World Bank Country Program	World Bank projects in Guinea that aim to increase access to quality basic education and youth employment, improve school infrastructure, and strengthen safety nets for vulnerable populations, especially those affected by the Ebola virus disease outbreak. (49-53)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. (54-56)

Although the Government of Guinea has implemented programs in children's rights and education, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs specifically designed to assist children in agriculture, domestic work, mining, and street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
38. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
39. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Guinea-Bissau

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Guinea-Bissau made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved a Code of Conduct against Sexual Exploitation in Tourism and the National Committee to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Persons developed proposals to support the reintegration of repatriated talibé children. In addition, the Education and Justice Ministries worked together and developed a pilot to introduce birth registration services in 45 primary schools. However, children in Guinea-Bissau are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging. The Government has not determined the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. In addition, law enforcement officials do not receive the appropriate training and resources to effectively conduct inspections and prosecute cases of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guinea-Bissau engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging.(1-3) According to a 2015 national child labor survey, 39 percent of children ages 5 to 17 engage in child labor, with a high prevalence in the Cacheu region; however, the full survey results have not been published.(4, 5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guinea-Bissau.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (%)	5 to 14	57.4
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	68.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	48.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		62.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2010, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 5, 2014.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including the production of cashews (2, 8)
	Fishing, activities unknown (9)
Services	Domestic work (2)
	Street work, including car washing and shoe shining (9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 10, 11)
	Forced labor in domestic work, agriculture, and street work, including begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 11)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Guinea-Bissau, organized networks of traffickers affiliated with Koranic schools force boys to beg within the country and in Guinea, Mali, and Senegal.(1) Although many Koranic school teachers provide religious education as traditionally intended, some force the students, known as talibés, to beg on the streets for money and food.(9) Most talibés originate from the predominantly Muslim areas of Bafará and Gabú in the east of the country.(11)

Boys are forced to work in street vending in Guinea-Bissau; they are trafficked for forced labor in agriculture and mining in Senegal.(1, 11) Boys from neighboring countries are forced to beg and harvest cashews in Guinea-Bissau.(11) Girls are subjected to forced labor in street vending and domestic work in Guinea and Senegal.(1) Girls are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation in the Bijagós Archipelago of Guinea-Bissau, on mainland Guinea-Bissau in bars and hotels, and in Senegal.(1, 10, 11)

Continued Government instability may have impacted the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.(12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guinea-Bissau has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓

UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Guinea-Bissau's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Guinea-Bissau

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are self-employed.(13, 20)

The General Labor Law prohibits children under age 18 from conducting heavy work, work in unhealthy or dangerous conditions, and underground work; however, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover street work, an area of work where there is evidence of exposure to physical, psychological, or sexual abuse.(13)

The Education System Law states that basic education is compulsory and lasts 9 years; however, it only makes basic education free through grade six, leaving children in grades seven to nine without access to free basic education.(19)

Research did not uncover a public version of the Child Code for review.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Inspectorate General of Labor and Social Security	Enforce child labor legislation in collaboration with the Ministries of Interior and Justice, and the National Institute for Women and Children (INMC).(12)
Ministry of Interior's Public Order Police and National Guard	Combat child labor through the prevention of child trafficking.(8, 9)
Judicial Police's Women and Child Brigade	Investigate the worst forms of child labor and refer cases to INMC and NGOs; brigade comprises 10 officers.(12)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Guinea-Bissau took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2016, the Government reported that the number of labor inspectors was insufficient. In addition, enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the lack of resources for inspections and insufficient training for labor inspectors.(12)

During the reporting period, the Government conducted 10 child labor specific inspections. Four children were removed from child labor as a result of labor inspections; however, these children did not receive social services.(12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Guinea-Bissau took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

In 2016, the Government reported that training for criminal law enforcement officials and resources for criminal investigations was insufficient.(12)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the National Committee to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate Government efforts to combat human trafficking. Led by the National Institute for Women and Children (INMC).(24) In 2016, developed funding proposals to support the reintegration of repatriated talibé children to their families.(12)
INMC	Coordinate with NGOs and other partner organizations to rehabilitate and reintegrate child victims of exploitation.(9) In 2016, conducted awareness campaigns to encourage the Attorney General to conduct the appropriate follow-up for violations of the worst forms of child labor.(12)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Human Trafficking	Guides the Government's efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons.(24)
Code of Conduct Against Sexual Exploitation in Tourism†	Seeks to raise awareness on commercial sexual exploitation of children and child trafficking in Guinea-Bissau, particularly in the Bijagós Archipelago.(25)
UN Country Partnership Framework	Aims to assist in promoting free and universal birth registration, enforcing human trafficking provisions, and implementing the National Strategy for Social Protection of Children.(26)
UNDAF (2013–2017)	Aims to assist in implementing a national action plan against child labor.(27)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Guinea-Bissau

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Government began drafting a new National Strategy for Social Protection.(22) Although the Government has adopted the National Action Plan on Human Trafficking, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
UNICEF Country Program	UNICEF-funded program in collaboration with the Government to prevent and combat child trafficking in the most disadvantaged communities through education and social protection mechanisms.(28)
Friends of the Child (Amigos da Criança) Shelters [‡]	Donor-funded program, with Government support, implemented by an NGO that provides social services to vulnerable children, including victims of the worst forms of child labor. Research found that the two shelter facilities lack the financial and human resources needed to adequately assist victims.(1, 29)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Guinea-Bissau.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(30)

In 2016, the National Children's Parliament, which receives support from the Government, conducted a child sex trafficking awareness campaign in the Bijagós Archipelago.(25) Although Guinea-Bissau has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Guyana made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government reformed the Inter-Ministerial Taskforce on Combating Trafficking in Persons, began developing a National Action Plan and Policy on Child Labor, and finalized the 2017–2018 National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Persons. However, children in Guyana continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Law enforcement agencies have insufficient funding and capacity to enforce laws related to child labor, including its worst forms, and legislation does not fully protect children. Moreover, the Government does not have a comprehensive policy to combat child labor or targeted social programs to fully address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guyana engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-11) The 2014 Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey indicated that children living in Guyana's interior are more likely to be engaged in child labor than other children, with 37 percent of children ages 5 to 17 living in the interior engaged in child labor. The survey also indicated that 41 percent of children living in an Amerindian household engage in child labor, with 34 percent of these children engaged in hazardous work.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guyana.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (%)	5 to 14	20.1
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	97.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	22.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		84.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(12)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 5 (MICS 5) Survey, 2014.(13)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including the production of rice (2, 3, 5-8, 11, 14-16)

	Fishing,† activities unknown (5, 8)
Industry	Construction,† activities unknown (5)
	Mining,† including gold mining and bauxite mining (1, 3, 5-8, 11, 14, 17, 18)

	Working in scrap iron yards (2)
	Working in family stores, bars, and restaurants (2, 5, 19)
	Street work, including vending and begging (2, 5, 6, 15, 16)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Guyana, including girls as young as age 12, are involved in commercial sexual exploitation in Georgetown and in the country's interior. There are reports of young girls being subjected to commercial sexual exploitation in mining communities as a result of human trafficking.(2, 4, 9, 10)

Although the Constitution of Guyana guarantees free education, some primary schools continue to charge fees and have attempted to prevent children who cannot pay from attending school.(21) In efforts to address this problem, the Ministry of Education has publicized guidance advising parents and educators that only the Parent Teacher Association has the authority to approve and collect fees from parents, and that no child may be excluded from school for non-payment.(21) Children in Guyana's interior and rural areas have limited access to education due to poor infrastructure, transportation costs, and a shortage of trained and qualified teachers. This leads to decreasing enrollment and high dropout rates among students.(2, 22)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guyana has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓

UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Guyana's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Articles 2–3 of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act; Articles 17–22 of the Education Act (23, 24)

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 27 of the Constitution (27)

* No conscription (7, 32)

Although the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act prohibits night work in industrial undertakings, as well as hazardous work for anyone under age 18, the law does not fully protect adolescents ages 16 and 17 from engaging in hazardous work. Part 1, Article 2 of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act only prohibits night work for minors employed in industry and provides an exception allowing adolescents ages 16 and over to perform certain work requiring continuity through day and night, including gold mining reduction work and the production of iron, steel, glass, paper, and raw sugar, without provisions to ensure that their health, safety, and morals are fully protected or that they receive specific instruction or training in these activities.(23)

Guyanese law does not sufficiently prohibit all commercial sexual exploitation of children as laws related to pornography and pornographic performances do not prohibit the use, procuring, and offering of a child for each of these purposes.(14, 28, 33) Although Article 50(1) of the Protection of Children Act prohibits selling or giving drugs to children, the law does not specifically prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.(29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Protection	Monitor and enforce child labor laws in collaboration with the Ministry of Education, Forestry Commission, Geology and Mines Commission, National Insurance Scheme, and Guyana Police Force. The chief labor officer handles special investigations stemming from child labor complaints and oversees routine labor inspections.(6, 14) Includes the Childcare and Protection Agency, to which children identified during labor inspections are referred.(6)
Guyana Police Force	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. Works in consultation with the Director of Public Prosecutions, the Ministry of Public Security, the Ministry of Social Protection, the Ministry of Education, and the Ministry of Indigenous Peoples' Affairs, depending on the circumstances of each case.(6)
Ministry of Public Security	Lead enforcement of human trafficking laws. Chair the Inter-Ministerial Task Force on Combating Trafficking in Persons.(6)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Guyana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Guyana's workforce, which includes over 300,000 workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Guyana should employ roughly 21 inspectors.(35-37) There are insufficient labor inspections conducted in gold mining areas, and there are sometimes delays in accessing the resources necessary for inspections in remote areas.(6, 14) The Government has acknowledged challenges in monitoring and enforcing the provisions established in Articles 41 and 46 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act, which aim to protect children from work that may harm their physical health or emotional development.(38)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Guyana took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (6)	Yes (3)

The Government has acknowledged that there is an insufficient number of staff members within the Trafficking in Persons Unit.(39) In general, the Government's capacity to carry out prosecutions is limited. With only 33 justices and magistrates, the courts have a backlog of cases and more than a 2-year waiting period on all legal matters.(6-8) Furthermore, human trafficking victims may be charged for crimes occurring as a result of their being exploited if authorities do not identify them as victims of human trafficking.(4, 41) The Government lacks child-sensitive investigation and prosecution procedures, which put children at risk of reprisal.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the Inter-Ministerial Task Force on Combating Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Taskforce on Combating Trafficking in Persons	Report on the nature and magnitude of human trafficking in Guyana, document the Government's response, and carry out public education and prevention measures.(42) Combats, through the participation of member agencies, commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities.(6) Chaired by the Minister of Public Security. Other members include the Ministries of Amerindian Affairs, Natural Resources and Environment, Education, Legal Affairs, and Foreign Affairs.(6, 14) In January 2016, the Government reformed the taskforce, which did not meet during 2015.(4) The taskforce convened on a monthly basis during 2016 and completed work on the 2017–2018 National Action Plan in December 2016.(3)
National Tripartite Committee	Address national labor legislation and policy. Includes representatives from government agencies, labor unions, and employers, including the Ministry of Social Protection, the Consultative Association of Guyanese Industries, the Guyana Trades Union Congress, and the Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Guyana.(6, 40, 43)
Commission on the Rights of the Child	Protect and promote children's rights in accordance with the UN CRC, which includes addressing the worst forms of child labor.(6)

In January 2016, the Ministries of Business, Natural Resources, Social Protection, and Indigenous Peoples' Affairs participated in a forum organized by UNICEF Guyana, the Government of Guyana, and UNICEF Canada to discuss the impact of the extractive sector on children in Guyana. Speakers indicated that the lack of coordination mechanisms and resources impede efforts to combat child labor and human trafficking.(44, 45)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
Inter-Ministerial Task Force on Combating Trafficking in Persons Action Plan	Seeks to prevent and raise awareness of human trafficking, provide direct assistance to victims, improve law enforcement's capacity to identify and respond to human trafficking, and strengthen interagency coordination and referral mechanisms.(3, 41, 46)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(8, 47)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the 5-Year Strategic Plan on the Rights of the Child (2012–2017) or the National Education Policy.(8, 47) The Government does not have a comprehensive written strategy for combating and responding to child labor but began developing a National Action Plan and Policy on Child Labor during the reporting period.(3, 6, 14)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Human Trafficking Hotline†	Government-funded hotline to assist human trafficking victims.(4)
Shelter for Domestic Violence Victims†	Government-funded, NGO-run shelter that houses victims of domestic violence and human trafficking. Provides services, including psychological counseling and practical skills training.(7) Accommodates teenage girls under age 16 who are placed at the shelter at the request of the Government's Childcare and Protection Agency.(14) Receives $50,000 annually from the Government.(20)
School Meals and Uniforms†	Government program to provide hot meals to 16,000 students at schools in the interior and transportation for students in several remote areas. All students in government-run schools, from nursery to secondary school, receive vouchers to purchase school uniforms, shoes, and backpacks.(6, 8, 11, 48)
Child Advocacy Center	Ministry of Social Protection and NGO partnership to provide services for abused children. Overseen and referrals made to the center by the Ministry of Social Protection's Childcare and Protection Agency; funded by private sector donations.(41, 49)
Board of Industrial Training†	Attempts to deter early school dropouts by providing job skills to at-risk youth between ages 15 and 17 who may not be able to complete their formal education.(6)

The scope of government programs targeting the worst forms of child labor is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(6, 14) In particular, government resources provided to victims of human trafficking are inadequate.(20)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guyana (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law fully protects all children under age 18 from engaging in hazardous work, including night work.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that the law sufficiently prohibits all commercial sexual exploitation of children by prohibiting the use, procuring, and offering of a child for pornography and pornographic performances.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that the law sufficiently prohibits the use of children for illicit activities by prohibiting the use, procuring, or offering of a child for the production or trafficking of drugs.	2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors trained and responsible for providing enforcement of child labor laws to meet international standards.	2015 – 2016
	Publish information on the labor inspectorate's funding.	2015 – 2016
	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2016
	Ensure that sufficient resources are allocated in a timely manner to facilitate labor inspections, particularly in remote areas and in gold mining areas.	2011 – 2016

Coordination	Develop and implement child-sensitive investigation and prosecution procedures for child victims of human trafficking.	2016
	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including all its worst forms, and ensure that these bodies engage in regular meetings and coordination efforts.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the 5-Year Strategic Plan on the Rights of the Child (2012–2017) and the National Education Policy.	2010 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Ensure that children are not prevented from attending school because of transportation costs or failure to pay school fees.	2014 – 2016
	Increase the number of trained and qualified teachers, particularly in rural and interior areas.	2015 – 2016
	Develop new initiatives and expand existing programs to reach all children, including Amerindian children and children living in the interior, involved in the worst forms of child labor; in particular, increase funding to identify and assist victims of human trafficking.	2010 – 2016

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.

Report No. GB.297/ESP/3. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
37. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Haiti

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Haiti made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the National Social Protection Policy, which aims to provide protection and social assistance for child victims of abuse, violence, and labor exploitation. The Government also obtained its first three convictions for child trafficking under the 2014 Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law and established an emergency working group to assess human trafficking risks due to 2016 Hurricane Matthew. In addition, the Government continued to participate in a number of programs targeting the worst forms of child labor, including a new program to combat child trafficking along the border with the Dominican Republic. However, children in Haiti perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and domestic work. Haiti also lacks a clear, easily applicable minimum age for domestic work, and limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. In addition, social programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Haiti perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and domestic work.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Haiti. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	34.4 (815,993)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	34.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary Completion Rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Enquête Mortalité, Morbidité et Utilisation des Services (EMMUS-V), 2012.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Preparing land for planting; fertilizing fields; sowing; pruning; weeding; thinning; and guarding in relation to the production of bananas, beans, corn, peanuts, peas, rice, cassava, and yams (1, 2)
	Harvesting sugarcane, collecting cut sugarcane, grinding sugarcane, and clearing land for sugarcane production (2)
	Herding and caring for cows, donkeys, goats, pigs, sheep, and poultry (1)
	Capturing and processing fish (2, 9)
	Processing produce, including removing shells, husks, stones; winnowing; and drying (1)
Industry	Construction, including transport of construction materials such as sand and rocks (2, 6, 9)
	Producing metal crafts (10)
Services	Domestic work (3-5, 11-13)
	Street work, including vending, begging, shining shoes, washing cars, and carrying goods and luggage in public markets and bus stations (6, 9, 14, 15)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Forced labor in domestic work, agriculture, and as street vendors and beggars, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 5, 6, 9, 13, 16, 17)
	Use in illicit activities, including by criminal groups as messengers and to carry weapons or transport drugs (6, 17)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6, 9, 18, 19)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

A 2015 study found that there are approximately 286,000 child domestic workers in Haiti, 207,000 of which were lagging behind in school.(12, 13, 16) Some parents unable to care for their children send them to residential care centers, or to relatives or strangers who are expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling to these children in exchange for household work. In practice, some of these children receive care and access to education, while many others become victims of labor exploitation and abuse.(3-6, 11, 13, 20)

Children are trafficked both internally and to the Dominican Republic. NGOs have reported that children illegally crossing the Haiti-Dominican Republic border are often accompanied by adults who are paid to act as the children's parents or guardians until they reach the Dominican Republic.(17, 21-23) Some of these children are reunited with relatives in the Dominican Republic, while others engage in commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, agriculture, street vending, and begging.(3, 9, 23-25)

During 2016, the Government of the Dominican Republic continued with the involuntary repatriations of individuals with irregular migration status to Haiti, pursuant to Dominican law.(13, 26) Many of these individuals, including children, are Dominican-born persons of Haitian descent.(27) As of the end of 2016, reports indicate that 97,854 individuals migrated spontaneously to Haiti, including 2,551 unaccompanied minors.(25) Some of these children were residing in camps in Haiti near the border with the Dominican Republic, where schools and other basic services are not available. In addition, these children may not speak French or Haitian Creole, the languages of instruction in public Haitian schools.(6, 13, 16, 28) Children, including those who have been deported to Haiti or who left spontaneously are vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms.(9, 26, 28)

The Constitution of Haiti provides free and compulsory primary education. (29-31) In addition, while many children in Haiti are not registered at birth, unregistered children are able to access social assistance services and educational programs provided by the Government.(32) However, public schools often charge fees for books, uniforms, and school materials. As private schools represent approximately 90 percent of available schools, most Haitian children are enrolled in private schools that charge tuition and other fees, which make education prohibitive to many families.(6, 13, 33, 34) Other children, especially in rural areas, simply do not attend school. Out-of-school children are more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(6, 16)

In October 2016, Haiti was hit by Hurricane Matthew, which displaced over 175,000 people, including children.(13, 35) It also damaged at least 1,633 schools, affecting school attendance for an estimated 190,000 children that, coupled with the suspension of other social services and destruction of infrastructure, increased children's vulnerability to human trafficking and labor exploitation.(20, 36-38)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Haiti has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Haiti's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 335 of the Labor Code (39)

Non-State Compulsory	Yes	18	Articles 70 of the Penal Code, Article 2 of the Act of 2003 (40, 42)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 23 of the Decree on the Reorganization of the Haitian Education System (30, 31)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 32.1 and 33 of the Constitution (29)

* No conscription (44)

† No standing military (44)

Article 335 of the Labor Code sets the minimum age for contractual work at 15 in industrial, agricultural, and commercial establishments. The Labor Code only applies to workers who perform work under a formal employment agreement.(39, 45) Article 340 provides penalties for the employment of children ages 15 to 18 without proper work permits or health certificates. However, the limited penalties, usually the equivalent of between $45 and $75, are not sufficient deterrents to protect children against labor exploitation.(39, 40) Although there is not a specific penalty for employing children under the minimum age for work, Article 513 of the Labor Code notes that a fine of $81 may be applied to labor violations with unspecified fines. These fines, however, may not be adequate to deter violations.(39)

It is unclear whether there is a minimum age for domestic work as the Act on the Prohibition and Elimination of All Forms of Abuse, Violence, Ill Treatment, or Inhumane Treatment Against Children of 2003 (Act of 2003) annulled Chapter 9 of the Labor Code that had set a minimum age for domestic work at age 12.(39, 40, 45) The Government has drafted legislation that would set the minimum age for domestic work at 15 years, but that legislation has not been enacted.(46, 47)

The Labor Code prohibits children ages 15 to 18 from working at night in industrial jobs and in establishments where alcohol is served.(39) However, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover agriculture, an area of work where children are exposed to hazardous substances, agents, or to temperatures damaging to their health. The Government of Haiti's draft hazardous work list for children under the age of 18 remained unapproved by Parliament during the reporting period; nevertheless, the current draft does not include all tasks in which children perform dangerous work, such as harvesting, collecting, and grinding sugarcane.(46-49)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and most enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor (MAST)	Enforce laws related to child labor by receiving complaints, conducting investigations, and referring cases to juvenile courts.(39, 45, 50) MAST's Institute of Social Welfare and Research (IBESR) agents perform child protection inspections and are responsible for accrediting residential care centers. Develop and implement programs to raise awareness of child labor and provide social services to child victims of labor exploitation. (5, 20, 45, 50, 51)
Brigade for the Protection of Minors (BPM)	Investigate crimes of the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. BPM agents submit investigations to judicial authorities for criminal prosecutions and refer child victims to IBESR.(5, 20, 51) Housed under the Haitian National Police.(9)

Labor Law Enforcement

The number of labor inspectors from the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor (MAST) is insufficient for the size of Haiti's workforce, which includes over 4.5 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries, Haiti should employ roughly 115 labor inspectors. (54-56)

In 2016, MAST's Institute of Social Welfare and Research (IBESR) employed 150 agents throughout Haiti; these included 48 child protection agents and approximately 20 social workers to handle child protection cases, including those involving child labor.(20, 57) Each IBESR regional bureau includes a child protection section that employs 5 to 7 agents. IBESR agents received training on addressing exploitation of child domestic workers during the reporting period.(20, 57-59) To deter child trafficking, IBESR established a policy during the reporting period that requires parents to obtain IBESR's authorization before they can take their children across Haiti's land border with the Dominican Republic.(20) Despite these efforts, reports indicate that the lack of sufficient resources, such as means of transportation, fuel, and appropriately equipped workplaces, hampered MAST's efforts, including IBESR's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(20, 52)

IBESR also manages the "133" hotline that receives complaints about situations requiring child protection.(9, 60) However, the hotline functions exclusively in Port-au-Prince, leaving rural areas without a mechanism to receive child labor complaints.(60) In addition, the number of calls related to child labor received during 2016 is unknown.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Haiti took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, the Brigade for the Protection of Minors (BPM) maintained a staff of 45 agents in 24 offices around the country, including in 4 offices along the Haiti-Dominican Republic border.(20, 49, 52) Given the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in the country, the number of criminal law enforcement agents is inadequate.(20) Reports indicate that BPM investigated 772 cases of child trafficking, child abuse, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(9, 20, 61) During 2016, the first three convictions for child trafficking under the 2014 Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law took place.(20) Despite these efforts, reports indicate that the BPM's lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding hampered their ability to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(9, 15, 20)

An informal referral mechanism between BPM, IBESR, and NGOs is in place to provide reintegration services to victims of the worst forms of child labor.(20) Although a report indicates that resources and facilities for social services are inadequate, BPM assisted 2,983 children in 2016 through referrals to social services and medical assistance, reintegration into their families, , and family mediation.(20) BPM also manages the "188" hotline which receives notifications of alleged violations related to the worst forms of child labor.(15) However, like the IBESR hotline, the "188" hotline functions exclusively in Port-au-Prince, which makes reporting cases involving the worst forms of child labor more difficult in rural areas.(62) In addition, the number of calls related to child labor received in 2016 is unknown.

In 2016, law enforcement and judiciary officials received training on the 2014 Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law and on addressing the worst forms of child labor during natural disasters, such as Hurricane Matthew.(15) Despite these efforts, work remains to be done to ensure that relevant officials, particularly in the provinces, are aware of the law and methods of implementation.(9, 16, 20)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Tripartite Commission for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Elaborate policies, approve programs, and coordinate, monitor, and evaluate efforts to combat child labor in Haiti. Chaired by MAST includes representatives from IBESR, and BPM, as well as local and international organizations.(63, 64) In 2016, met to update the draft National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor, and included specific programs to address child labor in domestic work.(16, 47)
National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate actions against trafficking in persons and provide protection and rehabilitation services to victims. Chaired by IBESR, includes representatives from MAST, BPM, and other ministries.(9, 41, 65) During the reporting period, received a budget of $140,000 to establish an emergency working group to assess human trafficking risks due to Hurricane Matthew, and partnered with international organizations to launch the “840” free hotline to enable citizens to report human trafficking cases.(9, 20, 66, 67)
Child Protection Working Group	Implement, coordinate, and monitor efforts on child protection, including protection for child domestic workers. Chaired by IBESR comprises officials non-governmental stakeholders and officials from various ministries.(68, 69) In 2016, the Working Group met to design an action plan to address issues raised in the study on the prevalence of child domestic work.(47)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2015–2017)	Aims to enhance the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, effectively implement laws related to human trafficking, provide protection and care for victims, and strengthen social and educational initiatives for vulnerable children. Led by the National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons.(9, 65, 70)
National Social Protection Policy (2016–2020) [†]	Aims to protect children from abuse, violence, and labor exploitation and promotes improved access to education and livelihood services for vulnerable children, with a focus on domestic workers. Led by IBESR and supported by international donors.(71, 72)
National Strategic Development Plan (PSDH) (2014–2019)	Highlights the need to prohibit child labor in order to ensure sustained and equitable economic growth. Overseen by the Ministry of Planning and External Cooperation and the Ministry of Economy and Finance.(73, 74) In 2016, the Plan was extended to 2019.(75)
National Action Strategy for Education for All (2011–2017)	Aims to increase access to quality primary education, particularly for vulnerable populations, by subsidizing school fees for both public and private schools. The strategy is overseen by the Ministry of Education and supported by international donors.(76, 77). For the 2015–2016 school year, provided free tuition-fee waivers to nearly 73,000 children.(78)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, the Government did not approve the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor, drafted in 2014.(16, 47, 63) In addition, reports indicate that efforts to implement the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons have been slowed by an insufficient allocation of resources.(9, 20)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Let's Work for Our Rights-Haiti (2015–2017)	$9.99 million USDOL-funded project implemented by Catholic Relief Services to provide services to households and children engaged in or at-risk of engaging in child labor or other exploitative working conditions in agriculture.(79, 80) In 2016, the project reached 688 children and adolescents with educational services and provided more than 1,016 households with legal assistance to obtain identity documentation, prevent and reduce child labor, and support labor rights.(33, 79) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In 2016, the project trained MAST inspectors on international child labor standards and drafted a roadmap to strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers.(81, 82) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Protecting the Rights of Children, Women, and Youth in Haiti (AKSE) (2012–2017)	$22.5 million USAID-funded project supports a partnership between the Government and the private sector to assist child victims of gender-based violence, human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, forced domestic work, and recruitment into criminal activity.(83)
Assisting Vulnerable Women and Children in Border Areas (2016–2017)*	$4.5 million Government of Canada-funded project implemented by IOM to combat child trafficking and protect Haitian migrants, especially children and women, along the border with the Dominican Republic.(25, 84)
Combat Child Labor in Domestic Work and the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2015–2016)	$914,616 Government of Norway-funded project combat exploitation of child domestic workers by increasing access to education.(59)
National Free Education Program (PSUGO) [†]	Government program to increase poor children's access to education. Includes school grants intended to eliminate school fees and accelerated learning programs for students who are lagging behind in school.(62, 85) For the 2016–2017 school year, established a budget of approximately $6 million for public school grants.(86)
UNICEF Country Program	$24 million UNICEF-funded program supports the Government's efforts to improve education, health, social inclusion, and protection for children in Haiti. In 2016, implemented projects to protect child domestic workers from exploitation and provide reintegration and educational services to unaccompanied children returning from the Dominican Republic, as well as children affected by Hurricane Matthew.(32, 87, 88)
Government Child Shelter, Census, and National Child Protection Database [†]	Government program to support child protection. IBESR implements the Government's regulatory framework for residential care centers (e. g., orphanages and shelters), collects information on vulnerable children, and tracks them through the National Child Protection Database.(20) In 2016, an IBESR assessment that identified almost 30,000 children residing in 770 shelters nationwide.
Providing an Education of Quality in Haiti (2016–2017)*	$30 million World Bank-implemented program aims to strengthen public management of the education sector, improve learning conditions, and increase enrollment of students in selected public and non-public primary schools.(89)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Haiti.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(90, 91)

Despite IBESR's efforts to collect information for the National Child Protection Database, it does not fully capture all relevant information, including the number of displaced street children and children engaged in domestic work.(60) Although Haiti has programs that target the worst forms of child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in domestic work, agriculture, and child trafficking.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Haiti (Table 11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. 41TU<http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>U41T. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Honduras made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a Strategic Plan to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor for 2016–2020 and a Strategic Plan to Combat Commercial Sexual Exploitation and Human Trafficking for 2016–2022. The Secretariat of Labor and Social Security increased the number of labor inspectors from 135 to 151 to better enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, throughout the country. In addition, the Ministry of Education invested $3.5 million to build schools in some of the poorest municipalities, where children are at risk of child labor. However, children in Honduras engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking. The Secretariat of Labor and Social Security did not provide training on child labor to all labor inspectors. The Government's social programs that address child labor in agriculture do not appear sufficient to address the scope of the problem nationwide, and the Government lacks social programs to eliminate child labor in other dangerous activities, such as fishing, mining, and domestic work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Honduras engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Honduras.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2016, Honduras, like El Salvador and Guatemala, continued to be a principal source of high numbers of unaccompanied children from Central America migrating to the United States.(39, 40) Children who lack economic and educational opportunities are the most vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and recruitment by gangs into illicit activities; these children are among the most likely to migrate. Once en route, they are also vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(41-43) Reports indicate that gangs sometimes threaten families as a means to forcibly recruit children into their ranks, where boys are used to commit extortion, drug trafficking, and homicide, and where girls are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation.(37)

In Honduras, access to education is often limited. Reports indicate that approximately 220,000 children between the ages of 5 and 17 lack access to the educational system.(12) More than 75 percent of these children live in rural areas, where lack of funding for schools and, in many cases, lack of any secondary schools, remain a problem.(12, 38) In urban areas, access to education is often hindered by widespread violence and the recruitment of children into gangs. In addition, school completion rates are low; many children fail to complete primary education and, according to 2011 national data, only 50.5 percent of girls and 37.5 percent of boys completed secondary school.(4, 44) Reports indicate that 20 percent of the Honduran population is of indigenous or African descent and that children from these groups are particularly vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms.(45, 46)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Honduras has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Honduras’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

* No conscription (48, 56)

The Constitution states that a child 16 years old or younger may not work unless it is necessary to sustain his or her family and the work does not interfere with schooling. Honduran statutes build upon the protections in the Constitution.⁽⁴⁷⁾ The Labor Code and the Code on Childhood and Adolescence prohibit children under age 14 from working in any circumstances and allow children ages 14 to 17 to work only with written parental consent and authorization from the Secretariat of Labor and Social Security (STSS).^(49, 50)

Article 120 of the Code on Childhood and Adolescence and Article 15 of the Executive Agreement STSS-211-01 set the minimum age for work at 14 in all undertakings and without exception for their size.^(48, 49) Article 32(1) of the Labor Code also prohibits children under the age of 14 from working. However, children working in agricultural and livestock-raising undertakings that do not permanently employ more than 10 workers are not covered by the Labor Code's minimum age protections because Article 2 of the Labor Code excludes these undertakings from its scope.⁽⁵⁰⁾ The ILO has recommended that the Government harmonize the Labor Code with the Code on Childhood and Adolescence to ensure that no child under age 14 is permitted to work, including in agriculture and livestock-raising.⁽⁵⁷⁾

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Secretariat of Labor and Social Security (STSS)	Inspect enterprises and enforce child labor laws through the General Inspection Service.(4, 30)
Public Ministry's Office of the Special Prosecutor for Children (OSPC)	Prosecute crimes against children, including trafficking of children, hazardous labor, forced labor, and commercial sexual exploitation. Coordinate with Honduran National Police to investigate crimes and protect victims.(4, 30)
Public Ministry's Technical Agency for Criminal Investigations (ATIC)	Investigate and technically support criminal prosecutions conducted by the Public Ministry, including by the OSPC, such as human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and child pornography.(5, 29, 30)
Prosecutorial Task Force to Combat Criminal Smuggling of Unaccompanied Children and Trafficking in Persons	Investigate and prosecute criminal organizations that engage in the illegal smuggling of unaccompanied children and human trafficking. Created in 2014 and overseen by the Special Prosecutor Against Organized Crime and the Special Prosecutor for Children.(36, 58)
Directorate of Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (DINAF)	Formulate, coordinate, and implement national plans concerning children and their families; monitor children's rights, including by investigating complaints of child labor and ensuring that victims receive government services; and coordinate state efforts with civil society institutions to protect children. Overseen by the Secretariat of Development and Social Inclusion.(29, 59-61)

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Honduras took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Labor union confederations, employer organizations, and human rights organizations have indicated that the level of funding and resources for the General Inspection Service is insufficient for inspectors to adequately enforce child labor laws nationwide.(38) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Honduras's workforce, which includes over 3.6 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Honduras should employ roughly 242 labor inspectors.(64-66)

The official process for labor inspections in Honduras includes a preliminary visit, which may be unannounced and through which inspectors identify and inform employers of violations but do not issue fines or citations. Employers are given a specified number of days to remedy violations, including child labor violations, which is typically between 3 and 60 days.(38, 67-69) Inspectors then conduct reinspections to determine whether the violations have been remedied. If they have not, inspectors recommend that the Inspector General of the STSS issue penalties.(68) Reports indicate that if violations involving underage children or children working in hazardous conditions are found during a preliminary inspection, inspectors immediately report them to their supervisors.(70) This two-step inspection process puts an additional strain on the limited human and financial resources of the inspectorate and may not sufficiently deter employers from exploiting children in the workplace, particularly in remote, rural areas where conducting the reinspections is especially challenging. Furthermore, a lack of publicly available information on the results of preliminary and subsequent inspections, including whether child labor violations are ultimately remedied, prevents a complete understanding of how effectively this inspection system protects children from labor exploitation.(71)

The STSS and civil society partners have reported that the number of labor inspections is insufficient to address the scope of labor violations in the country, including child labor violations.(38, 62) Reports indicate that most of the inspections take place in the urban areas of Tegucigalpa and San Pedro Sula. Inspections in rural areas and in indigenous communities, where hazardous activities in agriculture and fishing or diving are concentrated, have been insufficient to address the scope of the problem.(3, 45, 72) The STSS reported that in 2016 it conducted inspections of businesses in agriculture, mining, manufacturing, construction, commerce, and services.(62)

In Honduras, STSS regulations provide a mechanism and procedures for handling complaints regarding child labor. However, NGOs report that, in practice, these procedures are often inadequately followed, largely due to institutional weaknesses and a lack of resources.(29)

The STSS reported that it removed 17 children from child labor during the reporting period: 8 in agriculture, 8 in commercial establishments and services, and 1 in industry.(62) There does not appear to be an effective mechanism for the STSS and DINAF to reciprocally refer cases of child labor to each other.(29, 30, 38) Research could not determine whether the 17 children removed from child labor were referred to DINAF. Reports indicate that in 2016, DINAF lacked sufficient resources to effectively carry out its mandates.(38)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Honduras took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Research could not find the number of investigators employed by the Public Ministry's Office of the Special Prosecutor for Children (OSPC) during the reporting period. Research could also not determine the level of funding for criminal law enforcement agencies in 2016. Reports indicate that the level of funding and resources available to the OSPC and other criminal law enforcement agencies are insufficient to address the worst forms of child labor nationwide.(61)

In 2016, the Government initiated criminal investigations into 48 cases of human trafficking, 13 cases of commercial sexual exploitation, and 1 case of the sale of an individual. However, it is unknown whether the cases under investigation involved child victims.(61) In addition, 27 human trafficking-related investigations were brought to trial in 2016, including 1 case involving the sale of a child and 1 case of child pornography. However, the number of individuals prosecuted for the worst forms of child labor in 2016 is unknown.(61) Reports indicate that there were 15 convictions in 12 criminal cases for trafficking-related crimes in 2016; research could not confirm the total number of individuals convicted for crimes of human trafficking or other worst forms of child labor.(61) Reports indicate that the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions of the worst forms of child labor is not sufficient to address the problem.(37)

Research could not determine whether any children rescued by the Public Ministry received services through DINAF, or how many cases of suspected criminal conduct related to the worst forms of child labor were referred by DINAF to the Public Ministry.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Gradual and Progressive Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinate government policies and efforts on child labor issues, including the implementation of the Roadmap for the Eradication of Child Labor in Honduras and the Strategic Plan to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor (2016–2020). Chaired by the STSS and includes officials from eight government ministries, DINAF, the Supreme Court, and other government entities.(73, 74) Receives guidance from DINAF, which serves as the Commission's Secretary, as well as from a Technical Council, which is overseen by an Executive Secretariat.(73, 74) Oversee regional subcommissions, led by regional representatives of the STSS and DINAF, which implement national efforts locally.(73, 74)
Inter-Institutional Commission Against Exploitation and Commercial Sex Trafficking (CICESCT)	Coordinate government and civil society efforts to combat commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, including of children.(33) Comprises representatives from 52 organizations, including several government ministries and NGOs.(33, 52, 75) Oversee 19 local CICESCT committees and implement the Strategic Plan to Combat Commercial Sexual Exploitation and Human Trafficking.(37) In 2016, conducted or participated in more than 60 trainings related to human trafficking issues.(61)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(1, 83-87)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Better Life Voucher (Bono Vida Mejor) [†]	Government conditional cash transfer program that aims to reduce poverty by providing financial assistance to households when children meet educational and health requirements.(75, 88) Objectives include the elimination of child labor.(3) In 2016, expanded to assist nearly 270,000 households.(89)

Honduras

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Ministry of Education invested $3.5 million to build schools in some of the poorest municipalities, where children are at increased risk of child labor.⁽⁸⁹⁾ Although the Government of Honduras funds or participates in social programs that aim to eliminate child labor in forced begging, commercial sexual exploitation, and the illegal recruitment of children into gang-related activities, research did not identify programs that specifically target children working in other dangerous activities, such as fishing, mining, and domestic work. In addition, social programs that address child labor in agriculture do not appear sufficient to address the scope of the problem nationwide.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Honduras (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that minimum age protections in the Labor Code extend to agricultural and stock-raising undertakings that do not permanently employ more than 10 workers to ensure consistency with the protections provided in the Code on Childhood and Adolescence.	2013 – 2016
Enforcement	Publish information on the level of funding provided to the labor inspectorate.	2015 – 2016

	Publish information on whether labor inspections are conducted at worksites or by desk review, and on the sanctions imposed and penalties collected as a result of inspections.	2012 – 2016
	Ensure adequate resources for STSS to follow the established procedures for responding to child labor complaints.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that there is an effective, reciprocal referral mechanism between the STSS and DINAF for the enforcement of labor laws and the provision of social services for child labor victims, and publicly report on the number of children removed from child labor who receive social services.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that DINAF has sufficient resources to effectively carry out its mandates regarding child protection issues.	2015 – 2016
	Publish information on the level of funding for all criminal law enforcement agencies that respond to crimes concerning the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
65. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
66. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

India

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, India made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the Child Labor (Prohibition and Regulation) Amendment Act, which set the minimum age for work at 14 and raised the minimum age for hazardous work to 18, bringing India into compliance with the international standards. The Government also increased the financial assistance available under the Rehabilitation of Bonded Labor Scheme for children rescued from human trafficking and sexual exploitation. However, children in India are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in the production of garments and quarrying stones. The hazardous work list attached to the new Child Labor Amendment Act is not comprehensive as it does not include areas of work where there is evidence that children work in unsafe and unhealthy environments for long periods of time. Also, while the Child Labor Act increases the penalties for employing children in prohibited child labor, these penalties are likely to be insufficient to deter violations. Additional gaps remain in the legal framework as the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups is not criminally prohibited.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in India engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in the production of garments and quarrying stones.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in India.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	1.4 (3,253,202)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	90.7

Primary Completion Rate (%)		97.5

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

	Manufacturing footwear and bags, producing leather goods or accessories,† and stitching soccer balls (46-50)
	Producing bricks, quarrying and breaking stones, including sandstone and granite, and mining† and collecting mica and coal (2, 16, 51-64)

	Construction work, and repairing automobiles and motorcycles (70, 71)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Forced labor in agriculture, including producing hybrid cottonseed and harvesting sugarcane, both sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6, 72-74)
	Forced labor in rice mills, quarrying stones, and producing bricks (2, 52, 74-80)
	Forced labor in producing garments, spinning cotton thread and yarn, embroidering silver and gold into textiles (zari), carpets, leather goods, plastic goods, bangles, footwear, and bags (1, 26-29, 81-91)
	Forced labor in domestic work and begging, both sometimes as a result of human trafficking (65, 74, 92, 93)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (74, 94, 95)
	Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (74, 96, 97)
	Use in illicit activities, including the use of children to traffic children (98)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Within India, children are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in domestic service.(12, 74, 95, 99) Children are also forced to work as bonded laborers in brick kilns and stone quarries to pay off family debts owed to moneylenders and employers.(2, 100) Children from India's rural areas migrate or are trafficked for employment in industries, such as spinning mills and cottonseed production, where they are forced to work in hazardous environments for little or no pay.(6, 26) In addition, Maoist armed groups reportedly recruited children to serve as soldiers in the states of Bihar, Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand, Maharashtra, Odisha, and West Bengal.(74, 96, 97)

Child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and human trafficking are more likely to be children from marginalized groups, such as low-caste Hindus, members of tribal communities, and religious minorities.(74) Children from marginalized groups also face barriers to accessing education. These children are sometimes subject to discrimination and harassment from their teachers. One report notes that some of these children are refused admission into schools.(79, 101)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

India has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓

 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

In March 2017, the Government ratified both ILO Convention 182 and Convention 138.(102)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in India's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

In 2016, the Government approved the Child Labor (Prohibition and Regulation) Amendment Act, which establishes a minimum age for work at 14 and raised the minimum age for hazardous work to 18.(103) In 2017, the Government amended the Child Labor Act's hazardous work list to include a schedule of occupations where all children under 18 are prohibited from working and children under 14 are prohibited from helping, including family enterprises.(104) This hazardous work schedule is not comprehensive as children under 18 are not prohibited from working in spinning mills, garment production, carpet making, and domestic work, which are areas of work where there is evidence that children work in unsafe and unhealthy environments for long periods of time.(104) In addition, while the Act increases the penalties for violating the Child Labor Amendment Act, the penalties are likely insufficient to deter employers from employing children in prohibited child labor.(116) Penalties for violating the law include imprisonment for 6 months to 2 years and/or fines ranging from $300 to $700.(103)

During the reporting period, the Jharkhand State government also passed the Jharkhand Private Employment Agency and Domestic Employee Bill, which prohibits employment placement agencies from employing children under the age 18.(117)

Gaps remain in the legal framework as the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups is not criminally prohibited.(116)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
State Government Labor Inspectorates	Enforce state and national labor laws. Refer cases in violation of the law to state police.(49) Refer children to Child Welfare Committees for protection and rehabilitation services.(107)

Anti-Human Trafficking Units	Investigate cases of human trafficking. Established in 226 local police jurisdictions throughout India.(120)
Vigilance Committees	Rescue, release, and rehabilitate bonded laborers and family members. Assembled at the district and subdivision levels by the District Magistrate.(105)
State Revenue Department	Issue release certificates to free bonded laborers and family members from debt.(121)
Child Welfare Committees	Refer children in need of care and protection to welfare services providers under the Integrated Child Protection Scheme, including children involved in hazardous work, begging, and human trafficking, as well as those living on the streets.(107) Established in 619 of India's 660 districts.(122)
Central Bureau of Investigation's Anti-Human Trafficking Unit	Investigate and prosecute cases involving the kidnapping and trafficking of women and children by professional gangs operating across multiple states. Take on cases by request of, or in agreement with, state governments.(123, 124)

* The Government does not publish this information.

The Constitution of India gives state governments primary responsibility for the enforcement of labor laws.(118, 126) While the central government seeks to collect data on child labor violations and prosecutions, this information for 2016 was not yet released during the reporting period. The central government also does not collect data on state government and territory funding and employment of labor inspectors.(127)

India

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in India took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

The Constitution of India gives state governments primary responsibility for criminal law enforcement, including laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor.(126) The National Crime Records Bureau (NCRB) collects data from state government on investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions involving criminal activities, but not all states report these data.(129) Data published is for the previous reporting period.(129)

According to the NCRB, during 2015 there were 136 investigations, 71 violations, 65 new prosecutions and 108 cases continuing prosecutions from 2014, and 1 conviction in cases involving the Bonded Labor System (Abolition) Act; however, these data were not disaggregated for adults and children.(129)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Central Monitoring Committee	Supervise, monitor, and evaluate actions of the National Child Labor Projects (NCLPs) across India. Led by MOLE; some state governments maintain State-Level Monitoring Committees to monitor the NCLPs in their states.(130)
Core Group on Child Labor	Coordinate the integration of social protection programs to reduce child labor. Composed of members from the Ministries of Human Resource Development; Women and Child Development; Housing and Urban Poverty Alleviation; Rural Development; Social Justice and Empowerment; Home Affairs; and community government (Panchayati Raj). Chaired by the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE).(131)
Ministry of Home Affairs' Anti-Human Trafficking Cell	Implement the Government's nationwide plan to combat human trafficking by coordinating with states to establish Anti-Human Trafficking Units and train thousands of officials to combat human trafficking. Requires states to submit quarterly reports to this coordinating body.(49, 118)
National Human Rights Commission	Monitor implementation of the Bonded Labor System (Abolition) Act. Monitor state government actions to identify, release, and rehabilitate bonded laborers through quarterly submissions and exploratory and investigative missions.(132, 133)
National Commission for the Protection of Child Rights	Ensure that all laws, policies, programs, and administrative mechanisms are in accordance with the constitutional protections for children and the UN CRC. Inquire about child rights violations and failures to properly implement laws relating to child protection.(49, 134) Established in all 30 states and in 3 territories, including Delhi.(135)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Policy on Child Labor	Describes actions for combating hazardous child labor for children, including implementing legislation and providing direct assistance to children.(136) During the reporting period, the policy was implemented through programs operated by MOLE and Ministry of Women and Child Development (MWCD).(137, 138)
State Action Plans on Child Labor	Details state governments' activities and programs to eliminate child labor from hazardous industries. Only 10 of 29 state governments have child labor action plans: Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Gujarat, Jharkhand, Karnataka, Maharashtra, Meghalaya, Orissa, Tamil Nadu, and Telangana.(139-144)
National Policy for Children	Seeks to guide laws, policies, plans, and programs affecting children. Sets out the policy that state governments should take all necessary measures to track; rescue; and rehabilitate child laborers, trafficked children, and other vulnerable children; and to ensure that out-of-school children can access education.(145) During the reporting period, the policy was implemented through programs operated by MOLE and MWCD.(133, 138)

[‡] The Government had other policies which may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(146, 147)

In 2016, the Ministry of Women and Child Development issued Standard Operating Procedures for investigating cases of missing children, including cases of bonded labor, exploitative child labor, child trafficking.(148, 149)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
National Child Labor Project (NCLP) Scheme [†]	MOLE scheme that operates at the district level to identify working children, withdraw them from hazardous work, and provide them with education and vocational training. Sets up and administers NCLP schools, mainstreams children into formal education, and provides them with stipends, meals, and health checkups.(137) Comprises 2,860 NCLP special training centers that accommodate approximately 130,000 children. Through the Grants-in-Aid Scheme, MOLE funds NGOs to set up rehabilitation projects in districts that do not have an NCLP Scheme.(137) Between April 1, 2015, and March 31, 2016, rehabilitated 54,335 child workers who were rescued from hazardous work conditions.(116)
Rehabilitation of Bonded Labor Scheme [†]	MOLE program that rescues and rehabilitates adult and child bonded laborers. Provides rescued bonded laborers with financial assistance and social protection services.(150) Supports the funding of surveys at the district level on the prevalence of bonded labor and the rehabilitation of bonded laborers identified through the surveys.(151) As of September 30, 2015, more than $14 million was provided to state governments for the rehabilitation of 282,429 bonded laborers.(150) In 2016, the Government increased the financial assistance from approximately $312 to $1,700 for adult males, $3,300 for adult females and children, and $5,000 for females and children rescued from human trafficking and sexual exploitation, disabled persons, and transgender people.(152)
Integrated Child Protection Scheme (ICPS) [†]	MWCD scheme that provides children in need of protection—including children withdrawn from hazardous work, forced labor, and human trafficking—with food and shelter in children's homes, shelter homes, and open shelters, as well as non-institutional care in foster homes and adoptive families. Provides rehabilitation and reintegration services to rescued children.(135) Through the Welfare of Working Children in Need of Care and Protection program, ICPS provides non-formal education and vocational training to street children and working children living in urban areas not covered by MOLE schemes.(153)
Anti-Human Trafficking Activities [†]	MWCD-operated anti-human trafficking activities, in collaboration with NGOs and state governments.(138) Supports projects to help reintegrate, rehabilitate, and repatriate human trafficking victims, including children, through the Ujjawala scheme. Also provides short-term housing and rehabilitation services, including vocational training for women and adolescent girls, through the Swadhar Greh scheme.(138)
Childline [†]	MWCD-funded 24-hour toll-free emergency telephone service for children in distress. Includes Childline India Foundation-operated telephone service in cities across India, which connects children in need of assistance with hospitals, child welfare committees, shelter homes, and police.(138) In 2015–2016, $9.5 million was granted to fund Childline services in 366 cities.(138)
TrackChild [†]	MWCD-implemented online portal that tracks missing children and facilitates information sharing about missing and vulnerable children among stakeholders, including child protection units, police stations, and Child Welfare Committees.(138, 154) Established the Khoya-Paya (Lost and Found) website to allow parents and the general public to report and search for missing children.(155)

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(156-159)

In 2016, state governments, such as Odisha and Maharashtra, continued to conduct Operation Muskaan campaigns to rescue and rehabilitate missing children, including many involved in the worst forms of child labor.(160, 161) During the reporting period, the Chief Minister of Bihar State announced that children rescued from child labor will receive approximately $370 from the Chief Minister's Relief Fund.(162)

State governments conduct district-level surveys on bonded labor under the Rehabilitation of Bonded Labor Scheme. However, in surveyed districts, data were not available on the number of victims of bonded labor, including children.(91, 163)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in India (Table 11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary education. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. For more information, please see the "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" in the Reference Materials section of this report.

Analysis received December 16, 2016. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. For more information on sources used, the definition of working children and other indicators used in this report, please see the "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" in the Reference Materials section of this report.

In 2016, Indonesia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified the Maritime Labor Convention which prohibits the worst forms of child labor, slavery, and wage discrimination. The National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons also completed work to establish local anti-trafficking task forces in all 34 provinces. In addition, the Ministry of Manpower employed “community-based monitoring inspectors” and neighborhood chiefs who can report incidences of child labor. However, children in Indonesia perform dangerous tasks in the production of palm oil and tobacco. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Ministry of Manpower lacks the financial resources and personnel necessary to adequately enforce child labor laws throughout the country, especially in the informal sector. The Government also continues to deliberate on the Domestic Workers Protection Bill, which outlines the circumstances under which children ages 15 through 17 could perform non-hazardous domestic work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Indonesia perform dangerous tasks in the production of palm oil and tobacco.(1-5) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(6-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Indonesia. While the Government collects national data on working children ages 5 through 14, it does not publish the data.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10 to 14	3.7 (816,363)
Attending School (%)	10 to 14	92.4

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Use in illicit activities, including forced begging and the sale, production, and trafficking of drugs, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (17, 40-43)
	Domestic work and fishing as a result of human trafficking (8, 12, 44-46)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, including use in the production of pornography, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 6, 17, 46)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Indonesia is primarily a source country, and to a lesser extent a destination and transit country, for child trafficking. Children, mostly girls, are trafficked abroad for domestic work as well as for commercial sexual exploitation; children are also subjected to trafficking internally for domestic work and sexual exploitation, particularly in Batam, Jakarta, Bali, Bandung, Bogor, Surabaya, and Medan.(3, 8, 9, 47)

Children are engaged in hazardous work in informal tin mines of Bangka-Belitung Province.(26, 48) Children also work in tobacco farming, especially in the provinces of East Java, Central Java, and West Nusa Tenggara, which exposes them to pesticides, exhaustion and extreme heat.(1, 8) Children also work on palm oil plantations tending the nursery, collecting fallen palm fruitlets, and spraying toxic herbicides to help adult laborers meet their quotas and earn premium pay.(49-51) Research also identified children working on fishing platforms (jermals) and small fishing boats, who are exposed to hazardous health and safety dangers from weather, machinery on the boats, and explosives from blast fishing.(20)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Indonesia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Indonesia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 34 of the Act on the National Education System (63)

In 2016, the Government ratified the Maritime Labor Convention which stipulates that individuals be free from the worst forms of child labor, slavery, and wage discrimination.(8, 64) During the reporting period, the Government also enacted a law that requires the central and local governments to provide educational scholarships and/or tuition aid to the children of fishermen to assist in their training and apprenticeship in the fisheries or salt field.(8, 65)

Since 2010, the Government has had the Domestic Workers Protection Bill on its legislative agenda, which outlines the circumstances under which children ages 15 through 17 could perform non-hazardous domestic work; however, the Government continues to deliberate on the bill.(66-69) While the Government issued Ministerial Regulation No.2/2015 which raised the minimum age of domestic workers to 18 years old and is enforced by the Ministry of Manpower, the regulation is not a law and criminal penalties are not included.(70) The regulation empowers designated “neighborhood chiefs” to supervise the working conditions of domestic workers in their communities, and are allowed to enter private residences.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Manpower (MOM) Directorate General of Labor Development and Supervision	Provide information to employers on child labor laws and regulations, report child labor violations, and work with law enforcement officials to prosecute child labor violations.(58) Refer children found during inspections to the local Women’s Empowerment and Family Planning Body or to the Integrated Service Center for Empowering Women and Children to access appropriate social services.
National Police, Including Women and Children’s Service Unit	Conduct inspections and raids and make arrests in response to all crimes, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(14, 17)
MOM Directorate of Norms Supervision of Women and Child Workers	Receive child labor complaints by telephone, fax, or e-mail.(8)

In 2016, MOM inspectors removed 16,500 children from working in 24 provinces and 138 districts. MOM works with the ministries of Education, Religious Affairs, and Social Affairs to encourage parents to enroll their children in school through Family Hope Program by which families receive conditional cash transfers and children receive one month of counseling and education advocacy provided they enroll in schools.(70) While inspectors do not distinguish between general labor inspections and child labor inspections, they will actively search for violations of child labor during their inspections.(8) In addition, inspectors have the authority to conduct unannounced inspections in the formal sectors, but they are legally prohibited from inspecting private farms and homes where the vast majority of child labor cases are found.(1, 8, 72)

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Indonesia's workforce, which includes over 123 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Indonesia should employ roughly 8,160 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country. However, the country has 1,893 inspectors to oversee an estimated 268,000 companies or workplaces and many are not provided sufficient resources to carry out their labor inspections effectively.(8, 73-76) In 2016, only 30 new inspectors received training on laws and enforcement of laws related to the worst forms of child labor and hazardous work, and existing inspectors did not receive a refresher training because of budget reductions. Due to these constraints, the MOM employed "community-based monitoring inspectors" and neighborhood chiefs who can report incidences of child labor.(8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Indonesia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, the Indonesian Commission on Child Protection recorded 307 cases of child trafficking and 465 cases involving children in pornography and cybercrime; the Police National Anti-Trafficking taskforce investigated 70 cases of child trafficking.(8)

The Indonesian National Police provides training on the prevention and investigation of cases involving the worst forms of child labor to police units that focus exclusively on crimes against women and children. Although progress has been made in raising awareness about human trafficking among law enforcement authorities, including the IOM's facilitated training workshops on combating human trafficking, the IOM reports that its trainings do not address topics related to child labor. In addition, reports indicate that MOM's child labor investigations focus primarily on the worst cases given its limited resources; however, starting in January 2017, all inspections will be controlled by the provincial governments, thereby elevating the status of inspectors from contractors to civil service employees.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Provincial-level and District-level Regional Action Committees	Coordinate and monitor policy and program efforts and develop action plans to eliminate the worst forms of child labor at the local level.(77) The country has provincial-level task forces in all 34 provinces and 192 district-level committees.(78)
National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate the country's anti-trafficking efforts, including child trafficking.(28) Chaired by the Coordinating Ministry of Human Development and Culture, with task force meetings organized by the Ministry of Women Empowerment and Child Protection. Coordinates the Task Force across 21 ministries.(78) Provided vocational training and scholarships to school-aged children to reduce susceptibility to trafficking.(9) In 2016, established anti-trafficking taskforces at the local level in 34 provinces.(78)
Provincial and District Task Forces for the Prevention and Handling of Human Trafficking	Coordinate prevention and anti-trafficking efforts at the local level.(9) Commonly chaired by the local Integrated Service Center for Women and Children or the local Office of Social Affairs, and currently operating in all 34 provinces and 196 out of 497 districts.(78)
Subtask Force on the Prevention of Child Participation in Trafficking in Persons	Organize regular coordination meetings, provide technical training, and produce publications on the prevention of trafficking in persons. Chaired by the Ministry of Education and Culture Director for Early Childhood, Nonformal, and Informal Education.(28)
Indonesian Child Protection Commission	Supervise child protection policy implementation, promotion, and monitoring; monitor and evaluate the progress of implementing the Child Protection Law; and provides recommendations to the President of Indonesia.(79)

Indonesia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Government eliminated the National Action Committee for the Elimination of the Worst forms of Child Labor and reverted its responsibilities to the MOM. Instead, the Roadmap Toward a Child Labor-Free Indonesia mainstreams the elimination of child labor into wider national policies and was incorporated into the Government's 2014-2016 mid-term development plan as part of a comprehensive policy to address child labor in Indonesia.(8) However, provincial and district-level child labor committees have not been officially dissolved; research found that many are no longer functioning due to lack of funding from local governments.(29)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan (NAP) for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2002–2022)	Provides a policy framework for the elimination of child labor in three operational phases.(14, 80–82) Specific activities include improving data collection on the worst forms of child labor, increasing awareness-raising and advocacy efforts, and formulating regulations and policies to prohibit the worst forms of child labor.(54)
National Action Plan on Preventing Trafficking in Persons (2015–2019)	Guides the work of the National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons. Includes the following goals: improve health and social rehabilitation services and repatriation and social reintegration services for human trafficking victims; update anti-human trafficking regulations; strengthen the investigation of human trafficking cases and the prosecution of perpetrators; and enhance coordination among task force members and between national and international stakeholders.(45)
Roadmap Toward a Child Labor-Free Indonesia in 2022 (2014–2022)	Supports implementation of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Aims to mainstream the elimination of the worst forms of child labor into relevant national policies; strengthen coordination between stakeholders at the national, provincial, and district levels; and enhance the capacity of stakeholders to eradicate child labor.(28, 83) Led by MOM and integrated into the Mid-Term Development Plan as part of a comprehensive policy to address child labor.(39) Key feature is the establishment of Child-Labor-Free Industrial Zones in its final phase. MOM has engaged in an ILO project funded by the Dutch Government designed to develop skills training for school dropouts aged 15-17 who are either former child laborers or vulnerable to labor exploitation, particularly in the agricultural sector(8)
Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Convention Against Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (ACTIP)	Establishes a regional anti-trafficking framework among 10 ASEAN member states, including Indonesia, to improve coordination on investigation and prosecution of human trafficking cases and enhance assistance for victims. The Convention awaits ratification by the Ministry of Law and Human Rights.(68, 84, 85)

The National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons notes that some Provincial and District Task Forces lack sufficient funding and fail to incorporate its recommendations into its plans of action to effectively guide efforts to eliminate the trafficking of women and children.(8, 9, 29) In addition, while the National Education Law mandates free education, research indicates that schools impose additional fees on students to cover activities and other items that may hinder their ability to attend school.(8)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL projects aim to build the capacity of the Government, develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor, improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research, strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers in Indonesia, and builds capacity of domestic worker organizations to address child domestic work. PROMOTE: Decent Work for Domestic Workers to End Child Domestic Labor (2012–2017) , $5 million project implemented by ILO-IPEC; Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues , implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries; and Building a Generation of Safe and Healthy Workers: Safe and Healthy Youth , implemented by the ILO with Indonesia as one of the countries. Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†] (cont)

Program	Description
Child Trafficking Services [†]	MOSA and other government agency program that provides social rehabilitation and shelter services for child victims of trafficking.(86, 87)
West Java and Bandung Municipality Street Children Program [†]	West Java provincial government and municipality of Bandung programs to assist street children.(80)
Cash Transfer Programs [†]	Government of Indonesia programs that aim to provide conditional cash transfers to assist children's education and health; establish bank accounts; and assist vulnerable groups, including street children, abandoned children and infants, children facing criminal charges, children with disabilities, the poorest families, and child laborers who dropped out of school. Smart Indonesia Program; Unconditional Cash Transfer Program (Bantuan Langsung Semetara Masyarakat); Child Social Welfare Program (Program Kesejahteraan Sosial Anak); Family Welfare Card (Kartu Keluarga Sejahtera); Family Hope Program (Program Keluarga Harapan); and Social Protection Cards (Kartu Perlindungan).(8, 28, 88, 89)
Rice for the Poor (Raskin) [†]	Government-subsidized food program that provides rice for the poorest 25 percent of households.(88)
Block Grants for Schools (Bantuan Operasional Sekolah) [†]	Government block grant program that compensates schools for the loss of income incurred when waiving fees to ensure free education for poor and vulnerable children in primary, junior secondary, and senior high schools.(8, 90) In 2016, provided approximately $3.2 million in grants to elementary, junior high, and senior high schools to accelerate progress toward the government goal to achieve a 97 percent senior high school attendance rate by 2020.(70)
Minimum Service Standards of Basic Education Program	Aims to improve access to quality public education by limiting the distance of elementary and junior secondary schools from children's households, by specifying minimum teacher-student ratios, and by identifying minimum teacher education qualifications.(91)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Indonesia.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(8)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Indonesia (Table 11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 74. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited March 18, 2017]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/rankorder/2095rank.html>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
75. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Committee on Employment and Social Policy. November 2006; <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/reim/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

76. UN. "World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex." (2012); http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Iraq made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Iraq is receiving this assessment because it implemented a practice that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor, which facilitated the recruitment of child soldiers. Armed groups engaged in combat against the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria, including units of the Popular Mobilization Forces (PMF), recruited and used children, some of whom were as young as 12 years old. Several PMF units also received financial and material support from the Iraqi Government, and a February 2016 order from the Iraqi Prime Minister declared the PMF to be formally affiliated with Iraqi security services. In addition, in December 2016, the Iraqi Prime Minister signed a law that formalized the status of the Popular Mobilization Commission, an umbrella organization for the PMF, as a component of the Iraqi security services. Otherwise, the Government conducted targeted labor inspections in areas where child labor was prevalent, established investigative courts on human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation in the Kurdistan Region, and improved coordination with the Kurdistan Regional Government through the Central Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons. Children in Iraq also engage in other worst forms of child labor, including forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Limited funding, transportation, and fuel hampered the inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws and criminal law enforcement information remains unavailable. The Government continues to lack programs that focus on assisting children in the worst forms of child labor, particularly those used by armed groups.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Iraq engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict and commercial sexual exploitation, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Iraq.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	5.3 (454,330)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	75.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	4.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		66.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 6, 13, 15, 27, 30, 31)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

NGOs, an international organization, and the media reported that factions of the Popular Mobilization Forces (PMF) recruited and used children under the age of 18 in operations in Fallujah and other areas of the country, while PMF-affiliated media continued to celebrate the service and sacrifice of child soldiers.(1, 6, 24, 32) In 2016, some PMF units received financial and material support from the Iraqi Government, and a February 2016 order from the Iraqi Prime Minister declared the PMF to be formally affiliated with Iraqi security services. In December 2016, the Iraqi Prime Minister signed a law that formalized the status of the Popular Mobilization Commission, an umbrella organization for the PMF, as a component of the Iraqi security services.(32) Human Rights Watch reported that the PMF was threatening some displaced families in camps and exploiting their need for humanitarian assistance as part of its child recruitment efforts.(6) However, research did not find evidence that the Iraqi Army and the Iraqi Police used children in armed conflict.(6)

The Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS, also known as ISIL) recruited children and used them in combat operations, including as informants, suicide bombers, and in manning checkpoints.(2, 5, 6, 25) Armed groups engaged in combat against ISIS also recruited and used children.(4, 6, 7, 25) Sunni tribal forces and other armed groups, including the Iran-backed militias, the Women’s Protection Units (YPJ), the Sinjar Resistance Units (YBS), People’s Defense Forces (HPG), and the Kurdistan Workers’ Party (PKK) accepted child volunteers into their ranks.(4, 6, 7) In addition to voluntary recruitment, the PKK and YBS forcibly recruited and used Kurdish and Yezidi boys and girls, some as young as 12 years old, in combat and support roles in northern Iraq.(32)

Throughout the country, some girls were subjected to commercial sexual exploitation by their families, who sought financial gain through temporary marriages.(1) This practice involves a dowry paid to the girl’s family and an agreement to dissolve the marriage after a predetermined length of time.(33) ISIS fighters subjected girls, primarily from the Yezidi community, but also from other ethnic and religious groups, to commercial sexual exploitation, forced marriages, or forced domestic work in Iraq and Syria.(1, 28, 34-37) Limited evidence points to trafficking of girls from Iran into the Iraqi Kurdistan Region for commercial sexual exploitation. Some officials of the Kurdistan Regional Government (KRG) were involved in the trafficking of Syrian refugee girls for commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 6, 7, 29, 38)

Children faced barriers accessing education, partially because of attacks on schools, including the targeting of teachers and school personnel, lack of schools nearby, and the use of schools as shelters by internally displaced persons (IDPs) and as detention centers by ISIS.(15, 27, 39, 40) As of September 2016, approximately 35 percent of Iraqi children, including IDP children, were out of school.(41) In addition, out of approximately 61,000 Syrian refugee children, about 40 percent remained out of school.(42) For these refugees, the majority of whom live in the Kurdistan Region, access to education was limited because of security concerns, school-related costs – such as transportation and uniforms – and language issues, because most classes in the Kurdistan Region are taught in Kurdish rather than Arabic.(43)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Iraq has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Iraq's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

‡ Age calculated based on available information.

The provision protecting children from hazardous work does not apply to children age 15-17 working in family businesses under the authority of family members.(44)

Also, in Iraq, Article 1 of the Law to Combat Human Trafficking requires force or coercion to be present as an element of the crime of child trafficking, which is inconsistent with Article 3 of the Palermo Protocol.(47) The KRG must endorse laws passed by the Government of Iraq after 1991 for such laws to enter into force in the Kurdistan Region, which comprises the provinces of Dahuk, Erbil, and Sulaymaniyah.(28, 54) The KRG has not endorsed the Iraq Law to Combat Human Trafficking, and the only law in effect in the Kurdistan region prohibiting trafficking, the 1987 Labor Law, merely mentions child trafficking and does not prohibit the necessary elements of a child trafficking standard.(52, 55)

Under Articles 8 and 11 of the Iraqi Education Law and the Law on Compulsory Education, children are required to attend primary school for 6 years, which is typically up to age 12.(50, 51, 56) This standard makes children ages 12 to 15 particularly vulnerable to child labor, because they are not required to be in school, yet they are not legally permitted to work.

On December 29, 2016, the Council of Ministers directed the Ministry of Justice to draft an amendment to the Education Law that would extend compulsory education through secondary school.(57)

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA) and the KRG Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs discussed a draft child protection law that includes provisions on child labor. No further information was available.(6)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA)	Enforce child labor laws and regulations through its Child Labor Unit. Conduct research on child labor through its Childhood Welfare Authority.(19) Receive complaints of child labor cases.(6)
Kurdistan Regional Government (KRG) Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs	Enforce child labor laws and regulations in the Iraqi Kurdistan Region. KRG Ministry of Interior's police units play a supporting role in the daily activities of the Ministry.(19)
Ministry of Interior	Enforce criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor. Collaborate with MOLSA, the Iraqi Industries Federation, and the Confederation of Trade Unions to conduct inspection campaigns.(19) Maintain a hotline for victims of human trafficking that is routed directly to the Ministry's Anti-Trafficking Department.(19)
KRG Ministry of Interior	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(6)

‡ Data are from January 1, 2015 to November 30, 2015.

In 2016, research did not find information about the funding of MOLSA. However, previously officials had stated that their funding was limited.(19) In 2015, insufficient transportation and fuel hampered MOLSA's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(19) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Iraq's workforce, which includes over 8.9 million workers.(59) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Iraq should employ roughly 593 labor inspectors.(19, 60, 61) In 2016, labor inspections resulted in 325 cases being referred to the Labor Court for prosecution. The Labor Court fined 229 employers and closed down 10 factories that were repeated violators of child labor laws.(57) Jointly with the Ministry of Education, MOLSA conducted a targeted outreach campaign to vulnerable communities and inspected areas where child labor was prevalent. The joint campaigns resulted in 257 children returning to school.(57) These visits were in addition to the aforementioned 1,076 official inspections.(57) The 2015 inspection data were collected by the High Commission on Human Rights. In 2016, with the dissolution of this Commission and the Ministry of Human Rights, data collection on a central level was no longer carried out.(57)

In 2016, the KRG Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs did not have budgetary allocations for inspections, did not provide child labor training to inspectors, and did not carry out inspections.(6) However, the KRG established investigative sub-committees and investigative courts focused on trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation in the Kurdistan Region.(25)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Iraq took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown (19)	Unknown (6)

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (19)	Unknown (6)
Number of Convictions	Unknown (19)	Unknown (6)

In 2016, the Government conducted 314 investigations of human trafficking cases and 17 prosecutions. It is unknown how many of these cases may have involved child victims.(32) The KRG did not provide training for criminal investigators. KRG officials stated that courts could refer cases of the worst forms of child labor to the KRG Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs.(6) Research did not discover other information on criminal law enforcement, including in the Kurdistan Region.

Child victims of human trafficking and forced labor faced prosecution for acts committed while being trafficked and underwent deportation proceedings.(32, 35) An international organization reported that KRG authorities arrested, detained, and interrogated, approximately 180 child soldiers between the ages of 11 and 17 years old for their alleged association to ISIS; 17 of those interviewed reported torture during interrogation.(32)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-ministerial Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate overall government efforts to combat child labor, research policies regarding child labor, and design and manage projects. Includes representatives from five ministries, including MOLSA.(19)
Joint Committee on Street Children	Coordinate the implementation of measures for removing and rehabilitating street children. Members include MOLSA and the Ministry of Interior.(30)
Central Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Oversee implementation of the Law to Combat Human Trafficking and serve as the national coordinating body on trafficking in persons. Led by the Ministry of Interior, also includes representatives from five ministries, the KRG Ministry of Interior, and two other state entities.(6, 19) In 2016, the Committee held meetings and training sessions for its members, including KRG officials.(25, 57)
KRG High Commission on Child Labor	Coordinate interagency policies on child labor. Chaired by the KRG Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs; members include representatives from five other KRG ministries.(6)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Informal Education†	Government-supported informal education systems, including evening school programs and the fast education mode that encourages children ages 12 to 18 who have dropped out of school to continue their education.(30)

Program	Description
Conditional Subsidies Program [†]	Provides assistance to low-income families for children to stay in school and out of the workforce.(6) This program was active in 2016, and provided financial support to hundreds of low-income families with the condition that their children remain in school.(57)
Shelters for Human Trafficking Victims [†]	MOLSA-operated shelter in Baghdad for human trafficking victims, including children involved in the worst forms of child labor; other facilities are in Basrah, Kirkuk, and Ninewa provinces.(55) The KRG operates three shelters for female victims of human trafficking and violence.(6) No victims used the shelter in Baghdad in 2016, partially due to security reasons.(25)

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(62, 63)

In 2016, the Government began drafting a plan to rehabilitate and integrate children liberated from ISIS, including child soldiers, back into their communities. In May 2017, the Council of Ministers approved the plan and allocated a budget for its implementation.(57) Research found no evidence of specific programs targeting children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation or brickmaking.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
61. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies;" "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Jamaica

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Jamaica made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the year, with international donor support, the Government expanded the Program for Advancement through Health and Education (PATH), which provided assistance to nearly 250,000 children. It also introduced a transportation allowance grant to subsidize school transportation costs for children enrolled in PATH and collaborated with the Jamaica Employer's Federation to host a seminar on responsible business practices to end child labor in supply chains. However, children perform dangerous tasks in street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Although the Government has laws prohibiting the use of children in some illicit activities, it does not prohibit using, procuring, or offering children for drug trafficking and production. In addition, programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the child labor problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Jamaica perform dangerous tasks in street work.(1, 2) Children in Jamaica also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Jamaica.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	5.4 (28,298)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	99.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	6.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's Analysis of Statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Jamaica is a destination and source for commercial sexual exploitation of children. Jamaican children are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor to countries including the United States, United Kingdom, and Canada.(4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Jamaica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Jamaica's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Jamaica

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Jamaican laws prohibit the illegal manufacture and distribution of drugs but do not specifically penalize using, procuring, or offering a child for the production and distribution of drugs.(13, 23) Although children ages 13 and 14 may engage in light work, the Government has yet to finalize and adopt its draft list of light work activities.(13, 17) During the year, the Government revised a draft hazardous work list for children but has not yet adopted it.(10)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS)	Enforce and administer child labor laws in the formal sectors of the economy. The Child Labor Unit coordinates and shares information with other agencies to address child labor issues.(24)
Child Development Agency (CDA)	Monitor and investigate suspected child labor violations and oversee efforts to address child labor.(24)
Office of the Children's Advocate (OCA)	Partner with other agencies, including the CDA, to promote protection of children, including addressing child labor.(24)
Jamaica Constabulary Force (JCF)	Enforce criminal laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor. The Trafficking in Persons Unit investigates and prosecutes cases of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(24) The Center for the Investigation of Sexual Offences and Child Abuse focuses on victim rehabilitation and educates the public about sexual offenses against children. In addition, it investigates and prosecutes sexual offenses and child abuse cases.(25)
Office of the Children's Registry (OCR)	Receive complaints on a hotline for child abuse, including child labor, child trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation of children. Refer suspected cases of child abuse to law enforcement.(24)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Jamaica took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Jamaica's workforce, which includes over 1.3 million workers. According to ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Jamaica should employ about 87 inspectors.(26) Child labor is mostly pervasive in the informal sector, but labor inspectors conduct inspections only in the formal sector, such as factories, building sites, docks, and ships.(1, 10) The Office of Children's Registry (OCR) receives reports through a toll-free line, 1-888-PROTECT (776-8328), of offenses against children, including child labor, child abuse, and human trafficking. The latest OCR publication on child labor data, from 2014, reported 1,129 suspected cases of child labor.(10, 27)

In June 2016, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) and Jamaica Employer's Federation, in collaboration with the ILO, held a seminar for businesses about ending child labor in supply chains.(28, 29) In August 2016, the Director of the Child Labor Unit in the MLSS made a public declaration urging citizens not to exploit children for child labor, including street work.(30)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Jamaica took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	N/A (1)	Yes (10)

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (1)	0 (10)
Number of Convictions	0 (1)	3 (10)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (1)	Yes (10)

The Government provided training to Jamaica Constabulary Force (JCF) officers on child labor laws, tools to combat child labor, and methods to carry out investigations and prosecutions.(8, 10) In November 2016, the JCF Anti-Trafficking in Persons Unit and other Jamaican officials attended training by an instructor from The Safe Center in Nassau County, New York, on how to engage and interact with trafficking victims. Although the JCF Anti-Trafficking in Persons Unit conducted 36 investigations during the year, the number of cases that involved children is unclear.(10)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MLSS Program for the Elimination of Child Labor	Coordinate the Government's child labor policies and programs and identify gaps in legislation across ministries. The MLSS collaborates with the other ministries, such as the Ministry of Youth and Culture (OCA, OCR, CDA), the Ministry of Justice (National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons), and the Ministry of National Security to address gaps in legislation.(2, 31)
National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons (NATFATIP)	Facilitate information exchanges between government agencies and external stakeholders and create momentum for counter-trafficking efforts. Led by the Ministry of Justice, includes six other agencies and oversees the implementation of the country's National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking.(32) Meets regularly with the JCF, Director of Public Prosecutions, and relevant ministries.(10, 24) The NATFATIP met during the year to plan awareness raising initiatives; resulted in an island-wide campaign that reached over 1,200 people. NATFATIP also developed a trafficking in persons (TIP) curriculum for children in grades seven through nine to focus on how to prevent becoming a victim of TIP.(10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking (2015–2018)	Targets law enforcement officials to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children, conducts public awareness campaigns, and implements outreach programs.(33) During the year, the NATFATIP sponsored public awareness campaigns on TIP, operated a shelter for TIP victims, and coordinated interagency efforts on TIP.(34)

The Government has not updated the expired 2015 National Plan of Action on Child Labor and has not included child labor prevention and elimination strategies in the Compulsory Education Policy.(10, 35)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor*

Program	Description
Program for Advancement through Health and Education (PATH)†	Funded by the Government of Jamaica and the World Bank, the conditional cash transfer program helps reduce child labor by requiring participants to attend school at least 85 percent of the academic days in a month.(36-38). During the year, PATH's assistance increased from 223,000 to 250,000 project participants with a total expenditure of $17.6 million. PATH achieved education compliance rates of 80.75 percent for boys and 84.75 percent for girls at the primary level. It also achieved compliance rates of 76.5 percent for boys and 83.25 percent for girls at the secondary level.(10) In addition, the Government introduced a transportation allowance grant to subsidize the cost of transportation for PATH children.(10)
Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO to increase the knowledge base on child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area. During the year, the project sponsored four trainings conducted by the Statistical Institute of Jamaica on data collection. The project conducted a main survey on child labor in 441 randomly selected enumeration districts across all the parishes in Jamaica.(39) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. (1, 12, 40, 41)

In 2016, the Government created an Inter-Ministerial Partnership to provide educational technologies for children with disabilities to ensure that children have access to education and are not vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The Government also launched the Global Partnership to End Violence Against Children, which addresses the exploitation of children, including child labor.(42) Although social programs exist they do not fully address the extent of the child labor problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Jamaica (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that legislation prohibits the use of children for all illicit activities, including procuring and offering a child for drug trafficking and production.	2009 – 2016
	Determine the specific light work activities and hours permissible for children ages 13 and 14 to facilitate enforcement.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2014 – 2016
	Employ enough labor inspectors to provide sufficient coverage of the workforce.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that labor inspections are conducted not only in the formal sector, such as factories, building sites, docks, and ships, but also in the informal sector in urban and rural communities.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Reinstate and approve the National Action Plan on Child Labor.	2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Compulsory Education Policy.	2014 – 2016
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children who are working, especially for children working in agriculture, fishing, and construction, to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2016
	Expand programs to assist child laborers in street work, commercial sexual exploitation, and the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Jordan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government released the Summary Report on Main Findings of the National Child Labor Survey and redesigned the National Child Labor Database to contain data about child laborers and their referral to social services. In addition, the Government increased the number of double-shifted schools to expand access to education for Syrian refugee children living in Jordan. However, children in Jordan perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in street work. Programs to combat the worst forms of child labor are insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. In addition, Syrian children still face barriers to accessing education.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Jordan perform dangerous tasks in agriculture.(1-5) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in street work.(6-8) Based on the 2016 National Child Labor Survey, approximately 70,000 children are engaged in child labor, most commonly in agriculture and trade. Approximately 80 percent of child laborers are Jordanian and about 15 percent are Syrian.(4) Boys constitute nearly 90 percent of those involved in child labor.(4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Jordan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	0.8 (11,255)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	94.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	0.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Syrian children are granted access to Jordanian public schools.(31) Yet, as of December 2016, more than 40,000 Syrian refugee children were not enrolled in formal or informal education, a figure representing 17 percent of all Syrian refugee children ages 5 to 17.(32) Jordan has nearly 500 double-shifted schools to address overcrowding (out of approximately 3,700 schools in the country); of these schools, 198 are for refugee children, mainly Syrian.(33) Jordanian children attend in the morning and Syrian children attend in the afternoon to accommodate the large number of students.(26, 31) One hundred second-shift schools were opened in 2013 and 2014, and an additional 98 were opened in 2016.(33) However, Jordanian and Syrian children attending double-shift schools are vulnerable to child labor because the school hours are considerably shorter, and fewer school hours leave more time for work.(33, 34) Syrian refugee children face barriers to education, including the cost of transportation, uniforms, and school materials; lack of refugee registration and required documents; and being unprepared for their appropriate grade level due to interruptions in their early years of schooling.(15, 35, 36)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Jordan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Jordan’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Directorate of Labor Affairs and Inspection	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor.(26) Identify cases of child labor through worksite inspections and refer cases to the relevant services. Register instances of child labor in a National Child Labor Database, which allows ministries to monitor and track children as they are identified and referred to services.(46) Maintain a 24/7 hotline to receive labor-related complaints in Arabic, including complaints of child labor.(31, 47)
Ministry of Labor, Child Labor Unit	Coordinate government efforts to campaign against child labor, conduct trainings, and raise awareness about child labor issues. In 2015, piloted the National Child Labor Database as a data collection, coordination, and referral mechanism.(26) In 2016, the Web site of the National Child Labor Database was launched at a central location for labor inspectors to enter information on child laborers and share it with the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Social Development.(33)
Public Security Directorate, Criminal Investigation Unit	Investigate and prosecute violations of the Penal Code, including allegations of the worst forms of child labor. Operate a section to combat human trafficking.(26)
Joint Anti-Trafficking Unit of the Ministry of Labor and Public Security Directorate	Investigate cases of human trafficking and forced labor, refer cases for prosecution, and coordinate with foreign embassies to identify victims of human trafficking and repatriate workers.(48)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, law enforcement agencies in Jordan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor hired 11 new inspectors and responded to 58 complaints of child labor cases, received through its Child Labor Unit hotline.(24) When a labor inspector identifies a child laborer, the inspector issues a warning or fine and asks the employer to send the child home while the inspector is still present.(33) A warning requires the employer to sign a pledge declaring that he/she will cease employing children. Without the pledge, the Ministry of Labor can close the business.(26) The information about the child is then shared with the Ministry of Social Development, which contacts the family to identify the appropriate social services. Meanwhile, the labor inspector conducts unannounced follow-up visits at the worksite to ensure compliance.(33) During the reporting period, 584 businesses signed pledges.(24)

Insufficient resources hampered the Ministry of Labor's capacity to enforce child labor laws in the agricultural sector.(24) Based on available information, the Ministry of Labor has not issued regulations on labor inspection in agriculture.(33) This is a problem, particularly because a considerable proportion of child laborers work in agriculture, based on the 2016 National Child Labor Survey.(4)

Jordanian children identified during labor inspections are referred to social services from the Child Labor Unit of the Ministry of Social Development.(33, 50) In contrast, Syrian refugee children who are identified during labor inspections are taken to the Azraq refugee camp and separated from their families. Families that live in the Zaatari refugee camp can go to Azraq to reunify with their children.(33, 51, 52) However, those that live in communities (about 80 percent of all Syrian refugees) may fear that by presenting themselves at Azraq, they, too, will have to stay at Azraq and lose some benefits.(51, 52)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Jordan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on Child Labor	Formulate new policies, amend legislation as necessary, and oversee the implementation of child labor policies, including the National Framework to Combat Child Labor. Led by the Ministry of Labor, members include three other ministries, plus international and civil society organizations.(55)
National Committee for the Prevention of Human Trafficking	Coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking. Chaired by the Ministry of Justice. Other members include representatives from 10 state agencies, including the Counter Trafficking Unit in charge of human trafficking investigations.(54)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Framework to Combat Child Labor	Outlines the roles and responsibilities of key government agencies, including the ministries of Education, Labor, and Social Development; NGOs; and other stakeholders involved in identifying and responding to cases of child labor. Based on the Framework, Ministry of Labor inspectors monitor child labor and refer cases to the ministries of Social Development and Education for the provision of services.(56) In 2016, the Framework was rolled out in all remaining governorates in the country.(57)
Jordan Response Plan for the Syria Crisis (2016–2018)†	Integrates a refugee-based humanitarian response with a resilience response for local communities in areas such as education and social protection.(36) In academic year 2016–2017, a total of 125,000 Syrian refugee children were enrolled in formal education and an additional 67,000 in non-formal education.(32)
Plan of Action to Eliminate Child Labor in Tourism in Petra	Employs counselors to respond to children at risk of truancy, raise children's awareness of the hazards of child labor and the significance of education, incorporate child labor prevention strategies into mainstream programs for legally employed children age 16 and older, and inform students about high-quality employment in the tourism sector.(58)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Moving Towards a Child Labor-Free Jordan (2010–2016)	$4.04 million USDOL-funded, 6-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to establish a coordinating mechanism on child labor issues and facilitate government implementation of the National Framework to Combat Child Labor. In 2016, the project assisted in conducting the National Child Labor Survey and publishing the summary report, held a regional stakeholder meeting on best practices to address child labor, redesigned the National Child Labor Database, and developed a user manual and training package for the database.(57) For additional information, please visit our Web site .
Ministry of Social Development, Child Labor Unit†	Support children engaged in child labor, return them to school, and provide services to their families; provide vocational training for youth; organize training on child labor for families; and maintain the Web site of the National Child Labor Database, which serves as the national child labor monitoring system.(59)
Child Begging Assistance†	Ministry of Social Development's shelter in Madaba that provides social services to children engaged in begging.(24) The ministry conducts awareness raising for parents and links this to financial aid that the family receives.(33)

Program	Description
Non-Formal Education Centers†	Operated by the Ministry of Education and local NGO Questscope, and funded by USAID and UNICEF, these centers throughout the country seek to bring school dropouts, including those engaged in or at risk of child labor, back into the educational system. Children attend classes 3 hours a day in a flexible learning environment, with class sizes of around 20 students and specially trained teachers.(33, 34) Targets children ages 13 and older. Upon completion of the curriculum, students receive a certificate indicating equivalency to a 10th-grade education.(34) One center in Petra provides educational services to children at risk of child labor in the tourism industry in Petra.(47, 60) In 2016, 28 new centers were opened, and a total of 4,000 students received services.(33)
Social Support Center in Marka†	$350,000 Ministry of Labor-funded center operated in cooperation with the ILO. Activities include identifying child laborers, providing services such as non-formal education, and assisting families in finding alternate forms of supplemental income.(24)
National Aid Fund†	Under the Ministry of Social Development, pays families approximately $50 a month through a conditional cash transfer program for withdrawing a child from the labor market and re-enrolling the child in school.(47)

† Program is funded by the Government of Jordan.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(61, 62)

Although Jordan has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs does not fully address the extent of the problem, including in agriculture, construction, and street vending.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Jordan (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 into non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Publish information about the number of inspections at worksites or by desk reviews and the number of penalties collected for child labor violations.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that Ministry of Labor inspectors have the resources needed to carry out inspections in the agricultural sector, and ensure that regulations are issued to mandate labor inspections in agriculture.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that refugee children identified during labor inspections are referred to social services and are not taken to Azraq refugee camp and separated from their families.	2016
	Publish information about training provided to criminal investigators, the number of prosecutions, and the number of convictions for the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Continue to expand access to education for all children.	2013 – 2016
	Institute programs to address the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, construction, and street vending.	2013 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age

- to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Kazakhstan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a Plan of Action on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and carried out targeted child labor inspection raids, resulting in 45,000 site visits. It also carried out awareness-raising campaigns that reached over 1.2 million children. However, children in Kazakhstan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in harvesting cotton and commercial sexual exploitation. The Government lacks a program to address child labor in harvesting cotton, as well as current, comprehensive, and detailed research on child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Kazakhstan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in harvesting cotton and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Kazakhstan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.2 (79,690)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	90.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	3.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		109.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2016, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including producing vegetables, weeding, collecting worms, and harvesting cotton† (1-3, 9-16)
Industry	Construction,† activities unknown (3, 15)
Services	Work in markets and on the streets, including transporting and selling items (3, 14, 15, 17-19)
	Domestic work (3, 20)
	Working in gas stations (17, 20)
	Car washing (3, 15, 17-20)
	Working as bus conductors (3, 21)
	Working in restaurants† as waiters (17, 18, 20, 22)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking (3-6)
	Forced begging as a result of human trafficking (4, 6)
	Forced labor in agriculture, domestic work, and construction, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

There is limited evidence that children from the neighboring countries of Uzbekistan and the Kyrgyz Republic migrate with their families to work in the cotton fields in Kazakhstan.(1, 23) There is no current, comprehensive research on child labor in Kazakhstan.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Kazakhstan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Kazakhstan's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

[‡] Age calculated based on available information

According to Article 26.1(2) of the Labor Code, protections, such as the minimum age of employment and prohibitions on hazardous work, are not extended to children engaged in non-contractual employment.(29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Health and Social Development, Committee on Labor, Social Protection and Migration	Enforce child labor laws and manage child labor cases at the province—or oblast —level.(21, 31)
Ministry of Education and Science	Receive child labor complaints and determine if law enforcement should investigate cases. Mediate cases of child labor in the agricultural sector and encourage parents to keep their children in school.(31) An official from the oblast -level Department of Education responds to reports of child labor and determines whether law enforcement should investigate the case. If the case is in agriculture, local officials meet with parents and school officials to reinforce that children should be at school during the academic year.(3) The Ministry of Education and Science's Center for the Adaptation of Minors provides assistance to child victims of the worst forms of child labor, receives reports of child labor through its hotline, and makes referrals to appropriate government services or NGOs for further assistance.(32-34)
Ministry of Internal Affairs	Investigate criminal cases of the worst forms of child labor and train police in investigating the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation.(32, 35) The Anti-Trafficking Unit of the Criminal Police Department identifies and investigates cases of child trafficking.(31) Receive reports of child labor through its hotline and make referrals to services.(34)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Kazakhstan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

[‡] Data are from January 1 to September 30, 2016.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Kazakhstan's workforce, which includes over 9 million workers.(41) According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 20,000 workers in transitional economies, Kazakhstan should employ about 450 inspectors.(21, 42, 43)

The President's Decree No. 757 prohibited announced labor inspections.(44) Labor inspectors at the Ministry of Health and Social Development can conduct unannounced inspections only if they have evidence of labor violations or in response to complaints.(3)

Kazakhstan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Ministry of Education and Science, in cooperation with other government agencies, carried out targeted raids in areas in which children were likely to be engaged in child labor, such as local markets, gas stations, construction sites, bus stations, and nightclubs. The raids were part of an annual Twelve Days Against Child Labor and quarterly Children at Night Time campaigns to detect child labor, including its worst forms.⁽³⁾ The raids resulted in about 45,000 site visits cumulatively. As a result of such raids, 31 child laborers were identified.⁽³⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Kazakhstan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, the Ministry of Internal Affairs' Legal Academy in the city of Karaganda and the Judicial Training Institute of the Supreme Court in the capital city of Astana held human trafficking trainings for 166 judges and 133 police officers. The Anti-Trafficking Unit employed 42 officers.⁽³⁾

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The Institute of the Ombudsman for Children Rights	Control and monitor observance of the rights of children; receive and respond to complaints about violations of children's rights.
National Coordination Council on Child Labor	Implement the Plan of Action on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor, adopted in 2016. ⁽⁴⁵⁾ Chaired by the Minister of Health and Social Development, includes representatives from four government agencies and NGOs. ⁽²¹⁾
Interagency Trafficking in Persons Working Group	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking and recommend improvements to anti-human-trafficking legislation, prevention strategies, protection of victims, and prosecution of offenders. ⁽⁴⁶⁾ Chaired by the Ministry of Internal Affairs and the Ministry of Healthcare and Social Development on a 2-year rotational basis. Its members include 14 state bodies, 2 international organizations, and 5 NGOs. In 2016, the Working Group continued to implement the Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking (2015–2017). ⁽³⁾
Committee for the Protection of Child Rights	Work to protect children from exploitation. Operate under the Ministry of Education and Science at the oblast -level departments of education. ⁽³¹⁾ Met twice in 2016. ⁽³⁾

In 2016, the Government established the Institute of the Ombudsman for Children Rights to monitor observance of the rights of children, receive and respond to complaints about violation of children's rights; but it is unclear whether it addressed child labor.⁽³⁶⁾

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Plan of Action on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2016–2017) [†]	Addresses four priority areas: (1) child labor policy and legislation improvement, implementation, and monitoring, including the rights of children of migrants and seasonal workers and their access to education, and developing the list of light work for children ages 14–16 years; (2) child labor coordination between Government agencies, including monitoring access to education for children of migrant and seasonal workers, reporting on implementation of international conventions on the worst forms of child labor, and developing regional social partnership on elimination of child labor; (3) prevention of child labor and rehabilitation of child laborers, including identifying and referring children to Centers for Adaptation and monitoring implementation of ministerial orders on employment opportunities for youth over age 16 from dysfunctional or low-income families; and (4) promotion of public awareness on child labor, conduct of informational campaigns, and involvement of journalists and media resources.(36)
Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking (2015–2017)	Aims to strengthen coordination among Government ministries and with foreign governments and international organizations. Emphasizes victim assistance and prevention, specifically to prevent child labor in the production of cotton and construction, to provide access to education for children of stateless and foreign individuals permanently living in Kazakhstan, to monitor and exchange data on the trafficking of children and child pornography, and to enforce criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.(47) In 2016, the Interagency Trafficking in Persons Working Group took actions to implement this policy, including conducting raids to detect and investigate cases of child labor, training criminal law enforcement officials, raising public awareness on child labor, including its worst forms, and providing services to victims of child trafficking.(3)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Assistance to Trafficking Victims [†]	Provides medical and legal assistance, pretrial safe houses, security services, housing, food, clothing, and transportation to trafficking victims. Authorities can help victims or witnesses change residences, find employment, or change their physical appearance.(48) In 2016, Government-funded shelters provided services to child victims of human trafficking.(3)
Awareness-Raising Campaigns [†]	The Ministry of Education and Science, in cooperation with other Government agencies, carried out child labor awareness-raising campaigns that reached 1.2 million children, plus 200,000 adults, through conferences, meetings, competitions, and media reports.(3)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Kazakhstan.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(49)

Although the Government of Kazakhstan implemented programs to combat human trafficking and provide assistance to trafficking victims in 2016, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in child labor, particularly in the production of cotton.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions and hazardous work prohibitions apply to all children, including those working without a signed employment contract.	2016
Enforcement	Publish information about the funding of the inspectorate and the number of inspections at worksites or by desk review.	2015 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO recommendation.	2014 – 2016
	Resume routine labor inspections to enforce child labor laws, particularly targeting cotton fields and other areas where children are employed.	2013 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Conduct research to gather comprehensive data on child labor, including the activities carried out by children working in the construction and services industries, to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2016
	Institute programs to address child labor, particularly in the production of cotton.	2014 – 2016

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
43. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Kenya

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Kenya made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Kenya's parliament passed the National Policy on the Elimination of Child Labor. In addition, the Kenyan police established a new Child Protection Unit to investigate cases of child exploitation such as commercial sexual exploitation. The Government also participated in social programs to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Kenya engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation. Kenya has yet to ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography. In addition, the age gap between the compulsory education age and the minimum age for work leaves children vulnerable to child labor, as they are not required to attend school at age 14 but cannot legally work until age 16. The Government has also not committed sufficient resources for enforcement efforts.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Kenya engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Kenya.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Kenyan children are subjected to trafficking inside the country, typically by family or friends, to perform domestic work, agriculture work, and street vending.(33, 36) Children in Kenya scavenge dumpsites and streets for scrap material, including metal and glass.(8, 14, 16) These children earn about $1–$2 per day, while often risking injury and exposing themselves to infectious diseases, such as tetanus, by sorting through waste. Evidence suggests that such children are also exposed to mercury due to e-waste recycling and gold mining.(8) Reports also indicate that children ages 10–17 mine or harvest sand and work in Busia, Homa Bay, Kilifi, Kitui, Machakos, and Nakuru counties, increasing their likelihood of developing aggravated asthma, lung or heart disease, and cancer.(1, 22, 23, 37-39) The commercial sexual exploitation of children, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, is also a problem in Kenya, especially in the cities of Eldoret, Kisumu, Nairobi, Nyeri, and in coastal areas.(8, 14, 16, 30, 31, 33) The majority of children who are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation are girls, but boys are also involved.(8, 14)

Kenyan law mandates free education and prohibits schools from charging tuition fees. However, the cost of unofficial school fees, books, and uniforms prevent some children from attending school.(18, 23, 40-43) The Births and Deaths Registration Act mandates birth registration, but many children living in rural areas are not registered at birth. As a result, nonregistered children have difficulty accessing services such as education because they must provide a birth certificate before enrolling in school or sitting for exams.(14, 44-46) Teacher and school shortages further hinder children's access to education.(4) Teachers sexually abusing children also negatively affect school attendance. In addition, in isolated cases, some school administrators deny pregnant girls admittance to schools.(14, 47, 48) The last national child labor survey was conducted in 2000.(7) As a result, data may no longer reflect the current child labor situation in Kenya.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Kenya has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Kenya has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, although commercial sexual exploitation of children continues to be a problem in Kenya.

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Kenya's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

* No conscription (55)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (56, 57)

Under Kenyan law, children working without a formal contract are not afforded minimum age protections.(43, 49) The Government has reported that children are required to attend school only until age 14, making children ages 14–15 vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to attend school but cannot legally work.(56, 57)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Ministry of Labor, Social Security and Services (MLSSS)	Enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor, through county labor officers in Kenya's 47 counties.(8, 58, 59) Through its Child Labor Division, coordinate activities to eliminate child labor.(8) Coordinate services provided to children, ensure that child protection activities are being implemented countrywide, and maintain records on children and the services provided to them.(8)
National Police Service	Enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(8) Includes an Anti-Trafficking Police Unit focused on prevention of commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities. Tourism Police Unit addresses commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism industry.(60) In 2016, launched a police unit dedicated to the fight against commercial sexual exploitation of children.(5)
Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions	Enforce laws through the prosecution of criminal offenses, including labor-related offenses.(4)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Kenya took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Kenya's workforce, which includes over 18 million workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Kenya should employ roughly 1,244 labor inspectors.(61-63) Reports also suggest that the Ministry of Labor, Social Security and Services budget is inadequate and hampers the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(5, 8, 64) Labor inspectors cannot issue fines or penalties but can send a compliance letter to an employer that dictates how much time the employer has to correct the violation.(5) The Government operates an emergency, toll-free, nationwide child hotline to report child abuse, including child labor, and refers callers to organizations for social protection services.(8, 65, 66) In 2016, research found no information about the number of calls received concerning the worst forms of child labor.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Kenya took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

* The Government does not publish this information.

In 2016 the Kenyan police, in collaboration with the UK National Crime Agency, established a Child Protection Unit to address child exploitation, – including child labor – due to a number of high-profile cases of UK citizens committing sexual offenses against Kenyan children. The unit so far has protected 150 children and is currently pursuing 15 cases against child sex offenders.(5)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Oversee efforts to eliminate child labor.(8) Comprises government agencies, private employers, workers' organizations, and civil society organizations. Chaired by the Permanent Secretary, with coordination duties performed by the MLSSS Child Labor Division.(27)
National Council for Children's Services	Coordinate quarterly government efforts on child-related issues, including child labor.(8) Operate the National Children Database, which collects comprehensive data on children, including data on child labor.(8) Led by a presidential appointee. Comprises 18 NGOs, private sector representatives, faith-based organizations, and representatives from various ministries.
National Labor Board	Advise the Cabinet Secretary of Labor, Social Security, and Services on all issues related to labor and employment, including legal and policy issues.(27)
Counter-Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee	Coordinate the implementation of policies related to human trafficking and provide prevention and protection services to victims. Mandated by the Counter-Trafficking in Persons Act.(53) Comprises multiple government agencies, private employers, workers' organizations, and civil society organizations.(36)
Local, Advisory, and District Child Labor Committees	Coordinate activities to eliminate child labor at the local level.(8)

Although the Government has coordination mechanisms, research could not find information about their accomplishments during the year.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Policy on the Elimination of Child Labor (2016)	Proposes strategies to prevent, identify, withdraw, rehabilitate, and reintegrate children involved in child labor, including its worst forms.(67)
National Plan of Action Against Sexual Exploitation of Children in Kenya (2013–2017)	Aims to prevent, protect, and reintegrate child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Emphasizes identifying children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation; raising the awareness of community leaders, parents, and tourism employees on commercial sexual exploitation; and implementing programs to assist victims.(66)
Framework for the National Child Protection System for Kenya (2011)	Describes the laws and policies that protect children from violence and exploitation, and the roles and responsibilities of the Government to protect children from exploitative work.(68)
County Integrated Development Plan	Serves as a guide for a county's development planning processes. Required of all 47 counties in Kenya.(69) For example, the plan addresses child labor on coffee and tea estates in Kiambu County and the issue of street children in Turkana County. (70, 71)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(72)

The National Plan of Action Against Sexual Exploitation of Children in Kenya did not include a corresponding budget.(66) Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to be integrated into the UN Development Assistance Framework, Policy for Alternative Provision of Basic Education and Training, Kenya National Social Protection Policy, and the National Education Sector Support Program.(5, 73, 74)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Projects to Combat Child Labor and Increase Education Access [†]	Government programs that aim to combat child labor, including its worst forms, such as commercial sexual exploitation of children and child trafficking. Child Protection and Rescue Centers temporarily house child victims and provide counseling and reintegration services for children; Kitui County Child Rescue Center, which withdraws and rehabilitates child laborers, provides counseling and life skills training. An NGO estimated that 600,000 street children live in Nairobi County. Government commissioned $2 million to build a residence to house street children.(5) School Meals Program has served 1.5 million vulnerable children, resulting in improved school attendance.(4, 8, 75, 76)
National Safety Net Program for Results [†]	$411 million, government-funded, 5-year cash transfer and social safety net program, with support from the World Bank, benefitted 353,000 households by assisting families of working children, orphans, and vulnerable children to meet their basic needs and pay for school-related costs. Budget allocation of $87 million for 2015–2016. (4, 8, 27, 76)
USDOL-Funded Projects to Combat Child Labor and Support Youth Apprenticeships	USDOL-funded projects to combat child labor and support youth apprenticeships. Includes $15.9 million Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2016), implemented by ILO in approximately 40 countries, including Kenya; $3 million Better Utilization of Skills for Youth (BUSY) Through Quality Apprenticeships (2016–2019)*; and $1.4 million Promoting Apprenticeship as a Path for Youth Employment in Kenya Through Global Apprenticeship Network (GAN) National Networks (2016–2018). * Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
UN Agency Implemented Projects	Strengthening Human Security in Turkana, a program lead by ILO and in collaboration with the Government to improve human security issues in Turkana that resulted in withdrawing 1,215 children from child labor. Refugee Assistance Program, a UNICEF-implemented program, provided educational and nutritional services to 320,250 children. Regional Counter-Trafficking Project, an IOM-implemented program, combats human trafficking through prevention, protection, and support for victims.(77-79)
Child Labor Free Supply Chain Certifications	Government program supported by an NGO, CESVI, develops child labor-free supply chain certifications.(8, 80)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Kenya.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(4, 79, 81-83)

Although Kenya has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, especially the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
62. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
63. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Kiribati made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government provided employers, workers, and government officials with training on the new Employment and Industrial Relations Code and Occupational Safety and Health Act. Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Kiribati perform dangerous tasks in construction and street vending. Existing laws do not identify hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children. The Government has not established a coordinating mechanism or adopted a national policy to combat the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Kiribati perform dangerous tasks in construction and street vending.⁽¹⁾ Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Kiribati. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		112.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.⁽²⁾
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.⁽³⁾

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cutting toddy palm trees for toddy (1)
	Fishing and harvesting clams (1)
Services	Construction, portering, and seafaring (1, 4)
	Street vending and working in kava bars (1, 4, 5)
	Domestic work (4)

Although education is free and compulsory for all children until age 16, children face barriers to accessing education due to associated costs and the lack of schools in remote areas.^(1, 4, 6)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Kiribati has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Kiribati's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Kiribati has not identified by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The Employment and Industrial Relations Code does not specify the activities and hours of work per week that are acceptable for children engaged in light work, or the conditions under which light work can be undertaken.(7) Kiribati's laws prohibiting child trafficking are insufficient because they do not specifically prohibit trafficking children domestically.(7, 10)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Resources Development	Enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor.(13)
Kiribati Police Force	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Investigate cases of human trafficking and sexual exploitation of children through a special Domestic Violence and Sexual Offenses Unit.(14)
Child Protection Officer, Ministry of Women, Youth and Social Affairs (MWYSA)	Remove children from harmful situations, including as a result of sexual exploitation and harsh or exploitative labor.(13, 15)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Kiribati took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The Ministry of Labor has no dedicated labor inspectors, but it has seven labor officers, six of whom are based in the capital city, Tarawa, and are tasked with conducting inspections.(13, 14) There are not enough officers to provide inspection services.(13)

In 2016, the Government trained about 50 employers, workers, and government officials on the new Employment and Industrial Relations Code and Occupational Safety and Health Act.(16)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Kiribati took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
Children, Young People, and Families Welfare System Policy	Focuses on strengthening the welfare system, in part by implementing services to prevent the abuse, violence, neglect, and exploitation of children and young people, including in hazardous labor.(19) During the reporting period, trainings for welfare officers were conducted and outreach programs on counseling and parenting were provided to improve parent, caregiver, and community skills to create an environment that protects children from violence, abuse, and exploitation.

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(20, 21)

Although the Government has adopted the Children, Young People, and Families Welfare System Policy, research found no evidence of a policy that focuses on combating the worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Pacific Sub-Regional Child Labor and Trafficking Program	ILO-supported program that expands the work and lessons learned from its TACKLE program in Fiji to Kiribati, Samoa, and Solomon Islands.(4) Activities include facilitating meetings, conducting research, raising awareness, providing trainings, and building government capacity to address child labor.(22)
Safenet [†]	MWYSA-coordinated program that allows government, churches, and NGOs to provide assistance to victims found in exploitative and violent situations.(13)
Hotlines [†]	MWYSA-supported 24-hour hotline for children to report violations, request information, or obtain access to services.(14) Domestic Violence and Sexual Offenses unit operates two 24-hour phone-line services for reporting exploitation and abuse.(23)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Kiribati.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Kiribati (Table 10).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Kosovo

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Kosovo made a significant advancement to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government drafted the Law on Child Protection, which would prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, and reauthorized the Committee for Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor to monitor child labor issues. The Government also increased funding for labor inspections and approved a new policy to improve education access for Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian children. In addition, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor and improving education access for children vulnerable to child labor. However, children in Kosovo engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and street work. Children from minority communities continue to face barriers to accessing education. In addition, the Labor Inspectorate continues to face financial and human resource constraints that impede its ability to conduct inspections in all relevant sectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Kosovo engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and street work.(1-6) A Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS) conducted from 2013 to 2014 determined that 5,398 children in Kosovo were engaged in child labor.(7) A parallel MICS targeting the Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian communities in Kosovo found that 2,168 children from these communities were engaged in child labor.(8) Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	11.7 (324,764)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	95.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	13.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (3, 11)

Industry	Mining, including for coal† (3, 4, 13, 14)
Services	Street work,† including vending small items,† transporting goods,† and begging† (1, 3, 4, 11, 13-15)

	Use in illicit activities (3, 16)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Kosovo is a source and destination country for child trafficking, especially of girls, who are sometimes coerced into forced labor by organized criminal groups.(5, 6, 20) Children from Kosovo and neighboring countries are also subjected to forced begging in Kosovo, with the majority coming from the Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian minority ethnic groups.(1, 4, 6, 20) Ashkali, Egyptian, and Roma children, especially girls, continue to experience difficulty accessing education.(21-23) Birth certification is required for attending school in Kosovo. Some Roma children have challenges obtaining a birth certificate, which makes school enrollment difficult.(23-26) Children out of school are vulnerable to engage in the worst forms of child labor.

In addition, non-state armed groups, such as the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS), recruited parents, along with their children, from Kosovo for use in armed conflict in Syria.(27, 28)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Kosovo has ratified no key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	N/A
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A
 UN CRC	N/A
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	N/A
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	N/A
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	N/A

Kosovo is not a UN member country; therefore, the Government is not eligible to ratify international conventions concerning child labor. Article 22 of Kosovo's Constitution, however, incorporates the UN CRC into the national legal framework.(29)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Kosovo's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

* No conscription (34)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (35)

The Government approved a draft Law on Child Protection and it was submitted to a standing committee for further action.(36) The draft law would criminalize violence, abuse, exploitation, and neglect of children, including child beggars, and would prohibit the use of children in illicit activities.(5, 36)

The Criminal Code does not specifically prohibit recruitment of children ages 16 and 17 by non-state armed groups.(32)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role

Through regional SWCs address child labor, provide social services, and compile cases into a nationwide database.(3) Through the Department of Social Welfare, remove children engaged in hazardous child labor.(13)
Kosovo Police (KP)	Enforce criminal laws on forced child labor and commercial sexual exploitation of children. Through the Directorate of Trafficking in Human Beings, enforce laws on child trafficking.(3, 37) Operate under the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MOIA).(4)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce criminal laws on forced child labor, child trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(37)

In 2016, Social Work Centers (SWCs) reported 61 cases of children working on the street and 53 children were taken off the streets, offered healthcare services, and returned to their families.⁽⁴⁾ In total, 18 children were referred to SWCs, of which 13 were victims of commercial sexual exploitation, 3 were in forced begging, and 2 were victims of forced labor in restaurants.⁽⁴⁾

Despite repeated requests by the Labor Inspectorate (LI) to increase personnel, the number of labor inspectors has remained the same since its inception in 2002.⁽⁴⁾ Although there was an increase in funding in 2016, the LI noted that it lacked institutional capacity and financial and material resources to address child labor, in both the formal and informal sectors, and was unable to expand unannounced inspections.⁽⁴⁾ The lack of child labor violations detected by the LI in 2016 is likely related to these gaps in institutional capacity.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Kosovo took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

* The Government does not publish this information.

The Kosovo Police (KP) includes 55 human trafficking investigators, 4 which are dedicated to child trafficking. In 2016, 14 investigators were trained on child abuse, investigative skills, and international legislation on child exploitation.(4, 19) The Government also organized roundtables on human trafficking, including child begging, to create greater awareness and prevention.(5) However, legal training on human trafficking for prosecutors and judges was insufficient, causing ineffective prosecutions and incorrect legal application.(4, 5, 39) In addition, better supervision of trafficking in persons (TIP) cases and specialization of prosecutors and judges is needed in order to reduce case backlog.(5)

While there was proactive screening of populations vulnerable to trafficking, a source noted that foreign forced beggars were not properly screened by the SWCs and police.(5, 18, 26) In some cases, victims were repatriated to their country of origin without referral to SWCs or police in those countries; the lack of coordination resulted in forced beggars being forcibly returned to Kosovo to beg again.(26) The KP do not systematically track whether children involved in child labor are referred to providers of social services as a result of investigations.(26, 37)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Committee for Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor (KKPEPF)	Coordinate government policies to combat child labor, oversee and provide policy guidance for activities to prevent and eliminate child labor. Comprises representatives of government agencies, the KP, trade unions, and an NGO.(13) In 2016, met to discuss a new National Strategy and Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor for 2017.(40) During the reporting period, the Government reauthorized the KKPEPF to monitor child labor issues.(4, 41)
Child Labor Monitoring System (CLMS)	Address child labor at the municipal level, identify and provide child services, document child labor trends, and evaluate local responses to child labor.(3)
National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons (NAATIP)	Coordinate policy implementation, monitor and report on actions to combat child trafficking through a National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator.(2, 42, 43) Chaired by MOIA. Includes representatives from the Government, NGOs, and international community.(4) In 2016, discussed anti-TIP initiatives and coordination in monthly meetings.(5)
Municipal Local Action Committees	Prevent and eliminate child labor and report to the CLMS. Members include school representatives, municipal education departments, and the KP.(13, 25)

In late 2013, the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MLSW) began using new software to collect and process data on labor violations, and to make these data available to all ministries and law enforcement bodies.(3) During the reporting period, however, the Child Labor Monitoring System continued to lack quality data analysis and there was unsatisfactory data sharing between municipal authorities and the MLSW.(4, 43)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy and Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor (2011–2016)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Kosovo, with a focus on prevention and withdrawal of children from the worst forms of child labor, protection of young workers, and gender concerns.(44) The Government did not increase funding for activities in 2016.(4, 26)
National Strategy and Action Plan Against Trafficking in Persons (2015–2019)	Aims to prevent and combat human trafficking by awareness-raising, victim identification, and strengthening criminal law enforcement.(45, 46) In 2016, monitored policies, referral mechanisms, and assistance to victims.(5)
Strategy for the Inclusion of Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian Communities (2016–2020)†	Focuses on inclusive education, employment, social issues, healthcare, and housing for Ashkali, Egyptian, and Roma communities. Aims to strengthen rights and full integration into society.(47)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, the 2017–2021 Strategic Development Plan was approved, which includes early TIP identification for labor inspectors. The Government also drafted a list of TIP indicators for victim identification to ensure adequate referral to support services.(5) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Strategy for the Inclusion of Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian Communities. In addition, the Government did not provide sufficient funds for social services for victims of child labor in the National Strategy and Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in 2016.(26)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor*

Program	Description
Kosovo Shelter Coalition and Hope and Homes for Children†	MLSW-funded coalition of NGOs that provide shelter to victims of human trafficking, domestic violence, and at-risk youth.(20) Continued to operate in 2016, but funding was insufficient.(4, 5)
Social Inclusion and Improvement of Living Conditions for Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptians, and Other Vulnerable Groups (2013–2016)†	Government and foreign donor-funded project implemented by Terre des Hommes.(48) Focused on improving the lives of minority communities through advocacy, housing, education, and employment. Based on the Government's Strategy for the Integration of Ashkali, Egyptian, and Roma communities.(48) In 2016, the project was active and started a new phase.(4)
UN Common Development Plan (2016–2020)*	Funded and programmed by UN Kosovo Team. Focuses on international standards and human rights safeguards of migrants and the social protection and educational inclusion of Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian communities.(49)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Kosovo.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(4, 5, 18, 50)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Kyrgyz Republic

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Kyrgyz Republic made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the Interagency Action Plan on Measures to Prevent the Involvement of Children in the Worst Forms of Child Labor. The Bishkek Mayor's Office also began funding evening remedial classes for thousands of child laborers. However, children in the Kyrgyz Republic engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities. Research indicates that the State Inspectorate on Ecological and Technical Safety did not conduct inspections to ensure compliance with legal minimum age protections. The compulsory education age also remained lower than the minimum age to work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Kyrgyz Republic engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Kyrgyz Republic.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	33.9 (397,407)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	86.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	41.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		105.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from National Child Labor Survey, 2014.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cultivating cotton, tobacco, [†] rice, potatoes, sugar beets, and wheat (4, 9-16) Raising cattle and sheep (4, 12-14, 16)
Industry	Coal mining [†] (4, 13-15, 17) Brick making (4, 13, 14, 16) Construction, including lifting and portering construction materials, and cutting metal sheets for roofs (4, 14, 16, 17)
Services	Working in bazaars, including loading and unloading goods, portering, collecting plastic bottles and garbage, and selling items, including food and newspapers (1, 3, 9, 11, 15, 16, 18-21) Washing cars (1, 11, 16) Working in restaurants and cafes, including serving food and washing dishes (9, 13, 16, 22) Street work, including begging and shoe shining (1, 2, 13) Domestic work, including child care (2, 3, 10, 15)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Forced labor in raising cattle and sheep, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 15)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-5)
	Use in illicit activities, including trafficking drugs as a result of human trafficking (5, 6)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Hazardous child labor is most prevalent in the oblasts (provinces) of Naryn and Osh.(17) There is limited evidence that some children migrate with their families to work in the cotton fields in Kazakhstan.(23) Some parents migrate to work in Kazakhstan, Russia, or other areas of the country and leave their children behind, oftentimes without birth certificates and guardianship documents. As a result, some of these children cannot enroll in school and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(9, 13, 18, 24) While the number of ethnic Lyuli, a subgroup of the Roma people living in Central Asia in the Kyrgyz Republic is low (approximately 3,500), many children from this community do not attend school and are vulnerable to child labor.(6, 18, 25) Children with disabilities and those living and working on the street also have difficulty accessing education.(4, 18, 20) Schools requiring residence registration, known as propiska, for enrollment may also hinder access to education; however, according to the Ministry of Education and Science, residence registration is not mandatory.(3, 4, 10)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Kyrgyz Republic has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the Kyrgyz Republic's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	16	Article 18 of the Labor Code (26)

According to Article 6 of the Labor Code, protections, such as the minimum age of employment and prohibitions on hazardous work, are not extended to children engaged in non-contractual employment.(26) Most incidences of child labor occur in employment relationships in which the child has no signed employment contract with the employer.(9, 12)

Although the Kyrgyz Republic has ratified the Palermo Protocol, which necessitates waiving requirements related to the use of force, deception, or fraud for child victims of human trafficking, both the Law on Preventing and Combating Human Trafficking and the Criminal Code require these elements during the human trafficking process.(30, 31) The Government drafted a revised list of hazardous work for children in 2011, which remained under review.(16, 34)

Children in the Kyrgyz Republic are required to attend school only until grade nine, which is typically until they reach age 14 or 15.(9, 10, 35) This standard makes children ages 14 and 15 vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to be in school, but they also are not yet legally permitted to work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
State Inspectorate on Ecological and Technical Safety	Monitor work sites and refer child laborers to social services. Coordinate with the Inspectorate for Minors' Affairs in the Ministry of Internal Affairs, the Prosecutor General's Office, and regional State District Administration authorities to enforce child labor laws.(36)
Ministry of Internal Affairs, Inspectorate for Minors' Affairs	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor, including its worst forms; conduct independent inspections and joint raids with the State Inspectorate on Ecological and Technical Safety to find neglected or abused children; and refer children to social institutions for care.(36)
Prosecutor General's Office	Enforce and apply labor-related laws, including labor inspections and investigations of child labor violations, in coordination with the State Inspectorate on Ecological and Technical Safety.(36, 37)
Oblast Administration	Enforce child labor laws at the oblast level.(36)
Ministry of Labor and Social Development	Serve as the key government agency for children's issues. Charged with protecting children and families in difficult conditions, including child laborers.(6) Coordinate with oblast -level authorities to investigate violations of child labor laws.(38)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in the Kyrgyz Republic took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of the Kyrgyz Republic's workforce, which includes over 2.7 million workers.⁽⁴¹⁾ According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 20,000 workers in transitioning economies, the Kyrgyz Republic should employ roughly 132 labor inspectors.^(20, 42, 43) The State Inspectorate on Ecological and Technical Safety acknowledged that the number of labor inspectors was inadequate to ensure appropriate enforcement of child labor laws.⁽²⁰⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Kyrgyz Republic took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The UN special rapporteur on the sale of children, child sex trafficking, and child pornography documented allegations of law enforcement officials' complicity in human trafficking in a 2013 report; police officers allegedly threatened, extorted, and raped child sex trafficking victims. However, the government has never investigated the allegations from this report, nor did it report the investigation, prosecution, or convictions of government employees complicit in human trafficking offenses.(44)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Coordination Council for Social Protection and Children's Rights	Develop policies to eliminate child labor.(34) Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister, members include representatives from four ministries, including Labor and Social Development.(45, 46) Met quarterly in 2016.(16)
Coordination Council on Migration*	Monitor and combat trafficking in persons as a key priority. Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister for Social Issues, members include representatives from the Office of the President, Government ministries, international organizations, and NGOs.(47) Met three times in 2016, with one session devoted to human trafficking, aimed at improving Government coordination on this issue.(47)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor†

Policy	Description
Interagency Action Plan on Measures to Prevent the Involvement of Children in the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2016–2018)†	Aims to address the worst forms of child labor by identifying children at risk of child labor, including those in difficult living conditions; providing social services; conducting awareness-raising campaigns, including seminars for social pedagogues and forums for children and their parents on hazardous work; sharing experiences and best practices with international organizations and NGOs; and creating a manual on child protection for labor inspectors.(16, 48)
Regulations on the Procedure for the Identification of Children and Families in Difficult Conditions	Establishes the process for identifying children in difficult living conditions, including those engaged in the worst forms of child labor. Receives complaints, conducts outreach activities, devises an individual action plan, removes the child from the worst forms of child labor, and provides financial and educational services.(40) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
National Program Against Human Trafficking and Action Plan for the Implementation of the Program (2013–2016)	Aims to provide protection to children at risk of becoming victims of labor, criminal, or commercial sexual exploitation.(36) Was not implemented during 2016.(5)

‡ The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(36)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the National Education Strategy and Roadmap on Out-of-School Children.(35, 49)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Combating Child Labor in Central Asia -Commitment Becomes Action (PROACT CAR Phase III) (2010–2018)	$4.57 million Government of Germany-funded project implemented by the ILO to mainstream child labor issues into national policies and legislation, build the capacity of stakeholders, and provide direct services to children withdrawn from the worst forms of child labor.(49, 50) In 2016, supported the adoption of the Interagency Action Plan on Measures to Prevent the Involvement of Children in the Worst Forms of Child Labor and the integration of child labor issues into other policies.(51)
Evening Classes for Child Laborers [‡]	ILO and Ministry of Education and Science project to provide evening classes to secondary school students in districts with high numbers of child laborers. Includes weekly or biweekly family consultations with social workers who observe the children and provide parents with information about hazardous work activities for children.(52) Although the ILO stopped funding the classes in Bishkek and Osh in 2016, Bishkek's Mayor's Office provided funding for the schools in Bishkek, while evening classes in Osh were on hold.(16) In Bishkek, one school began offering remedial classes to thousands of child laborers.(53)
Social Support for Children and Families in Difficult Living Conditions [†]	Government-funded program to monitor places where children may be working, with a primary focus on bazaars, and to return these children to school.(38) Research did not find information about the number of children assisted in 2016.
Cash Transfer Program [†]	Cash transfer program for families living in difficult conditions, including families with children engaged in child labor.(34) Research did not find information about the number of children assisted in 2016.(16)
Ministry of Education and Science National School Attendance Database [†]	Ministry of Education and Science project to pilot national electronic database to track children who do not attend school. Following development and use throughout the country, database information will be shared with the Ministry of Labor and Social Development to assist children engaged in child labor.(10) Will provide information to the Ministry of Internal Affairs on cases of criminal violations of child labor laws. In addition, social pedagogues will also work with families to ensure that children attend school.(10) In 2016, the pilot Database in Bishkek was no longer operational, partially due to pending changes to the definition of out-of-school children.(39)
Awareness-Raising Campaign [†]	Joint campaign of the Ministry of Labor and Social Development and the Ministry of Education and Science to raise awareness on child labor, called "No to child labor, Yes to quality of education." Consisted of roundtables in 2016.(16)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of the Kyrgyz Republic.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(25, 53)

Although the Kyrgyz Republic has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in cultivating cotton and selling items in bazaars.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
43. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Lebanon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Lebanon made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor released a guide for implementing Decree No. 8987 on hazardous work. The National Steering Committee on Child Labor developed a National Awareness Raising Strategy to increase public awareness and help enforce the hazardous work decree. In addition, the Ministry of Education and Higher Education launched a program to further expand children's access to education. However, children in Lebanon engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation. Labor law enforcement needs further improvement, particularly an increase in resources for personnel and transportation to conduct labor inspections. Programs and services to address the extent of child labor, specifically domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation, remained insufficient.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Lebanon engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced labor in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Lebanon. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Child labor has increased, and its conditions have worsened since the influx of Syrian refugees into Lebanon, affecting Lebanese and Syrian children.(4, 36, 37) As of December 2016, over one million Syrian refugees in Lebanon were registered with UNHCR, and more than half of them were children.(38) Child labor is also prevalent in other refugee communities in Lebanon, including the Palestinian and Iraqi communities.(39)

Some children are subjected to forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(3) In particular, Syrian girls are trafficked into Lebanon for commercial sexual exploitation under the guise of marriage.(3, 20) Some boys are also subject to commercial sexual exploitation, particularly Kurdish boys from Syria.(20) Working on the streets is especially common among refugee children from Syria, including Palestinians from Syria.(25) Syrian children are also subjected to forced labor in agriculture.(3-5, 39) Some Syrian refugee children, with their families, are kept in bonded labor in agriculture in the Bekaa Valley to pay for makeshift dwellings provided by landowners.(4, 5, 32, 36)

UNICEF reported that Lebanese children were involved in armed violence within Lebanon, while some Syrian refugee children joined armed groups and left for Syria to engage in armed conflict.(4)

The Government has waived fees for public primary schools and opened second shifts in about 240 schools.(16) Yet, the public school system in Lebanon lacks the capacity to accommodate the large number of school-age Syrian refugee children.(40) Approximately 250,000 Syrian refugee children in Lebanon, half of the school-age population in this group, are out of school.(16) Barriers to accessing education for Lebanese children include the cost of transportation and supplies.(4) Syrian children face additional barriers, including bullying, corporal punishment, different curriculum in Lebanon than in their country of origin, use of schools by armed groups or as shelters, and fear of passing checkpoints or of violence.(16, 17, 41-44) Likewise, Iraqi refugee children may not be enrolled in school due to school-related costs and discrimination.(45) In Lebanon, many classes are taught in French or English, but Syrian and Iraqi children do not speak these languages.(42, 45) Children who work in agriculture, including Lebanese children, often do not attend school during harvesting and planting seasons.(46, 47)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Lebanon has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Lebanon's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

‡ Age calculated based on available information (39)

Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient because it is not clear that there are criminal penalties for the exaction of forced labor and debt bondage is not criminally prohibited.(50, 55, 56) Government officials clarified that although Article 610 of the Penal Code criminalizes begging, Article 26 of the Delinquent Juveniles Law, which takes precedence over the Penal Code, stipulates that in cases of begging, the child is considered in danger and entitled to receive protective measures.(50, 57, 58) Yet, children engaged in begging have been arrested in a limited number of cases.(25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforce child labor laws through desk review and workplace inspections. Maintain a hotline to receive complaints of child labor. Act as government focal point for child labor issues and host the National Steering Committee on Child Labor.(39, 58, 59)
Internal Security Forces	Enforce laws regarding the worst forms of child labor through the Anti-Human Trafficking and Morals Protection Bureau.(39)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute violations of the Penal Code in coordination with the Internal Security Forces. Maintain general data and statistics on criminal violations involving the worst forms of child labor.(60) Refer at-risk children to shelters and protection services.(39) The Ministry has signed agreements with civil society organizations to provide social workers to the Ministry to oversee court proceedings involving juveniles and deliver services to them, including children engaged in begging.(39)
Ministry of Social Affairs	Refer children identified by the Internal Security Forces and the Ministry of Justice to protective institutions, such as health centers. Refer children to shelters through its Higher Council for Childhood.(39)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Lebanon took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2016, inadequate resources, including necessary transportation and the number of personnel, hamper the Ministry's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(4, 59) Inspections of child labor are either a result of a complaint or response to a case that was observed in the course of other work of inspectors.(4) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Lebanon's workforce, which includes over 1.6 million workers.(63) According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Lebanon should employ about 109 inspectors.(64, 65)

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor, in cooperation with the ILO, launched a Guide on Decree No. 8987 on hazardous work, to help implement the Decree by state agencies, and help private institutions, employers, and workers better understand hazardous work for children.(4, 37) The Government, in cooperation with the ILO, established a child labor monitoring and referral mechanism in Ouzai, the southern suburbs of Beirut, and in Kahale, Mount Lebanon. The orientation and training sessions for this mechanism were held in 2016.(4) The Government, in cooperation with NGOs and the ILO, updated an agreement with the Farmers' Union to not allow Syrian refugee children under age 16 to work in agriculture. UNICEF worked with farmers to allow children to attend school, reduce working hours, and improve working conditions.(4)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Lebanon took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, the Anti-Human Trafficking and Morals Protection Bureau of the Internal Security Forces employed 31 officers responsible for criminal enforcement of child labor laws. The Internal Security Forces provided specialized training for its staff on human trafficking and investigation techniques of cases involving children.(4) Five individuals were prosecuted for the use of children in illicit activities, and five children were referred to social services. Based on available information, at least some of these trials were ongoing at the end of the reporting period.(4)

Some child victims of human trafficking were subject to arrest, detention, and deportation and prosecution for crimes committed as a direct result of being trafficked.(3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Raise awareness; coordinate efforts among Government agencies; establish standard practices; and develop, enforce, recommend changes, and ensure that Government agencies comply with the law.(39) Led by the Minister of Labor, includes representatives from six other ministries and other institutions and international organizations.(4)
National Steering Committee on Trafficking	Coordinate efforts against human trafficking, including child trafficking. Based at the Ministry of Labor and meets on a monthly basis.(58)
UNICEF and UNHCR	Coordinate efforts to address the needs of children affected by the Syrian refugee crisis in Lebanon and maintain interagency standards for child protection. The UN representatives identify crucial concerns, including factors that make children vulnerable to child labor, and make recommendations to the Government on the use of resources, including referral services.(40, 67)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2013–2019)	Establishes strategies for addressing the worst forms of child labor, including improving enforcement of child labor laws and expanding access to education. In 2016, in order to help implement the National Action Plan, the National Steering Committee on Child Labor developed the National Awareness Raising Strategy to increase public awareness, help enforce Decree No. 8987 on hazardous work, and mobilize stakeholders in the private sector and labor unions.(68) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor, in cooperation with UN agencies, drafted an Annex to this National Action Plan, which was extended to 2019. The Annex outlines specific needs of refugee children such as lack of legal documentation and livelihood opportunities for their parents.(4)
Work Plan to prevent and respond to the association of children with armed violence in Lebanon	Provides the framework for the prevention of children involved in armed conflict.(44) In 2016, the Higher Council for Childhood held technical meetings with representatives of the Ministry of Justice and Internal Security Forces to develop procedures for the treatment of children associated with armed conflict.(4)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(58, 69)

In 2015, the Higher Council for Childhood, in cooperation with World Vision, finalized a sectoral action plan on child trafficking, which is still pending ministerial approval.(4)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Tackling Child Labor among Syrian Refugees and Their Host Communities in Jordan and Lebanon (2015–2016)	EU-funded, 1.5-year project, implemented by the ILO to conduct research on the hazards of child labor in certain sectors; build the technical capacity of governments, employers, and workers' organizations to improve referrals and respond to cases of child labor; and provide training on preventing and removing children from child labor and providing services.(70) In 2016, the project worked with the Ministry of Labor and held a workshop for policy-makers to identify ways of addressing child labor in Akkar, North Governorate, particularly children working in agriculture.(71)
Program to Support Children Working on the Street (2014–2016)	Joint UNHCR and International Rescue Committee (IRC) program to identify children engaged in child labor on the street, mitigate risks by providing psychosocial support and emergency services, and track incidents of violence.(39) Between January and June 2016, the program provided 289 children with psychosocial support and basic literacy classes; 59 children were enrolled in second shift schools, and 68 were approved to enter in the Accelerated Learning Program.(4) UNHCR helped in capacity-building of 300 officials of the Directorate of General Security and Lebanese Armed Forces on child protection and vulnerabilities of street children. UNHCR and the IRC also provided training to NGO social workers on the basics of the Lebanese child labor laws.(4)
Child Protection Program	Joint program by UNICEF and the Ministry of Social Affairs. Addresses the worst forms of child labor through interventions, including psychological counseling, raising awareness among employers, and working with employers to decrease working hours for children and to improve working conditions.(27) In 2016, UNICEF and the Ministry collaborated to raise awareness on child labor and its prevention among more than 37,000 children and 42,000 parents and community members. UNICEF also produced storybooks on risks of child labor in agriculture and street work.(4)
USDOL-funded projects for capacity building and research	USDOL projects that aim to build capacity of government law enforcement officials, improve policy implementation, and improve the evidence base on child labor. These projects include the Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (GAP 11) , implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, and the Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR) capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 11 countries.(72, 73) For additional information, please visit our Web site .

Program	Description
Reaching All Children through Education (RACE II) (2017–2021)*	Funded by foreign donors and international NGOs, the Ministry of Education and Higher Education enrolled more than 400,000 Lebanese and refugee children in school during the 2015–2016 academic year.(4) In 2016, The Ministry launched RACE II, in cooperation with UN agencies and other institutions, to expand free access to education for all children in Lebanon ages 3–18. The Ministry and funders will cover the cost of registration, stationary supplies, and books.(74) RACE II aims to register 469,000 children in formal and non-formal education by 2022. For the academic year 2016–2017, 300 schools offered a second shift for non-Lebanese children.(74, 75) The Ministry is developing a policy to allow children who have been outside the formal education system for several years to catch up and reintegrate into formal education, building on the Accelerated Learning Program, piloted in 2015, for basic education (up to grade nine). The Government announced in 2016 that all children would be allowed to take their exams at the end of grade nine to continue on to secondary schools, even if they lack all necessary documentation.(75) Other non-formal education programs include Basic Literacy and Numeracy training and vocational training.(4)
National Poverty Alleviation Program†	Funded by the Government and foreign donors, this Ministry of Social Affairs program pays school tuition and book costs for 74,000 families living in extreme poverty.(39)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Lebanon.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(39, 76, 77)

The scarcity of shelters for child-trafficking victims results in some children being placed in juvenile detention centers.(47) The lack of shelters and resources to effectively handle child labor and trafficking cases puts children at a heightened risk of further exploitation.(32) Although Lebanon has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, including child labor for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
65. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies"; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Lesotho

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Lesotho made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Multi-Sectoral Committee on Combating Trafficking in Persons developed draft victim identification and referral guidelines, drafted standard operating procedures for the guidelines, and built a shelter for victims of human trafficking. However, children in Lesotho continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in herding cattle and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Lesotho's compulsory education age is below the minimum age for work, leaving children between these ages vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The Government also lacks resources for labor law enforcement and social programs to combat child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Lesotho engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in herding cattle and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Lesotho.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	28.1 (124,632)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	80.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	25.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		76.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 2, 2000.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Herding animals, including cattle [†] (1, 6, 7)
	Farming, including planting, applying pesticides, and harvesting (8, 9)
Services	Domestic work (1, 7, 10)
	Street work, including vending, and trading (11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2)
	Use in illicit activities, including burglary and theft (11)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

UNDP reported in 2015 that Lesotho's HIV rate in adults (ages 15–24) is 25 percent. Many children in Lesotho become orphans due to the high rate of HIV among adults.(7, 8, 12-15) Children, mostly HIV orphans driven by poverty, migrate from rural to urban areas to engage in commercial sexual exploitation for survival.(8, 16, 17) In addition, children with disabilities are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor as they encounter difficulties accessing education due to ill-equipped educational facilities and untrained teachers.(18, 19)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Lesotho has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Lesotho's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

* No conscription (20, 28)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (9, 27)

Education is compulsory in Lesotho through age 13, which makes children age 14 particularly vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to be in school and have not reached the minimum age for work.(7, 22) The ILO Committee of Experts urged the Government to collaborate with the Ministry of Education and Training to equate the compulsory education age and the minimum age for work.(7, 29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE)	Enforce child labor laws, including hazardous child labor. Assess compliance with child labor laws as part of general labor inspections.(6)
National Police, Child and Gender Protection Unit (CGPU)	Investigate child labor violations and work in conjunction with MOLE to enforce child labor laws, including those related to hazardous and forced child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and child trafficking.(6)
Public Prosecutor's Office	Prosecute child labor law offenders.(6)
Children's Court	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(6) During the year, there were no prosecutions of child labor cases.

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE) reviewed the Labor Code with the aim of making revisions that would authorize labor inspectors to conduct child labor investigations in the informal sector on private farms and in homes. In 2016, MOLE submitted a report to the ILO on labor, including informal work, in rural sections of the country.(7)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Lesotho took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

According to the ILO standard of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Lesotho should employ approximately 61 inspectors.(32-34) Reports indicate that there is inadequate funding for the labor inspectorate to carry out investigations.(7, 30)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Lesotho took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (7)	Yes (30)

Reports indicate that the National Police Child and Gender Protection Unit receives inadequate or no funding to carry out child labor investigations.(6, 7) During the year, the Government ratified a special permit system with South Africa to allow Basothos to legally work in South Africa as a mechanism to curb human trafficking. The Government also incorporated human trafficking in the primary school curriculum (Standard 7) and held cross-border awareness campaigns with South African officials on identifying and documenting potential trafficking victims.(35)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Program Advisory Committee on Child Labor/National Task Team	Implement the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor. Led by MOLE's Child Labor Unit, the team includes representatives from government ministries, trade unions, NGOs, and international organizations.(6, 16) Met twice during the year.
Multi-Sectoral Committee on Combating Trafficking in Persons	Spearhead anti-trafficking in persons initiatives and approve legislation and policies to prevent human trafficking. Chaired by the Commissioner of Refugees and also includes government ministries; local government members; and representatives from NGOs, international organizations, and faith-based organizations.(36) The committee met during the year and developed draft victim identification and referral guidelines.(3)
District Child Protection Teams	Coordinate child protection matters, including child labor, at the district level. Led by the Ministry of Social Development, the teams include representatives from the Government, private sector, NGOs, and community support groups.(6) Research was unable to determine whether these teams met during the year.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies on Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor (APEC)	Ensures that all major interventions regarding child labor are in place while preventing duplication of efforts. Constitutes a strategic program framework based on existing and planned interventions in relevant social and economic sectors, some linked to other program initiatives.(37)

Policy	Description
National Anti-Trafficking in Persons Strategic Framework and Action Plan	Supports the national and international obligations and commitments by strengthening approaches to protect children against the worst forms of child labor in support of the vision to “eradicate all forms of trafficking in persons in Lesotho, protect victims of trafficking in persons, arrest and successfully prosecute offenders and put in place preventative measures.”(37)
National Policy on Orphans and Vulnerable Children	Safeguards the rights of orphans and vulnerable children to an education, promotes access to apprenticeships and vocational and life skills programs for orphans and vulnerable children, and implements child labor prevention programs.(38)
Lesotho United Nations Development Assistance Framework (2013–2017)	Includes strategies to reduce poverty in Lesotho.(39) Framework promotes education for children, supports youth employment, and builds the Government’s capacity to provide social welfare services to vulnerable children.(39)
Kingdom of Lesotho: Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper—National Strategic Development Plan (2012/2013–2016/2017)	Outlines prevention measures and identifies child protection services (CGPU/police, social welfare, health, and the justice system) and their capacity to respond adequately to cases of violence, abuse, and exploitation of children, including child labor.(40)

In September 2016, the Government released a draft labor policy that proposes harmonizing existing legislation with international labor standards regarding child labor. Although government agencies disseminated information about child labor and human trafficking, research found no information that the Government took meaningful steps to implement the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor.(41) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Sector Strategic Plan.(42)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
ILO Decent Work Country Program (2012–2017)	ILO-funded program supported by MOLE that includes objectives on creating youth employment as a poverty-reduction strategy, establishing social protection coverage for citizens, and facilitating social dialogue among employers and workers.(8)
Orphans and Vulnerable Children (OVC) Scholarships Program†	Government program that pays for tuition, uniforms, supplies, and boarding fees for 15,002 OVCs.(6)

† Program is funded by the Government of Lesotho.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(37)

During 2016, the Government signed an MOU with an NGO, Beautiful Dream Society, to reestablish a shelter for victims of trafficking. The shelter opened in December 2016.(3) Lesotho participated in the Regional Inter-Agency Standing Committee (RIASCO) Action Plan for Southern Africa (December 2016 through April 2017), which resulted in 15 schools (3,750 learners) receiving access to clean water and toilets through the installation of new systems or the rehabilitation of existing systems.(43) Although Lesotho has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Lesotho (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish 15 as the age up to which education is compulsory to match the minimum age for full-time work.	2010 – 2016
Enforcement	Provide adequate funding for labor inspectors and adequate funding and training for criminal investigators to address the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that labor inspections are conducted in all relevant sectors allowed by law to facilitate enforcement of child labor laws.	2014 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO recommendation.	2016
Government Policies	Implement the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor.	2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing youth policies, such as the Education Sector Strategic Plan.	2012 – 2016
Social Programs	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2015 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
33. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Report. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
34. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Liberia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched an awareness project to reduce the use of children for street vending in urban cities, developed a draft National Action Plan to combat the worst forms of child labor, and published data on its law enforcement efforts to address child labor. However, children in Liberia perform dangerous tasks in the production of rubber, and mining gold and diamonds. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work. The Liberia National Police's Women and Children Protection Section and the National Commission on Child Labor continue to lack sufficient resources to conduct investigations and enforce child labor laws. A key gap in the legal framework is that the compulsory education age is lower than the minimum age for work by one year.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Liberia perform dangerous tasks in the production of rubber, and mining gold and diamonds.(1, 2) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work.(1, 3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Liberia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	16.6 (136,340)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	75.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	14.0

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of rubber (1-3, 6-8)
	Production of charcoal (2, 6)
	Farming activities, including production of cocoa, coffee, and cassava (6, 9-11)
Industry	Mining for diamonds† and gold† (3, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13)
	Cutting and crushing stone (1, 2, 7, 10, 12, 14, 15)
	Construction, activities unknown (2, 7, 12)
Services	Domestic work (12, 14)
	Street work, including vending, begging, hawking goods, and carrying heavy loads (1, 6, 7, 16-18)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Use in illicit activities, including selling drugs (12, 19, 20)
	Forced labor in domestic work, street vending, mining, begging, and work on rubber plantations, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 12, 19)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (21)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Liberia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Children trafficked within Liberia are sometimes victims of commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, forced begging, and forced labor in street vending, alluvial diamond mines, and on rubber plantations. Children are also trafficked from Liberia to Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Nigeria, and Sierra Leone.(3, 7) Research found that there is a contrast in child labor activities in rural versus urban communities.(15) Children in rural communities, like Margibi County, engage in rubber tapping and coal burning activities to a greater degree, whereas children in urban cities and surrounding communities, particularly Monrovia and the communities in Montserrado County, crush rocks near deposits.(15) The Government has yet to collect comprehensive data on child labor activities in farming and construction to inform policies and social programs.

Section 9 of the Children's Law mandates free primary education. Many schools, however, continue to charge fees or impose mandatory requirements, like uniforms and supplies, limiting access to education for some children.(6) Barriers to education that may prevent children from attending school and increase their risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor include limited or overcrowded schools and sexual abuse of girls by male teachers in schools.(11, 22-24) Liberian parents are required by law to register their infants within 14 days of birth.(25) Birth registration is technically required in order for parents to enroll their children in school. However, fewer than 5 percent of births are registered. Children who are not enrolled in school are more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(26, 27)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Liberia has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Liberia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Section 74 of the Labor Law (14, 28)

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 3, Section 9 of the Children's Law (29)

* No conscription (36)

Children in Liberia are required to attend school only up to but not including age 15. This standard makes 15-year-old children vulnerable to child labor, because they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work until age 16. Although Section 74 of the Labor Law prohibits employment of children under age 16, the penalty of a fine of $1.18 (100 Liberian dollars) for those who violate the law is not sufficient to deter offenders.(28)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Assess penalties for child labor violations and accompany representatives of the National Commission on Child Labor (NACOMAL) during child labor investigations.(7, 10)
Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Protection	Assist the MOL with the investigation of child labor cases and act as the lead advisory agency through its Children Protection and Development Division on policy formulation, coordination, and monitoring of child protection policies. Monitor the Government's efforts regarding compliance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, UN CRC, and the African Union protocols on women and children.(37)
Liberia National Police (LNP) Women and Children Protection Section (WACPS)	Investigate human trafficking cases involving women and children under the guidance of the LNP.(38)
LNP Anti-Trafficking Unit	Ensure that human trafficking training is integrated into police orientation. Collaborate with the WACPS to investigate human trafficking cases.(27)
Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization	Enforce the Alien and Nationality Law of Liberia and protect the border from illegal entry of migrants. Aid in combating human trafficking by detecting fraudulent immigration documents.(10)
Liberian Transnational Crime Unit	Coordinate responses to international organized criminal activities, including monitoring and prosecuting criminal violations involving arms, human, and drug trafficking.(39)
Ministry of Justice	Promote and execute the rule of law for public safety, including the prosecution of child labor perpetrators.(40)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Liberia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not publish this information.

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor's (MOL) budget decreased from $1.8 million to $1.7 million, and the amount of funding dedicated solely to the labor inspectorate remains unknown. Due to limited resources, mainly lack of transportation, the labor inspectorate's response to investigate and address suspected and reported cases of labor violations is ineffective.⁽²⁾ The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Liberia's workforce, which includes more than 1.6 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Liberia should employ roughly 110 labor inspectors. Additionally, labor inspections are mostly carried out in the formal sector.⁽²⁾ For example, labor inspectors conducted unannounced inspections of construction companies and private businesses.⁽⁷⁾

During the year, the MOL and the National Commission on Child Labor (NACOMAL) trained labor inspectors on child labor and occupational safety and health.⁽²⁾ Although the MOL refers suspected cases of child labor to NACOMAL, NACOMAL is responsible only for investigations, while the MOL handles the penalization of violators. NACOMAL's child labor investigations are carried out with the assistance of the MOL; the Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Protection; the Women and Children Protection Section (WACPS) of the Liberia National Police (LNP); and three NACOMAL staff members (director, assistant director, and filing clerk).^(7, 42) In 2016, it was reported that NACOMAL has no operating budget and has limited staff to carry out its child labor investigations.⁽²⁾

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Liberia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

The WACPS reported having limited resources to conduct investigations, including a lack of vehicles, fuel, sufficient training, finances, communications equipment, and investigative equipment.(7, 43) The LNP refers child endangerment cases for prosecution to the Ministry of Justice. The data for child endangerment cases prosecuted through the Ministry of Justice are not disaggregated to determine the number involving child labor violations.(2, 7) Although 128 violations were found, there were no prosecutions because violations were addressed through corrective measures or conferences.(44)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
NACOMAL	Lead child labor investigations and oversee the coordination of efforts to combat child labor. Led by the MOL and composed of representatives from 16 organizations, including international and civil society organizations.(45) Objectives include reforming national child labor laws and creating a national child labor database to assist with conducting surveys to determine the magnitude of the child labor issue in the country.(45)
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Implement child labor policies. Chaired by the MOL and composed of government officials and workers' organizations.(7) Includes four subcommittees on resource mobilization, advocacy, training and legal development, and monitoring and evaluation. Met quarterly during the reporting period.(42, 46) Conducted two trainings during the reporting period that focused on international child labor definitions and developing goals for the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor.(41)
Child Protection Network	Coordinate child protection efforts through monthly meetings to discuss child protection issues, including child labor and human trafficking. Chaired by the Ministry of Gender and Development, and composed of the MOL, the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare, the WACPS, civil society organizations, and several NGOs.(12) Also responsible for coordinating referrals of child victims of abuse to social services providers, with support from international and national organizations.(10, 14) Met during the reporting period.(44)
Anti-Human Trafficking Task Force	Coordinate anti-human trafficking activities. Chaired by the MOL and includes the Commissioner of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization; the LNP; and representatives from the Ministry of Justice, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and Ministry of Internal Affairs.(38) During the year, the task force provided shelter to trafficking victims. Investigated cases of trafficking in persons (TIP), and set up a hotline to receive suspected reports of TIP.(44)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Trafficking in Persons	Outlines the Government's anti-human trafficking efforts, including those for child victims.(10) Research could not find information about accomplishments during the year.(41)
Direct Assistance and Support to Trafficked Victims Standard Operation Procedures	Establishes roles and responsibilities for coordinating government assistance to human trafficking victims. (27) Provides shelter and care to children who were suspected TIP victims.(41)
National Social Welfare Policy	Prioritizes the development of action plans and policies that target children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking.(47)

Liberia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Government developed a draft National Action Plan on Child Labor.(2) The Government reviewed the National Strategy for Child Survival but did not renew it during the year, and also failed to renew the National Health Policy. In addition, the Government failed to include child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the following: Revised National Youth Policy, National HIV/AIDS Strategic Plan, Education Sector Plan, Rubber Industry Master Plan, and the National Employment Policy.(48-55)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Anti-Trafficking Awareness Campaign†	Government of Liberia program led by the MOL that uses radio and billboard messages to raise public awareness on human trafficking.(11, 27) Campaign continued during the reporting period.(44)
USDOL-Funded Projects to Combat Child Labor	Actions to Reduce Child Labor in Areas of Rubber Production (2012–2017); $6.2 million project implemented by Winrock International to combat child labor in the rubber sector. Provided 3,700 households with livelihood services and 10,126 children with education services. Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017); $15.9 million project implemented by the ILO that aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Liberia. County Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR) II (2016–2018), implemented by the ILO to build the capacity of the government to address child labor.(2, 56, 57) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
U.S. Government-Funded Projects on Education for Adolescent Girls	U.S. Government-funded projects that aim to improve access to education and improve child protection. Includes New Accelerated Quality Education Activity (2016–2019),* $33.9 million USAID-funded project implemented by the Education Development Center; Providing Support for the Education of Girls with Disabilities, implemented by USAID with partnership and support from Liberia's Ministry of Education; Increasing Support for Out-of-School Girls and Youth, implemented by USAID; Advancing Youth Program, implemented by the Education Development Center; McGovern-Dole International Food For Education and Child Nutrition Program; Girls Leading Our World Camps (2014–2017), implemented by the Peace Corps.(58-60) Through programs of the U.S. Department of State's Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs, female high school students participate in short- and long-term exchanges to promote education, empowerment, and leadership skills. In 2016, more than 1,500 adolescent girls participated in public outreach programs.(41)

* Program was launched during the year.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(58, 61-68)

During the year, the Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Protection, in collaboration with the Child Protection Network and the Liberia Children Representative Forum, launched an awareness project to remove children, especially those in Monrovia, from street work.(69) Although the Government funds social programs, they are not sufficient to address the child labor problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure that penalties for employing children under the minimum age for work are stringent to deter violations.	2014 – 2016
	Raise the compulsory education age to be consistent with the minimum age for employment.	2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Publish information about the labor inspectorate's funding to conduct inspections and fulfill its enforcement duties.	2016
	Ensure that labor inspections are conducted in the informal sector in which children are found working.	2016
	Ensure adequate funding for child labor enforcement mechanisms and prosecution efforts, such as the MOL, the WACPS, and the Anti-Human Trafficking Task Force, and provide necessary training for such officials to enforce child labor laws.	2010 – 2016
	Disaggregate the number of complaints and report on the number of child labor cases received.	2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing health, education, and youth policies.	2010 – 2016

Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in farming and construction to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2016
	Improve access to education by subsidizing the cost of school fees and reduce barriers to education by building additional schools, addressing sexual abuse in schools, and ensuring that children are registered at birth.	2012 – 2016
	Expand existing social programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Macedonia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration established three new local commissions and assisted in the development of an action plan. The Government also trained first responders on the Standard Operating Procedures on Unaccompanied and Separated Children and Vulnerable Persons and screened migrants and refugees, including children, for human trafficking. In addition, Government funding for programs dedicated to combating trafficking in persons increased. However, children in Macedonia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation. Macedonia lacks recent, comprehensive data on the nature and extent of child labor in the country. In addition, the law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside formal employment relationships.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Macedonia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Macedonia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	18.3 (44,161)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	86.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	19.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		88.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street work, including vending small items, cleaning vehicle windshields, scavenging, and begging (2-5)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 5, 6, 9-11)
	Forced begging (1, 3, 5, 6)
	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking (1, 9, 12, 13)
	Forced labor as wait staff and dancers in restaurants, bars, and nightclubs (6, 13)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The majority of children involved in child labor in Macedonia engage in street work, including vending small items, cleaning vehicle windshields, and begging.(3, 4, 6) Some children engage in begging to help support their families, while others are forced to beg. The majority of children involved in street work are of the Roma ethnicity.(1, 3, 4) Macedonia lacks recent, comprehensive data on the nature and extent of child labor in the country.

The majority of victims of child trafficking in Macedonia are girls, between the ages of 14 and 17, who have been trafficked domestically for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in restaurants, bars, and nightclubs.(1, 9, 12) Girls in eastern and central Macedonia have been identified as being at particularly high risk for human trafficking.(14) Roma girls, especially, are also trafficked for forced marriages in which they are subject to sexual and labor exploitation.(1, 9, 12)

Macedonia

Afghani, Iraqi, Iranian, Syrian, and other children transiting through the country, either legally or illegally, are vulnerable to trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(11) Between January and March 2016, approximately 34,402 children transited through Macedonia, of which 226 (117 Afghani, 28 Iraqi, and 81 Syrian) were without an accompanying parent.(15) After the border closure in March 2016, 44 percent of the total number of migrants in transit centers were children.(15) Unaccompanied Afghan children between the ages of 13 and 15 were especially vulnerable to being subjected to labor exploitation through debt bondage by smugglers.(1, 16)

The Government was unable to fully meet the demand for instruction in Romani due to a shortage of qualified teachers.(17) Birth certification is required for attending school in Macedonia, and some Roma children had difficulty accessing education due to a lack of birth registration and identity cards.(10, 18, 19) Classes for children with intellectual disabilities have disproportionately high enrollment rates of Roma children due to discrimination based, in part, on faulty screening procedures for assessing intellectual disabilities.(19-22) Increased government funding for programs to eliminate barriers to education has increased school attendance rates among Roma children.(19) Barriers remain, however, and increase Roma children's vulnerability to child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Macedonia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Macedonia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside formal employment relationships.(3, 24)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Policy (MLSP)	Work with the police to seek out street children in need of assistance and track cases of forced child labor through the Department of Social Inclusion.(14, 32) Register complaints about hazardous child labor and investigate children's participation in street work through the Centers for Social Work (CSWs) and Ombudsman's Office, which includes a special unit for the investigation of violations of child rights and refers complaints to the State Labor Inspectorate.(3, 5, 33) When child labor is detected, the child is removed, put under the care of the CSW, and interviewed by a social worker. The child is then either returned to the family or taken to a safe house.(5)
State Labor Inspectorate (SLI)	Enforce child labor laws and transmit cases of suspected criminal law violations to the Public Prosecutor. Inspectors conduct a minimum of 60 target and compliant-based cases per month.(32, 33)
Ministry of Interior (MOI)	Enforce laws related to hazardous child labor. Investigate cases of child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities through its special police unit for organized crime, corruption, and human trafficking.(33) With MLSP, formed mobile teams in previous years to identify street children and remove them from hazardous situations, but in 2016 the MOI did not do this.(1, 3, 11)
Public Prosecutor's Office	Prosecute criminal law violations, including those involving the worst forms of child labor.(34) Has an Organized Crime and Corruption Unit with four prosecutors dedicated to cases of child abuse and the worst forms of child labor. The Skopje Basic Prosecutor's Office has eight prosecutors for child abuse cases.(13, 35)
Office of the National Referral Mechanism	Refer potential cases of child victims of human trafficking to law enforcement authorities for investigation, and refer potential victims to social services.(14, 35)

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy (MLSP) Department of Social Inclusion led efforts to remove Roma street children who were considered potential victims of forced begging.(11)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Macedonia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Macedonia's State Labor Inspectorate (SLI) is responsible for enforcing all labor laws, including laws on child labor, in all sectors of the formal economy. A source reported that the resources were adequate in 2016.(5)

In previous years, inspections conducted by the MLSP were not shared among offices due to a non-existent central database.(33) This led inspectors to write reports without having knowledge about the findings in previous inspections. Labor inspection reports were not always shared within the SLI and between the SLI and MLSP.(33, 36)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Macedonia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In Macedonia, legal requirements mandate that public prosecutors receive a 30-month training on criminal deeds, including child labor.(17) Training was conducted for police officers on border management during humanitarian crises and identification of human trafficking victims. The MLSP trained 60 social workers employed at orphanages and CSWs on identification of human trafficking victims.(11) Between October and December 2016, 150 stakeholders, including border police and NGOs, received training on foreign unaccompanied and vulnerable children.(11)

In 2016, three children were identified as victims of human trafficking and referred to the government shelter to receive protection and assistance.(11) Two children remained in the shelter for an extended time, and one was taken to a foster family.

The Prosecutor's Office is underfunded. Although human trafficking cases are given high priority and tried by the Organized Crime and Corruption Prosecutor's Unit at the main court in Skopje, these cases sometimes remain in the court system for years without conclusion.(33, 35) Despite the acknowledgement that trafficking of children remains a problem, the Government's attention has shifted away from taking concrete action to focusing on the refugee and ongoing domestic political crises.(17) Sources reported that border agents were unable to properly identify victims of human trafficking and proper coordination was lacking.(11)

The Government implemented the 2015 Standard Operating Procedures (SOPs) on Unaccompanied and Separated Children (UASC) and Vulnerable Persons, which clearly outline identification, referral, and processing of UASCs. The National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration (National TIP Commission) trained first responders on the anti-trafficking SOPs that apply to unaccompanied children and screening of migrants and refugees for human trafficking.(11) All referred unaccompanied alien children (UACs) were assigned guardians and underwent a best interest assessment. However, the Government assigned random adult refugees guardianship of unaccompanied children, granting them legal control over the children and their travel documents.(16, 17, 36)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Protection of the Rights of Children	Coordinate efforts to protect children's rights, including by preventing and eliminating child labor, by providing social services.(33) Led by the MLSP.(5)
National Coordination Body for Protection of Children from Abuse and Neglect	Oversee implementation of the National Action Plan for Prevention and Countering Abuse and Neglect of Children. Comprises representatives from civil society, WHO, and UNICEF country offices.(37)
National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration (National TIP Commission)	Coordinate the work of all institutions involved in combating human trafficking. Led by the National Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons (National Coordinator) with representatives from governmental institutions.(33) Includes the Sub-Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Children, which serves as an advisory body to the National TIP Commission on all forms of child trafficking.(1, 33, 38) Led by the MLSP.(5) A new National Coordinator and National Rapporteur were appointed in 2016.(11, 36)

In 2016, all intergovernmental coordination efforts related to child protection were put on hold due to elections and political conflict between the ruling party and the opposition.(5) The National Commission for the Protection of the Rights of Children and the National Coordination Body for the Protection of Children from Abuse and Neglect did not meet.(5) The National TIP Commission was reportedly underfunded and played a limited role in coordinating efforts on prevention and protection among NGOs and local committees.(1, 11)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan against Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration (2013–2016)	Focuses on preventing human trafficking by reducing the vulnerability of at-risk populations, reducing the demand for the purchase of sexual services, improving victim identification, and increasing efforts to combat human trafficking for the purposes of forced begging and other forms of labor exploitation.(9) It was reported that the level of implementation was positive for the National Action Plan during the 2013–2016 period.(36)

Macedonia

Policy	Description
National Strategy for the Fight Against Poverty and Social Exclusion (2010–2020)	Addresses social protection, social inclusion, health, education, and employment of children.(33) Aims to increase birth registration for Roma and other minorities, expand patrol services to identify and support street children, and improve the provision of social services for children involved in street work and begging. Implemented by the MLSP.(33, 39)
National Action Plan for Education (2016–2020)	Aims to increase inclusive education and improve education for the Roma community by increasing the number of students in preschool and elementary schools and decreasing the number of Roma students in primary schools for children with special needs.(40)

The Government did not provide sufficient funding for the National Action Plan against Trafficking and Illegal Migration and failed to fund any NGOs.(11) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement all policies of the National Strategy for the Fight Against Poverty and Social Exclusion and the National Action Plan for Education during the reporting period.(5)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor*

Program	Description
MLSP Day Centers, Shelter, and Social Worker Trainings†	Operates two day centers that can hold 60 children and supports two other centers, partially funded and operated by NGOs, that can hold 80 children.(5, 41) Supports a street children transit center.(41) In 2016, provided services to 51 children at the day centers; 70 children received social services.(5, 17) Runs an ongoing program to instruct foster families on how to accommodate child trafficking victims. In 2016, implemented a program to train social workers on providing assistance to child trafficking victims placed with foster families.(5)* Provides counseling, education, and assistance with registration documents to street children and child human trafficking victims at 30 CSW facilities.(12, 33) In 2016, dispatched CSW workers to the border crossings and migrant camps to look for indications of human trafficking. Provided specific training on handling TIP cases and identification of victims.(11)
Hotlines	NGO Open Gate/La Strada operates a TIP hotline with seven operators.(17) NGO Megjashi runs an SOS hotline to report cases of child labor and abuse. In 2016, it received 82 calls involving 111 children.(17)
Center for Victims of Human Trafficking and Transit Center for Foreign Victims of Trafficking†	The MLSP runs the Center for Victims of Human Trafficking shelter, which provides housing, basic services, and reintegration services to victims.(1, 42, 43) The MOI supports the Transit Center for Foreign Victims of Trafficking, operated by NGOs.(42) In 2016, three minors were referred to the shelter.(11)
Program for the Protection of Children Against Violence (2016–2020)*	Government partnership with UNICEF, fully funded by UNICEF. Goals include strengthening national systems and service for prevention, detection, referral, and response to children victims and potential victims of violence and abuse.(5, 44) MLSP, MOI, and Ministry of Justice are all part of the project work plan.(17)
Inclusion of Roma Children in Preschool Education†	MLSP project implemented in cooperation with the Roma Education Fund and 19 government units. Aims to support the integration of Roma children by increasing the number of Roma children in preschool.(5)
Educational Seminars for Roma Students and Teachers	Ministry of Education, social workers, and NGOs provided educational seminars to several local Roma NGOs, students, and teachers. Children in the seminars were instructed on the risks associated with forced marriages of minors.(5)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Macedonia.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(1, 11)

New programs were launched in 2016 and government funding for combating trafficking in persons increased; however, programs funded by donors typically were not extended by the government after funding expired.(1, 5, 11) A source reported that funding decreased for victim assistance in shelters. Also, day centers have not reduced the number of children on the streets, especially of the Roma ethnicity, suggesting that existing programs were insufficient in combating child labor.(5, 11, 17)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

- This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Madagascar made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government increased the number of child labor inspectors from 4 to 15, launched a study with UNICEF to assess violence and exploitation of children in Madagascar, and expanded the implementation of the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children in the Tourism Industry. In addition, the Government continued to participate in a number of programs targeting the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Madagascar perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, including the production of vanilla. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Social programs to combat child labor are also insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Madagascar perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, including the production of vanilla.(1-6) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(4, 7-12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Madagascar.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 7-12)
	Forced labor in mining, quarrying, begging, and domestic work (4, 8, 10, 12, 26, 31)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in the mining sector suffer from respiratory problems and diseases such as diarrhea and malaria, and are also at risk of injury from collapsing mines. Children, as young as 10, dig pits up to 15 meters deep and carry plastic sacks filled with air to breathe.(4, 10, 23, 24, 26, 27) Most of the children involved in gold and sapphire mining are in the regions of Anlamanga, Anosy, Ilakaka, and Vakinankaratra.(4, 16, 27) In addition, children working in the production of vanilla in Madagascar are exposed to toxic substances, extreme temperatures, transport heavy loads, and work for long hours. (1-3, 5, 6, 18-21)

Although the Constitution guarantees free compulsory education, the lack of school infrastructure and qualified teachers, limited transportation services in rural areas with long distances to schools, cost of school fees and supplies, and reported school violence impede access to education in Madagascar, which leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(6, 23-25, 32-35)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Madagascar has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Madagascar's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Malagasy law prohibits hazardous occupations and activities for children; however, these prohibitions do not cover deep-sea diving and fishing, areas in which there is evidence that Malagasy children work in dangerous conditions. A revised law that contains a more specific list of hazardous child labor activities in all relevant sectors, including underwater work, was developed, but it was not approved during the reporting period.(6, 23, 43, 44)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Civil Services and Labor Division for the Prevention, Abolition, and Monitoring of Child Labor (PACTE)	Enforce child labor laws and coordinate, train, and evaluate all activities in the context of the elimination of child labor.(6, 23, 33, 44)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce laws pertaining to violence against children, including human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(12, 23)
National Police Force Morals and Minors Brigade (PMPM)	Investigate criminal cases involving minors, including issues pertaining to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. Housed under the Ministry of Public Security. (4, 12, 23, 35, 45)
Department-level Courts	Prosecute child labor convictions.(23)
Ministry of Population, Social Protection and the Promotion of Women	Develop and implement programs to protect vulnerable children, including victims of the worst forms of child labor.(23) Manage 780 child protection networks to protect children from abuse and exploitation in all 22 regions of Madagascar. Approximately 450 of the networks are operational.(6, 12, 23, 35, 46)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Madagascar took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Madagascar's workforce, which includes over 12 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Madagascar should employ roughly 325 labor inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(50-52). In addition, half of the employed labor inspectors work in the capital hampering the Government's capacity to enforce child labor laws in rural areas, especially in the agricultural sector.(4, 6) During the reporting period, the Prevention, Abolition, and Monitoring of Child Labor (PACTE) conducted unannounced inspections of mines and quarries in four regions of the country; however the exact number of inspections is unknown.(4) In addition, PACTE trained civil society organizations in three regions to identify and report cases of child labor. However, reports indicate that PACTE lacked trained staff, equipment, and funding to manage existing child labor databases, and to conduct effective child labor inspections.(4, 23, 44)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Madagascar took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, the National Police Force's Morals and Minors Brigade (PMPM) had a headquarters and 15 regional units across Madagascar, employing a total of 118 agents.(23) In 2016, the National Police received a budget of approximately $29,400; however, research did not determine what proportion of the budget was available to conduct investigations related to the worst forms of child labor.(23) During the reporting period, the PMPM investigated an estimated 777 complaints that children were victims of crimes such as rape and violence. Of these cases, 41 were determined to be related to child labor in domestic work, but authorities did not gather sufficient evidence to determine whether any of the cases involved domestic servitude. Some of these cases were reported through the national child protection hotline.(23, 35, 45) It is unclear, however, how many child labor violations were found in areas beyond domestic work, how many prosecutions were initiated and whether these cases led to convictions. (31) Reports indicate a lack of trained staff, equipment, and transportation to effectively conduct criminal law enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor.(4, 23, 53, 54)

In 2016, the overall budget allocation for the Ministry of Population, Social Protection and the Promotion of Women increased to 0.4% of the national budget from the previous year.(45) During the reporting period, the Ministry worked with Child Protection Networks in five targeted regions (Diana, Atsimo Andrefana, Boeny, Atsinanana and Analamanga) to provide legal, social, and medical care to 9,949 child victims of violence and exploitation. Of these, 22 percent, or 2,170, were victims of child labor.(23) In addition, each of these five Child Protection Networks developed 3-year action plans to improve reintegration and enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor.(23)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on the Fight Against Child Labor (CNLTE)	Coordinate programs, advise on child labor legislation and regulations, and implement the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Led by the Ministry of Civil Services and Labor.(23, 55, 56) In 2016, appointed 11 labor inspectors to support CNLTE activities and implemented awareness-raising campaigns on commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism sector.(23, 44)
Regional Child Labor Committees (CRLTE)	Coordinate, monitor, and evaluate all regional activities relating to the elimination of child labor. Comprises 10 regional committees that identify activities to promote the elimination of child labor and to compile, analyze, and report child labor data to PACTE.(23, 44, 55, 57) In 2016, the committee in the Sava region organized workshops to raise awareness of child labor issues among vanilla producers, and the committees in the Atsimo-Andrefana and Diana regions conducted trainings on commercial sexual exploitation of children.(4, 20, 23, 44)
National Bureau to Combat Human Trafficking	Coordinate human anti-trafficking efforts in Madagascar and responsible for implementing the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons.(12, 33, 38, 58) Chaired by the Office of the Prime Minister and includes representatives from the Ministries of Civil Services and Labor; Justice; and Population and Social Affairs.(15, 31, 58) Met twice during 2016.(35)
National Child Protection Committee (CNPE)	Guide and coordinate national child protection policy and programs. Chaired by the Minister of Population and Social Affairs and comprises a steering committee and a technical commission of specialists.(7, 59) In 2016, launched a study to assess violence and exploitation of children in Madagascar to be released in 2017.(23, 45)

In 2016, the National Committee on the Fight Against Child Labor (CNLTE) did not receive funding and the Regional Child Labor Committees (CRLTE) and the National Bureau to Combat Human Trafficking lacked sufficient funding to effectively operate and coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.(12, 23, 33, 35, 45)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2004–2019)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by strengthening child labor laws, conducting awareness-raising campaigns, mobilizing funds for social programs, and updating databases on child labor. Led by the CNLTE. (4, 26, 44, 55) In 2016, received $35,000 to implement the final phase of the plan, which aims to consolidate efforts to effectively remove children from exploitative labor conditions.(44)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2015–2019)	Seeks to enhance the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, effectively implement human trafficking laws, and provide protection and care for victims. Overseen by the National Bureau to Combat Human Trafficking.(8, 15, 58, 60) Reports indicated that the Government did not provide sufficient funding to implement the plan in 2016.(12, 23, 45)
Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children in the Tourism Industry	Aims to prevent commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism industry. Implemented by the Ministry of Tourism and supported by the ILO and UNICEF.(23, 61–64) As of 2016, over 900 tourism companies signed the code of conduct, and eight regional action plans have been developed to implement the provisions of the code.(23, 45)

Policy	Description
National Social Protection Policy	Aims to protect children from abuse, violence, and exploitation and promotes improved access to education and livelihood services for vulnerable children. Led by the Ministry of Population, Social Protection and the Promotion of Women and supported by international donors.(33, 65-67) In 2016, implemented activities that benefitted over 500,000 individuals, mainly children.(68)
National Development Plan (2015–2019)	Aims to promote sustainable development and social equality. Overseen by the Ministry of Economy and Planning and supported by the ILO's Decent Work Country Program.(33, 69, 70) Includes a budget of $83,000 to specifically combat commercial sexual exploitation of children and child labor in domestic work, mining, quarrying, and other hazardous sectors. (8, 33, 69-71)

‡ The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(70, 72)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government of Madagascar funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. (Table 10)

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Project Supporting Sustainable, Child Labor Free Vanilla-Growing Communities in Sava (2016 – 2020)*	USDOL-funded $4 million project implemented by the ILO that aims to reduce child labor in the vanilla-producing areas of the Sava region.(73) The project will build the capacity of the Government to enforce child labor laws and policies; work with the vanilla industry to implement the Code of Conduct of Vanilla Producers; raise community awareness on child rights and child labor; and promote livelihood services for households in the region.(73) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site.
UNICEF Country Program (2015 – 2019)	$197,815 UNICEF funded program that supports the Government's efforts to improve education, health, nutrition, and protection for children in Madagascar.(74) In 2016, implemented projects to prevent violence and commercial sexual exploitation of children in the regions of Atsimo-Andrefana, Diana, Nosy Be, and Toliara; increase birth registration and school enrollment for the most vulnerable children; and improve the national database managed by the Ministry of Population, Social Protection and the Promotion of Women to gather data from nine regional child protection networks.(44, 74-78)
Social Support and Reintegration Centers [‡]	Government program that provides social and reintegration services for victims of child labor, including its worst forms. Includes the Manjary Soa Center, the Vonjy Center in Antananarivo, and a newly opened center in Toamasina*.(12, 23, 45, 79, 80) In 2016, the Manjary Soa Center removed 35 children from exploitative child labor, and the Vonjy Center provided assistance to 667 child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(23, 45)
Public Investment Program for Social Action [†]	$34,700 Ministry of Civil Services and Labor program that supports school attendance and training for street children. In 2016, the project removed 40 children from the worst forms of child labor.(10, 44)
Education for All Program (2015–2019)	$15 million Government of Norway-funded project that aims to improve the quality of, and access to, primary education and provide school feeding programs in the southern regions of Androy, Anosy, and Atsimo Andrefana. Led by the Ministry of Education.(44, 81, 82) In 2016, provided assistance to 10,193 schools reaching approximately 238,014 students.(44)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Madagascar.

‡The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(83-87)

Research found that basic health and social services available to victims of the worst forms of child labor are not adequate to meet current needs.(4, 12, 23) Although Madagascar has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem, particularly in agriculture, commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, and mining.(4, 10, 44)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Madagascar (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the types of work that children perform in Madagascar that fall into an R.190 category, such as work underwater, are prohibited to children under 18.	2014–2016
Enforcement	Ensure that the number of labor inspectors conforms to the ILO recommendation of one for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, which is approximately 325 labor inspectors for Madagascar.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that labor and criminal law enforcement officials receive adequate funding and training to enforce child labor laws effectively, including in rural areas.	2009–2016
	Publish enforcement information related to child labor, including the worst forms of child labor, including on the number of labor and criminal inspections conducted, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions.	2013–2016
	Ensure that existing databases function to gather enforcement data on child labor, including by providing adequate funding.	2009–2016
Coordination	Ensure that the CNLTE, CRITE, and National Bureau to Combat Human Trafficking receive adequate funding to effectively operate and coordinate to fulfill their missions.	2014–2016
Government Policies	Ensure that appropriate funding exists to effectively implement the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons.	2016
Social Programs	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education accessible for all children, including those in rural communities, by removing supplies and school-related fees, increasing school infrastructure and transportation services, hiring sufficient qualified teachers, and ensuring children's safety in schools.	2011–2016
	Ensure that social protection systems have adequate funding and staff to provide appropriate services to victims of the worst forms of child labor.	2014–2016
	Expand the scope of programs to address child labor in agriculture and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, and mining.	2014–2016

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. 50. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

Malawi

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Malawi made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government expanded the Malawi Social Action Fund and other social programs to address child labor, particularly in the tobacco sector. The Government also hired and trained 21 new labor inspectors. However, children in Malawi continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of tobacco and in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has not finalized or fully implemented key legislation or policies protecting children from the worst forms of child labor, including the Child Labor Policy and the Child Protection Policy. In addition, gaps continue to exist in labor law enforcement related to child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Malawi engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of tobacco and in commercial sexual exploitation.⁽¹⁾ Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Malawi.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (%)	5 to 14	34.0
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	89.6
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	39.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		79.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.⁽²⁾

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS 5 Survey, 2014.⁽³⁾

Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are not comparable with data published in the previous version of this report because of differences between surveys used to collect the data.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting and harvesting tea, cotton, and sugar (4, 5)
	Planting and harvesting tobacco, clearing land, building tobacco-drying sheds, cutting and bundling, weeding, and plucking raw tobacco [†] (1, 6-12)
	Fishing (4, 13)
	Herding livestock (4, 14)
Industry	Quarrying, [†] mining, [†] collecting sand, and brickmaking (14-16)
	Construction, [†] activities unknown (15)
Services	Domestic work in third-party homes (10, 15)
	Ganyu (a form of casual labor) (17, 18)
	Begging [‡] (19)
	Vending and wholesaling (10, 15, 20)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 10, 15, 19, 21)
	Herding goats and cattle; farming (predominantly tobacco); fishing; domestic work; and work in small businesses such as rest houses and bars, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (10, 13, 16, 22-26)
	Forced begging (16, 22)
	Use in crimes (16, 17, 22)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Malawi are engaged in hazardous work in the production of tobacco.(9, 15, 22) Children who handle tobacco risk illness from nicotine absorption, including green tobacco sickness.(9) They are also exposed to pesticides and chemicals.(6) Some children work alongside family members who are tenants on tobacco farms.(1) In the tenancy system, tenants' pay is based on the quantity and quality of tobacco sold to farm owners after the harvest season. Tenants must also pay off loans incurred during the growing season, and when some are unable to repay these debts, their entire families may be placed in debt bondage.(1, 27-29)

Most human trafficking of children for labor in Malawi is internal.(16, 22) Children, typically boys, are trafficked from southern Malawi to work on tobacco farms in Malawi's northern and central regions; they are also forced to work as cattle herders and in the brickmaking industry.(16, 22, 30, 31) Children also are trafficked from Malawi to Mozambique, South Africa, Tanzania, and Zambia, often for use as child labor in the fishing industry.(13, 26, 30, 32) Children who are trafficked may be charged for their clothing, food, housing, and transport. They may also be forced to work in debt bondage and be unable to return home or support themselves.(22)

Girls from rural areas are sometimes promised clothing and lodging from brothel owners. They are later coerced to engage in commercial sexual exploitation to pay off their debts.(16, 22, 30) Girls who work in rest houses or bars are often coerced to engage in commercial sexual exploitation for room and board.(1, 10)

Although primary education is free, considerable barriers to education exist, including families' inability to pay required school-related fees and expenses such as books and uniforms.(1, 10, 26, 33)

Children with family members with HIV/AIDS may assume responsibility as heads of their households and need to work to support their families. These children, especially those who are orphaned, are at increased risk of entering into the worst forms of child labor.(34, 35)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Malawi has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Malawi's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	14	Section 21 of the Employment Act (36)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Section 22 of the Employment Act; Section 23 of the Constitution (36-38)

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Sections 1–9, and Paragraph 6, Sections 1–6 of the Employment (Prohibition of Hazardous Work for Children) Order (39)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Section 4 of the Employment Act; Section 27 of the Constitution; Sections 140–147 and 257–269 of the Penal Code; Sections 79 and 82 of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act; Section 15 of the Trafficking in Persons Act (36–38, 40, 41)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Sections 140–147 and 257–269 of the Penal Code; Section 79 of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act; Section 15 of the Trafficking in Persons Act (38, 40, 41)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 137 and 138, 140, 142, 147, and 155 of the Penal Code; Sections 23 and 84 of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act; Sections 15 and 20 of the Trafficking in Persons Act (38, 40, 41)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 23 of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act (38)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Section 19 of the Defense Force Act (42)
Non-State Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Article 13 of the Education Act (33)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of the Education Act (33)

* No conscription (42)

Section 21 of the Employment Act sets the minimum age for employment at age 14 in agricultural, industrial, or nonindustrial work.(36) The minimum age is not extended to workers in third-party homes, such as in domestic work, or non-commercial agriculture in which children are known to work.(36, 43, 46) In addition, Malawi lacks a legal framework for the tenancy system used in tobacco production. This is of particular concern since children involved in the tenancy system can face debt bondage.(1, 27–29, 44) Although non-state armed groups are not known to recruit children for military activities in the country, Malawi law does not meet international standards because it does not expressly prohibit this practice.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Perform inspections and investigate all labor complaints, including those related to child labor.(15) The Child Labor Unit (CLU) monitors and implements child labor law compliance through child labor monitoring visits.(47)
District Labor Offices	Enforce child labor laws at the district level.(15)
Ministry of Gender, Children, Disability and Social Welfare (MOG) Department of Child Development	Provide child protection and development services.(48)
Ministry of Home Affairs	Enforce human trafficking laws and prosecute human trafficking offenses.(32, 49)
Ministry of Justice and Constitutional Affairs	Prosecute criminal offenders.(50)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Malawi took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) recruited and trained 21 new labor inspectors. The MOL's Child Labor Unit (CLU) had one full-time employee based in Lilongwe, down from three previously.(1, 53) Each of Malawi's administrative districts employed a District Labor Officer (DLO), who was responsible for enforcing all labor laws including those related to child labor.(15, 19, 46) In previous years, the MOL reported an insufficient amount of funding to carry out the Ministry's child labor monitoring and prevention mandate, and research has not found that the MOL budget for these activities has increased.(19, 53) According to MOL officials, DLOs were limited in their ability to carry out monitoring and reporting due to budget and resource constraints, including a lack of transportation.(15, 19, 46, 54)

The Government supports a child protection helpline operated by an NGO that identifies cases of child sexual and labor exploitation.(22) Research did not find information on the number of calls related specifically to child labor.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Malawi took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Government has a referral process in place to transfer human trafficking victims detained by law enforcement authorities to service providers, although services remain limited.(56) The Government operates a social rehabilitation center providing assistance to several child trafficking victims in Lilongwe, but the quality of the facility has been reported to be very poor, leading law enforcement officers to regularly refer victims to civil society organization-run shelters.(30, 56) The Government operationalized a text messaging system for sending and analyzing trafficking information from district offices monthly.(55)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Provide policy guidance to support the elimination of child labor and implementation of the National Action Plan on Child Labour (NAP). Chaired by the Ministry of Agriculture, members include representatives from government ministries, trade unions, employers, development partners, and civil society organizations.(19, 31, 35)
National Technical Working Group on Child Labor and Protection	Oversee child protection issues. Includes representatives from the Government, international organizations, development partners, and NGOs, and is chaired by the MOG.(15, 19, 22) The Technical Working Group on Child Labor met three times during the reporting period.(53, 55)
District Child Protection Committees	Coordinate all child protection activities at the district level and improve local coordination on child protection issues. The Government is considering combining these committees with district orphan and vulnerable child committees and district committees on child rights.(19, 22)
National Coordination Committee against Trafficking in Persons*	In 2016, the Trafficking in Persons Act of 2015 required the creation of the committee. In November 2016 its membership list appeared in the Government of Malawi Gazette and the committee met for the first time on December 12, 2016.(1)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Child Labour for Malawi (2010–2016)	Assigns roles and responsibilities for each ministry in charge of implementing child labor policies, provides a comprehensive framework to reduce the worst forms of child labor, and proposes concrete activities to support policies that combat child labor.(57) In September 2016, an operational planning workshop was held to begin the process of revising the NAP.(58)
Child Protection Strategic Plan	Outlines the responsibilities of the MOL, Malawi Police Service, and MOG in coordinating efforts to combat child labor.(19)
National Action Plan for Vulnerable Children (2015–2019)	Provides a framework for the development of district implementation plans for assisting vulnerable children, including those vulnerable to child labor; coordinated by the MOG.(53, 59)
UN Development Assistance Framework (2012–2016)	Recognizes child labor as a common constraint to the creation of decent and productive employment. Proposes strategies to address child labor, including enforcement of existing labor laws and enactment of pending legislation and policies.(60, 61)
Malawi Growth and Development Strategy II (2011–2016)	Includes strategies to eliminate child labor, such as integrating child labor issues into development initiatives and interventions; highlights that poverty is the root cause of child labor.(15, 60) To ensure consistency across policies, the MOL is incorporating child labor into all the sectors of the Malawi Growth and Development Strategy II.(15, 62)

In 2016, research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the key policies above. The draft National Child Labor Policy, which would provide the Government, civil society, and other partners with a framework to implement child labor prevention programs and activities, underwent national consultation that included circulation among ministries.(1, 15, 19, 53) The Government has not finalized or started implementing the Child Protection Policy, which outlines the Government's child protection strategy.(19, 53) The Government has not integrated child labor elimination and prevention strategies into either the National Youth Policy or the National Education Sector Plan.(63, 64)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL-funded research projects implemented by ILO to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area. These projects include the Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP) (2013–2017) in 10 countries, including Malawi, and the Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2016).(65–67) During the reporting period, the ILO and the National Statistical Office processed, analyzed, and drafted a report for the second National Child Labor Survey.(68) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Achieving Reduction of Child Labor in Support of Education II (2015–2018)	$2 million Japan Tobacco International (JTI)-funded, 3-year project that provides strategies to promote economic empowerment, raise awareness of child labor, and provide education support.(69, 70)
Child Labor Monitoring System†	MOL system in pilot districts that identifies working children. Collects data on school attendance and other data points.(19)
National Social Cash Transfer Program†	MOG program that supports low-income families in high-risk districts to enable children to stay in school. (15, 48) In FY 2016, the Government maintained the program in 304,534 project participant households at an annual cost of $68 million.(71) Research has shown a decrease in child labor rates as a result of participation in this program.(72, 73)
Complimentary Basic Education Program†	$1.1 million Government-funded project that promotes school enrollment for children who are removed from child labor. To date, an estimated 11,000 children have graduated from this program.(53)
Malawi Decent Work Country Program (2011–2016)	ILO program that seeks the elimination of the worst forms of child labor and assists youth, women, and people with disabilities by creating additional income-generating opportunities.(60, 74)
Malawi Social Action Fund IV (2014–2019)	$70 million, World Bank-funded, 5-year project that provides loans for community development and social support programs, including work opportunities, skill-building, and cash transfers.(19, 53) During the reporting period, the project budget was increased from $32.8 million to $70 million and extended an additional year to 2019.(1)
Orphans and Vulnerable Children Intervention	$4.9 million President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief-funded program that, in partnership with MOG, provides vulnerable children from birth to age 17 with education, child protection services, birth registration, and shelter and care through the establishment of Community Based Care Centers.(75)
Girls Empowerment Programs*	USAID-funded and Save the Children-implemented projects that focus on reducing structural and cultural barriers to girls' access to education. These projects include Let Girls Learn (2016–2021) and Girls' Empowerment through Education and Health Activity (2014–2018) in Balaka and Machinga districts.(1, 75)
Birth Registration Program†	EU- and UNICEF-funded program that ensures nearly all health facilities in Lilongwe register children at birth and supports government electronic storage of birth data collected at the district level. The Government's National Registration Bureau initiated hospital birth registration in Zomba and Mulanje districts.(22) The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) supported birth registration in Blantyre, Chitipa, and Ntcheu districts.(19) UNICEF supported birth registration in Lilongwe.(53)
National Registration and ID Program	$50 million Government and UNDP-cofunded program aiming to register all Malawians older than 16 by the end of 2017.(52)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Malawi.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(15, 32, 76)

Although Malawi has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem in all relevant sectors, including agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Malawi (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that all forms of children's work, including work conducted by children in private homes (domestic service) and on noncommercial farms, receive legal protection, including a minimum age for work that complies with international standards.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure legal protection for children working in the tenancy system.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Publish information about the labor inspectorate's funding and information about the training system for labor inspectors.	2015 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of labor inspections conducted, including at worksites and by desk review, as well as the number of child labor violations that were found and the number of penalties that were imposed and collected.	2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating routine inspections rather than performing inspections solely based on complaints received.	2015 – 2016
	Increase resources to the CLU and district labor inspectors to conduct regular child labor inspections.	2009 – 2016
	Disaggregate data on child labor from child protection hotline calls and publish the information.	2014 – 2016
	Publish information on the training system for criminal law investigators and the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions.	2013 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure activities are undertaken to implement key policies related to child labor.	2016
	Finalize and implement the National Child Labor and Child Protection policies.	2009 – 2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Education Sector Plan and National Youth Policy.	2011 – 2016
Social Programs	Ensure that additional educational costs and the impact of HIV/AIDS do not serve as barriers to education.	2012 – 2016
	Increase the scope of existing social programs to reach more children at risk of the worst forms of child labor, and develop specific programs to target children in the agriculture sector and commercial sexual exploitation.	2011 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. In 2016, Maldives made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched a National Victim Support Hotline for victims of the worst forms of child labor, and the Labor Relations Authority trained all labor inspectors on investigating trafficking in persons cases. The Government also created a technical-level committee to advise the Anti-Human Trafficking National Steering Committee and monitor implementation of the National Anti-Human Trafficking National Action Plan. Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Maldives are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation, including use in the production of pornography. The Government has not determined specific hazardous occupations or activities that are prohibited for children, and the law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Government does not have a coordinating mechanism or policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor in the country.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Maldives engage in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation, including use in the production of pornography.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Maldives.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.9 (2,364)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	79.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	4.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		114.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2009, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2009.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Domestic work (1, 6)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2)
	Use in the production of pornography (3)
	Use in the trafficking of drugs (3)
	Forced labor in domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

No current data are available on child labor in Maldives, and a national survey on child labor has not been conducted. Some girls from Bangladesh and Maldives are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation to Malé, the capital of Maldives, but evidence of the problem is limited.(2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Maldives has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Maldives' legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Section 6 of the Employment Act (7)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Section 7 of the Employment Act (7)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Section 3 of the Employment Act; Sections 12–16 of the Prevention of Human Trafficking Act (7, 8)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Sections 12–15 of the Prevention of Human Trafficking Act (8)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Sections 17–19 of the Special Provisions Act to Deal with Child Sex Abuse Offenders (9)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 133(c)(1) of the Drugs Act (10)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Law on the Protection of the Rights of Children (3)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 36(b) of the Constitution of the Republic of Maldives; Article 5(b) of the Law on the Protection of the Rights of Children (3, 11)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 36(b) of the Constitution of the Republic of Maldives; Article 5(b) of the Law on the Protection of the Rights of Children (3, 11)

* No conscription (12)

Maldives has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, as procuring children for prostitution is not criminally prohibited. The law also does not criminally prohibit using, procuring, and offering children for pornographic performances.(9) In addition, the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups is not prohibited.

Research did not uncover a public version of the 2014 amendment to the Law on the Protection of the Rights of Children for review.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Labor Relations Authority, Ministry of Economic Development (MED)	Enforce the child labor provisions of the Employment Act. Make recommendations to the MED on penalties, such as fines.(3)
Family and Child Protection Department, Maldives Police Service (MPS)	Investigate complaints of child labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Refer cases to the Prosecutor General's Office for prosecution and the Ministry of Gender and Family to provide victim services.(3) Employs eight officers in Malé to investigate child labor cases, including child commercial sexual exploitation and child pornography cases.(3)
Family Child Protection Services (FCPS), Ministry of Gender and Family	Receive referrals of children who have been exploited, including in child commercial sexual exploitation, and provide care for such victims.(3)
Anti-Human Trafficking Units, MPS	Investigate human trafficking-related offenses and enforce laws prohibiting trafficking in persons. Employs five officers to investigate human trafficking cases.(3)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Maldives took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Maldives' workforce, which includes more than 195,100 workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Maldives should employ roughly 13 inspectors.(14-16) The Labor Relations Authority lacks the resources, including staff, necessary to enforce child labor laws. Inspectors have not received training on the identification and remediation of child labor.(3, 17)

In 2016, the Labor Relations Authority, in partnership with the IOM, trained all labor inspectors on investigating trafficking in persons cases.(3)

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Maldives took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

In 2016, the Prosecutor General's Office participated in a training on the commercial sexual exploitation of children conducted by the Maldives Police Service (MPS). There were 235 officials from various law enforcement agencies, including the MPS and the Labor Relations Authority, who received training on human trafficking by the IOM.(3)

Investigators have insufficient funding and resources, such as office facilities and transportation.(19) Police and other officials also have inadequate training on procedures for identifying human trafficking victims and providing referrals to protective services, including for children.(2, 20) In addition, the MPS lacked the capacity to pursue child trafficking investigations.(18)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Anti-Human Trafficking National Steering Committee	Coordinate anti-human-trafficking activities and implement the country's National Anti-Human Trafficking National Action Plan under MED leadership and 11 participating government agencies.(8, 19)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Anti-Human Trafficking Action Plan (2015–2019)	Sets out the Government's goals to combat human trafficking, including establishing institutions, coordinating activities, raising awareness, and building capacity.(21)

Although the Government of Maldives has adopted the National Anti-Human Trafficking Action Plan, research found no evidence of a policy to address the worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
FCPS Shelters and Rehabilitation Centers [†]	Ministry of Law and Gender-operated centers on many of the country's islands, which provide services such as temporary shelter, vocational training, and rehabilitation and counseling for children in need, which could include children rescued from abusive work situations.(22, 23)
National Victim Support Hotline (Number 1696)* [†]	Ministry of Economic Development-operated hotline dedicated to receiving reports of human trafficking and child labor. Supported by the Maldives Police Service and Maldives Immigration.(24)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Maldives.

Existing social programs do not specifically address the worst forms of child labor, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children, use of children in the production of pornography, use of children for drug trafficking, and forced labor in domestic work. Family Child Protection Services Shelters and Rehabilitation Centers lack adequate financial and human resources, and staff are inadequately trained to deal with cases involving abused and exploited children.(3)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Maldives (Table 11).

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
- UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies,” “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies,” and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Mali made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified the ILO Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention, drafted a law that increases the minimum age for work to 15, and obtained its first conviction for child trafficking under the 2012 Trafficking in Persons Law. The National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor also drafted an amendment to the Hazardous Occupations List and conducted activities to raise awareness of child labor in the mining sector. In addition, the Government launched a National Strategic Education Sector Plan and participated in a number of programs targeting the worst forms of child labor, including a new program to support the implementation of the National Plan to Combat Child Labor. However, children in Mali perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, particularly in the production of cotton and rice. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in gold mining and in armed conflict. Laws related to the worst forms of child labor are insufficient, and gaps in enforcement have left children unprotected, especially in northern Mali.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mali perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, particularly in the production of cotton and rice.(1-4) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in gold mining and in armed conflict.(2, 4-13) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mali.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children, especially of the Bellah community (also known as black Tuaregs), who were former slaves, are subject to hereditary slavery in northern Mali.(10, 23, 25, 28) In addition, children, particularly those of Songhai ethnicity, work in debt bondage in the northern salt mines of Taoudenni.(4, 10) Some boys placed in the care of Koranic teachers for education are forced by their teachers to beg on the street or to work in fields; they must then surrender the money they have earned to their teachers.(4, 9, 10)

Intermittent fighting and violence in northern Mali continued throughout 2016, resulting in the killing and displacement of children.(4) Although the incidence of child soldiers decreased during the reporting period, children continued to be forcibly recruited and trained by non-state armed groups, including the Coordination of Azawad Movements (CMA), the National Movement for the Liberation of Azawad (MNLA), the High Council for the Unity of Azawad (HCUA), the Arab Movement of Azawad (MAA), and the Allies Tuareg Self-Defense Group (GATIA), all signatories of the 2015 Peace Accord.(2, 4, 13, 29, 30) Research found limited evidence of ties between the Government and GATIA, a non-state armed group headed by a Malian general, including the provision of some in-kind support to GATIA. (4, 10, 30-34) The UN verified that at least nine children were associated with GATIA in the Kidal region and 76 children were recruited during the reporting period.(4, 10, 30, 32-34)

Although the Constitution guarantees free and compulsory education, many children, especially girls, do not attend school because parents are expected to pay fees for registration, uniforms, books, and materials, costs which are prohibitive for many families.(2, 4, 23, 35, 36) Many children in Mali are not registered at birth. Unable to prove citizenship, unregistered children may have difficulty accessing services, including education.(4, 30, 37) In addition, evidence suggests that incidences of physical, psychological, and sexual abuse, including corporal punishment, prevent some children from remaining in school.(4, 23, 38). During the reporting period, there were numerous incidents of attacks on schools in northern Mali that resulted in lootings, destruction of learning materials and infrastructure, and military occupancy.(13, 29) Many teachers and students remain displaced and some teachers in insecure areas felt that it was unsafe to return to school.(2, 4, 23, 39) The lack of access to education may increase the risk of children’s involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Mali has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In April 2016, the Government of Mali ratified the ILO Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention.(40)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Mali's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	14	Article L.187 of the Labor Code (41)

State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 17 of the Child Protection Code; Articles 31.23 and 31.31 of the Penal Code (44-46)
Non-state Compulsory	No	15	Articles 31.23, 31.31, and 32 of the Penal Code (44)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15 [‡]	Articles 26 and 34 of the Law of Education (47)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 18 of the Constitution (48)

The Labor Code allows children between the ages of 12 and 14 to perform domestic or light seasonal work, as long as it does not impede school attendance and it does not exceed four and a half hours of work per day.(41) However, the law does not specify the conditions under which light work may be undertaken.(49) The minimum age for work is not in compliance with international standards because it is less than 15.(39, 41) Although Mali's Hazardous Occupations List prohibits certain activities for children under age 18, Decree 96-178 from June 1996, which remains in force, permits children ages 16 to 17 to perform certain hazardous activities. The decree conflicts with the protections provided in the Hazardous Occupations List, leaving the possibility for children to work in hazardous activities.(39, 42, 49) Moreover, Malian law does not prohibit using, procuring, or offering a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.(27, 45) In 2016, the Government drafted a law that increases the minimum age for work to 15, aligns Decree 96-178 with the Hazardous Occupations List, and prohibits the use, procurement, and offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. However, the legislation was not adopted during the reporting period.(2, 39, 50)

The Child Protection Code provides protection for children under age 18, while the Penal Code establishes criminal penalties for several of the worst forms of child labor.(44, 45) For example, Articles 50 and 58 of the Child Protection Code identify begging as a form of economic exploitation of children, while Article 183 of the Penal Code specifies punishments for engaging a child in begging.(9) However, the Penal Code does not provide penalties for some of the prohibitions enumerated in the Child Protection Code.(44, 45) Specifically, Article 17 of the Child Protection Code prohibits children under age 18 from participating in armed conflicts or joining the armed forces, yet Articles 31.23 and 31.31 of the Penal Code provide criminal penalties only for those recruiting and enlisting children under age 15.(44-46)

The Inter-Ministerial Circular (Circular) references Article 28 of the Penal Code, which states that crimes committed out of self-defense or under a force that could not be resisted should not be penalized as prescribed by the Penal Code. Although the Circular states that Article 28 of the Penal Code is applicable to children involved in armed conflict, it does not define the age range of the children it covers.(44, 51) Considering the nonexistence of criminal penalties in the Child Protection Code and the lack of criminal penalties in the Penal Code for those who recruit and enlist children ages 15 and older, the absence of a defined age range in this Circular may leave children ages 15 to 17 unprotected.(51)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforce labor laws and investigate Labor Code infractions, including those regarding child labor, through its National Directorate of Labor.(2, 4, 52)
Ministry of Justice	Initiate and coordinate with courts the implementation of laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(2, 10)
Ministry of Internal Security	Investigate crimes against children, including human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, through the National Police Brigade for the Protection of Morals and Children.(2, 4, 10)
Ministry for the Promotion of Women, Children, and the Family (MPFEF)	Develop and implement programs to protect vulnerable children and monitor alleged violations of child labor laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(2, 35, 52)

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Mali took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2016, the National Directorate of Labor employed 60 full-time labor inspectors and 40 full-time labor controllers, of which 3 inspectors and 10 controllers are dedicated to child labor.(2) Despite increasing the number of inspectors by 40 in 2016, the number of labor inspectors remains insufficient for the size of Mali's workforce, which includes more than 6 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries, Mali should employ roughly 157 inspectors.(16, 53-55) During the reporting period, 24 labor inspectors received training on conducting labor inspections in the informal sector. One labor inspector in each region is designated as the point of contact for the National Unit for the Fight Against Child Labor.(2) Research shows that despite decentralization efforts, funds are rarely allocated to inspectorate regional offices.(2) In addition, reports indicate that a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding hampered the Labor Inspectorate's ability to conduct effective child labor inspections and legal proceedings, especially in remote areas of northern Mali.(2, 4, 10, 39)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Mali took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Number of Convictions	Unknown (16)	Unknown (2)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (16)	Yes (2)

In 2016, the Ministry of Security Morals Brigade employed 28 staff, including 2 captains, 7 investigators, and 18 officers.(2) Given the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in the country, the number of criminal law enforcement agents is inadequate.(2, 16) Although the total number of investigations conducted during the reporting period is unknown, the Morals Brigade investigated one case of child trafficking and 13 cases of commercial sexual exploitation. Also, the Government achieved its first conviction for child trafficking under the 2012 Trafficking in Persons Law in December 2016.(30, 56) Despite these efforts, there is a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to effectively conduct criminal law enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor. Reports indicate that because of political instability, which hinders law and judicial enforcement in northern Mali, the prevalence of hereditary slavery has worsened since the conflict began in 2012.(4, 57) In addition, evidence does not show that meaningful efforts were made by criminal law enforcement authorities to address the use of children in mining and forced begging.(2, 10)

Mali maintains an informal referral mechanism among NGOs, UN bodies, the police, and the Government to withdraw and provide social services to victims of the worst forms of child labor.(2, 10) During the reporting period, the Malian military transferred nine children associated with armed groups to the Ministry for the Promotion of Women, Children, and the Family (MPFEF), which provided medical and psychosocial support, and ultimately reunified them with their families.(2, 29) Despite these efforts, reports indicate that resources and facilities available to social services agencies are inadequate.(2, 4)

In 2016, Malian and international security detained individuals suspected of involvement with armed groups, including five children.(30) These children were held in state-owned adult detention centers and were not transferred to social services as required by the Inter-Ministerial Circular and the UN-signed Protocol.(4, 29, 30, 51) In addition, research found no indication that the Government either investigated or prosecuted individuals alleged to have recruited and used child soldiers.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor (CNLTE)	Coordinate Mali's efforts to eliminate child labor, especially its worst forms. Chaired by the Ministry of Labor.(27, 36, 58, 59) In 2016, drafted the legal amendment to the Hazardous Occupations List and conducted awareness campaigns about child labor in the mining sector.(2, 36)
National Coordinating Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices	Coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking. Chaired by the Ministry of Justice and includes various government agencies and civil society groups.(10, 60, 61) In 2016, met to implement activities under the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons.(10, 60)
Inter-Ministerial Committee to Prevent Grave Violations Against Children	Conduct awareness-raising campaigns to prevent the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict and implement reintegration programs for former child soldiers. Led by the MPFEF.(2, 62) Conduct joint missions with international partners to determine the presence of children in armed conflict.(2, 62)
Artisanal Gold Mining Summit Committee	Comprises gold mining associations and local government officials that monitor the recommendations of a 2014 summit on artisanal mining, including the ban on child labor in artisanal gold mines. In 2016, met twice to develop measures that address the use of children in the gold mining sector.(4, 63, 64)

Reports indicate that there is confusion with regard to roles and a lack of coordination between the National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor (CNLTE) and the National Coordinating Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices.(60) In addition, budget constraints hampered the effectiveness of the CNLTE as a whole.(2) There was no evidence that the Inter-Ministerial Committee to Prevent Grave Violations Against Children conducted meetings, took action to implement awareness-raising campaigns, or conducted joint missions to determine the presence of child labor in self-defense militias during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
National Plan to Combat Child Labor (PANETEM) (2011–2020)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by strengthening child labor laws, training relevant government officials, and mobilizing funds for social programs to withdraw children from child labor. Overseen by the CNLTE.(3, 39, 64) In 2016, contributed to drafting a legal amendment that increases the minimum age for work to 15, revises the Hazardous Occupations List, and prohibits the use of children in illicit activities.(2, 39, 50) Reports indicate that efforts to implement PANETEM have been slowed due to insufficient allocation of resources.(2, 23, 65)
Roadmap to Combat Child Labor in Agriculture (2015–2020)	Seeks to enhance the legal framework and build the capacity of the Government to prevent child labor in agriculture. Led by the Ministry of Agriculture and supported by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.(64–68) In 2016, implemented capacity-building workshops for farmer organizations in the Ségou region on combatting child labor.(68, 69)

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices (2015–2017)	Aims to enhance the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, effectively implement the laws, and provide effective protection and care for victims. Led by the National Coordinating Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices.(10, 70). In 2016, received its first ever budget, $730,000, to implement activities for victims assistance.(10, 60)
Inter-Ministerial Circular	Provides a framework for the prevention, protection, and reintegration of children involved in armed conflict. (51, 62, 71) In 2016, distributed copies of the circular to all regions in Mali and trained relevant actors.(2)
Protocol on the Release and Transfer of Children Associated with Armed Groups and Armed Forces	UN-signed protocol agreement that highlights the responsibility of the Government to transfer children associated with armed groups to either social services or UNICEF.(72) In 2016, trained child protection actors in northern Mali on best practices for referrals of former child soldiers.(2)
National Strategic Education Sector Plan (PRODEC II) (2017–2026) [†]	Sets out a comprehensive map to improve the quality of and access to basic and secondary education, especially in conflict-affected areas of northern Mali. Led by the Ministry of Education and supported by international donors.(2, 39, 73)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(74, 75)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2016)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Mali.(76) During 2016, supported activities under the Roadmap to Combat Child Labor in Agriculture.(67) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
South-South Cooperation for the promotion of decent work in cotton-producing countries (2015–2019)	$6.2 million Government of Brazil-funded project that aims to improve working conditions in the cotton sector, including by combatting child labor.(77, 78)
Decent Work Country Program (2016–2018)*	Identifies two objectives of decent work: (1) to create jobs and guarantee rights at work for vulnerable populations, and (2) extend social protection and promote social dialog.(64) Includes activities that support the implementation of PANETEM. Overseen by the Ministry of Labor and supported by the ILO.(64)
Stop Child Labor: School is the best place to work (2012–2017) [†]	Government initiative aims to eliminate child labor by increasing access to primary education. Implemented by the Ministries of Labor and Education.(39)
USAID Country Program* (2016–2020)	$600 million USAID-funded program that supports the Government's efforts to improve education, food security, and health, and to provide humanitarian assistance in crisis areas. Includes projects that provide quality basic and secondary education to vulnerable communities in northern Mali, including by building schools, training teachers, and providing school kits for students.(2, 79)
UNICEF Country Program (2014–2017)	UNICEF-funded program that supports the Government's efforts to improve education, birth registration rates, social inclusion, and strengthen child protection programs, including for children in conflict-affected areas of northern Mali.(80) In 2016, provided reintegration services to 2,436 children at risk of exploitation, including those formerly associated with armed groups, and education services to 157,873 children in crisis-affected areas.(80, 81)
National Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration (DDR) Program*	$25 million UN Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali (MINUSMA)-implemented program that aims to provide reintegration services to former combatants in Mali, including children.(29)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

Although Mali participates in some programs to reduce the worst forms of child labor, these programs are insufficient to fully address the scope of the problem, especially in artisanal gold mining. In addition, Mali does not fund or participate in programs to address child labor in domestic work, fishing, forced begging, commercial sexual exploitation, slavery, or debt bondage.

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
55. UN. The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Mauritania

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED POLICY THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Mauritania made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the year, the Government of Mauritania ratified the ILO Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention and established three regional Anti-Slavery Courts, resulting in the country's second ever slavery conviction. The Government also funded and participated in multiple programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including programs that provide social protection services to vulnerable children and combat forced labor of adults and children. However, Mauritania is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a regression in policy that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Since 2011, the Government of Mauritania has required proof of marriage and biological parents' citizenship in order to get a birth certificate. As a result, children born out of wedlock and many Haratine and sub-Saharan ethnic minority children have been prevented from being registered at birth. As birth certificates are required to enroll in secondary school in Mauritania, children as young as 12 cannot access education, making them more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Children in Mauritania perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, particularly in herding cattle and goats. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in indentured and hereditary slavery. Other gaps remain, which include the lack of legal prohibitions for the use, procurement, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs and limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws. In addition, the Government continued to imprison and physically mistreat anti-slavery protestors during the year.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mauritania perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, particularly in herding cattle and goats.(1-6) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in indentured and hereditary slavery.(2, 7-10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mauritania.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	12.5 (131,552)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	53.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	8.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		68.3

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4 (MICS 4), 2011.(12)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of beans, rice, and millet (6, 13, 14)
	Herding and caring for cattle, goats, sheep, and camels (1-6)
	Fishing and processing fish (2-5, 14)
Industry	Crushing gravel (5)
Services	Domestic work† (1-4, 6, 7, 15)
	Working as car mechanics, painters, and carpenters (2-4, 6, 14)
	Garbage scavenging (2, 4, 14)
	Street work, including as market vendors, shoe shiners, beggars,† and in the transportation sector (2-6, 8, 14)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced begging as a result of criminal gang recruitment and by Koranic teachers (2, 3, 5, 9, 15, 16)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 5, 7, 9)
	Use in illicit activities, including selling drugs (4, 6, 14)
	Indentured and hereditary slavery (2, 7-9, 17)
	Forced labor in domestic work and camel jockeying, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 5, 9, 13, 18, 19)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Mauritania, especially from the Haratine ethnic minority, continue to be exploited as slaves and endure slave-like practices in remote areas of the country. Some children are born into slavery, while others are born free, but remain in a dependent status and are forced to work with their parents for their former masters in exchange for food, money, and lodging.(4, 6, 8, 9, 20, 21) Some child slaves herd animals, such as cattle and goats, or perform domestic labor.(3, 5-7, 18)

In Mauritania, it is a traditional practice to send children to Koranic teachers to receive an education. However, some Koranic teachers (marabouts) force their students (talibés) to beg on the streets for long hours and to surrender the money they have earned.(1, 3-5, 9, 16)

Since 2011, the Government of Mauritania has required proof of marriage and biological parents’ citizenship in order to get a birth certificate. As a result, children born out of wedlock and many Haratine and sub-Saharan ethnic minority children have been prevented from being registered at birth. As birth certificates are required to enroll in secondary school in Mauritania, children as young as 12 could not access education, making them more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (4, 6, 9, 16, 20-24) In addition, the lack of school infrastructure and limited availability of teachers, especially in rural areas, impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(5, 8, 10, 25-27) Children from families of slave descent also face barriers to accessing education due to societal discrimination.(1, 6, 20)

In 2016, Mauritania hosted approximately 44,965 Malian refugees.(28) Refugee children may have difficulty accessing education, which could put them at increased risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(8, 28-30) In addition, evidence indicates that refugee children are involved in herding activities which take them out of refugee camps for long periods of time and older boys are vulnerable to recruitment by non-state armed groups. (31-33)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Mauritania has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In March 2016, the Government of Mauritania ratified ILO Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention.(34)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Mauritania's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation

The Labor Code allows children between ages 12 and 14 to perform light work, as long as it does not impede their school attendance, exceed two hours of work per day, and is authorized by the Ministry of Labor.(35) However, the Labor Code does not specify the activities in which light work may be permitted.(44) Children working in unpaid, temporary, or non-contractual work do not have the same protections under the child labor laws and regulations as do children working in contractual employment.(5, 35, 45)

While Mauritanian law prohibits the use of children in some illicit activities, such as organized begging, it does not criminally prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child for the production or trafficking of drugs. (6, 27) The law prohibits some hazardous occupations and activities for children, but it does not cover agriculture, a sector of work in which there is evidence that children use dangerous equipment and are exposed to hazardous substances.(5, 6, 44)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor Office of Labor and Inspection	Enforce labor laws and investigates Labor Code infractions, including those on child labor.(5, 6, 15)
Ministry of the Interior's Special Brigade for Minors	Investigate crimes against children, including human trafficking, and monitor religious schools, or mahadras , to ensure that children are not forced to beg on behalf of their teachers. Operates in Nouakchott.(4-6, 15, 46)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Childhood, and the Family (MASEF) Office of Childhood	Develop and implement programs to protect vulnerable children and monitor alleged violations of child labor laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor. Manages the Centers for the Protection and Social Integration of Children in Difficult Situations.(4, 5, 15) In 2016, received an operating budget of $10,300.(30)
Ministry of Justice Direction of the Judiciary for Protection of Children	Coordinate child protection issues and oversee the Special Brigade for Minors and tribunals that sentence child offenders. (5, 15, 46)
National Commission for Human Rights	Advocate for the eradication of slavery and receive complaints and conduct investigations on human rights violations, including the worst forms of child labor.(4, 15, 47)
National Agency for the Fight against the Vestiges of Slavery, Integration, and the Fight against Poverty (Tadamoun)	Develop and implement programs to tackle poverty, promote the integration of refugees, and rehabilitate former slaves.(17, 47, 48) File complaints on behalf of citizens who accuse their employers of practicing slavery and bring cases of alleged slavery to the authorities for investigation.(9, 47, 49) In 2016, submitted seven slavery complaints to the Ministry of Justice for investigation.(30)
Regional Anti-Slavery Courts*	Prosecute crimes related to slavery and provide free legal assistance to victims, including children. The three regional courts located in Nema, Nouakchott, and Nouadhibou were created under the Roadmap for the Eradication of the Vestiges of Slavery.(9, 30, 50-53)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

Mauritania

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED POLICY THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor employed 47 full-time labor inspectors and 20 full-time labor controllers, who are disseminated in 13 regional offices to enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor. The Ministry lacked equipment, transportation, and funding to conduct child labor inspections, especially in remote locations. (5, 15, 27, 58) In addition, the penalties established for violating child labor laws are insufficient and do not generally deter violations. (5, 6)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Mauritania took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

In 2016, the Special Brigade for Minors employed 10 officers and investigated 600 cases. However, research could not determine how many of the cases involved child labor. (5) Reports indicate that NGOs referred 1,287 cases of child abuse to government social services; however, research did not identify how many of these cases were investigated by law enforcement agencies or involved child labor. (5)

During the reporting period, the newly established Anti-Slavery Courts received 46 cases of slavery, which resulted in the country's second ever slavery conviction in May 2016. The offenders were sentenced to five years' imprisonment and ordered to pay restitution for the victims of about $2,851; the actual time served was determined to be one year, with four years suspended with probation. (6, 30, 50, 52, 53) In addition, in November 2016, the Court of Appeals of Nouakchott handed down a sentence of two years' imprisonment and fine of approximately $6,400 for a separate child slavery case. (30) Despite these efforts, the penalties associated with both cases did not comply with the minimum sentence of 10 years' imprisonment established by law for slavery offences. (6, 30) In addition, evidence shows that the actions taken by criminal law enforcement authorities were inadequate to address the worst forms of child labor, including indentured and hereditary slavery, given the magnitude of the problem. In general, enforcement authorities, including the newly established Anti-Slavery Courts, remained understaffed, underfunded, and without adequate office supplies, transportation, and fuel to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor effectively. (9, 15, 30, 50, 53, 58-60)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor Group	Coordinate child labor and child trafficking efforts. Chaired by MASEF's Office of Childhood and includes representatives from various ministries, as well as local and international organizations. (5)

The Child Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor Group was inactive and did not receive any funding during the reporting period. (6, 22)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor (PANETE-RIM) (2015–2020)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by strengthening child labor laws, training relevant government officials on combating the worst forms of child labor, implementing awareness-raising campaigns, and mobilizing funds for social programs to withdraw children from child labor. Overseen by the Ministry of Labor.(2, 3, 5, 6)
National Plan to Combat the Vestiges of Slavery (2014–2017)	Aims to prevent slavery through improvements in education and health, and by providing victims with income-generating activities. Falls under the direction of the Tadamoun .(55, 61) In 2016, implemented income-generating activities in impoverished communities of former slaves groups.(5, 9, 30)
Roadmap for the Eradication of the Vestiges of Slavery (2014–2016)	Calls for an awareness-raising campaign on slavery, the revision of slavery laws and policies, and the implementation of programs that provide former slaves with access to education and livelihood opportunities. Overseen by the Office of the Prime Minister.(5, 10, 62, 63) In 2016, supported the creation of the Regional Anti-Slavery Courts.(5)
National Child Protection Strategy (SNPE)	Aims to protect children from abuse, violence, and exploitation and promotes improved access to education and livelihood services for vulnerable children. Led by MASEF and supported by international donors.(2, 4) In 2016, implemented activities to improve child protection data collection systems.(4, 5)
United Nations Development Assistance Framework (2012–2016)	Promotes improved access to education for vulnerable children and aims to build the capacity of the Government to address child labor. Overseen by the Ministry of Economic Affairs and Development.(27, 64)

During the reporting period, the Government did not approve the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons that was drafted in 2015.(57, 65) Reports indicate that efforts to implement most of the key policies related to child labor have been slowed due to insufficient allocation of resources.(4, 10, 22, 58) In addition, the Government's continued imprisonment and physical mistreatment of anti-slavery protestors significantly limits its ability to address this issue comprehensively.(6, 9, 58, 66, 67)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labor (2015–2019)	USDOL-funded global project implemented by the ILO to support global and national efforts aimed at combating forced labor of adults and children under the 2014 ILO Protocol and supporting Recommendation to C.29 on Forced Labor.(34, 68) In 2016, conducted workshops to raise awareness on forced labor and slavery-like practices.(66, 69) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Program to Eradicate the Effects of Slavery†	Government program that supports the reintegration and rehabilitation of former slaves. In 2016, developed plans to increase educational opportunities for at-risk youth from slave descendant.(9)
Centers for the Protection and Social Integration of Children in Difficult Situations (CEPISE)†	MASEF operated program that provides food, shelter, education, and vocational training to vulnerable children, many of whom are talibés . Operates in Aleg, Kaedi, Kiffa, Nouadhibou, Rosso, and Nouakchott. In 2016, received a budget of $ 100,000 that allowed the program to serve 540 children.(4-6, 15, 22, 27, 30)
Protection of Mauritanian Children Against Violence, Exploitation, Discrimination, Abuse, and Neglect (2014–2016)	$1.9 million EU- and UNICEF-funded program, in partnership with MASEF, to combat child exploitation, including the worst forms of child labor. Operates in nine regional provinces. In 2016, established 46 child protection units that provided reintegration services to more than 25,000 children.(2, 5, 70)
Access to Justice and Human Rights Program	USDOS- and USAID-funded program implemented by the American Bar Association to promote the social and political rights of marginalized groups, including for former and current child victims of slavery. In 2016, trained community-based paralegals that provided services to 176 project participants.(71, 72)

Mauritania

Program	Description
Countering Trafficking in Persons (2015–2017)	$425,000 Government of Germany-funded, 2-year project implemented by IOM to raise awareness of human trafficking among vulnerable communities and build the capacity of government actors to enforce laws related to trafficking in persons. In 2016, trained 31 magistrates and court clerks on combating human trafficking.(73, 74)
UNICEF Country Program (2012–2016)	$13.3 million UNICEF funded program that supports the Government’s efforts to improve education, birth registration rates, social inclusion, and protection for children, including refugees.(5, 70)
World Bank Country Program	$41.4 million World Bank-funded projects that aim to increase access to quality basic and secondary education, improve school infrastructure, and strengthen safety nets for vulnerable populations in rural areas, including children.(75, 76)

Although Mauritania has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, especially in agriculture, herding, and domestic work, as well as for children in hereditary and indentured slavery.(5, 54) Moreover, as recently as May 2016, some government officials did not acknowledge that slavery continues, despite its prohibition.(21, 58, 66, 77) In addition, the lack of recent data on slavery limits the Government’s ability to develop effective policies to address this issue comprehensively. Existing social programs for former slaves and awareness of the national laws on slavery are insufficient.(1, 21, 49, 77)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Mauritania (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws prohibit children from being used, procured, or offered for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2009– 2016
	Ensure that the law’s light work provisions are specific enough to prevent children from being involved in child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the law’s minimum age provisions and protections apply to children in unpaid, temporary, or non-contractual work.	2012 – 2016
	Ensure that the hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2009 – 2016
Enforcement	Increase the training and number of law enforcement officials, as well as the resources for labor and criminal law enforcement agencies, including the courts, to adequately enforce child labor laws, especially in remote areas.	2010 – 2016
	Authorize the inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015 – 2016
	Strengthen the inspection system by initiating routine and targeted inspections, rather than performing inspections solely based on complaints received.	2014 – 2016
	Increase efforts to ensure that cases of the worst forms of child labor, including indentured and hereditary slavery, are investigated and prosecuted in accordance with the law.	2016
	Publish information on the number of labor inspections, child labor law violations, and penalties assessed; and the number of criminal investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2016
	Ensure that penalties are high enough to deter violators of child labor laws.	2015 – 2016
Coordination	Ensure that the Child Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor Group is active and receives adequate funding to fulfill its mission.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Approve the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure key policies related to child labor receive sufficient funds for effective implementation.	2016
	Take steps to ensure the safety of anti-slavery protestors, as well as their rights of freedom of expression and peaceful assembly.	2011 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested

	Expand the scope of programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture, herding, domestic work, and other sectors in which children work, as well as the issue of children in hereditary and indentured slavery.	2009 – 2016
	Implement a continuous, awareness-raising program for government officials on the laws related to slavery and the worst forms of child labor.	2012 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Mauritius

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Mauritius made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government hired additional labor inspectors, now meeting the ILO's recommendation for workforce coverage. The Government also established a mechanism to coordinate human anti-trafficking efforts and drafted a National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking and a National Strategy for Street Working Children. In addition, the Government established an oversight body to monitor the provision of social services in institutional care facilities and shelters, which house orphans and child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. However, children in Mauritius engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Government lacks a national policy to address all relevant worst forms of child labor and poor coordination continues to hinder the Government's efforts to combat child labor. In addition, social programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

Agalega Islands, Cargados Carajos Shoals, and Rodrigues are not shown.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mauritius engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mauritius. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		101.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(6)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Producing and harvesting vegetables (1, 4, 5, 8)
	Feeding livestock (9)
	Fishing, including diving, and casting nets and traps (5, 8, 10)
Industry	Working in factories and masonry (8, 11)
Services	Domestic work (1, 5, 8)
	Working in apparel shops and restaurants (8)
	Street work, including vending, begging, and carrying goods in public markets (1, 4, 5, 8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-5, 12)
	Use in illicit activities, including selling drugs (5, 8)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some children in Mauritius are lured into commercial sexual exploitation by their peers or family members, or through false offers of other employment.(2, 11) Mauritius has never conducted a national child labor survey, and therefore information on the prevalence of child labor in the country is limited.(5)

Evidence suggests that incidents of physical and psychological abuse, including corporal punishment of students by teachers, prevent some children from attending school, which increases their risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor. Because of discrimination, children with disabilities face serious barriers in accessing education.(1, 3, 13-16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Mauritius has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Mauritius' legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Mauritius

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, the Government continued to draft a comprehensive bill to harmonize the existing legal framework related to children's rights and strengthen legal provisions for child protection.(1, 5, 26, 27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations, Employment, and Training (MOLIRE)	Enforce all labor laws, including those related to child labor.(5, 12)
Office of the Ombudsperson for Children	Investigate any suspected or reported case of child labor or violation of a child's rights. Propose laws and policies to advance children's rights.(3, 5, 28, 29)
Police Brigade for the Protection of Minors (Minors' Brigade)	Investigate crimes of the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 5, 27) Maintain a database of all trafficking incidents involving children and refer all cases of commercial sexual exploitation to the Child Development Unit (CDU).(30)
Ministry of Gender Equality, Child Development and Family Welfare's (MOGE) Child Development Unit (CDU)	Enforce legislation related to children and implement policies and social programs related to child development. Provide social services to victims of the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking.(5, 30-32) Operate a central database for sharing information and taking action to address child labor.(5, 31, 32)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Mauritius took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

[‡] Data are from January 1, 2016, to October 31, 2016.(34)

Although the Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations, Employment, and Training (MOLIRE) works with the Child Development Unit (CDU) and the Minors' Brigade to refer victims to social service providers, research indicates that these agencies do not coordinate with the Ministry of Education to ensure that victims have access to education.(9, 11, 35)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Mauritius took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Yes (5)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown	N/A

During the reporting period, the Minors' Brigade, in cooperation with the CDU, received 17 complaints, including eight cases of child labor and four cases of commercial sexual exploitation.(5) In 2016, the police investigated at least three cases of child trafficking and referred three other cases of child trafficking that occurred before the reporting period to the Director of Public Prosecutions.(30) However, the total number of investigations, violations, and prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor is unknown. In addition, research revealed that criminal law enforcement agencies lacked staff, transportation, and other necessities to properly enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(12, 36)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Protection Committee (NCPC)	Coordinate and implement activities on children's rights, including efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by MOGE and also known as the High Powered and Working Together Committee. (30, 31, 37). In 2016, the NCPC met twice to carry out awareness-raising activities on the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism industry.(38)
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Human Trafficking*	Coordinate human anti-trafficking efforts in Mauritius. Chaired by the Attorney General's Office and includes representatives from MOLIRE, MOGE, and other ministries.(2, 33, 39)
National Children's Council (NCC)	Coordinate child protection efforts in Mauritius as an independent, para-governmental entity under the auspices of MOGE.(3, 12) In June 2016, partnered with stakeholders to organize awareness-raising campaigns on children's rights in honor of International Day of the African Child.(5)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

In 2016, a lack of coordination between the National Child Protection Committee (NCPC) and the National Children's Council (NCC) hindered the Government's efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.(3, 5)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Child Safety Online Action Plan	Aims to prevent sexual exploitation of children on the Internet by strengthening the legal framework and developing awareness-raising programs. Implemented by the Ministry of Information and Communication Technology, in conjunction with MOGE, the Minors' Brigade and the Office of the Ombudsperson for Children.(3, 40, 41) In February 2016, organized workshops as part of Safer Internet Day.(11)
Education and Human Resources Strategy Plan (2008–2020)	Aims to improve equity of access to primary, secondary, and technical and vocational education, and to provide social services for youth. Overseen by the Ministry of Education.(42, 43) In 2016, developed 9-year schooling strategy to expand education access for children with learning difficulties.(5)
Government Development Program—Achieving Meaningful Change (2015–2019)	Aims to increase access to social protection services for vulnerable populations, including children, and emphasizes a zero tolerance policy for the use of children in drug trafficking.(26, 44, 45).

In 2016, the Government drafted a National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking and a National Strategy for Street Working Children; however, neither was approved by the end of the reporting period.(2, 5, 32, 39) Despite these efforts, research found no evidence of a policy to combat other worst forms of child labor such as commercial sexual exploitation.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Awareness-Raising Programs on Commercial Sexual Exploitation and Human Trafficking [†]	Government program to educate the public on preventing commercial sexual exploitation of children and human trafficking.(2, 37) In 2016, the police educated 13,558 students in primary and secondary schools, as well as individuals in community centers.(5, 30)
Drop-in Centers, Shelters, and Institutional Care [†]	Government programs that provide rehabilitation services to victims of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking. Monitored by the CDU.(3, 27) In 2016, created a new Drop-in Center in Grand River Northwest that served 25 child victims, and expanded the La Colombe shelter in order to provide appropriate services to victims.(5, 27, 30, 39)
IOM Country Program	IOM program that builds the capacity of relevant government agencies to protect children from exploitation and human trafficking. In 2016, trained law enforcement officials on counter-trafficking in persons.(32, 46)
Education Assistance Programs [†]	Government programs that aim to increase access to quality primary education for vulnerable children. These programs include the Eradication of Absolute Poverty Program that provides educational support to 500 households in 229 geographic pockets of poverty and the Education Priority Zones that provide equal opportunities to primary school children throughout the country.(3, 43)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Mauritius.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(3, 27, 37, 43)

In 2016, the Government established an oversight body to address the lack of appropriate standards of care, inadequate service provision, and overcrowding that exists in institutional care facilities and shelters that house orphans, child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, and victims of other types of abuses.(5, 11, 29, 35)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Moldova made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted Law No. 207, which increases penalties for the use of children in the worst forms of child labor. It passed the Action Plan to Support the Roma People, which includes the goals of inclusive education and combating discrimination of the Roma, an ethnic minority group whose children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. In addition, the Government and the International Labor Organization established a Decent Work Country Program to strengthen available statistics on child labor and improve the effectiveness of the labor inspectorate. However, children in Moldova engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in agriculture. Funding for the State Labor Inspectorate was not sufficient, and the inspectorate's efforts to enforce child labor laws were hindered by barriers to conducting unannounced inspections. Furthermore, the judicial system failed to ensure that perpetrators of crimes related to the worst forms of child labor were properly convicted and sentenced according to the law.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Moldova engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in agriculture.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Moldova.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	24.3 (102,105)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	29.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		90.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Labour Force Survey-Child Labour Survey, 2009.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Agriculture,† including growing crops and raising farm animals (2, 8-14)
Industry	Construction,† activities unknown (2, 8, 10, 11)
Services	Street work, including begging (10, 12)
	Domestic work (10, 12)
	Wholesale and retail trade, activities unknown (8-11)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [†]	Commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 4, 5, 10, 15)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Poor lack of information limits an assessment of the types of work that children perform and the sectors in which they work, including for the secessionist region of Transnistria.(2, 4, 10, 15)

Both boys and girls are recruited for commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 5) Traffickers recruited children as young as age 13 for prostitution and other forms of commercial sexual exploitation.(4) Moldova is also a destination for sex tourism of children from various countries.(4, 5, 10, 11, 15, 16) Sex tourists continue to target orphanages by bribing orphanage administration officials to obtain unsupervised access to children.(3)

Child trafficking, particularly of children suffering from familial neglect, continues to be a concern in Moldova.(4, 13, 17, 18) Children left behind by migrant parents may be particularly vulnerable to child labor and human trafficking, especially those who are in orphanages or boarding schools.(4, 9, 12, 16, 19) Vulnerable children from Transnistria were at an increased risk of being trafficked through Ukraine’s Odessa region.(4, 20)

Although the Education Code provides for free and compulsory education until age 18, parents are required to pay fees for textbooks, and sometimes they are asked to pay informal fees.(10, 21) Children, especially girls from the Roma community, remain vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including forced begging.(12, 21, 22) Children who lack identity documents may face increased vulnerability to engage in child labor, including its worst forms. Textbook costs, birth registration documentation, and the negative attitudes of school officials and students toward some Roma children make it challenging for some Roma children to access education.(4, 9, 12, 16, 19, 23, 24)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Moldova has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The legal framework in Moldova appears to be sufficient to address and protect children from child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 46 of the Labor Code (25)

State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 12 of Law No. 162-XVI on the Status of Servicemen (34)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes		Article 26 of the Law on the Rights of the Child; Article 206(d) of the Criminal Code (29, 31)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 13 of the Education Code of 2010 (35)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 35 of the Constitution; Article 9 of the Education Code of 2014 (28, 36)

In 2016, Law No. 207 was passed, which increases penalties for the use of children in the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor, using minors in criminal activities, and the production of child pornography.(37) The Government amended Criminal Code Law 985 XV, Article 175 to include protection for minors who are sexually exploited on the Internet, increasing the sentences of offenders.(38)

While Article 13 of the Education Code of 2010 states that education is compulsory until age 18, this provision will not be fully in force until 2018.(11) Fifteen-year-olds can sign a work contract, with parental consent, if the work will not endanger the minor's health or interfere with the child's growth, education, and professional development.(2)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

State Labor Inspectorate (SLI) in the Ministry of Labor, Social Protection, and Family (MLSPF)	Enforce all child labor laws. Investigate child labor cases.(39, 40) Manage the National Referral System to Protect and Assist Victims and Potential Victims of Trafficking in Human Beings (NRS), which has been implemented in all of Moldova's regions; each regional coordinator coordinates directly with law enforcement, NGOs, and schools, and leads victim rehabilitation efforts.(4) Through the National Coordination Unit and Child Labor Monitoring Unit (CLMU), coordinate activities related to the protection of victims and potential victims of human trafficking. Build the capacity of multidisciplinary teams (MDTs) at the local level to improve victim identification and referral for crisis intervention and rehabilitation.(41) Includes community social assistants, police officers, and NGO workers.(41) One inspector in 2016 within the CLMU.(10, 39, 42)
Center for Combating Trafficking in Persons (CCTIP)	Lead criminal investigations and arrest perpetrators, including trafficking of children for both labor and sexual exploitation. Subdivision of the Ministry of the Interior with 11 criminal investigators.(10)

Organization/Agency	Role
Security and Intelligence Service	Enforce criminal laws against child trafficking and sexual exploitation through cooperation and information exchange with CCTIP, the Border Police, the National Corruption Center, and the Customs Service. Attached to the CCTIP.(10, 39)
Prosecutor General's Office (PGO)	Conduct and oversee criminal investigations on the worst forms of child labor, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and prosecute cases. Maintains 36 offices around the country.(43, 44)
People's Advocate (Ombudsman)	Specialize in child protection issues, including child labor, and defend children's constitutional rights. Public authorities, officials, and institutions are required to cooperate with the Ombudsman.(10)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Enforce criminal laws against child trafficking and sexual exploitation.(39) Draft, consult, and propose all processes related to legislation for the Government's approval before they enter into force.(43)
Center for Combating Cyber Crime	Focus on child pornography through a specialized unit of three operatives.(10) USDOS has donated specialized equipment to this center and conducts training on a continual basis for 12 police officers on criminal investigations of cybercrimes involving children.(4, 44)
Ministry of Information Technology	Assist with the identification of victims of trafficking in persons and provide foreign victims with residence permits and identity cards.(4)

In 2016, the Prosecutor General's Office (PGO), Center for Combating Trafficking in Persons (CCTIP), Security and Intelligence Service, and the Border Police developed a report on factors that increase vulnerability to human trafficking, including lack of parental supervision, poverty, disability, and youth.(20) The Ombudsman remained vacant in 2016 until April, which may have affected child protection cases.(10) In addition, as part of its August reforms, the PGO eliminated the requirement for specialized prosecutors for trafficking in persons (TIP) cases. This practice was reinstated in December; however, the requirement was not codified into law, which means that the PGO can again reverse this decision without outside approval.(20, 21) This disruption likely contributed to the significant decrease in trafficking prosecutions.(20, 21)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Moldova took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The State Labor Inspectorate (SLI) inspects enterprises, institutions, and organizations, regardless of their type or legal form. The SLI trained all national and regional labor inspectors on combating child labor.(10) In 2016, three seminars about the minimum requirements for labor safety, including for minors, were held.(10) However, the number of labor inspectors, funding, and resources were insufficient.(11) Furthermore, a law was adopted that temporarily blocked inspections by all state inspection agencies for 180 days as an attempt to reduce corruption in the labor inspectorate.(21) As a result, the SLI was not able to conduct inspections on businesses for most of 2016 until the moratorium ended in October.(10) The number of labor inspectors decreased and an insufficient number of inspections were conducted.(10) In 2016, 3,302 routine announced and 746 unannounced inspections were conducted. Thirteen minors were removed from hazardous occupations.(11) Sources indicated that the number of confirmed child labor violations in 2016 did not accurately reflect the entire problem.(10)

The laws on minimum age for work and hazardous work prohibited for minors are also applicable to informal work. The SLI develops a targeted inspection plan based on a risk assessment, in accordance with Law No. 131 and 140, and Government Decision No. 375.(45-47) However, children working in the informal sector are unprotected due to law enforcement practices.(10) Inspections are less effective because the SLI must give notice to employers 5 days prior to planned inspections.(2, 10) In addition, the Government's existing mechanism for filing and responding to child labor complaints is generally regarded as ineffective.(2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Moldova took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (4)	Yes (20)

Number of Convictions	19 (2)	Unknown (10)

[‡] Data are from January 2016 to October 2016.

The Ministry of the Interior noted that funding was inadequate for criminal investigators.(11) Ten police officers attended trainings about interagency cooperation; child victim assistance; prevention of violence, neglect, and exploitation; and child trafficking.(11) However, a source indicated that the Government's law enforcement personnel, particularly police officers who conduct foot patrols, lacked training in proper investigative techniques for child trafficking cases.(4)

Local NGO experts agree that weaknesses in the judicial system continue to hinder the Government's ability to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(4, 20, 48, 49) Sentences did not correspond with the severity of the crime. Minor victims of commercial sexual exploitation received penalties for engaging in commercial sex.(20)

The Ministry of Labor, Social Protection, and Family provided training to 900 mayors on the implementation of an interagency mechanism for the identification, referral, assistance, and monitoring of child victims and potential victims.(10) Although a reciprocal mechanism between criminal authorities and social services exists, there is insufficient cooperation between the agency members of the National Referral System.(4, 20) Also, CCTIP has established child interview rooms in each of Moldova's regions, but there is no specialized placement center for child victims of trafficking.(4, 20) The inability of local authorities to identify criminal acts was also of concern.(10)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on the Elimination of Child Labor (NSC)	Coordinate work on child labor issues at the national level among representatives from workers' organizations, NGOs, academia, and government agencies. The NSC did not meet in 2016.(10)
National Committee for Combating Trafficking in Persons (NCCTIP)	Coordinate efforts to prevent and combat child trafficking and child sexual exploitation. Members include government ministries.(10, 20) Through the Permanent Secretariat, monitor implementation of legal provisions on combating human trafficking as developed by the NCCTIP.(10) Draft provisions on human trafficking, participate in anti-trafficking campaigns, and develop national action plans.(4)
National Commission for Consultation and Collective Bargaining	Through the Permanent Council on Child Labor, inform and provide consultations to the Commission on issues arising from the worst forms of child labor. In 2016, the Commission met seven times.(10)
National Council for the Protection of Child Rights	Coordinate national efforts to combat child exploitation.(10) Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister. The Council met once in 2016.(10) Has a working group to discuss existing gaps in the current birth registration process and develop recommendations.(50, 51)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Moldova Action Program (2016–2018)†	Promotes the rights and protection of children, including the prevention and combating of violence, neglect, and exploitation.(52) Aims to increase the welfare, safety, and quality of life of citizens.
Action Plan for 2015–2016	Adopted by Government Decision No. 680. Includes actions to address child labor issues and promote children's rights, including for vulnerable groups.(2, 53) The Action Plan continued to be implemented in 2016.(10)
National Plan for Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (2014–2016)	Aims to improve anti-human trafficking efforts and reduce children's vulnerability to child labor and sexual exploitation by improving data collection, referral mechanisms, public awareness, and training for government officials.(54) Continued to implement the plan in 2016.(10)
Strategy of the National Referral System to Protect and Assist Victims and Potential Victims of Trafficking in Human Beings (NRS) (2009–2016)	Outlines a framework for the protection of victims of human trafficking. Focuses on raising awareness, improving victim identification, referral mechanisms, and training and technical assistance.(41) Regulates the work of the MDTs and the National Coordination Unit. Launched by the MLSPF.(41) The Government continued to implement the strategy in 2016.(10)
Action Plan to Support the Roma People (2016–2020)†	Aims to promote social inclusion of Roma. Includes the goals of education, social protection, and combating discrimination.(55) Funding comes from the Government, private partnerships, and the EU.(55, 56)
Child Protection Strategy (2014–2020)†	Includes the goals of preventing and combating violence, neglect, and the exploitation of children, and providing assistance to children's upbringing and development.(40, 57) In July 2016, the Government further approved the strategy for 2016–2020.(58)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The Government had a National Action Plan on the Prevention and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor, but it expired in 2015. Research found no evidence that a new national action plan has been developed.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
UNICEF-Government of Moldova Country Program (2013–2017) [†]	UNICEF and Government program to improve the social inclusion of vulnerable children. Focuses on migrant, Roma, and child victims of sexual exploitation and abuse.(24, 40) Program continued in 2016.(10)
Conditional Cash Transfer Program [†]	Government allocated $780,000 in financial support to give to vulnerable families with children to buy school items.(21) Lump sum support was given to 77,083 families with minor children from the allocated budget of $30 million.(10, 21, 44)
Structured Interviewing of Child Victims and Witnesses in Moldova (2014–2016) [†]	UNICEF, Oak Foundation, and USAID-funded project. Aimed to ensure that child victims of domestic violence and trafficking are treated fairly within the justice system.(2) Implemented by the National Center for the Prevention of Child Abuse, the PGO, the MOJ, and others.(2) Support for the program continued in 2016.(10)
ILO Projects [*]	Decent Work Country Program (2016–2020) aims to strengthen available statistics on child labor and improve the labor inspectorate, with a focus on construction and agriculture.(59) Promoting Decent Work for Roma Youth in Moldova focuses on policies to address Roma youth labor market integration for 15- to 29-year-olds.(60)
Center for Protection and Assistance for Victims of Human Trafficking	Child victims of human trafficking are offered legal and social support, accommodation, psychological assistance, and family reunification services.(10)
Child Helpline (2014–2016) [†]	Implemented by La Strada. Provided psychological counseling and information to parents and children who may be experiencing violence, neglect, or exploitation.(42, 61) In 2016, the Helpline received 9,495 calls and provided counseling to 6,321 children.(10, 20)
Shelters for Victims of Human Trafficking [†]	Government-funded shelters for children from Moldova and Transnistria.(20) Offer accommodations, rehabilitation, and reintegration services.(48) Program continued in 2016.(10)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Moldova.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(4, 10, 42-44, 62-66)

Existing social programs do not meet the current level of need, particularly for child victims of TIP requiring long-term care and children working in agriculture.(20)

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Mongolia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Mongolia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government expanded its List of Prohibited Work for Children, which bars children under age 18 from working in construction and mining, as well as in horse racing during the winter and spring seasons. The Family, Child, and Youth Development Agency organized training on the National Action Plan on Eliminating the Hazardous Work of Children and the revised hazardous work list for 55 local police staff and social workers in 27 counties. In addition, the Government expanded a nationwide, toll-free Child Helpline that receives and refers child labor complaints. Children in Mongolia perform dangerous tasks in herding, mining, and horse racing. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Labor inspectors lack adequate training on laws related to child labor, and state funding provided for the General Agency for Specialized Inspection is insufficient. The Government also lacks social programs to address child labor in certain relevant sectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mongolia perform dangerous tasks in herding, mining, and horse racing. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Mongolia National Child Labor Survey 2011–2012, published in 2013, indicates that 7.4 percent of 589,076 Mongolian children ages 5 to 17 engage in child labor, of which 11.1 percent, or 10,398 children, are involved in hazardous work. Nine out of 10 children exploited in situations of hazardous work are boys.(1, 2) According to the survey, children's employment is more prevalent in rural areas than in urban areas.(1, 3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mongolia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	13.8 (60,246)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	87.6
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	15.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Labor Force Survey-National Child Labor Survey, 2011–2012.(5) Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are not comparable with data published in the previous version of this report because of differences between surveys used to collect the data.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Herding [†] and animal husbandry [†] (1, 6-8)

	Forced labor in construction, mining, agriculture, horse jockeying, animal husbandry, industrial sectors, and contortionist work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (13, 14, 19)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Mongolian children are generally trafficked internally for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation in saunas, bars, hotels, karaoke clubs, and massage parlors.(6, 14, 19, 20) In addition, the Family, Child, and Youth Development Agency (FCYDA), formerly the National Authority for Children, estimates that Mongolia has 10,699 registered child jockeys, and nearly all of them (96 percent) are boys younger than age 18.(21) Child jockeys face a number of health and safety hazards, including exposure to extremely cold temperatures, risk of brain and bone injuries, and fatal falls.(16, 17) Participation in pre-training and spring racing may also negatively impact a child's school attendance, particularly when children as young as age 7 can participate in horse racing.(16, 17)

During the reporting period, government agencies collected data on exploitative child labor in Mongolia's capital city. The Ulaanbaatar FCYDA identified 78 children engaged in begging and referred them to social service providers.(8) In addition, the FCYDA identified 1,498 children ages 8 to 18 working in informal artisanal mining and removed 44 children from hazardous work to be assisted by Legal Assistance Centers.(8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Mongolia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Mongolia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 46 of the Law on Education (29, 30)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 16 of the Constitution of Mongolia; Article 5 of the Law on Education (31, 32)

In February 2016, the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection (MLSP) issued an order that expanded the types of hazardous work prohibited to children, including working and training as a horse jockey in winter and spring races, construction, and mining and exploration.(8, 18, 33, 34) In addition, the Government amended Article 109 of the Law on Labor to raise the minimum age for engaging in “light work” from 14 to 15 years, cap the workweek at 30 hours for children age 15 and under and 36 hours for children ages 16 and 17, prohibit children from engaging in irregular work conditions and work that affects their mental development and health, and extend labor protections to children working without employment contracts.(8, 22)

Mongolia’s Criminal Code does not sufficiently prohibit child trafficking, or the use, procurement, or offering of a child for commercial sexual exploitation or illicit activities, in accordance with international recommendations, as it leaves children age 16-17 vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(2, 35) In addition, laws related to forced labor are not sufficient, as debt bondage is not criminally prohibited.(2) Mongolia’s laws related to military service are not sufficient, as they do not prohibit non-state armed groups from recruiting children under 18.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
General Agency for Specialized Inspection (GASI)	Enforce labor laws, including child labor. Conduct inspections at registered businesses.(20) As independent agency, reports to the Deputy Prime Minister.(8)
Family, Child, and Youth Development Agency (FCYDA)	Implement programs directed toward families and children for the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection and other government agencies. Perform secretarial duties of the National Committee on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(8)
National Police Agency (NPA)	Maintain primary responsibility for investigating criminal cases. Report to the Ministry of Justice and Internal Affairs (MOJIA).(8)

Metropolitan Police Department	Operate under the NPA and oversee police operations in Ulaanbaatar's 17 district police offices.(8) Enforce labor laws and identify children in hazardous labor.(20)
Division for the Prevention of Domestic Violence and Crimes Against Children	Operate under the Metropolitan Police Department and protect unattended children on the streets. Identify and refer children to their parents or to Child Care and Protection Centers.(37)
General Authority for Citizenship and Migration	Register Mongolian citizens who enter and exit the country. Track children who leave Mongolia and do not return, as well as pregnant Mongolian women who leave Mongolia to give birth and return without their child.(19) Follow up with law enforcement as necessary.(19)
Marshal (Takhar) Service	Provide protection to victims and witnesses throughout the judicial process. Work toward establishing shelters throughout the country.(37, 38) Abolished in July 2016; responsibilities assumed by the National Police Agency.(8)

* The Government does not make this information publicly available.

NGOs and government officials reported that the enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the legal requirement to provide 48 hours advance notification for inspections and the lack of resources for inspections, including the number of inspectors and the state funding provided to the General Agency for Specialized Inspection (GASI). In 2016, GASI employed 63 labor inspectors, a decrease from 88 in the previous year as a result of administrative restructuring.(8) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Mongolia's workforce, which includes over 1,164,000 workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Mongolia should employ roughly 78 labor inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.

Mongolia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

While new inspectors receive an initial training course that includes a component on child labor, existing labor inspectors last received training in 2014.(8) Research indicates that employers often disregard the law and require minors to work over 40 hours per week and pay them less than the minimum wage.(13)

In 2016, GASI conducted an unspecified number of horse racing inspections in 20 of Mongolia's 21 provinces to verify that riders met the minimum age requirement and used proper safety equipment. During these visits, GASI inspectors imposed a total of 105 fines, prevented 212 underage children from participating in the races as jockeys, and corrected 932 safety equipment violations.(8) In addition, GASI worked with provincial governments to increase public awareness of horse racing safety, provided hand-outs to horse trainers, and conducted a joint training with FCYDA in Omnogovi province for 130 children at a summer camp; however, FCYDA reports that some individuals avoid regulations by registering their races as family gatherings.(8)

Child labor and child rights violations can be reported to the FCYDA through a nationwide, toll-free Child Helpline commonly known as "108," which is staffed with 22 dedicated employees as well as a social worker and response team who are available 24 hours.(8, 40) During the reporting period, the Child Helpline received 1,069 calls, of which 48 calls were related to child labor.(41)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Mongolia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, several entities provided training to law enforcement officials on combating human trafficking and child labor laws. The National Police Agency (NPA) reported that 191 officers received training on the new laws on child rights and child protection.(8) The FCYDA organized training on the National Action Plan on Eliminating the Hazardous Work of Children and the revised hazardous work list for 55 local police staff and social workers in 27 counties.

However, despite these capacity-building efforts, police officers reported that there is a general lack of knowledge and training on how to apply criminal trafficking laws to cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children. Authorities use provisions of the Criminal Code that carry less stringent penalties when boys are the victims of human trafficking due to the misconception among government officials that only girls can be victims of human trafficking.(14) As a result, many cases that could have been prosecuted under the human trafficking article of the Criminal Code were instead prosecuted under related articles of the Criminal Code that carry lighter penalties.(20, 42, 43)

NPA investigators use an 11-question risk assessment checklist to help them accurately identify human trafficking victims. Investigators refer victims who meet more than five of the criteria to short- or long-term care facilities.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Coordinating Council to Implement the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (Coordinating Council)	Guide government efforts on child labor and implementation of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Chaired by the MLSP, with the FCYDA as the lead implementing agency.(8) Comprises 21 organizations.(20, 44)
Anti-Trafficking Sub-Council (Sub-Council)	Coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking and monitor implementation of anti-trafficking legislation. Function as a part of the Council on Crime Prevention under the MOJIA.(19, 20) Currently has 15 members representing 12 different organizations, including two NGOs.(19)

Following the June 2016 parliamentary elections, personnel changes and government restructuring prevented further meetings of the Coordinating Council to Implement the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor until 2017.(8)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Program for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2011–2016) and National Action Plan (2014–2016)	Identifies specific actions to combat child labor through 2016 in a National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Aims to improve legal protection for children and increase children's access to health care and education.(11) Will be included as sub-programs in the new Child Protection Strategy (2017–2020).(8)
State Policy on Herders	Describes the conditions and criteria for engaging children in herding, to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in that sector.(45, 46) Activities include projects to improve housing and access to information for herders and to ensure that herder children receive an education. Each year, the Government sets aside one percent of its budget for implementation of the policy.(39)
National Development Strategy	Calls for improvements in education, health, social welfare, and labor policies through 2020. Priorities include the education, safety, and health of vulnerable children.(47)
Child Protection Strategy (2011–2016)	Aims to provide child welfare programs at the local level in collaboration with NGOs and local government offices. Includes a component related to child labor prevention and elimination.(20, 48)

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Justice and Internal Affairs submitted a draft National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Persons for 2017–2021 to the cabinet, which aims to strengthen efforts to prevent and combat different types of human trafficking, including commercial sexual exploitation.(49)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL-funded projects that aim to promote the safety and health of young workers on the job; build the capacity of the national government and legislation; conduct research and data collection; strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers; and increase the public's awareness of children engaged in hazardous work and its negative consequences through posters and television. These projects include Building a Generation of Safe and Healthy Workers: Safe and Healthy Youth , implemented by the ILO with Mongolia as one of the countries, and the Global Action Program (GAP) on Child Labor Issues , implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, including Mongolia. For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Children's Money Program†	General Agency for Social Welfare and Service, General Agency for State Registration, and Human Development Fund program that distributes approximately $12 per month to children under age 18 from families in need.(10) Partial continuation of a former program that distributed national profits from mineral resources to funding for health insurance, pensions, and education tuition.(20, 50–52)
School Lunch Program†	Government program that subsidizes meals to encourage low-income children to attend school, particularly at the secondary level.(20)

† Program is funded by the Government of Mongolia.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(8)

Mongolia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the MLSP and FCYDA distributed $64,104 to local governments in Mongolia for programs aimed at preventing and reducing child labor and supporting the employment of adult family members.(8)

During the previous two reporting periods, two programs that formerly provided shelter and social services to children working on the street were discontinued. The Address Identification Center was converted to a shelter for victims of domestic violence, and the Child Development and Protection Center became an orphanage.(37) This reduction in care centers leaves street children vulnerable to involvement in child labor. Although the Government continued to operate mining, cash transfer, and school lunch programs, research found no evidence that the Government carried out programs specifically designed to assist children working in herding and those working on the street.(8)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Montenegro

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Montenegro made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Information about the Labor Inspectorate's funding was made publicly available, and the police conducted targeted investigations of begging, which resulted in 45 children being rescued and sent to Social Welfare Centers. In addition, the Government approved the Strategy for the Social Inclusion of Roma and Egyptians, which aims to prevent child begging and trafficking through increased school attendance and birth registration. However, children in Montenegro engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The law has not defined light work for children and allows employees between ages 15 and 18 to work at night in certain circumstances. Victim identification remained an area requiring improvement in order for the Government to combat human trafficking effectively.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Montenegro engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Montenegro.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (%)	5 to 14	18.3 (77,591)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	91.6
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	19.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		92.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 5, 2013.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street work, including collecting scrap metal, vending small goods, washing car windows, and begging (1, 4, 9-12)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking (5, 6)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 4, 6, 11)
	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking (6, 13)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Montenegro is a source, destination, and transit country for children trafficked for forced labor, including forced begging, especially among Roma children.(1, 4, 6, 9, 11) Some Roma girls are sold into servile marriages in Montenegro and Kosovo from Montenegro, where they are also forced into domestic servitude.(6, 13) Children, especially girls, are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation, internally and transnationally within the region and to Western Europe.(5, 6, 11, 14)

Birth certification is required for attending school in Montenegro. Some Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian children experience challenges in attaining birth registration, which makes school enrollment difficult, increasing their vulnerability to engage in child labor.(9-11, 14-19) The higher rate of unregistered children is mostly due to registration costs, parents' lack of awareness of the importance of registration, and parents' lack of identification documents.(19, 20) In addition, some children with disabilities, especially in rural areas, experience difficulty accessing education and have limited government social services available.(21, 22)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Montenegro has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Montenegro's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Montenegro ratified the ILO Convention on Night Work, which will take effect in 2017.(30) The Code of Rules for Occupational Safety prescribes workplace protections and prohibits specific hazardous activities for children, including workplaces that would expose them to physical, biological, or chemical hazards.(4, 24) However, street work, an area in which there is evidence of children engaged in carrying heavy loads by collecting scrap metal and vending goods, is not prohibited.(4, 12) Light work for children has also not been defined, and the Labor Law allows employees between the ages of 15 to 18 to work at night in circumstances in which it is necessary to continue work interrupted by natural disasters or to mitigate damage to raw or other materials.(23)

Montenegro

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Labor Inspectorate	Lead and monitor the enforcement of labor laws, including those that protect working children and working conditions in workplaces throughout the country.(4, 20, 31, 32)
Police Directorate within the Ministry of Interior and Supreme State Prosecutor	Investigate and enforce criminal laws on forced labor and human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 31) Police coordinate law enforcement actions, including identification of victims of human trafficking.(2) Collect data on the number of police investigations, convictions, and court rulings, and submit them to the Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator (Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Office).(2)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce the Criminal Code by prosecuting crimes against children, including human trafficking, child begging, and child abuse.(32)
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MLSW)	Protect children and families by providing social, child, and family protection in its Social Welfare Centers. Identify potential victims of human trafficking.(2)
Ombudsman's Deputy for the Rights of the Child	Monitor the situation of children in the country, using strategies such as visiting schools and institutions, holding focus groups, and writing blogs for children.(31)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Montenegro took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The Labor Inspectorate has 14 offices that proactively plan labor inspections, with an increase in inspections during the summer tourist seasons in specific sectors, such as trade and catering.(4, 20, 33) Children found during inspections can be sent to Social Welfare Centers (SWCs) and accommodated in a government-financed, NGO-run shelter for trafficking in persons (TIP) victims.(33) There are 25 labor inspectors that cover employment relations and 9 that cover health safety issues at work. All inspectors monitor the enforcement of child labor.(33) The Government maintains a database on children involved in begging but does not collect or publish data on the worst forms of child labor.(31, 35)

In 2016, resources for the Labor Inspectorate, including the number of labor inspectors and funding, were sufficient according to the Government.(33) Inspectors found, imposed, and collected fines related to 12 violations of child labor in the informal trade sector.(33) Inspectors attended general training on TIP, which included discussions on forced labor, organized by the Office of the Anti-Trafficking Coordinator (TIP Office).(33)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Montenegro took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

A three-member police unit investigates TIP and advises local police. In 2016, resources and funding were sufficient according to the Government and international organizations.(33) During the year, labor inspectors, social workers, and representatives received training on identification of victims of human trafficking for labor exploitation and participated in discussions on child labor.(5, 33, 34) The TIP Office also organized trainings for 91 border policemen and 17 representatives of the Police Directorate on early identification of TIP victims.(5, 33)

Children that are found begging or require social assistance can be accommodated in a public institution for up to 30 days while parents are located.(4, 33) When parents are not available, children are referred to local SWCs.(36) Police sent 45 children to SWCs in 2016.(33) In addition, the police continued to run taskforces focusing on identifying victims of commercial sexual exploitation and removing child beggars from the streets.(5) In 2016, 73 investigations related to begging were conducted on 230 individuals, of which 75 were found to be juveniles. However, continuous victim identification training is needed for the police, judiciary, and prosecutors.(4, 5, 21, 34) The Ombudsman for Human Rights has criticized the police and SWCs for insufficiently and inconsistently tracking information on children caught begging.(13) Also of concern was that child beggars were treated as delinquents rather than victims, the SWCs provided services only to a small minority of Montenegrin child beggars, and there was a lack of specialized societal reintegration services.(13, 31, 37)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Montenegro

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator (TIP Office)	Coordinate efforts, projects, and legislation against trafficking in persons and the worst forms of child labor among relevant government institutions and international organizations.(2, 22) Collect and maintain data on investigations and court rulings. A task force monitors and promotes activities related to combating human trafficking, and assesses progress of objectives established in action plans.(2, 22) Includes government representatives, NGOs, and international organizations, and held a meeting in 2016. The Government increased TIP Office and shelter funding and held a forced begging awareness campaign in 2016.(5, 34)
Council for the Rights of the Child	Implement and monitor the National Plan for Children 2013–2017 and the Government’s commitments pursuant to the CRC, and initiate adoption of legislation to promote and protect the rights of children. Chaired by the Minister of Labor and Social Welfare.(3, 34, 38) Met once in 2016.(39)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action for Children (2013–2017)	Defines and protects children and children’s rights.(31, 34) Outlines a strategy to fulfill CRC obligations. Goals include preventing hazardous and exploitative child labor and child trafficking, increasing birth registration, ensuring inclusive education, and improving social services for street children.(38) Monitors and reports yearly progress.(12)
Strategy for Improving the Position of Roma and Egyptians in Montenegro (2012–2016)	Addresses policies, education, and child protection for Roma and other minorities. Implemented by the Ministry for Minority and Human Rights.(31, 32) Goals include increasing birth registration through campaigns and eliminating begging among Roma and Egyptian children.(18) In 2016, more than 80 percent of refugees and internally displaced persons were provided with documentation.(34)
Strategy for the Social Inclusion of Roma and Egyptians (2016–2020) [†]	Aims to create social inclusion of Roma and Egyptians by increasing school attendance and birth registration, and preventing child begging and human trafficking. Implemented by the Ministry for Minority and Human Rights.(40)
Guidelines for the Treatment of Unaccompanied Minors	Provides accommodation, protection, and rehabilitation for minors and other vulnerable groups. Implemented by the MLSW.(41, 42)
UNICEF Country Program (2016–2021) [†]	Addresses access to social services for children, synchronizes the legal framework with EU and UN standards, implements and monitors policies relevant to children, and applies the principles of the CRC.(13, 17, 43)
National Strategy for Combating Human Trafficking (2012–2018)	Outlines objectives for combating human trafficking by raising public awareness, strengthening the capacity for victim identification and service provision, improving interagency coordination, and raising the efficiency of prosecutions.(21, 44) The strategy and yearly action plan are evaluated and adopted through reports prepared through government and civil society collaboration.(21) In 2016, the Government passed an action plan for 2016 outlining specific activities, partners, and indicators of success.(45)
Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection (2013–2017)	Builds an integrated social and child protection system, including monthly social assistance, health care, and a child allowance that is conditional on school attendance.(46, 47)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2016, the Government did not include child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection.(48) Research could not determine if the National Plan of Action for Children and Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection were active.(13)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Social Welfare and Child Care System Reform: Enhancing Social Inclusion (2013–2017) [†]	$4.5 million, 4-year project sponsored by the Ministry of Education and the MLSW. Implemented by the Government, the UNDP, and UNICEF to strengthen protection for children under the Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection, including inclusive education and child care system reform.(35, 46)
Shelter for Victims of Human Trafficking, Forced Begging, and Forced Marriages [‡]	Run by the NGO Montenegrin Women's Lobby and the Government, and provides accommodations for children who are separated from adults and victims of forced begging and forced marriages.(33) In 2016, three female children who were victims of human trafficking, including forced begging, were housed.(33) The Government allocated $29,697 to the shelter in 2016.(34)
Hotline for Victims of Human Trafficking	SOS Hotline [†] funded by the TIP Office and run by the NGO Montenegrin Women's Lobby. Provides advice, connects victims with service providers, and raises public awareness.(2, 21) In 2016, the Hotline received 414 calls with 15 being from potential TIP victims. SOS Hotline for Victims of TIP, operated by the NGO SOS Niksic, received 3,384 calls in 2016.(34)

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(3-5, 20, 33, 35)

Research could not determine if the Social Welfare and Child Care System Reform was active in 2016. In addition, research found no evidence of programs to systematically address child labor in street work, forced begging, and commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 13)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Montenegro (Table 11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Morocco made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Law on Trafficking in Human Beings, improving protections for children vulnerable to trafficking, and the Law on Setting Up Employment Conditions of Domestic Workers, limiting the employment of children between the ages of 16 and 18 for domestic work. The Government also removed children found to be engaged in hazardous work as a result of labor inspections and launched an implementation plan for the Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children in Morocco, which aims to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. In addition, the Government continued to fund the Tayssir Conditional Cash Transfer Program, providing direct cash transfers of between $7 and $16 a month to qualifying families whose children meet school attendance criteria. However, children in Morocco perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The number of labor inspectors is insufficient to effectively enforce child labor laws. In addition, although the Government of Morocco has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Morocco perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-10) Government statistics from 2015 showed 59,010 children ages 7 to 15 working; however, the Government does not make its data on child labor statistics publicly available.(11) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Morocco.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10 to 14	4.5 (150,178)
Attending School (%)	6 to 14	82.9
Combining Work and School (%)	10 to 14	0.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		102.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(12)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Enquête sur la Population et la Santé Familiale, 2003–2004.(13)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Begging as a result of human trafficking (5-7)

	Forced labor in the production of artisanal crafts and construction (14, 22)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Morocco is a source, destination, and transit country for children subjected to forced labor and sex trafficking.(8-10, 22, 23)

Some rural Moroccan girls, sometimes as young as six according to local union observations, as well as girls from Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Nigeria, and Senegal, are recruited for domestic work in private urban homes. These girls then become victims of forced labor, and some are subjected to physical and verbal abuse, excessive working 100 or more hours per week, without rest or days off, and no access to educational opportunities.(7, 10, 14, 22, 24, 30)

Inadequate transportation, distance from schools, and prohibitive costs, associated with attending school, along with lack of security and inclusiveness, create barriers for children to access education and increase vulnerability to child labor, especially in rural areas.(1, 4, 7, 31-35) In addition, children with disabilities face additional barriers to education.(7, 14, 36) Some migrant children, particularly unaccompanied children from sub-Saharan Africa, as well as rural children, face barriers to accessing education, such as the language of instruction. Furthermore, because birth certificates are required to attend school past the fifth grade, many unregistered children remain out of school and vulnerable to child labor.(14, 21, 37-39) In 2016, the Government announced a second regularization campaign to improve access to education for migrant children.(33)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Morocco has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Morocco's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

* No conscription (46)

In 2016, Morocco passed the Law on Trafficking in Human Beings, which is consistent with the Palermo Protocol and other international agreements.(42, 47) The Government also passed the Law on Setting Up Employment Conditions of Domestic Workers that provides protections for child domestic workers, setting the minimum age at 16 for domestic work and 18 for hazardous domestic work; permits labor inspectors to mediate disputes between employers and domestic workers; and authorizes the Government to prosecute intermediaries who traffic children for labor exploitation.(47-50)

The Ministry of Justice began drafting supplementary provisions and amendments to the penal code aimed at increasing penalties in cases involving the facilitation of the use of narcotic drugs by a minor and in cases involving providing access to narcotic drugs to minors in schools.(33)

Minimum age protections in the Labor Code do not apply to self-employed children, those who work in the traditional artisan or handicraft sectors for businesses with fewer than five employees, or those who work in private farms and residences, leaving children vulnerable to exploitation.(6, 14, 40, 51, 52) The types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not fully cover sectors in which child labor is known to occur, and sectors in which work may be undertaken in conditions that harm children's health, safety, and morals.(41)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs	Enforce child labor laws and oversee programs on child labor through its child labor task force. Employ labor inspectors in 51 inspectorates across Morocco; dedicate at least one of the 53 child labor inspectors to each inspectorate.(4, 6, 39) Provide occupational health and safety services, administer social security, and organize labor inspections and employment services through nationwide satellite offices.(4)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforce prohibitions on prostitution and other exploitative crimes involving minors as established in the Penal Code.(6, 53)
Ministry of Justice and Liberties	Prosecute criminal offenses against children, such as commercial sexual exploitation and child trafficking, and violations of labor laws.(6, 54) The Ministry's Child Labor Units process cases involving women and children within the court system.(2)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Morocco took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

† Data are from January 1, 2015 to June 30, 2015.

In 2016, labor inspectors issued 79 formal notices, 15 fines, and 3 official reports in the course of 543 child labor inspections.(57) They removed 80 children under age 15 from work, and 166 children between ages 15 and 17 from hazardous work.(57) The sectors most frequently inspected included trade, agriculture, and metal and wood work, with 22 inspectors dedicated to agriculture and 23 engineers and 18 physicians in charge of health and safety labor inspections.(39, 56) Inadequate resources, including an insufficient number of inspectors, hamper the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(6, 33, 55, 58) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Morocco's workforce, which includes over 12 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Morocco should employ roughly 815 inspectors.(55, 59, 60) The official procedures involved with processing child labor violations require the participation of several agencies per case, which places considerable administrative burdens on labor inspectors.(2) Lastly, government officials, local stakeholders, and the ILO Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations report that the penalties against companies that employ children in hazardous work, set forth in the Labor Code, are ineffective deterrents.(51, 55)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Morocco took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, the Government, in partnership with international organizations, provided regular anti-trafficking trainings to judicial and law enforcement officials on trafficking in persons, noting the distinctions among trafficking, smuggling, and irregular migration.(22, 23, 33) Criminal authorities refer victims to appropriate social services through coordination with the 53 Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs dedicated child labor inspectors and other government entities and civil society actors.(33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Technical Committee Under the Special Ministerial Commission for Children for the Protection and Improvement of Childhood	Ensure inter-sectoral coordination and monitoring of the implementation of international conventions on the issue of children through a committee of 25 government bodies, chaired by the President of the Government of the Kingdom of Morocco. Establish strategies and mechanisms to implement national policies and plans in the area of child protection and in coordination efforts managed primarily at the local and regional levels.(39)
Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs	Coordinate policies and efforts to combat child labor, providing guidance and limited funding to NGOs working against child labor through its Office for the Fight Against Child Labor.(2, 4, 62)
Ministry of Solidarity, Women, Family, and Social Development (MSWFSD)	Establish continuity of child protection and child labor elimination efforts to expand children's access to education.(53, 63) Responsible for implementing the Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children.(5, 6) Support 142 Child Reception Centers that provide services to child victims of violence.(39)
Ministry in Charge of Residents and Migration Affairs	Coordinate efforts to reduce migrant vulnerability to child labor. Promote migrant children's access to public education facilities in addition to other social services and assistance.(4, 57)
Ministry of National Educational and Vocational Training (MONEVT)	Provide education and job training to former child workers, including former child domestic workers and migrant youth.(22, 39)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
MSWFSD's Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children in Morocco (PPIPEM)	Promotes an interdisciplinary approach to respond to child exploitation, among other issues.(4-6) In 2016, MSWFSD launched a National Implementation Program that defines the necessary measures to reach the five strategic objectives of the PPIPEM and the responsibilities of each Government of Morocco entity including deadlines, and monitoring and evaluation indicators.(33, 56, 64, 65)

Morocco

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Migration Strategy and UNDAF.(2, 4, 66-68)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects to Address Child Labor	USDOL projects in Morocco aim to reduce child labor by increasing access to education, by providing livelihood and other social services, and by improving the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research in Morocco. These projects include Promise Pathways: Reducing Child Labor Through Viable Paths in Education and Decent Work (2014–2017), $5 million project implemented by Creative Associates; Wad3éyati (My Situation: Promoting Gender Equality in the Workplace) , $1.25 million project implemented by Management Systems International; and Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues , implemented in approximately 40 countries by the ILO.(4, 56, 69, 70) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our website .
Tayssir Conditional Cash Transfer Program‡	MONEVT program that provides direct cash transfers of between $7 and $16 a month to qualifying families whose children meet school attendance criteria and that aims to increase school enrollment and reduce dropout rates, particularly in rural areas, with 832,500 beneficiaries in 2015–2016 and an estimated 2016–2017 budget of $77.7 million.(4, 18, 27, 53, 57, 71)
Entraide Nationale‡	Program to prevent child labor by improving school retention rates, in particular for girls in rural areas. Coordinates with MSWFSD and provides social services and manages education and literacy programs in MSWFSD's social protection centers, Dar al Atfal , Dar Talib , and Dar Taliba , and two education, training, and integration programs for vulnerable children—Education and Training Centers and Apprenticeship Training Programs.(33, 56) In 2016, the Government of Morocco reported that there were 22 Child Protection Centers managed by Entraide Nationale , with 2,161 beneficiaries, providing the following services: preventive intervention; personal, social, and educational support for minors; prevention of situations of child vulnerability; emergency response; and prevention and early intervention in situations of violence perpetrated against minors.(33, 56)
Government-Funded Shelters‡	Government-operated shelters that include Child Protection Centers, operated by the Ministry of Youth and Sport, which provide social and educational services to minors referred by the courts, along with victims of abuse, child laborers, and street children, and 96 Child Reception Centers, operated by the National Observatory for Children's Rights and staffed by nurses and social workers, which operate at major hospitals to provide medical services to victims of violence and trafficking in persons.(55, 72, 73) In 2016, research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken.(39)
After-School Program for a Second Chance (E2C)‡	Program that provides students with afterschool educational assistance as part of non-formal education program engagement. During the 2015–2016 school year, 70,000 students benefited from enrollment in E2C programs, and these programs included an education integration component for 721 migrant children.(5, 55)
USAID-Funded Projects to Address Child Labor	USAID projects in Morocco that aim to increase the social and economic inclusion of at-risk youth (10–24-year-olds) living in marginalized neighborhoods of Tangier and Tetouan. These projects include Favorable Opportunities to Reinforce Self-Advancement for Today's Youth (FORSATY) (2012–2017), $8.7 million project implemented by Search for Common Ground.(55)

‡ The Government had other programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(2, 4-6, 55, 56)

Although the Government has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(4, 33, 74)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Mozambique

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Mozambique made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government released the results of a child labor study. However, children in Mozambique perform dangerous tasks in the production of tobacco. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work. The law does not prohibit hazardous occupations or activities for children. It establishes 15 as the minimum age for work, but education is compulsory only until age 13, leaving children ages 13 and 14 vulnerable to child labor. Law enforcement agencies lack the capacity to adequately address the scope of child labor in the country, including its worst forms. In addition, the Government does not have a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address all of the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mozambique perform dangerous tasks in the production of tobacco. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mozambique.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	22.5 (1,526,560)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	69.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	22.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		47.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Clusters Survey 3, 2008.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cashews, cotton, rice, sesame, sugarcane, tea, and tobacco (1-4, 7-13)
	Fishing, including preparing nets (7, 9)
	Forestry, activities unknown (7)
	Cattle herding (9)
Industry	Mining, including gold and gemstones (4, 9, 12, 14-18)
	Construction, including crushing stone and making bricks (9, 18)
Services	Domestic work, including caring for babies and other children (1-3, 9, 11, 15, 19, 20)
	Street work, including car washing, street vending, garbage scavenging, collecting scrap metal, and begging (4, 7, 9-13, 20-25)
	Selling alcoholic beverages in markets (11, 24)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 9, 12, 13, 18, 26-31)
	Forced labor in agriculture, domestic work, mining, and vending, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (9, 10, 15, 16, 29)
	Use in illicit activities, including stealing and assisting poachers in the illegal poaching industry (9, 11)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Mozambican children, lured from rural areas with promises of work and educational opportunities, are subjected to forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation in urban areas in Mozambique and South Africa.(10, 15, 29, 30, 32) Girls from Malawi, Swaziland, and Zimbabwe voluntarily migrate to Mozambique, where they subsequently become victims of commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic work.(13, 27, 29) Research indicates that Mozambican children, particularly boys, are sometimes trafficked to South Africa for forced labor in agriculture, mining, and street vending.(10, 29)

Although tuition for primary education is free, families must provide supplies and uniforms.(13) Moreover, there are not enough schools; many students face difficulties traveling long distances to get to school, particularly in rural areas.(23, 33, 34) In addition, physical and sexual abuse is common in schools. Research found that some teachers demand sex from female students to promote them to the next grade.(13, 35)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Mozambique has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Mozambique's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 26 of the Labor Law; Article 4 of the Regulations on Domestic Work (36, 37)

[‡] Age calculated based on available information(42,43)

Mozambique

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

The Labor Law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working outside of formal employment relationships.(37, 43, 44)

The Regulations on Domestic Work allow children ages 12 to 15 to conduct domestic work with the permission of their legal guardian.(36) The Labor Law also states that children ages 12 to 15 may work under certain conditions defined by the Council of Ministers.(37) The minimum age of 12 for light work is not in compliance with international standards; the law does not determine the activities in which light work may be permitted, prescribe the number of hours per week for light work, or specify the conditions under which light work may be undertaken.(43)

The gap between the end of compulsory education and the minimum age for work leaves children ages 13 and 14 vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms, because they are not in school, but they also may not legally work.(43)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and most enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security	Enforce laws and regulations on child labor.(45) The Labor Inspectorate works with the National Police Force to enforce criminal law.(7)
National Police Force	Enforce all criminal laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(7) The Criminal Investigation Branch has a seven-person unit devoted to anti-human trafficking and violence against women and children; investigates cases and refers them to the Attorney General's Office.(7)
Attorney General's Office	Coordinate the Government's efforts against human trafficking and receive cases from the criminal investigation branch of the National Police Force for prosecution.(7, 46)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Mozambique took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The Government reported that the number of labor inspectors is insufficient.(47) Furthermore, inadequate training and resources hamper the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(47, 50)

Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security officials can refer victims of child labor to either the police or social workers from the Ministry of Gender, Children, and Social Action (MGCAS) for family assessment and potential placement of the children in foster homes.(51)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Mozambique took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Research found that law enforcement officials responsible for investigating and prosecuting criminal child labor cases are poorly trained.(9, 50) Many cases are of very low quality and lack appropriate evidence for prosecution.(7)

In 2016, the Government drafted a national referral mechanism for victims of human trafficking.(48, 53) Criminal law enforcement officials referred nine potential child trafficking victims to a MGCAS transit center. MGCAS worked with an international organization to return the children to their communities and provide reintegration assistance.(47) Research did not find referral mechanisms for victims of other worst forms of child labor.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Reference Group for the Protection of Children and Combating Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate efforts to combat all forms of human trafficking. Led by the Attorney General's Office.(52) Provincial level groups coordinate regional efforts to combat human trafficking.(29) In 2016, 30 representatives from member institutions were trained on victim identification.(53) Provincial groups coordinated child labor awareness campaigns in urban and rural areas.(53)
National Council on the Rights of the Child	Coordinate efforts to promote the welfare of children. Led by the Ministry of Gender, Children, and Social Action (MGCAS).(54)
National Commission on Children's Rights	Oversee and report on children's rights in Mozambique to the African Charter and other international bodies; perform consultations and deliberations on national action plans and legislation. Led by MGCAS.(51)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The Ministry of Interior's Women and Children Victim Assistance Units (GAMC)	Provide services to children who have been victims of crimes, including human trafficking. Officials operated facilities throughout the country in more than 215 police stations.(29, 55)
MGCAS	Provide support and reintegration services to victims of human trafficking.(46)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Children II (2013–2019)	Establishes four priority areas: child survival, child development, child protection, and child participation. Aims to reduce child labor in the area of child protection.(56)

[‡] The Government had other policies which may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(57)

Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Action Plan for Children II during the reporting period. The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Strategic Plan.(58)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
USDOL-funded Project	The Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (GAP) is implemented in at least 40 countries by the ILO.(59) In 2014, the Government began analyzing national child labor data from the Mozambique Integrated Household Survey ; however, the Government has not yet developed a final report presenting the study's findings.(44) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Trafficking in Persons Project (2014–2017)	$750,000, USDOS-funded, 3-year project implemented by IOM to support the establishment and institutionalization of services for victims of human trafficking.(60)
Cash Transfer Program [†]	Government and donor-funded program that provides cash transfers to children heads of households until age 18.(7, 61)
Programs For Street Children [†]	Government and civil society operate 176 shelter centers that provide education, occupational training activities, health, and psychosocial care for street children.(61, 62)
Victims of Violence Centers [†]	Government-funded program implemented by GAMC that provides temporary shelter, food, limited counseling, and monitoring for victims of crime following reintegration. There are 22 centers located throughout the country.(29, 46)
Speak Child-116	NGO-funded program that works with the Government to run a hotline to receive complaints of child abuse, including those related to child labor and sexual exploitation.(44) Research found that the hotline lacks adequate equipment and human resources and has not received sufficient support from the Government to respond to complaints.(63)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Mozambique.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(64, 65)

In June 2016, the Government presented the results of a child labor study conducted in collaboration with Eduardo Mondlane University.(66) The study found that 79 percent of children in Mozambique work in agriculture; children also were found working in commerce, construction, mining, and commercial sexual exploitation.(18)

Research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to assist children engaged in domestic work. The scope of existing programs also is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Mozambique (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children working outside of formal employment relationships.	2015 – 2016
	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2009 – 2016

Enforcement	Make law enforcement information publicly available, including the Labor Inspectorate's funding, the number and training of labor inspectors, the number and type of labor inspections conducted, the number of child labor violations found, the number of penalties imposed and collected; as well as the training of investigators responsible for enforcing laws related to the worst forms of child labor, the number of investigations conducted, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions achieved.	2009 – 2016
	Allocate sufficient resources for law enforcement agencies, including by increasing the number of labor inspectors to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2009 – 2016
	Provide labor inspectors with adequate training on child labor and provide adequate training to criminal law enforcement officials to ensure violators are prosecuted.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Namibia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Namibia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the year, the Government developed a draft National Action Plan Against Child Labor and Domestic Work, participated in the Combatting Human Trafficking Initiative implemented by the IOM, and reactivated the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Labor. Children in Namibia perform dangerous tasks in cattle herding. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The key legislative gap is that hazardous work prohibitions for children in the agriculture sector are not comprehensive. There are no existing social programs that specifically target child labor in agriculture.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Namibia perform dangerous tasks in cattle herding. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Namibia. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		86.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(5)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Tending and herding livestock, including cattle, sheep, and goats (1, 4, 7-9)
Services	Domestic work (8-14)
	Working in bars called shebeens (9, 15)
	Street work, including selling candies, fruits, handicrafts, and cell phone air time vouchers (15, 16)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4)
	Forced labor in agriculture, cattle herding, and domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 9, 15)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked within the country for forced labor in agriculture, cattle herding, domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation. San and Zemba children are particularly vulnerable to forced labor on farms or in homes.(4) Children from Angola, Zambia, and Zimbabwe are sometimes trafficked into the country for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in fishing and street work. Some Angolan children are trafficked into Namibia for forced labor in cattle herding.(4) Children orphaned as a result of HIV/AIDS are particularly vulnerable to child labor.(4, 8, 15) The Government has not collected and published data on child labor, including its worst forms, to inform policies and social programs.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Namibia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Namibia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

The types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not specifically include livestock herding, where there is evidence of work under particularly difficult conditions.(25) The MLIREC reported that it drafted additional hazardous work prohibitions, but these have not been approved.(16, 22, 26) The Government in 2015 drafted the National Human Trafficking Bill to extend protections to victims of trafficking and establish specific criminal penalties to punish traffickers, but it has not been finalized and passed into law.(13, 27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations and Employment Creation (MLIREC)	Enforce child labor laws and investigate allegations of violations, including forced labor and cases involving human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(1, 10, 28) Work with the Ministry of Safety and Security (MSS); Ministry of Gender, Equality, and Child Welfare (MGECW); Namibia Central Intelligence Service; and Ministry of Education (MOE) on child labor matters.(1, 10) Lead these ministries in joint inspection teams.(1, 10, 28)
Ministry of Safety and Security (MSS)	Enforce criminal laws and conduct site visits with labor inspectors.(1, 10) The MSS through the Namibian Police handles enforcement.(10)
Ministry of Gender, Equality, and Child Welfare (MGECW)	Collaborate with the Namibian Police's Gender Based Violence Protection Units (GBVPU) on cases involving human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(10, 28, 29) Remove children from child labor situations during inspections and take them to a regional GBVPU to receive assistance from MGECW social workers or one of eight MGECW shelters in the country.(29)
Joint Child Labor Inspection Committee	Coordinate activities to enforce child labor laws. Committee includes MLIREC, MSS, and MGECW.(1) Refer children identified during labor inspections to MGECW social workers or to an MGECW shelter for care.(1)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Namibia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

‡ Data are from January 1, 2016 to December 31, 2016.

Research indicates that MLIREC primarily conducts inspections in the formal sector in urban areas, leaving self-employed children and children working in rural areas unprotected.(9) MLIREC lacked clarity on international child labor definitions, especially concerning hazardous work for children, indicating a need for additional training.(9) Although inspectors have the legal authority to inspect private farms, they often encounter difficulties accessing the farms due to locked gates.(9, 14) NGOs also reported difficulties accessing such locations while accompanying inspectors on child labor investigations.(1, 26, 31) To address this challenge, MLIREC partnered with the Namibia Agricultural Union so that inspectors could access farms by giving farms advanced notice that inspections would be conducted in a certain time frame.(9)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Namibia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

* The Government does not publish this information.

The Namibian Police operates a toll-free hotline to report crimes, including child trafficking. An NGO operates another hotline for victims of gender-based violence and child exploitation to access information about available resources and get referrals to relevant government organizations for social services.(30)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate government policies and efforts to combat child labor. The committee consists of MOE, MGEWCW, and MSS officials, as well as the Office of the Ombudsman.(26) The committee met during the reporting year and discussed roles and responsibilities of participating agencies.(4)
Gender Based Violence Protection Units	Provide victim protection services to children in the worst forms of child labor. There are 15 units that arrange lodging, medical, and psychosocial care for victims.(22) The units consist of personnel from MLIREC, Ministry of Home Affairs and Immigration, Namibian Police, MGEWCW, and MOE.(10)
Child Care and Protection Forums	Organize forums to address child protection issues and services in the country, including regional councils, MGEWCW social workers, government agencies, NGOs, community leaders, churches, and other local-level stakeholders.(10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action on Gender-Based Violence (2012–2016)	Establishes a plan for reducing incidences of gender-based violence and improving the country's understanding and response. The plan also addresses child protection and trafficking concerns.(1, 10, 32) Under the policy, an anti-trafficking strategy was developed.(27)
Decent Work Country Program (2010–2016)	Outlined strategies to promote decent work in Namibia. Prioritized employment promotion, enhanced social protections, and strengthened social dialog and tripartism. Outcome included the elimination of forced labor and child labor.(33)
National Development Plan IV (2012/2013–2016/2017)	Includes goals for addressing child protection and trafficking concerns.(1, 34)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(35)

In 2016, child labor elimination and prevention strategies were not integrated into the National Agenda for Children, the National Protection Referral Network, or the Education for All National Plan of Action.(36–38) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Plan of Action on Gender-Based Violence, Decent Country Work Program, and the National Development Plan IV during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded program implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, a project established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build government capacity and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor while strengthening legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers.(39) During the reporting year, ILO held two workshops to train 114 participants from MLIREC on child labor and domestic work. The program also drafted a National Action Plan on Child Labor and Domestic Work but it has yet to be adopted. (40)
Combatting Human Trafficking Initiative (2016–2019)*	USDOS-funded project implemented by IOM, in collaboration with the host Government, to combat trafficking in persons.(36)
Namibian School Feeding Program [†]	Government program provides mid-morning meals to school children.(41) Research could not find information about the number of children that benefitted from the program during the reporting period.
National Youth Service [†]	Government program offers training in civic education, national voluntary service, and job skills to unemployed youth, some of whom have never attended school.(41) Research was unable to determine whether activities were taken to implement the National Youth Service.
Shelters and victim services [†]	Six operational government-established shelters for women and children that assist victims of sexual assault, gender-based violence, and the worst forms of child labor.(10) A source indicates that the shelters are not staffed and therefore are not fully operational. The Government, however, provides a subsidy to an NGO that caters to victims of the worst forms of child labor.(42)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Namibia.

Although the Government of Namibia provides assistance to vulnerable children and services to some victims of child labor, research found no evidence of programs specifically addressing children working in agriculture or domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Nepal made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government agreed to implement its first nationally representative survey examining forced labor among adult and child workers. The Nepal Police developed and implemented a training curriculum that included a child labor component, and the Green Flag Movement campaign was expanded to five additional wards. However, children in Nepal perform dangerous tasks in the production of bricks. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Children ages 16 and 17 are excluded from the protections of the country's hazardous work list, leaving them vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The Department of Labor's budget, the number of labor inspectors, and available resources and training are all insufficient for enforcing labor laws, including those related to child labor. In addition, the Government lacks a policy that addresses all relevant forms of child labor, including hazardous child labor, forced child labor, and the use of children in illicit activities.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Nepal perform dangerous tasks in the production of bricks, and also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Nepal.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	33.7 (6,755,852)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	91.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	39.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		110.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2016, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Labor Force Survey, 2014.(5) Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are not comparable with data published in the previous version of this report because of differences between surveys used to collect the data.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including harvesting caterpillar fungus (yarchagumba) (6-9)
	Herding and feeding livestock (7, 10, 11)
Industry	Producing bricks (1, 7, 9, 11-17)
	Quarrying, collecting, and breaking stones, and quarrying and collecting sand (7, 9, 18)
	Construction, [†] activities unknown (9, 11, 19)
	Weaving carpet [†] (7, 11, 20, 21)
	Producing embellished textiles (zari) [†] and embroidery (7, 8, 11, 22)
	Producing metal crafts (8, 9, 11)
Services	Domestic work (7, 11, 23-26)
	Working in transportation, [†] portering, and collecting recyclable waste (7, 9, 11, 19, 27, 28)
	Working in hotels, [†] restaurants, [†] and tea shops (7, 9, 19)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 7)
	Forced labor in agriculture, producing bricks, quarrying and breaking stones, weaving carpets, embellishing textiles (zari), and domestic work (2, 9, 16, 21, 25, 29-32)
	Use in illicit activities, including the cultivation and trafficking of drugs (9)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation both within Nepal and outside Nepal, including to India, the Middle East, Asia, and Sub-Saharan Africa.(7, 33-35) Many children in Nepal are engaged in the production of bricks, which exposes them to hazardous working conditions, including carrying heaving loads, using dangerous machinery, and working in extreme heat.(1)

Children face barriers to accessing education, including the lack of secondary schools in some rural villages and fees associated with schooling, such as for books and uniforms.(36) Children with disabilities face additional barriers to accessing education.(37)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Nepal has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Nepal’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Section 3(1) of the Child Labor (Prohibition and Regulation) Act (38)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No	16	Section 3(2) of the Child Labor (Prohibition and Regulation) Act (38)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Schedule 1 of the Child Labor (Prohibition and Regulation) Act (38)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Section 4 of the Bonded Labor (Prohibition) Act; Section 4 of the Child Labor (Prohibition and Regulation) Act; Sections 3, 4, 15(1), and 15(2) of the Human Trafficking and Transportation Control Act (38-40)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No		Sections 3, 4, 15(1), and 15(2) of the Human Trafficking and Transportation Control Act (40)

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Sections 3, 4, 15(1), and 15(2) of the Human Trafficking and Transportation Control Act; Sections 16(2) and 16(3) of the Children's Act (40, 41)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Section 16(4) of the Children's Act (41)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Military Service Regulations (42)
Non-state Compulsory	No		Article 39(6) of the Constitution (43)
Compulsory Education Age	No	13 [‡]	Article 31(2) of the Constitution (43)
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 16D of the Education Act (44)

* No conscription (45)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (46)

The minimum age for hazardous work is not consistent with international standards as it does not prohibit children ages 16 and 17 from engaging in hazardous work.(38, 47) The types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not include brickmaking, a sector in which there is evidence that work involves carrying heavy loads and exposure to hazardous substances.(1, 38)

While the Human Trafficking and Transportation Control Act increases penalties in cases of child trafficking for prostitution, the legal framework does not include increased penalties for cases involving child trafficking for forced labor.(40) The legal framework also does not explicitly prohibit the use of a child in the production of child pornography.(41) The legal framework prohibiting the use of children in illicit activities is insufficient as it does not prohibit the use of children in the production of drugs and it does not extend to children who are 17 years of age.(41)

While the Constitution prohibits the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups, there is no specific legislation penalizing this practice.(43, 48)

Children in Nepal are required to attend school only up to age 13.(43, 46) This standard makes children age 13 vulnerable to child labor as they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor, Ministry of Labor and Employment (MoLE)	Enforce labor laws, including those involving child labor. Investigate and hold hearings in 10 District Labor Offices.(49)
Nepal Police Women and Children Service Directorate	Investigate crimes involving women and children, including human trafficking. Conduct work through the Nepal Police Women and Children Service Centers in all 75 districts.(50) The Nepal Police handle complaints received about child labor in districts without a District Labor Office.(49)
Ministry of Land Reform and Management	Enforce laws that prohibit bonded labor in agriculture.(51)
Child Protection Officers and Investigators, Department of Women and Children	Investigate and manage cases involving violations of children's rights through 22 child protection officers and 53 child protection inspectors.(52, 53)

[†] Data are from the Government of Nepal for the period from July 2014 to July 2015.

Department of Labor officials noted that they lacked the resources to collect and publish data on child labor law violations. They also noted that the budget was insufficient and had been decreased from the previous year. In addition, they noted that the number of inspectors is insufficient.(9) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of the country's workforce, which includes over 15.2 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in developing economies, Nepal should employ roughly 380 inspectors.(56-58) Inspectors periodically receive training on child labor laws and inspection, although this training does not necessarily coincide with the beginning of employment.(49) In addition, the size of fines and employer-paid compensation imposed by Labor Officers was not sufficient to deter child labor violations.(52)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Nepal took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

* The Government does not publish this data.

† Data are from the Government of Nepal for the period from July 2014 to July 2015.

In 2016, the Women and Children Services Directorate of the Nepal Police developed and implemented a training curriculum that included child labor and child protection components.(9) The Government does not have the capacity to maintain a centralized database of cases involving the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking. The Government lacks the capacity to enforce laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor.(9) The Ministry of Land Reform and Management lacks the capacity to enforce laws that prohibit bonded labor in the agricultural sector.(42)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Central Child Welfare Board, MWCSW	Monitor and report on the enforcement of laws and the implementation of policies related to child protection in coordination with District Child Welfare Boards.(53) Coordinate with MoLE and civil society to formulate and implement child protection and child labor-related policies.(49)
District Child Welfare Boards	Report on child welfare activities, monitor child care homes, mobilize resources for children at risk, receive and respond to child protection cases, and establish referral mechanisms. Consists of social workers, medical practitioners, and government officials.(53)
Labor Relations, Child Labor Prevention, and Information Section, MoLE	Coordinate policy-making on child labor inspection guidelines and monitor implementation of guidelines.(55, 60) Consists of a senior factory inspector, two labor officers, and a senior assistant in MoLE. Confers with MWCSW, Central Child Welfare Board, Department of Labor, and district labor offices.(55)
National Network Against Child Labor	Serve as a referral mechanism to assist children who are found in child labor in accessing services.(61) Consists of District Labor Officers, District Women and Children Officers, officers from the Nepal Police Women and Children Service Centers, Chief District Officers, NGOs, and thousands of youth clubs.(50)
National Coordination Committee on Human Trafficking	Coordinate the implementation of anti-human trafficking laws, policies, and programs. Led by MWCSW and consists of Government officials and representatives of NGOs.(50) Enhance coordination between central, district, and local government officials working to counter human trafficking.(54)
National Human Rights Commission	Monitor and receive complaints on child rights violations.(53) Report on the status of human trafficking victims and coordinate with civil society organizations through the Office of the Special Rapporteur on Trafficking.(50, 53)

Since the expiration of the National Master Plan on Child Labor (2004–2014), Nepal does not have a mechanism, such as a national steering committee, to coordinate efforts to eliminate child labor across government ministries.(52)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Nepal has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
School Sector Reform Plan (2009–2016)	Targets children who are out of school and at risk of entering the worst forms of child labor. Aims to expand access to education and provide alternative schooling and non-formal education to vulnerable populations.(50, 62, 63) Overseen by the Ministry of Education.(50, 62)
National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons (2011–2016)	Promotes and protects the rights of human trafficking victims and survivors, and outlines policies for providing justice and punishing perpetrators.(64)

Although the Government of Nepal has adopted the National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of a policy designed to address other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government of Nepal funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Green Flag Movement (2014–2017) [†]	ILO-funded, municipal government campaign to eliminate child labor. Includes child labor monitoring and awareness-raising activities.(65) In 2016, the campaign was expanded to five additional wards in Lalitpur Sub-metropolitan City, and over 100 children working in domestic service have been rescued under the program.(66)
Child Helpline – 1098 [†]	MWCSW- and Child Workers in Nepal-funded helpline operated by the Nepal Telecommunications Authority.(52) Responds to calls about missing children, child abuse, child labor exploitation, child trafficking, and child sexual abuse.(67) Currently operates in 13 districts and municipalities.(52, 68) Also operates in Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Maldives, Pakistan, and Sri Lanka to ensure access for children who have been trafficked in this region.(49)
Country-Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II) (2014–2018)	USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by Winrock International and partners Verité and Lawyers Without Borders in at least eight countries to build the local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor.(69) During the reporting period, the program convened a consultation workshop for government and non-government stakeholders on the draft National Master Plan on Child Labor Elimination.(69) For additional information, please see our Web site .
From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labor (The Bridge Project)	USDOL-funded global project implemented by the ILO to support global and national efforts aimed at combating forced labor of adults and children under the 2014 ILO Protocol and supporting Recommendation to ILO C. 29 on Forced Labor. Includes Mauritania, Nepal, and Peru as priority countries.(70) For additional information, please see our Web site .
Towards Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor as Priority (ACHIEVE) (2013–2016)	$582,000 Government of Denmark-funded, 3-year program implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen national-level capacity and support the policy environment. Includes the development and testing of a training program and the preparation of a national child labor policy, a revised hazardous work list, and recommendations for upgrading national legislation related to child labor.(71)
Decent Work Country Program, Nepal (2013–2017)	ILO, MoLE, Federation of Nepalese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, and Nepal Trade Union Congress-implemented program.(72) Provide technical and financial assistance to implement the provisions of ratified conventions on child labor, strengthen MoLE's child labor monitoring and reporting systems for prevention and early detection, support the mapping of community service providers, and assist the Government in revising a hazardous child labor list.(72)
Combating Trafficking in Persons (CTIP) Project (2010–2017)	$9.1 million USAID-funded, 6-year project to reduce human trafficking and protect the rights of victims. Strengthen protection services for survivors of human trafficking, build the capacity of the judiciary and law enforcement agencies to effectively enforce legal measures and increase prosecutions, and prevent human trafficking by building awareness among groups that are vulnerable to human trafficking for purposes of labor and sexual exploitation.(9, 52, 73)
Support for Schools [†]	MoLE program that supports five schools in the Kathmandu Valley for children ages 5–16 who are at risk of working in the worst forms of child labor. Provides scholarships to cover associated schooling costs for children outside the Kathmandu Valley to attend a local public school, and works with local NGOs to verify that children are attending class.(9)

In 2016, the Government agreed to implement its first nationally representative survey examining forced labor among adult and child workers. The survey will be implemented with the Nepal Labor Force Survey during 2017–2018 and cover 18,000 households. It will be the first endeavor undertaken by any country to systematically collect national data on populations experiencing forced labor.⁽⁷⁴⁾

Accessed December 16, 2016; <http://www.uis.unesco.org/Pages/default.aspx?SPSLanguage=EN>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. - 2016 FINDINGS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Nicaragua

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Nicaragua made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Good Government Plan, which aims to increase human trafficking investigations and protect children from commercial sexual exploitation, as well as increase access to education, particularly for children of indigenous and African descent. The Ministry of Education also continued to expand the National School Supply Program, which provided more than 700,000 packages of school supplies and 3.9 million textbooks to children in need. However, children in Nicaragua engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in street work and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. National policies to eliminate child labor and protect children have not been fully implemented, and the Government lacks a specific and consistent mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor. In addition, the Government does not publish key labor and criminal law enforcement data on child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Nicaragua engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in street work and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Nicaragua.

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10 to 14	47.7 (342,076)
Attending School (%)	10 to 14	88.3
Combining Work and School (%)	10 to 14	40.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		85.4

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Nicaragua, children are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in Granada, Managua, the Caribbean Coast, and San Juan del Sur.(3, 26, 28, 30) Children in Nicaragua who lack identification documents, sometimes because of a lack of birth registration, may not have access to social services and are at an increased risk of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(13) An estimated 20 percent of children born in Nicaragua lack birth certificates.(31) Although the Government's birth registration campaign is advancing, it does not reach all children, especially in remote areas.(32-35) In an effort to promote birth registrations, Nicaragua's Family Code, which went into effect in 2015, provides for free birth registrations up to age 7.(36, 37)

Education is free and compulsory in Nicaragua. However, costs associated with school supplies and transportation make it difficult for some children, particularly those from poor backgrounds and rural areas, to attend school.(22, 38-40) Some sources indicate that secondary schools have not received adequate assistance and that secondary school attendance remains low, increasing the risk that older children engage in exploitative work.(1, 30, 40)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Nicaragua has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓

UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Nicaragua's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 121 of the Constitution; Articles 8, 19, and 23 of the Education Law; Article 43 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code (43, 44, 50)

* No conscription (27, 44, 51)

Nicaraguan law is not clear regarding the age up to which education is compulsory. Article 121 of the Constitution states that primary school education is compulsory, but does not specify an age.(44) Under Articles 19 and 23 of the Education Law, education is compulsory only through the sixth grade, which it specifies is up to age 12 and the end of primary school.(50) Article 43 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code states that both primary and secondary school education are compulsory, suggesting up to age 17, but does not specifically state an age.(43) The lack of clarity regarding the age up to which education is compulsory and the potential gap between the compulsory education age and the minimum age for work may leave children vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms.(1, 52)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MITRAB)	Enforce labor laws and set child labor policy priorities.(19, 53) Conduct labor inspections through its General Labor Inspectorate, including child labor inspections through its Child Labor Inspections Unit. Conduct training on child labor issues and inspections.(7, 54, 55) Maintain a mailbox in each of Nicaragua's 17 departments to receive complaints of child labor violations.(56)
Nicaraguan National Police (NNP)	Investigate cases of child labor and human trafficking through the Police Intelligence Unit and the Special Crimes Unit, which detect and investigate crimes, respectively.(7, 19, 54) Maintain a hotline for violations of children's rights.(56)
Ministry of Governance	Coordinate participation between MITRAB and NNP in labor inspections in which employers resist inspection.(56)
Prosecutor General's Office	Prosecute cases of child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. Contains 2 national-level and 35 department-level prosecutors that prosecute these and other crimes.(7, 19, 54)

Organization/Agency	Role
Human Rights Attorney for Children	Assist in the enforcement of laws related to child labor and hazardous child labor.(7, 19)
Ministry of the Family, Adolescence, and Childhood (MIFAN)	Maintain a hotline for receiving reports on human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(56) Assist in providing officials with training on child labor violations.(31)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Nicaragua took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

NGOs reported that the Ministry of Labor (MITRAB) lacks sufficient resources to adequately enforce child labor laws.(57) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Nicaragua's workforce, which includes over 3 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Nicaragua should employ roughly 201 inspectors.(63-65) Of the 133 labor inspectors the Government employed in 2016, 97 focused on general labor law compliance and 36 focused on occupational safety and health issues.(58)

In 2016, MITRAB conducted 14,605 labor inspections, of which 1,696 were child labor-specific inspections.(59) Government officials and NGOs have reported that child labor inspections throughout the country, and those in agricultural areas in particular, are limited due to resource and personnel constraints.(19, 56) Complete information on labor inspections, including on whether inspections were conducted at worksites and on their geographic distribution, was not publicly available. Research could not determine the number of children referred between labor authorities and social services in 2016.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Nicaragua took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Unknown
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (60)	N/A

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	23 (61)	Unknown
Number of Convictions	6 (61)	2 (59)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (60)	Yes (27, 59)

Research did not find the number of criminal investigators employed by the Nicaraguan National Police or Prosecutor General's Office during the reporting period. NGOs reported that criminal law enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor do not adequately address the scope of the problem.(66) NGOs also indicate that criminal law enforcement agencies lack sufficient financial resources to effectively carry out criminal investigations.(61, 66)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Social Welfare System (SNBS)	Coordinate efforts on child labor and ensure that government institutions protect the rights of and provide social services to children as part of its mandate to assist the Nicaraguan population. Comprises various government ministries, including MITRAB, MIFAN, the Ministry of Education (MINED), the Ministry of Health (MINSAL), and the Ministry of Governance.(56)
National Coalition Against Trafficking in Persons(CNCTP)	Coordinate efforts to address human trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Led by the Ministry of Governance and comprises law enforcement agencies, the Supreme Court of Justice, and NGOs.(47, 60, 67)
Ministry of the Family, Adolescence, and Childhood (MIFAN)	Maintain a guide for the provision of assistance to victims of commercial sexual exploitation and coordinate between agencies responsible for their care.(30) Part of the SNBS.(56)

The National Social Welfare System (SNBS) is the mechanism that coordinates efforts to address child labor.(27) However, NGOs report that the SNBS does not comprise a specific and consistent coordinating mechanism due to limited coordination among constituent ministries and a lack of resources dedicated to combating child labor.(56) Coordination between the SNBS and NGOs that addresses child labor is also limited.(27) Research did not find that the SNBS published information in 2016 on its child labor coordination efforts or how it monitored the implementation of national child labor policies.(62)

NGOs working on human trafficking issues reported that the National Coalition Against Trafficking in Persons (CNCTP) and its regional working groups were largely inactive. Reports also indicate that the CNCTP did not appoint its Executive Secretariat, which is mandated by the Law Against Trafficking in Persons.(66) While the Ministry of the Family, Adolescence, and Childhood maintains a guide for providing assistance to child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, reports indicate that the Government had no formal procedures for the identification of human trafficking victims among high-risk populations, including children who are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 30, 67, 68)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
Roadmap for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Sets the goal of eliminating the worst forms of child labor by 2016, and all forms of child labor by 2020.(36, 56, 69)
Strategic Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor and the Protection of Young Workers (2007–2016)	Aims to eliminate child labor and ensure protections for adolescent workers. Seeks to reintegrate child laborers into the school system and increase school enrollment.(30)
Good Government Plan (2016) [†]	Sets development goals for government ministries, including MITRAB, MINED, and MINSA. Prioritizes human trafficking investigations; aims to protect children from commercial sexual exploitation; and commits to training teachers, creating 1,000 primary teaching positions, and increasing access to education, including for indigenous and Afro-descendant children.(70)
Coffee Harvest Plan	Aims to assist children whose parents work in the coffee harvest and improve their educational opportunities. Focuses on eliminating hazardous child labor in the coffee sector in the Jinotega Department. Developed by the Government in collaboration with the private sector and NGOs.(7, 19, 71, 72)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(53, 71-77)

The Government's Roadmap for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor sets the goal of eliminating child labor in Nicaragua by 2020. However, there is no comprehensive action plan for its full implementation.(1) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken during the reporting period to implement the Strategic Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor and the Protection of Young Workers or the Coffee Harvest Plan. The CNCTP's Strategic Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons expired in 2015, and the extent of its implementation is unknown.(60, 68) In 2016, the CNCTP began drafting a new national action plan to combat human trafficking.(66)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
Program Love (Programa Amor) [†]	MIFAN program that targets vulnerable or impoverished children, including children involved in child labor, such as street work. Provides educational assistance for children and vocational training for parents.(19, 53, 67, 78, 79) Overseen by Nicaragua's Vice President in coordination with MINED, MINSA, MITRAB, and the Ministry of Governance.(78) Includes children from birth to age 6 through Program Love for the Smallest Ones.(19, 70, 80) In 2016, aimed to assist and promote school attendance of 33,695 vulnerable children.(70)
Educational Bridges (Puentes Educativos) [†]	MITRAB and MINED public-private partnership that provides education to children of coffee workers to prevent child labor during coffee harvests. In 2016, program continued to build commitments to eliminate child labor in coffee.(81-85)
Integral School Meal Program (Merienda Escolar) [†]	MIFAN and WFP initiative that provides children and adolescents with meals at school to address poverty and improve attendance.(86-88) In 2016, program assisted approximately 1.2 million children.(27, 89, 90)
National School Supply Program (Paquete Escolar)	MINED program that distributes packages of school supplies to preschool, primary, and secondary school children in the poorest districts to increase attendance and completion rates.(91, 92) In 2016, MINED provided more than 700,000 packages of school and teaching supplies, as well as 3.9 million textbooks.(90)
Birth Registration Campaign	Government initiative, in coordination with Save the Children and UNICEF, to advance birth registration campaigns.(31, 35, 36)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Nicaragua.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(59, 93-95).

Nicaragua

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The scope of current social programs is not sufficient to assist children who are trafficked or engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation.(19) While the Government provides medical, educational, and legal assistance to trafficking victims, international organizations and NGOs provide their shelter, food, clothing, and psychological assistance.(7, 68, 96) NGOs indicate that the regions most affected by human trafficking lack adequate care facilities, and that victims of the worst forms of child labor in these areas are referred to NGO shelters in Managua.(68) NGOs also indicate that Program Love lacks overall effectiveness and transparency.(19) Research could not find comprehensive information on the kind of assistance provided to beneficiaries, including those who were engaged in child labor.(57)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
65. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies"; "economies in transition" to "transition economies"; "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Niger

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Niger made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government trained labor and criminal law enforcement agencies on laws and regulations related to child labor and conducted workshops to address child trafficking and forced begging of children.

In addition, the Government continued to participate in a number of programs targeting the worst forms of child labor, including a new program to combat child labor in agriculture.

However, children in Niger perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in caste-based servitude and mining. Gaps in laws related to hazardous work and limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws have left children unprotected from the worst forms of child labor. In addition, social programs to combat child labor in Niger are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Niger perform dangerous tasks in agriculture.(1-3) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in caste-based servitude and mining. (4-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Niger.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	42.9 (2,516,191)
Attending School (%)	7 to 14	48.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	22.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		69.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(10)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2012.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of rice, fruits, nuts, and vegetables (1-3, 9)
	Herding and caring for livestock, including cattle (2, 3, 9, 12, 13)
	Fishing (2, 14)
Industry	Quarrying [†] and mining [†] for trona, salt, gypsum, natron, and gold (3-5, 8, 13, 15-18)
	Mechanical repair, [†] welding, [†] and metal work [†] (3, 6)
	Working in construction, [†] tanneries, [†] and slaughterhouses [†] (6, 18, 19)
Services	Street work, including as market vendors and beggars [†] (5, 14, 19)
	Domestic work (5, 6, 9, 13)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6, 8, 9)
	Forced recruitment by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (6, 8, 20)
	Caste-based servitude, including as cattle herders, agricultural workers, and domestic workers (7-9, 20)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers (5, 6, 8, 9)
	Forced labor in domestic work and mining, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (8, 13, 20, 21)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Traditional forms of caste-based servitude, such as the use of women and girls as wahaya, still exist in parts of Niger, especially among the Arab, Djerma, and Tuareg ethnic minorities, in distant western and northern regions, and along the border with Nigeria. Under the wahaya practice, men buy girls born into slavery, typically between the ages of 9 and 11 years old, as “fifth wives,” who are forced to work long hours as cattle herders, agricultural workers, or domestic workers and are often sexually exploited.(6-9, 13, 22-24) The children of wahaya wives are considered slaves as well and are passed from one owner to another as gifts or as part of dowries.(3, 6, 7, 18)

In Niger, it is also a traditional practice to send boys (talibés) to Koranic teachers (marabouts) to receive religious education. However, some of these boys are forced by their teachers to beg on the streets and surrender the money they have earned, or to perform manual labor.(5, 8, 9, 18)

During the year, Boko Haram attacked numerous villages in the Diffa region along Niger’s borders with Nigeria, which caused an influx of refugees and internally displaced persons and strained the Government’s resources for addressing child labor. Evidence suggests that Boko Haram forcibly recruited Nigerien children for use in armed conflict in the Diffa region. (3, 6, 20, 25-31) In Niger, refugees and internally displaced children are particularly vulnerable to engaging in the worst forms of child labor. (3, 9, 13, 31)

Although the Constitution of Niger provides for free and compulsory education, in practice, this provision is not enforced effectively, as many children, especially girls, do not attend school.(3, 32) The lack of school infrastructure, school materials, and limited availability of teachers, especially in rural areas, impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(3, 9, 32-35)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Niger has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Niger’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Niger fails to ensure that children receive adequate training or fails to protect the health, safety, and morals of the child, in accordance with international standards where the minimum age for hazardous work is between 16-18.(41, 42) The law prohibits hazardous occupations and activities for children in mining, quarrying, manufacturing, construction, tanneries, and slaughterhouses.(37, 38) However, these prohibitions do not cover agriculture, an area in which there is evidence of work in unhealthy environments that expose children to hazardous substances and dangerous equipment.(1, 19, 37) In addition, children performing unpaid or non-contractual work do not have the same protections under child labor laws and regulations as do children performing contractual work.(3, 34)

Although Article 2 of the Law on the Orientation of the Educational System in Niger guarantees education for all children from age 4 to 18, there is no law which establishes a compulsory education age. (43)

The Penal Code prohibits employing and provoking children to beg; however, the penalties outlined in Article 181 are lenient and may not prevent violations.(38) Article 178 of the Penal Code also provides penalties for vagrancy, which is defined by Article 177 as a person without a home, an occupation, or means of subsistence. This Article may compel children who live on the streets to engage in the worst forms of child labor.(38, 44)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Labor and Social Security (MELSS)	Enforce laws related to child labor by receiving complaints, investigating violations, and referring cases to courts.(6, 9, 44, 45) MELSS' Child Labor Division conducts studies on the scope and nature of child labor, raise awareness of child labor, and coordinate government efforts to eliminate child labor.(6, 14)
National Human Rights Commission (CNDH)	Receive child labor complaints, investigate violations, and report violations to courts.(6, 9)
Ministry for the Promotion of Women and Child Protection	Work with law enforcement officials to provide vulnerable children with services, including education and counseling, in 34 centers across the country.(9, 14, 42)
Ministry of Justice's District and Magistrate Courts	Address children's issues, including child labor, through 10 district courts and 36 magistrate courts.(3, 6)
Regional and Vigilance Committees	Prevent child trafficking by alerting law enforcement of activities linked to human trafficking, directing victims of human trafficking to law enforcement, and working closely with the Minister of Interior to raise awareness of the worst forms of child labor. Vigilance committees, which work in 30 localities, report suspected cases of illegal transport of minors to the police.(14, 46)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Niger took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2016, the Ministry of Employment, Labor and Social Security (MELSS) increased the number of labor inspectors to 73, who are disseminated throughout Niger to enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor.(6, 48) Despite increasing the number of inspectors by 13 in 2016, the number of labor inspectors remains insufficient for the size of Niger's workforce, which includes over 6.5 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries, Niger should employ roughly 163 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(49-51) Reports indicate a lack of equipment, transportation, and funding to conduct child labor inspections and legal proceedings, especially in remote locations and in informal sectors.(3, 6, 33)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Niger took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Niger

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Government of Niger does not differentiate between labor inspectors and criminal investigators for cases involving child labor. The 73 labor inspectors refer complaints to criminal law enforcement.(6, 47) Investigators received basic and continued training on matters related to the laws and the enforcement of laws relating to the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.(6, 8) However, evidence does not show meaningful efforts made by criminal law enforcement authorities to address the use of children for forced mining, forced begging, as well as traditional forms of caste-based servitude and hereditary slavery.(5, 6, 8, 47) An informal referral mechanism between NGOs, the police, and government social services is in place, but the resources and facilities for the social services agencies are inadequate.(6, 8) While the exact number of children removed from the worst forms of child labor is unavailable, removals are only conducted in the most extreme cases of exploitation, according to MELSS.(47)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Review proposals for action plans for the ILO-IPEC country program and ensure that they are consistent with national child labor policy and priorities. Chaired by MELSS.(41, 45)
National Commission to Coordinate Efforts to Combat Trafficking in Persons (CNCLTP)	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking, and to develop and implement policies and programs related to human trafficking.(14, 39, 44) Includes representatives from the CNDH and MELSS, as well as civil society organizations.(41, 52) During 2016, organized a workshop to raise awareness on trafficking in persons and illicit migrant smuggling.(53)
National Agency to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (ANLTP)	Implement policies and programs developed by the CNCLTP; conduct awareness campaigns about human trafficking in conjunction with the CNCLTP; provide training and education to reduce the risk of human trafficking; and maintain a hotline to receive complaints of human trafficking.(14, 41, 44, 52) In 2016, trained district and magistrate courts on trafficking in persons and illicit migrant smuggling, and conducted awareness campaigns about forced begging of children. (5, 20, 54)
National Committee to Combat Child Labor in Agriculture	Coordinate policies and programs to combat child labor in agriculture.(55) Chaired by the Ministry of Agriculture and includes representatives from MELSS and the Ministry for the Promotion of Women and Child Protection, as well as nongovernmental stakeholders.(56) In 2016, implemented raising awareness campaigns to combat hazardous work in agriculture.(57)

Reports indicate that the effectiveness of the National Agency to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (ANLTP) and National Commission to Coordinate Efforts to Combat Trafficking in Persons (CNCLTP) was hampered by budget constraints.(3, 20) The number of calls received by the ANLTP's hotline that involve child trafficking is unknown. In addition, evidence did not find whether the National Steering Committee on Child Labor was active and received any funding during the reporting period.(6)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2014–2018)	Includes goals of enhancing the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, effectively implementing the laws, providing effective protection and care for victims, including children. Led by the ANLTP. (9, 46, 58) In 2016, implemented awareness-raising missions and advocacy meetings on human trafficking.(20, 46)
National Action Plan to Combat the Sexual Exploitation of Children	Seeks to combat the sexual exploitation of children.(41, 46)
National Social Protection Strategy	Aims to improve the quality of, and access to, basic education and health services; includes strategy to combat child labor. Overseen by the Ministry for the Promotion of Women and Child Protection.(59) In 2016, implemented awareness-raising activities in rural communities on tackling child marriage.(60)

Policy	Description
UNDAF (2014–2018)	Promotes improved access to education for vulnerable children and aims to build the capacity of the Government to address child labor. Falls under the direction of the Ministry of Planning, Territorial Administration, and Community Development, and supported by international donors. (61, 62)
Education and Training Sectorial Program (PSEF) (2014–2024)	Sets out a comprehensive map to improve the quality of, and access to, basic and higher education. Led by the Ministry of Education. (12, 34) In 2016, developed programs to improve quality of teaching for secondary level education. (63)

[‡] The Government has other policies which may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (64–66)

In 2016, the Government of Niger did not officially adopt the draft National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor, which aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Niger by 2025. (9, 45, 46, 48) In addition, research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Action Plan to Combat the Sexual Exploitation of Children and UNDAF during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Centers for Education, Legal, and Preventive Services (SEJUP) [†]	Government program, in collaboration with UNICEF, which aims to provide food, shelter, education, and vocational training to street children, many of whom are victims of child labor. In 2016, operated 34 centers located nationwide. (5, 9, 67)
Project to Reduce Child Labor in Agriculture (2016–2018) *	$247,000 FAO-funded program, and implemented by the Ministry of Agriculture, that aims to combat child labor in the agriculture sector, with a focus in the regions of Niamey, Tillabery, Dosso, and Tahoua. (57, 68, 69)
Project to Prevent and Protect Children from Commercial Sexual Exploitation (2015–2017)	Government of Luxembourg-funded, 2-year, $470,000 project to combat commercial sexual exploitation of children in the regions of Niamey, Tillabery, and Dosso. In 2016, provided reintegration services to 2,000 children. (70)
Project Against Forced Labor and Discrimination (PACTRAD II) (2014–2016)	Government program, supported by the ILO, to combat forced labor and discrimination practices against women and children in Niger. In 2016, conducted a training session for local organizations on forced labor, as well as assisted the CNCLTP and ANLTP to conduct a feasibility study to set-up a fund to compensate victims of caste-based servitude. (68, 71, 72)
UNICEF Country Program (2014–2017)	UNICEF-funded program that supports the Government's efforts to improve education, birth registration rates, social inclusion, and strengthening child protection programs, including for children of refugees located in the Diffa region. In 2016, provided protection and reintegration services to 39,856 at-risk children. (31, 73)
World Bank Country Program	World Bank projects in Niger that aim to increase access to quality basic and secondary education, improve school infrastructure, and strengthen safety nets for vulnerable populations. In 2016, started the construction of 360 classrooms in primary schools, provided education grants to 700 girls in secondary school, and delivered cash transfers to 44,888 beneficiary households. (74–76)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Niger.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. (77, 78)

Although Niger has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the problem, especially in agriculture, herding, mining, and caste-based servitude. Niger also lacks a specific program to assist children exploited by religious instructors. (6, 79)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Niger (Table 11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

51. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Nigeria made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched a National Social Protection Program which provides cash transfers to extremely poor households on the condition that their children are enrolled in school. The National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons implemented standard operating procedures for investigation and prosecution of human trafficking cases, and established an anti-human trafficking training center. However, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in quarrying granite and gravel, commercial sexual exploitation, forced begging, and armed conflict. The legal framework has inconsistencies regarding child labor, and the minimum age for work is below international standards. Child labor enforcement data is also not publicly available, and social programs are not sufficient to address the scope of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Nigeria engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in quarrying granite and gravel, commercial sexual exploitation, forced begging, and armed conflict.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Nigeria.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	31.1 (13,924,739)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	76.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	26.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		76.0

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, including use in the production of pornography, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5, 13, 21, 28, 29)
	Forced begging, domestic work, street vending, textile manufacturing, mining and quarrying gravel and granite, and labor in agriculture, including in cocoa, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5, 13, 30-32)
	Use in illicit activities for armed groups, sometimes as a result of forced recruitment, including participating in extortion, armed robbery, and drug trafficking (11, 21-23)
	Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (2, 5, 33-35)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In northern Nigeria, many families send children from rural to urban areas to live with Islamic teachers, known as mallams, and receive a Koranic education. These children, known as almajiri, may receive lessons, but teachers often force them to beg on the streets and surrender the money they collect.(23, 36) Furthermore, these children are highly vulnerable to recruitment by Boko Haram.(37)

Benin City, the capital of Edo state, is a major human trafficking hub in Africa.(38, 39) Girls from Nigeria are trafficked to North Africa and Europe for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 39-43) In 2016, there was an increase in child trafficking for sexual exploitation, particularly to Europe.(12, 40, 43) Children from West African countries experience forced labor in Nigeria, including in granite mines.(5) Children from Benin and Niger are subjected to forced labor, including forced begging, by corrupt mallams.(36, 44, 45) Children from Benin are also exploited in domestic and agricultural work; Togolese children are forced to work in agriculture.(31, 46)

Children as young as age 8 are recruited, and sometimes forced, to participate in armed conflict with various groups, including ethnic militia organizations, criminal gangs, extremist groups, and partisan political organizations, such as party youth wings.(23, 47-49) Boko Haram forcibly recruited and used child soldiers during the reporting period.(2, 5, 27, 35) Reports indicate that children were recruited to participate in combat operations and act as spies, porters, and cooks.(26, 27) There was an increase in the use of young girls to carry out suicide bombings.(2, 33) The terrorist group also subjected girls to forced labor and sexual servitude.(5, 26, 27) Limited research found that the Nigerian military used children rescued or arrested during Boko Haram military operations for domestic work, to carry loads, and to act as messengers and guards.(26, 27) The Nigerian military also conducted on-the-ground coordination with elements of the Borno state government-funded Civilian Joint Task Force (CJTF), a non-state self-defense militia involved in fighting Boko Haram. Research found that the CJTF continued to recruit and use children, possibly by force, to supervise checkpoints, conduct patrols, spy, and apprehend suspected insurgents.(26, 27, 50, 51) The Government of Nigeria has officially prohibited the recruitment and use of child soldiers.(50, 51)

An estimated 1.8 million people were internally displaced in northeast Nigeria, of which 1 million were children under age 18.(52) During the reporting period, reports indicated that children were trafficked from internally displaced persons (IDP) camps for labor and sexual exploitation, and girls were subjected to commercial sexual exploitation in the camps.(5, 53-55) Research found that children in IDP camps are also at risk of human trafficking and other forms of exploitation when they leave the camps unaccompanied to work.(50)

While most public schools in Maiduguri, the capital of Borno State, began reopening in February, the Borno State Government announced that 512 primary schools, 38 secondary schools, and two tertiary institutions had been destroyed in the state.(56, 57) Some school buildings are still being occupied by displaced people seeking shelter from the conflict.(50) Furthermore, government armed forces occupied schools in their campaign against Boko Haram.(57)

Although free and compulsory education is federally mandated by the Education Act, little enforcement of compulsory education laws occurs at the state level.(12) School fees are often charged, and the cost of materials can be prohibitive for families.(12, 13, 58) Access to education is further hindered by a lack of teachers and inadequate sanitation facilities, particularly for girls.(12) Many families favored the enrollment of boys over girls in elementary and secondary school.(13, 59)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Nigeria has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Nigeria's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Nigeria

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Federal Child's Right Act (CRA) codifies the rights of children in Nigeria and must be ratified by each state to become law in its territory.(11, 61) To date, 23 states and the federal capital territory have ratified the CRA; of the remaining 13 states, 12 are in northern Nigeria.(11, 20)

The laws in Nigeria regarding minimum age for employment are inconsistent. The CRA states that the provisions on young people in the Labour Act apply to children under the CRA, but also that the CRA supersedes any other legislation related to children.(61) The CRA restricts children under age 18 from any work except light work for family members; however, Section 59 of the Labour Act, which is in force in all 36 states, sets the minimum employment age at 12.(60, 61, 66) The Labour Act also permits children of any age to do light work alongside a family member in agriculture and domestic work.(60, 67) Furthermore, the minimum age protections in the Labour Act do not apply to children who are self-employed.(60, 67)

Although the Labour Act forbids the employment of youth under age 18 in work that is dangerous to their health, safety, or morals, it does not establish types of hazardous activity that are prohibited to children under 18.(60) The National Steering Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor developed a report in 2013 that identified hazardous child labor in Nigeria; however, the Government has not yet determined by law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.(4, 67)

In Zamfara state, the Shari'a Penal Code, the moral code and religious law of Islam, defines an offender as anyone who "does any obscene or indecent act in a private or public place, or acts or conducts himself/herself in an indecent manner." This language may cause children forced into commercial sexual exploitation to be treated as offenders instead of victims.(68)

Although the CRA criminalizes using, procuring, and offering a child in the production and trafficking of drugs, the 13 states that have not yet ratified the CRA have no legislation in place to criminalize this activity.(61)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Labor Inspectorate, Ministry of Labor and Employment (MLE)	Deploy labor inspectors across 36 state labor offices and the federal capital territory to enforce federal child labor laws.(11, 69)
National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons and Other Related Matters (NAPTIP)	Enforce laws against human trafficking and exploitative labor.(11) Coordinate with the Ministry of Women's Affairs and Social Development and state governments to provide child victims with social services and reunite trafficked children with their families.(11) In 2016, developed and implemented standard operating procedures for investigation and prosecution of human trafficking cases. With donor support, also established an anti-human trafficking training center.(70)
Nigeria Police	Enforce all laws prohibiting forced child labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Support MLE and collaborate with NAPTIP on human trafficking enforcement.(11)
Nigeria Immigration Service	Collaborate with NAPTIP to enforce laws against child trafficking.(11)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Nigeria took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

No labor inspectors are available to conduct inspections on seafaring vessels.(72) The Labour Act states that children ages 15 and older may work onboard these vessels and, therefore, children are unprotected by the country's enforcement framework.(60) Research did not find mechanisms to enforce existing protections for children who perform street work.(73) Enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the lack of resources for inspections.(12, 74)

The Ministry of Labor and Employment (MLE) refers cases of children that are gravely in danger to the National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons and Other Related Matters (NAPTIP); however, research found no other referral mechanisms between MLE and social welfare services.(36)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Nigeria took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, NAPTIP conducted 89 investigations of the worst forms of child labor in domestic work. The Government rescued 412 children from the worst forms of child labor, 382 children from domestic work, and 30 girls from commercial sexual exploitation.(77)

Nigeria

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

NAPTIP coordinates with the Ministry of Women's Affairs and Social Development and state governments to provide social services to child trafficking victims through the National Referral Mechanism; however, research did not find a referral mechanism for children found in other worst forms of child labor.(11) Children are not excluded from the Terrorism Prevention Act's penalty of life imprisonment for assisting in acts of terrorism, and criminal law enforcement authorities continued to detain children for their or their parent's alleged association with Boko Haram.(78-80)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to combat child labor. Led by MLE, comprises representatives from seven governmental agencies, faith-based organizations, NGOs, ILO, and UNICEF.(11, 81)
Inter-Ministerial Taskforce on Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate child labor issues related to human trafficking. Chaired by NAPTIP.(11)
State Steering Committees on Child Labor	Guide state-level implementation of the National Policy and National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor.(81) Established in Akwa Ibom, Delta, Lagos, Ogun, and Oyo states.(82)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Policy on Child Labor	Aims to eliminate child labor in Nigeria by 2020.(83)
National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor in Nigeria (2013–2017)	Provides the roadmap for implementation of the National Policy on Child Labor in Nigeria.(81)
NAPTIP Strategic Plan (2012–2017)	Provides a framework for mobilizing NAPTIP and all stakeholders involved in combating human trafficking within Nigeria and internationally.(84)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(85, 86)

Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Policy on Child Labor and National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program II (2015–2018)	ILO-implemented project in coordination with the Government that aims to combat child labor, including its worst forms. Aims to build Government capacity to conduct child labor surveys and establish community-based child labor monitoring systems.(59)
UNICEF country program (2014–2017)	Donor-funded program in coordination with the Government to ensure children associated with armed groups, including those in detention facilities, receive reintegration services.(87-89)
NAPTIP Shelters for Human Trafficking Victims [‡]	Government-funded program that operates nine shelters in Nigeria, with a total capacity of 313 victims. Shelters provide legal, medical, and psychological services, as well as vocational training, business management skills, and family reunification.(5)
National Social Protection Program*	$302 million World Bank-funded program implemented by the Government that aims to provide youth with skills and vocational training, provide primary school students with daily meals, and offer monthly cash transfers to extremely poor households on the condition that their children are enrolled in school.(90)

Program	Description
Safe Schools Initiative	Donor-funded program implemented by the Government and international organizations that aims to provide remedial education and pilot 10 safe education facilities in northeast Nigeria in Adamawa, Borno, and Yobe states.(91, 92) By April 2016, 213,985 internally displaced and vulnerable children were enrolled in schools.(93)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Nigeria.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(94)

In 2016, NAPTIP incorporated human trafficking instruction into Nigeria's national public school curriculum.(70) Research found no evidence of programs to specifically address children engaged in agriculture, commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, forced labor, and illicit activities. Although Nigeria has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs, including those that target child soldiers, is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Nigeria (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Increase the minimum age for regular work to at least 14, in accordance with international standards; ensure that national legislation on minimum age for work is consistent and that all children, including those who are self-employed, are protected; and ensure that provisions related to light work conform to international standards.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the types of work determined to be hazardous for children are prohibited by law or regulation for all children under age 18.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that states that apply Shari'a as the penal code do not penalize child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that using, procuring, and offering a child for the production and trafficking of drugs are criminally prohibited in all states.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
	Amend the Terrorism Prevention Act to prohibit the punishment of children found engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including recruitment for armed conflict.	2016
Enforcement	Publish information on the Labor Inspectorate's funding, number of labor inspectors, training of labor inspectors and criminal investigators, number and type of labor inspections conducted, and complaint mechanisms between law enforcement and social service providers, as well as the number of violations found and prosecutions initiated.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that labor inspectors receive sufficient resources to enforce child labor laws.	2016
	Ensure that child labor inspections occur on seafaring vessels and that a mechanism exists for enforcing existing protections for street children.	2010 – 2016
	Establish referral mechanisms between Nigeria's law enforcement and social service agencies for all children found during labor inspections and criminal investigations.	2013 – 2016
	Cease the practice of detaining children associated with armed groups and refer these children to social service providers.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the Nigerian Security Forces do not exploit children that are rescued or arrested during military operations.	2016
Government Policies	Take steps to implement the National Policy on Child Labor and National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor.	2014 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Ensure an adequate number of trained teachers and provide sufficient educational infrastructure for children, particularly girls, to access schools. Remove all armed groups and forces from schools and compounds.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that all states adopt programs to offer free education and expand existing programs that provide funds to vulnerable children, especially girls, to cover school fees and the cost of materials.	2014 – 2016
	Establish and expand programs that prevent and remove children from child labor in agriculture, armed conflict, commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, forced labor, and illicit activities.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Oman made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government published a report on child labor and issued regulations outlining the types of products children can legally sell. Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Oman engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government does not publish information on the enforcement of child labor laws and lacks a reciprocal mechanism between the labor inspectorate and social services.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Oman engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.⁽¹⁾ Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Oman. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (1, 4, 5)
	Fishing, activities unknown (1, 4-6)
Services	Selling items, including fish [†] and grilled meat [†] (4, 5)
	Begging [†] (1, 7)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The Ministry of Social Development released the country's first major report on child labor. The report indicates that an estimated 330 children, mostly boys, are working, primarily on farms or in subsistence fishing.^(1, 4, 5) The majority of these children were ages 16 or 17, with 24 percent between ages 10 and 15.⁽⁵⁾

Limited evidence suggests that the children of migrant workers and children with disabilities may face barriers to accessing education.^(1, 8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Ministry of Manpower issued an order prohibiting children from being employed in any sector except for the ones that it noted, and it listed sales as a main sector in which children are permitted to work.(11)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Royal Oman Police	Monitor and enforce the Child Law, including its provisions related to child labor; refer cases to Public Prosecution.(1)
Public Prosecution	Prosecute human trafficking and sexual exploitation cases in court with assistance from the Royal Oman Police.(1, 17)
Child Protection Committee	Protect children from exploitation, receive complaints and reports of child labor, and investigate reported cases to determine whether children are engaged in prohibited activities or whether working has negative effects on their health or education.(1, 4)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Oman took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Pakistan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Pakistan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Pakistan ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict, and the Punjab Provincial Government passed legislation establishing 15 as the minimum age for employment and 18 as the minimum age for employment in hazardous work. Balochistan Province passed the Child Protection Act, which mandates the creation of child protection units, which provide for a referral mechanism by which rescued children can be placed in protective custody and obtain rehabilitation services. In addition, Punjab Province launched the Elimination of Child Labor and Bonded Labor Project. However, children in Pakistan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and bonded labor in brick kilns. Balochistan Province has not established a minimum age for work or a minimum age for hazardous work in compliance with international standards. Provincial Governments do not have the resources necessary to enforce laws prohibiting child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Pakistan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and bonded labor in brick kilns.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Pakistan.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

A national child labor survey has not been conducted since 1996, and the lack of recent data hampers the ability of the Federal and Provincial Governments to accurately assess the scope and prevalence of child labor.(13) Many child domestic workers are working under conditions of forced labor, including debt bondage, sexual assault, and extreme physical abuse.(1, 35, 40) Some children work with their families as bonded laborers in the production of bricks.(13, 40)

Non-state militant groups, such as pro-Taliban insurgents, force children to engage in espionage, armed conflict, and suicide attacks.(17, 40) There are reports that religious schools are used for military recruitment and training for armed groups.(43)

Many children face barriers in accessing education due to high rates of teacher absenteeism, inadequate facilities, lack of transportation, and corporal punishment, which may deter children from attending school.(17, 44, 45) Armed groups and extremist groups regularly attack and threaten schools, disrupting children's access to education.(17, 46)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Pakistan has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

In 2016, Pakistan ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict.

The Federal Government and Provincial Governments, including Balochistan, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Punjab, and Sindh have established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Pakistan's legal framework to address and protect children from child labor.

* No conscription (66)

The 18th Amendment to the Pakistan Constitution devolves all child welfare and labor issues from the Federal Government to the four Provincial Governments. Until each Province repeals or adopts a replacement law, Federal child labor laws are in force.(71) According to the Constitution, both Federal and Provincial Governments can pass legislation on criminal law.(72)

In 2016, Punjab Province passed the Punjab Restriction on Employment of Children Act, which establishes age 15 as the minimum age for employment and age 18 as the minimum age for employment in hazardous work.(51) The Province also passed the Punjab Prohibition of Child Labor at Brick Kilns Act, which prohibits the employment of children under age 14 at brick kilns.(50) During the year, Sindh Province passed laws prohibiting children under age 15 from working in factories and commercial establishments.(53, 54) Sindh Province also passed the Sindh Bonded Labor System (Abolition) Act.(61, 73) The Federal Government gave the final approval for the Criminal Law (Second Amendment) Act, which prohibits the use of children in pornography.(64)

In 2017, Sindh Province passed the Sindh Prohibition of Employment of Children, which establishes age 15 as the minimum age for employment and age 19 as the minimum age for employment in hazardous work.(55)

Pakistan's Federal and Provincial laws are not completely in compliance with international standards on child labor, including the worst forms of child labor. Balochistan Province has not established a minimum age for employment or a minimum age for hazardous work. The Federal law setting the minimum age of 15 for hazardous work is not in compliance with international standards.(56) Hazardous work prohibitions for the Federal Government and the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Punjab, and Sindh Provinces are not comprehensive because they do not cover brickmaking and domestic work.(51, 52, 55, 56) The Federal Government's minimum age for work and minimum age for hazardous work are not in compliance with international standards because they do not extend to informal employment.(47-49, 56) Sindh Province's laws setting the minimum age for work also do not extend to informal work, because they apply only to factories that employ 10 or more employees, and shops and establishments.(53, 54)

Pakistan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance and the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Child Protection and Welfare Act do not comply with international standards because they do not provide that children can be trafficked without coercion. These laws are also insufficient because they do not specifically prohibit internal human trafficking.(62, 63) The Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Child Protection and Welfare Act further does not comply with international standards because it prohibits child trafficking only for exploitative entertainment.(63)

The Federal Penal Code does not specifically prohibit the use, procuring, and offering of children for pornographic performances.(58) Although the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Child Protection and Welfare Act prohibits the use of a child for the production of pornography, the law does not prohibit procuring and offering a child for the production of pornography. It also does not prohibit using, procuring, and offering of a child for prostitution or pornographic performances.(63)

Federal and Provincial laws, with the exception of the Punjab Provincial law, do not prohibit the use of children in drug production and drug trafficking.(51, 63) The Federal and Provincial Governments, with the exception of Punjab Province, have not enacted laws that prohibit the recruitment and use of children by non-state groups for armed conflict.(17)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Provincial Labor Inspectors	Inspect industrial areas and markets to identify child labor violations, enforce Provincial labor laws, and pursue legal action against employers.(17)
Provincial and Regional Police	Enforce violations of Federal and Provincial laws, including the Pakistan Penal Code and the Bonded Labor System (Abolition) Act, concerning the worst forms of child labor. Refer children taken into custody to Child Protection Officers.(17)
District Vigilance Committees	Implement the Bonded Labor System (Abolition) Act and assist in rehabilitating bonded laborers. Report to the District Magistrate. (17, 57)

Child Protection Units	Take into custody at-risk children, including those rescued from exploitative labor situations. Present cases of children taken into custody to the Child Protection Court or the appropriate authority. Established in Punjab, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, and Sindh Provinces.(17, 63, 65, 74-76)

[†] Data are from 2014 and 2015.

Following the devolution of Federal powers to Provincial Governments, the Provinces are responsible for enforcing labor laws, including those involving child labor law violations.(17) Limited labor inspection data are available for the Provincial Governments.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Pakistan's workforce, which includes more than 65 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Pakistan should employ about 1,628 inspectors.(79-81) Provincial agencies that support law enforcement are also severely under-resourced. For example, labor inspectors receive very little training and have insufficient resources, which hamper the labor inspectorate's ability to inspect workplaces.(17, 82, 83)

Labor inspections vary across Provincial Governments. In Punjab, inspections are conducted regularly, but in Sindh, inspectors have stopped conducting unannounced inspections, and inspections are sporadic due to harassment.(17, 82) In 2016, labor inspectors in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa conducted 45,367 inspections. Each inspector therefore conducted an average of 1,163 inspections during this period.(78) This is a high number of inspections conducted by each inspector, and it is unknown whether this high number affects the quality of inspections. Across the provinces, fines and penalties are assessed infrequently and are insufficient to deter employers from using child labor.(71, 77)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Pakistan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (77)	Yes (17)

In 2016, Balochistan Province passed the Child Protection Act, which mandates the creation of child protection units to provide a referral mechanism by which rescued children can be placed in protective custody and obtain rehabilitation services.(76)

Although some District Vigilance Committees have been established in Pakistan, many of the committees are inactive or ineffective.(40)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description

Responsible for developing a national strategy to eliminate child labor and works with Provincial Governments to adopt legislation and conduct child labor surveys.(86)
Interagency Task Force	Coordinate the anti-human trafficking efforts of the Ministry of the Interior, intelligence and law enforcement agencies, the Ministry of Law and Justice, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Support 27 Federal Investigation Agency anti-trafficking units that work with Provincial and district police officers to monitor and combat internal and transnational human trafficking.(40, 87) Maintain an Integrated Border Management System.(88)
Punjab Child Protection and Welfare Bureau	Coordinate the protection of destitute and neglected children by appointing child protection officers, supervising child protection units, and establishing child protection institutions and child protection courts.(65)
Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Child Protection and Welfare Commission	Coordinate efforts to enhance the safety, welfare, and well-being of children, including by running programs for the prevention of exploitative child labor practices.(89) Led by the Province's Social Welfare, Special Education and Women Empowerment Department.(90)
Sindh Child Protection Authority	Coordinate efforts to ensure the rights of children in need of special protection, including child laborers, by establishing child protection units and appointing child protection officers.(75) Headed by the Provincial minister; members include two parliamentarians, lawyers, social activists, and representatives from departments that deal with children's issues.(91)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

Policy	Description
Provincial Plans of Action to Combat Child Labor	Details how each Province plans to revise child labor legislation, including by strengthening the capacity of labor inspectors, generating awareness of child labor, improving reporting, and computerizing labor inspection data.(92)
Sindh and Punjab Provincial Plans of Action to Combat Bonded Labor	Details how the Sindh and Punjab Provinces plan to revise their bonded labor laws. Includes plans to strengthen the capacity of labor inspectors, generate awareness of bonded labor, improve reporting, and computerize labor inspection data.(93)

Policy	Description
Federally Administered Tribal Areas (FATA) Child Protection Policy	Describes how FATA will promote and create a protective environment for all children. Includes actions to be taken toward the prevention and elimination of child labor.(94)
Punjab Labor Policy	Seeks to improve working conditions, eradicate child and bonded labor, and establish social safety for workers and their families. Includes the goal of ending all child labor in brick kilns, in addition to the construction of schools, hospitals, and residences for workers.(95)

‡ The Government has other policies which may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (97-103)

The Provincial Government education policies have not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies.(96-102)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Bait-ul-Mal programs [‡]	Government-funded programs that aim to remove children from child labor, including its worst forms, and to increase vulnerable children's access to education. Programs include the National Centers for Rehabilitation of Child Labor and the Child Support Program.(103, 104)
Sabawoon Rehabilitation Center [†]	Pakistan Army center that rehabilitates children who were recruited and ideologically influenced by terrorist organizations and militant groups. Reintegrates youth into society by providing psychological treatment, education, and vocational training.(87, 105)
Elimination of Child Labor and Bonded Labor Project (Integrated Project for Promotion of 'Decent Work for Vulnerable Workers' in Punjab Province) ^{*†}	Punjab Government-funded programs that aims to provide education to vulnerable children, rehabilitate bonded laborers working in brick kilns, promote integration and coordination of government responses, strengthen legislation, increase the capacity of law enforcement and service providers, and increase the knowledge base on these issues.(106-108)
ILO-Funded Projects	ILO projects in Pakistan that aim to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms. These project include Education Program for Children of Brick Kiln Workers, implemented by the Government of Punjab in the Punjab Province; Strengthening Capacity of Constituents to Address Unacceptable Forms of Work Focusing on Child Labor, Bonded Labor and Informal Economy Workers (2015–2016); and Elimination of Child Labour and Promotion of Decent Work in the Stora Enso Value Chain (2015–2017).(109-111)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project, implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers in Pakistan.(112) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Pakistan.

The social programs of the Federal and Provincial Governments are insufficient to address the prevalence and scope of Pakistan's child labor problem. Existing programs also do not provide enough protection and rehabilitation services for bonded laborers and victims of human trafficking.(40) Government initiatives are needed to specifically target child domestic workers and child labor in the informal sector.(83) Additional social programs are also necessary to raise awareness and provide assistance to children used by non-state militant groups to engage in armed conflict.(113)

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
81. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO's classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that - appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Panama

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Panama made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified the ILO Protocol to the Forced Labor Convention, updated the list of hazardous occupations for children, and signed an agreement with the Governments of Guatemala and the Dominican Republic to advance the elimination of child labor through research and the exchange of information. In addition, a regional committee to coordinate on child labor issues was created in Veraguas, the National Institute of Statistics conducted a national child labor survey, and the Directorate Against Child Labor and for the Protection of Adolescent Workers institutionalized a national training agenda for child labor inspectors. However, children in Panama perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Panamanian law does not adequately define light work and allows minors under age 16 to engage in hazardous work within training establishments. Moreover, inadequate resources, including an insufficient number of inspectors, hamper the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce laws on the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Panama perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Panama.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.7 (32,858)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	94.9

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Street work, including selling goods on the street, washing cars, shoe shining, and collecting recyclables (3-7, 19, 24, 25, 27, 29, 32-43)

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 8-10)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some children in Panama are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, mainly in tourist areas in Panama City and in beach communities.(5, 7, 10) According to the results of Panama's 2016 biennial Survey on Child Labor, the highest prevalence of child labor is in rural areas and autonomous indigenous areas. Comarca Ngäbe Buglé and the provinces of Panama and Bocas del Toro had the highest number of children engaged in child labor.(1) Panamanian children from rural areas and children from indigenous and Afro-Panamanian communities are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. These children face barriers to accessing education, including long distances to schools and insufficient roads and transportation, particularly in the indigenous comarcas.(4, 10, 44-47) Children of indigenous descent often travel significant distances to reach school and experience frequent interruptions of their education due to family migration to work in agriculture.(5, 6, 46, 47)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Panama has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

In 2016, Panama ratified the ILO Protocol to the Forced Labor Convention.(48, 49)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Panama's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

† No standing military (50, 59)

Although the Constitution, Family Code, and Labor Code set the minimum age for employment at age 14, the Family Code and Labor Code specify exceptions for domestic and agricultural work.(50-52) Article 716 of the Family Code permits children ages 12 to 14 to perform domestic and agricultural work as regulated by the Labor Code.(51) Article 119 of the Labor Code allows children ages 12 to 15 to perform light work in agriculture if the work is outside regular school hours, and Article 123 allows children over the age of 12 to perform light domestic work. The Labor Code, however, does not define the kinds of tasks children may perform as light work or the total number of hours they may work.(52)

Article 118 of the Labor Code and Article 510 of the Family Code allow minors to perform hazardous work in training establishments, when the work is approved by the competent government authority and carried out under its supervision, but neither law establishes a minimum age for this work.(51, 52) In 2016, the Government updated the list of hazardous occupations for children, including by adding Article 2-A establishing age 14 as the minimum age for hazardous work within training establishments.(55)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MITRADEL)	Enforce child labor laws through two directorates with direct authority over child labor matters: the Directorate Against Child Labor and for the Protection of Adolescent Workers (DIRETIPPAT) and the Labor Inspection Directorate.(40) The Labor Inspection Directorate enforces the Labor Code in areas where children may be working, particularly in the formal sector. DIRETIPPAT is responsible for overseeing the enforcement of laws related to working children in the formal and informal sectors; plans and executes public policies; and carries out education programs on child labor for employers, parents, and children. (40, 60-62) Refer cases of children found in exploitative work to the Child and Adolescent Courts or to the National Secretariat for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (SENNIAF).(40)
Attorney General's Office	Investigate and prosecute crimes of sexual exploitation. Investigations initiated by the Judicial Investigative Directorate; cases passed to the prosecutors.(63)
SENNIAF	Conduct inspections to identify children and adolescents engaged in child labor, particularly in the informal sector.(3) Monitor and coordinate a network of government services to address needs of vulnerable populations.(34, 40) Run shelters for victims of human trafficking, including minors.(64)

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor (MITRADEL) conducted 1,404 child labor inspections, an increase from the 1,337 child labor inspections MITRADEL conducted in 2015.(4, 5) Also during the reporting period, the Directorate Against Child Labor and for the Protection of Adolescent Workers (DIRETIPPAT) institutionalized a national training agenda for child labor inspectors and removed 1,280 children from situations of hazardous child labor, incorporating these children into the Direct Government Action Program for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor.(4) MITRADEL reported that the budget for DIRETIPPAT was insufficient to meet its commitments for coordination, implementation, and monitoring related to child labor.(46)

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Panama's workforce, which includes more than 1 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Panama should employ roughly 107 labor inspectors.(66-68) Enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the lack of resources for inspections, and MITRADEL noted that the number of labor inspectors employed and labor inspections conducted were insufficient. (46) Civil society groups have stated that labor inspections in Panama focus primarily on the formal sector, leaving children in the informal sector vulnerable.(7, 10) Moreover, unannounced labor inspections are not conducted in agricultural areas outside of Panama City.(5) MITRADEL has also indicated that Article 125 of the Labor Code sanctions fines ranging from $50 to $700 for child labor violations but does not specify whether the employer can be charged this amount per each affected worker.(3, 5, 7)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Panama took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Led by the First Lady of Panama and includes MITRADEL; the ministries of Education, Health, and Agriculture; and representatives from civil society and organizations of workers and employers.(69) Conduct a National Child Labor Survey every 2 years.(5) In 2016, opened a regional committee in Veraguas.(70)
Subcommittee to Combat Child Labor	Incorporate Panamanian Institute for Sports and the Ministry of Education in efforts to address child labor and its causes. Subcommittee of the Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Workers. (7, 46, 62, 71)
National Commission for the Prevention of Crimes of Sexual Exploitation (CONAPREDES)	Coordinate, advise, and implement public policies for the prevention and eradication of sexual exploitation through specific actions, projects, and programs; study related trends and prevalence.(69) Members include the Attorney General as well as the Ministries of Labor, Education, Social Development, and Health. Refer cases of sexual exploitation to the Attorney General's Office.(39, 69)

MITRADEL has noted the need for increased coordination on efforts to address child labor, including within MITRADEL and with social service agencies and referral mechanisms.(46)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor (2016–2019)	Aims to eliminate all forms of child labor in Panama by 2020 by strengthening anti-poverty, health, and educational programs and policies.(72–74)
National Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Sexual Commercial Exploitation of Children and Adolescents	Aims to prevent and eliminate the sexual commercial exploitation of children and adolescents, including by providing services to victims, strengthening CONAPREDES, and raising awareness. Implemented by CONAPREDES, with support from the Public Ministry.(39, 40, 69, 75)
National Plan Against Trafficking in Persons (2012–2017)	Aims to combat human trafficking through prevention, victim assistance, and international cooperation. Includes provisions to protect child victims of human trafficking.(76)

In June 2016, the Governments of Panama, Guatemala, and the Dominican Republic signed an agreement to conduct research and exchange information to advance the elimination of child labor.(77) The Coordination Agreement on Labor Migration between the Ministries of Labor of Costa Rica and Panama aims to strengthen dialogue on labor migration between the two countries, with an emphasis on indigenous Panamanian migrant workers, to ensure social protection of migrant workers and their families, and includes a bilateral technical committee to promote joint action to combat human trafficking, exchange information, and develop cooperative strategies and projects.(78) Although potentially a useful policy tool to combat child labor, child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Direct Government Action Program for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor†	MITRADEL program implemented through the Institute for Training and Utilization of Human Resources that provides a network of social and economic services to child workers and children at risk of child labor. Services include provision of food and scholarships, support for sports activities, and social monitoring.(7, 79) Scholarships for schooling have been provided to approximately 5,500 children. In 2016, 1,289 children were incorporated into the program after being removed from hazardous work.(4, 80)
Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor†	SENNIAF program that identifies children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, removes them from exploitative situations, and connects them to a network of social and economic services offered by the Government.(34, 39)
National Child Labor Survey†	Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Workers survey conducted every two years by the National Institute of Statistics and Census with funding from SENNIAP and MITRADEL.(5) Most recently conducted in 2016.(4)
National Council of Private Businesses (CoNEP) Corporate Social Responsibility Program	Joint effort created by MITRADEL and the National Council of Private Businesses that involves a partnership with businesses across Panama to sign the Voluntary Agreement of Corporate Social Responsibility to prevent and eradicate child labor.(81, 82) In 2016, CoNEP and MITRADEL recognized nine companies for their efforts to prevent child labor in their supply chains.(83)
MITRADEL and Fundación Telefónica Cooperative Agreement (2014–2016)	MITRADEL public-private partnership with Telefónica Móviles Panamá S.A. to prevent and eliminate child labor by improving access to education and providing trainings to teachers and private employers.(7, 84)
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL projects that aim to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, through research, improved monitoring and enforcement, policy development, and awareness-raising. These projects include Educafuturo: Combating Child Labor , a $6.5 million, 4-year project implemented in Ecuador and Panama by Partners of the Americas; Building Effective Policies Against Child Labor , a $3.5 million, 4-year project implemented in Ecuador and Panama by the ILO; and Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues , implemented in approximately 40 countries by the ILO. For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .(85-88)
Prevention and Care for Child and Adolescent Victims of Sexual Violence†	SENNIAF program that identifies children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, removes them from exploitative situations, and provides them with social services. Conducts training workshops nationwide for professionals providing direct care to child and adolescent victims of sexual violence.(89)
Network of Opportunities†	Ministry of Social Development program that provides conditional cash transfers to families in extreme poverty, conditioned on their children's participation in health and education services and the acquisition of a birth certificate. Offers training to project participants to improve income-generating opportunities.(39, 90)

† Program is funded by the Government of Panama.

Although Panama has programs that reach children in rural areas and from indigenous and Afro-Panamanian communities, the scope of these programs is insufficient, and these children remain vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(44, 45)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Panama (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish regulations that define the number of hours and types of activities that children between the ages of 12 and 14 can undertake as light work to ensure that they are not exposed to hazardous labor.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that only minors age 16 and older who have received adequate, specific instruction or vocational training are permitted to perform hazardous work, and that their health, safety, and morals are fully protected.	2013 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Allocate sufficient funding for DIRETIPPAT to meet its commitments for coordination, implementation, and monitoring related to child labor.	2014 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors trained and responsible for providing enforcement of child labor laws to meet international standards and to address child labor in the informal sector and agricultural areas outside of Panama City.	2014 – 2016
	Strengthen the inspection system by conducting unannounced inspections in agricultural areas outside of Panama City.	2015 – 2016
	Clarify whether fines for child labor violations, as sanctioned in Article 125 of the Labor Code, may be applied for each affected worker.	2014 – 2016
	Publish information on the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2016
Coordination	Increase coordination on efforts to address child labor, including within MITRADEL, and with social service agencies and referral mechanisms.	2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Coordination Agreement on Labor Migration between the Ministries of Labor of Costa Rica and Panama.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education accessible for all children, including children from rural areas and indigenous and Afro-Panamanian communities, by expanding existing programs, including for school transportation.	2014 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 66. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited May 17, 2017]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
67. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
68. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Papua New Guinea made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved the Trafficking in Persons National Action Plan and finalized standard operating procedures for identifying and protecting victims of human trafficking, including children. However, children in Papua New Guinea engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Laws do not specifically define the hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children. Inadequate resources hamper the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws. In addition, Papua New Guinea lacks a compulsory age for education and some children face challenges accessing school, which increases the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Papua New Guinea engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Papua New Guinea. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		78.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(3)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Working on tea, coffee, cocoa, copra, palm oil, and rubber plantations (5, 6)
Services	Domestic work (1, 5, 6)
	Street work, including vending, chopping firewood for sale, moving furniture, scavenging for scrap metal, gathering scrap food for pig feed, and begging (5-11)
	Work in markets, including unloading and carrying heavy bags of food (6, 9, 12)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, including working in bars, nightclubs, and brothels, and use in the production of pornography, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 12)
	Forced domestic work (1, 2, 12)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Papua New Guinea, children are trafficked within the country for commercial sexual exploitation. (1, 2) Some children from rural areas are sent to live with relatives or “host” families in cities, where they may be forced to perform domestic work to pay off family debts. (1, 5, 12)

Papua New Guinea

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Research found that the threat of gender-based violence prevents many girls from attending school.(12-14) Although the Government has established a free education policy, in practice many schools charge fees for books, uniforms, and other supplies.(15-18) These barriers to education make affected children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Papua New Guinea has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Papua New Guinea's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 103 of the Employment Act (19)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 54 of the Lukautim Pikinini Act (15)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 43 of the Constitution of the Independent State of Papua New Guinea; Section 208 of the Criminal Code (20, 21)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 208 of the Criminal Code (21)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 229J–229O and 229R–229T of the Criminal Code (22)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	16	Section 30 of the Defence Act (23)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	No

* No conscription (24)

Papua New Guinea has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The Department of Labor and Industrial Relations (DLIR) has been in the process of developing a hazardous work list for several years, but did not submit the list to the cabinet for endorsement during the reporting period.(7, 25, 26)

According to the Employment Act, children ages 11 to 16 may be allowed to work under certain conditions. The minimum age of 11 for light work is not in compliance with international standards, and the law does not specify the types of activities in which light work is permitted nor the number of hours per week that this work may be undertaken.(19) Papua New Guinea also does not have laws that prohibit using, procuring, or offering a child for illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs.(25) The law does not sufficiently protect children from commercial sexual exploitation, as the use, procuring, and offering of a child for pornographic performances is not criminally prohibited.

There is no age up to which education is compulsory in Papua New Guinea, which increases the risk of children's involvement in child labor. Although free education is not mandated by law, there is a policy that sufficiently provides for free basic education.(10, 18)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor and Industrial Relations (DLIR)	Implement and enforce child labor laws.(27)
Department of Community Development, Religion, and Sports	Enforce the Lukautim Pikinini Act, including provisions on child labor, including its worst forms.(27)
Royal Papua New Guinea Constabulary	Enforce laws against commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities.(27)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Papua New Guinea took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Unannounced Inspections Conducted	Yes (6)	Unknown (26)

Labor inspectors sometimes carry out routine inspections in hazardous workplaces or in the manufacturing sector; however, due to limited capacity, labor inspectors generally respond only to specific child labor complaints.(6, 10, 29) Inadequate resources hamper the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(25, 26)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Papua New Guinea took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (6)	No (29)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	N/A

Number of Convictions	0 (31)	0 (29)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	No (31)	Yes (30, 32)

In 2016, the Government endorsed Standard Operating Procedures (SOPs) to improve the identification and protection of human trafficking victims and to strengthen investigation and prosecution of human trafficking crimes. The SOPs include specific processes for handling child trafficking cases.(30, 32)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism to combat human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Human Trafficking Committee	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking. Chaired by the Department of Justice and the Attorney General, with representatives from over 15 government agencies, NGOS, and international organizations.(33, 34)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor in Papua New Guinea	Promotes Government coordination to eliminate the worst forms of child labor through more effective prevention, protection, rehabilitation, and reintegration measures and capacity building.(35)
Papua New Guinea Trafficking in Persons National Action Plan (2015-2020)†	Seeks to prevent human trafficking, protect victims, and prosecute offenders.(36) Endorsed by the National Executive Council in 2016.(30)
Tuition Fee-Free Policy	Aims to improve access to education by abolishing school fees in grades 1 through 10 and providing subsidies for students in grades 11 and 12.(10, 18)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into the Universal Basic Education Plan and Vision 2050.(37, 38) Research did not find information on whether the Government implemented the National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor in 2016.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Urban Youth Employment Project [†] (2011–2016)	Government- and World Bank-funded project that provides youth with training, temporary jobs, and skill development through apprenticeship projects.(39)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Papua New Guinea.

Research found no evidence that the Government carried out programs specifically designed to assist children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation or domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Paraguay made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved the National Strategy to Prevent Forced Labor and renewed the National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Working Adolescents. The Government also published results from a 2015 survey on rural child labor and formalized an agreement to accelerate authorization of workplace inspection search warrants. In addition, the Government launched a project to promote decent work in the production of cotton by combatting poverty and discrimination, preventing and eradicating child labor and forced labor, formalizing employment, and promoting youth employment. However, children in Paraguay are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including cattle raising and domestic work. The funding and reach of existing social programs and law enforcement agencies hamper the Government's ability to fully address the worst forms of child labor, particularly in rural areas.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Paraguay engage in the worst forms of child labor, including cattle raising and domestic work.(1-12) The 2011 National Survey of Child and Adolescent Activities found that 21 percent of all Paraguayan children were engaged in hazardous work.(2) The 2015 Survey of Activities of Rural Area Children and Adolescents, published in 2016, identified 384,677 children engaged in child labor in agriculture.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Paraguay.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

	Use in the production of child pornography (4, 24-27)
	Use in illicit activities, including smuggling and drug trafficking (3, 4, 8, 19, 28)
	Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (4, 5, 8, 9, 19)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Criadazgo, a system whereby middle-class and wealthy families informally employ and house child domestic workers from impoverished families, is pervasive in Paraguay; the 2011 National Survey of Child and Adolescent Activities estimated 46,000 children were engaged in criadazgo.(2, 4, 12, 16, 19, 27) Children work alongside their parents in debt bondage on cattle ranches, dairy farms, and charcoal factories in the remote Chaco region.(4) The Paraguayan People’s Army (EPP) and the Armed Peasant Association recruit children to carry supplies and serve as lookouts or full-time combatants.(4, 5, 8, 19)

The 2011 National Survey of Child and Adolescent Activities indicated that children who speak Guaraní exclusively are more likely to be involved in child labor and have higher rates of school absence as compared to other working children; poverty is pervasive in rural Paraguay, where Guaraní is the predominant language.(2, 29) School buses or other forms of public transportation are limited in rural areas and school infrastructure is often inadequate in rural and indigenous communities. The Government has noted that girls from rural areas leave school at an earlier age than boys and estimated that more than 50 percent of children with disabilities could not attend school due to lack of access to public transportation.(4, 8, 19) Such challenges may leave these children more vulnerable to child labor. Approximately 13 percent of children engaged in child labor in agriculture do not attend school and 11.8 percent of working children ages 14 to 17 have not completed primary school.(1, 30)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Paraguay has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Paraguay’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment and Social Security (MTESS)	Enforce laws related to child labor, inspect workplaces for child labor, and fine companies found in violation of labor laws. Refer cases involving criminal violation of child labor to the Public Ministry or the National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents (SNNA). (5, 7)
National Police	Maintain a special unit of 33 police officers who handle complaints regarding trafficking in persons, including children, with offices in five cities. (5, 7)
The Public Ministry (Prosecutor's Office)	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor by investigating and prosecuting violators and providing support to local prosecutors throughout Paraguay. (7)
SNNA	Maintain a unit dedicated to fighting child trafficking and a hotline to report cases of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, which received 10,622 calls in 2016. Provide social services to victims referred by law enforcement agencies. (5, 7, 28, 47)
The Public Defender's Office	Maintain the Specialized Unit to Combat Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents. (48)
Attorney General's Office	Investigate and prosecute cases of child labor involving human trafficking via the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Unit, composed of 3 specialized prosecutors based in Asunción and 35 assistants. (5)

As part of the Ministry of Labor, Employment and Social Security's (MTESS) efforts to professionalize the labor inspectorate, all labor inspectors must now meet the minimum qualification of a university degree. During 2016, the MTESS reassigned some of the incumbent labor inspectors to other functions including training new staff, providing labor complaint customer service, and organizing inspection strategy.(4) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Paraguay's workforce, which includes over 3 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Paraguay should employ roughly 219 inspectors.(51-53) Government agencies, international organizations, NGOs, and labor organizations agree that inadequate funding and number of labor inspectors hamper the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws, especially in the informal sector.(4, 5, 16) The inspectorate is particularly limited by the lack of dedicated vehicles or travel funds.(4, 5, 16)

An additional constraint to labor law enforcement is the legal requirement that the Public Ministry and the Ministry of Labor, Employment and Social Security (MTESS) secure a search warrant from a judge if an employer does not permit an inspector to enter a workplace and conduct an inspection. There is a lack of efficient and timely cooperation by judicial authorities in granting workplace inspection search warrants, as the system is paper-based and orders routinely take more than 3 months to arrive.(4, 5, 7, 16, 54) During the reporting period, the MTESS formalized an agreement with judicial authorities, which will go into effect in 2017, to accelerate the authorization of search warrants.(4)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Paraguay took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	60 (55)	77 (4)
Number of Convictions	35 (55)	20 (4)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	No (4)	No (4)

In November 2016, the Attorney General's office rescued 35 indigenous Ache victims, including 7 children, from forced labor producing charcoal on a farm in the Chaco.(4, 17, 47) During the reporting period, a judge in the city of Horqueta placed a 17 year old girl on house arrest for possession of a fire arm and EPP communications. (56) Government agencies, international organizations, NGOs, and labor organizations have observed that more specialized prosecutors are needed to support local prosecutors nationwide and to increase the Public Ministry's ability to investigate and prosecute child labor cases involving human trafficking.(4, 5, 16) The Special Directorate to Fight the Trafficking of Persons and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children has insufficient resources, including vehicles, fuel, and logistical support, to carry out investigations, particularly in remote areas, such as the Chaco, where the worst forms of child labor, human trafficking, and debt bondage are most prevalent. Overall, Paraguay's law enforcement agencies lack resources, including staff and training, to sufficiently identify, investigate, and prosecute cases of the worst forms of child labor; as a result, the number of convictions of crimes related to the worst forms of child labor is insufficient and existing penalties are inadequate deterrents.(4, 5, 7, 16, 57)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission to Prevent and Eradicate the Exploitation of Children (CONAETI)	Lead government efforts against child labor and include representatives from the MTESS, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, the Ministry of Women's Affairs, the SNNA, and other government agencies, as well as labor union representatives, industry associations, and NGOs.(7, 58)
Inter-Institutional Working Group on Preventing and Combating Human Trafficking	Coordinate interagency efforts to combat all forms of trafficking in persons, including child trafficking. Headed by the Ministry of Foreign Relations.(7, 20, 58)
Defense Councils for the Rights of Children and Adolescents	Coordinate efforts to protect children's rights at the municipal level, including by maintaining a registry of children involved in economic activities and coordinating with vocational training programs for adolescents.(7, 31)

In 2016, the MTESS met regularly with the Ministries of Education and Health, however, coordination between these ministries remains insufficient to combat the worst forms of child labor.(4-7, 59)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Working Adolescents (2016–2020)†	Aims to raise awareness and strengthen enforcement of child labor laws. Inter-Institutional Agreement on Government Procurement	Prohibits Government procurement of goods or services involving child labor. Established between SNNA and the National Bureau for Public Contracts.(63)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL projects that aim to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, through research, improved monitoring and enforcement, policy development, and awareness-raising. These projects include Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR) , implemented by the ILO in 11 countries; Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development , implemented by the ILO in 10 countries; Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues , implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries; and Paraguay Okakuaa (Paraguay Progresses) , $6 million project implemented by Partners of the Americas.(64-66) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Embrace Program (Programa Abrazo)†	SNNA program to assist children engaged in exploitative work by providing them and their families with health and education services, food deliveries, and cash transfers conditioned on children's school attendance and withdrawal from work.(58) Works closely with NGO Fortalecer in the implementation of ILO-IPEC programs and with the Sugarcane Growers' Association, Ministry of Education and Culture, and CONAETI to set up programs tailored to at-risk children who work during the sugarcane harvesting season.(7)
Combating Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Girls, Boys and Adolescents in Trips and Tourism†	National campaign of the National Secretariat for Tourism and the Association of Female Tourism Executives to raise awareness on protecting children from commercial sexual exploitation.(6)
Promotion of Decent Work in the Cotton Supply Chain (2016-2018)*	Government of Brazil-funded project implemented by the ILO to promote decent work in cotton through exchanges on combatting poverty and discrimination, preventing and eradicating child labor and forced labor, formalizing employment, and promoting youth employment and equality.(67, 68)
Well-Being Conditional Cash Transfer Program (Tekoporã)†	Government-administered program through the Secretariat for Social Action. Provides conditional cash transfers to families in rural communities.(5) Incorporates aspects of the Embrace Program, such as the family monitoring methodology, to ensure beneficiary children do not engage in child labor.(7)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Paraguay.

The 2012 Law Against Trafficking in Persons requires the Ministry of Women's Affairs to provide compensation and financial assistance to victims of sexual and labor trafficking, including minors. However, the Government has not allocated funding for the Ministry of Women's Affairs to implement such a program, and most victims did not have access to comprehensive care.(5, 16, 40, 69) Although Paraguay has programs that target child labor, the scope and funding level of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, and programs are limited by the absence of government education and health services in rural areas. Additional programs are needed to reach the large numbers of working children, especially in agriculture, including cattle herding, and domestic work.(5, 16) The Government lacks appropriate programs and social services for the disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration of children associated with armed groups. (5, 59)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
 53. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Peru

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Peru made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government published results from the 2015 National Child Labor Survey and signed agreements with two universities to develop joint activities under the Responsible Peru program to prevent and eradicate child labor. The National Labor Inspection Superintendency opened a new inspection office in Arequipa and adopted new labor protocols for forced labor and child labor inspections. However, children in Peru engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Labor law enforcement agencies in Peru lack sufficient training and inspectors to adequately combat child labor. Moreover, Peruvian law allows adolescents to engage in night work in some circumstances, and contradictions in the law may allow adolescents to work in mining and commercial fishing, despite the designation of both activities as hazardous.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Peru engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-17) The 2015 National Child Labor Survey, published in 2016, identified 1,619,200 children, ages 5 to 17, engaged in child labor in Peru. Rates of child labor were higher in the sierra and jungle regions than in the coastal region and also higher in rural areas than in urban areas.(18) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Peru.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	21.8 (1,261,484)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	97.6
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	25.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		99.4

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Peru work in informal and small-scale mining, particularly for gold, sometimes in situations of forced labor, and are exposed to hazards, including wall and mine collapses, landslides, explosives accidents, and harmful gases.(1, 10, 12, 14-16, 23, 37, 38) Remnants of the Shining Path terrorist group use children in combat, domestic servitude, and drug trafficking.(12, 17)

Students ages 17 and 18 with an indigenous first language had a 48.7 percent secondary school completion rate in 2015, compared to a 71.4 percent secondary school completion rate among students whose first language is Spanish. Only 49.5 percent of girls ages 17 and 18 in rural areas completed secondary school in 2015, as opposed to 80.1 percent of girls the same age in urban areas.(39)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Peru has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Peru's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 17 of the Constitution; Article 4 of the General Education Law (46, 51)

[‡] Age calculated based on available information (8, 46, 51-53)

The Child and Adolescent Code does not fully protect adolescents ages 12 to 18 engaged in night work and hazardous work. Article 57 prohibits children under age 12 and adolescents from working between the hours of 7 p.m. and 7 a.m., with the exception that a judge may authorize adolescents age 15 and older to engage in night work not exceeding 4 hours a day. In addition, although Section A of Supreme Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES designates fishing and mining as work that is hazardous by nature, Article 51 of the Child and Adolescent Code allows adolescents to perform work in mining at age 16 and in commercial fishing at age 17, without provisions to ensure that their health, safety, and morals are fully protected or that they receive specific instruction or training in these activities.(40, 42)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Promotion of Employment (MTPE)	Set national policies and guidelines for labor law enforcement, including for inspections. Responsible for supporting the National Labor Inspection Superintendency (SUNAFIL).(54) Maintain an online reporting system to receive complaints of labor law violations.(55)
SUNAFIL	Enforce labor laws in 10 regions.(8, 56) Conduct labor inspections of employers who have more than 10 registered workers.(57) Maintain a special inspection group comprising 15 inspectors who conduct inspections targeting forced labor and child labor violations, and train other inspectors on these topics.(23, 58) Address possible child labor violations during inspections and refer cases of child labor to the Ministry of Women and Vulnerable Populations (MIMP) and the Public Ministry, as appropriate.(59)
Regional Directorates for Labor	Inspect employers with 10 or fewer registered workers and conduct labor inspections in regions without a SUNAFIL office. Independent from the MTPE.(12, 60)
Ombudsman's Department for Children and Adolescents	Coordinate government policies and programs that target children and adolescents. Assist the MTPE to investigate child labor complaints.(8)

Organization/Agency	Role
National Police	Enforce criminal laws regarding child labor and child exploitation, and maintain a human trafficking investigation unit to investigate cases of child trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation.(8, 61) Coordinate with the Public Ministry and MIMP to place rescued minors with family members or state social services.(62)
Public Ministry	Coordinate with the MTPE, SUNAFIL, and the National Police to investigate and prosecute cases of criminal violations of child labor laws. Maintain a specialized human trafficking prosecutorial unit in the Public Prosecutor's Office.(63)
Ministry of the Interior (MININTER)	Investigate child trafficking cases.(8) Maintain a hotline to receive reports of human trafficking. Provide victims and the general public with information on human trafficking, refer cases of human trafficking to the relevant government offices, and coordinate services for victims.(62, 64)
MIMP Children's Bureau	Design, promote, coordinate, monitor, and evaluate government policies and programs for the well-being of children.(8, 65) Provide social services to children found in the worst forms of child labor and refer cases to the MTPE.(58, 66)

In 2016, the National Labor Inspection Superintendency (SUNAFIL) opened a new inspection office in Arequipa and was operational in 10 out of 25 regions. SUNAFIL adopted new labor protocols on forced labor and child labor inspections, and the Ministry of Labor and Promotion of Employment (MTPE) approved an operational definition of child labor using indicators from the 2015 National Household Survey.(12, 60) During the reporting period, SUNAFIL and the MTPE conducted 882 child labor inspections.(12) However, inspectors lack sufficient training and resources, such as transportation and fuel, particularly in the informal sector in which the majority of child labor occurs in Peru.(8, 12, 34, 37, 61, 68) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Peru's workforce, which includes over 17 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Peru should employ roughly 1,141 inspectors.(69-71) Many regional labor inspectorates are understaffed and underfunded, and the Government continued to report an insufficient number of labor inspectors throughout the country.(12) NGOs estimated that the labor authority collected only 10 percent of imposed fines, reducing their effectiveness to deter child labor violations.(5, 8)

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (8)	Yes (12)

In 2016, the human trafficking investigation unit of the National Police employed 143 officers, an increase from 110 in 2015.(12) NGOs and the MTPE noted that investigators did not have sufficient funding or resources to carry out investigations and that training for MTPE investigators was insufficient and failed to strengthen MTPE investigative capacity.(8, 12) In September, a five-judge panel of the Permanent Chamber of the Supreme Court absolved a bar owner who employed a 14-year-old girl to serve men drinks after determining that the employer was unaware that the girl was also subjected to commercial sexual exploitation in the bar. The panel did not penalize the owner for employing a minor in a bar, although this is prohibited by Section A of Supreme Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES.(17, 42)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (CPETI)	Implement the National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor.(55) Propose public policies and coordinate, evaluate, and monitor government actions to combat child labor. Maintain subcommittees, including on informal mining, child labor in indigenous villages, and project evaluation. (8) Led by the MTPE, comprises representatives from 17 government agencies, including MININTER; the ministries of Education and Justice; the Peruvian National Police; and business associations, unions, and NGOs.(8, 34)
Regional Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor	Manage and implement regional public policy for the prevention and eradication of child labor. Present in all 25 regions of Peru.(60)
National Commission Against Forced Labor	Coordinate government efforts to combat forced labor, including conducting research on forced labor, conducting awareness-raising campaigns, developing legislation, and strengthening Peru's institutional capacity to address forced labor. Led by the MTPE, with participation of eight additional government ministries.(61, 62) Met infrequently throughout 2015 and 2016.(8, 12, 55)
Permanent Multi-Sectoral Commission on Illegal Mining	Coordinate government efforts to address illegal mining by developing programs to eradicate child labor and commercial sexual exploitation of children in mining areas. Led by the Prime Minister's Office, includes representatives of regional governments and six national government agencies, including the Ministry of Energy and Mines and MININTER.(73)
Multi-Sector Commission Against Trafficking in Persons	Lead and coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking by designing, recommending, monitoring, and implementing policies to combat human trafficking, including of children. Chaired by MININTER, comprises 12 government agencies, including the MTPE, MIMP, and the ministries of Justice, Education, and Health.(61) Established in March 2016 to institutionalize the previous committee against human trafficking.(36)

In 2016, law enforcement agencies, including SUNAFIL, the MTPE, and the National Police, continued to coordinate efforts to curtail child labor in the rice plantations of the Tumbes region. However, an overall lack of interagency coordination in Peru limits the collection and sharing of information to address child labor.(12) In addition, some Regional Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor have not fulfilled their mandate to create action plans to combat child labor, while others have action plans but have failed to provide the necessary funding to carry them out.(59, 63)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (2012–2021)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by improving livelihoods of low-income families, educational opportunities, and working conditions for adolescents; raising awareness of child labor; and increasing child labor law enforcement.(32, 60, 66) Also seeks to improve the quality of child labor data in Peru.(32)
A Peru Without Child Labor	Aims to prevent and eradicate child labor through a partnership between the Government and a network of private businesses committed to supporting the National Strategy.(60, 66, 74)
National Action Plan for Children and Adolescents (2012–2021)	Establishes a comprehensive set of government policies for children and adolescents to eradicate the worst forms of child labor.(60-62, 66)
Second National Plan to Combat Forced Labor (2013–2017)	Establishes policies and priorities for combating forced labor to reduce children’s vulnerability to becoming engaged in forced labor.(38, 60)
Intersectoral Protocol Against Forced Labor	Outlines the Government’s role in combating forced labor and provides for the housing, legal defense, and educational reintegration of children and adolescent victims of forced labor. Monitored by the National Commission Against Forced Labor.(5, 60, 75)
National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons	Aims to prevent and reduce human trafficking by addressing root causes, prosecuting perpetrators, assisting victims, and strengthening programs for vulnerable populations, including child laborers.(8, 55, 60, 76)

In 2016, the Government of Peru signed an agreement with the Peruvian Soccer Federation to promote child labor prevention activities in Lima and continued to implement the National Plan for Documentation through interagency efforts to help remote indigenous communities register for national identity documents and to check minors for national identity documents or parental consent to travel in regions that experience high levels of human trafficking and child labor.(36, 77) Although potentially a useful policy tool, the Second National Plan to Combat Forced Labor for 2013–2017 still does not have funding for its implementation.(12)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL projects that aim to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, through research, improved monitoring and enforcement, policy development, and awareness-raising. These projects include Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development , implemented in 10 countries by the ILO; Proyecto Semilla (Seed Project): Combating Exploitative Rural Child Labor in Peru , $16 million, 7-year project implemented by Desarrollo y Autogestión ; Consolidating and Disseminating Efforts to Combat Forced Labor in Brazil and Peru , $6 million, 5-year project implemented by the ILO; From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labor (The Bridge Project) , global project implemented by the ILO. For additional information about USDOL’s work, please visit our Web site .(78-81)
Responsible Peru†	MTPE program to create formal youth employment and strengthen corporate social responsibility.(8) In 2016, the MTPE signed agreements with two universities to develop joint activities to prevent and eradicate child labor.(82)
Huánuco Project†	Improves school retention and attendance rates among child laborers in rural areas. In conjunction with the Together Program, assists approximately 4,000 children and 3,200 families by providing cash transfers, education, and livelihood services.(32, 58, 60, 62, 63)
Carabayllo Project†	Provides scholarships, education assistance, psychological help, and other services to 1,000 families and 1,500 children to reduce urban child labor, especially in garbage dumps.(32, 58, 60, 62, 63)

Program	Description
Learn Program (Yachay)†	MIMP program to increase protection and access to social services for children subjected to street work, begging, and commercial sexual exploitation.(84)
Street Educators (Educadores de Calle)†	MIMP program under Yachay provides counseling and training to children engaged in begging and street work in 20 cities throughout Peru.(8, 85) Connects working children and their families to educational and social services to withdraw them from exploitative work and improve family welfare.(36, 59, 85)
Together Program (Juntos)†	Ministry of Social Development program, provides cash transfers to approximately 650,000 low-income households in 15 of the country's 25 regions.(55, 86, 87)

† Program is funded by the Government of Peru.

Although Peru has programs that reach children who work in agriculture in rural areas, the scope of these programs is still insufficient to fully address the large number of children that perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Peru also lacks targeted programs to assist children who are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and children who work in mining, logging, and domestic work.(12)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Peru (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the minimum age for work in fishing and mining and for night work is 18 or that adolescents ages 16 and 17 receive adequate, specific instruction or training and that their health, safety, and morals are fully protected.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016
Enforcement	Publish information on the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review; about the training system for labor inspectors and criminal investigators, including details on training provided to inspectors and investigators, and training provided on new laws related to child labor; the number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed and collected; and the number of prosecutions initiated and convictions achieved related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Increase the level of funding allocated to the MTPE, SUNAFIL, and regional labor inspectorates for staff, training, and resources to help ensure effective enforcement of child labor laws, particularly in the informal sector and regions with high rates of child labor.	2009 – 2016
	Increase the collection rate of fines imposed for child labor law violations, especially to deter future violations.	2015 – 2016
	Increase the level of funding and the resources allocated for criminal law enforcement related to the worst forms of child labor, including for increased training on the worst forms of child labor for criminal investigators.	2015 – 2016
	Conduct criminal investigations in bars where minors serve alcohol or are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, and ensure that penalties are properly enforced.	2016
Coordination	Strengthen coordination and information-sharing mechanisms among government agencies responsible for responding to child labor issues.	2012 – 2016
	Ensure that regional CPETI commissions develop action plans to combat child labor and allocate sufficient funding to implement these plans.	2010 – 2016
Government Policies	Allocate sufficient funding to fully implement the Second National Plan to Combat Forced Labor.	2013 – 2016
Social Programs	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education accessible for all children, in particular, in indigenous communities and rural areas, including by expanding existing bilingual education programs.	2014 – 2016
	Expand social programs to reach a greater number of children that perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, and initiate social programs to address child commercial sexual exploitation, child labor in mining, child labor in logging, and child domestic work.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 69. Central Intelligence Agency. The World Factbook, CIA, [online] [cited March 29, 2017]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
70. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
71. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Philippines

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Philippines made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government released a revised and expanded list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children, and passed the Children's Emergency Relief and Protection Act, which increased measures to monitor and prevent child trafficking and child labor, including its worst forms, during national disasters. The Government also established the Internet Crimes Against Children office under the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division to combat the Internet-facilitated commercial sexual exploitation of children. In addition, the Government updated the Philippine Program against Child Labor, and published the Revised Rules on Labor Laws Compliance System, which prioritizes establishments and workplaces that employ children for joint labor inspections. However, children in the Philippines perform dangerous tasks in the production of sugarcane. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation. Despite the existence of strong mechanisms to respond to cases of child labor, enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the limited number of inspectors, lack of resources for inspections, and inspectors' inability to enter private homes.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Philippines engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation. Children also engage in the production of sugarcane, an industry that is considered dangerous for children in the Philippines.(1-8) The 2011 National Survey on Children indicated that 3.2 million children aged 5 to 17 years old engage in child labor, of which approximately 3 million work in hazardous labor.(9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Philippines.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	7.5 (1,549,677)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	93.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Agriculture	Production of sugarcane, including growing, weeding, harvesting,† cutting,† and carrying sugarcane bundles† (1, 3-6, 12, 13)
	Growing bananas, coconuts, corn, rice, rubber, and tobacco (3, 4, 13, 14)
	Hog farming (4, 13)
	Production of palm oil, including harvesting,† hauling,† and loading palm oil fruits (2-4)
	Deep-sea fishing† (4, 15, 16)
Industry	Mining† and quarrying†, including gold and nickel extraction (1, 3, 16-20)

	Forced labor, including domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (7, 8, 26, 33)
	Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (34-36)
	Forced begging (32, 37, 38)
	Use in illicit activities, including in the trafficking of drugs (32, 37, 39)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children, primarily girls, are trafficked domestically from rural communities to urban centers and tourist destinations for the purpose of domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(26, 37) In addition, children are coerced into performing sex acts for live Internet broadcast to paying foreigners and local Filipinos, which usually take place in small internet cafes, private homes, or windowless dungeon-like buildings commonly known as “cybersex dens.”(8, 37, 40-43) Research indicates that the Philippines is the top global Internet source of commercial sexual exploitation of children in which exploiters pay between $20 to $150 for a live “sex show.”(44-46)

Many children work as domestic workers, or kasambahays, and are particularly vulnerable to forced labor.(24, 37, 47) Child domestic workers often live and work in the private homes of their employers, where they are expected to work long hours. These children may have limited access to education, and may be subjected to sexual, verbal, and physical abuse.(7, 26, 47, 48)

Child soldiering remains a concern among non-government militias and terrorist organizations, predominately in the southern region of Mindanao.(8, 37, 49) In 2016, the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) began implementing its four-step process of identifying and ending the recruitment and enlistment of children within the Bangsamoro Islamic Armed Forces as part of the UN-MILF Action Plan.(50, 51) However, limited evidence suggests that the MILF and the New People's Army continue to use children to perform chores such as cooking and to fight; in one UN-verified incident, 15 children were used as human shields by Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters.(36, 37, 52, 53)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Philippines has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the Philippines's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

‡ Age calculated based on available information

In 2016, the Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE) released a revised and expanded list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children and Guidelines for the Employment of Migratory Sugarcane Workers, which prohibit the use of children on sugarcane fields.(37, 42, 57, 66) In addition, the Government passed the Children's Emergency Relief and Protection Act in May 2016, in which the Philippine National Police, the Department of Social Welfare and Development, and the Armed Forces of the Philippines will act as operating units and local councils in areas affected by national disasters and calamities and monitor and prevent child trafficking and child labor, including its worst forms.(37, 42, 67, 68)

In 2016, the Philippine Congress introduced House Bill No. 002 that seeks to lower the age of criminal responsibility from 15 to nine years old. The bill does not outline the rights of the children who encounter this law, including their right to access a lawyer and disadvantages children who are socioeconomically challenged and would struggle to obtain legal assistance.(69)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE), Bureau of Working Conditions	Enforce child labor laws; regularly train inspectors and regional personnel. Inspect establishments and monitor compliance with labor laws in all sectors, including in the informal sector and agricultural and mining operations.(1) Register DOLE enforcement activities using the Labor Law Compliance System Management Information System.(70)
Rescue the Child Laborers Quick Action Teams (Sagip Batang Manggagawa – SBM QAT)	Lead the regional mechanism for rescuing children who work in exploitative situations.(25) Detect, monitor, and respond to incidents of child labor using a cooperative and interagency approach.(37, 71) In 2016, rescued 65 children engaged in child labor.(42)
Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD)	Rehabilitate and reintegrate child laborers.(25, 72) Coordinate regional Special Action Units, with at least one dedicated staff member per region to conduct rescue operations for child laborers and cooperate with social workers to manage ongoing cases. Maintain 16 Crisis Intervention Units and 30 residential facilities nationwide, as well as social media accounts, to address cases of child abuse and support child abuse victims, including children exploited in hazardous labor.(16, 37)
Philippine National Police (PNP)	Investigate and prosecute cases related to the worst forms of child labor.(33, 73) The PNP's Women and Children's Protection Center leads the enforcement of laws on child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children as well as other tasks related to the protection of children.(1)
National Bureau of Investigation (NBI)	Investigate and prosecute child labor cases.(33, 73) Operate a national Trafficking in Persons Task Force, as well as a Task Force on the Protection of Children from Exploitation and Abuse.(48, 74)
Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency	Enforce the Comprehensive Dangerous Drugs Act. Maintain a national hotline for reporting cases of children used in illicit activities.(72) Coordinate with the DSWD to assist during rescue operations.(1)

In May 2016, DOLE issued the Revised Rules on Labor Laws Compliance System, which prioritizes establishments and workplaces that employ children for joint assessments that would involve the labor inspector, the employer's representatives, and the employees. If the complaint on an employer involves a violation of the Special Protection of Children against Child Abuse, Exploitation and Discrimination Act, the Manual on Conduct of Inspection, Rescue and Enforcement Proceedings in Child Labor Cases pursuant to Department Circular No. 02, Series of 2010, will apply. (37, 75)

In 2016, DOLE hired 41 additional Labor Laws Compliance Officers and conducted a Training of Labor Laws Compliance Officers on Child Labor Assessment to enhance personnel's capacity to detect and assess child labor incidents. However, enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the lack of resources for inspections.(16, 37, 70) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of the Philippines's workforce, which includes over 42 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, the Philippines should employ roughly 2,783 labor inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(37, 80-82) While the Inspectorate's funding increased in 2016, the Government noted that DOLE's funding for maintenance and operating expenses was insufficient to carry out inspections across the country's 16 regions, particularly in more rural areas.(37, 77)

During the reporting period, DOLE identified 22 establishments in three regions with deficiencies in child labor law compliance and permanently closed two establishments that engaged four children in commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, SBM QATs conducted 23 rescue operations and removed 36 children working in hazardous activities.(37) While the SBM QATs are permitted to conduct unannounced compliance visits in video karaoke bars, massage parlors, sauna/bath houses, and farms, they are not authorized to conduct visits in private homes to search for underage child domestic workers.(70)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Philippines took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, the PNP-WCPC employed 4,527 personnel, assigned to 1,918 women and children's desks throughout the country. In addition, the Anti-Trafficking Division of the National Bureau of Investigation maintained nine agents responsible for the investigation of human trafficking cases, with no investigators currently assigned to monitor international airports.(37)

The PNP-WCPC established the Internet Crimes Against Children office under the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division to combat the Internet-facilitated commercial sexual exploitation of children.(37, 83) The PNP-WCPC also provided 419 police officers 32 different trainings on human trafficking and child labor laws, and it launched two manuals: the Revised Standard Operating Procedures on Trafficking in Persons Investigation and the Manual in Handling Cases of Children at Risk and Children in Conflict with the Law.(37) In addition, the Government organized trainings to build the capacity of law enforcement officials to investigate and prosecute human trafficking cases, including child labor trafficking cases. The Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking (IACAT) conducted 26 trainings with 1,056 government personnel, and the IACAT Task Forces conducted a total of 168 trainings for a total of 13,229 participants, including 3,922 government personnel.(37) The IACAT also conducted 43 rescue operations that rescued 32 children.(42)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Committee (NCLC)	Coordinate national efforts to combat child labor under DOLE.(25) Promote information-sharing at the national, regional, and provincial levels.(72) Composed of more than 25 government agencies, international organizations, and trade unions.(13)
Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking (IACAT)	Coordinate, monitor, and oversee efforts to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking. Co-chaired by the Department of Justice and the DSWD.(1, 74) Composed of 24 anti-human trafficking task forces established in eight regions and seven interagency task forces in major seaports and airports. (1, 16, 70). In 2016, established a Memorandum of Understanding to coordinate efforts to combat the trafficking of children.(37)
Inter-Agency Council for the Welfare of Children (CWC)	Operate a monitoring and response system to assist children engaged in armed conflict, including recruitment and use of child soldiers.(33)
Inter-Agency Committee on Children Involved in Armed Conflict	Advocate for protecting children and preventing the involvement of children in armed conflict. Chaired by the CWC.(70) Coordinate and monitor the implementation of the Children in Armed Conflict Program Framework.(1)
Inter-Agency Council Against Child Pornography	Monitor and implement the Anti-Child Pornography Act of 2009.(84) Chaired by the DSWD.(76)

In 2016, the Government proposed an executive order that aims to restructure the role of the National Child Labor Committee (NCLC) and allocate funds to support its projects and activities, which would enhance the NCLC's role as the lead coordination mechanism on child labor policy and programming.(37, 85)

In March 2016, the NCLC, DOLE, and members of the Technical Working Group on Decent Work convened to update the Philippine Program against Child Labor, which set a goal of withdrawing one million child laborers by 2022, with a priority placed on removing children from domestic work.(67)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Philippines has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Philippine Program against Child Labor (2017-2022)	Aims to remove one million children from child labor by the year 2025.(37) Implementation led by the Bureau of Workers with Special Concerns.(67)
National Strategic Action Plan Against Trafficking in Persons (2012–2016)	Raises awareness and creates local programs to prevent children from being victimized by human traffickers.(1, 72)

Philippines

Policy	Description
Inter-Agency Council Against Child Pornography Three-Year Strategic Plan†	Aims to eradicate child pornography in the Philippines by focusing efforts in five strategic areas: (1) advocacy and prevention; (2) law enforcement and prosecution; (3) protection, recovery, and reintegration; (4) research, monitoring, and management of information systems; and (5) partnerships and networking.(86)
Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan (2011–2016)	Aims to strengthen monitoring mechanisms for child protection laws, develop strategies for responding to child trafficking and pornography concerns, and implement an enhanced program for preventing the engagement of children in armed conflict.(72)
Philippine Labor and Employment Plan (2011–2016)	Operates within the framework of the Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan and includes the goal of reducing exploitive child labor.(1, 72, 87)
National Strategic Framework for Plan Development for Children (Child 21) (2000–2025)	Sets out broad goals for national government agencies, local governments, and NGOs to achieve improved quality of life for Filipino children by 2025.(25, 74, 88) Addresses concerns related to the worst forms of child labor under the section on children in need of special protection.(16)
National Plan of Action for Children (2011–2016)	Serves as an agenda for implementation of Child 21.(74) Child labor elimination and prevention strategies are mainstreamed throughout the document, particularly in goal two on child protection, which specifies that children should be free from violence, abuse, neglect, and exploitation.(16)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In December 2016, the NCLC announced that it will launch three anti-child labor programs in early 2017 to support the Philippine Program against Child Labor 2016-2022. These programs will establish helpdesks and a local registry on child labor for referral to social services, integrate a new module on child labor with a conditional cash transfer program that will raise awareness of child labor and involve families in preventing and combating child labor, and provide interventions to address child labor in gold mines and improving these children's working conditions.(89)

However, access to education remains a challenge in the Philippines. While the Philippine Constitution mandates free public education, many children are unable to attend school due to the prohibitive cost of books, uniforms, meals, and transportation.(16, 90)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Child Labor Prevention and Elimination Program (Pantawid Pamilyang Pilipino Program)	DSWD program that provides conditional grants to poor families with children to improve their access to health care, adequate nutrition, and education; implements local awareness-raising campaigns; institutes child labor-monitoring mechanisms; and requires barangays to develop child labor elimination plans. (91-93) Covers 1,627 cities and municipalities in 79 provinces and all 17 regions.(70) As of November 2016, there were 4,389,863 active household beneficiaries who received education and health services. Program will include a child labor module that will impart information on the effects of child labor to project participants and the family's role to combat child labor.(37, 94)
Campaign for Child-Labor Free Barangays †	DOLE program that aims to eliminate child labor in villages through community awareness-raising on child labor and anti-human trafficking laws, and through government livelihood programs and guidelines.(95) In 2016, DOLE declared 79 barangays child labor free, bringing the total number to 292 since 2014.(37) DOLE regional offices certified 28 establishments child labor free, bringing the total up to 210 since 2013.(37)
Livelihood for Parents of Child Laborers (Kabuhayan para sa Magulang ng Batang Manggagawa)†	DOLE program that provides livelihood assistance to parents, guardians or other family members of child laborers. (73, 96, 97) In 2016, prevented or removed a total of 2,108 child laborers or children at risk for child labor.(37)
Recovery and Reintegration Program for Trafficked Persons†	DSWD and IACAT program that provides recovery and reintegration services to victims of human trafficking and raises awareness in vulnerable communities.(98) Includes the National Referral System, which strengthens coordination among agencies providing services to human trafficking victims through the use of standard referral and reporting forms.(98) There are 149 referral networks established in 16 regions. In 2016, received a budget of $479,413.(37)

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL projects in the Philippines that aim to eliminate child labor in the sugar-cane provinces, artisanal and small-scale gold mines, and its worst forms, through improved capacity of the national government and legislation, the implementation of a National Action Plan, research, data collection, the development of strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor, and stronger legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers. These projects include Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR) , implemented by the ILO in at least 11 countries; Global Action Program (GAP) on Child Labor Issues , implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries; Building a Generation of Safe and Healthy Workers: Safe and Healthy Youth , implemented by the ILO with the Philippines as one of the three pilot countries; Philippines ABK3 LEAP—Livelihoods, Education, Advocacy, and Protection to Reduce Child Labor in Sugarcane (2011–2016), $16.5 million project implemented by World Vision; and “CARING Gold Mining Project,” Convening Stakeholders to Develop and Implement Strategies to Reduce Child Labor and Improve Working Conditions in Artisanal and Small-scale Gold Mining (ASGM) (2015–2019) , implemented by the ILO with the Philippines as one of the two pilot countries. (99–102) For additional information about USDOL’s work, please visit our Web site .
Alternative Learning System Program [‡]	Department of Education program that offers non-formal education to out-of-school children, including child laborers, as well as opportunities to attain a certificate of education equivalency. Has limited resources, represents approximately 1 percent of the Department of Education’s budget, and has only 1 teacher for every 24 communities, so it cannot reach many out-of-school youth.(76, 77, 96)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of the Philippines.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(25, 73, 96, 103, 104)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Philippines (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor as well as resources available in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2014 – 2016
	Authorize SBM QATs to conduct compliance visits in private homes to search for underage child domestic workers.	2014 – 2016
	Publish information about the training system for labor inspectors, the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review, whether routine inspections are conducted and targeted, and the number of child labor law violations found; and ensure that the total number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor are disaggregated by age.	2015 – 2016
Coordination	Pass the proposed executive order to restructure the National Child Labor Committee and ensure it has the legal mandate and resources necessary to effectively coordinate national efforts to combat child labor including its worst forms.	2015 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure that all children are able to safely access and attend school and do not face prohibitive costs for education-related expenses.	2010 – 2016
Social Programs	Provide necessary resources to help more out-of-school youth access the Alternative Learning System program so they can complete their basic education.	2011 – 2016

- UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education, both sexes (%). Accessed December 16, 2016; <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 79. ILO. Philippines: Labour Inspection Structure and Organization, ILO, [online] [cited April 7, 2016]; http://www.ilo.org/labadmin/info/WCMS_209367/lang-en/index.htm.
80. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited January 19, 2017]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/geos/rp.html>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
81. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
82. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Rwanda made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the year, the Government earmarked approximately $243,346 to provide rehabilitation services to children working on the streets and juvenile delinquents. The Ministry of Education also adopted Ministerial Order 001/2016, which imposes sanctions on parents who fail to send their children to school and fines individuals who employ children under the minimum age for work. In addition, the Ministry of Labor developed a memorandum of understanding with the business community to address child labor. However, children in Rwanda perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Enforcement and implementation of child labor laws and regulations remain problematic, and there are no social programs specifically targeting children engaged in domestic work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Rwanda perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Rwanda.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Rwanda are trafficked internally for domestic work. Some Rwandan children are externally trafficked, primarily to Uganda, as well as other countries in East Africa, South Africa, the United Arab Emirates, Malaysia, China, the United States, and Europe for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in domestic work and in agricultural and industrial sectors.(27)

Although the Ministry of Education established a policy that provides free basic education for 12 years and aims to improve access to education by hiring new teachers and building schools (29, 30), in practice, the costs of uniforms, school supplies, and unofficial school fees may preclude some families from sending their children to school.(1, 20, 29-32)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Rwanda has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Rwanda’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

In 2016, the Ministry of Justice continued revising Rwanda's 2012 Penal Code with the aim of strengthening penalties for exploitative child labor and trafficking in persons. The revisions have yet to be approved.⁽⁴¹⁾ In addition, the Ministry of Education (MINEDUC) adopted Ministerial Order 001/2016, which imposes sanctions on parents who fail to send their children to school. It also fines individuals who employ children and prevent them from attending school or encourage children to drop out of school.^(18, 42)

During the year, the Ministry of Public Service and Labor approved guidelines that determined light work activities for children between ages 13 and 15. Light work for children is restricted to a maximum of 20 hours per week and may include the following: internships, computer work, phone and electricity airtime and mobile money selling, radio and television repair, newspaper distribution, providing customer care services at a family business, Internet café activities, hairdressing- and barbershop-related work, and crafting and small trading business activities in a family business.⁽⁴³⁾ Labor laws are still unclear about minimum age protections for children in the informal sector.^(33, 44, 45)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service and Labor (MIFOTRA)	Enforce labor laws, including laws on child labor. ^(11, 46–48) In partnership with the Ministry of Education (MINEDUC), children withdrawn from child labor are reintegrated with their families and enrolled in school. ⁽²⁹⁾
Rwandan National Police (RNP)	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor and operate a free hotline to report incidents of gender-based violence and child abuse, including child labor. ^(11, 12, 49) In the case of the RNP's Child Protection Unit and Anti-Trafficking Unit, enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor. ^(1, 11, 51, 52, 29) In the case of the Directorate for Anti-Gender-Based Violence, assist victims of the worst forms of child labor through anti-gender-based violence officers at each of the 78 police stations. ⁽⁹⁾

Train border and immigration officials to identify potential trafficking victims.(11, 50)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Rwanda took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Rwanda's workforce, which comprises more than 6 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Rwanda should employ roughly 151 labor inspectors.(56-58) According to the Ministry of Public Service and Labor (MIFOTRA), labor unions, and local human rights groups, the insufficient number of labor inspectors hamper the labor inspectorate's capacity to monitor and enforce child labor laws. However, sources report that MIFOTRA had adequate funding and transportation to carry out labor inspections in 2016.(1, 29) During 2016, 220 inspections were specific to child labor out of the 1,051 total inspections conducted. MIFOTRA also carried out 209 targeted inspections in 209 mines in the formal sector and found that of the 17,000 employees working, none were under the minimum age for work.(29)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Rwanda took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

* The Government does not publish this information.

In 2016, Rwandan National Police (RNP) expanded its training curriculum by including police training on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, gender-based violence, and trafficking in persons. During the year, the RNP and immigration officials arrested perpetrators who attempted to commit child trafficking for labor exploitation while crossing the Burundi border.(29) Although the RNP operates a free hotline staffed by social workers to report incidences of gender-based violence and child abuse, including child labor, it is unknown how many of these complaints were related to child labor.(12, 17, 49)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate government efforts related to the worst forms of child labor, review child labor laws, advocate for the inclusion of child labor policies in national development plans, oversee the implementation of child labor interventions, and conduct field visits to assess the prevalence of child labor and to raise awareness of child labor. Met quarterly in 2016.(9, 51)
National Consultative Forum on Human Trafficking, Drug Abuse, and Gender-Based Violence	Enable national-level discussion and coordination of efforts to address human trafficking. Chaired annually by the First Lady of Rwanda and includes parliamentarians; representatives of the Ministry of Gender and Family Promotion (MIGEPROF), the Ministry of Justice, MINEDUC, and the RNP; NPPA prosecutors; NGOs; and faith-based and civil society leaders. MIGEPROF was selected to coordinate implementation of the 2014–2015 anti-human trafficking plan.(17) In 2016, the Anti-Trafficking in Persons assembly met and determined that some recommendations in the implementation were not fulfilled. As a result, the assembly adopted 18 resolutions and established a new deadline of June 2017.(52)
National Commission for Children	Monitor, promote, and advocate for children's rights; develop action plans to protect children from abuse and exploitation. Overseen by MIGEPROF and supported by a board of directors and an advisory council of 14 institutions.(9, 53, 54)
Roundtable on the Elimination of Child Labor for Sustainable Tea Forum (REST)	Implement policies and programs related to child labor in the tea sector. Representatives include MIFOTRA, Winrock International, and tea industry and civil society groups. REST met on a quarterly basis.(29)
Local Committees	Monitor incidents of child labor nationwide through 149 local committees.(9, 51) In the case of the Child Labor Committees, implement policies developed by the Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Child Labor in 30 districts and coordinate district labor inspectors, police, and social services officers in conducting inspections, enforcing labor laws, and providing social services to child labor victims. In the case of Gender-Based Violence Committees, operate at the district level to raise awareness about gender-based violence and coordinate social services to assist gender-based violence victims. In the case of Child Protection Committees, identify and report cases of child rights violations at the district, sector, and cell levels.(1, 55, 56)
Kigali City Council Task Force	Coordinate activities to combat child labor in the districts of Gasabo, Kicukiro, and Nyarugenge.(14, 56, 57) The Task Force met during the year to discuss strategies to combat child labor.(52)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Policy for the Elimination of Child Labor (2013) and 5-Year Action Plan to Combat Child Labor	Aims to prevent at-risk children from entering exploitative child labor; withdraw children engaged in exploitative labor through the provision of education; rehabilitate former child laborers through counseling, life skills training, and medical care; raise community awareness about child labor; and establish monitoring and evaluation mechanisms on child labor. The Government committed more than $4.2 million to implement the activities listed in the National Policy and the Action Plan.(11, 58-60)
Trafficking in Persons Action Plan	Aims to improve government efforts to combat human trafficking through awareness-raising, research, poverty reduction strategies, improved services provision, enforcement, and collaboration. Developed by the Consultative Forum on Human Trafficking, Drug Abuse, and Gender-Based Violence.(17, 61)
Government Policies Advancing Youth Employment and Social Protection	Aims to increase understanding of child labor and economic exploitation, and provides employment for school dropouts. Includes the National Employment Policy and National Youth Policy.(13, 62-64)

[‡] The Government has other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(40, 65-68)

In 2016, the Government adopted guidelines to combat child labor, assisted in recruiting 30,000 village-level volunteers to address child labor, and increased its budget to provide child welfare services under the National Policy for the Elimination of Child Labor.(52) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in Vision 2020, the National Social Protection Strategy, and National Technical and Vocational Education and Training Policy.(62, 69, 70) Sources indicate that the Government is drafting its Vision 2050 strategies to align with sustainable development goals; this should include child labor elimination and prevention strategies.(52)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Programs to Combat Child Labor and Raise Awareness [‡]	Government-funded and implemented programs to combat child labor and raise awareness. Includes MIGEPROF's campaign to teach parents and community leaders to recognize risk factors for human trafficking and to identify victims.(17) Friends of the Family (Incuti Z'Umuryango) Program, which trains volunteers to provide social services to families and children who are victims of the worst forms of child labor, identifies children at risk of trafficking or forced labor, and reports them to district governments and the RNP. This program also establishes monitoring committees at the village, cell, sector, district, and national levels to combat child labor.(17) The Vision 2020 Umurenge Program provides cash and in-kind transfers to child-headed households and street children.(11, 62, 71, 72) MIFOTRA developed a memorandum of understanding that invited the business community to commit to eradicating child labor.(7)
Victim Assistance Programs [‡]	Gitagata Center provides education, vocational training, and psychosocial support, and reunites former street children in the Bugesera District with their families.(9, 73) "One-stop" centers are located in hospitals and district capitals for victims of gender-based violence and human trafficking, including individuals who have experienced child domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and forced labor. These centers provide medical care, counseling, legal aid, short-term shelter, and access to police services. In 2016, the number of centers increased from 21 to 28.(17)
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL projects aim to collect data on child labor, remove children from child labor, and provide technical assistance to the Government to develop policies to combat child labor. Includes Rwanda Education Alternatives for Children in Tea-Growing Areas (2013–2017), a $5 million project implemented by Winrock International, and Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017), a $15.9 million global project implemented by the ILO in 40 countries, including Rwanda.(74, 75) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
McGovern-Dole School Feeding Program	$25 million World Food Program and the U.S. Department of Agriculture pilot program that works with the Government of Rwanda to provide school meals to 83,000 children in 4 districts (Karongi, Rutsiro, Nyamagabe, and Nyaruguru).(29)
Books Can Open Closed Doors	Save the Children and Children's Voice Today to advocate for the rights of child domestic workers and offer services and support. Since 2015, the program has trained 42 children in vocational skills, provided social services to 98 children, withdrawn 5 children from child labor, and educated more than 6,000 children and 3,000 community members about child labor issues.(76)

Program	Description
Study on Violence Against Children*	The Government, in collaboration with UNICEF and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, is conducting a 2-year study about violence against children, including child labor. The study's findings will be published in 2017. (29)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Rwanda.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. (9, 17, 77, 78)

Although Rwanda has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem of child labor in domestic work and agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Rwanda (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Enforcement	Ensure that labor law enforcement personnel have sufficient human resources to enforce child labor laws.	2009 – 2016
	Publish information about the number of child labor violations found, number of child labor penalties imposed, and penalties collected based on child labor violations.	2009 – 2016
	Publish information about the number of criminal investigations and violations found related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2016
	Disaggregate the number of complaints received by the RNP's hotline that relate to child labor.	2013 – 2016
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into Vision 2050, the National Social Protection Strategy, and National Technical and Vocational Education and Training Policy.	2011 – 2016
Social Programs	Ensure that school costs, such as uniforms, school supplies, and unofficial school fees, do not diminish the impact of the 12-year education policy.	2010 – 2016
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem in domestic work and agriculture.	2015 – 2016

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Saint Lucia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Saint Lucia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government implemented a National Framework and accompanying National Action Plan for Combating Trafficking in Persons. A rapid assessment conducted by the International Labor Organization in 2016 revealed limited evidence of children engaging in the worst forms of child labor in Saint Lucia, including in commercial sexual exploitation and the sale and transportation of drugs. Saint Lucia's law does not fully protect children from hazardous work and illicit activities.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, evidence suggests that children in Saint Lucia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and the sale and distribution of drugs.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Saint Lucia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	7.5 (2,017)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	99.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	8.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		107.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2007, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2012.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street vending, including selling food and handicrafts in markets (2, 6, 7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation (3, 8-10)
	Sale and distribution of drugs(3, 7)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Saint Lucia lacks current data on the prevalence of child labor, including its worst forms.(12) Limited evidence indicates that children engage in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes in exchange for rides, clothing, or cell phones or with the knowledge or encouragement of parents in situations of financial need.(3, 11) Limited evidence also suggests that children are used to transport and sell drugs.(3) Local and foreign children are also subjected to sex trafficking, including by parents and caregivers.(12, 13)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Saint Lucia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor(cont)

Convention	Ratification
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Saint Lucia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 122 of the Labor Code (14, 15)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 2 and 23 of the Employees (Occupational Health and Safety) Act (16)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 23 of the Employees (Occupational Health and Safety) Act (16); Article 214 of the Labor Code(14)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	No		Article 4 of the Constitution; Article 6 of the Labor Code (14, 17)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 3(a), 5, and 10(c) of Counter-Trafficking Act No. 7 (18)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 141 of the Criminal Code; Articles 2 and 5 of Counter-Trafficking Act No. 7 (18, 19)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Articles 141 and 560 of the Criminal Code (19)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A†
State Voluntary	N/A†
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 27 of the Education Act (20)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 16 of the Education Act (20)

* No conscription (21)

† No standing military (21)

In Saint Lucia, the law prohibits children from engaging in hazardous activities except for children between the ages of 16 and 18 who are adequately instructed and supervised through an apprenticeship or vocational training program.(14, 16) In addition, although the Criminal Code prohibits the use of children in some illicit activities, such as street work, the use, procuring or offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited.(19) Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient as forced labor is not criminally prohibited. Finally, the law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, as the use or offering of children for commercial sexual exploitation is not criminally prohibited.(18)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Education, Human Resource Development, and Labor	Enforce laws on child labor, in part through labor inspections conducted by its Department of Labor.(10, 22, 23)
Royal Saint Lucia Police Force	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. In the case of the Vulnerable Persons Unit, investigate cases of child labor, abuse, and neglect, and work in collaboration with the Division of Human Services.(6, 24) Use a specific manual for the investigation of crimes related to children.(22)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Saint Lucia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

Although inspectors look for child labor and forced labor violations during inspections, insufficient funding hampers the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(6, 10) In 2016, the number of labor inspectors—as well as the number of inspections conducted—decreased.(3) Inspectors can make recommendations to the Labor Commissioner but cannot assess penalties, and existing penalties are insufficient to deter employers from committing child labor violations.(3, 25)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Saint Lucia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes(25)	No (3)

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (11)	Yes (3)

Although the local police can enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor, it is the vulnerable persons units—two units of twelve officers each—who lead this effort.(3) Insufficient resources, including transportation and equipment, hamper the police’s capacity to enforce child labor laws.(3) In September and October 2016, immigration and police officers were trained by Interpol to combat human trafficking.(13)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Health, Wellness, Human Services, and Gender Relations	Refer potential child labor cases to the Royal Saint Lucia Police Force.(22)
Trafficking in Persons Task Force	Coordinate the identification and referral of human trafficking cases among law enforcement, social service, and immigration officials pursuant to the Counter-Trafficking Act. Comprises public servants, including representatives from the Ministry of Labor, the police force, and victim service NGOs.(7, 18, 22)
Office of Gender Relations	Provide referrals to human trafficking victims for health, advocacy, crisis and legal services.(9)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2015–2018)†	Identifies the strategic goals and objectives for combating human trafficking, as well as the means to achieve them, and establishes the coordination of counter-trafficking measures and the effective cooperation between all actors.(3, 13) In 2016, the Government made progress on the following strategic goals: coordination structures; review, monitoring and evaluation; and awareness-raising and education.(7)
National Framework for Combating Trafficking in Persons†	Outlines government response and roles in combating and preventing human trafficking.(3)
National Social Protection Policy (2014–2024)	Establishes a social protection system in Phase I (2014–2019) by consolidating the Social Safety Net programs. In Phase II (2019–2024), implements wider reforms for creating a coherent Social Protection System.(3) Child protection policies are incorporated into poverty reduction concepts and promote access to education.(6, 26) In 2016, the Government completed needs assessments and established the inter-agency dialogue mechanism.(7)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2016, the Government approved the National Action Plan and Framework for Combating Trafficking in Persons, and finalized a human trafficking prevention campaign.(3, 12) The Government also joined the Regional Initiative for Latin American and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor.(27) However, child labor elimination and prevention strategies are not integrated into the National Social Protection Policy.(7) Research did not reveal policies addressing commercial sexual exploitation of children.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
ILO Decent Work Program	Promotes decent work and advances the ILO's Decent Work Agenda.(3) In 2016, the Government, with support from the ILO, worked on the development and adoption of National Safety and Health policies.(7)
Educational Programs [‡]	The Saint Lucia Social Development Fund and Public Assistance Program fosters school attendance; the Community Empowerment's After School Program aims to improve academic performance and maintains school attendance of children ages 8 to 16; the Upton Garden Girls Center provides education, training, and self-development opportunities to teenage girls; the Center for Adolescent Renewal and Education provides second-chance education, training, and self-development services to adolescents; the Boys Training Center supports boys ages 10 to 18 who have come in contact with the law or require care and protection; and the Koudmen Sent Lisi program funds textbook rentals, a book bursary, a school feeding program, and a transportation subsidy program at most secondary schools.(2, 3, 6)
Strengthening Capacity to Accelerate Eradication of Child Labor in Latin America and the Caribbean	Government of Spain-funded $603,070, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in over 20 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean, including Saint Lucia.(28) In 2016, a diagnostic study was completed in Saint Lucia.(28)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Saint Lucia.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(28)

Research found no evidence of any programs with the specific goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Saint Lucia (Table 11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Original data from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2012 Analysis received December 15, 2016. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. For more information, please see "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" in the Reference Materials section of this report.

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government invested in poverty reduction initiatives benefitting children by initiating the Zero Hunger Trust Fund and expanding funding for the Supplementary Feeding program. Under the National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons, the Government also participated in the IOM's Baseline Assessment to determine how to best build capacity to eliminate human trafficking, including of children. However, although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines perform dangerous tasks in domestic work and begging. Limited research also suggests that children engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Gaps remain in the legal framework; the minimum age for hazardous work falls below international standards and there is no law to prohibit the use of children in the production of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines perform dangerous tasks in domestic work and begging, and engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.⁽¹⁻³⁾ Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.⁽⁴⁾ Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.⁽⁵⁾

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Domestic work and begging (6-8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation (9, 10)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Limited research suggests that some children in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, including by their relatives, in exchange for money or goods.^(11, 12) In 2016, local authorities did not identify any new cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children.⁽¹²⁾

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines' legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Part II, Article 8 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act (13)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No	14	Articles 1 and 2 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act (13)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Part I, Sections 3 and 4; and Articles 1 and 2 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act (13)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Part I, Article 2 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act (14)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Part II, Articles 5–8 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act (14)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Part II, Article 7 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act (14)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Part II, Articles 5 and 8 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act (14)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A [†]
State Compulsory	N/A [†]
State Voluntary	N/A [†]
Non-State Compulsory	No
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	19	Part I, Article 6 of the Police Act (15)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Part I, Article 2 of the Education Act (16)
Free Public Education	Yes		Part III, Articles 14–16 of the Education Act (16)

[†] No standing military (17)

* No conscription (15)

The minimum age of 14 for hazardous work is not in compliance with international standards. Furthermore, laws related to illicit activities are not sufficient as the use of children in the production of drugs is not criminally prohibited.(14, 18)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Ministry of Social Development	Maintain Child Protection Unit, which includes Child Protection Officers who report cases of child abuse.(7)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not publish this information.

A lack of adequate resources, such as computers and training, hamper the labor inspectorate's enforcement of child labor laws.(3, 19)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

In 2016, the Government trained law enforcement officers and 90 percent of its overseas diplomatic and consular staff on how to combat human trafficking.(20) The Government also provided training to faith-based organizations and NGOs on human trafficking.(20)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons	Develop a national plan to address human trafficking, coordinate the collection of data among government agencies, establish policies to enable government agencies to work with NGOs to prevent human trafficking and assist victims, and provide training to all relevant government officials and authority figures. Chaired by the Prime Minister.(2, 14, 22) Comprises representatives of the Police, Immigration, Public Prosecutions, Social Services, Gender Affairs, and the Labor Department.(12)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons (2016–2018)†	Establishes procedures to eradicate human trafficking. Administered by the National Task Force Against Human Trafficking in Persons, which is chaired by the Prime Minister.(8) In 2016, the Government of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and the International Organization for Migration (IOM) conducted a Baseline Assessment to determine the capacity building and institutional strengthening necessary to combat human trafficking.(19)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government adopted the National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons, the Plan does not articulate tasks to achieve its goals, identify stakeholders' involvement, or establish estimated timeframes for execution.(19) Additionally, there is no evidence of policies on other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Government-funded educational programs‡	In 2016, the Government expanded the Supplementary Feeding Program, which provides free meals to students from low-income families(23, 24), and continued to fund other programs such as the Book Loan Program (6, 21); the Street Children Rehabilitation Program (6, 23); and the Foster Care Program(7).
Zero Hunger Trust Fund*†	Provides meals, materials and uniforms to children in need.(3)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. (6, 12, 23, 25-27)

In 2016, the Government trained 454 students and 44 teachers on human trafficking issues, and conducted presentations on child trafficking and child labor.(12)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines (Table11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Samoa made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified two United Nations optional protocols on child labor and increased funding for the Samoa School Fee Relief Grant Scheme to enhance access to basic education for all children. In addition, the Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Labor endorsed the findings of a study that provides information on children working on the streets in Apia, Samoa. However, children in Samoa perform dangerous tasks in street vending. The Government lacks a mechanism to coordinate interagency efforts to address child labor, and Samoan laws do not comprehensively specify the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Samoa perform dangerous tasks in street vending.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Samoa. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		103.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(5)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Gathering coconuts, fruit, and nuts (7, 8)
	Tending domestic animals (7, 8)
Services	Domestic work (7, 8)
	Street vending, including selling food, garlands, and other products (1-4, 8, 9)
	Garbage scavenging (10)

Although the Samoa School Fee Relief Grant Scheme provides 11 years of free education, hidden school-related costs, such as registration fees, uniforms, meals, and transportation, make it challenging for some children to access education.(11, 12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Samoa has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Samoa's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation

‡ Age calculated based on available information

In 2016, Samoa acceded to the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict and the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.(20, 21)

Samoa law prohibits certain hazardous activities, such as operating heavy machinery; however, street vending, an activity in which children are known to work long hours and into the night, is not prohibited for children under age 18.(22) In addition, the law allows children ages 12 through 14 to engage in light work for a limited number of hours, but it does not specify the conditions under which light work may be undertaken, nor does it define the activities that are permitted, as called for under international standards. In 2016, the Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Labor continued finalizing a more comprehensive list of hazardous work and a list of allowable forms of light work, but this legislation was not approved during the reporting period.(23) Research also found no evidence of laws that ban the use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs. Although the International Criminal Court Act prohibits recruiting children ages 14 and under into non-state armed groups, the law does not apply to children ages 15 to 18.(17)

The Education Act requires that children attend school from ages 5 to 14 or until they have completed the work of year eight.(18) This standard leaves children, who have completed their education requirement but are not yet legally permitted to work, vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.(24) Although Samoan laws do not mandate free public education, there is a policy that sufficiently provides this service.(25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Labor (MCIL)	Investigate complaints of child labor law violations. Refer cases to the Ministry of Police and the Office of the Attorney General for enforcement.(7)

Office of the Attorney General	Prosecute criminal cases of the worst forms of child labor.(7)
Ministry for Women, Community, and Social Development	Assist in MCIL investigations as needed. Mandated to protect children, including those working on the street.(7, 26)
Ministry of Education, Sports, and Culture	Assist in MCIL investigations as needed.(7, 27)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the Samoa Interpol and Transnational Crime Unit to coordinate efforts to monitor human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms.(32)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Samoa School Fee Relief Grant Scheme	Provides free public primary and secondary education.(25, 33) In 2016, allocated an additional $6.5 million to fully fund the policy.(28)

The National Policy for Children in Samoa, which aimed to address the issue of child labor in street vending, expired in 2015 and is currently undergoing review.(11) The Government has not integrated child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Strategy for the Development of Samoa, the UNDAF Pacific, or the Education Sector Plan.(34-36)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Samoa Decent Work Country Program (2013–2016)†	ILO and government program that promoted decent work in Samoa. Supported legal reform and improved implementation of laws related to child labor, and promoted access to information and employment services for youth.(37)

† Program is funded by the Government of Samoa.

Research found no evidence of programs to specifically address child labor in the service sector, especially in street vending.

In 2016, São Tomé and Príncipe made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved a National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor and National Policy on Child Protection. However, children in São Tomé and Príncipe perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. The types of hazardous work prohibited for children are not comprehensive, and the compulsory education age does not extend to the minimum age for work. Inadequate resources hamper law enforcement agencies' capacity to enforce child labor laws.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in São Tomé and Príncipe perform dangerous tasks in agriculture.⁽¹⁾ Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in São Tomé and Príncipe.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	22.6
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	89.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	24.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		82.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2016, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.⁽²⁾

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 5, 2014.⁽³⁾

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including weeding, fertilizing, and spraying plants (1, 4)
	Line and hook fishing (1)
Industry	Carpentry and woodworking (5)
	Construction (1)
Services	Domestic work (6)
	Working in shops and offices (1, 4)
	Working in restaurants and bars (1)
	Street work, including begging and selling goods (1, 5-7)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

São Tomé and Príncipe has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor (cont)

Convention	Ratification
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in São Tomé and Príncipe's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	14	Article 128 of the Legal Regime of Individual Employment Conditions (8)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 129 of the Legal Regime of Individual Employment Conditions (8)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 129 and 134 of the Legal Regime of Individual Employment Conditions (8)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 159, 160, and 181 of the Penal Code (9)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 160 and 181 of the Penal Code (9)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 179–182 of the Penal Code (9)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 279, 280, and 289 of the Penal Code (9)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 1 of Decree-Law 3/83 (10)
State Voluntary	Yes	17	Legislation title unknown (11, 12)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	No	12 [‡]	Article 6(1) of the Basic Education System Law (13, 14)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 6(1) of the Basic Education System Law (14)

[‡] Age calculated based on available information

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working outside of a formal labor relationship, such as children who are self-employed.(8, 13)

The law prohibits children under age 18 from engaging in heavy work carried out in unhealthy or dangerous conditions. It also prohibits underground and night work; however, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover agriculture, an area of work where there is evidence of exposure to hazardous substances, agents, and processes.(8)The gap between the end of compulsory education and the minimum age for work leaves children ages 12 and 13 vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms, because they are not in school, but they also may not legally work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs	Enforce labor laws, including child labor.(15)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Enforce criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor.(15)

In 2016, enforcement of child labor laws was limited due to the lack of resources for inspections.(15)

Children found by the Department of Labor Inspection are referred to the Department of Social Protection in the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs for counseling and integration services.(15, 16)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in São Tomé and Príncipe took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Senegal

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

*In 2016, Senegal made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In June, the Government launched an initiative to remove tailbés from the street and prosecute marabouts that perpetrate crimes against their students; however, no marabouts were prosecuted during the reporting period. Children in Senegal perform dangerous tasks in gold mining. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Criminal and labor law enforcement agencies lack adequate resources to effectively carry out their work, and redundancy among coordinating bodies to combat child labor hinders effective collaboration. Further, types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not include domestic work and street work, areas where there is evidence of harm to children engaged in child labor.*

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Senegal perform dangerous tasks in gold mining.(1-13) Children in Senegal also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Senegal.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	22.3 (4,255,365)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	53.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	13.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		57.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(14)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2015.(15)

Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are not comparable with data published in the previous version of this report because of differences between surveys used to collect the data.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Herding cattle (16-18)
	Fishing, activities unknown (16-18)
	Farming, including the production of cotton, rice, peanuts, and mangoes (2, 7, 17-19)
Industry	Washing ore, crushing rocks, and carrying heavy loads† while mining gold, iron, and salt, and quarrying rock (4, 17-23)
	Welding and auto repair (17-19)
Services	Domestic work (2, 4, 11, 17-19, 24)
	Street work, including vending (2, 18, 25)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced domestic work, gold mining, fishing, and farming, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (7, 10, 11, 22, 26, 27)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 10, 11, 23, 28)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 4-13, 17-19, 26, 27, 29)
	Forced labor in garbage collection (30)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Senegalese boys and girls are subjected to domestic servitude, forced labor in gold mines, and sex trafficking. Internal trafficking is more prevalent than transnational trafficking. (11, 26, 27) In Senegal, it is a traditional practice to send boys to Koranic schools, called daaras, for education. However, instead of receiving an education, many students, known as talibés, are forced to beg by their teachers, known as marabouts. (8, 12, 27, 31-34) The marabouts take the talibés' earnings and often beat those who fail to meet the daily quota. (4, 8, 9, 13, 31, 33, 34) The talibés often live in overcrowded, unsanitary conditions, receive inadequate food and medical care, and are vulnerable to physical and sexual abuse. (8, 9, 12, 30, 34, 35) They typically come from rural areas in Senegal and from neighboring countries, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (8, 9, 32, 34, 36, 37) In June 2016, President Macky Sall announced and launched an initiative to remove talibés from the street and prosecute marabouts that perpetrate crimes against their students; however, in 2016, no marabouts were prosecuted. As of November, the Government conducted 57 operations, removing 1,186 children from the streets and reuniting 1,086 of them with their families, although some of these children were eventually returned by their parents to daaras. (18, 38-41) A 2014 daara-mapping study estimated that 30,000 of the estimated 54,800 talibés in Dakar are forced to beg, and a 2016 study found that 9,000 of the estimated 14,000 talibés in the St. Louis department are also forced to beg. (18, 38-47)

A variety of factors remain as barriers to education, forcing some students to quit school. These barriers include school-related fees, a lack of birth registration documents, a lack of teachers and rural schools. Some girls reportedly quit school due to sexual harassment, including by teachers, and as a result of early pregnancy. (2, 10, 17, 45, 48, 49)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Senegal has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Senegal's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

A revision of the Labor Code that is still under consideration by the National Assembly includes an amendment to raise the minimum age of work from age 15 to age 16 and to establish harsher penalties for subjecting children to the worst forms of child labor.(58, 61) Further, a law was drafted in 2013 to improve the regulation of daaras as part of the voluntary Daara Modernization Program, which would require participating schools to submit to state inspections, adhere to a basic education curriculum, and, as a condition for receiving subsidies, formally halt the practice of forced begging; however, the impact of this measure on forced child begging remains uncertain due to its voluntary implementation.(9, 11, 30, 34, 40, 41, 62, 63) Legislation is also pending to establish a Children's Ombudsman and a Children's Code.(47) Government officials, the UNODC, UNICEF, and local NGOs have stated that these measures may not be severe enough to deter employers from exploiting children, particularly because the penalties are rarely enforced.(3) Further, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not include domestic work and street work, areas where there is evidence of potential harm to children engaged in child labor. Senegalese law does not criminally prohibit the recruitment of children under 18 into non-state armed groups.(18, 52-54)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Social Dialogue, Professional Organizations, and Institutional Relations (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws through the Labor Inspections Office and by using social security inspectors.(3, 64)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Enforce all laws, including those on child trafficking and forced labor, and prosecute violations.(19) Train police and judiciary on laws related to human trafficking and forced begging.(9) Through its Department of Correctional Education and Social Protection, help develop draft texts in the field of social protection and juvenile delinquency; strengthen the capacity of stakeholders to care for children; and share responsibility with the Ministry of Women, Family, and Children (MWFC) to provide services to vulnerable children.(29, 63, 65, 66)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of the Interior and Public Security	Oversee all law enforcement agencies, including the local and national police officials who intervene in cases of human trafficking, and arrest perpetrators of the worst forms of child labor. Refer cases to social services providers.(19, 26, 58, 67) House the Children's Unit, located in Dakar, which employs three officers who specialize in child protection, victim identification, and reinsertion.(26, 29, 58) Through its Children's Unit, receive assistance from the Vice Squad in child protection cases.(68)
Ministry of Women, Family, and Children (MWFC)	Contribute to the creation and implementation of child protection policies, and provide services to victims of exploitative child labor.(69) Operate the Ginddi center for vulnerable children and a toll-free child protection hotline through which the public can report child labor abuses.(29, 30)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Senegal took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

All new labor inspectors are trained at the National Administration School, which includes a module on the worst forms of child labor and a consultation with members of the National Committee Against Child Labor.(19, 26) All regional inspectorates also receive yearly refresher training from the Ministry of Labor, Social Dialogue, Professional Organizations, and Institutional Relations (MOL) Directorate General of Labor and Social Security.(19) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Senegal's workforce, which includes over 6 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Senegal should employ roughly 158 inspectors. The MOL acknowledged that the current number of labor inspectors is insufficient; it also noted that a high turnover rate and significant reduction in its funding level had further hindered the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(18, 19, 71)

Research indicates that the lack of enforcement in the informal sector, in which most children are employed, hampers the labor inspectorate's enforcement of child labor laws.(11, 19, 45, 64) Although Article L. 241 of the Labor Code grants inspectors the authority to assess penalties for all offenses, they typically do so only for minor offenses and refer the more serious infractions to the courts for determination of penalties.(19, 50, 61) Courts may require violations to be resolved through conciliation at the labor inspectorate or refer cases to a tribunal for judgment.(19) During the reporting period, the

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Ginddi Center's child protection hotline was operational; however, the total number of calls was unknown. Furthermore, it is not clear how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of these calls.(11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Senegal took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (19)	Yes (18)

The entities responsible for enforcing laws against the worst forms of child labor are primarily concentrated in Dakar and Thiès, so enforcement is limited outside of the capital.(9, 73) Although police stations in Senegal are expected to report cases involving children to the Ministry of the Interior and Public Security's Children's Unit, research found no evidence that this occurs regularly.(68, 73)

The Government reported that existing laws are sufficient to effectively prosecute and punish individuals who use talibés for personal profit.(1, 9, 26, 30, 74) However, the courts have had limited success in prosecuting cases related to forced begging, partly due to a perceived lack of political support, cultural norms, and pressure from influential Koranic teachers who support this practice, particularly in rural areas, along with a lack of coordination and resource constraints.(26, 61, 72, 75-77) In addition, police rarely investigated cases of forced begging or brought them to the courts for prosecution.(41) Further, some courts and law enforcement officials are not aware that the Law Concerning the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, which prohibits forced begging, does not conflict with the Penal Code, which permits begging for religious purposes on specific days.(56, 61, 72)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee Against Child Labor	Coordinate initiatives, policies, and partnerships with civil society organizations to address child labor, including the National Action Plan on the Prevention and Abolition of Child Labor in Senegal (PCNPETE). Chaired by the MOL and includes representatives from three ministries, the police, and elected officials.(26, 78-80)
Inter-Ministerial Commission	Coordinate implementation of the National Strategy on Child Protection and its related action plan.(3)
National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP)	Report on human trafficking in Senegal, with a focus on women and children; coordinate the implementation of the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Persons and other efforts to prevent human trafficking; prosecute perpetrators; and protect victims.(58, 63, 81-83) Chaired by the MOJ and employs five staff members.(9, 26, 63)
Office of the President's Childhood Protection Unit	Coordinate government efforts related to child protection, including through the implementation of the National Strategy on Child Protection.(63, 84) Reports directly to the President of Senegal.(68, 84) Contribute to the creation and implementation of child protection policies, and develop a national system for collecting and disseminating data about vulnerable children. Advocate on behalf of all entities working on issues related to child begging, violence against children, and child labor.(84)

Funding for the National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons and a lack of support from all levels of the Government remained unresolved. Redundancy among the activities of the coordinating bodies also creates confusion and obstructs effective collaboration and implementation of efforts.(26, 27, 41, 58, 67, 80)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Prevention and Abolition of Child Labor in Senegal (2012–2016)	Aims to raise awareness of child labor issues; reinforce the capacity of law enforcement officials and civil society organizations; increase educational and training opportunities for youth; and improve the legal framework on child labor, including its worst forms.(1, 16, 25, 85-87) In 2016, research was unable to determine whether any actions were undertaken.(41)
National Strategy on Child Protection	Aims to establish an integrated national social protection system and specifically identifying the issue of child begging through an action plan with a recommended budget of $18 million.(16, 30) Implemented through Child Protection Committees (CDPEs), currently established in 24 prefectures, which refer victims to social services, assist law enforcement with reintegrating child trafficking victims.(16, 26, 29) In 2016, the Government maintained 40 CDPEs.(40)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings (2015–2017)	Aims to strengthen the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, build capacity by training enforcement officials and working with religious leaders, provide protection and judicial remediation for victims, and improve monitoring and evaluation of the National Action Plan.(26, 88) Implemented by the CNLTP.(28) In 2016, the Partnership for the Rescue and Rehabilitation of Street Children and the National Framework Plan for the Eradication of Child Begging were merged into this plan.(1, 16, 29, 30, 41, 74, 83)

‡ The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(26)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in both the Plan Sénégal Emergent and the Program to Improve the Quality, Equality, and Transparency of the Education Sector (2013–2025).

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Project to Fight Against Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2013–2019) [†]	MWFC program that aims to raise awareness about forced begging and assist victims of child labor.(29, 36) During the reporting period, the program was renewed until 2019.(41)
National Program of Family Assistance Bursaries (2013–2017) [†]	Part of PCNPETE, a social safety net program that provides conditional cash transfers to vulnerable families who keep their children in school.(19, 25, 83, 89-92) In 2016, research indicated that the program continued activities.(41)
Daara Modernization Program [†]	$18.5 million Government-funded voluntary program implemented by Tostan and La Rencontre Africaine pour la Défense des Droits d'Homme (RADDHO) that aims to regulate, inspect, and fund daaras and eliminate forced begging.(41, 93, 94) A mapping of daaras in the Dakar region in 2014 registered 1,006 daaras with 54,837 talibés , including 38,079 boys and 16,758 girls.(46) A mapping of Senegal's northern Saint-Louis department in 2016 counted more than 200 daaras and 14,000 talibés , with more than 9,000 children compelled to beg.(47) The Ministry of Education signed an accord with the Senegalese Association of Koranic Schools to rehabilitate and equip 90 daaras ; its Funds for Koranic Schools program also developed a secular curriculum and works with religious institutions to remove children from street begging and exploitative situations.(29, 64) In 2016, a legal framework was established and the Islamic Development Bank pledged funds.(41)
Ginddi Center [†]	The MWFC-run shelter serves abused and vulnerable children, including runaway talibés , street children, and child trafficking victims.(5, 29, 30, 64, 65, 67) Provides food, education, vocational training, family mediation, and medical and psychological care.(5, 26, 65, 67) In 2016, research indicated that the center continued activities.(41)
Government of Senegal-funded centers to address child trafficking [†]	The MOJ runs transit houses in Dakar, Pikine, and Saint-Louis that provide monitoring, education, and rehabilitation and reintegration services for victims of child trafficking.(26) In 2016, research indicated that the centers continued activities.(41)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Senegal.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(18)

Although the Government of Senegal has implemented programs to address child trafficking and forced begging, research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to assist children in domestic work, agriculture, or mining.(10, 19, 30, 67, 86)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

14. UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education, both sexes (%). [Accessed December 16, 2016] <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. 71. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Serbia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Serbia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the National Strategy for Roma Inclusion with the goal to improve the status of the Roma population in Serbia, including enrollment of Roma children in preschool. The Standard Operating Procedures for immigrant and migrant children were implemented, which aid in the identification of children at risk of being trafficked, disabled children, and girls. The Government also passed the Development Partnership Framework to promote inclusive education, especially for vulnerable populations and strengthening social welfare for families. However, children in Serbia still perform dangerous tasks in street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Government lacks a national policy to combat child labor and both the Council for Combating Trafficking in Human Beings and the National Council for Children's Rights did not meet during the reporting period.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Serbia perform dangerous tasks in street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Serbia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	15.1 (725,227)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	97.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	17.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		101.0

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Use in the production of pornography as a result of human trafficking (1, 12)
	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking (2, 5)
	Use in illicit activities, including in petty crime (2-5, 12)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Serbia lacks recent, comprehensive data on the nature and extent of child labor in the country. Children from Serbia, particularly those from Roma communities, were trafficked internally to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation.(5) Child trafficking victims, especially girls, Roma children, and children from low-income families in rural communities, are most vulnerable to child labor.(3, 16)

Asylum seekers and grantees are allowed to access free primary and secondary education in Serbia, however, migrant children who are not registered in the Serbian asylum system do not have access to the formal education system.(3, 17) Unaccompanied children and those of migrant and asylum-seeking families from Afghanistan, Syria, Cameroon, Pakistan, and Nepal are vulnerable to trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation, particularly if they are not enrolled in school.(3, 12, 18, 19) Social programs assisted with educational plans for migrant children, but those in asylum centers remain without access to national education.(17, 20)

Birth certification is required for attending school in Serbia. Some Roma children experience challenges in attaining birth registration, which makes school enrollment difficult.(13, 21, 22) This increases their vulnerability to engage in child labor. Although the Government has instituted a program to increase the attendance of Roma children in preschool, economic hardship, ethnic discrimination, language barriers, and placement in special, non-mainstream schools sometimes discourage some children from attending school, especially some Romani girls.(13, 21, 22) An informal technical working group exists to streamline complex registration procedures for undocumented minorities, including the registration of children of unregistered parents.(17) Government officials indicate that, as a result of these efforts, the number of undocumented individuals in Serbia decreased from 6,500 to 400 persons, including children.(17) Training for judges, registrars, social workers, and other officials who needed to implement the revised procedures was concluded in November 2016.(17)

Constitutional and legal protections prohibit discrimination in education against individuals with disabilities.(21-24) However, some individuals with disabilities, especially Roma children, sometimes faced difficulty accessing education, partly due to deeply entrenched social prejudices.(22, 25)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Serbia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Serbia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, Veteran, and Social Affairs	Inspect businesses, receive and investigate complaints through the Inspectorate.(33) Through the Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protection (CPTV) identify and rescue child trafficking victims and potential victims, conduct needs assessments, and refer victims to social services. Maintain records on beneficiaries, and contribute to trafficking research projects.(2) Includes the Agency for Coordination of Protection of Trafficking Victims and the Urgent Reception Shelter for Trafficking Victims.(3)
Ministry of the Interior (MOI)	Enforce laws prohibiting commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking through the Organized Crime Police and Border Police Force. Oversee the General Police Directorate, which consists of 27 local police directorates with dedicated anti-trafficking units.(2, 34, 35) In 2016, the Law on Police shifted the role of the Office for Coordination against Trafficking in Persons from the Border Police Department to become part of the Criminal Police Department (of the General Police Directorate).(3, 36)
State Prosecutor's Office	Lead investigations on human trafficking cases and exchange information through a network of 27 local prosecutors and NGOs.(34) Provide financial support to the CPTV.(37)
Parliamentary Committee on Children	Review all draft legislation pertinent to children's rights. Monitor the implementation of the child-related provisions of all laws.(16)
Deputy Ombudsman for Children's Rights, Office of the Protector of Citizens	Monitor and conduct research on the situation of children's rights in Serbia. Produce reports on child begging, promote inclusive education and legal prohibition of corporal punishment, and manage draft laws on children's rights for parliamentary approval.(38)

In 2016, the Center for Human Trafficking Victims' Protections (CPTV) was looking for donors to complete the Urgent Reception Shelter.(3) However, it is unclear when it will be completed. When fully operational, the Urgent Reception Shelter will provide temporary accommodations for child trafficking victims; however, it is not a specialized shelter for children.(2)

NGOs report a lack of coordination between the CPTV and NGOs, especially in the treatment of trafficked children who require unique assistance.(4, 17)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Serbia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Labor inspectors are responsible for registered and unregistered entities. If children are identified in situations of exploitative labor, they may be referred to receive social services at a center for social work found in every locality.(12, 35) Although laptops were provided to labor inspectorate offices in order to ease the monitoring of child labor cases, research found that the labor inspectorate generally lacked funding to provide specialized training and the necessary equipment, such as vehicles, to facilitate the enforcement of laws prohibiting child labor.(12, 41, 42) The CPTV now frequently accompanies the Ministry of Labor (MOL) on inspections. Labor inspectors do not have power to fine companies or organizations for violations, but the CPTV provides cross-training to labor inspectors on human trafficking related issues, including child labor.(17)

In 2016, 115 social centers and the MOL formed internal teams for the protection of children with disabilities and street children. These teams accommodate children with homes, food programs, and relocation from harmful family situations.(42) In July 2016, the Ministry of Justice supported 22 additional rehabilitation institutions for children. However, according to the MOL, the social centers are overburdened, with 2,000 employees handling 750,000 cases per year in all categories of social work.(3)

A checklist related to child labor for inspections has been drafted and is pending approval from the Ministry of State Administration and Local Self-Government.(3) In addition, a special protocol for unannounced inspections, which includes questions related to child labor, has been drafted and is pending approval from the relevant authorities.(3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Serbia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, a permanent human smuggling task force was created, led by the Organized Prosecutor's Office.⁽⁴⁾ Human trafficking training is provided as a part of the general police curriculum and is given to law enforcement officials who process immigration cases.⁽⁴⁾ Training on commercial sexual exploitation is only provided to police officers in the capital. In 2016, 88 police officers were trained on trafficking in persons (TIP) identification.⁽⁴⁾

Social Welfare Centers, the primary provider of social services to human trafficking victims, had mandatory involvement in cases of child trafficking victims.⁽²⁾ Both entities worked together to draft a protection plan in consultation with the victim.⁽⁴⁾ However, NGOs reported that CPTVs lacked specialized care and procedures for child victims.^(2, 4, 17)

In addition, criminal law enforcement personnel dedicated the majority of their resources to cases of human smuggling related to the migration crisis, which diminished their ability to investigate and prosecute human trafficking cases.^(2, 4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Council for Children's Rights	Coordinate government efforts to address child labor by monitoring and evaluating government activities. The Council includes representatives from international organizations and government ministries. ⁽⁴⁴⁾
National Council for Combating Trafficking in Human Beings	Set government trafficking in persons (TIP) policies and chaired by the MOI. The National Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons acts as the Secretary of the Council and manages the work of the Implementation Team. ⁽²⁾ Members of this team include various ministries. ⁽²⁾
Refugee Partnership Working Groups (RPWGs)	Address refugee protection, shelter, health, food, and community support. Co-chaired by ministries, NGOs, local governments, and international organizations. ⁽²⁰⁾ The RPWG meets on a monthly basis, is the main mechanism for coordination of agencies/NGOs in Serbia, and has three sub-working groups, including a group on child protection. ⁽²⁰⁾

The Government, NGOs, and national shelters implemented the Standard Operating Procedures (SOPs) for immigrant and migrant children in 2016.⁽⁴⁵⁾ SOPs aid in the identification children at risk of being trafficked, while keeping the child's best interest in mind.^(45, 46)

Although 17 of the 27 police directorates in the country have established teams to combat human trafficking, a source reported that many of these anti-trafficking teams were inactive during the reporting period.^(2, 4) The Council for Children's Rights (the Council) was also inactive in 2016 and therefore unable to coordinate government efforts to address child labor.⁽³⁾ Although the Council established a working group in November 2014 that would be responsible for developing an action plan to address street begging, this working group did not hold any meetings during the reporting period.^(12, 44)

In 2016, the Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator promoted anti-trafficking and discouraged demand for products produced by child labor.⁽²⁾ Serbia's Public Procurement Law allows government institutions to include social responsibility requirements in their tenders, including requiring bidders not to use child labor.

Research found that the National Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons (National Coordinator) was not provided with a budget or a formal work plan in 2016.(4) Although the National Coordinator was active throughout the reporting period, constraints on time and financial resources limited the scope of work. This prevented the National Coordinator from addressing police investigations, prosecutions, and the protection of trafficking victims.(2, 4, 34) In addition, as a Ministry of the Interior (MOI) official, the National Coordinator's independence is limited. The Cabinet of the MOI must provide approval before the National Coordinator can work or meet with non-Serbian government officials or organizations.(2, 4, 34) The National Council for the Fight Against Human Trafficking did not meet in 2016.(4)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Roma Inclusion (2016–2025) [†]	Aims to improve the status of Roma population in Serbia in education, including preschool inclusion. Seeks to include representatives from Roma communities in policy implementation.(47)
Anti-Discrimination Strategy and Action Plan (2013–2018)	Seeks to prevent discrimination and improve the situation of children and ethnic minorities, including Roma, refugees, internally displaced children, and victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, including those used in the production of pornography.(48) Between 2015 and 2016, trainings were held for government officials, representatives of the Action Plan, and civil society organizations on activity coordination and implementation.(17)
Protocol on Rules and Procedures for the Institutions and Organizations Working with Children Involved in Life and Work on the Streets of Belgrade	Aims to enhance institutional cooperation among the MOI, the Criminal Police Directorate, Communal Police, City Centers for Social Work, the City Secretariat for Education, the City Secretariat for Health, and civil society organizations. Defines street children, worst forms of child labor, useful child work, and child trafficking.(3) Stipulates lead institutions, rules, and procedures for interacting with street children. Save the Children is funding the first round of trainings.(3)
Decree on Dedicated Transfers	Aims to allocate funds to local governments for the development of social services for people with disabilities, including children.(49)
Development Partnership Framework (2016–2020) [†]	Government of Serbia and UN strategic planning document for the achievement of the UN's sustainable development goals, including inclusive education, especially for the most vulnerable, and strengthening social welfare for families.(50)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2016, the Government continued to draft the National Strategy for Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Persons for 2014–2020 (National Strategy) and its accompanying Action Plan for 2014–2015; however, the National Assembly did not adopt either the National Strategy or the Action Plan in 2016.(2-4, 34, 37, 44) There has not been an up-to-date National Strategy in place since 2011.(12) In addition, research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Decree on Dedicated Transfers during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government of Serbia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Programs	Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR) is a USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in 11 countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor.(51) In 2016 a roundtable was held with government officials, organizations, and institutions to review and improve recommendations for the child labor laws.(52) Labor inspections targeted to child TIP and training was also conducted.(4) The Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP) is a USDOL-funded, 2-year project implemented by the ILO that aims to increase the knowledge base on child labor in Serbia.(51, 53) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Child Allowance Program [†]	Government cash benefits program for poor families, conditional on school enrollment for children ages 7 and older.(38, 54) In 2016, the Government allocated $23 per child for low income families and $30 per child for single parents and families with disabled children.(17)

Program	Description
Assistance to Roma Children in Education†	Ministry of Education program that seeks to improve the school attendance rate of Roma children. Includes a Serbian language training component to help Roma students integrate into the school environment.(38) In 2016, Government increased efforts to enroll Roma children in primary school, including hiring 191 Roma teaching assistants for kindergartens and primary schools.(17)
Strengthening the Identification and Protection of Victims of Trafficking	Implemented by the IOM, the CPTV, and the MOI, the project contributes to the implementation of the National Anti-Trafficking Strategy by improving mechanisms for the prevention and identification of victims of human trafficking. Establishes general and specific monitoring indicators.(15)

† Program is funded by the Government of Serbia.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(4, 24, 55)

Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement Strengthening the Identification and Protection of Victims of Trafficking program.

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Seychelles made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government employed a sufficient number of labor inspectors to provide adequate coverage of the workforce. However, children in Seychelles engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The law includes an exception that allows children as young as 15 to perform work normally prohibited to children under 18. The law also fails to ensure that children working under this exception receive adequate training and that the health, safety, and morals of these children are protected in accordance with international standards. In addition, criminal law enforcement agencies and coordinating bodies do not have sufficient resources to adequately implement laws and policies related to the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Seychelles engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Seychelles. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		108.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(6)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-4, 8)
	Use in illicit activities, including selling drugs (3, 9)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Seychelles, predominantly girls, are lured by peers, family members, and pimps to engage in commercial sexual exploitation in nightclubs, bars, guesthouses, hotels, and brothels, and on the street. Migrant workers and foreign tourists contribute to the demand for commercial sex, particularly on the main island of Mahé.(1-3, 8) Seychelles has never conducted a national child labor survey; therefore, information about the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in the country is limited.

Limited evidence suggests that the lack of school infrastructure and limited availability of teachers impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(10, 11)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Seychelles has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Seychelles' legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 31 of the Constitution; Article 21 of the Conditions of Employment Regulations (12, 13)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No	18	Article 22(1) of the Conditions of Employment Regulations (13)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 22(1)-(2) of the Conditions of Employment Regulations (13)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 251 of the Penal Code; Articles 3–4 of the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons Act (14, 15)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 4 of the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons Act (15)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 142, 152, and 245 of the Penal Code; Articles 2–4 of the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons Act (14, 15)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 23 of the Defense Act (16)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 33 of the Constitution; Paragraph 4 of the Education (Educational Zones and Compulsory Education) Order (12, 17)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 33 of the Constitution (12)

* No conscription (18)

Laws related to child labor are not completely consistent with international standards. Article 22(4) of the Conditions of Employment Regulations establishes an exception allowing children as young as 15 to perform work generally prohibited to children under 18. The law also fails to ensure that children performing work under this exception receive adequate training and fails to protect the health, safety, and morals of these children, in accordance with international standards. (13) In 2013, the Government developed a more specific list of hazardous child labor activities prohibited to children under 18, but this list was not approved during the reporting period.(3, 19-21)

The minimum age of 12 for light work is not in compliance with international standards. Although Seychelles specifies the conditions in which light work may be undertaken, it does not limit the number of hours for light work or have a list of activities in which light work may be permitted.(13, 20) The Government has developed a legal amendment to the Conditions of Employment Regulations which would increase the minimum age for light work to 13 and include specific light work provisions, but the amendment was not approved during the reporting period.(20, 22)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Resources Development (MLHRD)	Enforce child protection and child labor laws, investigate complaints, and conciliate disputes between employers and workers.(5, 23)
Police Department's Family Squad and Child Protection Team	Investigate criminal cases involving minors, including issues of commercial sexual exploitation, through the Family Squad. Collaborate with the Department of Social Affairs to ensure that child abuse cases are addressed.(1, 21, 24)
Department of Social Affairs' Child Protection Unit	Develop and implement programs to protect vulnerable children and monitor alleged violations of child labor laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 21) In 2016, launched extensive awareness-raising campaign on child protection issues in 24 primary schools.(21)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Seychelles took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

[‡] Data are from January 1, 2016 to November 30, 2016.

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor and Human Resources Development had eight inspectors in Mahé Island, three in Praslin Island, and two in La Digue Island.(3) Reports indicate that there is a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to conduct effective inspections and legal proceedings.(2, 26)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Seychelles took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

Reports indicate that there is a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to effectively conduct criminal law enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor.(2, 5)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordinating Committee on Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate actions against trafficking in persons and guarantee protection of victims at the national level. Chaired by the Ministry of Social Affairs and includes representatives from various agencies, including the Police, the MLHRD, and non-governmental stakeholders.(2, 4, 15, 21) In 2016, met multiple times to implement the victim assistance tool on human trafficking.(2, 21)
National Council for Children	Monitor the implementation of government policies to protect the rights of children and coordinate social programs for victims of child abuse.(28, 29) Is a semi-autonomous body and includes representatives from government ministries and civil society organizations. In May 2016, hosted a major conference on child protection.(3)
National Commission for Child Protection	Implement, coordinate, and monitor government efforts on child protection. Chaired by the Ministry of Social Affairs.(8, 22) Met regularly during the reporting period.(8, 22, 30)

During the reporting period, the National Coordinating Committee on Trafficking in Persons did not receive dedicated funding, which affected its ability to implement the National Action Plan.(2, 26)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategic Framework and Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2014–2016)	Aimed to raise awareness, prosecute perpetrators, improve victims' access to protection and assistance services, build capacity of stakeholders, and strengthen cooperation among relevant stakeholders to prevent and combat trafficking in persons.(31) In 2016, conducted trainings on human trafficking for government immigration officers.(9)
National Social Renaissance Plan of Action (2012–2016)	Included provisions to decrease violations of children's rights, bolster child protection, and enhance services to victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Implemented by various ministries, including the MLHRD.(32, 33)
National Education Policies	Includes the Education Sector Strategic Plan (2013–2017) and the Inclusive Education Policy, both of which aim to improve the quality of, and access to, primary and secondary education. Overseen by the Ministry of Education.(21, 34)

Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken under the National Social Renaissance Plan of Action and the various National Education Policies.(26)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children Awareness Raising†	Government program that implements awareness-raising activities aimed at youth. Focuses on the dangers of commercial sexual exploitation.(35)
Decent Work Country Program (2011–2017)	Government program, in collaboration with the ILO, that prioritizes the promotion of decent employment, especially for young people, and aims to identify hazardous occupations prohibited for youth.(36)

† Program is funded by the Government of Seychelles.

Although the Government has a program to address commercial sexual exploitation, the scope of this program is insufficient to address the full extent of the problem, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children associated with tourism.(29)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Seychelles (Table 11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Sierra Leone made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Sierra Leone is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a policy that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Government policy continued to prohibit girls who were pregnant from attending regular public schools or taking secondary and postsecondary school entrance exams during the reporting period, making them more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Otherwise, the National Technical Steering Committee on Child Labor organized awareness-raising programs on child labor for fishing and quarrying communities, as well as on child labor in street vending in the western area of Freetown. Children in Sierra Leone perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in diamond mining and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as result of human trafficking. Sierra Leone's laws do not adequately protect children from involvement in hazardous work, and the country has not implemented the national action plan on child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Sierra Leone perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in diamond mining and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as result of human trafficking.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Sierra Leone.

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 8, 9, 21)
	Forced labor in agriculture and at granite and alluvial diamond mines, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 9, 20, 21)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Sierra Leone is a source, transit, and destination country for children trafficked for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation, in addition to domestic work and petty trading. (Government of Sierra Leone, 2014 #278; U.S. Department of State, February 27, 2014 #261; U.S. Embassy-Freetown, #306) (3, 8, 21) Internally, children are trafficked for forced labor in fishing, agriculture, diamond mines, and begging. (3) Children from neighboring countries are trafficked to Sierra Leone for begging, forced labor in mining and portering, and commercial sexual exploitation. (3, 8)

Research indicated the Government continued to implement a policy to prohibit pregnant girls from attending regular public schools and taking secondary and postsecondary school entrance exams, which makes them vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (9, 24, 25) In addition, despite the legal right to free basic education, many children do not complete primary school because of the high costs of uniforms, books, and fees charged by school authorities. (1, 26) Beyond early pregnancy, children’s access to education is also limited by a lack of schools and teachers, distance from schools, and sexual abuse by teachers. (1, 8, 9, 27, 28) Further, despite legal protections, children with disabilities are less likely to attend school due in part to inappropriate school facilities and discrimination. (9, 28, 29) NGOs also reported that children were denied access to school because of their HIV status. (9)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Sierra Leone has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Sierra Leone’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

* No conscription (37)

The Government developed a list of hazardous work prohibited for children under age 18; however, it remains with the Cabinet for review and has not yet been approved.(8) Currently, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not comprehensively cover children's work in sectors in which child labor is known to occur, including in agriculture, construction, domestic work, transportation, street work, auto-repair shops, and dumpsites, areas of work where there is evidence of harm to children's health, safety, or morals.(1, 9, 30-32) Furthermore, research did not find whether actions were taken on the Anti-Trafficking Law in 2016.(8)

The Child Right Act sets the minimum age for light work at age 13; however, it does not limit the number of hours for light work, and therefore is not specific enough to prevent children from involvement in child labor.(30)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS)	Formulate, implement, and monitor compliance with child labor regulations through its Child Labor Unit, consisting of six labor officials in the Western Area.(8, 38) MLSS District Labor Officers are responsible for enforcing labor laws in the formal sector.(20) Operate regional offices in Kenema, Makeni, and Bo, in addition to a newly established office in the diamond-producing district of Kono.(8)
Ministry of Mines and Mineral Resources	Enforce regulations against the use of child labor in mining. Authorized to suspend licenses of mining operators engaged in child labor.(9, 32)
Ministry of Social Welfare, Gender and Children's Affairs (MSWGCA)	Serve as lead agency to ensure child protection in country and in criminal law enforcement.(1, 20) Head the National Trafficking in Persons Secretariat.(20)

Sierra Leone

Organization/Agency	Role
Sierra Leone Police	Investigate and prosecute child labor crimes identified through Family Support Units, which are mandated to minimize and eradicate the incidence of sexual abuse, domestic violence, and child abuse by leading the investigation and prosecution of related offences.(20, 39)
Transnational Organized Crime Unit	Enforce human trafficking laws and provide statistics and information on cases of human trafficking.(40)
Ministry of Local Government and Rural Development	Enforce child labor laws in the informal sector through its district Councils.(1)
Child Welfare Committees	Promote awareness of children's rights and report child welfare concerns to officials responsible for children's issues. Provide recommendations on the support of village children and address complaints and concerns by village inhabitants.(30, 39)

The Child Right Act requires the establishment of a child welfare committee in every village, chiefdom, and district; however, these committees have only been established in a few parts of the country due to budgetary constraints.(20, 25, 30)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Sierra Leone took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) had 6 labor inspectors and 44 factory inspectors who assess the safety and health of workers in factories.(25, 42, 43) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Sierra Leone's workforce, which includes over 2 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in least developed economies, Sierra Leone should employ roughly 67 inspectors.(44, 45) In addition, enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the lack of resources for inspections and insufficient training.(20) Although the Government has a complaint line for issues related to child protection, it does not receive child labor complaints.(11) Further, the Ministry of Mines and Mineral Resources can conduct inspections of mines and revoke licenses from license holders who are found to be using child labor, but reports indicated that the Government did not effectively enforce these laws in the diamond mining sector.(9, 32)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Sierra Leone took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators
Initial Training for New Employees	No (20)	No (8)

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (46)	6 (8)
Number of Convictions	0 (20, 47)	0 (8)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (47)	Yes (8)

Reports indicate that criminal law enforcement in Sierra Leone, particularly in its efforts to address human trafficking, is hampered by a lack of coordination, limited funding, and a lack of training among law enforcement personnel and the judiciary.(8, 47) During the reporting period, 12 cases of child forced labor and child sexual exploitation were investigated by the authorities, and six of these were prosecuted; however, no convictions were reporting during the reporting period.(8)

The Government has a formal complaint mechanism. Complaints filed are routed to the Ministry of Social Welfare, Gender and Children's Affairs (MSWGCA) or the MLSS to assess the situation and determine the victim's medical and shelter needs; once notified by the authorities, the police pursue an investigation.(8) MSWGCA officials reported that the Child Protection Office received 728 complaints related to child abuse in 2016.(25)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Technical Steering Committee on Child Labor (NTCCL)	Develops and coordinates a National Action Plan Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(11, 38, 48) Led by the MLSS and the MSWGCA, and includes representatives from 10 other government agencies as well as representatives from international organizations and NGOs.(43) In 2016, the NTCCL met every quarter and conducted three sensitization programs in fishing and quarrying communities, in addition to programs on child street work in the western area of Freetown. The NTCCL also trained 20 government social workers on child labor and human trafficking.(8, 25)
National Trafficking in Persons Task Force	Coordinates the needs and requirements of agencies that provide shelter and services for human trafficking victims, gathers data on reported human trafficking cases, and meets regularly to develop policy and address the issue of child trafficking.(11, 49) Led by the MSWGCA.(50) In 2016, a proposed anti-migrant smuggling law and ratification of the ECOWAS Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters both remained under review by the Cabinet.(8)
National Commission for Children	Coordinates and exchanges information in accordance with the Child Right Act. Advises the Government on ways to improve the condition and welfare of children as part of the NTCCL; Led by and the MLSS and the MSWGCA.(30)

Research was unable to determine whether all members of the National Commission for Children have been named in accordance with Child Right Act requirements.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Sierra Leone has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Sierra Leone

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED POLICY THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Human Trafficking	Includes strategies to address human trafficking through prevention, victim identification, protection and referral, training, and government coordination and monitoring.(51) In 2016, no activities were carried out and directly funded by the Government; however, several trainings for police, border guards, and social workers were held on human trafficking issues in support of the plan's objectives, financed through international organizations and NGOs.(25)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(20, 43, 52, 53)

The Government has yet to approve the National Action Plan against the Worst Forms of Child Labor and has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Sector Plan.(8, 54)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government of Sierra Leone funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to build the capacity of the Government and to develop strategic policies to eliminate child labor.(38, 55) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our website .
Human Trafficking and Sexual Violence Prevention Program (2013–2016)	USDOS-funded project implemented by World Hope International (WHI) that provides the only shelter for human trafficking victims in Sierra Leone. Identifies victims of human trafficking and exploitation and provides care, recovery, and reintegration services, and works to build the Government's capacity to combat human trafficking in a sustainable manner.(20) In 2016, WHI provided shelter and related care for 23 children who were victims of forced labor, namely domestic servitude and sexual exploitation.(8)
Government-run Shelters [†]	Government program that refers child trafficking victims to private shelters that house child victims of forced labor and human trafficking.(23) In 2016, the Government noted that there was an insufficient number of shelters.(25)
Revitalizing Education Development in Sierra Leone (2014–2017)	World Bank-funded, $23.4 million project that aims to strengthen the education system in Sierra Leone. Adds resources to support the initiation of a school feeding program, helps eliminate informal school fees, supplies books to children in grades one to three, and supports local councils with school infrastructure needs, among other activities.(56, 57) In 2016, 30 early childhood education classrooms were nearly completed.(25, 57)
UNICEF Country Program (2015–2018)	Aims to address the worst forms of child labor, increase access to basic education, reduce child marriage and adolescent pregnancies, and address other children's needs.(28) In 2016, among other activities, UNICEF provided technical support, including vehicles, to assist the Government in monitoring educational programs and activities.(25)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Sierra Leone.

Sierra Leone has insufficient shelters and safe houses for children who have been withdrawn from working on the streets or in forced labor.(3, 25)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, the Solomon Islands made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government amended the Penal Code to improve protections for children against commercial sexual exploitation. However, children in the Solomon Islands engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The minimum age for employment does not meet international standards and the Government has not comprehensively identified the hazardous occupations prohibited for children. In addition, education is not compulsory, which increases children's vulnerability to child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Solomon Islands engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Solomon Islands. Data on some of these key indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting palm oil fruits on plantations (9, 10)
	Harvesting sea cucumbers, including diving in deep water (4, 9)
Industry	Alluvial mining† (9)
	Construction on roads and buildings, including making bricks (9)
Services	Domestic work and work as cooks (4, 9)
	Scavenging for cans and metal in garbage dumpsites, streets, and streams (3, 9)
	Working in nightclubs, casinos, and motels (4, 9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-6)
	Use in illicit activities, including in the cultivation and trafficking of drugs (1, 3, 9)
	Forced domestic work and forced work as cooks (4, 6, 11)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In the Solomon Islands, the commercial sexual exploitation of both boys and girls is prevalent near logging camps, near or aboard fishing vessels, and at hotels and entertainment establishments.(2, 5)

Although the Government's Fee Free Basic Education Policy provides free education for children in grades one through nine, additional school fees, uniform and book costs, and transportation limitations that make it challenging for some children, particularly girls, to access education.(9, 12) There is no nationally representative data available on the prevalence and nature of child labor in the Solomon Islands.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Solomon Islands has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Solomon Island's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	12	Article 46 of the Labor Act (13)

Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No		Part 7 of the Immigration Act; Article 145 of the Penal Code (16, 17)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 141, 143, and 144 of the Penal Code (15, 17)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No

In 2016, the Government adopted an amendment to the Penal Code, which criminally prohibits domestic human trafficking, with heightened penalties if the offence is committed against a child. However, the prohibitions against child trafficking are insufficient because they require threats, the use of force, or other forms of coercion to be established for the crime of child trafficking. The amendment also criminalizes the use, procuring, and offering of a child for commercial sexual exploitation, including prostitution.(17) Further, the law prohibits the use, procuring, and offering of a child for the production of pornography, but these prohibitions are insufficient, as they do not include pornographic performances.(17)

The minimum age for work is not in compliance with international standards because the Labor Act permits children as young as age 12 to work.(13) The hazardous work prohibitions are not in compliance with international standards. The Labor Code prohibits all children under 18 from working at night in industrial undertakings, all females under 18 from working in a mine or a ship, all boys under 15 from working in industry or on ships, and all boys under 16 from working in a mine. However, it doesn't clearly set forth a minimum age for hazardous work in compliance with international standards or delineate, after tripartite consultation, the type of work considered hazardous in the country for all children. In addition, the legal framework doesn't prohibit the types of work in which children engage in the Solomon Islands where there is evidence of dangers, including in scavenging and in agricultural activities, where children are exposed to injuries, extreme temperatures, and agrochemicals.(9)

Laws do not prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs.(15) The Solomon Islands has not established an age to which education is compulsory, which increases the risk of children's involvement in child labor. Although there are no laws that provide free basic education, there is a policy that sufficiently provides for free basic education.(12)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Commerce, Industry, Labor, and Immigration	Enforce child labor laws.(19) Through the Immigration Division, leads efforts to combat human trafficking, including the trafficking of children.(20, 21)

Joint Monitoring and Investigation Team	Monitor and investigate cases of transnational human trafficking, specifically in the logging industry. Comprises representatives from the Immigration Division, the Royal Solomon Islands Police, Customs, and Forestry.(20)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in the Solomon Islands took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

In 2016, the IOM and the Solomon Islands Immigration Division conducted a series of province-level anti-human trafficking trainings for law enforcement officials, focusing on victim identification and protection.(24)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on trafficking in persons, as well as the National Advisory Committee on Children, which advises the Cabinet on children's issues, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Anti-Human Trafficking Advisory Committee	Coordinate efforts across the Government to address human trafficking.(20) Includes the Immigration Division, which acts as secretariat, and representatives from law enforcement agencies and NGOs.(22)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Human Trafficking and People Smuggling (2015–2020)	Establishes a framework for national anti-human trafficking efforts. Raises awareness about commercial sexual exploitation of children and services available for vulnerable children.(20, 26) Approximately $3,850 has been allocated for victim support under the plan.(22)
Fee Free Basic Education Policy	Subsidizes school fees for grades one through nine to increase access to education.(9, 12)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(27)

Although the Government of the Solomon Islands has adopted the National Action Plan on Human Trafficking and People Smuggling, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor. Child labor prevention and elimination strategies do not appear to be integrated in the Fee Free Basic Education Policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Protecting Children from Sexual Exploitation and Sexual Abuse Through Empowerment and Cooperation	EU-funded program, implemented by Save the Children in collaboration with the National Advisory Committee on Children. [‡] The Government of the Solomon Islands had other programs that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(31)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Solomon Islands (Table 11).

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Somalia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Somalia is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a regression in practice that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. The Somali National Army recruited and used children in armed conflict in violation of its national law during the reporting period. Otherwise, Somalia made efforts by constructing a rehabilitation center for former child combatants and establishing a Human Trafficking and Smuggling Task Force. Children in Somalia also perform dangerous tasks in street work. Laws do not identify hazardous occupations or activities prohibited for children, and child trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation is not criminally prohibited. In addition, the Government did not employ labor inspectors and conducted no inspections.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Somalia perform dangerous tasks in street work. (1, 2) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict. (1, 3, 4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Somalia. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

As of October 2016, there were over 1.1 million internally displaced persons in Somalia.(11) Internally displaced persons, including children, are vulnerable to human trafficking for sexual and labor exploitation.(3) Trucks transporting goods to Somalia return to Kenya with girls who are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation in brothels in Kenya and destinations outside of Kenya.(3) Children seeking refuge in Kenya to avoid recruitment by the terrorist organization al-Shabaab are subsequently trafficked for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Research found that children are trafficked to Saudi Arabia and forced to beg on the streets.(3)

In 2016, al-Shabaab forcibly recruited children as young as age 10 for use in armed conflict.(1, 3, 4) Children planted explosive devices, acted as human shields, conducted assassinations and suicide attacks, gathered intelligence, and provided domestic service; girls were forced into sexual servitude.(3) Research found that the Ahlu Sunnah Wal Jama’a militia, which to date has not yet integrated into the Somali National Army (SNA), recruited children; Somalia’s numerous clan militias also used child soldiers. During the reporting period, the SNA recruited children for use in armed conflict, even though General Order No. 1 prohibits military personnel from recruiting and employing child soldiers.(3, 4, 12)

The protracted violence has reduced access to all basic services, including public education.(13, 14) Attacks on schools have resulted in the forced recruitment of children, military occupancy of schools, and damaged facilities.(4, 15, 16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Somalia has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The FGS controlled its capital city, Mogadishu; in other parts of the country, essential governance functions were provided by regional administrations, including Somaliland in the northwest and Puntland in the northeast.(2, 3)

The FGS has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Somalia’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 93 of the Labour Code; Article 38(1) of the Private Sector Employees Law (17, 18)

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 90 of the Labour Code; Article 38(2) of the Private Sector Employees Law; Article 29 of the Provisional Constitution (17-19)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No		Articles 90 and 94 of the Labour Code; Articles 10 and 38(4) of the Private Sector Employees Law (17, 18)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 455 and 464 of the Penal Code (20)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 403–404 and 407–408 of the Penal Code (20)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	General Order No. 1 (12)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	General Order No. 1 (12)
Non-State Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 30 of the Provisional Constitution (19)

In 2014, Parliament issued a public statement on a commercial contract, in which it cited pre-1991 laws, suggesting that the FGS continued to recognize relevant historic laws; however, no official determination has been issued.(21) The Provisional Constitution does not provide a minimum age for employment. However, the pre-1991 Labour Code establishes 15 as the minimum age.(17) Additionally, although the Labour Code establishes a minimum age of 12 years for light work and describes the conditions under which light work may be undertaken, it neither determines the activities in which light work may be permitted nor prescribes the number of hours per week for light work.(17)

The Labour Code allows the Secretary of State to prescribe the types of work that are prohibited to children under age 18; however, legislation that comprehensively prohibits hazardous occupations and activities for children does not appear to exist.(17)

Laws related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children are not sufficient, as using, procuring, and offering a child for prostitution, pornography, and pornographic performances are not criminally prohibited.(20) The Penal Code requires extensive updating. Many fines in the Code equal less than $1 today, which does not serve as an effective deterrent.(20, 22) Furthermore, it appears that under Article 405, children involved in prostitution would not be protected from criminal charges.(20)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The FGS has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Somali National Police	Investigate and enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(8) Its Counter-Trafficking and Organized Crime Unit has 40 officers.(23)
Puntland Security Forces	Investigate and enforce human trafficking laws.(24)
Puntland Ministry of Justice	Prosecute human trafficking cases.(24)

Somalia

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, the FGS did not employ labor inspectors and conducted no inspections.(8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Somalia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

In 2016, the Somali National Police remained understaffed, undertrained, and lacked the capacity to investigate or enforce laws on the worst forms of child labor.(8) Puntland authorities convicted seven people for the commercial sexual exploitation of 37 children.(23)

The SNA issued a general staff order in 2016 stating that children under age 18 may not enlist; however, research found no information that the FGS investigated or prosecuted SNA officials who recruited or used child soldiers.(4)

During the reporting period, criminal law enforcement officials detained children for alleged association with non-state armed groups.(4) Puntland authorities detained 64 children for alleged association with al-Shabaab.(4, 29) Twenty-six of these children aged 12 to 14 were later released and transferred to a UNICEF-supported reintegration program.(4, 30) However, 38 children aged 15 to 17 continued to be detained. The regional Constitution of Puntland defines a child as anyone below the age of 15; consequently, 10 of these children were sentenced to death.(4, 30)

Research found that the existing referral mechanisms for victims of the worst forms of child labor only address children in armed conflict.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the FGS has established a Child Protection Unit and Human Trafficking Task Forces, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Protection Unit	Raise awareness of child soldier issues and work with UNICEF to implement the standard operating procedures on protecting children associated with armed conflict.(7, 31, 32) In 2016, monitored SNA troops to prevent and eliminate the recruitment of children; no child soldiers were identified.(23)
Children Associated With Armed Conflict Working Group	Implement the Child Soldier Action Plan and the Action Plan to End the Killing and Maiming of Children in Contravention of International Law.(31, 32) Comprised of the Child Protection Unit, Ministry of Defense officials, and UN representatives.(31)
Human Trafficking Task Forces	The Human Trafficking and Smuggling Task Force,* led by the Ministry of Interior and Federal Affairs, leads the FGS' anti-trafficking efforts. In 2016, began developing a national action plan.(23) Puntland's Counter Trafficking Board, established in 2013, leads the region's anti-trafficking efforts. Somaliland's Counter Human Trafficking Agency* coordinates the development of legislation and collection of data.(23)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The FGS has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
Child Soldier Action Plan	Establishes a strategy for the reception and stabilization of children found within the SNA, and for the prevention of child soldiers through education of soldiers and monitoring of military camps.(31)
United Nations Integrated Strategic Framework (2014–2016)	Aims to prevent underage recruitment and ensure the release of children associated with armed forces and groups.(33)

[‡] The Government has other policies which may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(34, 35)

Although the FGS has adopted policies on children in armed conflict, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the FGS participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2011–2016)	FGS program in partnership with the ILO that aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor through research, policy development and implementation, and monitoring and evaluation systems.(36, 37)
National Program for Treatment and Handling of Disengaged Combatants	FGS program in coordination with UNICEF that rehabilitates former combatants, emphasizing the specific needs of child combatants, and of female combatants and their dependents.(38) In 2016, the FGS constructed a fourth rehabilitation center in Kismayo; the other centers are located in Baidoa, Belet Weyne, and Mogadishu. Centers provide accommodation, psychological counseling, education, and vocational training to former combatants.(39) In 2016, provided 854 vulnerable children, including children formerly associated with armed forces and groups, with reintegration services.(40)
UNICEF Country Program (2011–2016)	In cooperation with the FGS, implements the Go-2-School Initiative, a $117 million, donor-funded, 4-year project that aims to expand and improve access to education by constructing and rehabilitating school infrastructure, training teachers, and providing vocational training.(14, 41)
Efforts to Combat Human Trafficking	Strengthening the National Criminal Justice Response to Trafficking in Persons is a $750,000, USDOS-funded, 3-year project implemented by UNODC to enhance the criminal justice response to trafficking in persons within the FGS and Somaliland. Aims to strengthen legal frameworks to meet international standards; and develop and provide training on identifying victims, conducting investigations, and prosecuting cases.(42) In Somaliland, vulnerable children, including trafficking victims, receive social services at the Hargeisa Orphanage Center before they are reunited with their families.(23) Puntland authorities worked with IOM and local NGOs to provide social services and reintegration assistance to victims of trafficking; in 2016, 29 child victims were reunited with their families.(23)

Somalia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Although the FGS implemented programs to address child soldiers, research found no evidence that it carried out programs to assist children in other forms of child labor, including its worst forms. Furthermore, existing programs fail to address the scope of children in armed conflict.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Somalia (Table 10).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. South Africa

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, South Africa made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the year, the Government joined the Global Action to Prevent and Address Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants partnership; increased funding for the Child Support Grant from $3.2 billion to $3.5 billion; augmented the number of social workers that care for child abuse victims, including child laborers; and increased enforcement efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, children engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging. Government social programs are not sufficient to address the scope of child labor, and barriers to education access remain, especially among children with disabilities. In addition, the Government does not collect comprehensive data on child labor to inform policies and programs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in South Africa engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging.(1-3) Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting mangos, lychees, bananas, grapes, citrus, and other fruits (1, 6, 7)
Services	Domestic work (1, 3, 8)
	Garbage scavenging for food items and recyclable items† (1, 9)
	Food service, activities unknown (2, 3)
	Street work, including vending and begging (2, 3, 8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking, home burglaries, gang-related activity, and the production and selling of liquor,† sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 8)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 10-15)
	Forced labor in domestic work, agriculture, food service, street vending, and begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 8, 13, 16, 17)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The Government does not collect comprehensive data on child labor.(3, 8, 18) There are some reports that children in South Africa are trafficked from rural to urban areas in Bloemfontein, Cape Town, Durban, and Johannesburg. Girls are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work, and boys are forced to work in begging, food service, and street vending.(2, 10, 11, 13) Orphaned children in South Africa are more likely to be engaged in child labor than those with a parent or grandparent in their household. Children with disabilities are especially vulnerable to becoming street beggars.(3, 8, 13)

The Department of Home Affairs (DHA) expanded online birth registration at 389 health facilities and also funded 117 mobile units to provide birth registration services to children in remote areas.(19) In addition, the DHA also adopted an annual performance plan to increase birth registrations from 750,000 to 990,000 by 2019.(20) UNICEF's 2016 data show that 85 percent of children under age 5 in South Africa are registered at birth.(21) According to Chapter 2, Article 5 of the South African Schools Act, education is free through the primary level, but some schools charge fees that vary by municipality and region.(1, 3, 22) The Government has implemented a no-fee school program that covers the poorest primary schools and ordered that the schools in the first to third quintiles (poorest schools) receive school supplies, including books.(1, 23-26) The Government also provides some fee exemptions and reductions to children receiving government grants.(27, 28) The Government provides books and stationery; however, all families must pay for uniforms and other school-related expenses, which may affect children's access to education.(9, 27, 29)

In 2007, South Africa ratified the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities that requires the Government to “ensure an inclusive education system at all levels and lifelong learning directed to the development by persons with disabilities of their personality, talents, and creativity, as well as their mental and physical abilities, to their fullest potential.”(30) However, several reports suggest that children in South Africa with disabilities have limited access to education because mainstream educational facilities are not equipped and teachers are not trained to teach children with disabilities. The most recent data received from the Department of Education found that in 2014 there were 447 schools equipped to handle children with disabilities. Since most mainstream schools cannot accommodate children with disabilities, parents are often forced to enroll children in special schools that require fees, thereby increasing the likelihood that these children will not receive an education.(31-35) In 2015, the Minister of Basic Education, Angie Motshekga, made a public statement that the “lack of specialized competencies among educators teaching at special and full-service schools [would be] addressed through multi-year plans for teacher training in areas like Braille, South African Sign Language, autism, augmentative and alternative communication, and effective utilization of assistive technology, among other initiatives.”(36) In 2016, President Zuma stated at the Disability Rights Summit that the goal of the Government is to “ensure that by 2021 no children with disabilities will be out of school; [children with disabilities] should all be able to attend their local neighboring schools and receive the necessary support.”(37) Despite these public declarations, evidence suggests that children with disabilities continue to encounter difficulties accessing education.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

South Africa has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in South Africa's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
South African Department of Labor (SADOL)	Enforce child labor laws.(1, 45) Identify via inspectors suspected cases of child labor and human trafficking and forward evidence to South African Police Service (SAPS) officials, who investigate and forward cases to the South African Department of Justice and Constitutional Development for prosecution. Coordinate a report titled State of Child Labor in South Africa.(29) Operates labor centers that each have a designated child labor coordinator who focuses on child labor investigations.(1, 29)
South African Department of Justice and Constitutional Development	Enforce criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.(1, 45)
National Prosecution Authority	Prosecute criminal cases, including human trafficking cases.(1)
SAPS Human Trafficking Desk	Monitor and evaluate efforts to investigate human trafficking crimes, train investigators, and refer human trafficking cases to provincial SAPS units.(1)
Department of Social Development (DSD)	Provide child protection and social services to vulnerable children, including victims of human trafficking.(46)

Although labor inspectors have civil servant status to ensure job security, their low salaries and lack of opportunities promote high turnovers and transfers to other agencies.(47) However, all labor officers received child labor training during the year.(19)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in South Africa took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The South African Department of Labor (SADOL) inspectors are authorized to issue compliance orders to employers, which are enforced by the Labor Court. In addition, labor inspectors may also issue injunctions that prohibit a business from continuing if there is a health and safety risk to employees.⁽⁴⁸⁾ Inspectors are also authorized under Section 65 of the Basic Conditions of Employment Act to enter workplaces where domestic workers are employed, as well as private farms and homes employing one or more workers.⁽¹⁹⁾ However, SADOL lacks a central unit to administer training programs for labor inspectors.⁽¹⁾ A source indicates more inspections are conducted in the formal sector than in the informal sector.⁽³⁾ Although labor inspectors are legally authorized to inspect private farms, some encounter difficulty accessing farms due to concerns of safety or entering private property. As a result, children possibly working in agriculture on private farms may be left unprotected.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Additionally, SADOL inspectors address labor rights concerns of foreign nationals and refer those cases to the Department of Home Affairs, which then transfers the cases to the South African Department of Social Development for social services. Inspectors also refer cases that may involve child labor to social workers who provide welfare needs, such as child protection and care.^(1, 25, 50) The Government reported that the South African Police Service (SAPS) employed forensic social workers to collaborate with investigators and provide care to victims of the worst forms of child labor.⁽¹⁹⁾ The Government funded an NGO-operated hotline that refers child labor complaints to government protection agencies or SAPS.⁽¹⁾ However, it is unknown how many complaints related to child labor were made to the Government-funded hotline, because the labor inspection data are not disaggregated by child labor violations.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in South Africa took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

* The Government does not publish this information.

In 2016, the Government joined the Global Action to Prevent and Address Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants partnership with UNICEF, the IOM, and the EU, to coordinate efforts to identify and prosecute traffickers.(51) In July 2016, the South African Police Hawks rescued 16 girls from a human trafficking ring.(52)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Implementation Committee on Child Labor	Monitor and support advocacy and awareness-raising; mainstreaming of child labor into government policies; and the implementation of child labor programs, legislation, and enforcement.(1, 45) Chaired by SADOL, members include representatives from commercial agriculture, trade unions, and government agencies, including SAPS.(1) Includes provincial-level child labor coordinating structures.(7) In 2016, the Implementation Committee on Child Labor met on a quarterly basis. However, no reports were published about the progress to implement the National Child Labor Program of Action for South Africa.(49)
Child Labor Intersectoral Support Groups	Facilitate the prevention of all types of child labor, including children scavenging and child labor that occurs as a result of human trafficking. Established by SADOL and managed by child labor coordinators in each province, members include multiple government agencies, including the SADOL Head Office, SADOL Provincial Child Labor Coordinators, the Department of Justice, the National Prosecuting Authority, the Department of Home Affairs (DHA), the DSD, and the Department of Education; NGOs; and labor federations.(1, 29) In 2016, the groups met quarterly, participated in the child protection week, and assisted with the human trafficking awareness campaigns.(49)
Trafficking in Persons Task Team	Coordinate the Government's anti-human trafficking efforts, including overseeing strategy and policy decisions made at the provincial level in Gauteng, Mpumalanga, KwaZulu-Natal, Western Cape, Limpopo, and Eastern Cape. Led by the National Prosecution Authority's Sexual Offenses and Community Affairs Unit and South Africa Department of Justice's Victim Support Directorate; members include SADOL, the DSD, and the DHA, as well as other representatives of national law enforcement.(1, 8) Research was unable to find information about any coordination activities it conducted during the year.(49)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Program of Action for South Africa, Phase III (2013–2017)	Serves as the primary policy instrument to prevent and eliminate child labor in South Africa.(26, 53) Promotes government activities and calls for the promotion of new laws against the worst forms of child labor.(1, 53) Also includes a list of indicators to monitor the Government's efforts against child labor.(53) During the year, government agencies raised awareness about child labor through radio stations, participated in Child Protection Week, and commemorated the National Day Against Child Labor.(49)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the South African Education Action Plan or the National Development Plan.(54, 55)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Support Grant (CSG) [†]	Government program, led by the DSD and the South African Social Security Agency, which provides monthly direct cash transfers to primary caregivers who have vulnerable children.(1, 29, 56-58) Helps alleviate economic pressures and lower the cost of raising a child.(1, 57-59) Sources have indicated that as a result of the CSG, recipients may be less likely to send their children away for child labor and children are more likely to have positive educational outcomes.(1, 29, 46) The CSG budget was increased from $3.2 billion to $3.5 billion and benefited 12 million children.(19)
Care Dependency Grants and Foster Care Grants [†]	Government program that encourages children to remain in school, as a preventive technique to combat child labor, including its worst forms.(1) To date, about 131,040 children received a care dependency grant.(49)
National School Nutrition Program [†]	Government program funded through a conditional grant that provides school meals to vulnerable children. Targets primary and secondary students.(27, 29, 60) The Government uses tax revenue and continues to provide meals for vulnerable children.(61) During the year, the Government allocated $428,181 to the program.(49)
Food Relief Program [†]	Food relief program of the DSD and the South African Social Security Agency to assist vulnerable and orphaned children, as well as child-headed households with insufficient income.(25, 26) The program was expanded during the year and funded 140 community nutrition development centers that provided food to half a million people.(49)
Shelters and Care Centers [†]	DSD program that funds 13 shelters and oversees 17 NGO-operated temporary safe care centers for victims of abuse and human trafficking, including children.(8)
Awareness-raising Campaigns [†]	Government program that conducts training on anti-human trafficking initiatives and regulations governing social service providers.(8) DSD trainers reached 114 DSD provincial officials, 2 officials from the Commission for Gender Equality, and 35 NGO social service providers. As a result of the campaigns, suspected cases of the worst forms of child labor were identified and investigated.(49)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of South Africa.

The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(19) Although South Africa has programs that target child labor, and data collected by the South African government indicates the number of children involved in child labor is decreasing, the scope of these programs remains insufficient, including in agriculture and domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in South Africa (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. South Sudan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2016, South Sudan made efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, but was also complicit in the use of forced child labor. Despite initiatives to address child labor, South Sudan is receiving an assessment of no advancement because its national army—the Sudan People's Liberation Army—recruited, sometimes forcibly, children to fight the opposition group supporting former Vice President Riek Machar. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by removing soldiers from the grounds of 19 schools and assisting in the demobilization of child soldiers from the national army and armed groups. Children in South Sudan are also engaged in other worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government neither brought to justice those who recruited or used children in armed conflict, nor held accountable perpetrators of any other form of child labor. It also failed to convene its National Steering Committee on Child Labor, conduct any labor inspections, or accede to the UN CRC's two optional protocols.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in South Sudan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in South Sudan.

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2016, the national army—the Sudan People’s Liberation Army (SPLA)—and its aligned forces recruited child soldiers as young as age 12, sometimes forcibly or with the aid of senior politicians and community leaders, to fight against the SPLA-In Opposition (SPLA-IO)—led by former Vice President Riek Machar—and its aligned militias, including the recently formed South Sudan People’s Patriotic Front (Arrow Boys).(4, 7, 8, 30, 31) The South Sudan National Police and Wildlife Services also recruited children during the year.(30) More than 17,000 children are estimated to have been recruited by government and opposition forces since the conflict began in December 2013, with 1,300 being recruited in 2016.(4, 9) Recruitment of children was reported throughout the country, including in Unity, Jonglei, Lakes, and Warrap states, and in the Greater Upper Nile, Greater Bahr el Ghazal, and Greater Equatoria regions.(4, 9, 30, 31)

Boys were forcibly recruited for use in armed conflict, including through abduction at gunpoint from their homes and schools and as a result of coercive threats to confiscate their family’s cattle.(4, 5, 7, 9, 21, 30) Children who joined willingly to protect their communities or after the loss of family members or shelter were ultimately unable to leave the groups at will and instead were used in combat roles.(30) Other boys did not fight, but cooked, collected firewood, herded cattle, washed clothes, carried water and ammunition, carried out patrols, or served as bodyguards.(21, 30) The SPLA and other government security services forcibly recruited girls to serve as child soldiers, during which time they were often coerced into performing sex acts.(4) During the year, families also increasingly placed girls into prostitution to augment household income.(4)

The ongoing conflict continued to impair the Government’s ability to deliver aid, provide education, and address the worst forms of child labor.(2) More than 1 million primary school-age children—more than half of the school-age population—are not attending school.(32-34) Although the Constitution and the Child Act provide for free primary education, in practice many families cannot afford to send their children to school because parents often pay teachers’ salaries—a prohibitive cost for many families.(4, 35-37) Uniform costs, chronic food insecurity, and low levels of birth registration may also impede access to education in South Sudan.(1, 4, 37-42) Many children, particularly those in rural areas, do not have access to schools, often because of the lack of infrastructure, such as roads and school buildings.(35, 36) Other barriers to education include unpaid teacher salaries, high truancy rates among teaching staff, and a shortage of qualified teachers.(4, 37)

During the reporting period, there were 17 incidents of attacks on schools in Jonglei, Upper Nile, Unity, Northern Bahr el Ghazal, and the Equatoria region, which resulted in lootings, destruction of learning materials and infrastructure, attacks on students and teachers, and recruitment of children.(6, 30, 43) The UN also verified 21 new incidents of occupancy and use of schools for military purposes by the SPLA, the South Sudan National Police Service, county authorities, Government-aligned militias, and the SPLA-IO.(30, 43) Despite 19 schools being vacated during the year, in December 2016, 38 schools were still being used for military purposes. The lack of access to education may increase the risk of children’s involvement in the worst forms of child labor.(17) There has not been a comprehensive child labor survey in South Sudan.(4, 44)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

South Sudan has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

South Sudan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government did not deposit the necessary documents to accede to the UN CRC's two optional protocols, despite the national Legislative Assembly's passage of a bill in 2013 allowing it to do so.(4, 45)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in South Sudan's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	14	Article 25(3) of the Child Act (46)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 22(3), 24(1), and 25(1) of the Child Act (46)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 25(2) of the Child Act; Article 21(1) of the Sudan Labour Code (46, 47)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	No		Articles 276–278 of the Penal Code; Article 13 of the Constitution (48, 49)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 22(3)(b) of the Child Act; Articles 276 and 278–281 of the Penal Code (46, 48)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 22(3)(c) and (d) and 22(4) of the Child Act; Articles 258 and 276 of the Penal Code (46, 48)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Article 24(1) of the Child Act; Article 383(3)(d) of the Penal Code (46, 48)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 31(1) of the Child Act; Sections 20, 22(2), and (7) of the Sudan People's Liberation Army Act (46, 50)
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 31(1) of the Child Act; Section 22(2) of the Sudan People's Liberation Army Act (46, 50)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 31(1) of the Child Act (46)
Compulsory Education Age	No	13	Article 9.1(b) of the General Education Act (51)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 6(a) of the General Education Act; Article 14(1) of the Child Act; Article 29.2 of the Constitution (46, 49, 51)

In 2013, the Government drafted an updated list of hazardous work for children, but the list has not yet been finalized.(4, 33, 52) In South Sudan, the minimum age provision for work in the Child Act does not apply to children outside of a formal employment relationship, such as to children performing domestic work.(33, 46, 47) Laws related to illicit activities are also not sufficient because the offering or procurement of children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited. (51, 53, 54) Children are only required to attend school until age 13. This standard makes children between ages 13 and 14 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, considering they are not required to be in school but are also not legally permitted to work.(53) The legal framework lacks penalties for violating provisions prohibiting children under age 18 from engaging in types of hazardous work.(46)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Public Service, and Human Resource Development (MOL)	Develop labor policies, enforce child labor laws, conduct workplace inspections, and oversee the operation of vocational training centers.(4, 46, 55) Through its Child Labor Unit, investigate cases of child labor; however, the Unit was inactive throughout 2016.(4)
Ministry of Gender, Child, and Social Welfare	Coordinate activities on children's rights and act as the focal ministry for child protection.(56)
Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) Child Protection Unit	Headed by a Brigadier General. Prevent the recruitment of children into the army, monitor barracks, identify and assist with the release of child soldiers, investigate allegations of child soldiering, and provide training on children's rights to child protection officers and members of the SPLA.(17, 57, 58) Serve as liaison between the SPLA and the international community.(57)
Ministry of Interior	Enforce criminal laws to combat human trafficking and maintain a database on crime statistics.(59)
Ministry of Justice	Protect citizens' rights and enforce the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the Constitution, including child protection provisions in those laws.(60)
South Sudan Police Services	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(53)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in South Sudan did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Officials from the Ministry of Labor, Public Service, and Human Resource Development reported that they lacked sufficient resources, such as vehicles for transport, to conduct labor inspections during the reporting year.(4) Statistics regarding the number of people in South Sudan's labor force are unavailable; regardless, six labor inspectors are insufficient to address the scope of the country's child labor problem.(4, 62-64)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in South Sudan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Although both the Joint Action Plan to Combat the Use of Child Soldiers and the September 2014 Punitive Order commit the SPLA to holding its military officers accountable for the recruitment or use of children, research found no indication that the Government had either investigated or prosecuted the officers who had allegedly committed such crimes.(4)

In August 2015, the SPLA and SPLA-IO signed the Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in South Sudan, in which they committed to immediately and unconditionally releasing all child soldiers under their command or influence to UNICEF; however, these groups released only 177 children in 2016.(4, 9, 68) In October, UNICEF organized the release of 145 children from the Cobra Faction and the SPLA-IO to the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commission (NDDRC) in Jonglei State's Pibor area.(4, 69-71) UNICEF also organized smaller releases throughout 2016 in Unity State, involving a total of 32 boys associated with the SPLA and other national security forces. Prior to each release, UNICEF and the NDDRC disarmed, screened, and verified each child before transporting the children to an interim care center, tracing the children's families, and reuniting them with their families.(4, 70, 71)

All child labor violations found in 2016 were related to the identification and removal of children associated with armed groups carried out by the NDDRC in partnership with UN entities.(4) Criminal law enforcement officials failed to investigate any other violations related to the worst forms of child labor.(4)

South Sudan's justice system faces enormous challenges, such as low capacity, funding shortages, interference by the Government and the SPLA, and a scarcity of judges, prosecutors, and defense attorneys.(17, 37, 57) Prosecutors and law enforcement officials are not familiar with the Child Act's prohibitions on the worst forms of child labor because the Act has not been adequately disseminated.(53, 56, 72)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor across government ministries; led by the MOL.(2) The National Steering Committee on Child Labor did not convene or coordinate activities to combat child labor in 2016.(4)
National Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Commission (NDDRC)	Oversee and coordinate the implementation of the Joint Action Plan to Combat the Use of Child Soldiers and reintegrate children formerly engaged in armed conflict.(73) Partnered with UNICEF to release child soldiers from various armed groups.(4, 69-71, 74)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Joint Action Plan with the United Nations to Combat the Use of Child Soldiers	Requires the SPLA to demobilize children within its ranks.(75) Aims to improve efforts to verify the age of new recruits and provide reintegration services, such as vocational training, to demobilized children.(18, 76, 77) In June 2014, the Government signed an agreement of recommitment to the implementation of the Plan, followed by a work plan in August 2014 and an extension of both in mid-2015.(17, 43, 67, 78, 79) The SPLA-IO signed an action plan with the UN in December 2015.(17, 57, 80) Implementation of the Plans signed by the SPLA and SPLA-IO stalled in the aftermath of the escalation of fighting in July 2016.(30)
Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in the Republic of South Sudan	Establishes the structure of a Transitional Government of National Unity and outlines actions to be taken by signatories. Article 1.7.3 prohibits the recruitment and use of child soldiers by armed forces or militias. Article 1.10 requires warring parties to immediately and unconditionally release all child soldiers under their command or influence.(68)
MOL's Policy Framework and Strategic Plan (2012–2016)	Aims to eliminate child labor and support workplace best practices in occupational safety and health.(81, 82) The Government made no efforts to eliminate child labor under this framework during the year.(4)
UNDAF (2012–2016)	Seeks to improve access to and quality of education; includes provisions for social protection and the reintegration of child ex-combatants.(12, 83)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
UNICEF Country Program (2016–2018)	$115.4 million UNICEF-funded program implemented by the Government that aims to develop child protection systems, with an emphasis on birth registration; develop a child-sensitive justice system; provide basic social services to conflict-affected children and communities (including demobilized children); and provide return, reintegration, and resettlement services for children affected by armed conflict.(37) In May 2016, for example, UNICEF and the UN Mission in South Sudan conducted a series of workshops with the SPLA in Bentiu and Bor to continue dissemination of the UN-SPLA Action Plan and initiate screening, registration, release, family tracing, reunification, and community reintegration for released children. The workshop identified a total of 25 child soldiers at SPLA barracks that were registered for demobilization.(74) Reunified 1,170 unaccompanied, separated, or missing children with their families in 2016.(43)
Children, Not Soldiers Campaign	Ministry of Defense program to raise public and SPLA awareness of child protection principles, and to hold perpetrators accountable for recruiting child soldiers. Also aims to end the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.(75) In 2016, the United Nations Mission in the Republic of South Sudan trained 670 government officials on child protection under this campaign, including the SPLA, national police, and judicial officers.(84)
Transition Center	State Ministry of Education, Gender, and Social Welfare-administered, UNICEF-funded center in Yambio that provides interim care and support to children and mothers rescued from the Lord's Resistance Army.(17, 43) Further information regarding the work undertaken by this center during the reporting period was unavailable.(84)

Although South Sudan has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the scope or extent of the problem, including in commercial sexual exploitation and child soldiering. Reports suggest that the reintegration and rehabilitation services provided to child soldiers are insufficient to meet the total need.(2, 17)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in South Sudan (Table 11).

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
63. UN. "World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex." (2012); http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies"; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Sri Lanka

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Sri Lanka made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government raised the compulsory age for education from 14 to 16. For the first time, the Department of Labor targeted for inspection establishments with a high risk of hazardous child labor. The Government also collected data for the Child Activity Survey during the reporting period. Children in Sri Lanka perform dangerous tasks in domestic work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. There are no laws regulating employment in third-party households, which leaves children ages 14 to 18 employed as domestic workers vulnerable to exploitation. Children also face barriers to education, including lack of transportation and inadequate number of teachers.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Sri Lanka perform dangerous tasks in domestic work. Children in Sri Lanka also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Sri Lanka.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	9.2 (302,865)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	97.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	10.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Child Activity Survey, 2008–2009.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (1, 2, 5)

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [†]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 8, 9)
	Forced labor in domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 9)
	Forced labor in farming, fish-drying, and begging (10)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

There are reports of children from tea estates being trafficked internally to perform domestic work in Colombo; their payments are withheld and their movements are restricted.(2, 9) Children, predominantly boys, are also forced into commercial sexual exploitation in coastal areas as part of the sex tourism industry.(2, 9)

In addition, some children in rural areas face barriers to accessing education, including difficulties traveling to school in some regions, lack of sanitation and clean water in schools, and an inadequate number of teachers.(11, 12)

In 2016, the Department of Census and Statistics collected data for the Child Activity Survey, which includes data on child labor and hazardous child labor. The results of the survey will be published in 2017.(12, 13)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Sri Lanka has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, a gap exists in Sri Lanka's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

*No conscription (19)

In 2016, Sri Lanka raised the compulsory age of education from 14 to 16 years.(17, 18)

There are no laws regulating employment in third-party households, leaving children ages 14 to 18 who are employed as domestic workers vulnerable to exploitation.(7)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor, Ministry of Labor and Trade Union Relations (MOLTUR)	Enforce child labor laws and receive public complaints of child labor filed in national and district-level offices. Refer cases involving the worst forms of child labor to the police and National Child Protection Authority (NCPA).(12) Conduct special investigations in relation to child labor through the Women and Children's Affairs Division.(20)
Children and Women's Bureau of the Sri Lankan Police (CWBSLP)	Enforce laws on child labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in illicit activities.(12)
NCPA Special Police Investigation Unit	Inspect premises, interrogate people, and seize property suspected to be involved with child abuse, including unlawful child labor.(21, 22)
Department of Probation and Child Care Services	Coordinate services for child victims of forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation who have been referred to the Department of Probation and Child Care Services by the police and the court. Refer children to centers that provide shelter, medical and legal services, psychological counseling, and life and vocational skills training.(12, 23, 24)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Sri Lanka took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

† Data are from January 2016 to September 2016.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Sri Lanka's workforce, which includes over 9 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 20,000 workers in transitioning economies, Sri Lanka should employ roughly 453 inspectors.(28-30)

In 2016, for the first time, the Department of Labor targeted establishments with a high risk of hazardous child labor by conducting 380 inspections at 450 establishments.(12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Sri Lanka took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016
Training for Investigators

The Children and Women's Bureau of the Sri Lankan Police (CWBSLP) is staffed by 45 officers in 36 of the country's 460 police stations. In police stations without CWBSLP representation, the officer in charge oversees all the functions of the CWBSLP.(22) In addition, the National Child Protection Authority (NCPA) Special Police Investigating Unit has approximately 40 police officers who investigate complaints involving children, including child labor. The agency also has approximately 300 child protection officers based in the districts who are tasked with preventing child exploitation and victim protection.(12) However, both the CWBSLP and the NCPA face a shortage of funds that affects their ability to carry out their mandates.(22)

Research has found no evidence that the Government of Sri Lanka has investigated, prosecuted, or convicted individuals from non-state armed groups who recruited children in the past for use in armed conflict.(32-35)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate the implementation of the Roadmap to End the Worst Forms of Child Labor, the Government's key policy document for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the Secretary of MOLTUR, includes representatives from key government agencies, employer and workers' organizations, ILO, UNICEF, and NGOs.(36).
NCPA	Coordinate and monitor activities related to the protection of children, including activities to combat the worst forms of child labor. Consult with the relevant government ministries, local governments, employers, and NGOs, and recommend policies and actions to prevent and protect children from abuse and exploitation.(37)
National Anti-Trafficking Task Force	Coordinate interagency efforts to address all human trafficking issues, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor. Led by the Ministry of Justice and includes representatives from a range of government agencies, including the Ministry of Social Services, Ministry of Women and Child Affairs, Labor Secretariat, NCPA, Department of Probation and Child Care, Police Criminal Division, and Bureau for the Prevention of Abuse to Women and Children.(38, 39)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
Sri Lanka's Roadmap 2016 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2011–2016)	Specifies time-bound goals to develop or strengthen the management, coordination, implementation, resource mobilization, and reporting of programs that will lead to the elimination of the worst forms of child labor by 2016.(40) Provide district-level mainstreaming strategies to address specific sectors of child labor, including armed conflict, plantations, fisheries, and tourism. Outlines strategies to include child labor issues in social protection and education goals.(40)
National Strategic Plan to Monitor and Combat Human Trafficking (2015–2019)	Aims to combat human trafficking by raising stakeholder awareness, improving victim protection services, increasing prosecution of human trafficking cases, and conducting research and data collection. Seeks also to improve coordination among the Anti-Trafficking Task Force members.(39, 41)

[‡] The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(31, 42, 43)

Although the Government is drafting a new Child Labor Policy, Sri Lanka does not currently have a national policy to address child labor.(12, 44). The National Education Sector Development Framework and Program (2013-2017), which seeks to improve children's access to the school system, does not explicitly include child labor elimination and prevention strategies. (12, 45)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Free Zone by 2016 [†]	Local government initiatives that seek to eliminate child labor through the identification of children engaged in child labor, a rehabilitation program, assistance to families of children at risk of engaging in child labor, and an awareness-raising campaign. Operated by the district secretariats, with assistance from MOLTUR, and with technical and financial support from the ILO.(46) During 2016, the program was extended to the remaining 19 districts in Sri Lanka.(12)
'1929' Childline Sri Lanka [†]	NCPA-funded and operated 24-hour toll-free emergency telephone service for vulnerable and abused children. Connects children in need of help to direct assistance and rehabilitation services.(47)
Shelter for Victims of Human Trafficking	Ministry of Women and Child Affairs shelter provides female victims of human trafficking and children with safe shelter and access to medical, psychological, and legal assistance.(31, 38)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR)	USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build local and national capacity of the government to address child labor.(44) In 2016, worked with MOLTUR to finalize the National Child Labor Policy and implemented the Rapid Assessment of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children.(44) For additional information, please see our Web site .

Program	Description
Supporting the Roadmap to 2016 Through Expanding the Evidence Base and Reinforcing Policy Research for Scaling-up and Accelerating Action Against Child Labor	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in seven countries, including Sri Lanka, to accelerate country level actions to address child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, building capacity of governments to conduct research in this area, and supporting governments, social partners, and other stakeholders to identify areas of policy intervention against child labor. In 2016, data were collected and analyzed for Sri Lanka's Child Activity Survey.(13) For additional information, please see our Web site .
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2017)	ILO technical assistance project detailing the policies, strategies, and results required to make progress toward the goal of decent work for all. Includes four strategies to reduce the worst forms of child labor: (1) capacity-building for mainstreaming worst forms of child labor into sectorial plans and programs, (2) area-based integrated approach within districts, (3) strengthening institutional mechanisms for improved coordination and monitoring, and (4) development of a knowledge base for tracking progress.(48)

† Program is funded by the Government of Sri Lanka.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
30. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Suriname

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Suriname made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government renewed the mandate of the Anti-Trafficking Working Group and raised awareness on human trafficking. However, children in Suriname perform dangerous tasks in mining. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Existing social programs are insufficient to address child labor, including its worst forms. Suriname has not increased the compulsory education age to extend the minimum age for employment and does not collect or publish data on child labor inspections and violations.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Suriname perform dangerous tasks in mining. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-11) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Suriname.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	6.4 (6,671)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	95.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	6.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		94.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(12)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010.(13)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting crops, applying pesticides,† carrying heavy loads† (1, 3, 7) Fishing and forestry (11)
Industry	Mining, particularly gold mining (1-5, 7, 9-11, 14) Construction,† including carrying heavy loads† (1)
Services	Street work, including vending (1, 3-5, 7, 15) Domestic work (11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3-11, 16)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Suriname, predominantly boys, work in small-scale gold mines carrying heavy loads and risking exposure to mercury, excessive noise, extreme heat, and collapsing sand walls.(2, 7, 10, 14) Children, including from Guyana, are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation in Suriname, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, including in informal mining camps in the country's remote interior.(3-5, 8, 9, 11, 15-17)

Although Suriname's net attendance ratio for primary school is 95 percent, it is only 59 percent for secondary school. Research indicates secondary school attendance in the interior is even lower, at 21 percent, with distance and transportation costs making it difficult for children to access schools.(1, 10, 18) Students from low income households, particularly in the interior, may be adversely impacted by the Government's September 2016 introduction of a school supplies fee to help cover operational costs of public primary and secondary schools. (1, 19)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Suriname has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

In August, the National Assembly approved Suriname's accession to ILO C. 138, Minimum Age, and the Ministry of Labor is drafting the ratification document.(1)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Suriname's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Suriname

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Article 20 of the Law on Basic Education requires children to attend school until they are at least age 12.(26) This leaves children between ages 12 and 14 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are no longer required to attend school but are not yet legally permitted to work.(2) Although the Constitution guarantees free public education for all citizens, sources indicate that a small number of children born in Suriname to foreign parents before the September 2014 amendment to the Citizenship and Residency Law, granting citizenship to children of foreign born parents, remain ineligible to receive citizenship and free public education.(10, 22, 27, 28)

The Penal Code establishes penalties for the production and trafficking of drugs, but does not appear to specifically prohibit the use, procuring, and offering of a child in the production and trafficking of drugs.(23) Surinamese law does not prohibit non-state armed groups from recruiting children under age 18.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforce laws related to child labor in the formal sector.(2, 4)
Police	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor. Monitor and enforce child labor laws in the informal sector, including on the streets.(3-5) The Youth Affairs Police covers law enforcement involving children under age 18 and is jointly responsible for child labor-related crimes.(3, 4) The Police Trafficking in Persons Unit investigates reports and allegations of human trafficking and forced sexual exploitation nationwide, including cases involving children.(4, 5)
Prosecutor's Office	Investigate and prosecute human trafficking cases.(7)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Suriname took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

The Ministry of Labor noted there are insufficient labor inspectors to provide adequate coverage to ensure the enforcement of labor laws, particularly in agricultural areas, fisheries, and in the country's interior, which is difficult to reach and monitor. Labor inspections are mainly conducted near coastal areas, and the Government does not collect or publish data on child labor inspections and violations.(1, 8, 29) Labor inspectors are not authorized to monitor the informal sector.(10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Suriname took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, the Police Trafficking in Persons Unit employed 14 investigators to respond to human trafficking cases. This number is inadequate and, according to the Prosecutor's Office, investigations are initiated only as a result of complaints filed and are limited by a lack of resources, especially for travel to the interior of the country.(1, 17, 31, 32) Law enforcement efforts are also limited by the lack of formal processes for victim referrals. When the Youth Affairs Police find children working on the street, these children are sometimes registered and sent home without referrals to any relevant services.(4, 5, 32) Although in 2016 the Government of Suriname opened a specialized shelter for women and girls who are victims of human trafficking and provided shelter, basic services, medical assistance, and counseling to one male child victim of human trafficking, overall the Government does not provide sufficient support to child victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 8, 16, 17)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Anti-Trafficking Working Group	Coordinate the Government's anti- human trafficking efforts.(3-5) Provide care to victims of trafficking through government-supported NGOs.(5, 33) Comprised of seven members, six from government agencies and one representing the NGO community. Initiatives include organizations that target the worst forms of child labor, such as the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(3-5) The group's mandate was renewed in January 2016, and throughout the reporting period the group worked to raise awareness on identifying human trafficking cases and establish partnerships with NGOs to provide outreach to vulnerable groups.(1)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

The Government is in the initial stages of developing a new National Action Plan to eliminate child labor and will begin drafting it after results from the national child labor survey are available.(1, 34) Research found no evidence that the Roadmap to Combat Human Trafficking in Suriname has been implemented.(7, 8, 19)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Country-Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR) (2013–2017)	USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in 11 countries to build the local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor in Suriname; will implement a National Action Plan on the elimination of child labor and support a national child labor survey (NCLS).(34) In 2016, trained 28 labor inspectors on child labor and signed an agreement to conduct the NCLS in early 2017.(1) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Child and Youth Hotline†	Government-run hotline provides confidential advice to children in need, including victims of the worst forms of child labor.(31) Receives approximately 80 calls per day.(17)
Anti-Trafficking Hotline†	Government-sponsored hotline through which citizens can provide information to the police about trafficking cases.(31)
Human Trafficking Awareness Program†	Government-funded anti-human trafficking awareness campaign for press, radio, television, Internet, and social media.(5, 7, 26, 33) During the reporting period, provided awareness training to some government officials and stakeholders that work in areas with potential human trafficking.(17)
Second Basic Education Improvement Program (2015–2040)	$20 million IDB-funded, 25-year loan implemented by the Ministry of Education to develop curriculum and textbooks, provide teacher training, renovate classrooms, build housing for teachers in the interior, and build a center for teacher training and professional development. Aims to benefit 90,000 students and 6,500 teachers.(7, 35)

† Program is funded by the Government of Suriname.

While the Government continues to support initiatives to eradicate child labor, existing social programs are insufficient to fully address the problem. In particular, Suriname lacks programs to assist children who are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation or who work in mining or agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Suriname (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the use, procuring, and offering of a child for illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs.	2015 – 2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 into non-state armed groups.	2016
	Increase the compulsory education age to at least 14, the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2016

Enforcement	Make information on labor law enforcement efforts publicly available, including the labor inspectorate's funding levels, as well as the number of annual labor inspections conducted at worksites or by desk review, child labor violations identified, and penalties imposed and collected for child labor violations.	2012 – 2016
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing labor inspections in the informal sector and initiating targeted inspections based on the analysis of data related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents, such as in fisheries and in the interior of the country, particularly in mining and agricultural areas where child labor is likely to occur.	2015 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Swaziland made efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, but was also complicit in the use of forced child labor. While the Government continued its Free Public Education Program by paying school fees for children up to grade seven, Swaziland is receiving an assessment of no advancement because local chiefs continued to force children to engage in agricultural and domestic work. Penalties for refusing to perform this work included evicting families from their village and confiscating livestock. Children in Swaziland are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and livestock herding. Significant gaps in laws remain, including the lack of a compulsory education age, and social programs do not adequately address child labor in domestic work and livestock herding.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Swaziland engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and livestock herding.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Swaziland.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	11.7 (35,368)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.5

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Growing corn, picking cotton, and harvesting sugarcane (1, 3, 4, 7)
	Herding cattle and other livestock (1, 3, 4, 7-9)
Services	Domestic work (1, 3, 4, 7, 8)
	Street work, including as vendors, bus attendants, taxi conductors, portering, and washing cars (2-4, 7, 8, 10, 11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in livestock herding, domestic work, farming, and market vending, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 9, 12)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 12)
	Use in illicit activities, including growing, manufacturing, and selling drugs (7, 13)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Due to a lack of law enforcement, local chiefs continue to operate under Act No. 6 of the 1998 Administrative Order that was declared null and void by the Swaziland High Court in 2000.(14) The Administrative Order gave local chiefs the authority to force residents to perform agricultural work and other essential tasks.(9, 15) In 2016, local chiefs and their inner councils continued to force residents, including children, to perform agriculture and domestic work.(9, 15-17) Residents who refused to perform this work were threatened by the local chiefs with eviction and confiscation of livestock. (18, 19)

Swaziland

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Swazi children, especially girls and orphans, are trafficked within and outside the country to neighboring countries like South Africa for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in agriculture and domestic work.(9, 20) Some Mozambican boys migrate to Swaziland and become victims of human trafficking and are subsequently forced to conduct street work and herd livestock.(20) In addition, local NGOs identified regions such as Lubombo and Manzini where children are most vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(9) To compound the issue, Swazi children have become increasingly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor due to the high prevalence of HIV, low economic growth, and high poverty levels.(20-24) Children, especially those with disabilities, have difficulty accessing education due to top-up fees or stigmatization by the public.(14, 24) The Government has yet to collect comprehensive data on child labor to inform policies and social programs.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Swaziland has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification

	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Swaziland's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

The Sexual Offenses and Domestic Violence Bill is still under review in Parliament and has yet to be passed into law. Sections 13–15 and 23–28 of the bill would criminalize using, procuring, and offering a child for commercial sexual exploitation.(28) Section 97 of the Employment Act applies minimum age protections to children working in industrial undertakings, but it does not cover children working in domestic and agricultural work.(31) Under Articles 233, 236, and 237 of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, children are prohibited from engaging in hazardous work in industrial undertakings, including in mining, manufacturing, and electrical work; however, these prohibitions do not extend to children in domestic and agricultural work. Evidence indicates that children may be working long hours, using dangerous machines, carrying heavy loads, exposed to harmful pesticides, and working alone in remote areas.(4, 25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS)	Enforce child labor laws and promote relations between labor, government, and business through tripartite dialogue.(1, 32)
Royal Swaziland Police	Enforce child labor laws. The Domestic Violence and Protection Unit focuses primarily on addressing child labor by educating police officers on how to identify child labor violations and on their obligation to report violations.(1, 32)
Department of Social Welfare	Enforce child labor laws and protect the interests of vulnerable populations, including orphans, children, and elderly people.(1, 32)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Swaziland took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not make this information publicly available.

The Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) and NGOs noted that labor inspectors lacked sufficient resources, such as vehicles to conduct inspections.⁽³⁾ The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Swaziland's workforce, which comprises more than 446,000 workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Swaziland should employ roughly 30 labor inspectors.⁽³³⁻³⁵⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Swaziland took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2016, the Government of Swaziland, in collaboration with UNODC, developed a Victim Identification Guidelines and Referral Mechanism to assist victims of trafficking. The guidelines are used by law enforcement agencies and include tips on identifying, protecting, investigating, documenting, and reuniting victims of trafficking.⁽³⁶⁾ During the reporting year, a Swazi man was arrested for trafficking three minors across the South African border.⁽³⁷⁾

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Trafficking in Persons Secretariat	Coordinate, monitor, and implement programs to combat trafficking in persons, with the assistance of the Anti-Human Trafficking Task Force. ⁽³⁷⁾
Anti-Human Trafficking Task Force	Exchange information on cases of human trafficking between relevant stakeholders, including the police, immigration, social services, and prosecutors. Comprises a conglomerate of NGOs and government entities, including the Royal Swaziland Police, Director of Public Prosecutions, Attorney General's Office, Department of Social Welfare, Department of Health, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and MLSS. ^(1, 38)

Although the Government has coordinating mechanisms that focus on TIP, there are no coordination bodies that focus on child labor issues such as children working in agriculture and domestic work.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action for Children	Implements the Children's Protection and Welfare Act mandate by developing a plan to address child labor, especially in hazardous work.(38)
National Children's Policy	Represents the policy framework of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act.(38)
National Plan of Action for Orphans and Vulnerable Children	Supports strategic objectives, such as providing education, psychosocial support, child protection, research and monitoring, and support to help orphans and vulnerable children enroll in school. Identifies child laborers as a vulnerable group of children.(39)
National Strategic Framework and Action Plan to Combat People Trafficking	Assigns responsibilities to relevant government agencies on trafficking in persons.(40)

The Government's National Task Team developed a draft Action Program on the Elimination of Child Labor (APEC) in 2008, but it has yet to be approved. A new draft APEC was developed in 2014, but the MLSS has yet to present it to the tripartite body, the Labor Advisory Board, for consultations.(3, 14) Child labor elimination and prevention strategies are not included in the Education Sector Policy and National Social Development Policy.(38, 41)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project, implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016; established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research in Swaziland.(41) During the year, IPEC-SIMPOC reviewed the data collected, in collaboration with the Swaziland national statistical office in preparing a report on the findings.(42) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
Decent Work Country Program (2010–2017)	ILO program to raise awareness of and provide training programs on international labor standards, with the aim of developing national laws related to the ratified ILO conventions.(42, 43)
Free Primary Education Program†	Government program that provides free primary education to children up to grade seven.(3)

† Program is funded by the Government of Swaziland.

Government resources allocated to education, the fight against HIV/AIDS, and other social protection programs that may affect the worst forms of child labor are still limited. The Government, in collaboration with NGOs, provided trafficking victims with basic necessities, such as food, clothing, shelter, toiletries, counseling, and medical care.(14, 17) Although Swaziland has programs that target child labor, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs specifically designed to assist children working in livestock herding and domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Swaziland (Table 11).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

Tanzania

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED POLICY THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the United Republic of Tanzania made a minimal advancement to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. While the Government, in coordination with the ILO, published a National Child Labor Survey and established a National Plan of Action to End Violence Against Women and Children, Tanzania is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a policy that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Since 1984, the Government has regulated access to secondary education through the Primary School Leaving Exam (PSLE). Students who do not pass the exam do not have an opportunity to re-take the exam. As a result, students must drop out and do not have the opportunity to continue their education. As students in Tanzania and Zanzibar complete primary education at the average age of 14, children in Zanzibar who do not pass the exam can find themselves both out of formal education and still below the minimum age for work, which is 15 in Zanzibar, leaving such children at increased risk of child labor. While the Government has expressed its intention to phase out the exam by 2021, it has yet to initiate efforts or make preparations to do so. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining, quarrying, and domestic work. Other gaps remain in the laws, including the regulation of children's engagement in illicit activities or domestic work, although the Government has coordination mechanisms to monitor child labor and implement child protection activities.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining, quarrying, and domestic work.(1-6) As part of the USDOL-funded project, Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development, Tanzania published a National Child Labor Survey, noting that 94.1 percent of working children are engaged in agriculture.(6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mainland Tanzania.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	29.3 (3,573,467)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	74.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	24.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		73.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(7)

Source for all other data: Tanzania Mainland National Child Labour Survey.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Production of sugarcane ⁺ (4)
	Livestock herding, including tending cattle (3, 5, 13)
	Fishing, including for Nile perch (5, 6, 8, 12, 14)

	Forced begging (5, 25)
	Forced labor in domestic work, agriculture, mining, fishing, commercial trading, quarrying, shining shoes, pushing carts, and working in factories and bars, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5, 27-30)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Tanzania is a source, transit, and destination country for child trafficking for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Child trafficking is often facilitated by victims’ family members, friends, or intermediaries promising assistance or employment.(5, 28, 30, 31) Impoverished rural children and those orphaned by HIV/AIDS are particularly vulnerable.(31, 32) Girls are often trafficked for domestic servitude or commercial sexual exploitation, including along the Kenya border and in tourist areas.(5, 28, 29) Children from Burundi and Kenya are trafficked to Tanzania for mining, domestic work, and agricultural labor; however, most children are trafficked internally.(5, 33)

Despite a recent policy shift to institute tuition-free primary education, which has increased enrollment rates by 36.7 percent compared to last year, families must still pay for books, uniforms, and school lunches. In an effort to mitigate overcrowding issues, the Government launched a nationwide effort to furnish sufficient desks for newly enrolled students.(34-37)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Tanzania has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Tanzania’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Mainland Tanzania and Zanzibar have separate laws and regulations governing child labor because child labor laws are not union matters according to Tanzania's Constitution.(1, 42) For example, Mainland Tanzania's law does not explicitly prohibit child domestic work. Although the Zanzibar Children's Act sets the minimum age for work at 15, it does not specify whether its protections cover children engaged in domestic work.(38, 40, 41) Likewise, Mainland Tanzania does not clearly provide penalties for using children for illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs. Zanzibar prohibits the use of children for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.(40, 41) In addition, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover fishing and agriculture tasks in the production of tobacco, cloves, coffee, sisal, and tea.(4, 38-41)

Tanzania does not have a law requiring free public education, but it does have an education policy that provides for free education. A policy change in 2016 translated into lower costs for primary and secondary education.(33, 47-49) The Government regulates access to secondary education through the Primary School Leaving Exam (PSLE); students who do not pass the exam do not have an opportunity to re-take the exam, and must drop out of school. As students complete primary education at the average age of 14, children in Zanzibar who do not pass the exam can find themselves both out of formal education and still below the minimum age for work, which is 15 in Zanzibar, leaving such children at increased risk of child labor; nevertheless, exact numbers for children affected in Zanzibar are unavailable.(50, 51) Human rights groups have reported that since 2012, at least 1.5 million children nationwide have been unable to continue their education, and although the Government has expressed its intention to phase out the exam by 2021, it has yet to initiate efforts or make preparations to do so.(50, 51)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Key Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office for Policy, Parliamentary Affairs, Labor, Employment, Youth, and the Disabled (Mainland)	Enforce child labor laws.(1) Assigns area labor officers to each region to respond to reports of child labor violations, issue noncompliance orders, and report incidents to police and the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare.(1) Through its Labor Administration and Inspection Section, provide legal guidance upon request, disseminate information to employers and employees on their rights and obligations, and help area offices conduct labor inspections.(33)
Ministry of Health, Community Development, Gender, Elders, and Children (Mainland)	Enforce child protection laws and regulations, enforce health and social welfare policies, employ officers to monitor child labor at the district and village levels, and report findings to the President's Office Regional Administration and Local Government (PMORALG).(2, 16) Promote community development, gender equality, and children's rights by formulating policies, strategies, and guidelines, in collaboration with stakeholders.(33)
Ministry of Empowerment, Adults, Youth, Women and Children (Zanzibar)	Ensure compliance with child protection and child labor laws, including inspections, through its Child Protection Unit.(33) Following a merger with the Ministry of Labor, Economic Empowerment and Cooperatives, investigate child labor cases reported by the police and refer cases to social welfare officers.(50)
Ministry of Health (Zanzibar)	Enforce anti-trafficking laws, including cases of child trafficking.(33)
Tanzania Police Force	Investigate cases of child labor and other forms of child endangerment reported to police stations; in some cases, refer the cases to labor officers or seek assistance of social welfare officers and the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions for legal actions. Includes a Human Trafficking desk and Gender and Children's desks to handle cases pertaining to children.(28, 33, 52, 53)
Ministry of Home Affairs (Mainland)	Enforce anti-trafficking laws, including child trafficking, and laws prohibiting commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities. Chair the Anti-Trafficking Committee.(33)

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Tanzania took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

[‡] Data are from January 1, 2015 to June 30, 2015.

Despite regulations dictating that one or more labor officers be assigned to each region, research was unable to determine whether each region had a dedicated labor officer during the reporting period.(55) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Tanzania's workforce, which includes over 26 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Tanzania should employ roughly 674 inspectors.(56, 57)

Through the WEKEZA project, 61 mainland labor officers received training during the reporting period.(33) The Government provided incomplete data on inspections; however, in previous years, inspections on the mainland were carried out in sectors such as agriculture, mining, domestic work, hotels, trade, industry and commerce, construction, and fishing.(3) Figures on labor inspectorate funding are unavailable; however, NGOs commented that child labor inspections could benefit from additional funding and inspections.(33) Complaint and referral mechanisms have been reported to lack investigative and enforcement capacity.(8, 12, 33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Anti-Trafficking Committee and Secretariat	Promote, define, and coordinate policy to prevent human trafficking through engagement with local NGOs.(28, 31, 43, 50) Chaired by the Ministry of Home Affairs, includes representatives from the Prime Minister's Office for Policy, Parliamentary Affairs, Labor, Employment, Youth, and the Disabled.(55) In 2016, received a budget of roughly $45,000 for the third consecutive year.(60, 61)
National Education Task Force on Child Labor (NETFCL)	Review education sector policies and existing laws, regulations, and strategies related to children's issues, including the National Action Plan. Review existing curriculum and programs, identify gaps, and suggest strategies to resolve barriers to education access related to child labor.(8, 62)

National Protection Steering Committee†	Provide overall policy guidance and coordination at both the national and local level of the National Action Plan to End Violence Against Women and Children (NPA-VAWC) through the merger of the National Inter-Sectoral Coordination Committee and the Multi-Sector Task Force on Violence Against Children.(50, 53) Operate the NPA-VAWC National Protection Technical Committee (NPTC) and Thematic Working Groups (TWGs) at the national level; merge pre-existing committees at the regional and district levels, focusing on violence prevention and response, including the Child Labor Committees, the Gender Based Violence (GBV) Committees, District Child Protection Teams (DCPTs) and Most Vulnerable Children Committees (MVCCs).(33, 53)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2016, the Government established a unified coordinating structure to address child labor issues through the implementation of the National Action Plan to End Violence Against Women and Children (NPA-VAWC) that is both multi-sectoral and cross-jurisdictional.(33, 53) However, while funding requirements are provided in the plan, it is not yet clear whether the funding has been allocated in the national budget for NPA-VAWC.(8, 33)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[†]

The National Action Plan to End Violence Against Women and Children replaced the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor and the National Costed Plan of Action for Most Vulnerable Children II.(33) In 2016, the Anti-Trafficking Secretariat began preliminary discussions to draft a new National Action Plan on Anti-Trafficking set to begin in 2018.(55, 61) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Primary Education Development Plan III.(47)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 56. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies,” “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies,” and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development as determined by the UN.

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Thailand made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted an amendment to the penal code that increases penalties for individuals who use children to commit crimes. Thailand also established a new taskforce to investigate crimes involving the commercial sexual exploitation of children perpetrated using the Internet. In collaboration with multiple stakeholders, the Government began implementing a new project to prevent and reduce child labor and forced labor in the fishing and seafood industry. In addition, the Government is working with the International Labor Organization to collect data and produce nationally representative child labor estimates. However, children in Thailand engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in fishing and shrimp and seafood processing, and in commercial sexual exploitation. An insufficient number of inspectors and inadequate training on child labor issues hampered the labor inspectorate's capacity to enforce child labor laws, particularly in the informal sector and home-based workplaces. Some children in Thailand face challenges in accessing education, which increases their vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Thailand engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in fishing and shrimp and seafood processing, and in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Thailand.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	13.0 (1,302,267)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children from Thailand, Burma, Laos, Cambodia, and ethnic minority communities are exploited in trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation in Thai massage parlors, bars, karaoke lounges, hotels, and private residences. The Internet and social media are increasingly used to lure children through less visible channels.(14, 33) In 2016, there continued to be limited reports that children were recruited by insurgent groups in southern Thailand to commit arson or act as scouts or informants.(14)

Although the Government has implemented a policy to provide education for all children in Thailand since 2005, some children, particularly migrants and ethnic minorities, struggle to access basic education due to a lack of awareness of migrant children's right to public education, language barriers, and insufficient transportation to schools.(3, 12, 34)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Thailand has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Thailand's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) adopted a ministerial regulation prohibiting the use of children under age 18 to work in seafood processing factories and establishments.(46) The Government also adopted the Human Trafficking Criminal Procedure Act, which establishes an inquisitorial system for human trafficking cases, allowing courts to take a more proactive role in investigating cases and ordering restitution for victims, including child victims.(12, 47) The Beggar Control Act, adopted in July 2016, establishes penalties to punish individuals who recruit and use others to beg and requires the Government to provide rehabilitation services for beggars.(12, 48) In addition, a new amendment to the Penal Code significantly increases the criminal penalties for procuring, offering, or using a child under age 18 to commit criminal offences.(12)

During the reporting period, the Cabinet approved a draft ministerial regulation specifying the types of work considered harmful for home-based workers under 15 years old.(14, 49) The Government revised the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act to impose stricter penalties on individuals who recruit, buy, sell, detain, or harbor children under age 15 to work or provide services that seriously harm the body and mind of a child.(12) The Government also revised the Labor Protection Act to increase penalties for using child labor.(3) At the close of the reporting period, both of these amendments were under review by the Office of the Council of State.(50) Furthermore, the National Council for Peace and Order issued Order No. 28/2559, which extends the number of years (12 to 15 years) that the Government will provide free public education in order to provide greater flexibility for children who may require more time to complete their education.(3)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor Protection and Welfare (DLPW) of the Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws through workplace inspections.(26) Operate Hotline 1546 and staff 86 labor protection and welfare offices in every province to answer questions regarding working conditions and receive complaints from the public about child labor.(10, 51)
Provincial Coordination Center for Sea Fishery Workers (Operated jointly by DLPW, marine police, provincial administration, and fishers' association)	Compile registration records and work permit information for migrants working on fishing vessels and work with vessel owners to ensure that undocumented migrant workers are registered. Monitor and coordinate inspections of working conditions on fishing vessels.(10) Provide trainings on labor protection, receive human trafficking complaints, and coordinate with other agencies to provide assistance, remedy, and rehabilitation services for victims.(10)

Organization/Agency	Role
Command Center for Combating Illegal Fishing	Coordinate government efforts to resolve cases of human trafficking and illegal fishing. Operate 32 Port In–Port Out Centers and 19 Forward Inspection Centers in every coastal province.(10) Carry out inspections in the fishing and seafood industry at port, at sea, and on land.(52) Agencies involved include the Royal Thai Navy, the ministries of Agriculture and Cooperatives, Transport, Interior, and Labor, and the Royal Thai Police.(52)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division of the Royal Thai Police	Enforce laws related to forced labor, human trafficking, child pornography, and commercial sexual exploitation of children. Operate Hotline 1191 to receive complaints on human trafficking and violence against children.(10)
Department of Special Investigations (DSI) in the Ministry of Justice	Investigate complicated human trafficking crimes, including those related to government officials' complicity and transnational or organized crime.(53, 54)
Anti-Human Trafficking Department under the Office of the Attorney General	Enforce criminal laws against human trafficking.(10) Investigate or co-investigate human trafficking offenses and monitor cases to improve the quality of prosecution of human trafficking cases.(55)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division under the Criminal Court of Justice	Enforce the Anti-Human Trafficking Act.(10) Prosecute human trafficking cases, focusing specifically on sex trafficking, forced labor, slavery, and the illegal trade of human organs.(55)

In 2016, the Government institutionalized the Thailand Internet Crimes Against Children Taskforce, a team comprising police officers and Department of Special investigation (DSI) agents, to investigate cases of online commercial sexual exploitation of children.(33)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Thailand took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Labor inspection duties are carried out by 592 Department of Labor Protection and Welfare (DLPW) civil servants, 101 contract employees employed by DLPW, and 187 officials from other agencies.(14, 50) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Thailand's workforce, which includes over 38.45 million workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Thailand should employ roughly

Thailand

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

2,563 labor inspectors.(58-60) During the reporting period, the DLPW provided training for labor inspectors on various topics, including on the enforcement of laws related to child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking. However, only 336 labor inspectors received training, and officials reported that the quality of instruction was inadequate.(3) Additional training is needed on effective child labor inspection techniques in the informal sector, where child labor in Thailand is reported to commonly occur.(12)

Under the Home Workers Protection Act, the DLPW has the authority to inspect home-based workplaces, but in practice, it is challenging for labor inspectors to safely access an individual's property to monitor the welfare of child domestic workers or other children in home-based employment.(53, 61) Despite efforts to increase the number of interpreters available to interview migrant workers, including children, during labor inspections, there continued to be a shortage of trained interpreters in areas with high concentrations of migrant workers.(12) There also continued to be concerns that penalties for child labor violations are infrequently applied in accordance with the parameters prescribed by law.(10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Thailand took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

[‡] Data are from October 1, 2015 to September 30, 2016.

In 2016, the Government employed approximately 400 Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division police officials, 40 DSI officials, 30 public prosecutors, and 29 administrative staff in the Office of the Attorney General to enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor. Around 3,328 government law enforcement officials, prosecutors, social workers, and interpreters participated in training on trafficking in persons, including child trafficking.(12) During the reporting period, the Government increased efforts to hold government officials suspected of complicity in child sex trafficking crimes accountable, including by investigating 10 police officers and seizing assets from 2 officials. However, there continued to be reports that some corrupt officials allegedly take bribes to protect brothels and karaoke bars employing children.(12, 14)

The Government collects data on the number of investigations, violations, and prosecutions related to the use of children in the production and trafficking of drugs and on the number of investigations conducted and violations found for child pornography; however, there are not comprehensive data disaggregated by age available for other worst forms of child labor.(12)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate implementation of child labor policies, facilitate cooperation among relevant ministries, and report annually to the Thai Cabinet on child labor issues.(10) Chaired by MOL, with representation from other government agencies, employer and worker associations, and civil society groups.(63) Administer subcommittee responsible for monitoring the National Policy and Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(3, 64) In 2016, convened three times.(50)
National Policy Committee on Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Illegal, Unreported, and Unregulated Fishing	Coordinate anti-trafficking in persons policies and activities. Oversee five subcommittees, including the Subcommittee on Child Labor, Forced Labor, and Migrant Workers. Chaired by MOL.(3, 65)

Operates under the Ministry of Social Development and Human Security.(3) Monitor 76 Provincial Operation Centers for the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking.(3, 10, 53)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
National Policy and Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor Phase II (2015–2020)	Seeks to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Thailand in accordance with international labor standards. Focuses on (a) preventing the worst forms of child labor, (b) rescuing and protecting children from the worst forms of child labor, (c) developing and enforcing relevant laws, (d) enhancing interagency cooperation, and (e) developing management and monitoring systems.(64) In 2016, implemented various activities, such as providing training to local volunteers to monitor for child labor at the community level.(50)
The National Policy, Strategy, and Measures for the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons (2011–2016)	Set forth priority strategies to address human trafficking, including prevention, prosecution, protection and assistance, policy development, and improved information management.(66)
National Child and Youth Development Plan (2012–2016)	Seeks to advance the wellbeing of children and youth, including promoting access to quality education and protecting children from exploitation. Focuses on vulnerable children, such as children of migrant workers, ethnic minorities, and child laborers.(3)

[‡] The Government has other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(12, 67, 68)

In 2016, Thailand ratified the ASEAN Convention on Trafficking in Persons and signed the ASEAN Plan of Action against Trafficking in Persons.(33)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
National and Provincial Operation Centers for Providing Assistance to Women and Child Laborers [‡]	DLPW program that provides assistance to women and child laborers, and collects and disseminates information on the worst forms of child labor. Reports to the National Committee to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(69)
From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labor (2015–2019)	USDOL-funded global project implemented by ILO to support global and national efforts aimed at combating forced labor of adults and children under the 2014 ILO Protocol and supporting Recommendation to C.29 on Forced Labor.(70) In Thailand, supports the design and implementation of the 2017 National Working Children Survey in Thailand.(3, 71) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .(71)

Program	Description
Government Shelters for Trafficking Victims†	Ministry of Social Development and Human Security program that operates 76 temporary shelters to provide emergency assistance and protection to human trafficking victims, including children.(52) Operates nine long-term shelters that offer medical care, psychosocial services, education, and life skills education.(52, 57) In 2016, provided services to 232 child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, 38 child victims of forced labor, and 12 child victims of forced begging.(12)
Asia-Australia Program to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2013–2018)	5-year, $45 million, Australian Aid-funded, ASEAN regional- and national-level project to build capacity and strengthen access to criminal justice for trafficking victims.(26) In Thailand, focuses on creating specialized investigative units; increasing interagency cooperation among public prosecutors, police, and DSI; and developing training curriculum for law enforcement, prosecutors, and judges.(26)
Combatting Unacceptable Forms of Work in the Thai Fishing and Seafood Industry* (2016–2019)	3.5 year, EU and ILO-funded project implemented by ILO, the Government of Thailand, and other stakeholders to prevent and reduce forced labor and child labor in the Thai fishing and seafood processing sectors, including by withdrawing children engaged in the worst forms of child labor and enhancing their access to support services.(72, 73)
Migrant Learning Centers‡	NGO-operated centers that provide basic education to children in migrant communities. Ministerial regulations under the National Education Act specify that these centers are permitted to operate and are eligible to receive government subsidies and accreditation.(10) However, many Migrant Learning Centers rely on donor funding, and although in some cases migrant students can take an exam provided by the Thai government or by the origin country government to acquire certification of education, this process can be challenging.(12)
Child Support Grant (2015–2016)†	Government program that provides low-income parents or caretakers with a monthly stipend of approximately $17 (600 baht) per newborn baby. As of September 30, 2016, includes 154,855 households.(3)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Thailand.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(64, 74)

In 2016, the Government publicly released the results of Thailand's National Working Children Survey and conducted a survey on working children in the sugarcane sector.(3) However, there continued to be a need for nationally representative data on child labor that is generated using research methodology that is consistent with international resolutions and guidelines on child labor statistics and data collection.(12) During the reporting period, the Government began designing a new national working children survey that uses internationally recognized methodology.(12)

Although the Government is implementing programs that provide services to child victims of human trafficking and forced labor, especially in the fisheries sector, research did not find evidence that the Government has carried out programs specifically designed to address child labor in other relevant sectors, including agriculture, garment manufacturing, domestic work, and construction. Further, although the Government has some social programs targeted to assist children at high risk of exploitation in the worst forms of child labor, such as migrant and ethnic minority children, these programs are not sufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Although public awareness of child labor issues in Thailand has increased in recent years, additional education is needed to help families distinguish between the types and conditions of work that are safe and acceptable for children under age 18, and those that are considered child labor or hazardous child labor.(12)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Thailand (Table 11).

	Strengthen efforts to ensure that penalties applied for child labor violations adhere to the parameters prescribed by law.	2013 – 2016

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

60. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Timor-Leste

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Timor-Leste made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Law to Prevent and Fight Against Human Trafficking and the National Commission against Child Labor finalized a National Action Plan Against Child Labor. In addition, the Government reestablished the Inter-Agency Trafficking Working Group. However, children in Timor-Leste perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has not approved a decree specifying the occupations and activities prohibited for children, which leaves children vulnerable to engagement in hazardous work. In addition, limited financial and human resources hinder inspectors and investigators from enforcing laws related to the worst forms of child labor, especially in more remote areas of the country.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Timor-Leste perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Timor-Leste.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10 to 14	19.9 (26,268)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	69.7
Combining Work and School (%)	10 to 14	12.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		106.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Timor-Leste Survey of Living Standards, 2007.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cultivating and processing coffee (1-3)
	Growing vegetables and other crops (6)
	Fishing, including work on boats and repairing nets (1-3)
Industry	Construction, including brickmaking (1, 2, 7)
	Operating weaving and knitting machines (6)
Services	Domestic work (1, 2, 7)
	Street work, including vending, begging, and scavenging (1-3, 8, 9)
	Shop-keeping and selling goods in markets (6)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic and agricultural work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3, 10, 11)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Timor-Leste, some children are trafficked from rural areas to the capital city, Dili, and subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, or forced labor in the fishing industry.(7, 10, 12, 13) Children are also trafficked transnationally, including to Indonesia, for labor exploitation.(13-15) Preliminary data from the child labor survey conducted in 2016 indicate that more than 26,000 children are engaged in “other service activities” such as domestic work; the survey also identified 588 children engaged in street work.(12, 16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Timor-Leste has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Timor-Leste’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Section 59 of the Constitution of the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste; Article 11 of the Education System Framework Law (21, 22)

In October 2016, Parliament passed the Law to Prevent and Fight Against Human Trafficking, which was originally drafted in 2012 and awaited the President’s signature as of the end of 2016.(12, 23) The new law will expand legal provisions on protection and prevention measures for the crime of human trafficking and codify the Inter-Agency Trafficking Working Group.(12, 13)

Timor-Leste

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Timor-Leste's Penal Code and Labor Code do not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, hazardous work, child trafficking, forced labor, or illicit activities, in accordance with international standards. Existing legislation leaves children age 17 vulnerable to involvement in hazardous work and other worst forms of child labor.(7, 17, 18)

Although the National Commission against Child Labor approved a list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children, the decree is awaiting approval by the Council of Ministers.(24-26) Timor-Leste's legal framework is not completely consistent with international standards regarding hazardous child labor. While the Labor Code specifies the conditions under which children ages 13 to 15 may be permitted to perform light work and limits the number of hours for light work, it does not indicate which specific activities qualify as light work.(17)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Secretariat of State for Professional Training and Employment Policy (SEFPOPE)	Enforce laws related to child labor. Administer the General Labor Inspectorate Directorate, which is responsible for investigating incidents of forced labor.(1)
Timor-Leste National Police (PNTL)	Enforce criminal laws against forced labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking. Includes the Vulnerable Persons Unit, the immigration police, and the border police.(1)
Ministry of Social Solidarity (MSS)	Receive referrals from agencies, including the SEFPOPE, that are responsible for conducting child labor investigations and providing child victims with appropriate support services.(1) Maintain at least one technical officer in each of the country's 13 districts and two child protection officers in each of the 65 subdistricts, all trained to follow the Government's standard operating procedures.(14, 27, 28)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Timor-Leste took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

† Data are from January 1, 2015 to October 31, 2015.

The Secretariat of State for Professional Training and Employment Policy's (SEPFOPE) enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the lack of human resources for inspections and the lack of training on child labor enforcement.(12)

In 2016, the budget allocated for the labor inspectorate increased slightly.(12) However, inadequate transportation outside the capital city limits restricts the Inspectorate's ability to effectively conduct inspections in the rural areas of Timor-Leste, where child labor in the agriculture sector is prevalent.(31) SEPFOPE conducts routine unannounced inspections on-site, but it is limited to formal worksites and cannot conduct inspections of family farms or sites where children are engaged in domestic work.(12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Timor-Leste took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, the Vulnerable Persons Unit of the Timor-Leste National Police (PNTL) had a staff of 79 investigators charged with the enforcement of criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(26) The overall budget for the PNTL was $28.9 million.(12)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission against Child Labor (CNTI)	Facilitate information-sharing on child labor issues among government agencies and serve as the coordinating mechanism for filing and responding to child labor complaints.(31) Develop child labor policies, raise awareness, and contribute to efforts to ratify and implement international conventions related to child protection.(1) SEPFOPE is serving a 3-year term as the Technical Secretariat. Chaired by the SEPFOPE.(12, 31)
Inter-Agency Trafficking Working Group	Coordinate the Government's efforts to combat human trafficking, develop a national action plan against human trafficking, and promote the development of comprehensive anti-trafficking legislation. Chaired by the Ministry of Justice.(12)

Timor-Leste

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Government reestablished the Inter-Agency Trafficking Working Group, conducted an anti-human trafficking educational campaign in seven schools, established a data collection team, and devoted funding and personnel resources to support the National Action Plan Against Human Trafficking.(12, 13, 32)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan Against Human Trafficking in Timor-Leste (2016–2018) [†]	Guides the Government's efforts to combat human trafficking in Timor-Leste through prevention, protection, prosecution, and in the area of partnerships. Coordination of activities and responsibilities by the Ministry of Justice.(32, 33)
Timor-Leste Project for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Aims to strengthen implementation of ILO C. 182 by establishing the Child Labor Commission Working Group, developing a hazardous work list, and creating a national action plan against child labor. Launched in 2009 in partnership with the ILO and the Government of Brazil.(31)
Timor-Leste Strategic Development Plan (2011–2030)	Provides short-term and long-term plans for the nation's development, including the eradication of the worst forms of child labor, poverty alleviation, and implementation of social transfer programs.(1, 34) Specifies commitments to improve the educational system over the next 20 years.(34, 35)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2016, the National Commission against Child Labor (CNTI) finalized the National Action Plan (NAP) Against Child Labor, which aims to eliminate child labor in Timor-Leste in all its forms by 2030, starting with the worst forms by 2025; however, it still requires approval by the Council of Ministers.(12, 16, 36) To achieve this goal, the NAP will be implemented by key stakeholders, including the Government and community-based organizations, and the work will be coordinated by technical working groups and overseen by CNTI.(16)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Education Strategic Plan and the Child and Family Welfare System Policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO that aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Timor-Leste.(37) In August 2016, held a workshop with relevant government and civil society agencies to produce a framework for the National Action Plan on child labor.(36) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Child Labor Education and Outreach Program [†]	The SEPFOPE and the NCCL education and awareness-raising program targeted at children in five primary schools in Dili who have been identified as at risk for involvement in child labor.(31) In 2016, reached over 373 students in Dili and three other municipalities.(26)
Services for street children [†]	Government-funded safe house and support services for street children provided by the Youth Communication Forum. In 2016, assisted 36 children involved in child labor, primarily in the informal sector, including street vending.(30)
Mother's Purse (Bolsa da Mãe) [†]	MSS program that provides an annual cash subsidy of $60 to $180 to poor families with a female head of household. Aims to improve the well-being of children by conditioning the subsidy on children's school attendance and regular medical visits.(26, 31, 38) In 2016, served 51,759 families.(26)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Timor-Leste.

[‡] The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(1, 9, 26, 27, 29, 39-41)

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Togo made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government significantly increased its number of labor inspectors for the third year in a row, identified 246 cases of child labor, and removed 23 children from hazardous child labor. The Government also created a National Domestic Workers' Trade Union that will combat child labor and protect domestic workers of legal working age. However, children in Togo perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Government has not devoted sufficient resources to combat child labor, and enforcement of laws related to child labor remains weak. In addition, Togo's social programs to combat the worst forms of child labor do not match the scope of the problem and rely largely on nongovernmental and international organizations for implementation.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Togo perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Togo.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (%)	5 to 14	29.6
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	86.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	29.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		84.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016. (10)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2013–2014. (4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Working in agriculture, including exposure to pesticides, [†] harvesting cotton, cocoa, and coffee (3, 6, 8, 11) Raising cattle [†] (3)
Industry	Working in quarries and sand mines, including excavating, crushing rocks, sifting gravel, and carrying heavy loads [†] (1, 3, 7, 12-14) Working in carpentry [†] and tailoring (15) Construction, activities unknown (1, 8, 11)
Services	Domestic work [†] (1, 4-9, 11, 13, 16, 17) Carrying heavy loads [†] and small-scale vending in markets (1, 3, 6-8, 11, 13, 17) Operating motorcycle taxis, auto and motorcycle repair (1, 11, 15) Garbage scavenging (1, 11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Forced begging (3, 14) Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 8, 13, 17) Forced labor in agriculture, including coffee, cocoa, and cotton; domestic work; quarries; and markets, including carrying heavy loads; each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 9, 18, 19)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Togo is a source and transit country for victims of human trafficking to neighboring countries, although the majority of child trafficking cases are domestic.(2, 8, 9, 16, 18, 20, 21) The customary practice of confiage, which involves sending a child to a relative or friend to attend school in a larger town or city, may place children at risk of exploitation by internal human trafficking.(3, 6, 8, 13, 17) Parents may be complicit in child trafficking as a result of confiage, and some traditional chiefs and leaders do not discourage the practice.(9, 22)

Although education is free and compulsory by law, parents are responsible for paying associated fees and buying uniforms and school supplies, which makes education prohibitive for many families.(23-25) Research also found that distance to school, birth registration requirements, and physical and sexual abuse in schools also posed barriers to education for some.(6, 11, 17, 24, 26, 27)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Togo has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Togo's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Civil Service, Labor, and Administrative Reform (MOL)	Enforce all labor laws, including child labor laws.(8, 23) Through its Unit to Combat Child Labor (CELTE), withdraw children from child labor situations, raise awareness, and collect data.(3) Focal points within the inspectorate are located in each of the five regions to monitor child labor issues and raise awareness at the local level.(35)
Ministry of Justice and Government Relations	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor and prosecute violations.(11) Through its Anti-Trafficking Cell, serve as a resource for law enforcement agencies combating child trafficking and collect information from prosecutors as part of Togo's annual report to ECOWAS.(20)
Ministry of Social Action, Promotion of Women and Literacy (MASPFA), Director General for the Protection of Children	Raise awareness of child labor issues, enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor, provide technical assistance, and lead government efforts to combat human trafficking.(8, 22, 36) Operate the Allo 1011 hotline for reporting child abuse, including child trafficking.(2, 6, 8, 22, 36, 37)
Ministry of Security's Child Protection Brigades	Investigate crimes involving child victims, including child trafficking. Present in all five regions of Togo and operate as part of the National Police.(11)
National Commission of Human Rights	Receive complaints of human rights abuses, including the violation of children's rights, and forward such complaints to the children's court.(38)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Togo took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

The Labor Code makes labor inspectors responsible for reconciliation and arbitration in collective disputes, which may detract from their primary duties of conducting inspections and enforcing the Labor Code.(28, 40) Although the number of labor inspectors has grown significantly over the past three years, NGOs and the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Administrative Reform (MOL) believe that the current number of labor inspectors is still insufficient.(23, 39)

The MOL also acknowledges that it lacks resources for transportation, which hinders its ability to conduct investigations, particularly outside Lomé and the regional capitals. In addition, inspections are primarily focused on the formal sector in urban areas, which excludes the majority of working children.(11, 14, 23) During the reporting period, the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Cell identified 246 children in child labor and removed 23 children from hazardous working conditions.(11) Although the Allo 1011 hotline received more than 40,000 calls in 2016, it is unknown how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of these calls.(37, 39)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Togo took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

* The Government does not publish this information.

Inspectors and law enforcement officials often lack the necessary skills and resources to effectively enforce the law, including transportation.(11) Research also indicates that some law enforcement officials in regional offices do not have copies of existing child labor laws, and high turnover results in gaps of knowledge and enforcement capacity.(3, 14, 15) It is rare for cases involving child trafficking to be heard in court because prosecutors often have difficulty gathering evidence. Judges may be reluctant to impose fines or prison sentences for parents due to a fear of perpetuating the poverty that originally led them to violate child trafficking laws.(2, 6, 22) Although the Ministry of Justice investigated 101 individuals for human trafficking and found 60 individuals guilty, it is not known how many of these cases were related to children.(41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee for the Prohibition and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CDN)	Coordinate and oversee all government efforts to combat child labor, including the approval of all action plans for the abolition of child labor.(8, 14) Raise awareness, promote child labor legislation, and collect data.(3) Led by CELTE, the CDN includes 13 ministries, NGOs, and private sector organizations combating child labor.
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Cell (formerly CNARSEVT)	Coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking, including by rescuing and referring victims to shelters for social services and reintegration.(2, 8, 11, 14) Compile statistics on human trafficking and serve as the point of contact for repatriated child victims.(22) Comprises representatives from five ministries and chaired by MOL's Committee for Social Reintegration of Children.(11, 14) In 2016, expanded its scope to include adults and changed its name from the National Committee for the Reception and Social Reinsertion of Trafficked Children.(22)
Local Vigilance Committees	Raise awareness at the community level through Child Protection Committees and Local Committees Against Child Trafficking located throughout Togo. Committees identify child victims or children at risk and share information on human trafficking trends and prevention efforts with the MASPFA, which enforces laws regarding child labor.(8, 22)

Although the 2007 Children's Code provided for a coordinating body to implement the Children's Code and oversee the promotion and protection of children's rights in Togo, including by strengthening the legal framework, it has yet to be created.(29) Although some Local Vigilance Committees were very active during the reporting period, those that lacked regular engagement with the Government were less effective.(22) Research was unable to determine whether any coordinating bodies met in 2016 or whether they carried out any activities.(14)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Employment Policy (2013–2017)	Aims to eliminate child labor, build the capacity of the labor inspectorate, and increase vocational training and apprenticeship opportunities in support of the Decent Work Program.(13, 42, 43) Includes a pilot cash transfer program for 8,000 vulnerable children.(42) The accompanying Strategic Plan on Youth Employment (PSNEJ) aims to reduce children's early entry into the labor force by retaining them in school and improving the employability of older youth and their access to funding.(13, 43, 44)
Strategy to Increase Growth and Promote Employment (SCAPE) (2013–2017)	Serves as the primary national anti-poverty plan, which includes components on child labor and education.(8, 45)
Social Protection Policy of 2012	Aims to improve the employability of youth ages 15 to 17, prevent children from entering the labor force before the minimum working age, and promote decent work for youth. Aligned with SCAPE.(13)
Bilateral and Multilateral Agreements to Combat Child Trafficking	Quadripartite agreement among the Governments of Benin, Ghana, Niger, and Togo that works to prevent child trafficking along the countries' shared borders and facilitate the repatriation of trafficked children and the extradition of traffickers. Multilateral accords for West and Central Africa promote cooperation among regional states to combat child trafficking.(8, 19, 20) In 2016, funded and facilitated the repatriation of 99 Togolese victims of child trafficking from Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, and Nigeria, an increase of 79 repatriations from the 20 repatriated in 2015.(19)

In 2016, the Government co-drafted a Charter on Maritime Security and Development in Africa that aims to combat transnational crime, including child trafficking.(46, 47) Although the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Cell recognizes the need to create a new national action plan to combat human trafficking, it has yet to do so.(14, 22) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement any policy during the reporting period, and only policy documents specific to labor and social protection include indicators related to child labor.(13) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Sector Plan (2010–2020).(48)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010.(49) In 2016, established a National Domestic Workers' Trade Union that will combat child labor and protect domestic workers of legal working age.(50) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
World Bank-Funded Programs	Projects that combat child labor by improving social safety nets for vulnerable families and increasing access to education. Includes Togo Community Development and Safety Nets Project (2012–2017), a $14 million project that provided conditional cash transfers, school meals, and 346 primary school classrooms in the Kara and Savanes regions by the end of July 2016; Education and Institutional Strengthening Project 2 (2015–2018), a $27.8 million project that revised course textbooks for grades 1 and 2, provided teacher training, identified recipients of school grants, and selected 80 sites for promoting girls' education; and the Cash Transfer Program for Vulnerable Children in Northern Togo (2013–2017),† a $2.55 million project implemented by the MASPFA that provides conditional cash transfers in northern Togo.(51–55)
Plan International-Funded Projects	Projects that aim to support youth development. Includes Monitoring Children's Rights (2015–2018), a $393,000 Plan Sweden-funded, 3-year MASPFA project in support of SCAPE that aims to strengthen the institutional capacity of these organizations to better protect children in Benin, Burkina Faso, and Togo; and Gender-Sensitive and Violence-Free Education, a 3.5-year project co-funded by the Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency that aims to reduce violence in schools by eliminating corporal punishment and promoting children's rights in the Central and Plateau regions.(27, 56–58)
Shelters for Vulnerable Children†	Two MOL- and MASPFA-funded centers that provide temporary shelter and services for victims, including those referred by the Allo 1011 hotline.(2, 19, 23, 36) Victims may be transferred to NGO-run shelters for longer term support.(19)
National Fund for Inclusive Finance†	Government program that provides loans of up to $60 to women in rural areas of Northern Togo that aims to reduce the demand for income provided by engaging in child labor.(11, 59)
National Plan for Registering Births in Togo (2013–2017)†	Plan to increase documentation of births by simplifying the process, educating families on the importance of birth registration, and increasing accessibility to birth registration in rural areas.(14, 60) In 2016, distributed birth certificates with the assistance of Care International and a local NGO.(14)

† Program is funded by the Government of Togo.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(11, 60)

The scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, however, and the Government relies heavily on NGOs and international organizations for implementation.(6, 22) As a result, many of these interventions may not be sustainable over the long term.(11)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Togo (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing the inspectorate to assess penalties.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that both labor inspectors and investigators receive refresher courses.	2009 – 2016
	Publish information about the number and type of investigations conducted, penalties imposed and collected, prosecutions initiated, and convictions made.	2010 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors and ensure that they have sufficient resources, skills, and transportation to carry out their primary duties of inspection and monitoring labor laws throughout the country, including in the informal sector.	2009 – 2016
	Enforce penalties for labor violations according to the law.	2014 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Coordination	Ensure that coordinating bodies are functional and are able to implement their mandates to combat child labor as intended.	2009 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure that policies are implemented as intended and child labor indicators are included in all relevant policies.	2016
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Sector Plan.	2013 – 2016
Social Programs	Increase access to education by eliminating school-related fees; making additional efforts to provide all children with birth registration; ensuring that schools are free from sexual and physical violence; and increasing the number of schools, especially in rural areas.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that social protection programs to combat the worst forms of child labor are sufficient to address the scope of the problem and promote the long-term sustainability of project initiatives.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Tonga made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Tonga joined the International Labor Organization in February 2016. Although research is limited, there is evidence that some children are reportedly engaged in the worst forms of child labor, in forced domestic work. Gaps in the legal framework remain; the country has no laws specifying a minimum age for work or defining hazardous forms of work for children under age 18, leaving children unprotected from labor exploitation. The Government has not established a coordinating mechanism, policy, or program to address child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Tonga, reportedly, engage in the worst forms of child labor, in forced domestic work.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Tonga. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		110.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2) Forced domestic work (1, 2)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Tonga has ratified one key international convention concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Tonga

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Tonga's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No

Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No

* No conscription (8)

Tonga joined the International Labor Organization in February 2016.(10, 11)

The Parliament has yet to pass the Employment Relations Bill, which would establish a minimum age for non-hazardous and hazardous work and would prohibit the categorical worst forms of child labor. In addition, the Parliament has not determined the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.(12-14)

The Counter Terrorism and Transnational Organised Crime Act is insufficient because it does not specifically prohibit trafficking children domestically, nor does it criminally prohibit forced labor, debt bondage, and slavery, unless they involve human trafficking.(1, 6)

The Criminal Offences Act prohibits the procurement of women and girls under age 21 for prostitution but does not criminalize the procurement of boys for prostitution.(15) In addition, the Act does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, because the use of children under age 14 in the production of pornography is not criminally prohibited. The Act also does not specifically prohibit using children in illicit activities, particularly for producing and trafficking drugs.(7, 15, 16)

Although it does not appear that there are any laws that provide free basic education, there is a policy that sufficiently provides for free basic education to all children between the ages of 6 and 14.(17)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Commerce, Consumer, Innovation, and Labor	Enforce labor laws, including those relating to child labor and the worst forms of child labor.(18)
Tongan Police, Transnational Crime Unit, and Domestic Violence Unit	Enforce criminal laws relating to the worst forms of child labor.(14)
Ministry of Internal Affairs, Immigration Department	Collaborate with Tongan police and the Ministry of Commerce, Tourism, and Labor on the enforcement of criminal laws in cases in which foreign nationals are involved in the worst forms of child labor.(18)

Although the Ministry of Commerce, Consumer, Innovation, and Labor recognizes that more inspectors are needed to target sectors in which child labor is present, inadequate resources prevent it from doing so.(14, 19)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Tonga did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Although Tonga has no formal child labor legislation, business license inspectors look for children engaged in the worst forms of child labor during their inspections. If there is a specific complaint, then the Chief Labor Inspector visits the site, conducts an investigation, and requests police involvement if necessary.(14)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Tonga did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Tunisia

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Tunisia made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Law on the Prevention and the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, which provides a legal definition for human trafficking crimes, strengthens punishments for offenders, and contains provisions for support to victims. The Government's new National Commission on Trafficking in Persons planned and conducted a national anti-trafficking awareness campaign. Further, the Government launched a USDOL-funded four-year project entitled Project Tunisien Ensemble Contre le Travail des Enfants (PROTECTE) to support the implementation of Tunisia's Child Labor National Action Plan. Regarding enforcement, border officials at the Ministry of the Interior and judges and magistrates at the Ministry of Justice received training on the new anti-trafficking law. Also, the Government took steps to increase the budget of the Labor Inspectorate over the previous year. Children in Tunisia perform dangerous tasks in street work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in domestic work and seasonal agriculture, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The number of children dropping out of school, which may make them vulnerable to child labor, remains high. In addition, the law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are engaged in work in the informal sector, and the Government has not made information available on labor law and criminal law enforcement.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Tunisia perform dangerous tasks in street work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Tunisia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.0 (50,364)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	94.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	2.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		99.7

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011–2012.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (1-3, 5, 8-11)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (3)
Services	Domestic work (1-4, 9, 12, 13)
	Street work, including shining shoes, begging, vending, auto washing and repairing, and scavenging garbage† (1-3, 5, 8-10, 14)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking (4, 5, 10, 15, 16)
	Use in illicit activities, including stealing, smuggling, and drug trafficking (4, 5, 10, 14, 15)
	Forced labor in seasonal agriculture, activities unknown (13)
	Forced labor in domestic work and begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 10, 13, 15)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are engaged in child labor in the informal sector, predominantly in street work, including in vending and garbage scavenging.(13, 14) Child migrants from sub-Saharan countries and those fleeing conflict in Libya and Syria, as well as young girls from Tunisia's northwest region, are particularly vulnerable to human trafficking.(15) There were no reports in 2016 of forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.(10, 17)

Girls in Tunisia face additional barriers to education, including limited transportation options, security concerns while commuting, and parents prioritizing boys' education.(12, 18, 19) Students face barriers to education, especially in rural areas, in the form of lack of adequate transportation, household poverty, and religious customs.(3, 8, 10, 12, 18) As the Government has not conducted a National Child Labor Survey, research is lacking to determine the prevalence and sectoral distribution of child labor in Tunisia.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Tunisia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Tunisia's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Section 1 of the Law on Education (28)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 38 of the Constitution (29)

During the reporting period, Tunisia passed the Law on the Prevention and the Fight Against the Trafficking of Persons, which provides a legal definition for trafficking crimes, strengthens punishments for trafficking offenders, and contains provisions for support to victims.(24, 30, 31) The types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover street work, an activity in which there is evidence of children working in an unhealthy environment. Further, the Government acknowledges, as evident from the high rates of recidivism, that the fines and penalties for child labor law violations are not dissuasive.(32)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Affairs (MSA)	Conduct labor inspections and assess fines and penalties for infractions.(10, 20) Coordinate with the Ministry of Education to identify and provide support to children vulnerable to child labor.(10) Maintain a database of human trafficking victims and work with the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) to ensure that victims of human trafficking are not prosecuted for trafficking crimes.(33) Collaborate with the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Health to identify and provide support to children vulnerable to child labor.(10, 13, 16, 17)
Ministry of Women, Family, and Childhood	Through its Delegates for the Protection of Children, gather evidence and conduct investigations on child welfare cases, conduct needs assessments and intervention plans, and act as judicial police in cases of imminent danger to children.(17, 25)
Ministry of the Interior (MOI)	Investigate reports of child labor as a criminal violation, complaints that are outside of the labor inspectorate's mandate, including complaints in the informal sector.(14) Through its Child Protection Service in the National Police, address the commercial sexual exploitation of children and coordinate with MSA regarding violations.(10, 34) Through its Judicial Police, coordinate with MSA to refer cases of at-risk youth.(10, 17, 32, 35)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Coordinate anti-trafficking efforts and the criminal enforcement of child labor laws.(16)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Tunisia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2016, the Government increased the budget of the Labor Inspectorate by 9.2 percent over the previous year.(10) However, the Government also noted that the budget for fuel and transportation was inadequate to carry out inspections, especially in remote areas of the country.(10, 14)

Mechanisms do not exist to enforce the minimum age protections for children on inhabited premises such as private homes, without permission of the property owner or a court order.(10, 14, 20)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Tunisia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, border officials at the MOI and judges and magistrates at the Ministry of Justice received training on the new Law on the Prevention and the Trafficking of Persons, as well as training focused on the identification and treatment of vulnerable trafficking in persons victims.(10, 16, 30)

A referral mechanism exists between the Judicial Police at the MOI and social services at the MSA for at-risk youth, including victims of human trafficking, street work, and domestic work.(10, 17, 32, 35)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee for the Implementation of the Child Labor National Action Plan (NAP-TN)	Coordinate efforts to combat child labor. Led by MSA, includes membership of five other ministries and two unions, with support from ILO.(14, 37-39) In 2016, held a national seminar on child labor, during which the Child Labor National Action Plan was presented and explained to an audience of approximately 60 civil society members, government officials, international organizations, and members of the diplomatic community.(17)
National Commission on Trafficking in Persons†	Coordinate anti-human trafficking efforts and raise awareness of human trafficking issues. Include membership of 12 ministries, two members of civil society, one media representative and one member of the National Commission of Human Rights.(16, 17, 40) In 2016, the committee planned and conducted a national anti-trafficking awareness campaign, met several times to coordinate efforts to implement the Law on the Prevention and the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, and drafted a National Strategy Against Trafficking in Persons in Tunisia.(10, 16, 17, 41-43)

† Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Child Labor National Action Plan (2015–2020)	Aims to raise awareness, build the capacity of stakeholders, and encourage action from NGOs and the public.(14, 34, 37) In 2016, began implementation with the appointment of a high-level Government point of contact and consultations with ILO before activities begin.(44)
UNICEF Country Program Document (2015–2019)†	Aims to decrease dropout rates and improve education quality and access to early education, teach life skills to adolescents, and improve access to information to protect children against violence and economic exploitation. (45, 46) In 2016, the Government and UNICEF signed the second phase of the program, focusing on the support of social and health policies, reform of the education system, and child protection.(47)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2015–2017)	Aims to build the capacity of civil society to address human trafficking; boost public awareness of human trafficking; and train police, customs, and penitentiary officials to identify victims of human trafficking.(33, 48) In 2016, the MOJ launched a national awareness campaign called “Not for Sale,” in conjunction with IOM; campaign included several short films and dramatic reenactments depicting victims of trafficking, which were released on social media and national television and shared with stakeholders.(17, 41, 49)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, the National Commission on Trafficking in Persons, in cooperation with UNODC and Tunisian civil society representatives, drafted a national strategy against human trafficking in Tunisia, but the strategy has not been finalized.(17, 42)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects to Address Child Labor	USDOL projects in Tunisia aim to conduct research on child labor and strengthen Tunisia’s ability to implement its Child Labor National Action Plan, a multi-stakeholder effort involving government, business, and civil society. These projects include PROTECTE,* $3 million project implemented by the ILO; and the Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP), implemented in at least 10 countries by the ILO.(10, 14, 44, 50, 51) For additional information about USDOL’s work, please visit our website .

Program	Description
Support Efforts to Combat Human Trafficking (2014–2017)	USDOS-funded project implemented by IOM to carry out anti-human trafficking activities in collaboration with the Ministries of Justice; Interior; Social Affairs; and Women, Family, and Childhood. Includes three objectives: (a) build the capacity of relevant institutions and agencies to identify and assist victims of trafficking based on their individual needs; (b) strengthen cross-sector cooperation and the sharing of information through the implementation of a national referral mechanism; and (c) conduct an awareness-raising campaign to keep children in school and discourage illegal migration that could lead to human trafficking.(34) In 2016, continued the implementation of the SHARE II project. The steering committee held three meetings and a discussion on human trafficking issues with representatives of 11 sub-Saharan NGOs based in Tunisia. Also provided training for 37 migration focal points at the Tunisian Red Crescent on human trafficking issues and further participated in several seminars and workshops.(49)
Shelters and Services for Victims of Human Trafficking [†]	MSA operates shelters to serve victims of human trafficking, particularly children. Provides services that include lodging, food, clothing, psychological services, legal aid through a network of pro bono lawyers, and free medical care in collaboration with the Ministry of Health. Places unaccompanied children and adults in dedicated centers to receive schooling. In 2016, the Government trained shelter staff in Sfax and Sousse to provide service and care for human trafficking victims through a series of programs organized by IOM with a budget of $200,000 spanning September 2016–September 2017.(30, 33, 35, 52, 53)
Centers to Provide Aid to Victims of Child Labor [†]	The Government maintains 22 youth centers, with two additional youth centers under construction during the reporting period, and 67 child protection institutions that can serve up to 6,000 children engaged in child labor or vulnerable to child labor.(34, 54) In 2016, 19 Centers for Social Defense and Integration provided assistance to children who are homeless, have had trouble with the law, or experienced domestic trauma.(14) Centers for Social Protection provided material and moral support to vulnerable children.(14) Social and Educative Centers developed educational programs and activities for at-risk children.(14)
Programs to Reduce School Dropout Rates [†]	MOE-funded School Dropout Prevent Program maintains over 2,500 social protection units in schools and mobile units in rural areas to monitor students and prevent school dropout, covering 43% of all educational institutions. In 2016, the units supported 10,700 children at risk of dropout out of 14,800 total cases.(54) A separate UN WFP-funded program provides technical support to the MOE for a national school feeding program to reduce dropout rates in public primary schools, reaching 240,000 children in 2,500 schools.(55)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Tunisia.

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(17, 30, 56, 57)

Although Tunisia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(14)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Turkey

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Turkey made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In cooperation with the ILO and other partners, the Government continued to implement a project that provided services to more than 1,000 children working in commercial hazelnut production. It adopted a regulation to improve provision of education and other services to children of mobile seasonal agricultural workers. In addition, security forces established and provided training for 33 new units that will focus on crimes against women and children, including child trafficking. However, children in Turkey perform dangerous tasks in mobile seasonal work in agriculture and in street work. The Government does not have laws that protect children working in agricultural enterprises employing fewer than 50 workers. The Government made important progress in expanding access to education and other services for several hundred thousand Syrian refugee children, although increased economic hardship and limited work opportunities for adult refugees in urban areas left children at increased risk of exploitation in the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Turkey perform dangerous tasks in mobile seasonal agriculture and in street work.(1-24) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Turkey.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	6 to 14	2.6 (320,254)
Attending School (%)	6 to 14	92.4
Combining Work and School (%)	6 to 14	1.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		99.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(25)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Child Labor Survey, 2006.(26)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton, hazelnuts, citrus fruits, sugar beets, cumin, peanuts, pulses, apricots, melons, and cherries (1-19)
Industry	Production of furniture, bricks, shoes, leather goods, and textiles (9, 11, 16, 18, 20-22, 27-35) Auto repair† (9, 11, 27) Mining† (10, 36)
Services	Street work, including vending small items, carrying bundles in market areas, cleaning car windshields, collecting recyclable materials, and begging (9-11, 16, 18, 20-24, 27, 37, 38) Working in restaurants and small shops (20, 33)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (27, 39-41) Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (18)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Due to the seasonal nature of agricultural work throughout the country, children engaged in agricultural work often migrate with their families for up to seven months of the year. Significant numbers of these children have limited access to health care and education as a result of migration.(4, 7, 8, 12, 19, 27, 28)

Government and media reports indicated that the recruitment and use of children under age 18 by the Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK), a U.S.-designated terrorist organization, continued in 2016.(18) The current number of child soldiers in the PKK and other Kurdish militant groups remains unclear.

Credible academic, media, and other reports continued to suggest growing numbers of child laborers within the increasing Syrian refugee population during the reporting period. There were over 3 million refugees living in Turkey at the end of 2016.(18) Poverty and a lack of meaningful employment opportunities for many adults leave refugee children extremely vulnerable to exploitation in the worst forms of child labor.(19, 37, 38, 42-44) Syrian refugee children engaged in street begging, as well as manufacturing work such as the production of shoes, furniture, and textiles, often working long hours and earning wages as little as half of what an employer would pay an adult.(10, 11, 22, 29, 32-35) Syrian refugee and other children were also vulnerable to exploitation in the agriculture sector, where Syrian families tended to receive lower pay and live in worse conditions than Turkish workers.(12, 18, 19) Monitoring and collecting data on child labor in refugee communities remained a challenge.(10)

The Government continued to expand education for refugee children, reducing the number of Syrian refugee children not enrolled in school from an estimated 650,000 in 2015 to fewer than 345,000 in 2016.(11, 33, 45, 46) However, the barriers to education access for hundreds of thousands of Syrian refugee children who live in urban areas remain significant. Some schools for Syrian children charge informal tuition or other fees that many families are unable to afford.(11, 20, 33) Many Syrian children struggle to integrate into Turkish schools due to the language barrier and do not have access to accelerated Turkish language programs.(11) Many families have not received sufficient information on how to enroll their children in Turkish schools, and some schools refuse entry to Syrian children, despite national directives requiring that Syrian children be provided with education.(11)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Turkey has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Turkey's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor.

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 24 of the Constitution (34)

* No voluntary military service (54)

‡ Age calculated based on available information

In March 2016, the Ministry of National Education issued a regulation developed in consultation with the ILO that sets forth a process for closer monitoring of the children of mobile seasonal agricultural workers. Among other things, the regulation established monitoring boards in areas that are both sources of and destinations for seasonal workers.(18) Boards are tasked with providing direct services to children, monitoring school enrollment and attendance, and raising awareness among families. The government reported starting construction on 64 schools in 13 provinces to improve education access for the children of seasonal workers.(18)

Turkey's Labor Law excludes from coverage agricultural enterprises employing fewer than 50 workers, which are workplaces likely to employ children.(47) This gap in the law leaves children and other workers vulnerable to exploitative conditions without legal protection.(17, 27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Labor Inspection Board Presidency within the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOLSS)	Implement laws on child labor and hazardous child labor, including regulating work environments and conditions for children. Monitor the implementation of the Labor Law provisions in workplaces under its jurisdiction.(10) Conduct joint inspections with the Mentoring and Inspection Presidency to find children under legal working age who have dropped out of school, and direct them back into education.(10) Receive complaints about labor law violations, including child labor, via a hotline.(10)
Mentoring and Inspection Presidency Within MOLSS	Monitor compliance with laws related to social security of all workers, including child workers. Conduct joint inspections with the Labor Inspection Board Presidency to find children under legal working age who have dropped out of school and refer them to education services.(10)
Turkish National Police and Gendarmerie General Command (Jandarma)	Enforce the Penal Code, including criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(10, 55) The Gendarmerie General Command (Jandarma) enforces laws in rural areas that are outside of the jurisdiction of National Police.(18, 55)
Department for Protection of Victims of Human Trafficking within the Directorate General for Migration Management	Coordinate the identification of human trafficking victims, including victims of child trafficking.(41) Manage a hotline providing 24-hour, toll-free support in multiple languages for human trafficking victims.(43)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute cases of child labor and child exploitation.(10)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Turkey took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

† Data are from January 1, 2016, to November 30, 2016.

In 2016, the number of labor inspectors authorized to conduct inspections remained insufficient for the size of Turkey's workforce, which includes over 30 million workers. According to the ILO recommendation of 1 labor inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Turkey should employ approximately 1,960 labor inspectors.(56-58) Labor inspectors spend the first 3 years of their careers as assistant inspectors. They receive on-the-job training that includes modules to raise their awareness of child labor and of the legal provisions and enforcement mechanisms to address it.(54)

In 2016, employers who violated prohibitions were subject to administrative fines of approximately $430. Fine amounts are adjusted annually, but generally they are insufficient to deter violations.(18)

Although there is no formal referral mechanism, research found that children discovered to be working illegally during the course of inspections were referred for social services.(10, 54)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Turkey took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Enforcement of laws against child trafficking, particularly pertaining to identification of victims, was insufficient, although the Government continued to improve its victim-identification efforts.(38, 59) The Government reported a 68 percent increase in victims identified during the reporting period, compared to the previous year.(60)

In 2016, the Gendarmerie General Command (Jandarma) established, staffed, and provided two weeks of training for 33 specialized units on crimes against women and children, including child trafficking. By 2019, the Government plans to establish and staff one specialized Jandarma unit in every province.(18) During the reporting period, the Turkish National Police also created a new unit responsible for trafficking in persons.(60)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Labor Branch of the Employment Policies Directorate Within MOLSS	Coordinate all child labor programs and efforts of the Ministry of Education, the Child Services Directorate General in MFSP, the Ministry of the Interior, the Ministry of Justice, and NGOs.(10)
The Child Services Directorate General Within MFSP	Coordinate services for children living and working on the streets.(10)
Directorate General for Migration Management (DGMM)	Coordinate the implementation of migration law, including laws related to irregular migration, refugees, and human trafficking.(61, 62)
National Task Force on Combating Human Trafficking	Coordinate policy on human trafficking. Chaired by the DGMM, which plans to transition the task force to a national commission under the Ministry of Interior.(38, 41)

The National Steering Committee and Advisory Board on Child Labor were disbanded following the expiration of the Time-Bound National Policy and Program Framework for the Prevention of Child Labor in 2015. Research found that the Government intends to establish a new coordination mechanism in 2017 in concert with the finalization of the new National Program to Combat Child Labor.(18)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Rights Strategic Document and Action Plan (2013–2017)	Sets out the framework and actions for promoting services for children in fields such as health care and education.(63) Includes a section addressing child labor issues.(44, 54)
Second National Action Plan on Combating Human Trafficking	Outlines Turkey’s strategy for the prevention of human trafficking. Identifies children as an exceptionally vulnerable group and calls for special security precautions for children at shelters for victims, as well as increased international cooperation on preventing child trafficking.(43, 64)

Policy	Description
National Employment Strategy (2014–2023)	Aims to identify and solve labor market issues, with the goal of job creation and sustained economic growth. Includes the prevention of child labor, especially hazardous work in agriculture, as a focus of the plan, and advocates for increased access to education and strengthened social services as a means of preventing child labor.(65)
Tenth Development Plan (2014–2018)	Identifies Turkey's strategy and goals for economic development. Includes the priorities of alleviating child poverty and increasing equal opportunity in education.(66) Includes provisions for the prevention of the worst forms of child labor.(54)

The Government's primary child labor policy, the Time-Bound National Policy and Program Framework for the Prevention of Child Labor, expired in 2015. The MOLSS continued developing a replacement policy—the National Program to Combat Child Labor—during the reporting period, in consultation with the ILO and other stakeholders.(18) Although this new policy had not been finalized at the end of the reporting period, the Government indicated that it would prioritize addressing street work, work in small- and medium-sized enterprises, and seasonal migratory agriculture.(18)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Turkey funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Improving Social Integration and Employability of Disadvantaged Persons†	$34 million project jointly funded by the EU and the Government of Turkey. Aims to promote an inclusive labor market with opportunities for disadvantaged persons, with a view to their sustainable integration into the labor force.(67, 68) Also aims to combat all forms of discrimination in the labor market through service and grant components, including allocation of specific grant funds for projects targeting the Roma population.(18, 54, 67, 68) Includes the goal of combating child labor by supporting the entry of working children's parents into the labor market.(67, 68)
Piloting the USDA Guidelines in the Hazelnut Supply Chain in Turkey	$4.87 million USDOL-funded, 31-month project implemented by the Fair Labor Association, in partnership with Nestle and two of its main hazelnut suppliers, Olam-Progida and Balsu, in Turkey. Aims to pilot a sustainable program to implement the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Guidelines for Eliminating Child and Forced Labor in Agricultural Supply Chains in 1,000 hazelnut gardens in Duzce, Ordu, and Sakarya, with additional interventions implemented in the environs of Sanliurfa, the source of most seasonal migrant labor in Turkey.(69) In 2016, the project reached 107 families of seasonal agricultural workers and 284 children, 115 of whom were determined to be at risk and received social services.(18) The project engaged with 60 labor contractors, 97 local government representatives and community members, and 101 field owners to raise awareness about child labor.(69) The project also undertook company institutional surveys and worker demographic profiling to inform internal monitoring tools and procedures, as well as harvest remediation activities.(70)
Integrated Model for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Seasonal Agriculture in Hazelnut Harvesting (2012–2017)	ILO- and MOLSS-implemented project funded by the Association of Chocolate, Biscuit, and Confectionery Industries of Europe (CAOBISCO). Takes an integrated approach to preventing children from working by increasing access to education and improving living conditions of children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor in hazelnut harvesting, building capacity of local and national institutions to prevent child labor, and raising awareness among industry stakeholders and the public.(10) In 2016, the project reached 1,200 children, 1,015 of whom were removed from work or placed in school.(18)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research in Turkey.(71) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site.
Conditional Education and Health Care Assistance Program†	Government program that aims to reduce poverty through cash transfers.(72) Also provides milk to all primary school children and distributes books free of charge.(73)
Programs for Syrian Refugee Children	The Government has partnered with various international organizations and foreign governments to fund schools for Syrian refugee children and to provide Syrian refugee child laborers with additional educational and social services.(18)
Programs focused on Human Trafficking†	The EU funded two separate projects, both co-managed by the DGMM, to improve trafficking victim identification and protection through training and capacity-building.(41) The Government also funds shelters for human trafficking victims that provide social services and legal help to victims.(43, 54)

† Program is funded by the Government of Turkey.

Although programs exist to address child labor in the hazelnut sector, the Government generally lacks programs to address child labor in the other areas in which it was most prevalent, including other forms of mobile seasonal agriculture outside of the hazelnut sector, as well as in street work, and small and medium manufacturing enterprises.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Turkey (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law provides protections for children working in small agricultural enterprises.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure that the law explicitly criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 by non-state armed groups.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Publish information on the Labor Inspectorate's funding and on the number of violations found and penalties collected.	2015 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2014 – 2016
	Increase the penalties for violation of child labor laws to an amount sufficient to deter violations.	2014 – 2016
	Publish disaggregated data on the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to child trafficking.	2014 – 2016
	Ensure that laws prohibiting the trafficking of children are effectively enforced, including by taking sufficient steps to identify victims of child trafficking.	2015 – 2016
Policies	Adopt and implement the successor to the Time-Bound National Policy and Program Framework for the Prevention of Child Labor to address all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as street work, hazardous work in small- and medium-sized enterprises, and seasonal migratory agriculture.	2016
Social Programs	Continue to institute programs to increase access to education and health care for children working in mobile seasonal agriculture, particularly outside the hazelnut sector.	2014 – 2016
	Continue to expand the provision of affordable education to Syrian refugee children, including by enforcing national directives affording Syrian children access to the Turkish school system at the local level.	2014 – 2016
	Continue to expand programs to address child labor in the sectors in which it is most prevalent, including mobile seasonal agriculture, street work, and small and medium manufacturing enterprises.	2015 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
58. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Tuvalu made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued consultations on the draft Labor and Employment Relations Bill, with the aim of improving the law's compliance with international standards on child labor. Although research is limited and the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Tuvalu engage in child labor in fishing. The Government lacks data on the enforcement of child labor laws, and the legal framework has gaps that leave children vulnerable to engagement in hazardous work and other worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited and the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Tuvalu engage in child labor in fishing. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Tuvalu. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		97.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(4)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Fishing, activities unknown (1-3)

Tuvalu lacks data to determine the prevalence and nature of child labor, including its worst forms, in the country.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Tuvalu has ratified one key international convention concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Tuvalu's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation

[‡] Age calculated based on available information (6)

Tuvalu's Employment Act does not clearly establish 18 as the minimum age for hazardous work in accordance with international standards.(6) The Government continued consultations on the draft Labor and Employment Relations Bill, which reportedly includes provisions to bring national legislation into compliance with international standards on the worst forms of child labor, but the law was not adopted during the reporting period.(12)

Tuvalu's laws do not sufficiently prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children, as use, procuring, and offering of boys ages 15 through 17 is not criminally prohibited.(7, 13) In addition, laws do not specifically criminalize the use, procuring, or offering of a child for pornography or pornographic performances.(7, 14) Although the law criminalizes the procurement of children younger than 15 for unlawful and immoral purposes, it fails to criminalize the use, procuring, or offering of all children under 18 for illicit activities, such as the production and trafficking of drugs.(7) Child trafficking is prohibited in Tuvalu; however, the law prescribes a harsher punishment for individuals involved in the trafficking of adults than for those involved in the trafficking of children.(9) Laws do not prohibit recruiting children under 18 into non-state armed groups.

Laws do not ensure free basic education in Tuvalu, but there is a policy that sufficiently provides for free basic education.(15-18)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that law enforcement agencies in Tuvalu took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor	Enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor.(12)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Tuvalu did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Tuvalu did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The National Advisory Committee on Children, chaired by the Ministry of Education, is responsible for coordinating general children's issues across government agencies and monitoring the Government's efforts to fulfill its commitments under the UN CRC.(19) Research found no evidence that the Committee functions as a coordinating mechanism to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Policies Related to Child Labor[‡]

Policy	Description
Free Education Policy	Establishes free basic education for children ages 6 through 13.(15-17)

[‡] The Government has other policies which may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(15, 21, 22)

Research did not find evidence that the Government has integrated child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Free Education Policy or the UNDAF for the Pacific Region.(23, 24)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program	ILO-implemented program that aims to strengthen Tuvalu's labor laws, support the ratification of ILO C. 182, and improve data collection on child labor.(25, 26)
Education for All Program	Australian Government-funded program to improve access to quality education in Tuvalu. Objectives include increasing capacities in education planning and administration, teacher training, and early grade literacy.(17)
Government Vocational Training Programs [†]	Government-funded programs that provide vocational training to children who have finished compulsory primary education. These programs include the Ministry of Education's Community Post-Primary Vocational Programs, which serve children in the outer islands, and the High School Vocational Training Program at Motufoua Secondary School, which provides vocational training to students starting at year 13.(17)

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Tuvalu.

Research found no evidence of programs to specifically address child labor in the fishing sector.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Uganda made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved the Children (Amendment) Act, which criminalizes the use of children for commercial sexual exploitation, and launched a National Social Protection Policy that targets child laborers. The labor inspectorate conducted 220 inspections, an increase from 45 inspections in 2015. The Anti-Human Trafficking National Taskforce conducted awareness campaigns in communities vulnerable to child trafficking. In addition, the Government expanded its cash transfer program to an additional five districts to allow more children to stay in school. However, children in Uganda are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the mining of gold and commercial sexual exploitation. Inadequate funding, training, and resources hamper the capacity of law enforcement agencies to conduct child labor inspections and investigations. Gaps in the legal framework persist, including contradicting laws regulating the minimum age for employment.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Uganda engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the mining of gold and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Uganda.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	30.9 (3,034,126)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	88.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Use in the production of pornography (32)
	Use in illicit activities, including smuggling, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6, 12, 14, 33)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children from the Karamoja region are trafficked and willingly migrate to Kampala where they engage in begging, street vending, domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 8, 14, 17) In some cases, Ugandan children have been trafficked to East African countries for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in agriculture.(8)

Although the law provides for free, compulsory education, the cost of school supplies, uniforms, and other materials often prohibits children from attending school.(2, 34-36) Furthermore, research found that children often experience physical and sexual abuse at school by teachers and classmates.(32, 36)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Uganda has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Uganda's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

* No conscription (43)

‡ Age calculated based on available information

In 2016, the Government approved the Children (Amendment) Act, which establishes 16 as the minimum age for work and criminalizes use of a child for commercial sexual exploitation.(37) The Government is developing implementing regulations for the Act and is reviewing the Employment Act, which sets the minimum age for work at 14.(44) The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working without a formal employment relationship.(38)

Children in Uganda are required to attend school only up to age 13. This standard makes children ages 13 to 15 vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work.(34)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Gender, Labor, and Social Development (MGLSD)	Enforce labor laws throughout the country.(29) The Child Labor Unit works with partners to implement national awareness campaigns and serves as a resource to labor inspectors, including occupational safety and health inspectors.(45) The Industrial Court makes judgments on labor dispute cases, which are referred to the court by labor officers.(12)
Ministry of Internal Affairs	Enforce criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.(46) The Uganda Police Force's Child and Family Protection Unit (CFPU) investigates forced labor cases, the Special Investigations Division and the Anti-Human Trafficking Desk investigate cases related to human trafficking and the use of children in illicit activities, and the Sexual Offenses Desk investigates commercial sexual exploitation.(12) Liaison officers handle child labor complaints and overall child protection issues at police posts that do not have a CFPU officer.(46) The Immigration Department assists in identifying potential human trafficking victims.(47)
Ministry of Local Government	Oversee district labor officers who refer cases to the Industrial Court.(12) Deploy community development officers at the district level when district labor officers are not available.(29)
Directorate of Public Prosecutions in the Ministry of Justice and Constitutional Affairs	Prosecute criminal cases related to the worst forms of child labor that are referred by the Uganda Police Force.(45)

In 2016, the Industrial Court did not hear any child labor cases; research found that coordination among the various agencies responsible for child labor law enforcement remained an issue because labor officers are under the district governments' authority instead of the Ministry of Gender, Labor, and Social Development (MGLSD).(44) The Industrial Court, however, is advocating for MGLSD to supervise district labor officers with the hope that it will increase the number of child labor case referrals.(12) The Industrial Court remains limited in its ability to hear labor dispute cases due to the low number of judges.(14, 44)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Uganda took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Uganda's workforce, which includes over 19 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Uganda should employ roughly 476 inspectors.(32, 49-51) Enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the lack of resources for inspections.(32)

During the reporting period, inspectors carried out child labor-specific inspections on 10 infrastructure projects.(32) Labor inspectors refer children found during inspections to NGOs for temporary shelter and support services.(32) Officials withdrew 11 children from work in gold mines and stone quarries as a result of labor inspections. The children were reunited with their families.(32)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Uganda took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

According to the Government, there is not a sufficient number of criminal law enforcement officials responsible for investigating child labor, including its worst forms.(12) Training is insufficient, and some criminal law enforcement officials were not aware of key human trafficking laws, and some police officers did not understand the evidence needed to prosecute child labor cases.(8, 12, 33)

Research found that street children, including potential human trafficking victims, are routinely arrested and detained by police. Some of these children are held for up to 3 months at a MGLSD juvenile detention center before they are returned to their families.(6, 8) Although children received food, medical treatment, and other services, some children were required to clean the detention facilities.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on the Elimination of Child Labor	Coordinate child labor issues and implement the National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Led by MGLSD and includes members from several ministries, trade unions, development organizations, civil society, and media agencies.(53)
Stop Child Labor Partners Forum	Coordinate, monitor, and evaluate child labor-related programs and policies in Uganda. Led by the National Council for Children (NCC), with representatives from several ministries, CFPU, and civil society groups.(53)
Coordination Office to Combat Trafficking in Persons (COCTIP)	Coordinate, monitor, and oversee implementation of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act.(29)
Anti-Human Trafficking National Taskforce	Coordinate government efforts on human trafficking. Led by COCTIP, includes 30 members from government agencies and civil society.(53, 54) In 2016, the taskforce conducted awareness campaigns in communities vulnerable to child trafficking.(31)
National Child Protection Working Group	Monitor the quality of services provided to orphans and vulnerable children. Led by MGLSD, includes members from five government agencies and civil society organizations.(12)
NCC's Inter-Ministerial Coordination Mechanism	Work to ensure that member organizations integrate child labor concerns into their policies and budgets. Members include 10 government agencies.(12)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor†

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012/2013–2016/2017)	Aims to reduce the worst forms of child labor in Uganda by 2017.(4) In 2016, the Government worked with the ILO to develop implementation guidelines for district labor offices. The Government also began reviewing the plan in preparation of its expiration.(44)
National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking	Guides the Government's efforts to combat human trafficking.(55)
National Social Protection Policy	Aims to reduce poverty and socioeconomic inequalities for inclusive development by targeting vulnerable people, including child laborers.(56)

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Girls' Education in Uganda (2015–2019)	Promotes girls' education and identifies child labor, particularly domestic work, as a key barrier to girls' access to education.(57)

‡ The Government has other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(58–60)

Research found that implementation of the National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor remains limited due to limited resources.(44)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	Country-Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor Project (CLEAR) (2013–2017), implemented by the ILO in 11 countries; and African Youth Empowerment and Development Initiative (AYEDI) (2013–2017), $3 million project implemented by World Education, Inc.(61, 62) For additional information about USDOL's work, please visit our Web site .
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2017)	ILO-implemented program that outlines strategies for promoting decent work in Uganda. Priorities include youth employment and improved social protection for both formal and informal workers; also includes a focus on the prevention and elimination of the worst forms of child labor.(63)
Combating Child Labor in Tobacco Growing (2015–2018)	Eliminating Child Labor in Tobacco Growing Foundation-funded program implemented by the ILO that improves the capacity of the Government and social partners to develop and implement policies to combat child labor in agriculture.(64, 65)
Realizing Livelihood Improvement Through Savings and Education	NGO-implemented program in partnership with the Government that provides technical assistance and capacity building to the MGLSD and National Steering Committee on the Elimination of Child Labor.(32)
Uganda Social Assistance Grants for Empowerment [†]	$49 million, donor and Government-funded project implemented by MGLSD that provides direct income support of approximately $8 per month to poor and vulnerable households in 24 districts to allow children to stay in school.(12, 53)
Youth Venture Capital Fund [‡]	Government program that aims to reduce youth unemployment through enterprise development, job creation, and business skills training.(12)

† Program is funded by the Government of Uganda.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(17, 66, 67)

Although Uganda has programs that address child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Uganda (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2013 – 2016
	Harmonize provisions related to the minimum age for work in the Children (Amendment) Act and Employment Act.	2016
	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children who do not work under a formal employment relationship.	2016
	Ensure that the law requires free, compulsory education up to age 16 so that it is commensurate with the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2016
Enforcement	Ensure coordination between MGLSD and the Ministry of Local Government so that labor dispute cases are referred to the Industrial Court. Also ensure that the Industrial Court has a sufficient number of judges.	2015 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Publish information on the number of child labor violations found, number of penalties imposed, number of penalties collected, routine targeted inspections, as well as training for criminal law enforcement officials, the number of criminal investigations conducted, and violations found.	2013 – 2016
	Increase the number of labor inspectors to provide sufficient coverage of the workforce.	2009 – 2016
	Ensure sufficient funding, training, and resources for law enforcement agencies so that child labor inspections and investigations can be properly conducted.	2013 – 2016
	Develop mechanisms for referring street children, including potential human trafficking victims, to social services, and prevent these children from being detained by the police.	2015 – 2016
Government Policies	Ensure that sufficient resources are provided to the National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor to allow adequate implementation.	2015 – 2016
Social Programs	Ensure that all children are able to attend school regardless of their ability to purchase school materials. Ensure that students are protected from physical and sexual abuse by teachers and classmates.	2012 – 2016
	Expand existing social programs to address the scope of the child labor problem, particularly in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Ukraine made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Ukraine is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a law that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Ukraine enacted legislation in 2014 that effectively imposed a moratorium on labor inspections. While inspections resumed during the reporting period, legislation requiring Cabinet of Ministers approval to conduct an inspection of businesses with an annual income less than $750,000 continued to restrict enforcement of labor laws.

Otherwise, the Government made efforts by enacting legislation criminally prohibiting the use of children in armed conflict and approving a new concept for a National Action Plan on child protection that includes a component on the worst forms of child labor. Children in Ukraine perform dangerous tasks in street work and engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of pornography. The age of consent for sexual relationships is not clearly defined, and law enforcement officials lack training on the treatment of victims of commercial sexual exploitation, which puts child victims at risk of prosecution. In addition, national policies related to child labor lack sufficient funding for effective implementation. Ukraine's armed conflict with Russian-backed separatists in the east of the country continued, which negatively impacted the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ukraine perform dangerous tasks in street work.(1-3) Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation in the production of pornography.(1, 2, 4, 5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ukraine.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.4 (182,714)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	96.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	5.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		110.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2012.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (1-3, 8)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (1, 9, 10)
	Mining, [†] including loading, transporting, and sorting coal, and extracting amber (3, 11, 12)
Services	Street work, including distributing advertising leaflets, sales activities in kiosks, and begging (1-3)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Use in the production of pornography (1, 2, 4, 5)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 9, 10, 13, 14)
	Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (15-20)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 9, 10, 14, 21)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Ukraine

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Ukraine's armed conflict with Russian-backed separatists in the east of the country continued. A continued policy focus on national security, as well as budget cuts associated with the conflict, negatively impacted the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.(3) The conflict in eastern Ukraine has created more than 1.7 million internally displaced persons (IDPs), including more than 190,000 children.(8, 22, 23) The inability of many IDP families to access adequate shelter and available social benefits puts children at increased risk of exploitation in the worst forms of child labor.(24) In particular, the Ministry of Social Policy (MSP) noted an increased vulnerability to both domestic and international human trafficking among the IDP community, and there have been reports of kidnapping of girls from conflict-affected areas for commercial sexual exploitation and labor exploitation.(10, 20, 21) Displaced individuals from the Roma community, an estimated 10 percent of whom lack identity documentation, have experienced difficulty registering as IDPs, preventing Roma IDPs from accessing assistance and putting Roma children at an even greater risk of exploitation.(25-27) An estimated 10,000 Roma people have been displaced by the conflict.(28)

Ukraine is a destination and transit country for refugees from Afghanistan, Somalia, and Syria. Refugees lacked access to state-run children's shelters, had no formal means of acquiring food and other assistance from the Government, and experienced heightened vulnerability to child trafficking.(8)

During the reporting period, children continued to take part in active combat as part of Russian-backed militant groups. Recruitment of children by militant groups accelerated and took place primarily on territory not under the control of the central Government and in areas where the Government was unable to enforce national prohibitions against the use of children in armed conflict.(3, 20) Russian-backed militants employed children as soldiers, informants, and human shields during the reporting period.(3, 20)

Children from Ukraine are trafficked both transnationally and domestically for commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging.(14, 21) Homeless, orphaned, and poor children, especially those living in state-run institutions, are at high risk of being trafficked and are targeted by recruiters for child pornography.(2, 8, 13, 14)

Although Ukraine's Constitution and Law on General Secondary Education guarantee free universal education, due to discrimination by school administrators, Roma children are sometimes denied access to education, placed in segregated schools exclusively for Roma children, or erroneously placed in special education schools(8, 29, 30) A source reported that the municipal governments in Ukraine were ineffective in compelling school administrators to enroll Roma children who had been unfairly denied access to school.(27)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ukraine has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Ukraine's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 188 of the Labor Code; Article 150 of the Criminal Code; Article 21 of the Law on the Protection of Childhood (31-33)

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 53 of the Constitution of Ukraine; Article 2 of the Law on General Secondary Education (35, 41)

[‡] Age calculated based on available information (41)

In 2016, the Government amended the Law on the Protection of Childhood to criminally prohibit the use of children in hostilities and armed conflict, as well as to codify the central and local governments' responsibilities to protect and provide services to children affected by war and armed conflict.(3, 33)

Research found that children in vocational training programs for hazardous occupations are permitted to perform hazardous work for less than 4 hours a day, beginning at age 14, as long as occupational health and safety standards are met, although the international minimum age for entering hazardous vocational training is 16.(1, 42)

Although the Criminal Code prohibits commercial exploitation of children, it does not specifically define an age of consent for sexual relations, which has contributed to the prosecution of children ages 16 and 17 for the crime of prostitution.(1)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Organization/Agency	Role
State Labor Service (SLS) within the Ministry of Social Policy (MSP)	Enforce labor laws, including laws on child labor, by conducting inspections.(15)
Department on Adoption and Children's Rights Protection within the MSP	Identify children involved in the worst forms of child labor, most of whom are in the informal sector.(1, 9)
National Police	Enforce criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking.(15)
State Migration Service	Assist refugees and migrants in need in the country, including victims of human trafficking.(1, 43)
State Border Guards Services	Protect the country's borders and identify cases of human trafficking.(43)
Office of the Ombudsman for Children's Rights	Monitor protection of the rights of children and fulfillment of international obligations to protect children's rights, including preventing child labor. Coordinate the development of laws on child protection.(44) Inform the public of children's rights.(44)
National Referral Mechanism (NRM)	Identify victims of human trafficking, including children, and refer victims to appropriate government agencies for assistance and the provision of services. Led by the MSP.(10)

As part of a long-term program of criminal law enforcement reform, the Government established a new police force in July 2015.(45) The new police force was subject to continued reform in 2016.(15)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Ukraine took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Although the budget for the State Labor Service (SLS) is unknown, a source reported that funding levels were inadequate. As in 2015, due to inadequate funding, some inspectors worked as little as 1 week per month during the reporting period, and insufficient funding for supplies, such as vehicles and fuel, negatively impacted the quality of inspections.(3) In 2016, the Government authorized an increase in the number of labor inspectors employed. However, of the 747 positions authorized, only 510 inspectors were employed in 2016.(3) The SLS reported that an insufficient number of labor inspectors hampered the SLS's capacity to enforce child labor laws.(3) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 20,000 workers in transitioning economies, Ukraine should employ roughly 902 labor inspectors.(46-48)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In addition, although regulations require that new labor inspectors receive an initial training, training for new inspectors has not been conducted since 2012.(3)

During the reporting period, the SLS was no longer required to request approval from the Cabinet of Ministers before conducting any inspection not connected to a criminal investigation, as it was in the first half of 2015.(15, 49, 50) However, legislation continued to require that the SLS seek approval from the Cabinet of Ministers to conduct an inspection of any business with an annual income of less than $750,000 throughout the reporting period. The Government estimates that about 80 percent of businesses are covered under this provision, which remained in force through the end of 2016.(50, 51)

The SLS reported that fines established for labor infractions, which range from $35 to $115, remain too low to serve as effective deterrents.(1, 3, 15, 52)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Ukraine took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the IOM supported training for 611 police officers and social workers on combating child trafficking and victim referral. An additional 77 prosecutors and judges also received training on victim identification and interagency cooperation in combating human trafficking.(3)

In 2016, criminal law enforcement authorities prosecuted three criminal cases of child trafficking and three cases of engaging children in prostitution. During 2016, law enforcement agencies prosecuted 13 criminal cases on forced begging, achieving 9 convictions.(3) However, the Government also prosecuted 18 children as offenders for involvement in prostitution.(3) Concerns have also been raised that the training of judges is not adequately sensitive to the situation of child trafficking victims who may have been used to commit crimes while being trafficked.(1) Data on child trafficking and other crimes related to labor exploitation of children are not disaggregated from overall law enforcement statistics; therefore, full data on the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions were unavailable.(13)

Children who are discovered to be in dangerous situations during the course of criminal investigations are referred to the MSP system of Shelters and Centers for Socio-Psychological Rehabilitation of Children.(1)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Ukraine

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Social Policy (MSP)	Lead the Government's efforts to combat child labor and human trafficking, including by drafting legislation and government regulations on these issues.(1, 13)
Interagency Council on Family, Gender Equality, Demographic Development, Prevention of Violence in the Family, and Counter-Trafficking Issues	Coordinate efforts to address the worst forms of child labor, including the trafficking of children. Chaired by the MSP. Members include representatives from the Ministries of Justice, Education, Security, Health, and Foreign Affairs; and from international and local NGOs.(1, 53)
Interagency Working Group to Protect the Rights of Civilians, Including Women and Children, During the Anti-Terrorist Operation in the Eastern Regions of Ukraine	Protect Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) and other civilians from the negative consequences of the ongoing military operations in Ukraine, including the increased rates of domestic and transnational human trafficking. Established by the MSP, members include representatives from the Secretariat of the Verkhovna Rada Commissioner for Human Rights, the Authorized Representative of the President of Ukraine for Children's Rights, and other government agencies and NGOs.(24)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan (NAP) to Implement the UN CRC (2010–2016)	Aims to protect children, including from labor exploitation, through raising awareness, rehabilitating victims found in the worst forms of child labor, providing access to education, and creating a child labor monitoring system.(1, 43, 54) In 2016, the Government adopted an Action Plan for 2016 to operationalize this plan, which devolved responsibility for child labor inspections to local authorities.(3)
State Program for Countering Human Trafficking (2016–2020)	Guides the work of the National Coordinator on Combating Human Trafficking and contains specific actions and timetables for preventing, protecting, and prosecuting human trafficking crimes.(21)
USAID Country Development Cooperation Strategy (2012–2016)	Aims to support the development of democratic practices, economic growth and development, and increased integration into European structures. Includes a special objective on countering trafficking in persons that involves piloting an NRM for victims of human trafficking and improving methods for rehabilitation and reintegration of victims, including children.(55)

A lack of sufficient funding hampers the ability of ministries to implement actions called for under the National Action Plan (NAP) to Implement the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and the State Program for Countering Human Trafficking.(1, 10) Research found that, although the Action Plan for 2016 required local governments to enforce child labor laws, the Government did not provide local governments with sufficient staff, personnel, or operational authority to conduct satisfactory child labor inspections.(3)

In 2016, the Government developed a concept for a new NAP to Implement the UN CRC for 2017–2020, because the previous iteration of this policy expired at the end of the reporting period. The concept justifies the need for a new NAP and identifies priorities in the area of child protection, including improving measures to combat the worst forms of child labor and increasing coordination between government agencies and NGOs.(3, 56, 57)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project that aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research in Ukraine.(58) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .

Program	Description
Shelters and Centers for Socio-Psychological Rehabilitation of Children†	MSP-operated program to provide protection in 10 short-term shelters and 76 long-term rehabilitation centers for children in need, including street children. Short-term shelters provide accommodation for up to 90 days, and rehabilitation centers offer accommodation for up to 12 months.(1, 10, 13, 21, 24) The rehabilitation centers also provide regular social, medical, psychological, and other types of services for non-residents.(10, 21) In 2016, shelters and centers provided services to 5,762 children.(20)
Centers for Social Services for Family, Youth, and Children†	Government-run program to provide services for victims of human trafficking, among other populations in need. In 2016, the number of shelters available to assess victims' needs and draft rehabilitation plans increased from 656 to 692.(1, 21)
Multiplication of the Anti-Trafficking National Referral Mechanism in Ukraine†	Joint program by the MSP and the OSCE to train officials in several regions of Ukraine to identify and provide services to trafficking victims. Involves collaborative work among local agencies and non-governmental partners.(13) During the reporting period, the Government took steps to build the capacity of the NRM, including training more than 1,000 local officials.(3)
Countering Trafficking in Persons Project (2004–2018)	USAID-funded project implemented by the IOM; aims to reduce trafficking in persons by building the capacity of Ukrainian institutions to address the problem by strengthening the NRM and increasing government funding for counter-trafficking efforts.(59) Through the NRM, the Government granted victim status to 110 individuals during the reporting period.(20)
UNICEF Country Program (2012–2016)	Aims to decrease social exclusion and disparities affecting children and ensure that socially excluded children benefit from quality health care and social services.(60)

† Program is funded by the Government of Ukraine.

Ukraine has a variety of service providers for victims of human trafficking; however, the MSP must confer the official status of “victim of trafficking” on child trafficking victims in order for them to access available government services.(10, 13, 21) Research found that delays in this practice often result from the insufficient provision of documentation to the MSP by local administrations.(10, 13, 21)

Although the MSP provides services for children in shelters and social-psychological rehabilitation centers, the current availability of shelters and trained personnel is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem.(61) The Centers for Social Services for Family, Youth, and Children have historically experienced a large turnover of staff due to an excessive workload and low pay.(62) In addition, the centers remain understaffed after budget cuts enacted in 2014 resulted in the layoff of 12,000 social workers.(63) This continued to restrict the centers in their ability to efficiently address the main needs of human trafficking victims in 2016. Likewise, high turnover in the regions, where local agencies are responsible for identifying trafficking victims under the NRM, has hampered the provision of services to victims.(13)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ukraine (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws prohibit all children under age 16 from working in hazardous occupations during vocational training.	2011 – 2016
	Ensure that laws treat children ages 16 and 17 as victims of commercial sexual exploitation rather than as offenders.	2012 – 2016
Enforcement	Increase the budget of the SLS, in order to increase the number of inspectors, and make information on the budget publicly available.	2011 – 2016
	Provide labor inspectors with appropriate training, including by conducting required initial trainings and institutionalizing periodic refresher training for all inspectors, and provide them with the resources required to carry out inspections, such as adequate transportation and fuel.	2011 – 2016
	Address legal provisions that have created obstacles to conducting labor inspections, and ensure that inspectors have sufficient ability to conduct both complaint-based and targeted inspections of all businesses, including unannounced inspections.	2014 – 2016

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Ensure that fines imposed for violations of child labor laws are sufficient to effectively deter employers from violating child labor laws.	2013 – 2016
	Ensure that judges treat children who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation and other worst forms of child labor as victims and not as offenders.	2013 – 2016
	Track and make data on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and implemented penalties related to violations of all criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor publicly available.	2014 – 2016
Government Policies	Provide sufficient funds to implement the National Program for Combating Trafficking and the NAP, including implementing the mandated child labor monitoring system.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that all IDPs are aware of the resources available to them and that internally displaced and refugee children are able to access adequate shelter and receive available social benefits, regardless of their ethnicity.	2014 – 2016
Social Programs	Develop programs to facilitate access to education for Roma children and ensure that municipal governments are effective in holding schools accountable for discrimination against Roma children.	2010 – 2016
	Ensure that all children who are victims of human trafficking are able to access government services available for victims. Ensure that all reasonable efforts are made to obtain needed documentation when considering whether to grant trafficking victim status to children.	2013 – 2016
	Increase the number of shelters and socio-psychological rehabilitation centers for children and the number of trained personnel staffing these shelters, in order to fully meet the demand for their services. Provide sufficient funding to return the number of social workers to the level prior to budget cuts.	2013 – 2016
	Take steps to reduce turnover in the Centers for Social Services for Family, Youth, and Children and in local agencies that are part of the National Referral Mechanism to ensure that victims of human trafficking are provided with the services they require.	2012 – 2016

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Uruguay made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Committee to Prevent and Fight Trafficking in Persons presented a draft of a comprehensive anti-trafficking law to the Parliament and began updating the hazardous work list for children. However, children in Uruguay also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in garbage scavenging and recycling, as well as commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Government does not collect or publish comprehensive labor and criminal law enforcement statistics or implement sufficient programs to prevent and eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Uruguay engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in garbage scavenging and recycling, and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-14) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Uruguay.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	6.1(31,955)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	97.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	6.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		103.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(15)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Encuesta Nacional de Trabajo Infantil (MTI), 2009.(16)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Uruguay

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In Uruguay, more than 60 percent of employed children ages 15–17 are engaged in hazardous work.(24) Children from rural areas and of Afro descent are more likely to be engaged in work, particularly hazardous work.(1, 25, 26) These children are also subjected to discrimination in the education system and have high secondary school dropout rates.(17, 26).

Child labor is also found in recycling and garbage sorting and scavenging. Approximately 20,000 children work with their parents in recycling activities derived from collecting and sorting garbage.(19, 27) Some of these children were found to be living in unsanitary and unhealthy conditions—with more than 70 percent of them living in chronic poverty.(5, 19)

Children in Uruguay are also victims of commercial sexual exploitation, especially in tourist areas and near the borders with Argentina and Brazil.(2-4, 6) In 2016, the National Committee for the Eradication of Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONAPEES) reported an average of almost 300 cases of commercial sexual exploitation per year.(13) Children in Uruguay are also used to transport drugs.(13, 28)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Uruguay has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Uruguay's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

[‡] Age calculated based on available information (11, 39-41)

Education is compulsory in Uruguay from ages 4 to 17, if the student does not fall behind.(11, 39, 41) Although the Institute for Adolescents and Children (INAU) may grant permission to children ages 13 to 15 to engage in light work, neither the occupations that constitute light work, nor the hours and conditions in which this work can be undertaken, have been defined by Uruguayan law.(23, 29) Uruguayan law prohibits children under age 18 from engaging in hazardous work—including agricultural work—but only establishes penalties for employer violations related to underage hazardous work in the agricultural sector.(29, 31, 32)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS)	Monitor the overall enforcement of labor laws and compliance with labor regulations, and issue penalties for violations. Responsible for the legal protection of workers, including identifying locations and conditions in which child labor may occur.(5, 19, 46-48). Refers child labor cases to the Institute for Adolescents and Children (INAU) for follow-up.(13)
Institute for Adolescents and Children (INAU)	Lead government efforts to assist children, including those employed in the informal sector.(2, 49) Enforce and implement policies to prevent child labor and provide training on child labor issues.(48) Evaluate permit requests and grant work permits. Support child welfare and protection, and coordinate services for children found in child labor.(5, 19, 48, 50) Work with the MTSS and the National Insurance Bank to investigate child labor complaints, and with the Ministry of the Interior (MOI) to prosecute cases when legal violations are found.(51)
MOI	Investigate all organized crimes, including child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in narcotics operations. Gather evidence for a judge to make a ruling.(3, 51, 52)
Specialized Court for Organized Crime	Mandate police investigations for cases related to organized crime. Operated by two judges in Montevideo and two public prosecutors.(3, 52-55)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Uruguay took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

The Government does not report on number of inspectors receiving training.(13) In addition, the Government does not collect annual statistics related to the number of child labor violations, penalties, investigations, prosecutions, or convictions due to their low incidence.(11) The Ministry of Labor and Social Security classifies hotline complaints under child labor only if the phrase child labor is specifically mentioned, which may result in underreporting of child labor cases.(3)

The number of inspections conducted is high compared to the number of inspectors on staff, which may compromise the quality of inspections. In addition, INAU conducts the majority of its inspections in Montevideo, the capital, despite evidence indicating that most child labor occurs in rural areas.(3, 11, 19, 58)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Uruguay took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

* The Government does not publish this information.

The police force has 600 officers trained in human trafficking and sexual crimes, with 30 additional officers being hired to fight organized crime with Interpol.(60) In 2016, INAU assisted in 333 cases in commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents.(45) However, cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children are not investigated and prosecuted effectively in Uruguay.(17) The Government recognized its shortcomings in gathering data to understand the problem and its trends.(45)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (CETI)	Coordinate efforts between law enforcement bureaus and NGOs to develop a plan of action for child laborers and their families.(49) Led by the MTSS and INAU, chaired by the Inspector General, and coordinated by the Sub-Inspector General of the MTSS. Composed of government agencies, industry representatives, labor groups, and NGOs.(2, 19, 61, 62)
National Committee for the Eradication of Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONAPEES)	Implement actions to combat the sexual exploitation of children and adolescents.(2, 3) Develop public policies and a national plan of action on the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents. Led by INAU; composed of representatives from several government agencies, NGOs, and UNICEF.(61) In 2016, CONAPEES provided assistance in 285 cases of commercial exploitation of children.(22)
Interagency Committee to Prevent and Fight Human Trafficking	Coordinate Uruguay's anti-human trafficking efforts. Chaired by the Ministry of Social Development (MIDES).(2, 3, 59) In 2016, the Committee met at least monthly to develop and submit the anti-trafficking bill and continued work on creating a National Action Plan to be finalized in 2017.(45)
Inter-institutional Commission to Foster Adolescent Employment	Support youth education, professional development, and insertion in the labor market; foster entrepreneurship in adolescents by providing training, access to capital, and technical assistance; and gather specific data on how the labor market affects youth.(63)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor†

Policy	Description
Integrated System of Protection of Childhood and Adolescence Against Violence (SIPIAV)	Established in 2007; coordinated by INAU, MIDES, the Administration of Health Services of the State (ASSSE), the National Administration of Public Education (ANEP), and civil society; addresses violence directed to children and adolescents.(64) In 2016, SIPIAV produced an Action Plan (2016–2019) that aims to improve inter-institutional capacity and deepen SIPIAV's impact in protecting children and adolescents from violence.(64, 65)
National Action Plan to End Child Labor in Garbage Scavenging	Seeks to combat child labor in garbage dumps through specific projects that involve education, health care, housing, and law enforcement agencies. Launched by CETI and implemented by government agencies, including the MTSS and MIDES.(5, 19)
CONAPEES National Plan for the Eradication of Commercial and Non-Commercial Child and Adolescent Exploitation II (2016–2021)†	Works to eliminate the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Focuses on strengthening victims' rights, improving protection measures, keeping children in school, reintegrating children who had previously left school, and developing alternative income strategies for families.(2, 3) In 2016, CONAPEES registered 285 cases of sexual exploitation in children and adolescents.(66)
Presidential Decree: Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents	Requires tourism operators to raise awareness, take preventive actions, and report incidents of commercial sexual exploitation of children to the Ministry of Tourism and CONAPEES.(35, 67)
Integrated Work Plan for the Brazil-Uruguay Border (2016)†	Launched in 2016 to promote cooperation between Uruguay and Brazil; establish a bi-national commission for the prevention and eradication of child labor; organize joint intervention plans; and plan and implement a program to raise awareness, distribute information, and improve training on child labor.(68)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

‡ The Government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.(69)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the National Strategy for Childhood and Adolescence. Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken by the Government in 2016 to implement the Integrated System of Protection of Childhood and Adolescence Against Violence, the CONAPEES National Plan for the Eradication of Commercial and Non-Commercial Child and Adolescent Exploitation II, and the Presidential Decree: Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[‡]

Program	Description
Pro-Child (Pro-Niño) [†]	Program implemented by the Telefónica Foundation focused on prevention and eradication of child labor. Established in 2000; has more than 10,000 active youth participants nationwide.(2, 70)
MIDES Youth Affairs Bureau Programs [†]	MIDES Youth Affairs Bureau implements three programs intended to help eliminate the worst forms of child labor: (1) Participation, Citizenship, and Culture; (2) Education and Educational Integration; and (3) Training and Work.(23)
National Plan of Equality [†]	Institute for Social Security program that mandates that project participants ensure that their children attend school and receive medical services. Established the Family Allocations Program, a conditional cash transfer program to reduce national poverty levels and assist working families and families in need.(71-73)
I Study and Work (Yo Estudio y Trabajo)* [†]	Government program that offers students between ages 16 and 20 their first formal work experience.(74) In the ages 15 to 18 range, the program serves 600 children.(75)
Uruguay, a Country of Good Treatment Campaign (Uruguay, País de Buentrato) [†]	Led by the NGO Claves and the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation, and involves CONAPEES, INAU, the Canada Fund for Local Initiatives, and the Department of Maldonado, this campaign seeks to raise public awareness of child sexual exploitation by creating a “network of protection” for children and adolescents in Uruguay.(76)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Uruguay.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(77)

The Government is currently developing a project that will update the hazardous work list by 2017.(57) The Government has also continued to fund social programs to eliminate poverty and increase social inclusion to eliminate child labor, but the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(23) Although the Government has adopted plans to address child labor in garbage scavenging, agriculture, and commercial sexual exploitation, there is no evidence of existing or planned social programs to assist working children in these or other sectors, including programs and services to assist child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(10, 19, 23) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken by the Government in 2016 to implement Pro-Child, MIDES Youth Affairs Bureau Programs; National Plan of Equity; I Study and Work; and Uruguay, a Country of Good Treatment.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Uzbekistan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2016, Uzbekistan made efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, but was also complicit in the use of forced child labor. The Government expanded the monitoring activities of both the ILO-led Third Party Monitoring and its own Coordination Council-led monitoring. The Government also took steps to improve the Feedback Mechanism for reporting labor violations in the cotton harvest and investigated complaints of forced child and adult labor received through this mechanism.

However, Uzbekistan is receiving an assessment of no advancement because there were reports that some local officials mobilized children to pick cotton in the region of Kashkadarya and the Republic of Karakalpakstan. There was no evidence of centrally-coordinated forced mobilization of children. However, the Government maintained policies in the cotton sector that mandate regional harvest quotas and set crop prices at levels that create incentives for local administrators to forcibly mobilize labor, creating an ongoing risk of forced child labor. Public confidence in the Feedback Mechanism remained low, and some users reported retaliation for complaints, indicating flaws in the system for receiving and processing forced child labor complaints. Members of civil society who attempted to conduct independent monitoring of child labor in the cotton harvest reported experiencing harassment by the local government authorities. A Presidential Decree was issued in October 2016 prohibiting unannounced inspections in private businesses, including labor inspections. In addition to continued reports of the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor in the cotton harvest, a limited number of reports indicate that children perform dangerous tasks in cultivating silk cocoons. Overall, gaps in law enforcement and insufficient coordination with provincial officials impede Uzbekistan's ability to fully address the child labor problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Some children in Uzbekistan engage in the worst forms of child labor in harvesting cotton.(1-23) Although there is an overall lack of current data on child labor in Uzbekistan, a limited number of reports indicate that children also perform dangerous tasks in cultivating silk cocoons.(4, 24-26). Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Uzbekistan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.3 (244,095)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	84.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	5.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(27)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(28)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cultivating and harvesting cotton [†] (1-23)
	Cultivating silk cocoons (4, 24-26)
Services	Street vending and street begging (18, 29, 30)
	Collecting scrap metal (20, 31-34)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (19, 35)
	Forced labor in cultivating and harvesting cotton (3-5, 9, 10, 12-20, 36-42)
	Forced labor in collecting scrap metal (20, 31-34, 43, 44)
	Forced labor in cultivation of silk cocoons (4, 24-26)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The ILO-led Third Party Monitoring (TPM) exercise and the Government-led monitoring found no evidence of forced child labor in the cotton harvest.(45, 46) However, independent observers of the harvest in 2016 reported incidents of children forcibly mobilized to pick cotton.(23) In addition, the TPM noted that staff of educational institutions, as well as students from lyceums, colleges, and universities, were at high risk of mobilization for forced labor in the cotton harvest.(45)

While there was no evidence of a centrally-coordinated forced mobilization of children, observers reported witnessing more cases of children forcibly mobilized by their schools in 2016 compared to the previous year.(23) Organized local mobilization of rural schoolchildren by school officials was also reported in several districts of Kashkadarya and Karakalpakstan.(23) In addition, an unknown number of 17-year-old students were included in class-wide mobilizations of third-course college and lyceum students, who tend to be 18 years old, but can also include some 17-year-olds.(23, 47) Further, the mobilization of teachers interrupted class schedules and created larger class sizes, negatively impacting the quality of education and leaving children whose school attendance was interrupted more vulnerable to participation in the cotton harvest.(23, 47) The Uzbek-German Forum continued to report harassment by local officials of human rights activists and foreign journalists attempting to monitor the cotton harvest in 2016.(23, 48)

Limited evidence suggests that government-imposed quotas also contribute to forced child labor in the cultivation of silk cocoons and the collection of scrap metal.(4, 24-26, 31-34, 43, 44)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Uzbekistan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Uzbekistan’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

During the reporting period, there were some changes to the legal framework. In September 2016, Uzbekistan amended the Law on Labor Protection to more clearly incorporate international standards into the labor protection system and define the role of the government, employers, workers, and workers' organizations in monitoring working conditions.(47, 62, 63) In October 2016, a Presidential Decree was issued prohibiting unannounced inspections targeted at improving the business climate by eliminating regulatory burdens on small and private businesses. However, the decree imposed a ban on unannounced labor inspections of all private enterprise.(64) This provision is scheduled to enter into force in 2017.(47, 64)

The Law on Guarantees of the Rights of the Child requires that the State protect children from involvement in prostitution; however, the law does not criminally prohibit the use, procurement, or offering of children in prostitution.(50, 52, 58)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Conduct labor inspections, including inspections for compliance with child labor laws.(65)
Ministry of Interior Office for Combating Trafficking	Investigate crimes related to child trafficking, which may then be prosecuted by the Prosecutor General's Office.(66)
Prosecutor General's Office	Prosecute criminal violations involving the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking, forced labor, and commercial sexual exploitation.(66)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Education, Ministry of Higher and Secondary Special Education, and Center for Secondary and Vocational Education	Monitor elementary through secondary school students to prevent forced child labor, including in the production of cotton. Monitor employment of all graduates of all educational institutions for two years after graduation.(67, 68)
Women's Committee of Uzbekistan	Monitor school attendance through the academic year, especially during the cotton harvest. A total of 14 regional and 194 district branches of the Women's Committee are involved in monitoring school attendance.(67)
Ministry of Labor Human Trafficking Hotlines	Receive reports of incidents of human trafficking and refer reports to the relevant agencies.(69)
Feedback Mechanism	Receive complaints on the violation of workers' rights and labor laws through two telephone hotlines: one Ministry of Labor hotline that refers cases to the Labor Inspectorate and the Prosecutor General's Office, and one Federation of Trade Unions hotline that focuses on mediation of individual workers' rights complaints.(17)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Uzbekistan took action to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

During the reporting period, both the ILO-led TPM and the Government-supported Coordination Council conducted monitoring of the cotton harvest.(46) The coverage of national monitoring expanded from 3 provinces in 2015 to all 13 provinces in 2016. Five minors were identified in cotton fields; however, no evidence of systematic use of child labor was detected.(71) The TPM adapted its methodology in 2016 to include a pre-harvest monitoring phase that assessed whether ministries, schools, and medical facilities responsible for recruiting cotton pickers were taking appropriate measures to prevent the use of child and forced labor. The TPM report noted that recordkeeping on the implementation of these measures was inconsistent, especially in rural areas, and that regular auditing of records would be required to ensure preventive measures were being properly implemented.(45) The TPM report also noted that many respondents appeared to have been coached on how to answer monitors.(45) Independent observers commented that the presence of Government-

Uzbekistan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

affiliated Federation of Trade Unions of Uzbekistan (FTUU) officials on monitoring teams intimidated respondents and made them unwilling to speak openly with monitors.(23)

Differences between TPM and government monitoring results and reporting by independent observers suggest deficiencies in the current monitoring and enforcement system, including insufficient investigation, identification, and punishment of labor violations in the cotton sector. Among the independently reported violations are incidents of mobilization of entire classes of schoolchildren and the possible involvement of local or regional government authorities in such mobilization.(23, 45) The Government of Uzbekistan issued administrative penalties, such as fines or written admonishments, to 15 local administrators of educational and healthcare institutions and farming enterprises involved in mobilizing adult forced labor in 2016.(73) However, research did not find any cases in which local government officials responsible for enforcing quotas at the regional, district, or town level received fines for their involvement in the mobilization of children or adults in the cotton harvest.

Both the Ministry of Labor and the FTUU continued to operate separate Feedback Mechanism (FBM) hotlines during the 2016 harvest. Notable improvements to the FBM's functioning in 2016 include the introduction of anonymous complaints to the FTUU's hotline, the addition of an appeals process, and the introduction of year-round operation.(45, 73) Observers agree that increased public confidence in the FBM is needed for the mechanism to function effectively. While the use of the hotlines increased in 2016, reports of reprisals against individuals who made complaints via the FBM hotlines about forced labor continued in 2016.(23, 45)

In February 2016, the President signed a resolution mandating that each region have a dedicated labor inspector, an improvement on the previous standard of one inspector for every two regions, which left rural areas underserved.(73) However, the number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Uzbekistan's workforce, which includes over 17.8 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 20,000 workers in transitioning economies, Uzbekistan's labor inspectorate should employ roughly 890 inspectors.(74-76)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Uzbekistan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2015	2016

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (17)	Yes (17)

During the reporting period, 50 Ministry of Interior officers and investigators received training on measures for preventing human trafficking.(73)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Coordination Council on Child Labor Issues (Coordination Council)	Coordinate efforts to address child labor issues, including monitoring of the cotton harvest; chaired by the Federation of Trade Unions.(71, 73) In 2016, the Coordination Council led child labor monitoring activities throughout Uzbekistan and collaborated with the ILO and the World Bank to host capacity-building seminars for government ministries, regional government authorities, and farmers on the implementation of national and international labor standards.(45, 47, 71)
Interagency Working Group	Coordinate efforts to address labor rights issues, including child labor.(65, 77, 78) Report to the ILO on the Government's implementation of ratified conventions and its efforts to prevent forced labor and protect working minors. Headed by the Ministry of Labor.(77-80)
National Interagency Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Oversee efforts to combat human trafficking, including by improving interagency cooperation, raising public awareness, and drafting legislation.(72) Chaired by the Prosecutor General.(66) In 2016, actively coordinated with local NGO partners to conduct public awareness campaigns.(73)
Local interagency committees	Monitor human trafficking at the provincial, regional, and municipal levels.(66)

In August 2016, the Ministry of Labor and the FTUU issued a joint letter to the seats of regional government, or hokimiyats, emphasizing the importance of preventing the use of child and forced labor in the harvest.(73) According to the TPM report, child labor has become broadly socially unacceptable. However, despite formal directives and awareness-raising efforts, national prohibitions on child labor continued to be implemented inconsistently at the local level.(23) This suggests the need for improved coordination between the national, regional, and district governments to ensure that local governments are committed to implementing the laws and policies prohibiting child labor in cotton production and other sectors and that appropriate remediation action is taken when they do not.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Memorandum of Understanding Between the ILO and the Republic of Uzbekistan (2014–2016)	Establishes terms of agreement between the ILO and the Government on cooperation to implement the Decent Work Country Program in Uzbekistan from 2014–2016.(81) This agreement represents an important step toward implementation of recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies, including utilizing ILO technical assistance and continuing to work with the ILO or other credible third parties to observe cotton harvests.(36, 82)
National Action Plan for the Application of ILO Conventions	Establishes a framework for implementing ILO Conventions 138 and 182 by coordinating the activities of ministries, departments, and local government authorities.(17, 83) Prescribed activities include the annual monitoring of the cotton harvest, which took place during the reporting period.(71, 83)
Resolution of the Cabinet of Ministers No. 132 on Additional Measures to Ensure the Implementation of ILO Conventions (2014–2016)	Establishes actions and efforts to be taken to address the worst forms of child labor and forced labor. Outlines additional activities to be implemented in 2014–2016 in response to ILO convention requirements, including awareness-raising, monitoring of the cotton harvest, legal reform, data collection, and activities on the worst forms of child labor targeting government ministries, international organizations, students, trade unions, and employers.(84) Ministry of Labor is charged with implementation.(68)
Action Plan on Improving Working Conditions, Employment, and Social Protection of Workers in Agriculture (2016–2018) [†]	Demonstrates the Government's commitment to improving conditions for hiring of workers in agriculture; strengthening the Feedback Mechanism (FBM) and national monitoring to prevent child and forced labor; increasing provision of information and guidance in order to advance decent work; increasing mechanization of agriculture; and improving social protection of workers in agriculture.(85–87)
Cabinet of Ministers Order 909F	Outlines steps to ensure decent working conditions in Uzbekistan, including by preventing child and forced labor. The order lays out the Government's intentions to improve monitoring and feedback mechanisms, as well as to continue working with the ILO and World Bank to develop information materials and conduct public awareness campaigns about child and forced labor.(17)
National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons (2015–2016)	Includes activities to conduct public awareness-raising, assist and protect victims, and strengthen the capacity of government agencies and NGOs working on human trafficking issues.(72)

[†] Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Uzbekistan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the national government maintained cotton production policies that mandate harvest quotas and set crop prices at levels that offer strong incentives for local administrators to mobilize forced labor, which in turn creates an ongoing risk that children may be mobilized for forced child labor.(23, 73)

The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Education Sector Plan (2013–2017).(88)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
Support for the Decent Work Country Program in Uzbekistan	$6 million USDOL-funded project awarded in December 2014 to the ILO to enhance the capacity of the Government and workers' and employers' representatives to prevent and reduce child and forced labor, and to promote decent work in Uzbekistan.(89, 90) In 2016, the project prepared training materials for monitoring child labor and forced labor in the cotton harvest. It also delivered training courses, seminars, and technical advice on collective bargaining and core labor conventions, facilitating Uzbekistan's ratification of ILO Convention 87 Concerning Freedom of Association and the Protection of the Right to Organize.(91, 92)
Efforts to Prevent Child Labor in the Cotton Harvest‡	Government-led initiatives to prevent the involvement of children in the cotton harvest include the provision of extracurricular activities for students who might otherwise participate in the harvest after school, and efforts to raise awareness about the prohibition of child labor in the harvest.(71) In 2016, 44,500 posters including information on the prohibition of child labor and the FBM hotlines were distributed to educational institutions, and 100,000 flyers were disseminated among farmers and employers. Awareness-raising videos on the FBMs were also prepared and received air time on national television.(71)
Global Partnership for Education	Multilateral initiative to coordinate the efforts of developing countries, donors, international organizations, teachers, NGOs, and the private sector to secure universal access to quality education in developing countries.(93, 94)
School Assistance†	Ministry of Public Education program that provides winter clothes and other educational resources to needy families to support their school attendance.(17, 95)
Family Support Assistance†	Government of Uzbekistan program that provides an allowance to low-income families to be paid if their children continue their education up to age 18.(17, 95)
Child Protection Assistance	UNICEF program that engages with the Government of Uzbekistan to support the development of a national child protection system that will prevent and respond to children who are at risk of or have been subject to child abuse, exploitation, and violence.(96)
Child Rights Monitoring	UNICEF program partners with local and regional governments, NGOs, and civil service training institutions to strengthen Uzbekistan's application and monitoring of obligations under the UN CRC.(97)
National Rehabilitation Center†	Ministry of Labor-operated shelter that provides human trafficking victims with emergency medical and social services and assists in social rehabilitation. In 2016, the shelter served 400 individuals, including 17 minors.(71)
Human Trafficking is a Modern Issue†	National Interagency Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons-led program, which carried out more than 61,500 awareness-raising activities that reached 4.1 million citizens, including 1 million children.(72, 98)

† Program is funded by the Government of Uzbekistan.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(46, 47)

The Government has implemented programs to combat child labor in the cotton harvest and to address human trafficking. Despite these efforts, forced labor issues persist in Uzbekistan.(99)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
75. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
76. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Vanuatu made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the Vanuatu National Child Protection Policy, which aims to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. However, there is evidence that children perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Vanuatu's minimum ages of 12 for work and 15 for hazardous work are not in compliance with international standards. The Government has yet to pass the Employment Relations Bill of 2012 that prohibits the engagement of children under the age of 18 in hazardous work. In addition, Vanuatu does not have any social programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Vanuatu perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.⁽¹⁾ Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Vanuatu. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.⁽³⁾

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

There have been no national surveys of child labor in Vanuatu to determine the nature and prevalence of the problem.⁽⁶⁾

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Vanuatu has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Vanuatu's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	14	Section 38 of the Employment Act (7)

Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 35 of the Counter Terrorism and Transnational Organized Crime Act (9)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 101B, 101C, 101D, 147A, and 147B of the Penal Code (8)

State Voluntary	N/A†

† No standing military (11)

As Vanuatu has not ratified ILO C.138, the minimum age of 14 years does not meet international standards.(7) The Employment Act permits children ages 12 and 13 to work in agricultural light work, but it does not specify the activities and hours per week that are allowed for work.(4, 7)

The Government has yet to pass the Employment Relations Bill of 2012 that prohibits the engagement of children under the age of 18 in hazardous work and has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.(12) The minimum age of 15 for hazardous work is not in compliance with international standards, failing to protect children ages 16 and 17 from work that could jeopardize their health and safety.(7)

Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient, as debt bondage is not criminally prohibited.(4, 7, 8) In addition, the Penal Code does not include heightened penalties for inciting children to engage in criminal activities, including drug production and drug trafficking.(8) There is no compulsory age for education, and education is inaccessible for vast numbers of people who live in remote areas, which increase the risk of children's involvement in child labor.(12-14) Although it does not appear that there are any laws that provide free basic education, there is a policy that sufficiently provides for free basic education in government-owned schools for children in grades one to six.(10)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Vanuatu took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not publish this information.

Based on the most recent data available from 2012, the Vanuatu Police Force employs 50 investigators, who are responsible for enforcing laws against the worst forms of child labor.(6)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a working group to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children, research found no evidence that the working group functions as a coordinating mechanism to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Protection Working Group	Serve as the primary forum for experience exchange in child protection. Comprises representatives from the Government, UN agencies, civil society organizations, and NGOs.(4, 16, 17)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established a policy related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Vanuatu National Child Protection Policy (2016–2026)†	Aims to create an environment that protects children from abuse, exploitation, human trafficking, neglect, and violence; provides children with equitable access to services to support reintegration and recovery when needed.(17)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2016, the Government adopted the Vanuatu National Child Protection Policy, which aims to protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking; however, the policy leaves children vulnerable to illicit activities.(17)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government funded or participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Vanuatu (Table 10).

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Venezuela made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued to fund and implement social programs to improve conditions for some working children and raise awareness of human trafficking. However, children in Venezuela are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Government has not published a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children or information on the enforcement of child labor laws. In addition, information is not available on the effectiveness of the Government's coordinating body on child labor, and the Government does not have sufficient efforts in place to protect children in key sectors where child labor is prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Venezuela engage in child labor, including in domestic work. Children also engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-13) The Government's 2011 census, which is the most recent information available, found approximately 262,000 children and adolescents between ages 10 and 17 working in Venezuela, but research could not determine the extent to which the survey encompassed the informal sector or whether there are studies that target the worst forms of child labor. (14) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Venezuela.

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-11)

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are sometimes trafficked to urban areas, such as Caracas and Maracaibo, or to resort destinations, such as Margarita Island, for commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 6, 7, 27) Indigenous children work in illegal gold mines in the Upper Orinoco, Casiquiare, and Guainia-Rio Negro river basins and are vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(6) Civil society groups estimate that more than 200,000 children are exploited by criminal organizations and more than 1 million children work in the informal sector.(20) Civil society groups also report that children are increasingly engaged in begging and domestic servitude, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking, as well as gang activity and, to a lesser extent, commercial sexual exploitation due to the economic crisis.(1, 8, 10, 28)

Children from rural areas, indigenous children, Afro-descendant children, children with disabilities, pregnant girls, and adolescent mothers face barriers to accessing education; many students stop their formal education after completing the ninth grade.(1, 3, 7, 29) Reports indicate children are increasingly leaving school to work in the informal sector or engage in illicit activities due to food shortages and increased crime. Children and teachers reportedly miss school due to hunger or to wait in long supermarket lines.(1, 23, 30, 31)

Although Article 6.2.k. of the Education Law guarantees that no student’s academic documents may be withheld, according to NGOs, Colombian children living in Venezuela without a Venezuelan identification card are sometimes prevented from receiving diplomas, certifications, and credentials from formal educational institutions. The practice of withholding their academic documents may discourage them from completing their education, increasing their vulnerability to labor exploitation.(32-35)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Venezuela has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Venezuela’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 53 of the Law for the Protection of Children and Adolescents; Article 102 of the Constitution; Articles 3 and 6 of the Education Law (33, 37, 39)

* No conscription (39, 44)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (20, 33, 37, 39)

Although adolescents are prohibited from working in activities that may harm their health or development, such as on boats, the Government has not published a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children under age 18.(2, 19, 36, 45, 46) Articles 79 and 80 of the Regulations on Occupational Safety and Health Conditions prohibit activities considered dangerous or unhealthy for children under age 18; however, the list referenced is not included in the published version of the Regulations. Similarly, Article 96 of the Law for the Protection of Children and Adolescents prohibits children under age 18 from working in activities prohibited by law but does not specify which activities are considered hazardous or prohibited for minors.(37, 38)

Venezuelan law does not sufficiently prohibit the trafficking of children. Articles 55 and 56 of the Law for Women's Right to a Life Free from Violence do not protect boys from trafficking and require the use of deception, coercion, force, violence, threats, abduction, or other fraudulent means to carry out the offense of trafficking girls, including for commercial sexual exploitation.(41) Although Article 41 of the Law Against Organized Crime and Terrorism prohibits the trafficking of children, the law prohibits human trafficking committed only by members of organized criminal groups.(40) Venezuelan law does not prohibit non-state armed groups from recruiting children under 18.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Popular Power for Labor and Social Security (MINPPTRASS)	Enforce child labor laws and conduct child labor inspections in formal and informal business sectors. Develop policies and projects regarding child labor.(19, 21, 47)
National Institute for Prevention, Safety, and Health at Work	Assist MINPPTRASS in enforcing labor laws and conditions of work in Venezuela, including by conducting child labor inspections in formal and informal business sectors. Help develop labor inspection apparatus and implement national labor policies.(19, 48)
Municipal Councils for the Protection of Children and Adolescents	Manage the MINPPTRASS Registry for Adolescent Workers to ensure that employed students of legal working age balance their education and employment and that employers adhere to labor laws.(20)
Ministry of Popular Power of the Interior, Justice, and Peace	Investigate human trafficking cases through the Criminal Investigative Division and commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities through the Scientific, Penal, and Criminal Investigative Corps.(1)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Venezuela took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

NGOs have expressed concerns that the Government does not effectively monitor employed youth of legal working age to ensure that their employment does not negatively affect their education and that they are not exploited by employers.(1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Venezuela took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
System for the Protection of Children and Adolescents	Protect children's rights and address child labor issues through policies and programs at the national and state levels. Mandated by the Law for the Protection of Children and Adolescents and composed of several government ministries and councils and representatives from civil society.(37, 49)

Although the Government has established the System for the Protection of Children and Adolescents, this body does not provide adequate coordination, monitoring, and evaluation of institutions to ensure protection from the worst forms of child labor. Moreover, research could not determine to what extent the body was active during the reporting period.(6) The Government's ability to address exploitative child labor is limited by minimal coordination between law enforcement agencies and insufficient information sharing between government offices at the municipal and national levels.(1, 20) Research could not determine whether the Government maintains a coordinating body that addresses the trafficking of children, including for commercial sexual exploitation.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action Against Abuse and Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Addresses the prevention of commercial sexual exploitation of children under age 18 and the rehabilitation of victims.(50)

Although the Government of Venezuela has adopted poverty reduction strategies, as well as a policy to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children, research did not find evidence of a national policy that targeted other forms of child labor, such as domestic work and street work.(6) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Second Socialist Plan for the Economic and Social Development of the Nation policy.(51)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Children of the Barrio Mission (Misión Niños del Barrio)†	Program administered by the National Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (IDENA) that provides services to at-risk and underprivileged children, including child laborers. Eradicate exploitation, abuse, and psychological and physical mistreatment of children from birth to age 17.(14, 21, 52)
Program to Dignify Working Children and Adolescents†	IDENA-administered program to eradicate exploitative working conditions and establish safe business environments for working children above the legal age.(1, 19, 45, 53)
Human Trafficking Awareness Campaign†	Government program to raise public awareness of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation; disseminate public service announcements, advertisements, posters, and pamphlets in airports and tourist areas.(27)
Communal Centers for Comprehensive Care†	IDENA-supervised centers to provide meals and educational assistance to at-risk children from birth to age 12. Partners with the Ministry of Popular Power, Health, and Social Development to provide medical and dental care to children.(54)
National Day Camps†	IDENA-administered program under the Community Vacation Plan to provide summer day camps for children, with a focus on athletic, artistic, and cultural activities.(14, 19, 20)

† Program is funded by the Government of Venezuela.

Although the Government continued programming to alleviate poverty and improve conditions for some working children during the reporting period, these programs had limited effectiveness due to reduced government funding.(1) Although the Ministry of Popular Power for Interior and Justice and the Child Protection Council have trained psychologists and physicians to provide psychological and medical examinations to victims of human trafficking, follow-up social services to assist victims are limited.(27) Overall, existing government programs are insufficient to protect children in key sectors in which child labor is prevalent.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. In 2016, Yemen made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Education worked with UNICEF to rehabilitate schools and set up temporary learning facilities to allow 1.7 million children to access education. However, children in Yemen are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in fishing and armed conflict. Due to the ongoing armed conflict with the Houthis-Saleh rebels, the internationally recognized Republic of Yemen Government remained in exile in Saudi Arabia for the majority of this period and had limited operational control of its ministries in Yemen. As a result, it was unable to enforce the minimum age protections of the law or to provide demobilization and rehabilitation services to children who have been recruited and used by non-state armed groups in armed conflict.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Yemen engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in fishing and armed conflict.(1-7) According to the 2010 National Child Labor Survey, the majority of working children were in the agricultural and domestic work sectors.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Yemen.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	13.6 (834,866)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	68.0

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Forced recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (2-7)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The civil war in Yemen continued throughout 2016. Republic of Yemen Government officials traveled intermittently from Saudi Arabia to Yemen, mostly Aden, but were unable to establish a sustained presence in the country.(2) The Republic of Yemen Government also had limited operational control over its ministries and remained unable to enforce regulations.(2)

Reports indicate that, due to economic hardships, commercial sexual exploitation of children increased. Girls are trafficked within Yemen to hotels in Aden, Sana’a, Ta’iz, and other cities for commercial sexual exploitation.(16) There is evidence that Yemeni children, mostly boys, migrate to Sana’a, Aden, and Saudi Arabia, where they are engaged in forced labor in domestic work, begging, or working in small shops. Tourists, including those from Saudi Arabia, enter into temporary marriages with Yemeni girls, which is a form of commercial sexual exploitation.(16) Limited evidence points to the existence of chattel slavery, as children are sold and inherited as property in the al-Hudaydah and al-Mahwit governorates.(16)

Various armed groups recruited and used child soldiers, including the Houthis, the Houthi-affiliated Popular Committees, Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula, tribal militias, and government forces.(2-4, 7, 17) Children served as checkpoint guards or fighters.(4) Child soldiers on all sides of the conflict likely received payments, meals, and qat, a mild narcotic that is legal in Yemen, in exchange for their service.(2, 4) Limited evidence suggests that boys between the ages of 12 and 15 who are married in northern tribal regions are considered adults, and therefore are obligated to show their allegiance to their tribes by participating in the internal conflict, including through fighting or serving as guards. Some child soldiers were subjected to rape when captured by opposing warring groups in Aden.(2)

Enrollment rates in schools have been seriously affected by the internal conflict in Yemen, high levels of violence, and internal displacement.(18) According to UNICEF, in the 2015–2016 academic year, 1,600 schools remained closed and approximately 2.2 million school-aged children were out of school.(5)

Among the Muhamasheen (“marginalized”) minority group, generally of sub-Saharan African origin, illiteracy rates are high and child labor in the form of begging is prevalent.(12) Syrian refugee children are also engaged in begging.(19)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Yemen has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Republic of Yemen Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Yemen's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 87 of the Child Rights Law (23)

* No conscription (25)

[‡] Age calculated based on available information

Research did not find any legal prohibition of debt bondage and slavery. The legal framework does not appear to explicitly prohibit forced labor.

Research could not determine whether the legal framework adequately prohibits using, procuring, or offering a child in pornography and pornographic performances, or whether it prohibits using a child in prostitution, because a public version of Ministerial Order No. 11 of 2013, which replaced Ministerial Order No. 56 of 2004 containing some protections, was not available.

Based on available information, Ministerial Order No. 11 of 2013 does not appear to explicitly include all phases of child trafficking, such as harboring, transporting, and transferring children for exploitation.(21)

Research did not discover any law to establish 18 as the minimum age for recruitment by non-state armed groups.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Republic of Yemen Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor's Child Labor Unit	Enforce child labor laws, conduct inspections, inform the Ministry of the Interior of any violations, and refer children found during inspections to appropriate social services. Receive complaints of child labor.(11)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforce child labor laws. Police agencies within the Ministry of the Interior handle human trafficking investigations.(11)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce child labor laws and prosecute and adjudicate child labor cases.(11)
Ministry of Human Rights, Ministry of Legal Affairs, Parliament, and the Social Fund for Development	Maintain supporting roles in combating child trafficking.(11)

Yemen

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

As of late November 2016, the internationally recognized Republic of Yemen Government reestablished a steady presence in Aden, as well as an intermittent presence in some other governorates. However, it was unable to return to the capital Sana'a or fully reestablish the rule of law in the territory it holds.(17)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Yemen did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. The Republic of Yemen Government was unable to enforce child labor laws due to the civil war.(2) No funding and training were provided for labor inspection. There was no mechanism to receive child labor complaints.(2)

The Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor's General Administration of Labor Inspection does not have the authority to enforce child labor laws in agriculture and domestic work.(26)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Yemen did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor.(2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Republic of Yemen Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee to Combat Child Labor	Coordinate child labor issues in Yemen. Comprises representatives from the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor, other state agencies, ILO-IPEC, and local NGOs.(11)
Technical Committee for Combating Trafficking in Persons	Develop a national strategy to combat human trafficking.(27)
National Network for Child Protection	Implement training programs and media awareness campaigns, and advocate for progress on children's issues.(11)
Joint Technical Committee to Prevent Recruitment of Children in the Yemeni Armed Forces	Implement and monitor the Action Plan to end and prevent the recruitment of children by the Yemeni Armed Forces. Comprises the Ministry of Defense, the Higher Council for Motherhood and Childhood, the Civil Status and Registration Authority, and UN representatives.(28)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Republic of Yemen Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Action Plan to End and Prevent the Recruitment of Children by the Yemeni Armed Forces	Ensures that national laws comply with international standards, prohibit the recruitment and use of children in armed forces, investigate allegations of violations, and facilitate UN access to monitor compliance.(29) Due to political instability, the Republic of Yemen Government could not implement the Action Plan in 2016.(2)

Although the Republic of Yemen Government has adopted the Action Plan to End and Prevent the Recruitment of Children, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Republic of Yemen Government participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Protection Activities	UNICEF-funded programs designed to provide psychosocial support, including access to sports and arts, in community-based and mobile centers.(30) In 2016, UNICEF provided psychosocial support to approximately half a million children in child-friendly spaces in 18 governorates.(31)
Educational Activities	UNICEF-funded programs, conducted in cooperation with the Republic of Yemen Government, that provide educational support activities and services.(30) In 2016, UNICEF worked with the Ministry of Education to rehabilitate schools and set up temporary learning schools to allow 1.7 million children to access education.(31)

Research found no programs intended to remove, rehabilitate, and reintegrate children engaged in armed conflict.(32) Although Yemen has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in fishing.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Yemen (Table 9).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, Zambia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government hired additional labor inspectors and approved a new development assistance framework that aims to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government also supported the development of programming to empower adolescent girls and reduce child labor in rural areas. However, children in Zambia continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of tobacco, and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Gaps remain in the legal framework related to children; for example, the Education Act does not include the specific age to which education is compulsory, which may leave children under the legal working age vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. In addition, law enforcement agencies lack the necessary human and financial resources to adequately enforce laws against child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Zambia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of tobacco and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Zambia.

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children trafficked inside Zambia are primarily trafficked from rural to urban areas for domestic work and agriculture.(1, 15, 18) Some children in Zambia are forced to load trucks with stolen copper ore by Jerabo gangs, which are illegal mining syndicates in the Copperbelt province.(3, 15, 18) Along Zambia’s borders, the commercial sexual exploitation of children is common.(15) The Government has yet to release information on child labor from its 2008, 2012, or 2014 Labour Force Surveys, although the general Labour Force Survey results, which did not include data on child labor, were released in 2011, 2014, and 2016, respectively.(2, 19, 20)

Long distances to schools create a barrier to education.(6) Families also face costs for basic education, including fees for school supplies, which prevent some children from attending school.(3, 6, 17)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Zambia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Zambia has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, although commercial sexual exploitation of children continues to be a problem in the country.(15)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Zambia’s legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 24 of the Constitution; Article 12 of the Employment Act (21-23)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 17 of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act; Article 3 of the Prohibition of Employment of Young Persons and Children (Hazardous Labour) Order (24, 25)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Prohibition of Employment of Young Persons and Children (Hazardous Labour) Order (25)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 14 and 24 of the Constitution; Articles 143 and 263 of the Penal Code; Article 3 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act of 2008 (21, 23, 26, 27)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 24 of the Constitution; Article 143 of the Penal Code; Article 3 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act of 2008 (21, 23, 26, 27)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 144 of the Penal Code; Article 2 of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act (24, 27)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 2 of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act (24)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	N/A*
State Voluntary	Yes	18	Article 14 of the Defence Act (28)
Non-state Compulsory	Yes	18	Article 3 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act of 2008 (26)
Compulsory Education Age	No		Article 16 of the Education Act, 2011 (29)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 15 of the Education Act, 2011 (29)

* No conscription (28)

Gaps remain in the legal framework. Penalties for child prostitution violations in the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act are different from those in the Penal Code.(30) Although the Penal Code treats child prostitution as a felony, with a minimum 20-year jail sentence, the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act treats it as a civil penalty and imposes a fine of $35 to $165 and possible discretionary prison time. In practice, the heavier statute of the Penal Code would be applied; however, research did not uncover any such prosecutions in recent years.(31, 32)

The Education Act requires the Government to provide free education up to the seventh grade and stipulates that education is compulsory for children of “school-going age.”(1, 29, 33) The Act, however, does not set a specific age or define “school-going age,” which may allow children to leave school before they are legally able to work.(29) The lack of standards in this area may increase the risk of children’s involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) Child Labor Unit (CLU)	Implement and enforce child labor laws.(1, 14) Play advisory role for different Government agencies. Also responsible for the regulation of child labor laws.(20)
Zambia Police Service Child Protection Unit	Work with the MLSS and the Ministry of Youths, Sports, and Child Development to identify and remove vulnerable children from the streets. Work with 72 District Street Children Committees to rescue street children from child labor, including the worst forms, and place them with families, in foster care, or in children’s homes.(2, 19) Work with immigration officials to combat child trafficking, with local officials, regarding crimes against children and with schools to educate and sensitize children about abuse. Collaborate with the Ministry of Justice to investigate and prosecute child labor cases.(19, 34)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Zambia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2016, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) employed 110 labor inspectors, which is an increase from the 81 employed in 2015.(11, 35) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Zambia's workforce, which includes more than 7 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Zambia should employ roughly 178 inspectors.(2, 14, 36-38) In 2016, only three inspectors received refresher training.(11) The MLSS stated that an insufficient budget, inadequate training, and lack of transportation prevented it from effectively conducting inspections.(2, 11) The MLSS conducts labor inspections in registered private institutions only; it does not conduct investigations in unregistered institutions, as allowed by law and where child labor is more likely to be found.(1, 39) A referral mechanism exists through District Child Labor Committees that allows labor officers to refer cases to NGOs; however, not all districts have a committee.(14)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Zambia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, the Government reported that insufficient training hampered criminal law enforcement.(11)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MLSS	Coordinate Government efforts on issues of child labor, including its worst forms.(1)
MLSS-CLU	Coordinate with District Child Labor Committees in 26 of Zambia's 102 districts to increase local awareness and mobilize communities against child labor, including its worst forms.(1, 14)
Ministry of Youths, Sports, and Child Development's Child Development Department	Coordinate legislation on child labor.(2)
Zambia Police Service Child Protection Unit	Coordinate with the Ministry of Community Development, Mother, and Child Health to protect children from general abuse, including the worst forms of child labor.(1, 2)
District Child Labor Committees (DCLCs)	Respond to child labor complaints at the local level and file complaints to the MLSS. Serve as the main referral mechanism for social welfare services, a mechanism that is reported to be improving. Comprises the Zambia Police Service; the MLSS; the Ministry of Community Development, Mother, and Child Health; and civil society stakeholders.(1) The Government intends to establish Committees in all districts but lacks the resources to do so. DCLCs serve as the main referral mechanism for social welfare services, and it was reported that these mechanisms have been improving.(1, 14)

Due to overlapping responsibilities and communication lapses, individual agency mandates may not be effective in some cases.(19)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Policy	Establishes an action plan and designates responsible agencies to address child labor issues.(1, 33, 42)
Revised Sixth National Development Plan (2013–2016)	Includes the eradication of the worst forms of child labor as a goal. Places emphasis on early childhood education and a child's right to education.(1, 14, 43)
National Employment and Labor Market Policy	Contains the elimination of child labor as a goal.(19, 44)
UNDAF (2016–2021)†	Identifies child labor as a pervasive problem in Zambia and seeks to prevent the worst forms of child labor and protect children.(45)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2016, the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor expired and was not replaced.(11, 46) The Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education

Zambia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Policy and the National Youth Policy.(1, 2) Efforts to implement the National Child Labor Policy have been restricted by inadequate funding.(32, 33) No new activities were undertaken to implement the National Child Labor Policy, Revised Sixth National Development Plan, and National Employment and Labor Market Policy during the reporting period, in large part due to poor funding.(32)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor[†]

Program	Description
USDOL-funded projects	Empower: Increasing Economic and Social Empowerment for Adolescent Girls and Vulnerable Women in Zambia . * $5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Winrock International to reduce child labor in rural Zambia among adolescent girls, ages 15 to17, by increasing access to technical, vocational, entrepreneurial, and life skills training.(47) Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project , implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, supports the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research in Zambia.(48) Additional information is available on the USDOL Web site .
Achieving Reduction of Child Labor in Support of Education II (2015–2018)*	Japan Tobacco International-funded, 3-year global training program that provides strategies to reduce the worst forms of child labor in tobacco-growing communities in Brazil, Malawi, Tanzania, and Zambia.(49) In April 2016, Phase II of the project was launched in Zambia.(11, 50)
Social Cash Transfer Program [†]	Government program that provides funds to families and has been shown to increase school enrollment. Scaled up by the Government over time.(2, 14, 51, 52)
Strengthening Social Dialogue as an Effective Tool to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labour	Irish Aid-funded, five-country project, promotes social dialogue with the aim of reducing child labor.(53)
Decent Work Country Programme (2013–2016)	Government program with emphasis on human development, including social protection, child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking.(54)
Zambia National Service Skills Training Camps [†]	Government program that provides life-skills training camps for at-risk youth, including for victims of the worst forms of child labor.(19, 33)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

[†] Program is funded by the Government of Zambia.

‡ The Government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(1, 55)

Although Zambia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
37. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
38. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex, 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2016, Zimbabwe made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government developed a Trafficking in Persons National Plan of Action, launched Phase III of the National Action Plan for Orphans and Vulnerable Children, and withdrew 178 children from child labor on plantations and sent them back to school. In addition, the Government operated a national case management system throughout 65 districts for child care workers to identify, report, and address child abuse cases, including child labor. However, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and mining. Zimbabwe continues to lack specific social programs targeting sectors in which child labor is most prevalent. Gaps remain in the country's legal framework against child labor, such as lack of free basic education, which increases children's vulnerability.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Zimbabwe engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and mining.(1-4) Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(5)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of tea, cotton, tobacco, corn, and sugarcane (2, 3, 7-11)
	Fishing, including casting nets, hauling fish loads, and sorting fish (2, 3, 7, 8, 11)
	Forestry, such as dragging logs from felling sites and loading logs for transport (2, 3, 10, 11)
	Cattle herding (2, 7, 11)
Industry	Mining gold and chrome, and extracting material from underground passages and quarries† (2-4, 7, 12)
Services	Street work, including vending and begging (2, 3, 8-10)
	Domestic work (2, 3, 8, 10, 11, 13, 14)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking and gambling (3, 7)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 4, 7, 10, 11, 15, 16)
	Working in agriculture, mining for the production of gold and chrome, and domestic work, each as a result of human trafficking (4, 7, 15)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Zimbabwean children are trafficked to South Africa, Mozambique, and Zambia, where they become victims of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in domestic work. Zimbabwean children, especially orphans, are sometimes lured by relatives with the promise of education or adoption, but instead are recruited to work within the country as domestic workers or forced to work in mining, drug smuggling, or other illegal activities.(4) The deterioration of Zimbabwe's economy

Zimbabwe

and manufacturing sector has also led to a recent increase in child labor.(8) A source indicates that local women in the suburb of Epworth organize child prostitution syndicates.(11)

According to UNICEF, approximately 100,000 of Zimbabwe's 1.3 million orphans survive on their own in child-headed households.(17) The breakdown of the family unit and poverty are major factors in children's vulnerability to child labor.(7, 17, 18) Citizenship is derived from birth, but many children, especially orphans and children living in rural areas, are not registered due to poverty and lack of awareness of the requirements.(7, 16) Beginning in grade seven, children are unable to sit for exams without a birth registration, leading some to enter the workforce at a young age.(7, 19) School fees are often prohibitively expensive and limit access to education.(8, 18) According to the UN, children with disabilities, especially in rural areas, experience greater abuse, violence, stigma, and exclusion, and, therefore, have limited access to education.(16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Zimbabwe has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Zimbabwe's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards: Yes/No	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Section 3 of the Labor Amendment Act (20)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Section 11(4) of the Labor Act (20)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Section 11(4) of the Labor Act; Section 10A of the Children's Act (20, 21)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Sections 54 and 55 of the Constitution; Section 4A of the Labor Act (20, 22)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 3 of the Trafficking in Persons Act (23)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Section 87 of the Criminal Law Act; Section 3 of the Sexual Offenses Act; Section 8(2) of the Children's Protection and Adoption Act; Section 3 of the Trafficking in Persons Act (7, 10, 21, 23, 24)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 156 of the Criminal Law Act; Section 10 of the Children's Protection and Adoption Act (7)
Minimum Age for Military Recruitment
State Compulsory	Yes	18	Section 9 of the National Service Act (25)
State Voluntary	Yes	16	Sections 5 and 10 of the National Service Act (25)
Non-state Compulsory	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12 [‡]	Section 5 of the Education Act (26)
Free Public Education	No

[‡] Age calculated based on available information (27)

Zimbabwean law does not mandate free basic education for children.(28) Lack of access to basic education may increase the risk of children's involvement in child labor.(7) In addition, children in Zimbabwe are required to attend school only up to age 12. This standard makes children ages 12 through 15 vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to attend school and not legally permitted to work.(27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law and criminal law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Welfare (MPSLSW)	Enforce labor laws and investigate labor-related complaints, including complaints involving child labor. Established a Department for Child Welfare and Probation Services responsible for child protection services, including investigating, intervening in, and reporting on child abuse cases.(7, 10)
Zimbabwe Republic Police (ZRP)	Enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor in conjunction with the MPSLSW and the Ministry of Justice and Home Affairs.(7) Address issues related to child labor through victim-friendly units in every district. Conduct transnational trafficking investigations through an anti-trafficking desk at Zimbabwe's INTERPOL office.(7)
Ministry of Justice and Legal Affairs	Oversee all courts, including labor courts. Address trafficking and child victim cases through victim-friendly courts.(7)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, labor law enforcement agencies in Zimbabwe took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Zimbabwe

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

During the year, the Government disaggregated the number of child labor cases, including its worst forms. The Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Welfare (MPSLSW) reported cases involving Zimbabwean children: 304 of child labor, 66 of child prostitution, and 6 of child trafficking.(11) According to the MPSLSW, 132 children were withdrawn from the worst forms of child labor and referred to social services.(11)

According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Zimbabwe should employ roughly 540 labor inspectors.(29, 30) Research indicates that the Government continues to lack sufficient resources, mainly financial, to investigate child labor law violations.(2, 31)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, criminal law enforcement agencies in Zimbabwe did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Address the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the MPSLSW and includes several government ministries, including the ministries of Health and Child Care; Primary and Secondary Education; and Youth Development, Indigenization, and Empowerment.(32) Also includes international organizations and civil society groups, such as workers' and employers' organizations.(32, 33) The committee did not meet during the year.(11)
Ministry-Level Committee on Children's Issues	Coordinate government ministries' efforts related to children's issues, including child labor. Includes the MPSLSW and the ministries of Education; Women's Affairs; and Youth Development, Indigenization, and Empowerment.(7, 10, 32) The committee met during the year.
Child Protection Committees	Operate at the village, ward, district, provincial, and national levels to discuss issues affecting children, including child labor. Representatives include ministries, civil society, local volunteers, and teachers. Report to the Ministry-Level Committee on Children's Issues. The committees met regularly during the year.(11)
National Task Force on Street Children	Outline strategies to combat child labor, including feeding street children at drop-in centers, reuniting children with their families, and offering counseling sessions. Chaired by the MPSLSW and includes NGOs that work on street children's issues.(7, 32) Also includes the Ministry of Home Affairs, represented by the ZRP. The taskforce met twice during the year.(11)
Anti-Trafficking Inter-Ministerial Committee	Create a national action plan to combat human trafficking and promote the reintegration and rehabilitation of trafficking victims, including children.(2, 34) The Committee met during the year to discuss and develop strategies to address trafficking in persons. In 2016, developed and launched the Trafficking in Persons National Plan of Action.(11)

During the year, the MPSLSW oversaw a national case management system that is operational in all 65 districts for child care workers to identify, report, and address child abuse cases, including child labor.(11)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor	Strengthens understanding about child labor issues and creates an entity to coordinate responses to the findings of this analysis. Consists of three focus areas: education assistance, poverty assistance through a cash transfer scheme, and health assistance.(7)
Trafficking in Persons National Plan of Action (2016–2018)	Aims to implement the UN Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons through the development of strategies to combat human trafficking, with emphasis on prevention, protection, prosecution, and partnership. The plan was developed with technical support from IOM, UNODC, and the Southern African Development Community, and officially launched in July 2016.(35)

Although the MPSLSW, in collaboration with the ILO, previously conducted a child labor rapid assessment that prompted the development of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor, the Government took no actions to operationalize the plan and did not use the results of the assessment to inform policies or programs.(2)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Phase III of the National Action Plan for Orphans and Vulnerable Children (NAP OVC III) (2016–2020)	UNICEF Child Protection Fund program that includes a focus on equity and access to quality education for children and provides child protection services. Provides a cash transfer program that encourages families to keep children in school.(36) During the year, cash transfers reached at least 52,000 poor households in 19 districts, and provided child protection and welfare services to 35,460 children in 37 districts.(11)
Stop Child Labor Program	Hivos-funded program that establishes child labor-free zones throughout the country. The program includes the Ministry of Labor, Coalition Against Child Labor in Zimbabwe, African Network for the Prevention and Protection Against Child Abuse and Neglect, Progressive Teachers Union of Zimbabwe, Zimbabwe Teachers' Association, and the General Agriculture and Plantation Workers Union.(11) Teachers, labor inspectors, police officers, and other stakeholders support this initiative by sending child laborers back to school.(37) During the year, the program developed a social responsibility project to address child labor in plantations, resulting in 178 children being withdrawn from child labor and sent back to school.(11)
Basic Education Assistance Module†	Government program, supported by the UK Department for International Development, that provides basic financial assistance to families for education costs, such as tuition and examination fees. Aims to keep children in school and to enroll children who lack access to school as a result of economic hardship.(38)

† Program is funded by the Government of Zimbabwe.

The Zimbabwe Youth Council, in collaboration with UNICEF, developed an online platform for sharing and educating the public about harmful social practices that affect children.(39) Although Zimbabwe has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

Non-Independent Countries and Territories

There is limited information regarding child labor and government efforts to combat it in non-independent countries and territories eligible for GSP benefits. Obtaining data on the prevalence and distribution of the worst forms of child labor in these countries is difficult, and statistics on children's work and school attendance are often not available from the sources used in this report. In some cases, there is no evidence to suggest that the worst forms of child labor exist in certain territories. In these cases, when laws appear to meet the guidelines called for in ILO C. 182 and embodied in the TDA, and when the territory has a good enforcement framework, no suggested actions have been included.

With regard to ratification of key international conventions concerning child labor, these non-independent countries and territories generally are not eligible to become members of the ILO. However, although they are not members of the ILO, ILO C. 138 and ILO C. 182 may apply to some of them.^(1, 2) Similarly, ratification of other conventions, such as the UNCRC, may apply to some of them.

Across non-independent countries and territories, research found a variety of legal structures that govern laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms. Some territories are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense. Domestic laws in the metropolis do not generally apply to these territories, unless explicitly extended. In other territories, certain domestic laws of the metropolis apply, and in a few territories, all domestic laws in the metropolis apply.

Research found some information on the efforts of non-independent countries and territories in the areas of laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and programs; however, this information, in many cases, was limited.

Assessments

Evidence suggests that the worst forms of child labor are an issue in some non-independent countries and territories. These entities are assessed in the same manner that all other countries are assessed in this report. Other non-independent countries and territories do not appear to have a problem with the worst forms of child labor. These entities fall into three types.

The first type of non-independent country or territory is one in which the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (fewer than 60). For this reason, ILAB does not write profiles on these territories. The three territories that fit this category are Heard and McDonald Islands, the Pitcairn Islands, and the British Indian Ocean Territories/Chagos Archipelago. The Heard and McDonald Islands are uninhabited, and the population of the Pitcairn Islands is fewer than 54 people.⁽³⁾ The British Indian Ocean Territories/Chagos Archipelago is inhabited by U.S. and U.K. military personnel.⁽⁴⁾

The second type of non-independent country or territory is one with no evidence of a worst form of child labor problem and with a good legal and enforcement framework. Given both the lack of a demonstrated problem and the presence of a preventive legal and enforcement framework, ILAB does not assess the efforts of or include suggested actions for these territories. Such entities will be marked “No Assessment.” Wallis and Futuna was the only territory not assessed in 2016.

The third type of non-independent country or territory is one assessed by advancement. A country or territory in this group received an assessment of advancement indicating whether it was making Significant, Moderate, Minimal, or No Advancement in its efforts to prevent or eliminate the worst forms of child labor. For 2016, Western Sahara received an assessment of Significant Advancement; Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, Cook Islands, the Falkland Islands (Islas Malvinas), Montserrat, Norfolk Island, Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha, and the West Bank and the Gaza Strip received an assessment of Minimal Advancement; and Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, Niue, and Tokelau received an assessment of No Advancement.

Most of the areas covered in the summary report are considered non-metropolitan territories and are therefore ineligible to become members of the ILO. While the ILO still does not have an official definition for “non-metropolitan territory,” in earlier versions of the ILO Constitution, “colonies, protectorates and possessions which are not fully self governing” was used in place of this term. An ILO member can submit a declaration to the ILO requesting that these conventions apply to their non-metropolitan areas. See the chart regarding ratifications of international conventions and selected non-independent country and territory laws.

CHRISTMAS ISLAND

NO ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Christmas Island made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including the worst forms, exists in Christmas Island, a gap in the legal framework for light work leaves children vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

COCOS (KEELING) ISLANDS

NO ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, gaps exist in the legal framework to prevent children from involvement in the worst forms of child labor, including a minimum age for light work that is below international standards.

NORFOLK ISLAND

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Norfolk Island made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. In June, the Norfolk Island Administration Act went into effect, which established that New South Wales state laws apply to Norfolk Island; this raised the compulsory education age to 17 years. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists on Norfolk Island, gaps in the legal framework fail to prevent children from involvement in the worst forms of child labor. Legislation does not prescribe a minimum age for employment, prohibit hazardous work for children, or fully protect minors under age 18 from commercial sexual exploitation.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms exists on Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, or Norfolk Island.(1, 2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Christmas Island (CI), Cocos (Keeling) Islands (CKI), and Norfolk Island (NI) are included as part of the territory of the Australian Commonwealth, which provides for their defense.(1, 3-6) According to the Government of Australia, the extent to which legislation, including laws implementing Australia's treaty obligations, applies to these external territories varies.(7) For Christmas Island and Cocos (Keeling) Islands, all legislation of the Federal Parliament applies, unless specifically excluded.(7) For Norfolk Island, legislation of the Federal Parliament applies only if it is clearly stated to do so or if it is obvious from the legislation in question that it was intended to do so.(7) Thus these territories follow a combination of their own laws and some of the laws of Australia.(7)

Because Australia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor, the following conventions apply to Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands and Norfolk Island (Table 1).

CHRISTMAS ISLAND AND COCOS (KEELING) ISLANDS

Christmas Island and Cocos (Keeling) Islands are subject to the laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms, of the Commonwealth of Australia and the state of Western Australia.(1)

In Christmas Island and Cocos (Keeling) Islands, the Government of Western Australia's Children and Community Services Act sets the minimum age for light work in delivery employment at 10 years if the child is accompanied by a parent or an authorized adult.(8)

This is not in compliance with international standards, which set the minimum age for light work at 13.

Overseas Territories of Australia

Research found that laws related to child trafficking and illicit activities are not sufficient as trafficking across international borders is not a criminal offence and the use of children in the production of drugs is not explicitly criminalized.(10)

For Christmas Island and Cocos (Keeling) Islands, the Western Australia School Education Act notes that education is compulsory until the end of the year in which a child reaches age 17 years and 6 months; until the child finishes the minimum requirements for secondary school graduation under the Curriculum Council Act of 1997; or until the child reaches age 18, whichever comes first.(14)

NORFOLK ISLAND

Norfolk Island is a self-governing territory of Australia and is subject to the child labor laws of the Commonwealth of Australia and its own laws.(15, 16) The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2).

NORFOLK ISLAND

* No conscription (13)

Norfolk Island does not have a minimum age for work. Under the Norfolk Island Employment Act, children younger than age 15 may begin working with certain limitations.(15, 17) This is not in compliance with international standards because it allows the employment of children under the age of 15. It also fails to meet international standards because it is lower than the compulsory age for education and may increase the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

In addition, the Government is not in compliance with international standards as it does not have a minimum age for hazardous work, has not identified hazardous occupations prohibited for children, does not protect children age 16 and 17 from commercial sexual exploitation, and has not criminalized the use of children illicit activities, including in the production of drugs.(19)

On June 1, 2016, the Norfolk Island Administration Act went into effect, which established that New South Wales (NSW) state laws apply to Norfolk Island. This includes raising the compulsory education age to 17.(2, 21, 22) While this legislation has the potential for improving legal protections for children engaged in child labor, including its worst forms, it is unclear how and when NSW's child labor laws will be implemented on Norfolk Island.(2, 21)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although there is no evidence of a problem, the Government of Australia has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms, which apply to Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, and Norfolk Island. Additionally, Norfolk Island has its own institutional mechanisms to enforce labor laws and regulations on child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

CHRISTMAS ISLAND/COCOS (KEELING) ISLANDS
Organization/Agency	Role
Australian Federal Police, the Department of Immigration, and the Department of Regional Development	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(23) In the case of the Child Protection Operations Team, coordinate and investigate online and multijurisdictional online child sex exploitation issues, including child pornography.(24) In the case of Human Trafficking Teams, investigate human trafficking for the purpose of transnational sexual and labor exploitation.(23)
Australian Department of Child Protection	Issue orders to stop a child from working if there is a risk of harm.(25)

Western Australian WorkSafe Inspectors provide services on Christmas Island and Cocos (Keeling) Islands, where they have the right to enter, at any time, any workplace including aircraft, ships, and vehicles where employees work or are likely to be in the course of their work. Inspectors have unrestricted access to workplaces, except where there is a statutory restriction, to determine whether employers are in compliance with the Occupational Safety and Health Act.(2, 26)

NORFOLK ISLAND
Organization/Agency	Role
Norfolk Island Employment Inspectors and Child Welfare Officers	Monitor the employment of young workers and take action with regard to their protection. Work to prevent the production of child pornography.(23)
Australian Federal Police	Responsible for law enforcement services on Norfolk Island, including combating transnational crimes.(27, 28)

Prior to June 1, 2016, Norfolk Island employed approximately two labor inspectors to conduct regular workplace inspections; however, New South Wales (NSW) assumed social service responsibilities once NSW laws went into effect. (2)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although there is no evidence of a problem, the Government of Australia has established a mechanism to address child labor, including its worst forms, in Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, and Norfolk Island (Table 4).

Table 4. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

CHRISTMAS ISLAND/COCOS (KEELING) ISLANDS/NORFOLK ISLAND
Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interdepartmental Committee on Human Trafficking	Chaired by the Attorney General's Department, deals with child labor issues from a human trafficking perspective and consists of 10 government agencies.(16)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms in Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, and Norfolk Island.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms in Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, and Norfolk Island.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO PREVENT THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, a suggested action is identified that would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, and Norfolk Island (Table 5).

WALLIS AND FUTUNA

NO ASSESSMENT

For the 2016 reporting period, no assessment has been made regarding Wallis and Futuna's efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor because there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and the country has good legal and enforcement frameworks on child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Wallis and Futuna. Wallis and Futuna has a population of 12,200 inhabitants, including 3,420 children.(1, 2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Wallis and Futuna is considered a French Overseas Collectivity and therefore Wallis and Futuna cannot ratify international conventions; however, France's ratification of such conventions applies to Wallis and Futuna.(3) France has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓

French law applies in Wallis and Futuna.(1, 4) The Government of France has established laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2). However, gaps exist in Wallis and Futuna's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 2. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even with no evidence of a problem, the Government of France has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Service of Labor and Social Affairs Inspection (SITAS) of Wallis and Futuna	Enforce labor laws and report violations involving children to local social assistance personnel.(1, 2)
Defender of Rights	Promote children's rights, including through the prohibition of child labor.(12)
French National Police	Oversee the health and safety of children.(1)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for social programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO PREVENT THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Wallis and Futuna (Table 4).

Table 4. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

COOK ISLANDS

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Cook Islands made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued its participation in the UN Development Assistance Framework for the Pacific Region, which includes youth initiatives related to access to education and security in the Cook Islands. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the Cook Islands, gaps in the Government's legal framework may make children more vulnerable to being exploited for the production of pornography or pornographic performances and being used in illicit activities.

NIUE

NO ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Niue made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. While there is no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Niue, the Government has not established adequate legal protection to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The law does not criminally prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, the production of pornography, or pornographic performances or the use of children for illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs. In addition, Niue has not established a minimum age for work and lacks a law that prohibits hazardous occupations and activities for children.

TOKELAU

NO ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Tokelau made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. While Tokelau has laws to prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities, it does not have laws that establish a minimum age for work and prohibit forced labor and child trafficking.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the Cook Islands, Niue, and Tokelau.

(1) Table 1 provides key statistics on one key indicator on children's education in the Cook Islands, the only New Zealand territory for which information is available. Data on key indicators for Niue and Tokelau are not available from the sources used in this report.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

COOK ISLANDS

The Cook Islands is a self-governing territory in free association with New Zealand, and follows a combination of its own laws and some of the laws of New Zealand and the United Kingdom that were enacted prior to self-government in 1965.(4, 5)

Overseas Territories of New Zealand

Since 1988, no treaty signed, ratified, accepted, approved, or acceded to by New Zealand extends to the Cook Islands, unless New Zealand acted expressly on behalf of the Cook Islands.(4) The Cook Islands has ratified one key international convention concerning child labor (Table 2).

NIUE

Niue is a self-governing territory of New Zealand and is fully responsible for its internal affairs.(6) Niue has ratified one key international convention concerning child labor (Table 2).

Since 1988, no treaty signed, ratified, accepted, approved, or acceded to by New Zealand extends to Niue, unless it was done expressly on behalf of Niue.(4)

TOKELAU

Tokelau is a dependent territory of New Zealand; however, international treaties are applied only with the consent of the Government of Tokelau. New Zealand's ratification of conventions does not apply automatically to Tokelau, and it is unknown which international treaties Tokelau has consented to.(4, 7, 8)

The Governments of the Cook Islands, Niue, and Tokelau have established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

There are no armed forces in the Cook Islands, Niue, and Tokelau.(9, 10) New Zealand is responsible for the defense of the territories at their request and consultation.(9)

In 2012, the Cook Islands enacted the Employment Relations Act, which prohibits children younger than age 13 from being employed.(11, 17) The Act also prohibits a school-aged person, defined as ages 13 to 16, from working during normal school hours, working for more than 10 hours a week outside of school hours, or doing work that is not considered light work.(11) However, the minimum age for work is not in compliance with international standards because the Employment Relations Act permits children as young as age 13 to work.(11)

The Cook Islands' Crimes Act and the 2004 Amendment prohibit prostitution, but do not address child commercial sexual exploitation, including the use, procuring, or offering of children for the production of pornography and for pornographic performances.(5, 14, 18, 19) In 2010, the Cook Islands began a comprehensive review of the Crimes Act to amend provisions to include criminalizing child prostitution and child pornography.(18, 20) The Act has yet to be modified.(1) A draft Family Law Bill, which will include legislation on child protection, has been pending since 2014.(1) Laws specifically prohibiting the use of children for illicit activities and recruitment by non-state armed groups do not exist.(1, 21)

Although Niue's Public Service Regulations prohibit the permanent employment of any person under age 18 in public service, minimum age protections do not apply to children working in the private sector.(21, 25) In addition, Niue has not determined by national law or regulation the minimum age for work and hazardous work or the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.(21, 26)

In Niue, laws related to forced labor are not sufficient as only trafficking in persons, and not debt bondage or slavery, is prohibited. Niue's law prohibiting child trafficking is also insufficient as it does not criminalize the trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation or forced labor.(22) Commercial sexual exploitation of children, including the use, offering, or procurement of a child for prostitution, production of pornography, or pornographic performances, is not criminally prohibited. Research also has not identified laws regarding the use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs, and recruitment by non-state armed groups.(21)

Tokelau has not determined by national law or regulation the minimum age for work or the minimum age for hazardous work. Tokelau also has not established laws related to forced labor, including debt bondage. In addition, laws related to child trafficking do not exist.(21)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even though there is no evidence of a problem, the Governments of the Cook Islands, Niue, and Tokelau have established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Overseas Territories of New Zealand

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

COOK ISLANDS
Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Internal Affairs and Social Services, Labor and Employment Relations Office	Provide child services.(1) In the case of the Labor and Consumer Affairs Division, implement child labor laws in the Cook Islands.(30)
Cook Islands Police Service	Enforce child labor laws.(1)
NIUE
Organization/Agency	Role
Niue Police Department	Enforce all laws, including those related to child labor, including its worst forms.(1)
Department of Justice	Investigate crimes, including cases involving the worst forms of child labor.(1)
TOKELAU
Organization/Agency	Role
New Zealand Ombudsmen	Address citizens' complaints against a government office related to child labor, child health, safety, and education.(30)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms, in the Cook Islands, Niue, and Tokelau.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address the worst forms of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Cook Islands, Niue, and Tokelau.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Even though there is no evidence of a problem, the Government of the Cook Islands has an established policy related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

COOK ISLANDS
Policy	Description
Cook Islands National Youth Policy (2015–2020)	Identifies priority areas for youth, including education and work opportunities, health, and youth risk and resilience.(31)

In 2015, the Cook Islands released a youth study that indicated that children and young adults ages 15 through 24 were employed as laborers and in restaurants, accommodations, offices, and other areas in the Cook Islands; however the report did not specifically address whether children under age 18 were involved in child labor, including its worst forms.(32) In addition, the Government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Country Partnership Framework and UN Development Assistance Framework.(33)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem in the Cook Islands, Niue, and Tokelau, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO PREVENT THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Cook Islands, Niue, and Tokelau (Table 6).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. ANGUILLA

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Anguilla made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Anguilla. The Government funded an online system for the public to report commercial sexual exploitation, which transfers cases reported online involving children to the police. However, the law does not prohibit the involvement of children in illicit activities or provide a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children.

BRITISH VIRGIN ISLANDS

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the British Virgin Islands made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the British Virgin Islands. The Government funded an online system for the public to report commercial sexual exploitation, which transfers cases reported online involving children to the police. However, the law does not prohibit the involvement of children in illicit activities, and the minimum age for recruitment by non-state armed groups does not meet international standards.

FALKLAND ISLANDS (ISLAS MALVINAS)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, the Falkland Islands made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in the Falkland Islands. The Government continued to fund an online system for the public to report commercial sexual exploitation, which transfers cases reported online involving children to the police. However, the minimum age for work and hazardous work do not meet international standards. The law also does not prohibit the involvement of children in illicit activities.

MONTSERRAT

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Montserrat made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Montserrat. The Government funded an online system for the public to report commercial sexual exploitation, which transfers cases reported online involving children to the police. However, the law does not prohibit the involvement of children in illicit activities, and the minimum age for recruitment by non-state armed groups does not meet international standards.

SAINT HELENA, ASCENSIÓN, AND TRISTÁN DA CUNHA (FORMERLY SAINT HELENA)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha (formerly Saint Helena) made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha. The Government funded an online system for the public to report commercial sexual exploitation, which transfers cases reported online involving children to the police. However, there isn't a minimum age for work and the law does not prohibit the involvement of children in illicit activities. Gaps also remain in forced labor legislation and in the prohibition of trafficking of children for labor exploitation.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

British Overseas Territories recognize the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United Kingdom, but they are constitutionally not part of the UK. They are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense.(6) Domestic UK law does not generally apply unless explicitly extended in Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, and Montserrat. The Falkland Islands and Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha generally incorporate English Law Ordinances to the extent permitted by local circumstances and subject to modification by local laws.(3) Under Article 35(4) of the ILO Constitution, when the UK ratifies a Convention, the Territory must consider if it will accept the Convention. If the Convention is accepted, it is considered applicable to that territory.(3, 6) The following conventions have been extended to the Overseas Territories of the UK (Table 2).

In 2016, Anguilla held a series of consultations for the passage of the Status of Children Bill and the Maintenance of Children Bill.(13-15) The Status of Children Bill abolishes the distinction between children born in wedlock and out of wedlock, providing them equal status.(15, 16) The Maintenance of Children Bill grants access to the child if both parents are separated, obligating them to maintain and provide upbringing to the child.(14, 16)

The minimum age for work of 12 does not meet international standards. There is a minimum age of 14 that only applies to industrial undertakings, transportation of passengers or goods by roads or rail, and work on ships.(7, 8) The minimum age for hazardous work of 14 also does not meet international standards. However, there is a prohibition of night work for children under age 16 in manufacturing of raw sugar and a prohibition of night work in other industrial undertakings for children under 18.(7) Additionally, research could not determine whether Anguillan law prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, such as drug trafficking, because the Drug Trafficking Ordinance was not publically available. The law does not criminally prohibit the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.(9)

In the British Virgin Islands, the Labor Code specifies that hazardous work is to be defined by the Minister. The Government plans to establish a committee of officials from the Ministry of Education and Culture, the Ministry of Health and Social Development, the Ministry of Natural Resources and Labor, and the Deputy Governor's Office to develop a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children.(2) However, the Government has not yet determined the types of hazardous work prohibited for children beyond night work and the use of dangerous machinery.(2) The law does not criminally prohibit the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.

In the Falkland Islands, the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Ordinance of 1968, (EWYPC Ordinance) as amended in 2006, and the Employment of Children Ordinance extend to the Falkland Islands.(24) The EWYPC Ordinance makes it illegal to employ children under age 15 in work that exposes them to physical, psychological, or sexual abuse.(29) The EWYPC Ordinance protects these children from night work, work underground, work underwater, work at dangerous heights, and work in confined spaces, as well as from work that requires using dangerous machinery, equipment, or tools without training and supervision.(22, 25) The minimum age of 15 for hazardous work is not in compliance with international standards.

The Drug Trafficking Ordinance does not prohibit adults from using, procuring, and offering a child in the production and trafficking of drugs in the Falkland Islands.(30) Although child trafficking has not been identified as a problem, the law does not criminalize trafficking children for labor exploitation.(22, 26, 27) Also, the law does not criminally prohibit the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.

The Government of the Falkland Islands has implemented the Children Ordinance of 2014 with the aim of providing additional legal protection for children on the islands.(31) It is unclear whether this law addresses child labor, because this law does not appear to have been made public.

In Montserrat, the Labor Code prohibits the employment of children under age 16; however, it includes an exception allowing the employment of children older than age 14 in light work. In addition, children under age 18 may not be employed at night or in occupations designated as hazardous.(32) The Minister of Labor for Montserrat is entrusted with the responsibility of deciding what constitutes hazardous work.(32) The law does not criminally prohibit the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups. Research could not find whether the law prohibits the use of children in illicit activities.

In 2016, the Government of Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha (Government of STATC) stated that it intends to make their laws fully compliant with the UN CRC in the near future. During the reporting period, the laws were being reviewed and consolidated for a bill to be introduced in 2017.(3)

Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha do not have laws establishing a minimum age for work.(40) The minimum age of 15 for work on vessels is not in compliance with international standards because the Government of STATC has reported that work on fishing vessels is hazardous.(1, 4) The laws prohibiting forced labor in Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha are not sufficient as debt bondage and slavery are prohibited constitutionally, but not criminally.(37) While the UK Sexual Offences Act, which is applicable to this territory, prohibits trafficking for sexual exploitation, there are no laws prohibiting the trafficking of children for labor exploitation.(41) The law also does not criminally prohibit the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, the Falkland Islands, and Montserrat, the UK Government has established an institutional mechanism for the enforcement of labor laws, although child labor is not a problem. In Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha, where child labor is not reported to be a problem, research did not find institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of child labor (Table 4).

Royal Anguilla Police Force	Investigate child protection cases.(44, 45)

Royal Montserrat Police Service	Enforce laws involving children.(48)
Department of Social Services	Employ social workers to work on child protection issues.(48)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Governments of Anguilla and the Falklands Islands have established a mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms, although there appears to be no evidence of a problem. The British Virgin Islands, Montserrat, and Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha do not have mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms, but there is no evidence of a problem in these territories (Table 5).

Table 5. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

ANGUILLA
Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Social Development	Implement child protection efforts and ensure that Anguilla complies with the CRC.(43)

FALKLAND ISLANDS
Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Falkland Islands Safeguarding Children Board	Ensure children's welfare, including protection from sexual abuses. Chaired by the Director of Health and Social Services, members include the Education Department, the Attorney General's Chambers, Social Services, Royal Falkland Islands Police, healthcare professionals, members of the Legislative Assembly, and a representative from the military community.(49)

In 2016, the UK Government funded an online system for reporting commercial sexual exploitation in Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, Montserrat, and Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha.(3) It allows people to report child abuse anonymously online. Reports are assessed and forwarded to the police.(3) While the Falkland Islands were not part of the funding for this reporting system, they continued to implement a similar system to report commercial sexual exploitation.(50)

At the 2016 Overseas Territories Joint Ministerial Council, leaders of the UK OTs discussed the development of a national response plan for child safeguarding on the islands.(3) The Government of the British Virgin Islands, the Falkland Islands, Montserrat, and Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha signed an Overseas Territory Memorandum of Understanding developed by the Falkland Islands. The Memorandum promotes more effective collaboration between the UK OTs.(3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms, in Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, the Falkland Islands, Montserrat, and Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha. However, Anguilla has established the Child Protection National Action Plan, Safeguarding and Child Protection

Overseas Territories of United Kingdom

Protocols and Procedures and an Inter-Agency Child Protection Protocol. All of these policies may contribute to the prevention of child labor.(13, 40, 42-45, 51-53)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms, in Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, the Falkland Islands, Montserrat, and Saint Helena, Ascension, and Tristan da Cunha. However, Anguilla has established the Safeguarding Children in Anguilla Project, Department for Youth and Culture Programming, and Child Safeguarding in the Overseas Territories Regional Project that may contribute to the prevention of child labor.(43, 54-56) The British Virgin Islands has established the Child Safeguarding in the Overseas Territories Regional Project and other child protection programs that may contribute to the prevention of child labor.(2, 55) Montserrat has established the UNICEF Program on Children's Rights, Policies, and Education that may contribute to the prevention of child labor.(57)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO PREVENT THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, the Falkland Islands, Montserrat, and Saint Helena, Ascension, and Tristan da Cunha (Table 6).

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2016, the Palestinian Authority made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the areas of the West Bank under its control. The Palestinian Authority took steps to enforce child labor laws and improve coordination among government agencies in their work to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, children in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in construction and illicit activities. The legal framework does not criminally prohibit all elements of child trafficking. In addition, programs to prevent or eliminate child labor in agriculture and street work are insufficient.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in construction and illicit activities.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2016.(8)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2016.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cultivating asparagus, dates, eggplants, onions, sweet peppers, grapes, tomatoes, and marijuana (4, 10-18)
	Fishing,† including working on fishing boats and repairing nets (1, 2, 4, 5, 19, 20)
	Raising livestock, including poultry and sheep (2, 4, 21)
Industry	Construction,† including demolishing buildings and collecting rubble and gravel for construction purposes (1-5)
	Manufacturing, including working in pottery workshops (2, 3, 5)
	Blacksmithing† (2)
Services	Street vending and portering (2-5, 22)
	Working in auto body shops and metal workshops (2-4, 22)
	Working in shops, restaurants, bakeries, or hotels (2, 5, 19, 22)
	Transporting goods (4, 23)
	Collecting scrap metal, cement bricks, and solid waste† (1, 2, 16, 21)
	Scavenging garbage, steel, and gravel at trash pits (19, 24, 25)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Use in illicit activities, including smuggling drugs and food (4-7)
	Begging as a result of human trafficking (26)
	Commercial sexual exploitation (21)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

There are reports of child trafficking from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip into Israel, primarily for forced begging.(6, 21, 27) Children are vulnerable to child labor in the agricultural sector, partly because the Palestinian Authority (PA) does not have jurisdiction to enforce laws in Area C's agricultural fields and Israeli settlements in the West Bank. There are reports of child labor in Israeli agricultural settlements in the Jordan Valley, where children work in excessive heat and are exposed to dangerous pesticides.(5, 7, 10, 16-18) The PA has documented cases in which child laborers were injured at work in the settlements and taken to hospitals in the West Bank.(5)

In the Gaza Strip, many school structures, which had been damaged, destroyed, or repurposed during the war of 2014, have not been repaired or replaced.(5) Insecurity also hinders children's access to schools.(28, 29) Schools are overcrowded, poorly equipped, and at times unhygienic or susceptible to weather conditions.(30-32) Violence and discrimination by teachers against students who work, as well as the cost of transportation, contribute to a school dropout rate of 16 percent.(33, 34) According to the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), settler violence, military operations, delays at checkpoints, and school closures also limit access to education for Palestinian children.(35, 36)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The PA has Non-Member Observer status at the UN. In April 2014, PA officials presented letters of accession to 15 UN treaties to UN officials, including the UN CRC and its Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	N/A
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The PA has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

† No standing military in the West Bank (7)

Although human trafficking is on the hazardous work list, the law does not criminally prohibit child trafficking in accordance with international standards.(38, 39) There are no criminal penalties for recruiting children into non-state armed groups.(37)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The PA has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5). However, gaps in labor law enforcement remain and some enforcement information is not available.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL), Labor Inspection Office	Enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor.(43)
Ministry of Social Affairs (MOSA), Child Protection Department	Protect children's rights, including through the provision of services to children found involved in the worst forms of child labor.(44)
Police	Investigate violations of criminal laws, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (44)
Office of the Attorney General	Prosecute cases of child exploitation, including child labor.(44)

In the West Bank, under the terms of the Oslo-era agreements between the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Israeli Government, the PA has civil law jurisdiction in the areas of the West Bank designated Area A and Area B, which represent approximately 39 percent of the West Bank's land area and contain approximately 94 percent of the Palestinian population. The Israeli Government has control over the city of Jerusalem and Area C; the latter represents 61 percent of the West Bank's land area and approximately 6 percent of the Palestinian population, as well as the vast majority of the West Bank's agricultural areas where many Palestinian children work.(43, 45-48) Since the 2007 takeover in the Gaza Strip by Hamas, the PA has not had enforcement capabilities in the Gaza Strip, despite the creation of the PA interim consensus government in 2014.(43, 45, 49)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2016, PA labor law enforcement agencies in the West Bank took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2016, PA criminal law enforcement agencies in the West Bank took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2016, the Ministry of Social Affairs (MOSA) provided training to judges, police officers, and social workers. PA officials stated that inadequate resources, including limited training, hampered their capacity to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Three cases of prosecution related to the worst forms of child labor were pending at the end of 2016.(5)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The PA has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms, in the West Bank (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on Child Labor	Create national policy on child labor. Led by the MOL and includes representatives from four other ministries, as well as international organizations.(23) In 2016, the Committee met regularly, which, together with the efforts of MOSA Child Protection Networks, resulted in improved coordination among government agencies.(5)
MOSA Child Protection Networks	Coordinate at the district level between service providers, law enforcement, and the Attorney General to protect vulnerable children, including those involved in child labor.(44, 52) Composed of MOSA, other PA agencies, and international organizations. The role of some agencies is to provide services to vulnerable children, while others ensure that crimes against children are prosecuted in accordance with the law.(44, 52)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The PA has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms, in the West Bank (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Development Plan (2014–2016)	Aimed to improve the living standards of residents, including through alleviating poverty and reducing unemployment. Included components to better regulate the economic activities of working children and remove more child laborers from the labor market.(53) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Development Plan during the reporting period.

Although the PA has adopted the National Development Plan, research found no evidence of a policy that includes all worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the PA funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor†

Program	Description
MOSA Social Protection Programs†	MOSA programs in the West Bank that provide cash assistance, health insurance, and free education.(52) Families are assessed for eligibility; one of the goals is to prevent families from resorting to child labor. MOSA and the Ministry of Education also make efforts to ensure that children who have dropped out are sent back to school.(52)
MOSA Vocational Centers†	MOSA program in the West Bank that operates 13 vocational centers for children who have dropped out of school.(44)
UN Education Programs	UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) programs that provide educational support for children and youth in refugee camps, and microfinance and other forms of support to families in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.(54) In 2016, UNICEF provided protective presence to children as they commuted to school, as harassment on the way to school in Area C of the West Bank is a key barrier to education. UNICEF also rehabilitated school buildings in the Gaza Strip.(55)

† Program is partially funded by the PA.

‡ In 2016, the PA had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(56)

MOSA previously indicated that additional educational programs are needed in order to address child labor, but it lacked sufficient funding to implement them.(21) Although there are programs in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, including in agriculture and street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 into non-state armed groups.	2016
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits all stages of human trafficking, trafficking for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation, and both domestic and international trafficking, in accordance with international standards.	2015 – 2016
Enforcement	Ensure that child labor laws are enforced in the Gaza Strip.	2010 – 2016
	Publish information on the labor inspectorate, including the amount of funding, the number of child labor violations for which penalties were issued, and whether penalties were collected.	2010 – 2016
	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2016
	Provide further resources and staff to the MOL and MOSA to conduct inspections, and to provide further training on the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2016

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Western Sahara

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2016, Morocco, which administers an estimated 80 percent of the territory of the Western Sahara, made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the portion of Western Sahara it controls. The Government of Morocco passed the Law on Trafficking in Human Beings, improving protections for children vulnerable to trafficking, and the Law on Setting Up Employment Conditions of Domestic Workers, limiting the employment of children between the ages of 16 and 18 for domestic work. The Government also launched an implementation plan for the Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children in Morocco, which aims to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. In addition, the Government continued to fund the Tayssir Conditional Cash Transfer Program, providing direct cash transfers of between $7 and $16 a month to qualifying families whose children meet school attendance criteria. Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Western Sahara perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Furthermore, the Government of Morocco has programs that target child labor; however, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Western Sahara perform dangerous tasks in agriculture.(1) In general, research has not been conducted on the extent of child labor in Western Sahara, nor has research explored education levels. Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.(2)

Commercial sexual exploitation of migrant girls occurs and is reportedly more prevalent in fishing villages and on fishing boats. Some children with disabilities beg in the streets.(3) Children, particularly in rural areas, are vulnerable to child labor due to similar barriers to educational opportunities faced in internationally recognized Morocco.(4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Moroccan-administered portion of the territory of Western Sahara is subject to the same laws as internationally recognized Morocco.(5-9) The Popular Front for the Liberation of the Saguia el-Hamra and Río de Oro (Polisario Front), a Sahrawi national liberation movement, controls the remaining 20 percent of the territory; information on the laws applicable in this sparsely populated area is unavailable.(1, 6, 10) Morocco has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor, which extend to the areas in Western Sahara administered by the Government of Morocco (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government of Morocco has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2). However, gaps exist in Morocco's legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 2. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 1 of Law No. 04-00 (16)

* No conscription (17)

In 2016, the Government of Morocco passed the Law on Trafficking in Human Beings, which is consistent with the Palermo Protocol and other international agreements.(13, 18) The Government also passed a law that provides protections for child domestic workers, setting the minimum age at 16 for domestic work; permits labor inspectors to mediate disputes between employers and domestic workers; and authorizes the Government to prosecute intermediaries who traffic children for labor exploitation.(18-20) The types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not fully cover sectors in which child labor is known to occur, and sectors in which work may be undertaken in conditions that harm children's health, safety, and morals.(12)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Morocco has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3). Information about labor law and criminal law enforcement in Western Sahara is unavailable.

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs	Enforce child labor laws and oversee programs on child labor through its child labor task force. Employ labor inspectors in 51 inspectorates across Morocco; dedicate at least one of the 53 child labor inspectors to each inspectorate.(1, 21-23) Provide occupational health and safety services, administer social security, and organize labor inspections and employment services through nationwide satellite offices.(22)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforce prohibitions on prostitution and other exploitive crimes involving minors, as established in the Penal Code.(21, 24)
Ministry of Justice and Liberties	Prosecute criminal offenses against children, such as commercial sexual exploitation and child trafficking, and violations of labor laws.(21, 25) The Ministry's Child Labor Units process cases involving women and children within the court system.(26)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Morocco has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Technical Committee Under the Special Ministerial Commission for the Protection and Improvement of Childhood	Ensure inter-sectoral coordination and monitoring of the implementation of international conventions on the issue of children through a committee of 25 government bodies, chaired by the President of the Government of the Kingdom of Morocco. Establish strategies and mechanisms to implement national policies and plans in the area of child protection and in coordination efforts managed primarily at the local and regional levels.(23, 27, 28)
Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs	Coordinate policies and efforts to combat child labor, providing guidance and limited funding to NGOs working against child labor through its Office for the Fight Against Child Labor.(22, 29, 30)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Solidarity, Women, Family, and Social Development (MSWFSD)	Continue child protection and child labor elimination efforts. Increase children's access to education. (24, 31) Responsible for implementing the Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children.(21, 32) Support 142 Child Reception Centers that provide services to child victims of violence.(23)
Ministry in Charge of Residents and Migration Affairs	Coordinate efforts to reduce migrant vulnerability to child labor. Promote migrant children's access to public education facilities in addition to other social services and assistance.(22, 23, 33)
Ministry of National Educational and Vocational Training (MONEVT)	Provide education and job training to former child workers, including former child domestic workers and migrant youth.(21, 23)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Morocco has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
MSWFSD's Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children in Morocco (PPIPEM)	Promotes an interdisciplinary approach to respond to child exploitation, among other issues. (21, 22, 32) In 2016, MSWFSD presented a National Implementation Program that defines the necessary measures to reach the five strategic objectives of the PPIPEM and the responsibilities of each Government of Morocco entity, including deadlines, and monitoring and evaluation indicators.(9, 34)

The Government of Morocco has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Migration Strategy and the UNDAF.(22, 26, 30, 35, 36)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2016, the Government of Morocco funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms, which extended to Western Sahara (Table 6).

Table 6. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor*

Program	Description
Tayssir Conditional Cash Transfer Program†	MONEVT program that provides direct cash transfers of between $7 and $16 a month to qualifying families whose children meet school attendance criteria and that aims to increase school enrollment and reduce dropout rates, particularly in rural areas, with 832,500 beneficiaries in 2015–2016 and an estimated 2016–2017 budget of $77.7 million.(1, 8, 22, 24, 32, 34, 37, 38)

† Program is funded by the Government of Morocco.

‡ The Government of Morocco had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms.(8, 9, 22, 30, 34)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Western Sahara (Table 7).

Table 7. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

On December 13, 2016, in Yemen, a smiling girl and her classmates are students at Huthaifa School, in Sana'a, the capital. Escalated conflict has exacerbated the already critical humanitarian situation in Yemen – where basic social services are on the verge of collapse, leaving millions of people without access to health care and safe water and adequate sanitation, as well as thousands of children out of school. An ongoing UNICEF Back to School campaign in coordination with the Ministry of Education and other education partners is helping to promote and facilitate children's access to protective learning environments, including through school repair, the establishment of temporary learning spaces and the provision of educational supplies.

CHILDREN'S WORK AND EDUCATION STATISTICS: SOURCES AND DEFINITIONS

Approximately 121 countries in this report include a statistical table (Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education) with data on the percentage of working children, school attendance rate, percentage of children who combine school and work, and/or primary completion rate. For a smaller set of profiles, the percentage of children who work by sector is provided in a chart in each profile.

This section provides definitions and describes the sources for these data. This section also discusses some of the strengths and weaknesses of these data. While in a few cases, more current sources of data may be available than those used here, this report uses the most reliable, standardized sources available to date to allow for cross-country comparisons. Because reliable child labor surveys are not available for many countries, in some cases, USDOL uses statistics from child labor surveys that are more than 10 years old (data from 2006) at the time of writing this report. In the event that data did not exist from the sources described below, no other reliable and publicly available source of data exists for a country, or data exists but has not been analyzed to allow for cross-country comparisons, the report concludes that the statistics are "unavailable."

Working Children (Children in Employment)

Many of the statistical tables in the country profiles in this report present data on the percentage and number of working children (children in employment) in the country in question. Data presented in the current report may differ from data that were presented in previous reports because more updated data have become available.

Definition

"Working children" or "children in employment" are those engaged in any economic activity for at least 1 hour during the reference period. Economic activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production (principally the production of goods and services for own use). The work children perform may be in the formal or informal economy, inside or outside family settings, or for pay or profit. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child's own household for an employer (paid or unpaid). This definition is in accordance with the Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labour (Resolution II) adopted by the 18th International Conference of Labour Statisticians in 2008, and the report Marking Progress Against Child Labour, published by the ILO in 2013.^(1, 2)

Children in Employment Versus Child Labor

This report presents statistics on working children rather than children involved in child labor (for the precise definitions of these terms, please see the "Definitions Related to Child Labor" section). The definition of working children does not vary among countries. For this reason, statistics on working children are comparable across countries. In contrast, child labor statistics are based on national legislation, including, for example, the minimum age for work, which varies from country to country. As a result, child labor data are not comparable across countries.

Data Sources and Limitations

Data are from UCW project analysis of primarily four survey types: (1) the ILO's SIMPOC surveys; (2) UNICEF's Multiple Indicator Cluster Surveys (MICS); (3) national Labor Force Surveys (LFS); and (4) other national and regional level household surveys, including Demographic and Health Surveys (DHS).⁽³⁾

According to the UCW researchers, typical surveys on children's work do not collect sufficient detailed information on children's activities to accurately measure economic activity.⁽⁴⁾ This sentiment was echoed in December 2008 at the 18th International Conference of Labor Statisticians. A resolution was adopted at the conference that provides guidelines for governments on collecting child labor data. Specifically, the guidance indicates that countries may choose to use a broad framework to measure children's work and child labor that encompasses unpaid household services or that countries may use a narrower definition of children's work that excludes such services, as long as the definition used is clearly specified.⁽⁵⁾ This resolution is contributing to the collection of more comparable data on children's involvement in non-market activities.

In analyzing the data from the above-mentioned surveys, the UCW attempted to apply a standard definition of children's work. Although UNICEF MICS and ILO SIMPOC reports, for example, each use a different definition of work (as of the writing of this report, MICS reports include household chores in their definition of work, while SIMPOC reports do not), to the extent possible, the UCW applied a common definition of work to the micro-data described. To date, this has resulted in the individual analysis of more than 184 data sets. While every attempt was made to present a standardized child work statistic, there are differences across surveys that have the potential to affect the comparability of statistics across countries and across years. Some of these differences are explained in greater detail here but, in general, include differing age groups, questionnaire content and wording, purpose of the survey, sample design, non-sampling errors, and year of data collection.

In general, data are presented for children ages 5–14, but some of the profiles present a work statistic for children ages 6–14, 7–14, or 10–14, depending on the age categories used in the original survey. The wording of work-related questions may also impact the results. For example, the question on work in these surveys usually refers to work during the past 7 days; however, some surveys may refer to work activities during the past 12 months, and are therefore likely to capture a higher proportion of working children than surveys with 7-day timeframes. The purpose of the survey—whether the survey is designed specifically to measure children's work and child labor (SIMPOC surveys) or to measure the labor force participation of adults—may affect estimates of children's work.⁽⁶⁾ In addition, sample design may impact survey results. For example, children's work is often geographically clustered, and SIMPOC surveys are designed to capture children's work in such geographic areas. As a result, estimates of working children will vary across surveys that do not use the same sample design.⁽⁷⁾ The ILO, UNICEF, and the UCW continue to investigate the effects of these survey differences on estimates of children's work.

As noted, some country profiles also include the sector in which children reportedly work. For some surveys, sector of work was not reported by the entire sample of working children. Therefore, the distribution of children working by sector (i.e., agriculture, industry, and services) represents children with non-missing data for the sector of work. For more information on the sectors of work reported in the chart, see Table 1 in "Formats."

Percentage of Children Attending School

The percentage of children attending school is the share of all children within a specified age group that reported attending school. The UCW project data described above in the section "Working Children" are used to develop country-specific school attendance statistics. To be consistent with estimates of working children, the age group for which attendance statistics are calculated for children is generally ages 5–14. In some cases, however, different age categories are used, usually ages 6–14 or ages 7–14.

Percentage of Children Combining Work and School

The percentage of children who combine work and school is the share of all children within a specified age group reporting both working and attending school. The UCW project data described above in the section "Working Children" are used to develop country-specific statistics on children combining work and school. The age group for which these statistics are calculated is usually for children ages 7–14.

Primary Completion Rate

This report uses the "gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education" as a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age). Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades.

Unlike the other statistics presented in the country data tables, which are all based on the UCW analysis as described above, primary completion rate data are from the UNESCO Institute for Statistics. The data were downloaded on December 16, 2016, and are available at <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. For more information on this statistic, please see the UNESCO Institute for Statistics Glossary at <http://uis.unesco.org/en/glossary>.

UNESCO uses population estimates from the United Nations Population Division (UNDP) to calculate some of the rates it publishes, including the gross intake ratio to last grade of primary education. These population estimates change over time. (The last revision that affected the statistics used in this report was in 2015.) All population-based indicators, including gross intake ratio to last grade of primary education, for all years are re-calculated using these latest estimates. For some countries/years, when the new UNDP population estimates are found to be inconsistent with education data, related indicators are removed. All updates made to UNESCO data on gross intake ratio to last grade of primary education are reflected in the primary completion rate statistic included in this report.

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

Basic Education

Article 7(c) of ILO C. 182 requires countries to “ensure access to free basic education.” According to the International Standard Classification of Education, basic education corresponds to the first 9 years of formal schooling and is comprised of primary and lower secondary education. Primary education is considered to be the first stage of “basic education” and covers 6 years of full-time schooling, with the legal age of entrance normally being not younger than 5 years or older than 7 years. It is designed to give pupils a sound basis in reading, writing, and mathematics, along with an elementary understanding of other subjects, such as history, geography, natural science, social science, religion, art, and music. Lower secondary education is more subject-focused and requires specialized teachers. It corresponds to some 3 years of schooling and marks the end of compulsory education where it exists. Basic education can also include a wide variety of non-formal and informal public and private educational activities offered to meet the defined basic learning needs of groups of people of all ages.

Article 13 of the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights indicates that primary education should be compulsory and free to all. Secondary education, including technical and vocational education, should be available and accessible to all, and free education should be progressively introduced. Article 28 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child affirms the right of the child to education and the state’s duty to ensure that primary education is free and compulsory.

Bonded Labor

Bonded labor or debt bondage is “the status or condition arising from a pledge by a debtor of his personal services or those of a person under his control as security for a debt if the value of those services as reasonably assessed is not applied towards the liquidation of the debt or the length and nature of those services are not respectively limited and defined,” as defined in the UN Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956).

Bonded labor typically occurs when a person who needs a loan, and has no security to offer, pledges his/her labor, or that of someone under his/her control, as security for a loan. In some cases, the interest on the loan may be so high that it cannot be paid. In others, it may be deemed that the bonded individual’s work repays the interest on the loan, but not the principal. Thus, the loan is inherited and perpetuated, and becomes an inter-generational debt.

Bonded labor is prohibited as one of the worst forms of child labor in ILO C. 182.

Child Domestic Worker

Child domestic workers are children who work in third-party private households under an employment relationship. Child domestic workers engage in a variety of tasks, including cleaning, cooking, gardening, collecting water, and caring for children and the elderly. Child domestic workers sometimes have live-in arrangements, whereby they live in their employer's household and work in exchange for room, board, and sometimes education. Child domestic workers are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including sexual, physical, and verbal abuse, in large part because they often depend on their employers for basic needs and work in locations hidden from public view.

Child Labor Elimination Projects

Since 1995, USDOL has funded more than 300 projects in 93 countries. ILAB currently oversees more than $270 million of active programming to combat exploitative child labor. To date, USDOL-funded child labor elimination projects have rescued approximately 1.9 million children from exploitative child labor and have improved livelihoods for more than 28,000 vulnerable families to reduce their reliance on child labor.

Child Trafficking

The Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, provides a commonly accepted definition of "human trafficking." With regard to child trafficking, it states: "the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of a child for the purpose of exploitation shall be considered 'trafficking in persons' even if this does not involve any of the means set forth in subparagraph (a) of this Article." Therefore, there does not need to be abuse of power, control, coercion, or fraud present in order to constitute child trafficking, as the definition for adults requires. It states: "(a) 'trafficking in persons' shall mean the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring, or receipt of persons, by means of the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability, or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. Exploitation shall include, at a minimum, the exploitation of the prostitution of others or other forms of sexual exploitation, forced labor or services, slavery or practices similar to slavery, servitude or the removal of organs."

The trafficking of children is prohibited as a worst form of child labor in ILO C. 182, Article 3(a).

Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children

Based on the 1996 Declaration and Agenda for Action of the First World Congress Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, "commercial sexual exploitation of children" (CSEC) is defined as "sexual abuse by the adult and remuneration in cash or kind to the child or third person or persons." The remuneration dynamic distinguishes CSEC from the sexual abuse of a child where commercial gain is absent, although sexual exploitation is also abuse. The CSEC includes:

- Prostitution in the streets or indoors, in such places as brothels, discotheques, massage parlors, bars, hotels, and restaurants, among others;
- Child sex tourism;
- The production, promotion, and distribution of pornography involving children; and
- The use of children in sex shows (public or private).

ILO C. 182 Article 3(a) prohibits the sale and trafficking of children and the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution or for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Convention on the Rights of the Child spells out the basic rights of children, such as the right to survival; to develop to the fullest; to be protected from harmful influences, abuse, and exploitation; and to participate fully in family, cultural, and social life. The Convention protects children’s rights by setting standards in health care; education; and legal, civil, and social services. According to Article 32 of the Convention, children have the right “to be protected from economic exploitation and from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child’s education, or to be harmful to the child’s health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral, or social development.”

Hazardous Work

Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182 sets forth the following as a worst form of child labor: “work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children.” This is referred to as “hazardous work” colloquially. Countries must determine what type of work is considered hazardous work by law or regulation. ILO Recommendation 190 (ILO R.190) includes items that countries may wish to consider in determining which types of work are hazardous.

Illicit Activities

ILO C. 182, Article 3(c) prohibits “the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs.” Illicit activities in this context can include crimes, but the activity need not be illegal in order to be considered illicit. According to ILO R. 190 and the General Survey on the Fundamental Conventions Concerning Rights at Work, illicit activities can include “activities which involve the unlawful carrying or use of firearms or other weapons,” as well as “the use of children by criminal organizations for transporting weapons and carrying out arson attacks or destroying public or private property, illicit activities such as housebreaking and petty theft, and that there are reports of children being engaged by adults in car breaking, housebreaking, selling drugs and selling stolen goods, ...use of children for forced or organized begging, gambling, the unlawful carrying or use of firearms or other weapons, or for the commission of an offence or a crime using violence or the threat of violence.”

ILO Recommendation 190 (ILO R.190): Worst Forms of Child Labor

ILO R. 190 supplements the provisions of ILO C. 182 and provides guidance to ratifying countries regarding its implementation. It provides guidelines to assist countries in determining what type of work should be considered hazardous work and thus what type of work countries should prohibit for all children as a worst form of child labor, in accordance with Article 4 of ILO C. 182. The Recommendation describes populations in need of specific attention regarding the worst forms of child labor, such as girls and children involved in hidden forms of work. Finally, ILO R. 190 provides guidance regarding specific steps countries that have ratified ILO C. 182 should take in order to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as the collection and exchange of data on both the problem and best practices to address it; passage and enforcement of laws that penalize violations with criminal penalties; awareness raising about the problem; establishment of policies against the worst forms of child labor; and international cooperation through technical, legal, and other forms of assistance.

Informal Sector

While the concept of the informal sector was introduced into international usage in the 1970s, it was only in 1993 at the 15th International Conference of Labor Statisticians that an internationally-recognized definition for the purposes of data collection was established, delineating the “informal sector” as unincorporated, small and/or unregistered enterprises, and the employees of those enterprises. An enterprise is unincorporated if no complete set of accounts are available that would permit a financial separation of the activities of the enterprise from that of its owner(s), and it produces marketable goods or services. The registration and size criteria are determined according to national circumstances and legislation, which provides a degree of flexibility in identifying the informal sector from country to country. However, all interpretations of this sector share the notion of enterprises whose activities are not covered or are insufficiently covered by law or whose activities are not covered by law in practice, meaning that the relevant law is not applied or enforced. Workers in such enterprises often lack the benefits of regular, stable, and protected employment. Because employers in the informal sector are generally either not covered by labor laws or are not held accountable for complying with labor protections, including occupational safety measures, children who work in “hazardous” or “ultra-hazardous” informal settings likely face increased risk of exploitation, including injury. In addition, because businesses in the informal sector are not usually included in official statistics, children working in informal sector enterprises may not be counted in labor force activity rates.

Light Work

This report uses the definition of “light work” as established in ILO C. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment. Under Article 7(1) of the Convention, “National laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work which is—(a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received.” Countries that have specified a minimum legal working age of 14 may permit the employment or work of persons ages 12–14 in light work as defined in Article 7(1), but should specify limitations on their hours of work, as well as activities and conditions in which light work may be undertaken.

Source: ILO Convention No. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment (Entry into force: 19 Jun 1976), Article 3; <http://www.ilo.org/ilolex/english/convdisp2.htm>.

Minimum Age for Work

The minimum age for work is the age at which a child can enter into work. ILO C. 138 states that the minimum age for admission to employment should not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling and should not be less than age 15 or age 14 for developing countries who specified a minimum legal age of 14 upon ratification of C. 138.

Non-Formal Education

Any organized educational activity outside the established formal school system—whether operating separately or as an important feature of some broader activity—that is intended to serve identifiable learning objectives. Non-formal or transitional education programs can enable former child workers to “catch up” or be “mainstreamed” with their peers who began their schooling at the appropriate age.

Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (PRSP)

This document is written by the government of a developing country with the participation of civil society to serve as the basis for concessional lending from the World Bank and IMF, as well as debt relief under the World Bank's Highly Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. A PRSP should measure poverty in the country, identify goals for reducing poverty, and create a spending and policy program for reaching those goals. A PRSP should also ensure that a country's macroeconomic, structural, and social policies are consistent with the objectives of poverty reduction and social development. A new PRSP must be written every 3 years in order to continue receiving assistance from international financial institutions such as the World Bank.

Ratification

Ratification is a serious undertaking whereby a state formally accepts the terms of an international agreement, thus becoming legally bound to apply it. Other ways of becoming bound to an international agreement include acceptance, approval, accession, signature, or an exchange of notes.

In order to ratify an agreement, a country must, if necessary, adopt new laws and regulations or modify the existing legislation and practice to support the agreement, and formally deposit the instruments of ratification with the appropriate depositary. (In the case of ILO Conventions, ratifications must be registered with the Director-General of the ILO.)

For certain international agreements that require ratification, signing an agreement or enacting an agreement into domestic law by Congress, or a similar state organ, does not mean that the international agreement has been ratified. Signing an international agreement serves as a preliminary endorsement, albeit a formality, as signatories are not bound by the terms of the international agreement or in any way committed to proceed to the final step of ratification. However, a signatory is obliged to refrain from acts that would defeat the object and purpose of the international agreement, unless it makes its intention not to become a party to the international agreement clear. Similarly, appropriate state entities may signal approval of an international agreement, but that is only one of the requisite steps on the path toward official ratification. The final step requires that the instruments of ratification be submitted to the depositary.

In the case of ILO Conventions, ILO procedures provide the option to ratify or not ratify a Convention, but do not include the option to sign a Convention as a preliminary endorsement. Generally, an ILO Convention comes into force in a ratifying country 12 months after the government has deposited the requisite instrument of ratification. This grace period provides ILO members time to enact or modify legislation to comply with the Convention before it comes into force.

Unpaid Household Services

For the purposes of this report, the term "unpaid household services" by children refers to the domestic and personal services performed by a child within the child's own household under the following conditions: (a) for long hours; (b) in an unhealthy environment, including equipment or heavy loads; or (c) in dangerous locations.

RESEARCH METHODS, ORGANIZATION, AND CONTENT OF COUNTRY PROFILES, AND FRAMEWORK FOR COUNTRY ASSESSMENTS

1. RESEARCH METHODS

1.1 Data Collection and Sources

Information was gathered for this report through desk research, U.S. embassy reporting, and limited field work. Information was also received from some foreign governments. Desk research consisted of an extensive review of mostly online materials, which included both primary and secondary sources. The sources included academic and independent researchers, media outlets, NGOs, international organizations, foreign governments, and U.S. Government agencies. Information was also collected from U.S. Government-funded technical assistance and field research projects.

Examples of sources used in this report are the most recent available editions of country laws relevant to child labor; national-level child labor surveys; NGO reports on the nature of child labor in various countries; and UN reports, including direct requests and observations by the ILO Committee of Experts.(1)

USDOS and U.S. embassies and consulates abroad provided important information by gathering data from contacts, conducting site visits, and reviewing local media sources. A request for information from the public was published in the Federal Register, and a copy of the request was mailed to the Washington, DC-based foreign embassies of the countries included in this report.(2) Data were also gathered through site visits to certain countries covered in this report, which included the collection of additional documents, as well as key informant interviews.

1.2 Analysis of Information

The existence of child labor, particularly in its worst forms, often involves violations of laws and regulations, including serious criminal violations in some egregious cases. Information on child labor may be intentionally suppressed. Victims of the worst forms of child labor may be too vulnerable or politically underrepresented or marginalized to claim their rights or even communicate their situations. These factors make information on the worst forms of child labor difficult to obtain. Therefore, in order to compile a credible and comprehensive report, ILAB used the following criteria to assess information:

1. Nature of the information. Whether the information about child labor and government efforts to combat it gathered from research, public submissions, or other sources was relevant and probative, and covered the “worst forms of child labor” and “government efforts” as used in this report (see “Key Definitions”) Specific evidence of government efforts was preferred where it was available.
2. Date of the information. Whether the source information about child labor was no more than 5 years old. More current information was given priority, and ILAB used sources published during the reporting period to the extent possible. Information from sources older than 5 years was generally not considered.

However, in the case of child labor statistics, certain factors contribute to less frequent generation of new data. Because government and other efforts to address exploitative child labor take time to have an impact on national-level rates of child labor, children’s involvement in such activities does not change dramatically from year to year. Child labor surveys are carried out infrequently, in part because the child labor picture does not change frequently (although there have been recent increases in the number of surveys conducted). In order to present an overall picture of children’s work in as many countries as possible, ILAB used statistics, in some cases, that are more than 10 years old as of the writing of this report (from 2006). For more information on the statistics used in this report, see the “Children’s Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions” section in Appendix 4.

In addition, in cases in which previous editions of this report have asserted that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods, and in the absence of evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated, sources more than 5 years old may be used. This practice makes the report's information on such forms of child labor consistent with USDOL's List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor as mandated by the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2005 (TVPRA). Statements that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods will be removed when there is evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated.

3. Source of the information. Whether the information, either from primary or secondary sources, was from a source whose methodology, prior publications, degree of familiarity and experience with international labor standards, and/or reputation for accuracy and objectivity warranted a determination that it was relevant and probative.
4. Extent of the corroboration. Whether the information about the use of child labor was corroborated by other sources.

1.3 Limitations

While data on the worst forms of child labor and information about government efforts to provide remediation are improving, data are still insufficient to provide a complete understanding of the problem. A lack of information may create the impression that a country has less serious problems with the worst forms of child labor than it has in reality. At the same time, this dearth of information may create the impression that a government is doing less than it should when, in fact, efforts to combat the worst forms exist, but are simply unreported or unpublicized. Although countries with open and available information may sometimes appear to have larger problems relative to other countries, this may not be the case. In fact, countries that collect information on child labor are in a better position to eliminate the problem than those countries where such information is suppressed, because they can target their policies and programs at identified problem areas in order to achieve maximum impact.

Although information was requested from the public, including governments covered in the report, only 16 governments out of the 135 countries submitted information in response to the request.⁽²⁾ In addition, the lack of in-country data collection and access to other in-country sources of information in the majority of the countries may have affected the reporting.

Due to the inability to travel to each country covered in the report, ILAB relies on U.S. embassies and Internet research to gather primary and secondary sources of information. For countries where Internet access and technology are limited, there may be less information available online. Countries with more closed government processes and less civil society participation may also have less information readily available. When ILAB was unable to find information about the major topics of discussion, including the content of important laws or enforcement efforts, this was noted.

Most of ILAB's online research was conducted in English; however, some research was conducted in Spanish, French, and, to a limited extent, Portuguese, Russian, and Arabic. Materials written in other languages were generally not reviewed.

Despite ILAB's best efforts to cover relevant topics as comprehensively as possible, the report cannot address every salient issue that may affect children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor. For example, there are many factors that affect whether a household will send a child to school, to work, or both. A lack of available information, however, limits the discussion of these issues for some countries. In these cases, we note that the profile's discussion is incomplete. Furthermore, ILAB chose to limit its discussion of education to the issue of access, and generally does not discuss the quality of education because research on the relationship between that quality of education and child labor is lacking.

2. ORGANIZATION AND CONTENT OF COUNTRY PROFILES

ILAB organized country profiles to track the types of efforts outlined in the TDA Conference Committee report. In this report, the Conference Committee indicated that the President should consider certain criteria when determining whether a country has met its obligation under the GSP program to implement its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.(3) Each country profile contains information regarding these criteria: an introductory paragraph that provides an assessment of government actions to advance efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor, six sections that describe the problem and different aspects of government efforts to address it, and a set of suggested actions.

The content of a country profile is described in detail below.

2.1. Content of Country Profiles

Each country profile begins with an overview of 2016 in a summary paragraph, starting with a statement identifying the assessment level assigned to the country for 2016. (See “Framework for Country Assessments” in section 3 of this appendix for a more detailed discussion on the criteria used to determine a country’s assessment.)

Following the statement of assessment, the summary includes meaningful efforts taken by a government to implement its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The summary also notes where children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor or if no worst forms of child labor exist, where they are engaged in tasks for which there is evidence that such tasks fall into the categories suggested by R. 190 of hazardous work—referred to as “dangerous tasks” in the report. It then highlights areas in which key gaps in government efforts remain.

Section I: Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of Child Labor

The first section of each country profile attempts to provide, to the extent that information is available, a comprehensive picture of child labor in the country. This section begins with a review of available data on working children and school attendance, followed by a presentation of the most common sectors and activities in which children are engaged. The narrative also provides information about the nature and conditions of the work when such information is available.

Section II: Legal Framework for Child Labor

The second section of each country profile provides information on two criteria established in the TDA Conference Committee report: “1) whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor,” and “2) whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures.”(3) Accordingly, this section describes a country’s legal framework with regard to child labor, and assesses the adequacy of that legal framework by comparing it, in general, to the standards set forth in ILO C. 182 and ILO C. 138, as well as in other international instruments, including the Palermo Protocol and the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols. ILAB considered whether the laws criminally prohibited the categorical worst forms of child labor in ILO C. 182, 3(a)–(c), as suggested by ILO R. 190. In line with the ILO Committee of Experts, ILAB considered any law that could be used to prohibit child labor, including its worst forms. ILAB also considered whether the country had ratified key international instruments related to child labor.

It is important to note that ILAB analyzes the countries’ legal framework regarding compliance with international standards, regardless of whether a problem exists in a country. This is to ensure that legal frameworks also serve as preventive mechanisms. For example, even in the case of a country that does not have a problem with the use of children in illicit activities, if there are no laws that exist to prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, the report points out a gap when comparing laws on this issue against international standards.

Please note that this year, the chart indicates where the legal framework met international standards and where it did not whereas last year the chart indicated the existence of relevant laws. For example, last year the chart reported whether a country had established a minimum age for work. This year the chart indicates whether the country’s minimum age for work complies with the international standard.

With regard to forced child labor, ILAB assessed whether a country’s laws comprehensively prohibit all manifestations of the problem of forced child labor, including human trafficking and debt bondage. With regard to child trafficking specifically, ILAB reviewed the adequacy of existing legal protections related to international and domestic trafficking for both commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor against the Palermo Protocol’s standard for child trafficking, including whether they prohibit the five possible elements of the human trafficking process – the recruitment, harboring, transportation, transfer, and receipt of persons, with the different standard for the trafficking of children.

In all cases in which countries maintain a military force, ILAB assessed whether the minimum age for compulsory military recruitment is 18 and whether the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is at least 16, with certain safeguards to ensure voluntariness. For all countries, ILAB assessed whether the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups is prohibited, even if non-state armed groups are not present in the country.

On the issue of commercial sexual exploitation of children, ILAB assessed whether a country's laws criminally prohibit the procuring (recruitment), use, and offering (sale of) children for prostitution; the production of child pornography; and the use of children in pornographic performances. Regarding illicit activities, ILAB assessed whether laws criminally prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child in both the production and trafficking of drugs.

ILAB assessed whether the types of hazardous work prohibited by each country were comprehensive, based on whether there was evidence that children were engaging in work where, according to ILO R. 190, the work may be hazardous. Because the standards on the minimum age for work in ILO C. 138 provide a foundation for protections against the worst forms of child labor, ILAB used the standards embodied in that convention to assess each country's minimum age for admission to work and the age up to which education is compulsory.⁽¹⁾ ILO C. 138 establishes that countries should set a minimum age for work of 15, or 14 for countries with less-developed economies where the country has specified an age of 14 upon ratification. It also indicates that if countries have a light work framework, they should set a minimum age for light work at 13, or 12 for less-developed economies, and that legislation related to light work should determine the activities that may be permitted, prescribe the number of hours per week, and specify the conditions under which light work may be conducted.

According to ILO C. 138, the minimum age for work shall not be less than the age for compulsory education. ILAB recognizes that the convention calls on member states to avoid the establishment of a minimum age for work that is lower than the compulsory school age. However, the opposite situation - in which the minimum age for work is higher than the minimum age for compulsory schooling - should also be avoided. It is possible that a low (or no) compulsory school age may encourage children below the legal age of employment to work because they are not required to attend school. Because such work is illegal, it may be more hidden from public view than other forms of work, thus increasing the possibility of exploitation through involvement in hazardous work or other worst forms of child labor. Therefore, the section notes when a country's minimum age for compulsory education falls below the minimum age for employment. It also notes whether a country has free public education through at least the basic level.

Section III: Enforcement of Laws on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The third section of each country profile addresses the third criteria included in the TDA Conference Committee report: "3) whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor."⁽³⁾ This section describes the roles of government agencies in enforcing laws relevant to child labor, including its worst forms, and reports on labor law and criminal law enforcement efforts during the reporting period.

In this section, ILAB analyzed whether or to what degree the country had defined enforcement agency roles, and had investigated and addressed complaints related to allegations of the worst forms of child labor. Because ILO C. 182 only discusses enforcement to a limited extent, other international standards and practices were also considered as general evaluating guidelines, including those from ILO C. 81 and ILO C. 129 on Labour Inspection and Labour Inspection in Agriculture, respectively. To the extent possible, ILAB assessed whether the country had:

- Established labor inspection systems;
- Provided sufficient funding and resources to enforce child labor laws and regulations;
- Employed a sufficient number of inspectors according to the ILO's recommendation to enforce the country's child labor laws and regulations;
- Provided sufficient training for inspectors, including initial training for new employees, training on new laws related to child labor, and refresher courses;

- Developed and implemented an adequate labor inspection strategy that allowed for different types of on-site inspections of worksites (e.g. routine, targeted, complaint-driven, unannounced inspections), and conducted inspections with sufficient frequency and in all relevant sectors;
- Provided sufficient authority to the labor inspectorate to penalize child labor violations and follow through with sanctions where appropriate;
- Published information on specific inspection results and fines or sanctions imposed for violation of child labor laws and regulations, including the worst forms of child labor;
- Established a complaint mechanism for labor violations; and
- Set up a reciprocal referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services.

Although ILAB researched and requested law enforcement information in each of the above areas for this year's report, this information was not available in all cases. For example, in many cases, ILAB did not have enough information to determine whether the number of inspectors was sufficient in the country. Only in certain situations, where the government acknowledged they did not have a sufficient number of labor inspectors or ILAB obtained information indicating that the number of labor inspectors was small relative to the size of the country's workforce, did ILAB issue findings of insufficiency. In the latter situation, ILAB considered the ILO's recommendation that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach 1:10,000 in industrial market economies, 1:15,000 in industrializing economies, 1:20,000 in transition economies, and 1:40,000 in less developed countries in determining whether a finding should be included.(4)

In addition, ILO R. 190 states that countries should criminally prohibit the categorical worst forms of child labor as set forth in ILO C. 182 Articles 3(a)–(c). Therefore, the report also assessed whether for criminal law enforcement the country had:

- Established criminal investigation systems
- Provided sufficient funding and resources to enforce the worst forms of child labor laws and regulations
- Provided sufficient training for investigators, including initial training for new employees, training on new laws related to child labor, and refresher courses
- Conducted a sufficient number of investigations related to the worst forms of child labor
- Published information on specific investigation results and violations, prosecutions and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor; and
- Established a reciprocal referral mechanism between criminal authorities and social services.

Section IV: Coordination of Government Efforts on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The fourth section of each country profile also addresses the third criterion included in the TDA Conference Committee report: "(3) whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor." (3) This section provides information on key institutions charged with coordinating overall efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms, in the country. Although the Conference Committee report speaks only to whether such mechanisms are in place with regard to investigation and complaints of the worst forms of child labor, ILO C. 182, Article 5, states that "[e]ach Member shall, after consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, establish or designate appropriate mechanisms to monitor the implementation of the provisions giving effect to this Convention." ILAB applied this concept of monitoring to all provisions of the convention, not just those directly related to the enforcement of child labor laws. However, because since the term monitor is often associated exclusively with enforcement activities, ILAB uses the term coordinate to describe this function.

Section V: Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The fifth section of each country profile provides information on the fourth criterion in the TDA Conference Committee report: "(4) whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor." (3) This section describes a country's key policies and plans to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

ILAB used the framework provided in ILO R. 190, Article 15(f), which illustrates measures that countries might take to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as “encouraging the development of policies by undertakings to promote the aims of the Convention.”(5) In ILO C. 182 and in comments from the ILO Committee of Experts, the terms programs and plans of action are often used interchangeably. Indeed, it is difficult to distinguish, in some cases, among a policy, a plan, or a program.(6) For purposes of the TDA Conference Committee report, a policy on child labor is defined as a framework that lays out general principles that are intended to guide a government’s actions on child labor. Although policies may call for the passage of new laws and the establishment of new programs, the actual adoption of laws and the implementation of programs are discussed in the “Legal Framework for the Worst Forms of Child Labor” section or the “Social Programs to Address Child Labor” section, respectively.

Specifically, ILAB assessed whether governments had achieved the following:

- Established specific child labor policies, any related development policies that explicitly incorporate the issue of child labor, or any related development policies that do not explicitly target child labor but that could have an impact on the problem. (ILAB determined that because so few governments distinguish between worst forms of child labor and child labor, any policy on child labor, whether targeted toward the worst forms of child labor or not, would be discussed.)
- Ensured that these policies included specific action plans, assigned responsibilities, established goals, and set timetables.
- Implemented established policies and plans.

Section VI: Social Programs to Address Child Labor

The sixth section of each country profile provides information on the fifth criterion in the TDA Conference Committee report: “5) whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.”(3) As in the section on policies, this section describes key programs focused on the worst forms of child labor and those focused on all forms of child labor, because countries often do not distinguish between the two when creating child labor programs. Also, as in the section on policies, this section discusses programs that focus on child labor specifically, as well as programs that address poverty, education, and other related matters that could have a beneficial impact on child labor. Only programs launched or implemented during the reporting period are included in this section.

ILAB generally considered the implementation of projects through international organizations to be government efforts, because the projects can only be carried out with the consent of the government and such efforts are sometimes considered part of national budgets.

ILAB applied standards embodied in Articles 6 and 7 of ILO C. 182 to assess country programs to combat child labor. ILO R. 190 was also used in determining the types of efforts that governments might make, such as giving special attention to girls, providing training to employers and workers, and raising awareness. With this in mind, ILAB assessed whether governments had:

- Participated in any social programs to combat child labor, including programs aimed at directly preventing and withdrawing children from participation in child labor.
- Implemented social programs with sufficient resources to combat the scope and magnitude of the child labor problem at issue;
- Targeted at-risk populations; and
- Implemented social programs successfully and sustainably.

Section VII: Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The last section of each country profile is a set of suggested actions. These suggested actions serve as a roadmap of efforts that individual countries can follow to more fully address the worst forms of child labor. The year in which a suggested action was first provided is listed in the table, followed by every year in which the action was included in the report and not addressed.

3. FRAMEWORK FOR COUNTRY ASSESSMENTS

3.1 Objective for Country Assessments

ILAB is using an assessment tool to clearly indicate and highlight the status of efforts by each country benefiting from U.S. trade preferences to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

3.2 Research Question Guiding Country Assessments

The research question that ILAB is asking in its assessment of an individual beneficiary country is: “To what extent did the beneficiary country advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period?”

3.3 Scope of Country Assessment

As discussed, the TDA Conference Committee report outlines the following six criteria that the President is asked to consider in determining whether a country is implementing its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor:

1. Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor
2. Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures
3. Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints related to allegations of the worst forms of child labor
4. Whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor
5. Whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor, and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor
6. Whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor

The country assessment tool is intended to inform the sixth criterion listed above: “6) whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.” In preparing the assessments, ILAB evaluated the first five criteria, grouping them into the same five areas addressed in the individual country profiles: laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. The assessment is based on an analysis of the status of each country’s efforts in these five areas considered as a whole and compared to the country’s prior efforts. The assessments do not take into account the impact of government actions on the problem, or whether they have a documented effect in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. This type of analysis would require rigorous impact evaluations and assessments based on data from solid research designs, which is beyond the scope of this report. It is important to note that the assessment is not intended to reflect a determination of “whether a country has implemented its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.” That determination is reserved for the President.

3.4 Method for Determining a Country Assessment

Each country profile presented in this report identifies a set of suggested actions for governments to take in order to advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The implementation - or lack of implementation - of these suggested actions establishes a baseline, or point of reference, from which to assess a country’s advancement. These actions, in combination with other efforts undertaken by a country, were considered when assessing the level of a country’s advancement during the current reporting period compared with the previous reporting period.

Once a country’s efforts were identified, ILAB assessed (1) the significance of efforts - actions that could have an impact in eliminating the worst forms of child labor - undertaken during the reporting period, and (2) the extent to which these efforts addressed the first five TDA criteria, outlined above, in a limited or meaningful manner during the reporting period. In addition, ILAB reviewed whether there were delays in eliminating the worst forms of child labor as a result of a government (1) establishing a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice during the reporting period; or (2) failing to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice that was established in previous years. Finally, ILAB also examined whether countries had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in forced child labor in more than an isolated incident at the national, regional, or local level.

To promote consistency and transparency, and to operationalize these first five TDA criteria, each country's efforts were analyzed according to a uniform set of guidance questions related to the five general areas of laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. These guidance questions are presented in Appendix 5. For additional information, see the "Country Assessments" section of this report.

The ILO CEACR examines and makes two types of comments upon the application of international labor standards by states parties to the relevant conventions. Direct requests contain technical comments or questions raised by the application of a particular convention by a state, and these requests are sent directly to governments. Observations contain comments on fundamental questions raised by the application of a particular convention by a state and are published in the Committee's annual report.

Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Among the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

TDA Criteria and Corresponding Guidance Questions

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criterion:

- “Whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor”

Guidance Questions

1. *Was the government complicit in the use of forced child labor?
2. Has the government conducted research on the prevalence and nature of the worst forms of child labor and made the results publicly available?
3. Did the government make efforts to reduce children’s vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor by addressing factors such as:
 - a. country- and region-specific practices that make children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor; and
 - b. barriers to education: lack of teachers; lack of schools/inadequate facilities; lack of infrastructure (access to schools); lack of transportation; violence, including physical and sexual abuse; birth registration; and the charging of school fees.
4. Are specific populations vulnerable to child labor due to gender, race, ethnicity, origin, disability, language, or socio-economic status?
5. Were there events during the year that destabilized the country, such as armed conflict; health epidemics and natural disasters; or other social, economic, and political crises?

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- “Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor”
- “Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures”

Guidance Questions

1. Did laws meet international standards?
 - a. Minimum age for admission to employment in line with ILO Convention 138
 - b. Minimum age for admission to hazardous work in line with ILO Conventions 138 and 182
 - c. Prohibitions on forced child labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and use of children in illicit activities in line with ILO Convention 182
 - d. Minimum age for state compulsory military service in line with ILO Convention 182 and the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
 - e. Minimum age for state voluntary military service in line with the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
 - f. Prohibition against recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups
 - g. Age to which education is compulsory that aligns with the minimum age for work, in line with ILO Convention 138
 - h. Provision of free public basic education in line with ILO Convention 182
 - i. Ratification of ILO Convention 182
2. If the country’s constitution and laws are not compliant with international standards embodied in ILO Conventions 138 and 182, has there been any change in the constitution or laws that brings the country closer to being fully compliant?

3. If laws were not comprehensive in their prohibitions of all variations of a particular worst form, has there been any change in the constitution or laws that brings the country closer to being comprehensive?
4. Were laws related to child labor made publicly available?
5. *Were there aspects of laws that are contrary to international standards and likely to increase children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor? This question would apply both to countries with child labor problems, as well as countries in which there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem, and when the country has gaps in its legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criterion:

- "Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor"

In this section, ILAB analyzed whether or to what degree the country had defined enforcement agency roles, and had investigated and addressed complaints related to allegations of the worst forms of child labor.

Guidance Questions

1. What was the amount of funding for the labor inspectorate? Was there an increase or decrease in the funding and resources to enforce child labor laws and regulations, and were these resources adequate given the incidence of child labor in the country?
2. Was there an increase or reduction in inspectors to enforce child labor laws and regulations, and was the number of inspectors adequate given the size of the country's workforce according to the ILO's recommendation in Article 10 of Convention No. 81? Did the country offer initial training to new inspectors and investigators, including specialized training on child labor; training on new laws related to the child labor, including its worst forms; and refresher courses?
3. Did the government provide sufficient authority to sanction child labor violations?
4. Did the country make available information on labor law enforcement efforts related to child labor, including the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review; the number of child labor violations found; and the number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed and collected?
5. Did the government develop and implement a labor inspection strategy that allowed for different types of on-site inspections of worksites (for example, routine, targeted, complaint-driven, unannounced inspections)?
6. Were inspections conducted with sufficient frequency and in all relevant sectors?
7. Did the government create or improve a mechanism for filing and resolving complaints expeditiously regarding child labor?
8. Does a reciprocal referral mechanism exist between labor and criminal authorities and social services?
9. Did the country make available information on criminal law enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor, including the number of investigations, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions?
10. Did the government establish or improve a process for information sharing among enforcement authorities?
11. *Were there any aspects of the country's enforcement practices that likely increase children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor?

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criterion:

- “Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor”

ILAB analyzed whether or to what degree the country had institutions charged with coordinating overall efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Guidance Questions

1. Was an agency or committee created to coordinate government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor?
2. Does the agency or committee address all sectors of child labor that are prevalent in the country, or does it only address certain sectors?
3. Did such an agency or committee meet regularly and take actions, or did it not meet regularly and take few or no actions?

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criterion:

- “Whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor”

Guidance Questions

1. Did the government establish any new policies or plans that specifically address the worst forms of child labor or any one of the worst forms of child labor?
2. Did the government incorporate the worst forms of child labor specifically as an issue to be addressed in poverty reduction, development, educational, or other social policies (e.g., Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers)?
3. Did the government establish any poverty reduction, development, educational, or other social policies (e.g., Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers) that did not explicitly address the worst forms of child labor or any one of the worst forms of child labor, but that might have had an impact on it or them?
4. If the country established any of the above policies or plans, do they designate responsibilities, establish goals, and set timelines?
5. Using the criteria in Question 4, did the government effectively implement existing policies and plans?
6. *Were there ongoing country policies or were there any changes to the country’s policies that likely increase children’s vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor?

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

TDA Conference Report Criterion:

- “Whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor, and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor”

Guidance Questions

1. Did the government fund or participate in any new or ongoing programs that aim to eliminate or prevent the worst forms of child labor?
2. Did the government fund or participate in any social protection programs that could reasonably be expected to have an impact on child labor? Were any of the countries’ programs shown, through research, to have an impact on child labor?

3. Are the country's programs sufficient to combat particular forms of child labor given the scope and magnitude of those problems?
4. Do the programs provide services directly to children?
5. Do the programs adequately target at-risk populations?
6. Were the programs fully funded?
7. Are the programs meeting their goals?
8. Are the program efforts sustainable?
9. Using the criteria in questions 4–8, did existing government programs improve or worsen in quality or effectiveness compared with the previous year?
10. Were there any changes to the country's programs that likely increase children's vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor?*

* A "yes" response likely means an assessment of minimal or no advancement.
