NLRB complaints in which your labor union is involved -
• Do not rely on your labor union to file grievances or to take any other action on your behalf.
• You should not rely on your labor union to file grievances or to take any other action on your behalf.
• The National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) has jurisdiction over disputes involving collective bargaining agreements and unfair labor practices.
• The NLRB has jurisdiction over disputes involving collective bargaining agreements and unfair labor practices.
• If you believe that your labor union has failed to take action to correct a violation of your rights under the NLRA, you may file a complaint with the NLRB.
• If you believe that your labor union has failed to take action to correct a violation of your rights under the NLRA, you may file a complaint with the NLRB.

NLRB complaints in which your labor union is involved -
• If you are not satisfied with the action taken by your labor union to correct a violation of your rights under the NLRA, you may file a complaint with the NLRB.
• If you are not satisfied with the action taken by your labor union to correct a violation of your rights under the NLRA, you may file a complaint with the NLRB.
• You should file a complaint with the NLRB if you believe that your labor union has failed to take action to correct a violation of your rights under the NLRA.
• You should file a complaint with the NLRB if you believe that your labor union has failed to take action to correct a violation of your rights under the NLRA.

For more information, please visit www.nlrb.gov.