10)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No

† No standing military (11)

Article 32 of the Employment Act allows holiday employment for children under age 16, but it does not specify the minimum age, types of work, or number of hours permitted for such work.(5, 12) The Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act does not sufficiently prohibit the trafficking of children, despite establishing heightened penalties for traffickers of children, because it requires the use of force, threats, abuse of power, or other forms of coercion to carry out the offense.(7) The Criminal Code, Electronic Crimes Bill, and Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act do not comprehensively prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of all children.(9)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including in its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforce laws related to child labor.(10, 13)
Royal Grenada Police Force	Investigate crimes and enforce laws related to child labor. Help the Child Protection Agency and the Ministry of Social Development and Housing provide emergency services to children.(10, 13)
Ministry of Legal Affairs	Prosecute criminal cases of child abuse in consultation with the Child Protection Agency.(14)
Child Protection Agency	Enforce laws related to child labor by receiving and investigating reports of child abuse. Provide social and protective services to abused children, including by requesting court emergency protection orders.(10, 13-15)
Ministry of Social Development and Housing	Oversee the Child Abuse Hotline and investigate reports of child abuse. Refer child abuse cases to the Child Protection Agency and criminal cases to the police.(14) Enforce laws related to school attendance and provide programs to support school attendance.(10, 13, 16)
Ministry of Education	Enforce laws related to school attendance through employment of truancy officers. Combat student absenteeism by monitoring students' attendance and facilitating students' access to school transportation and meals.(10, 13, 16)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Grenada took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor had a budget of approximately $333,333 to carry out all activities during the reporting period, including labor inspections. Although labor law enforcement agencies have sufficient resources to respond to reports of child labor, these agencies are typically underfunded and lack the staff and resources needed to fully realize their missions.(1, 13, 18)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Grenada did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 5).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms. During the reporting period, the Government joined the Regional Initiative to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2020 and continued drafting a policy on adolescent pregnancy.(4, 19) Existing policies refer adolescent mothers to the Program for Adolescent Mothers rather than reintegrating them in mainstream education. The limited implementation of these policies impedes the Government's ability to reach all girls who leave school due to pregnancy.(4)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence of current research on the worst forms of child labor in Grenada.

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Grenada (Table 6).

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish a minimum age for hazardous work as 18 and identify hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children.	2009 – 2016
	Prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, including drug production and trafficking.	2011 – 2016
	Establish minimum age requirements of at least age 13 for holiday employment and define the activities, conditions, and number of hours permissible for such work.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that the law sanctions all perpetrators of child trafficking, including where there is no showing of force, threats, or coercion.	2015 – 2016
	Enact legislation prohibiting the use, procuring, or offering of a child for all forms of commercial sexual exploitation.	2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Provide sufficient funding and resources to allow agencies responsible for the enforcement of labor laws to fulfill their mission.	2015 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk reviews.	2016
	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that labor inspectors and investigators receive training related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
Policies	Adopt and implement a policy to address the reintegration of pregnant girls and adolescent mothers in mainstream education.	2016
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine whether any of the worst forms of child labor exist in Grenada.	2009 – 2016
	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education accessible to ensure that all children are provided with basic education and complete their schooling, including pregnant girls and adolescent mothers.	2015 – 2016

In 2016, Guatemala made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government drafted a Roadmap for the Prevention and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor, conducted targeted child labor inspections, and carried out five nationwide inspection plans that included identifying child labor violations. The Government re-established the Inter-institutional Committee Against Trafficking and partnered with the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, which works directly with technology companies to obtain tips about child trafficking and pornography. The Government also passed a law restoring administrative sanction authority to the Ministry of Labor. However, children in Guatemala perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The lack of sufficient labor inspectors and vehicles and inability to assess fines, coupled with inadequate judicial enforcement of court orders, limited the Government's capacity to combat the worst forms of child labor. In addition, existing social programs are insufficient to reach all children engaged in exploitative labor and, in particular, do not target children working in domestic service or agriculture.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guatemala perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guatemala.

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 5, 17, 28, 29)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking, and stealing and transporting contraband as a result of criminal and gang recruitment (4, 12, 18, 29)

[†] Determined hazardous by national law or regulation as understood under Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children as young as 5 years old work in coffee harvesting and production.(30, 31) In agriculture, working conditions for children also involve using dangerous tools, such as machetes, especially in harvesting sugarcane.(18) Children are also engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, including child sex tourism, especially in Antigua, Guatemala City, and the Department of Solola.(14)

In 2016, Guatemala, in addition to El Salvador and Honduras, continued to be a main source of unaccompanied children migrating to the United States.(14, 32-35) Such children are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and recruitment by gangs to perform illicit activities such as theft, homicide, and drug trafficking.(4, 12, 29, 36, 37) Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to labor trafficking.(3, 29, 38-40)

Significant barriers to accessing education remain, particularly for children in rural areas, indigenous children, and girls.(12, 18) Although basic education is free in Guatemala, there aren’t sufficient secondary public schools for children. Therefore, families feel forced to send their children to private schools where they pay school fees and supplies. In addition, due to lack of public schools in rural areas, some families have difficulty paying for transportation, and lodging.(14, 18) Because of the heightened risks that girls face traveling to schools far away, girls’ enrollment in secondary school is lower than that of boys.(18) Indigenous children also have lower enrollment rates compared to other children.(5) In addition, there are not enough qualified teachers to provide instruction in the predominant native languages or sufficient classroom materials available in these languages.(18, 41)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guatemala has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Guatemala's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation

Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 135(g) of the Constitution; Article 68 and 69 of the Constitutive Law of the Guatemalan Army (43, 52)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 57 of the Law of Integral Protection of Children and Adolescents (48)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15 [‡]	Article 74 of the Constitution (43, 53, 54)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 74 of the Constitution; Article 1 of Government Agreement 226-2008 (43, 48, 55)

[‡] Age calculated based on available information (2, 43, 53, 54)

Although Articles 32 and 150 of the Labor Code allow the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTPS) to authorize children under age 14 to work under exceptional circumstances, including if the MTPS determines that children must work to support their family due to poverty, the law does not define the total number of hours, kinds of tasks, or age range applicable for this exception which is inconsistent with international standards on light work.(42) The President's Office and the MTPS have an agreement reiterating the Labor Code's prohibition of the employment of children under the age of 14 and committing the MTPS to grant exceptions only in very extraordinary cases.(44)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security's (MTPS) Inspection Division (IGT)	Enforce child labor laws, including prohibitions on the worst forms of child labor, by inspecting businesses and responding to child labor complaints.(2) Refer children found in child labor to government social services and complaints to the MTPS Adolescent Workers Protection Unit.(56-59) Refer cases of worst forms of child labor to the Secretariat Against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons (SVET) and unresolved cases to labor courts for review and sanctions, as appropriate.(2)
Secretariat of Social Welfare and Departmental Social Welfare Offices	Lead government efforts to protect children and oversee the implementation of the Protocol for Identifying and Assisting Child and Adolescent Victims of Commercial Sexual Exploitation.(60)

Organization/Agency	Role
Secretariat Against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons (SVET)	Assist child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and human trafficking. Receive cases from the IGT and refer them to the Public Prosecutor's Office.(2) Provide trainings to law enforcement agencies and businesses on indicators of forced labor and human trafficking and strategies for preventing the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(3)
National Civil Police (Policía Nacional Civil)	Investigate cases of child trafficking through the Trafficking in Persons and Forced Labor Unit located within the Special Investigation Police, and operate a hotline to receive reports of suspected child trafficking cases.(17, 28, 61)
Public Ministry, Special Prosecutor's Office	Receive case referrals involving the worst forms of child labor from labor inspectors.(2) Investigate cases of human trafficking and forced labor through the Special Prosecutor's Office Against Human Trafficking. In 2016, the Special Prosecutor's Office hired additional investigators and prosecutors to respond to the commercial sexual exploitation of minors.(13) By September 2016, the MP convicted abusers of 489 child victims of violence, including commercial sexual exploitation.(13)
Human Rights Ombudsman	Receive complaints regarding child victims of human trafficking.(62)
Solicitor General's Office	Receive complaints regarding the exploitation of children. Initiate legal proceedings and ensure the legal representation of children whose rights have been violated.(24, 61, 62) Maintain a Child Rescue Unit that determines safe placement for minors who have been abused.(24)

*The Government does not publish this information.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Guatemala's workforce, which includes more than 4.6 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Guatemala should employ roughly 308 labor inspectors.(65-67) In addition, even though the Government purchased additional vehicles to conduct inspections, vehicles were not distributed outside the capital, leaving inspectorates in the rest of the country without sufficient vehicles. Inspectors—especially those outside Guatemala City—also lack fuel, computers, and paper to conduct inspections.(2, 4, 8, 17, 18, 68-70) Although the general budget for the MTPS increased slightly since 2015, the budget for inspections decreased from $3.4 million to $3.3 million.(18)

Although labor inspectors may conduct unannounced inspections, the timing of some inspections, which may include child labor, has become predictable, taking place during the times employers are required to pay quarterly bonuses.(17, 18) Announced inspections allow time for employers to temporarily hide or remove children that may be engaged in child labor, and are, therefore, not as effective as unannounced inspections. Some reports question the quality of child labor inspections, particularly the scope and coverage across industries.(17, 18) Although laws governing the minimum age for work and hazardous work apply in both the formal and informal sectors, labor inspectors rarely inspect informal workplaces where child labor violations are most likely to occur.(2) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor lacked authority to directly impose fines for labor law violations and referred cases of violations to the courts for review and possible sanction and remediation of the underlying violation, causing significant delays.(17, 18) However, in March 2017, the Guatemalan Congress passed a law restoring sanction authority to the MTPS.(71)

In 2016, the MTPS initiated plans to create a unit to address allegations of corruption or inefficiency in the filing of labor complaints, including child labor complaints.(18) The MTPS also conducted 5,872 inspections targeting child labor and carried out five nationwide targeted inspection plans that included child labor detection.(18) As a result of these inspections, the MTPS found 97 children and adolescents in child labor.(18)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Guatemala took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Unknown
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	Yes (18)
Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (2)	Yes (21)
Number of Investigations	280 (3)	43 (18)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown	97 (18)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	62 (3)	19 (18)
Number of Convictions	17 (3)	19 (18)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (2)	Yes (18)

The Public Ministry and National Police conducted several raids against alleged online child pornography networks.(14) However, law enforcement agencies lack sufficient training and vehicles, fuel, and criminal investigators, particularly outside Guatemala City.(2, 14, 17, 24, 61) Although the Government established specialized courts—including a 24-hour court in Guatemala City—to hear cases of human trafficking and gender-based violence, judges are often unable to schedule hearings and trials in a timely manner.(3, 14, 72)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAPETI)	Coordinate government policies and efforts to combat child labor.(2) Led by the vice president's office and composed of several government ministries, as well as representatives from industry associations and trade unions.(16, 73) Met four times in 2016.(18, 20, 74)

Guatemala

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Departmental Commissions for the Eradication of Child Labor (CODEPETI)	Coordinate government efforts to combat child labor at the departmental or regional level. Composed of department-level representatives of CONAPETI member agencies as well as NGO and business representatives.(2, 17) Replaced the Labor Ministry Executive Secretariats.(2) In 2016, more than half of Guatemala's 22 departments continued to have active CODEPETIs.(18)
Secretariat Against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons (SVET)	Coordinate all government efforts against human trafficking, including for commercial sexual exploitation of children and forced child labor, by responding to cases and providing support for victims. Operate shelters to serve minor victims of trafficking.(61, 62) Led by Vice President's Office. In 2016, led workshops in all military bases and schools, trained key regional players in the fight against human trafficking, and translated the Law Against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons into 17 Mayan languages.(21) Served 74 children who were trafficking victims.(21) In 2016, revised, published, and legally implemented the Inter-institutional Protocol for the Protection and Attention of Victims of Human Trafficking, raising awareness with stakeholders.(21)
Inter-Institutional Committee Against Trafficking (CIT)	Develop and manage initiatives to combat human trafficking. Relaunched by SVET in 2016. Coordinated by SVET and co-chaired by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Includes 28 government and civil society institutions.(24, 61, 62) Met 10 times and created a detailed work plan for CIT sub-commissions.(21)
National Working Group for the Prevention and Protection of Children and Adolescents Against Sexual Exploitation in Activities Related to Travel and Tourism (MENACESNNA)	Includes 10 government, private sector, and civil society institutions.(21) Presided by SVET. Aims to prevent sexual exploitation of children and adolescents in the travel and tourism sector. Oversees the Code of Conduct Against Sex Tourism, a mandatory code for trade group membership that forbids providing services to customers believed to be engaging in commercial sexual exploitation of children.(21) In 2016, developed a poster describing how to report sex tourism cases, signed 43 business onto the code, and trained 32 businesses and 2,195 individuals on the code.(21)

In 2016, SVET worked with the private sector to create internal company policies excluding forced labor from their supply chains.(21) Despite improvements in interagency coordination, Guatemala continues to lack effective coordination among government institutions and civil society actors who provide services and protection to victims of child labor.(4, 17, 24)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
Roadmap for the Prevention and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2016–2020) [†]	Led by CONAPETI and CODEPETI.(18, 75–77) Aims to prevent and eradicate child labor by addressing poverty; guaranteeing rights to health for children and adolescents; guaranteeing access to education, especially for children in or at risk of child labor; coordinating and enforcing child labor laws; raising awareness regarding risks and consequences of child labor; and implementing a system to monitor and evaluate child labor.(37)
Intra-Institutional Coordination Protocol to Assist Child Laborers	Sets guidelines for MTPS inspectors to identify child laborers, remove children from the worst forms of child labor, and coordinate services for such children with other government agencies.(46) In 2016, MTPS inspectors used a specific procedure and instrument to conduct inspections on labor complaints involving child and adolescent workers.(64) The specific procedure and instrument facilitated coordination with other government agencies when protection services for such children were required.(64)
Protocol for Providing Comprehensive Health Care to Children and Adolescents in the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Requires public health workers to enter into a database information about any child whose injuries may have been labor related. Implemented by the Ministry of Public Health and Social Assistance.(16, 78) Ministry of Public Health and Social Assistance shared the protocol in 2016 with hospitals at the departmental level and with health centers at the municipal level.(64) The protocol was implemented in cases identified by health workers or MTPS.(64)
Protocol for Identifying and Assisting Child and Adolescent Victims of Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Establishes procedural guidelines for government agencies and NGOs responsible for the protection and care of child and adolescent victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Overseen by the Secretariat of Social Welfare and Departmental Social Welfare Offices and implemented by SVET.(2, 60)
Inter-institutional Protocol for the Protection and Attention of Victims of Human Trafficking [†]	Provides instruction on how to process sex crimes, including commercial sexual exploitation of children, and assist prospective victims of trafficking in persons.(21, 63) In 2016, special procedures for LGBTI victims were included in the protocol.(21)

Policy	Description
Public Policy on Human Trafficking and the Comprehensive Protection of Victims (2014–2024)	Aims to guarantee protection for and comprehensive attention to trafficking victims, and promote prevention, detection, prosecution, and sanction of this crime.(37) Includes a National Plan of Strategic Action that directs the Government's actions on preventing and combating human trafficking.(17, 24, 79) In 2016, the Government developed a directory of social assistance, a compendium of instruments on human trafficking issues, and guides for identification and referral of human trafficking victims.(42)
Urban Social Protection Strategy	Seeks to prevent children from engaging in street work and to increase training and employment opportunities for youth.(16)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(20)

In June 2016, the Government signed an agreement with the governments of Panama and the Dominican Republic to eradicate child labor by sharing information and jointly developing and implementing research projects.(80, 81)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Business Network for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in Guatemala (Red Empresarial)	Created in 2015; program that aims to promote prevention and eradication of child labor. Members include the ministries of Education and Agriculture, MTPS, CONAPETI, ILO, UNICEF, the UN Food and Agriculture Organization, and representatives from the private sector.(20, 82-85) In 2016, the Business Network conducted workshops to raise awareness of the Roadmap for the Prevention and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(64)
I Don't Allow Sexual Exploitation of Children in Tourism [‡]	SVET-administered national campaign against the commercial sexual exploitation of children in tourism.(3) In 2016, SVET continued to run this campaign, which consisted of awareness-raising messaging displayed at airports, hotels, and restaurants; and provided a code of conduct signed and publicly displayed by businesses in the tourism industry.(21)
Human Trafficking Referral and Grant Funding [†]	Provides funding for NGOs to assist child victims of human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation.(79)
Ministerio de Desarrollo Social (MIDES) Poverty Reducing Programs [†]	Conditional Cash Transfer Program (Mi Bono Seguro) provides cash assistance to families with school-age children, conditioned on children's school attendance (16, 59, 86). Food Assistance Program (Mi Bolsa Segura) provides food assistance to poor families, with the requirement that their children attend school (59, 87, 88). Zero Hunger Pact (Pacto Hambre Cero) combats malnutrition, increases access to education, and reduces the economic vulnerability of approximately 701,000 families (16, 89, 90). Young Protagonists (Jóvenes Protagonistas) provides at-risk adolescents with training and formative activities outside school hours (86, 91, 92). My First Employment (Mi Primer Empleo) places working-age youth in apprenticeship programs and grants them on-the-job training and a monthly stipend.(78, 86, 93) In 2016, MIDES increased funding to combat the worst forms of child labor by 12.3 percent.(18)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Guatemala.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(21, 70, 94, 95)

In 2016, Guatemala became the first Central American country to partner with the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, which works directly with technology companies like Facebook to obtain tips about child trafficking and pornography.(21) However, conditions in government-run children's shelters are not adequate. In 2016, 55 children escaped from government-run shelters due to maltreatment, including lack of adequate clothing and food, and abuse by staff.(21) The shelter housing victims of trafficking in persons held 748 minors, even though it had capacity for only 400.(21)

Although the Government has implemented programs to assist children and families, research found no evidence of government programs specifically designed to assist children engaged in hazardous work, including those in agriculture and domestic service—especially those of indigenous descent.(4) Research was unable to determine whether the Government took any actions toward implementing the Human Trafficking Referral and Grant Funding program in 2016.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guatemala (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law prohibits all children under age 14 from working, or establish a light work framework for children ages 12 to 14 outlining restrictions on working conditions, type of work, and number of hours of work.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that prohibitions against child trafficking include domestic and international trafficking, and trafficking for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 into non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO recommendation.	2015 – 2016
	Effectively implement the labor inspectorate's new sanction authority legislation by penalizing violators of child labor laws in a timely manner.	2016
	Publish the number of inspections conducted at worksites and those conducted by desk review, and the number of financial penalties imposed that were collected.	2011-2016
	Ensure the labor inspectorate has vehicles and fuel to conduct inspections outside Guatemala City.	2009 – 2016
	Strengthen the inspection system by adopting a strategic planning methodology based on more accurate data regarding types of complaints, where and when they occur (such as harvesting season), and focusing on industries not reached previously by the inspectorate (including agriculture and informal sectors).	2015 – 2016
	Apply penalties to violators of child labor laws and compel payments and corresponding remediation.	2014 – 2016
	Dedicate more staff and training to law enforcement agencies, particularly those outside the capital, that are responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure that hearings and trials addressing human trafficking and gender-based violence in specialized courts are scheduled in a timely manner.	2016
Coordination	Ensure that the timing of labor inspections is not predictable.	2016
	Strengthen coordination efforts to institutionalize relationships between civil society representatives and government agencies that provide services to child victims of child labor.	2013 – 2016
Social Programs	Make secondary education accessible for all children, including indigenous children and girls, and children living in rural areas, by recruiting and training more teachers to provide instruction in indigenous languages and removing school fees and transportation costs.	2015 – 2016
	Build more secondary schools and expand scholarship and subsidy programs so that children can attend quality secondary schools.	2016
	Initiate social programs to address child labor, especially with a focus on indigenous children, in agriculture and domestic work, and for children who perform other types of hazardous work.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure high standards of safety and care for children in government-run shelters, including by providing them adequate clothing and food and by expanding shelter capacity to prevent overcrowding.	2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
66. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Guinea

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Guinea made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a new Penal Code that strengthens the maximum penalties for certain crimes related to the worst forms of child labor, such as forced begging. The Government also adopted the National Plan of Action to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, which will provide protection and social assistance to victims of human trafficking, including children. However, children in Guinea perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and forced begging. The Government lacks a coordinating mechanism and national policy to address all relevant worst forms of child labor. In addition, the Government does not adequately enforce child labor laws or implement social programs to address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guinea perform dangerous tasks in agriculture.(1-3) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and forced begging.(4-8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guinea.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	32.3 (1,152,064)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	49.6
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	19.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		61.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's Analysis of Statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2012.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming and carrying heavy loads† in the production of cashews, cocoa, and coffee (3, 6, 7, 11)
	Herding livestock (6)
	Capturing and processing fish (2, 6, 7, 12)
Industry	Mining† granite, gold, and diamonds (3, 5-8, 13)
	Manufacturing, activities unknown (4, 6)
	Construction,† including cement making and carrying materials (3, 4, 6, 14)
Services	Street work, including as market vendors, beggars, petty traders, shoe shiners, and porters in the transportation sector (3, 6, 7, 15-19)
	Working in restaurants and informal cottage industries, including as waitresses (3, 6, 20)
	Domestic work (2, 7, 21)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor as market vendors and in domestic work, mining, herding, fishing, and farming, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 6-8, 21)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (8, 18, 19)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers (7, 8, 11, 18, 22)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Guinea are exploited in trafficking internally and abroad for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Some boys are subjected to forced labor in gold and diamond mining, including in Senegal and Mali, while girls are exploited in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation in various West African and Middle Eastern countries.(6-8, 17, 19, 23)

Boys placed in the care of Koranic teachers for education are forced by their teachers to beg on the street or to work in fields; they must then surrender the money they have earned to their teachers.(7, 8, 11, 17, 18, 22) In addition, through the system of confiage, parents who are unable to care for their children send them to relatives or strangers that are expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling to the children in exchange for housework. In practice, some of these children receive care and an education, while many become domestic workers and are victims of labor exploitation and abuse.(3, 7, 8, 15, 23)

Although the Constitution guarantees free compulsory primary education, in practice, many children do not attend school. The lack of school infrastructure cost of school fees and supplies, a shortage of teachers, and reported school violence, all of which impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(7, 17, 18, 24)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guinea has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

During 2016, the Government of Guinea ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict.(25)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Guinea's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	16	Article 137.5 of the Labor Code; Article 412 of the Child Code (26, 27)

Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 415–418 of the Child Code; Articles 2 and 4 of Order 2791 Working Conditions for Employees Aged Under 18 Years; Article 135 of the Mining Code; Article 137.6 of the Labor Code (14, 26–28)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 194, 195, and 323 of the Penal Code; Articles 4 and 137.6 of the Labor Code; Articles 356–360, 385, and 397–399 of the Child Code (26, 27, 29)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 195, 323, and 324 of the Penal Code; Articles 356–360 and 385 of the Child Code (26, 29)

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 346, 347, 348, and 355 of the Penal Code; Articles 356–360 of the Child Code (26, 29)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 137.6 of the Labor Code; Article 383 of the Child Code, Article 344 of the Penal Code (26, 27, 29)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment	N/A*
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 429 of the Child Code (26)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 792.7 of the Penal Code; Article 429 of the Child Code (26, 29)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 6, Title 1 of Education Decree 97/196-/PRG/SGG (30)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 23 of the Constitution (31)

* No conscription (32)

In 2016, the Government of Guinea adopted a new Penal Code that strengthens the penalties for certain criminal offenses related to the worst forms of child labor, including forced begging.(17, 29, 33, 34)

Guinean law prohibits hazardous occupations and activities for children; however these prohibitions do not cover agriculture, an area that shows evidence of work in unhealthy environments that expose children to hazardous substances and dangerous equipment.(3, 6, 7, 14, 27) A revised Child Code that contains a more specific list of hazardous child labor activities in all relevant sectors was developed, but it was not approved during the reporting period.(12, 17, 18) In addition, although Article 2.6 of Order 2791 prohibits children under age 18 from working in mines and quarries, Article 135 of the Mining Code allows children between ages 16 and 18 to work in mines and quarries as assistants, leaving the possibility for children to work in hazardous activities.(14, 28)

The law allows children between the ages of 12 and 14 to perform light work in sectors such as domestic work and agriculture.(14, 26) However, the law does not prescribe the number of hours per week for light work, nor specify the conditions in which light work may be undertaken, as defined by international standards on child labor.(35) The minimum age protections under the law do not apply to children in unpaid or non-contractual work.(3, 21, 27, 34, 35)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce all labor laws, including those related to child labor.(3, 36) Chairs the Child Labor Monitoring and Surveillance System, which aims to identify and remove children from exploitative labor conditions.(4, 18)
Office for the Protection of Gender, Children, and Morals (OPROGEM) Special Police Unit	Enforce laws related to the protection of minors, including the worst forms of child labor.(3, 8, 19)
Ministry for Social Action, Promotion of Women and Children (MASPFE)	Provide protection and social services for victims of child labor and human trafficking.(7, 17)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Guinea took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	No (12)	No (17)

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) had 20 inspectors in Conakry and 1 inspector in each of the country's 33 regional offices.(12, 17) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Guinea's workforce, which includes over 5.3 million workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, the Guinea should employ roughly 135 inspectors.(12, 37-39) Reports indicate a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to conduct child labor inspections and legal proceedings.(3, 17, 40)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Guinea took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Unknown

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (12)	1 (17)
Number of Convictions	0 (12)	0 (17)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (12)	Yes (17)

During the reporting period, the Office for the Protection of Gender, Children, and Morals (OPROGEM) had 23 agents in Conakry and one in each of the country's 33 regional offices.(34) OPROGEM remained understaffed, underfunded, and without adequate office supplies, transportation, and fuel to effectively enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(8, 17) In addition, corruption in law enforcement agencies and the judiciary impeded government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.(8)

Guinea

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In January 2016, the Ministry for Social Action, Promotion of Women and Children (MASPFE), provided reintegration services to 50 children that were being trafficked to Senegal.(17) Reports indicate that social services available to victims were not adequate to meet the needs of the victims. As a result, the Government relied on NGOs to provide shelter and other basic services to victims.(8, 17, 33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP)	Coordinate anti-human-trafficking efforts, including for children. Led by the MASPFE, includes representatives from OPROGEM, MOL, and other ministries.(7, 19, 42) Met to develop the National Plan of Action to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, which was approved in 2016.(8, 41)
Committee for Monitoring, Protection, and Defense of the Rights of the Child (CGSDE)	Implement, coordinate, and monitor Government efforts on child protection. Led by MASPFE.(17, 19) In 2016, drafted a report that identified child protection activities carried out by various government ministries to improve coordination efforts.(34)

Budgets for these committees remained limited during the reporting period and impacted their ability to operate and coordinate efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms.(8, 17, 19)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons†	Aims to enhance the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, raise awareness of trafficking in persons, and provide protection and care for victims. Led by the CNLTP.(8, 18, 43) In 2016, received $38,000 for implementation.(33, 42)
Education Sector Program (2015–2017)	Aims to increase access to primary, secondary, and technical and vocational education, particularly for vulnerable populations. The strategy is overseen by the Ministry of Education and supported by international donors.(44, 45)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken under the Education Sector Program during the reporting year. Although the Government of Guinea has adopted a policy on Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of a general child labor policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2016–2019)*	Includes activities to develop a National Action Plan for the elimination of child labor and its worst forms. Overseen by the MOL and supported by the ILO.(46)
Plan Guinea-Conakry Program	Aims to strengthen the capacity of key actors to improve children's rights in the areas of education, survival, and protection.(15) In 2016, provided 45,000 IT educational kits to various primary schools.(47)
UNICEF Country Program (2013–2017)	UNICEF funded program that supports the Government's efforts to improve education, birth registration rates, social inclusion, and strengthening the child protection response to the Ebola virus disease outbreak.(48)
