In 2017, Mongolia made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Mongolia is receiving this assessment because the government did not permit the Labor Inspectorate to conduct unannounced inspections, which impeded the enforcement of child labor laws. The government amended the Criminal Code to prohibit and provide penalties for child trafficking. The Family, Child, and Youth Development Agency also organized trainings on child labor in 19 of Mongolia’s 21 provinces for more than 1,200 government officials. In addition, the government adopted the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Persons, which strengthens efforts to combat child trafficking. However, children in Mongolia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation. Children also perform dangerous tasks in mining and horse jockeying. Labor inspectors lack adequate training on laws related to child labor, and the number of labor inspectors in the General Agency for Specialized Inspection is insufficient.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mongolia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation. Children also perform dangerous tasks in mining and horse jockeying. (1; 2; 3; 4) Furthermore, 9 out of 10 children exploited in situations of hazardous work are boys. (2; 5) According to Mongolia’s National Child Labor Survey, children’s employment is more prevalent in rural areas than in urban areas. (2; 6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Mongolia.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Mongolian children are generally trafficked internally for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation in saunas, bars, hotels, karaoke clubs, and massage parlors. (4; 22; 3) Children also work as horse jockeys and face a number of health and safety hazards, including exposure to extremely cold temperatures, risk of brain and bone injuries, and fatal falls. (14; 15; 1; 23) Participation in pre-training and horse racing during the November 1-May 1 racing season may also negatively impact children's school attendance, particularly when children as young as age 7 can participate in horse racing. (14; 15)

During the reporting period, the Family, Child, and Youth Development Agency (FCYDA) collected data on exploitative child labor in Mongolia. The agency identified 99 children engaged in various forms of child labor in Ulaanbaatar, and registered 10,453 children in a nationwide database for child horse jockeys. (4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Mongolia’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor.

In 2017, the government amended its Criminal Code to prohibit and criminalize child trafficking. However, Mongolia’s legal framework is lacking several international standards to protect children. The minimum age for work does not apply to children in the informal sector or those that are self-employed. During the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection changed the prohibition on working and training as a horse jockey from being prohibited between November 1 and May 1 to only being prohibited during the winter season. This change leaves children unprotected from work as horse jockeys during more months of the year.

Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient, as neither forced labor nor debt bondage is specifically criminalized. Laws relating to the commercial sexual exploitation of children do not meet international standards because they do not create criminal penalties for the use of children engaged in prostitution. Additionally, the laws prohibiting the use of children in illicit activities are not sufficient as they do not criminally prohibit the use, procurement, or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.

Mongolia’s laws related to military service are not sufficient, as they do not prohibit non-state armed groups from recruiting children under age 18.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of the General Agency for Specialized Inspection (GASI) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Labor Law Enforcement

NGO and government officials reported that the enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the legal requirement that GASI give employers 48 hours advance notification before conducting an inspection, which provides employers enough time to conceal violations. (4)

During the reporting period, GASI employed 63 labor inspectors. (4) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Mongolia’s workforce, which includes about 1.2 million workers. According to the ILO’s technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Mongolia would employ 83 labor inspectors – which would require the hiring of 20 additional inspectors to meet this threshold. (40; 41)

In 2017, the FCYDA organized training on child labor in 19 of Mongolia’s 21 provinces for 1,245 government officials, including GASI labor inspectors. In addition, FCYDA conducted joint trainings with GASI, the National Emergency Management Agency, and medical providers in 11 provinces with small-scale mining sites. (4)

Child labor and child rights violations can be reported to the FCYDA through a nationwide, toll-free Child Helpline commonly known as “108,” which is staffed with 22 dedicated employees, as well as a social worker and response team who are available 24 hours a day; complaints can be accessed through its database by the police. (42; 4; 43) During the reporting period, the FCYDA assumed responsibility for the Child Helpline, the government-run shelter for children, and child protection services. (4)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2017, criminal law enforcement agencies in Mongolia took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including training for criminal investigators.

In 2017, law enforcement agencies did not conduct training on child labor laws; however, law enforcement officials and cadets attended training on human trafficking organized by the IOM, The Asia Foundation, the Ministry of Justice and Home Affairs, and the National Police Agency. (22)

Despite these capacity-building efforts, police officers reported a general lack of knowledge and training on how to apply criminal trafficking laws to cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children. Authorities use provisions of the Criminal Code, which carry less stringent penalties when boys are the victims of human trafficking due to the misconception among government officials that only girls can be victims of human trafficking. (21) As a result, many cases that could have been prosecuted under the human trafficking article of the Criminal Code were instead prosecuted under related articles of the Criminal Code that carry lighter penalties. (18; 44)

The National Police Agency’s investigators use an 11-question risk assessment checklist to help them accurately identify human trafficking victims. Investigators refer victims who meet more than five of the criteria to short- or long-term care facilities. (4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

In 2017, the Coordinating Council to Implement the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor was dismissed, and its responsibilities were incorporated into the National Program on Child Development and Protection. (4)
